Thoughts:
- Of course Davis fucking Aurini was involved in this, it was probably his idea being the absurd peacock he is.
- Of course they don't have enough friends to have someone else operating the camera so all of them could appear in the same shot.

Or a tripod. Because that would be the other logical step.

Hitting on the idea of using a tripod would require any of them to have any knowledge about filmmaking basics, and it's pretty clear from The Sarkeesian Effect that Davis Aurini does not.

I love how the alt-right produces this shit and thinks "this will really get under their skin" but people just look at it and think "that's stupid."

Well, a top Breitbart guy is now in charge of strategy at the Whitehouse.

So this thread is now going to get rather expansive.

After changing their name from "nazis" to "alt-right" the people in the "alt-right" have found that people still have negative reactions to them because they act like nazis. Solution: change the name again to "new right".

There are two 'Alt-Rights'.
One is more accurately described as the New Right. These people like to wear MAGA hats, create memes & have fun.
They include whites, blacks, Asians, latinos, gays and everyone else. These are the people who helped Trump win the election.
The other faction likes to fester in dark corners of sub-reddits and obsess about Jews, racial superiority and Adolf Hitler.
This is a tiny fringe minority. They had no impact on the election.
Guess which faction the media is giving all the attention to?

the desperation of "I HAVE A BLACK FRIEND" types post-notyourshield a real wonderful illustration of how lazily craven attempts at crossing the aisle are by neo-nazis

"oh we'll invent black ppl who are on our side, that'll fool real black ppl and turn the tide for us and totally own the bad whites, definitely"

I hope every Star Wars film ever made from now on excites this kind of furor in the alt-right.

<http://www.wehuntedthemammoth.com/2016/> ... gineering/

I don't even care if the films are good or not. As long as they keep inspiring these whiteboy cotts that fail miserably (cause it's fucking Star Wars) then I can laugh a little.

Star Wars should remain as a simple story of good vs evil. Not a propaganda machine to push a political agenda/opinion.

did you watch any of these movies???

george lucas made a fucking like eight hour trilogy abt fascism's roots in populist appeals during trying economic times, this was a prequel 2 his eight hour trilogy abt how the viet cong were justified, like absolutely is there simplistic cartoon morality at play but if these fuckin' ppl don't think george lucas was also making huge obvious clumsy political statements all the while then i'd like 2 know how exactly they can claim 2 be such rabid & deeply wounded fans?????

this is also 2 not even say anything of how even if it was just "a simple story of good vs. evil" that like, the ppl all these nutters are identifying w/ are all still the evil-coded characters who get murdered and whose deaths are literally celebrated w/ a bonfire & dancing

That's true with a few of them, they definitely identify with the bad guys. But I think quite a few of them (confusingly) have a much shallower motivation than that. It seems they have concluded "I liked these films when I was younger and I grew up to be a xenophobe, chauvinist and white supremacist, therefore all new chapters should cater to that view." Which means that the height of what they took away from these films was pew pew lasers exciting and absolutely nothing else.

Like the empire is still the empire. In effect nothing has changed. Except maybe the name in episode 7. It's all the same guys and the same trappings. It just so happens that now one of the many (MANY) people fighting the exact same organisation has boobs and a few more of them than before are slightly less white. So when they say that "it's a simple battle between good and evil" what they are really saying is that they didn't even take the most basic premise away from the original trilogy. Cause it's the same fucking battle. So much so that some critics even (rightfully) point out that this is a drawback to the newer films, in that there is almost too much similarity.

It's like they found out that the American revolution wasn't exclusively fought by white men and decided it lost all meaning despite no other parameters changing.
