I haven't seen any linkbacks from arbitrary sites on Reddit. There's the TotesMessenger bot, which posts which subreddits have linked to a topic, within that topic. But that's it. So we should be safe, thankfully.

Today I saw a drawing of John from Garfield ejaculating inside a jack-o-lantern. But that isn't the worst thing I've seen today. This is.

When I first started reading this Reddit post, I thought, "hold on, I have to get some alcohol for this occassion." So I got a shot of whiskey. I decided I would sip a bit every time I read an incomprehensible leap of logic.

I had to drink about every 4 sentences.

Also, in addition to being intensely creepy, there's also some transphobia and ableism in it as well. You've been warned:

A couple days ago, Reddit "quarantined" he /r/european subreddit. /r/european described itself as a "free speech sub," and given that this is Reddit, you don't have to be a genius to guess what that means. ██████████

So what is quarantining? It's when Reddit restricts a subreddit to only logged-in Reddit users. Also, Reddit doesn't show any ads on the subreddit. You might ask, well, why doesn't Reddit just ban the subreddit, and that's a great question. I think Reddit wants to attract new users and prevent bad publicity (like what happened with violentacrez), while keeping the users that they already have. Quarantining is Reddit's way of having their cake and eating it too.

The users of /r/european were very glad that Reddit decided to keep the subreddit instead of banning it... NOT! The /r/european mods took their ball and went home. They made the subreddit private, and put links to substitute forums outside of Reddit in the description. The users who didn't leave Reddit also had ample opportunities to express their "free speech" by posting on still-unquarantined subreddits such as /r/europeannationalism. Pity the poor oppressed /r/european users!

Other Reddit shitholes didn't take kindly to the news, either:

"For a long time FatPeopleHate, european and theredpill were considered by many as the holy triad of reddit 'hatespeech'. Now only one is left." - TheRedPill
"First they came for the racists, and I did nothing because I wasn't a racist..." - KotakuInAction

Ali, you will love this guy. Dude is talking about suing WB because he is mad about there not being a bunch of Joker scenes in Suicide Squad which had been promised in the trailer.

There's a kernel of an interesting point in there; trailers having stuff which doesn't make the final film does kind of feel like false advertising and feels like it points to a structural problem with how the industry works, and comparing the trailers to the final film would probably useful if you were going to try to figure out what the thing looked like before it got hacked about and butchered in response to the BvS backlash. But wow, the entitlement, either this guy is the Platonic form of the reddit shitlord with no sense of priorities or this is a masterfully crafted troll piece.

(Also, driving from Scotland to London for a movie premiere is absurd. I mean, you will probably see the film earlier. But how is Suicide Squad, of all movies, worth doing that for?)

Movie Trailers are like food menus, they give you a preview of what your gonna get. If you look at a McDonald's menu and you choose to get your favourite burger, presented/showcased in a nice picture with pickles, chicken, mild cheese(you're favourite, in-fact...that's the only reason you're getting this burger...because you love mild cheese). So you use your hard worked money to pay for this burger, you get the burger, but only to find out that...this isn't the burger you ordered. Yes it has pickles and chicken...but...it doesn't have mild cheese...it has regular cheese.

what an artfully bad analogy, this def lends credence 2 "masterfully crafted troll piece" but on the same token i dunno it's reddit i feel like there's a solid enough contingent of ppl actually that stupid there on the real tho there is SO MUCH stuff from the trailers that's either just straight-up not in there or barely resembles the way it was presented so i imagine there's like, a larger amount of ppl than normal riled about this shit cuz comic book summer tentpole + tumultuous production convincing internet yahoos they got dicked out of a masterpiece rather than they just saw the worst possible ver. of a bad idea

My brother (who is a lawyer) and I are going to sue WB and DC for false advertising, misleading visual images and gaining a profit from us and millions others due to these acts. Our case has been accepted. We begin 11.08.16

Movie Trailers are like food menus, they give you a preview of what your gonna get. If you look at a McDonald's menu and you choose to get your favourite burger, presented/showcased in a nice picture with pickles, chicken, mild cheese(you're favourite, in-fact...that's the only reason you're getting this burger...because you love mild cheese). So you use your hard worked money to pay for this burger, you get the burger, but only to find out that...this isn't the burger you ordered. Yes it has pickles and chicken...but...it doesn't have mild cheese...it has regular cheese.

Suicide Squad trailers showcased several SPECIFIC Joker scenes that I had to pay for the whole movie just so that I can go watch those SPECIFIC SCENES that WB/DC had advertised in their trailers and TV spots. These scenes are: When Joker banged his head on his car window, when Joker says, "let me show you my toys", when Joker punches the roof of his car, when Joker drops a bomb with his face all messed up and says, "BYE BYE!". Non of these scenes were in the movie. I drove 300 miles to London to go watch these specific scenes they had explicitly advertised in their TV ads...and they didn't show them to me. Adding to this, they were also 2 specific Katana scenes they advertised that were also the reason I wanted to go watch the movie. These scenes were: Katana's eyes going black, and a slow motion shot of her and her sword taking souls...in a smokey kind of style. These scenes were advertised several times in the 1st trailer and many TV ads...but they didn't show it to me in the movie. I wasted alot of money paying and travelling to go watch this movie because of these specific scenes they had advertised to me and all of us saying, "hey, check out our preview! this will all be in our movie, come watch it on the 5th!!". All lies. I told the theatre about this unjust act and said I didn't get what I came here to see...can I have my money back. They laughed at me and kicked me out. So I'm now taking this to court. I want my refund, the trauma of being embarrassed as I was being kicked out and people laughing at me for wanting my refund, and also the 160 pounds of fuel money I used to drive to London from Scotland.

If you advertise something...give me what you have advertised. Period. This is becoming a habit with movie studios, showing epic scenes in trailers...but their never shown in the movies. It's unjust.

I just want to say, join me if you feel the same way. Let's stop this nonsense of false bullshitery...and don't let them bribe you with their "deluxe premium special directors gold extended edition supreme cut" nonsense. You should get what they advertised as their first theatre showing and what you have paid for based on what they have showed you in their advertisements.

Our court process will begin on 11/08/16 this week.

A dreadful thought occurs: what if this wasn't the worst possible version? What if those reshoots and re-edits and general tinkering-about actually genuinely improved the movie over the original vision? What if there is an even worse director's cut of Suicide Squad out there, waiting to pounce on us?

Edited highlights of OP BlackPanther2016's further contributions to the discussion:

Strafe_Log_Jump: Well, you've picked a really tiny hill to die on.

BlackPanther2016: I'd rather die on a tiny hill fighting for what I believe in, than seat here doing nothing as I get butt fucked by some sleazy studio executives.

Strafe_Log_Jump: You must believe in more important things than this. You know what you can do next time? Don't watch any trailers. Or, and here's a really crazy idea, wait for reviews of something before going to see it.

BlackPanther2016: I do. But I fight for what's right, doesn't matter what the scale of the issue is. I simply just seek justice. And yeah you're right, I have learnt my lesson, I'll probably be avoiding movie trailers from now on.

henryhyde: You have a pretty loose definition of justice if this is the line in the sand you have decided to draw.

BlackPanther2016: Hate to sound all Vin Diesel - ish to you but, justice is justice, doesn't matter the size of the situation. I draw the line on every situation.

I'm not here to seek for your approval. So I honestly couldn't careless about what you all think. I'm just here to encourage people who feel the same way to stand up and speak out, be it 1 or 2 people - that's good enough to make a difference.

No need for name calling. If you're referring to helping people in need, I already do that. But I also like to stand up for myself from time to time. I apologise if that somehow offends you.

I didn't say I'm going to win this, but I'm certainly not just gonna seat and do nothing. Whatever is going to happen can happen. If you share this and join me we might have a chance. What these studios are doing is simply wrong, and it's time we stand up.

It's actually me who is being, "whiney". My brother he's just in it because I'm paying him to lead the case. He actually didn't want anything to do with this.
