A. No, I would not agree at all, sir, because there is, in the period that you have mentioned, politics and values have changed very radically in certain parts of the world such as Iran, Nicaragua, perhaps. There is no evidence that the cause of Canadian values has taken a sharp turn towards total racism and intolerance.

Q. There again you are expressing an opinion on what the course of Canadian values have done since 1967, and I put it to you that you have no academic or experiential basis for expressing that opinion either. What do you say?

A. Well, I would say to you that my training enables me to read and draw inferences from newspapers, even, which are within the province of a qualified person, and which qualify me better than the average person to draw, to make inferences on the basis of these writings, these proclamations and these policies.

Q. So what writings, proclamations {1672|1673} and policies do you base your opinion on now?

A. One needs to do, perhaps, little more than be a reader of newspapers, a follower of pronouncements of political candidates, and of course, actions always count more than words – the actions which this government, provincial as well as federal, has adopted, advocated and followed even to this day.

Q. So you now claim to be qualified in that area, in the area of expressing opinion on the social and racial tolerance values because you've read the papers about the actions of government persons in both Ottawa and Ontario. Is that right?

A. Not entirely, sir. This is part of the source, the newspapers; but I did add, political pronouncements and observable public policies.

Q. Where did you hear those? Political public pronouncements made by whom and where?

A. For example, by the two candidates for Prime Minister, neither of whom, to my knowledge, advocated divisiveness, hatred, conflict or intolerance.

Q. So you conclude that their pronouncements are an indication of the social and racial values of society. And where and when did they make those pronouncements – during election?

A. Yes. Before and during, yes.

Q. Before and during.

A. And after.

Q. So you base your opinion on what politicians say before, during and after elections.

A. A great deal of cynicism is {1673|1674} sometimes expressed about what politicians say and what they subsequently do. I don't want to get into that at all. But I do want to call your attention to the fact that any political figure in this country which advocates extreme intolerance or dissidence or divisiveness is a political figure which belongs to a minor party, whose vote-getting ability is small, and again, I think it is therefore more than reasonable to infer that that political figure does not lie within the mainstream of Canadian values and does not attract the bulk of Canadian voters.

Q. So how do you know what opinions fit in that category from your knowledge?

A. I think this brings us full circle to where we began.

Q. Precisely – without any knowledge on your part of Canada whatsoever, sir.

A. That is an inference with which I totally disagree.

Q. Well, tell me where you get this knowledge.

A. I consider myself an educated individual. I know what goes on to a fair extent in the country neighbouring mine in which I spent four years.

Q. So we are back to newspapers, public proclamations of political leaders, and some knowledge of the educational system and the immigration policy. Is that right?

A. I would not like to box myself in like this, but — {1674|1675}

Q. Well, don't be boxed in. If there's more, please tell me.

A. I don't know. This is my first time in a situation like this, let it be pointed out. I am not quite sure whether I am allowed to phrase my answer in terms of a counter-question, and the counter-question which, of course, I cannot impose upon you to answer is this:

How does any citizen or any observer, if he is not a citizen, of a country's values, fundamental values, arrive at a knowledge of those values if not through the means which I have described? Does he obtain them through divine inspiration? Does he have a direct line to the founders? How does he know what the values of the country are if not those?

Q. Thank you. Okay. Since you asked me a question, I will provide you with another question. I suggest that most people derive their opinions from experience, but that nobody sets themselves up as an expert in the values of society, and that's how I want to know how you do.

THE COURT: Would your answer be any different than the ones you have just given?

THE WITNESS: I don't think so, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I wouldn't think so.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So then I take it your answer is because you are an educated person, you read the newspapers, presumably in the United States – do you read Canadian newspapers, too?

A. Oh, yes, I do occasionally. {1675|1676}

Q. And so you read those and that is how you form – how you are going to tell us what the basis of your opinion is, and that is the basis of your opinion.

A. Not – again, I understand your purpose, sir, and I must disagree with it most respect fully. You say, first of all, experience. Experience is a highly misleading and subjective and unique event, and because somebody, let us assume, pushes me off the sidewalk because he doesn't like the shape of my nose, does not express anything about the nature of this country. That's a unique, isolated event that tells us nothing.

Now, coming to the sources which have cited, I would again add that I evaluated and understand and make inferences from those sources on the basis of my training and not as an ordinary layman.

May I illustrate, again, with an analogy? I don't want to impose upon the Court's patience here. Do I have Your Honour's permission?

THE COURT: Yes. Yes, go ahead, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: You may look at a person's face and the way he walks and the clearness of his eyes and a tremor, perhaps, in his limbs, and as a layman that would signify something, perhaps, to you; but if you are physician then you would look at these symptoms in a somewhat more expert light.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. But are not dealing here with somebody's physical ailments. You are not being asked to give an opinion on somebody's physical ailments. You are being asked to express an {1676|1677} opinion on the values of society and racial and social tolerance, I am led to believe.

I am asking you whether you are aware that every provincial government in Canada has changed since 1967. Are you aware of that?

A. Since there are elections held periodically in every province, it does not at all surprise me that administrations change. No, sir.

Q. And the values as expressed by the federal government may well have changed. Are you familiar with that?

A. History is not static, sir. We progress, we learn, but we also move along a path which is largely set by our past experiences and past values. Sudden turns in the road do occasionally occur. We call them revolutions. This country has not experienced a revolution, or I hope not.

Q. Have you heard of the elections of the Separatist Government in Quebec?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I suggest to you that was a peaceful revolution of sorts.

THE COURT: Now, let's not get into peaceful revolutions.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he is telling us the values of —

THE COURT: I have heard the answer, Mr. Christie. I am not going to permit that. I have been very lenient up to now, but beyond that —

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have no further questions. {1677|1678}

THE COURT: Do you have any re-examination?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir. You can step down.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: What are your submissions

MR. GRIFFITHS: The submissions are, Your Honour, that the Doctor, Dr. Kaufmann, has given extensive, unchallenged academic background on his knowledge, in his own research into the field of intolerance, group discrimination, and with particular regard to communications.

He is being asked not what the values of Canadian society are as an expert; he can only be asked hypothetical questions and asked to make certain assumptions in answering that question.

He, I would submit, is well qualified on the basis of his testimony to give evidence as to whether or not the material, Exhibits 1 and 2 which he {1678|1679} says he's read, would be likely to cause mischief to social and racial tolerance. Whether or not social and racial tolerance is a value revered by Canadians is not a question for Dr. Kaufmann; it is a question for Your Honour; it is a question of law whether or not that is included in the public interest. But he is well qualified, and his qualifications in the field that I seek to qualify him, Your Honour, I submit are unchallenged as to what injury or mischief these publications, these written communications would be likely to cause social and racial tolerance.

I submit that he be permitted to testify and give his opinion in that field.

THE COURT: I don't need to hear from you, Mr. Christie.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury counsel for the Crown proposes to lead evidence from a witness who Crown submits should be qualified by this Court as an expert witness. The witness in question is Professor Harry Kaufmann. Dr. Kaufmann has a doctorate in the field of social psychology and sociology. He gave testimony concerning his curriculum vitae, which is impressive. Indeed, he is a very learned person within the confines of his field. In addition, I have no doubt that he is a very learned person beyond the confines of the proposed field of expertise in which it is proposed he be qualified as an expert.

Some years ago his topic of study consisted, in part, of the persuasiveness of hate propaganda and the deleterious effect, or harm, upon the targets of that propaganda as that is disseminated within any given society or social group. He played a prominent part in a federal Canadian government study on the subject of hate propaganda. His contribution to that paper submitted to the government is well-known. He lived in this country for some four years, over a decade ago, while he was involved in the field of teaching at the high level of university. He is an American citizen who has lived in the United States of America for the past several years, which I understand is the country of his choice. {1680|1681}

The accused is charged with two counts in one single indictment. The first count alleges that during the year 1981, at Metropolitan Toronto, he published a statement or a tale that he knew to be false, namely, an article called, "The West, War and Islam", the said article likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance. The second count alleges that in the same year, the same location, he published a statement, namely, "Did Six Million Really Die?", that he knew to be false and that it was likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance.

The section under which the accused, Mr. Zundel, is being prosecuted in this Court is s.177 of the Criminal Code. That section reads as follows:

"Everyone who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence."

The subject matter of this charge, in my respectful view, is based upon the common law offence of mischief. It is not based upon section 281 which involves hate {1681|1682} literature. The mode of trial here is composed of a judge and a jury. The evidence given by Dr. Kaufmann would certainly indicate that he is a person with a superior background in the acquisition of principles and knowledge on the subject at hand.

Crown counsel makes it clear that the doctor is going to be asked, essentially, that he having read Exhibits 1 and 2, being the two articles I have named, described in the indictment, would they be likely to cause or effect social and racial tolerance in the Canadian community? The law makes it quite clear that the Canadian community is pan-Canada from Newfoundland to British Columbia and not any specific element or part of the Canadian community. There is nothing to be criticized about Crown counsel's motion to qualify Dr. Kaufmann as an expert witness. However learned Dr. Kaufmann may be with regard to this subject that he has studied, the issue is whether or not, within the decided case law on the subject of expert witnesses, he is a person who has acquired a specific skill or a piece of knowledge well beyond the ken, if I may use that term, of the ordinary citizen of Canada.

In my view that is not the case. S.177 requires that the Crown prove inter alia mischief to the {1682|1683} public interest — in this particular case, mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance in both counts in the indictment. The issue of the definition of "mischief" is mine, as the presiding Judge, to impart to the jury at the appropriate time with respect to each count. The issue of the definition of "public interest" is also my responsibility to impart to the jury by way of definition of those two words.

In my view, twelve persons selected by this accused and by the Crown are here to decide the very issue upon which the Crown now purports to lead evidence in the person of the learned Dr. Kaufmann. The jury, in my respectful view, is quite able to decide, solely and only upon the evidence led throughout the whole of this trial, whether or not the burden of proof incumbent upon the Crown has been discharged according to the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt as to whether the article, "The West, War and Islam", and the article, "Did Six Million Really Die", either or both, created a mischief to the public interest within the realm of social and racial tolerance. The knowledge of twelve ordinary Canadian persons, and I say this with great respect to Dr. Kaufmann, is equal to the task, and the obvious superior knowledge that the doctor has acquired {1683|1684} does not, in my view, place him in the appropriate category as an expert in this particular field to permit him to give his opinion. It will be the jury's opinion that counts. The motion is dismissed.

THE COURT: Do you have, any problems?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. I have another witness who is here, Your Honour. I would like a few minutes to re-group, if I may.

THE COURT: You certainly may. Twenty minutes.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 11:58 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir. I would call Mr. Chester Tomaszewski.

CHESTER TOMASZEWSKI, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Tomaszewski, how old are you, sir?

A. Sixty-one.

Q. And are you from Toronto?

A. Yes.

Q. And I understand that you were originally born —

A. In Poland.

Q. — in the town of —

A. Kalisz.

Q. And in 1939 were you still living in Poland?

A. Up to 2nd of October, 1939.

Q. All right. And can you tell us what happened around that time to you?

A. 2nd of October, 1939, I was arrested by the Germans.

Q. All right. I should ask you, Mr. Tomaszewski, are you Jewish?

A. No. {1685|1686}

Q. Christian?

A. Christian.

Q. What happened then?

A. Well, I was put in prison from October till April. I went through the severe interrogation there, and after that, on the 26th of April, 1940, I was transferred to Dachau Concentration Camp.

Q. How long were you in Dachau for?

A. I was a short period in Dachau. I just went through the quarantine about six, seven weeks and then, from then I was transferred to another camp in Austria, Mauthausen-Gussen [Gusen]. Actually I was in Gussen. Gussen was the satellite camp to Mauthausen.

Q. Were you ever in the main camp of Mauthausen?

A. No.

Q. And how far away would Mauthausen be from that camp?

A. I would say about fifteen kilometers or that.

Q. And would that have been May or June of 1940?

A. That was in shortly after the fall of France. It was, I think it was in the second half of June, because I remember when France fall [fell], I was still in Dachau, because they assemble us, all of us, the prisoners in the appel[ ] square, to listen to the Hitler speech.

Q. How old were you when you were arrested in 1939?

A. Fifteen.

Q. When you arrived at Gussen [Gusen] was there {1686|1687} a camp there already?

A. The camp, when I arrived to Gussen [sic], the camp – pardon me, this bring[s] very emotional memories. The camp was in the process of building. There was few barracks, and before I arrived to Gussen [sic] there was only one transport which was about four thousand men which arrive[d] from Sachsenhausen, a camp which was near Berlin, four thousand of people, and my transport was the second transport to Gussen [sic].

Q. About how many would be in your transport at the time?

A. Six thousand.

Q. Were you in any other camps until the end of the War?

A. No. I spent up to 5th of May, 1945, in Gussen [sic].

Q. Almost five years.

A. Five years. On the 8th day was official capitulation of Germany, and I was liberated on the 5th.

Q. Would you like a glass of water?

A. No. Thank you.

Q. Can you tell us if you were one of the first at Gussen? Were you involved in the building of the camp?

A. Yes. There are different type[s] of work in Gussen. Let me tell you, when we arrive[d] to Gussen, well, the old transport assemble[d] in the appel square again.

THE COURT: Would you say that a little more slowly, if you will? {1687|1688}

THE WITNESS: Yes. The whole transport, the six thousand people, were assemble[d] in the appel square, and again they took all our personalia – name and place of birth, date of birth – and they give [sic] us the numbers, these new numbers which we had to carry them on the chest, the red triangle with a "P". It mean[s] for Polish nationality, political. Red was standing for political prisoner, and another number you have to have it on your pants. And then affix[ed] a number on the wire with a metal plate on your wrist, that in case – you couldn't remove that, in case if you die they could identify you by that number. That number can't be removed.

Q. Okay.

A. And then, after few kicks and hit with a club, we were escorted to the barracks, assigned barracks.

Now, before we depart[ed] to the barracks the commandant, the camp commandant from Mauthausen arrive. His name was Zerreis [Ziereis].

And he walk[ed] on the podium and give us a speech telling us —

THE COURT: And he gave you a speech.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I am going to stop you there. You can't tell us what somebody else said, even the commandant of Mauthausen. All right? So he said something to you.

A. Yes. He said —

THE COURT: Don't tell us what he said.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry. Don't tell us what he said. Were you involved in building Gussen? {1688|1689}

A. Yes. I work[ed] in different places in Gussen. You must understand that the day was beginning at five o'clock in the morning. The first thing was, we make the beds. When the first one I come there were no beds; we used to sleep on the floor. There were no beds but we still have to tidy the barrack. And then we allow it to go to work. The sanitary condition in that time was non-existent there. There was a pipe of running water which you can only open in certain time, like in the morning. There was no toilets whatever in the camp at that time because the camp was just in the stage of construction, and you run to that pipe, you wash yourself, you couldn't wear anything only pants, it doesn't matter it was a winter or spring or summer. You can only run with pants. The rest you're undressed. And then you come back. You have to dress and they scrub the whole barracks with water and then they served so-called breakfast, which usually was either a half a cup of ersatz coffee.

Q. Ersatz coffee?

A. Ersatz coffee, or a very watery kind of a soup, a half a cup per person. Usually barracks was divided into Section A and Section B, and that time we assemble in front of the barracks in the row of ten, and if usually we are exercising how to take our hats off and put them on.

You see, during the appel[ ], when they count us in the appel[ ] square, there was always, commandant, hat off, and it has to be in one instant, twelve thousand men have to take the hats off. If they didn't, you know, there were different people not always work that way, then {1689|1690} we had to exercise all the time in the spare time, the cap off and on, off and on. So when they are assemble in the row of ten, about seven o'clock we march to the appel[ ] square, all the barracks. There were thirty-two barracks in Gussen [sic]. Four were assign as hospital barracks and one is sick, where barracks was occupied by prisoners. And why do we have to line up in ten, because when every barracks was in charge S.S. man who come and he count his men, every barrack has an S.S. who was in charge of barrack. That's only in the appel[ ] square, because inside there was a different man who was in charge. But they were counting ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, whatever it was. That's why we have to assemble in ten.

It was easy to count.

Q. All right. If the number was the correct number, where would you go after appel[ ]?

A. Well, let me tell you. And during the appel[ ], everybody have to go to the appel[ ]. The people who die during the night, which sometime, sometime probably two, three hundreds of people die during the night, they, have to attend the last appel[ ]. They be carried to the appel[ ] square and they were place which barrack do they belong.

Q. Was there ever anybody who was too sick to attend to the appel[ ]?

A. Even if it was sick or not sick, you have to attend the appel[ ]. If you were sick that you couldn't walk, you was carried to the appel[ ]. There was no excuse during appel[ ] hour, time.

Q. All right.

A. As I said, the dead have to attend {1690|1691} the appel[ ], too.

Q. After the appel[ ], Mr. Tomaszewski, where would you then go?

A. Well, at that time it was big confusion, because it was Kommand, what[ ] the German used to call Arbeitskommand[o], form here, form the working groups, and of course, it was a big confusion because everybody want to go in place where the work was probably a little easier, where the Kapo was maybe not as cruel, because there were different personalities and different type of work.

For example, I for six weeks happened to be working in the stone quarry. It wasn't at that time a stone quarry. We just strip the upper layer of earth from the rock. It was a stone quarry, big stone quarries in Gussen [sic]. So if you look at it from the camp you could see maybe thousand people scattered on the slope of the mountain digging dirt, digging the earth and the man on the top throw it three feet below. The man three feet below pick up the earth and throw it further and further and further until that earth landed on the foot of the mountain there. And this was loaded on the portable carriages and carted away. And there were three quarries, like that, and in every quarry approximately thousand men was working stripping the earth. Then there were people who were drilling the rocks. There are people who are cutting stones. There are people who are cutting cobble-stones. There are people who were working inside the camp. There were people who were erecting walls around the camp. There are people who pick up the bodies, and there was a special Kommando who pick up the bodies, put {1691|1692} them on the cart and carried them to the crematorium – all different kind of work.

Q. All right. You talk about some of these different kinds of work. At the quarries did you ever see anybody die?

A. I saw a lot of men die. I carried that people. I saw it. You see like Sunday, which was a day free of work, it was a day where they used to shave every Sunday, they shave our heads, our hair under the arm, our pubic hair. Everything was shave. But afternoon they used to engage us to go to the quarry and pick up a stone and carry the stones to the camp, because as I said, the camp was under construction. It was a heavy clay. It was a rainy season, you couldn't move your legs because you were sinking in there. So we carried the stones to put as a cobblestone between the barracks and the appel[ ] square. Every time we returned from work after work, everybody have to pick up a stone on the shoulder and carry it to the camp. And those Sundays was the worse type of work because you felt that you are entitled to the few hours off. And then you have to go and carry the stones, and don't forget that in the camp everything was what the German used to call, Laufschrift. That means everything was on the run. Nobody walk normally any more. Everybody run. And those Sundays there was a road which lead from the quarry to the camp, and usually, on the normal working day, the terrain which we work is probably extend maybe two kilometers one way, maybe – two kilometers another way, and every morning they used to put guard all around that perimeter where we work, but on Sunday they just called the S.S. to put the post, the {1692|1693} guards along the road which we have to walk to the quarry, back to carry the stone. And of course, the guards were not very happy either that they have to, on Sunday, watch over the prisoners. So everyone, say every fifty feet was a guard and armed with a stick. And anytime you pass through one, if you didn't walk fast enough, they hit you. You have to run. And if they notice that you pick up a small stone, they beat you, sometime they kill you for that. They took you back to the quarry and put on your shoulder a stone as heavy as you can carry, probably you couldn't carry even that stone.

Q. I think you said that you sometime carried bodies?

A. I carry a lot of bodies. Now, might I tell you in those Sundays, when I come to Gussen, it was a strictly camp for Polish people, but it was a cross-section, I guess. Among these people there were about three hundred Jews, approximately. I don't know exactly the figure, but you can see them because they used to have the Star of David. We used to have the red triangle with the "P", and the Jews used to wear the Star of David. And that was the place we used to call the Golgotha Road.

Q. And why would you call it that?

A. Because that was an uphill road, and we carry the stone, and as I said, you are beaten and many people lost their life there. And let me tell you, the victim on the road who lost the life, the first were the Jews.

Q. Did you ever see that happen, Mr. Tomaszewski? {1693|1694}

A. I was see happen because I was carrying the stone.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. Well, I saw it because the man in front of me was a Jewish man with a big Star of David. So what they done, usually, they tell the Jewish man to step on the side, which was outside the line of guards, which the man probably shouldn't do that because, you know, we knew that if you step outside, that was the chance that they could shoot you. And that's what's happen on that particular road. As man step they tell you, "You go and pick up that stone over there." The man go pick up the stone. Bang. You're shot. And that was going for three Sundays until the Jewish population of the camp was gone.

Also, the employee, as I said the camp was under construction, there was no sanitary condition. There was only on the street there are pits where we used to go there to do our physiological functions.

Q. Like the latrine?

A. Latrine, with a pit maybe twenty feet, or eighteen feet long, with two poles, and another pole across. The pole was – the cross-pole was wrapped with the barbed wire that you couldn't sit even there. They figure you may go and have a rest there. So they wrap that with a barbed wire, and whenever the pit was full, well, it has to be empty. So usually, to that job they assign a Jewish man and a priest, because you must realize that in the camp, the people in the camp there were judges, there were lawyers, there were professors, there {1694|1695} were landed gentry, there were clergymen, they are people mostly intelligent people. So a priest and a Jew was assigned to empty the latrine hole, and they used to put that – they used to have a drum, a barrel with the two poles strapped to it, and the poor people used to carry that, and when they filled that thing they had to carry that thing outside the gate of the camp. There was a big pond like and they deposit that thing over there.

Now, later on, 1940 by the fall, we already had proper washroom at that time, but up to that time was only the latrine.

Q. Could you estimate, Mr. Tomaszewski and if this changed from time to time tell us that – how many people would die in the camp each week?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't mind if the witness estimates, and I am sure we all do, but I'd just like, if we could, to confine the witness to what he saw. I mean, estimates do involve some speculation in many cases, and hearsay. Unless there is a basis found in fact, I would like my friend to restrict it to what he saw.

THE WITNESS: Well, let me –

THE COURT: Just a minute, sir. Go ahead. Lay a little foundation work.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Just let me explain this to the jury, if you don't mind.

Members of the jury, witnesses who testify insofar as numbers of things are concerned, in {1695|1696} fact on any subject, are not permitted to speculate. They are not permitted to guess. They are, however, permitted to give estimates provided the estimates are based on personal knowledge. That was the reason for the exchange that you just heard between counsel and myself.

Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Tomaszewski, when somebody died in the camp was there a particular process that you saw that something happened with the body that you saw?

A. Well, there was – let me tell you. You see, like in the summertime when I arrived to Dachau, the first month or two, or even three, there were not so many people dying yet, because everybody was just, some people only arrested about three months. But if you saw the people after three months, I saw them many times because we have to strip all the time to be shaved, and you see the same man, after three months, he probably was well-built man, and after three months you could see it, his belly skin was hanging like a little apron. There was nothing left of the person. It was just skin and bone. And that's – now, I arrived there in June. Three months later that June, July, August, we go into October, the bad season start. I was in Austria where in October, November we used to have rain every day. Sometime the rain last for three weeks steady, a drizzle. And the men work. There was no shelter. You couldn't excuse yourself from work. The people have to go to work. And if it was only work, but there were abuse at work. They were beaten. So after working days, then when we were coming back to {1696|1697} the barracks, to the camp, we carry – we had to pick up the dead people who are killed on the work, or who died, and usually every Kommando carry plenty dead people. They have to be counted in the camp. You couldn't leave them where they die. You have to carry them. And there were a lot – there was not – you said to estimate. I know what I was working in the quarry called Gussen [sic], because there were three quarries; where our Kommando was about two thousand men, and we used to carry maybe about two hundred men dead this night.

Q. That is out of a thousand?

A. That's right. That was practically every day. People used to come to camp and new transport, every month a new transport arrive to the camp. Several thousand men to replace those men.

THE COURT: What did you say? How many again, sir, every day?

THE WITNESS: Every day there were probably two hundred men carried to the camp. They not all were dead, but some they couldn't walk any more, and you couldn't, in the camp, if you couldn't walk you were dead. They didn't let you in in the barrack. They'd carry you straight after the appell[?], they carry you straight to the washroom to die on the washroom floor. They didn't give you last meal any more. Another prisoner strip his boots, his clothing because probably there was something to salvage of this man. He wasn't dead yet.

Q. The two hundred people that would be carried back every day, that was from your quarry, and there were three quarries?

A. That's right. Now, let me tell you {1697|1698} something. You forbid me to tell, but when I arrive and I said the commandant had a speech, he told us right away that this is Vernichtenlager [Vernichtungslager] – extermination camp.

MR. CHRISTIE: I assume my friend was aware this is hearsay.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I was not aware. I am aware it was hearsay, sorry, Mr. Christie. I was not aware Mr. Tomaszewski was going to say it.

Q. Mr. Tomaszewski, you told us about half a cup of ersatz coffee or some thin soup for breakfast.

A. At lunch we used to get a spinach soup, and the spinach soup actually there was only two diet in the camp either on the dry cabbage soup or the spinach soup. Through the five years spending in Gussen [sic] I didn't have anything else to eat but spinach in the summertime, and dry cabbage soup in the wintertime. And that, even, wasn't the spinach. There was everything in the spinach. You could find horse manure, old shoes, whatever the farmer throw on the field, fertilize the field. And this was brought every day by the big trucks and dump in front of the kitchen in the summertime. Usually by the time they cook that thing it already was heated and fermented. It caused a lot of sickness. That is why we have diarrhea, dysintery [sic], and so on from it. The camp was always, if you enter the camp, there was always peculiar smell, particular smell in the camp always hung over the camp. On the one hand there was a glow over the crematorium, or from people, as I said, diarrhea and so on, and wounds which never heal. Once you get any wound it never heal. The wound would smell bad {1698|1699} because they never heal. Any wound you get in the camp never heal again.

Q. You mentioned, I believe, that there were several hospital barracks.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You mentioned, I believe, that there were several hospital barracks.

A. Yes. There were a barracks – there's thirty-two barracks. The last four. So it would be twenty-eight, thirty, thirty-two.

Q. Were you ever in the hospital barracks?

A. I was only once. A stone smash my two fingers and I went there for a dressing, and they remove those two fingernails and they wrapped with a paper bandage. There was no bandages. There were only paper bandages there, and I returned back. I had to go back to work. People didn't – you didn't go in the camp to the hospital unless they take you there, almost forcibly, because that was only one way street.

Q. Which way did that street run?

A. To the hospital. And from hospital to the crematorium. That was the only way – that's why people didn't, even if they were sick, even if they have a wound, they didn't want to go to hospital, because that's where they said it was a one-way street. If they refer you from there to the invalid blocks, there were invalid blocks, and once you get in the invalid blocks, what's happen, you get half of the ration of food which was a starvation diet in the first place, when you get half, so how long can you last? {1699|1700}

Q. Did you have any showers at Mauthausen?

A. Well, we didn't have showers at first, but after they erect a shower in the one corner of the camp which was actually a structure with a roof, the side, there was no walls and only a roof and pipes, of course, with the showers, and we had to go to shower there. And of course, a lot of those, as I said, if you got in the invalid block, which was many, many, many people and they have to feed them, those people, people have to be feed, they did not want to feed them, so like in the wintertime it was, they found quick solution. They took these people to the shower, give them a cold shower in the wintertime for one hour, two hours, then as I said it was a one-way street. They carry you from the shower straight to the crematorium. The same thing happened to the people once announced who want to return to Dachau in 1941 —

Q. You can't tell us what happened to them when they went to Dachau if you weren't there.

A. I was in Dachau. Previously I was in Dachau.

Q. I understand. Did anybody, any prisoners in transit stop at your camp in Gussen [sic]?

A. Yes. In 1945, I can't recall exactly what it was either February, I think it was February, a transport of I don't know how many but it must be estimated there were those people were kept there the night on the appell[?] square, they wouldn't allow them. The guard were standing around. They wouldn't allow it anybody. We can only see the people. There were a woman, {1700|1701} there were Hungarian Jewish women were evacuated from another camp or Hungary, because that time I think the Russian already —

Q. All right. You can't tell us what you think, only what you saw. How do you know these were Jewish women?

A. Well, they all had the Star of David, so they had to be Jewish women.

Q. This was in the wintertime. How were they dressed?

A. In the dress. They are dressed like everybody else, in rags. Some of them barefeeted [sic].

MR. CHRISTIE: Some of them what?

THE COURT: Barefoot.

THE WITNESS: Barefeeted [sic].

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: When you went to Dachau in October of 1949, [1939] at fifteen, what colour was your hair?

A. I was straw blond, very blond.

Q. And when your hair grew out after May 5th, 1945, what colour was your hair?

A. I come out the way I am right now.

Q. Snow white?

A. Snow white. Mind you, they used to shave our heads every week. Now, in 1941, late fall 1942, they allow the hair to grow for three months. Why? Apparently they used the hair, after three months, to make blankets out of them, and they used to shave us – every week they used to shave a path through the middle of your head, in case you escape they can identify you rapidly. {1701|1702}

Q. How much soup would you get at lunch hour, spinach soup or cabbage soup?

A. A bowl of soup which I don't know what is one litre or whatever.

Q. And at dinnertime was there any food?

A. That was dinnertime.

Q. In the evening was there any food?

A. Yes. In the evening we used to get issue bread, one loaf of bread and sometime it usually was divided between three prisoners, one loaf of bread, and sometime, occasionally, specially after 1943, quite often we used to get one loaf of bread divided into two. This situation in the camp slightly improved after 1943.

Q. Other than the two groups of Jewish people that you've told us about, one of about three hundred and the transport in 1945, do you remember any other instances of Jewish people at Gussen [sic]?

A. Yes. As I said 1944, early spring, it's March, there were transport of Hungarian Jews placed in the camp, but they were there only about a week or two, and they move them to Gussen II. There were two camps, you see. There was a Gussen I and a Gussen II. The Gussen I was overflow, so they build new camp which was Gussen II, which was just beyond the wall, northern wall. It was a big camp as the Gussen I. They transferred those Jewish people to that camp, and they were working, tunnelling under the mountains, miles of tunnels. Well, not them, because the tunnels didn't start that before. Let me tell you, while I was there the mountains were move, mountains were moved and miles of tunnels were cut out in the rock. {1702|1703}

Q. How long is winter in this area of Austria?

A. Well, the winter was actually shorter than we have here in Canada. Mind you, the season in Europe are more defined, and the winter wasn't as severe as here. It was like, say, October, November, there was constant drizzle, rain. Then we may get cold weather, well, maybe a day like today, maybe a little lower, the temperature drop a little lower, but nevertheless, it was and it last till maybe March. In the middle of March already was a sign of spring. That doesn't meant that it was warm, but the earth wasn't frozen and, you know ...

Q. Did you have any special clothing issued for work in the wintertime?

A. At first, 1941, we used to get coats. Usually we used to have just the striped prison garb which was pants, jacket, and a hat. For the winter they gave us again a coat. Mind you, this clothing wear very rapidly in the type of work we are doing, and they run out of – there was no more stripe clothing, but gradually – for example, after that I was very happy because. I got French military coat, military coat, and I had a Yugoslavian Royal Guard pants. You know, gradually if the German overrun certain countries, then we used to get the clothing. I have, as I said, military – was very happy because it was a better quality coat. The only thing that they used to, on your back, they used to four inches stripe, they paint your back four inches stripe with the red paint that, again, so also on the pants. That was a precaution if anybody escape. Then they can identify {1703|1704} him very rapidly because, you know, with the shaved head through the middle of his head, with this red stripe on his back, where could you go? You were spotted right away. That was the reason why they paint that.

Q. All right. After the War, Mr. Tomaszewski., did you ever apply for any indemnification or compensation from the German Government?

A. Well, in 1945 the first thing when the American come and liberated us, I and a few others were left the camp, and we walked to a little town of St. Wolfgang, which is very picturesque town. The first thing we went to the church. We asked the priest in charge to say a thanksgiving mass. And then, of course, I went to the number of what they call it displaced person camp after the War. I didn't want to return to Poland. I didn't have nobody in Poland to go. I find out that my parents – well, I know my father was dead because when I was arrested he was killed in the same time. My other brother was in Dachau. I have three other brothers. Two are in England in the Army, and the fifth was caught by the Germans during the War and was executed, too. And my mother, poor mother, raising five boys, she died without knowing if they survive or not.

Q. Mr. Tomaszewski, just one last question.

A. Yes, I did, through the lawyer, in Munich, in 1946, but —

Q. Thank you. That's all right Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would it be possible {1704|1705} to take the noon break a little early? I see it is a quarter to one. I would be prepared to start, but I am not even sure that I will be examining very extensively.

THE COURT: Yes. Two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 12:45 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, this is the last witness I have for this afternoon.

THE COURT: The jury please.

— The jury enters. 2:25 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead, Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Tomaszewski, you were about fifteen or sixteen when you —

A. That's right. I was born in 1924.

Q. In the town of Kalisz?

A. Kalisz. That is West Poland.

Q. Are you aware of the arrangement of Mauthausen camp at all? {1705|1706}

A. I never been to Mauthausen. I been to transfer from Dachau to Gussen [sic], which was a satellite camp to Mauthausen.

Q. Were you aware that there were forty-seven other satellite camps?

A. I am aware that Mauthausen was a chain of camps. I know only Gussen I, and when Gussen I couldn't hold the all inmates, they built Gussen II just beyond the wall on the north side, and it become as big camp as the Gussen I.

Q. Yeah. And it was for work underground with construction of tunnels?

A. Well, there was, first when I arrive there was strictly work in the quarries. Then the work in the quarries there are a certain amount of people were in the quarries. Then in 1943 there were built a complex of building where there assemble machine guns. Then was a tunnel built under the mountains to build the first prototype of jet planes, supposed to be, and there were, oh, hundreds of feet underground that even bombing or anything couldn't ... so, and there were, of course, network of work, railway line built, all by the prisoners.

Q. Was there a Gussen III as well?

A. No, not as far as I know. There were, say, they used to take people from Gussen to a brick yard which was about fifty miles away named Lungitz (phonetic). There was near it railway station. That is where the transport used to arrive until they construct the railway station right in the vicinity of the camp. The prisoners used to be sent there every Sunday to build a shooting range for the S.S. troops. {1706|1707}

Q. I see. And were you as tall as you are now when you first went there?

A. I wouldn't say I was as tall. I was fifteen. I don't know if I originally proper height then or not. I am not sure.

Q. You were mentioning you lost a fingernail.

A. In the hospital. I had injury. Apparently a rock fall on my two fingers and I had to go – I still have a little scar with a finger burst. You could see it here. I went to the hospital to remove that fingernail. So they just stick a needle and scissor underneath and they cut without an anaesthetic and they remove those two fingernails. There was no such a thing as anaesthetic in the camp.

Q. I see. Did they grow back all right?

A. Yes. They are perfect.

Q. Did you suffer any other physical injuries in the camp?

A. Well, I have scars on my legs because my legs also very badly, as I mentioned before; any wound you sustain they never heal; and because we have so many lice and fleas, you constantly had to scratch yourself. Matter of fact, the lice and the fleas cause outburst of typhoid fever. We had to be quarantined on account of it for a period of time. — We couldn't go to work because the S.S. troops was contaminated with the typhoid fever. So everybody was scratching itself because constantly, if you stand, when they take the roll call on the appel[] square, if you look on the back of your inmates, it was like an ant nest, you see the louse moving, {1707|1708} walking. There was no remedy to that until they gass [sic] the whole barracks when the typhoid fever break out.

Q. They gassed the whole barrack?

A. We have to strip. It was, as a matter of fact, it was in March, late March. We had to strip completely. We can only take shoes with us. And all the rugs wherever we were, they were in the barracks, they will seal the barracks. There were some company arrive from Linz, and they gass [sic] all the barracks and we were standing for twenty-four hours naked on the appel[] square in March.

Q. So that the clothes [sic] were on the inside getting gassed.

A. They were gassed, yes, to kill the lice and the fleas.

Q. Right. That was probably why they shaved your head sometime?

A. No, no. The head from the first start, when I arrive to Dachau in April 1940, the first thing they shave our heads. They send us do our heads, under their arm, pubic hair, everywhere.

Q. They shaved —

A. Everything. Some men have hair on the chest and back; that was shave, and that was shave every Sunday once a week until, as I say, when Germany invade Russia, and apparently Hitler had a plan to finish the War with Russia before the winter, and it was — I mean, you know the history; never the War was finished before Christmas, and the German troops were caught by the severe winter in Russia, and they freeze by the thousand. That time the Germany collect, all through the Germany, {1708|1709} even in the camp, confiscated every possible sweater which was deposit in the personal effect in the warehouses, the prisoners' clothing. They rush everything to the Eastern Front to keep the German soldier warm for the winter. And then they allowed us to grow our hair for three months provided that every week they shave a path through the middle of your head in case if you escape you would be recognized. After three months they shave you again, collect every hair, and was shipped to the factories and turned into blankets.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Can you think of any other reason to try to control the lice problem than shaving pubic hair?

A. I don't think it was strictly — I think for sanitary purposes — there was the sanitary condition, as I said, was non-existent up to the fall of 1940. As I said, the camp was in the progress of construction, so there was no toilets, no running water except the pipe. And can you imagine, you don't know the plan of the camp, but the washrooms were located between first row and the second row of barracks; between third and fourth row there was no washroom. So the people, say, who were on the fourth row of barracks, which was quite a distance, and at night, if they want to go to the washroom, they have to run through the all practically length of the camp which was about, maybe, — six hundred feet to the nearest toilet. It was very — I can imagine the torture that was for young, healthy men, but can you imagine a person — there were people in their sixties, sixty-five. A man usually in that age have certain {1709|1710} problems, and there were men who had to run to those washrooms practically five, six times a night. They never get enough sleep because they are always on the run.

Q. All right. I was interested in what you said about the — remember you were saying about the number of dead?

A. Yes.

Q. It would probably be very shocking for you as a young man and —

A. Well, that's why, as I said, it's bringing a lot of emotion to me, because as a young person I really never expect that a man can inflict such a misery and pain on another man. That was the first experience. As I told you about the road to the quarry, where you carry the stones, we call it the Golgotha Way because every inch of that road it was something with human blood, Jews, Polish, and later were Spaniards. We have the Spaniards, by the way, in the camp. They come late 1940 when Germany overrun France. There were thousands of Spanish people interned in the camps in France. They suppose to be the Republican Spaniards which when Franco took over in Spain they were cross the border of France and they were interned in the camps in France. And when Germany overrun France, they classify them as Communist.

Q. Were you classified. also as a Communist?

A. No. Dachau, when I arrived to Dachau, Dachau that time — Dachau I can't say anything about Dachau. The impression of Dachau, when I arrived, {1710|1711} was a very, looked to me like a few [new] camp fairly new. There were about maybe twenty-five hundred of German people, mostly political prisoners who were opposed the Hitler regime. There were Lutheran pastors. There were even some army officers, and mostly communists. And then the first transport from Poland arrive when I arrive on the 26th of April, 1940. I didn't work in Dachau at all. The only thing is, as I remember, when they arrive to Dachau, it was shortly after — before the invasion, the invasion of France was already planned, apparently, because the whole town was decorated with Swastikas.

Q. What town was this?

A. Dachau. And when these transport us from the railway station to the camp, I don't have recollection today, I don't know how far it is, but it is we arrive to Dachau around seven thirty. They march us in the morning. They march us to the camp, and along the street children, curious people were watching, looking at us. People used to go to work and I remember distinctly this, as used to say that they escorted a band of Polish nationalists, Polish bandits and things, and I remember only that the children pick up the stone and used to throw the stone on us. And I remember one bearded man with a big pipe hitting people with a stick. He was a civilian. There was no protection from the troops which escorted us or anything.

Q. What I was curious about was whether or not, perhaps, your figure of two hundred a day from a thousand might have been just a little —

A. No. I don't exaggerate it. Mind you, I tell you in 1940, '41, almost '43 there was every {1711|1712} month — you see the camp, the capacity of the camp of Gussen [sic] was about twelve to eighteen thousand men. When it was normal it was about twelve thousand. When they got more people, eighteen thousand. They share, sometimes they share, one bunk was share by two men, and there were transport arriving practically every month. There were Polish people. There were — in the fall they start, they have two transport of Spanish people from France. Then the War with Russia start. The Russian prisoner of war were placed in concentration camp. They are not supposed to be there because there were soldiers, but because the Russia didn't belong, wasn't subscriber to the Geneva Convention, so the Russian soldier was put in the concentration camp as well.

Q. What I was going to suggest, sir, was that in this particular concentration camp you said everybody was given a number and registered.

A. Everybody got a number. Everybody had to have a number on your chest, like the Polish people, they are mostly political prisoners. They have a red triangle with a "P". The Spanish people used to have a blue triangle. The criminal element used to have a green triangle.

Q. Yes.

A. And everybody below the triangle have to have a number. And on your pants and, as I said, there were number fixed on the wire. They did it. They tied it that you couldn't never remove that wire unless something break or something. Like in some camps, I think Auschwitz, Buchenwald, they used to tattoo the number. In our camp there used to be the wire with the metal plate. {1712|1713}

Q. Mm-hmmm. You see, I was going to ask you if you are familiar with the Nuremberg Trial document pertaining to the camp.

A. Well, I know only because I was approached by Frau Wolfram (phonetic), used to be the director — you see, the firm co-operate, of the stone quarries, the earth work. And apparently the shareholders in that thing was a big Nazi party members like Himmler and all had, and this man, Wolfram, he was the director, and he was, after the War, he was charged as a war criminal, and I was approached by his wife, once I got a letter from his wife and the daughter, if I would appear on his behalf in the Nuremberg Trial as a witness. I couldn't attend. I had an appendix removed. I was in the hospital that time. But I know that there was – Zereiss [Ziereis] was the camp commandant in Mauthausen, and Kaltenbrunner, he was the district S.S. commander of I don't know how many camps, but he was the man, and I know the plan which they testified that they actually, the prisoner of Gussen [sic] and Mauthausen is supposed to, in an event of Allied —

Q. Invasion ...

A. Well, not invasion. If the Allies would capture the camp before the camp was capture, we are supposed to pack all in these tunnels and gas. That was the —

Q. You heard that plan.

A. I heard this plan.

Q. Who did you hear it from?

A. Well, I got it from somebody from Nuremberg in the Polish translation. {1713|1714}

Q. So somebody at Nuremberg told you that was the plan.

A. That was the plan.

Q. Well, can I just ask you if you were aware of the fact that this camp kept and had records for all prisoners?

A. I don't know. I suppose so, because I got it from Geneva from United Nations in 1958 or 59. They were looking for me because United Nations were some money for the ex-prisoners, about $2,400 or something from the United Nations from Geneva. So they had the record because I located in Canada. A matter of fact, I have, to that effect, they were looking for me —

Q. That's all right, sir.

A. And this is my verification.

THE COURT: What do you want to show him?

MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to ask him about — he has acknowledged that there was records for the camp. I'd like to just put to him what I suggest are the accurate figures, the death figures for the various years and ask him if —

THE COURT: Ask him if he recognizes the document. If he does, he may. If he doesn't, he can't.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. I am going to show you Document 499PS for the Nuremberg Record. It's called, "From the Office of the U. S. Chief of Counsel for the Prosecution of Axis Criminality", dated 13th of October, 1945, Document 499PS.

Do you recognize that? Go ahead and look at it. {1714|1715}

A. I never recognize, because I never had access to these documents. Which Heinrich is this?

Q. I don't know. That's probably Heinrich Himmler, I think. That's persons implicated ...

A. You know, he was the Proctor of Bohemia and Czechoslovakia. He was executed by the Czechs.

THE COURT: Have you ever seen that document before, sir?

THE WITNESS: No.

THE COURT: Do you know anything about its content other than what you are reading now?

THE WITNESS: I heard about this, this man.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, if he hasn't seen it before —

THE WITNESS: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. I agree.

Q. I'd like to put it to you, sir, that the figures you've given for the death rate are considerably higher than —

A. I didn't give you any figure. I gave you a figure which in 1940, I said, in 1940 it was such a year of oppression in the camp. Now, as I told you, when we arrive to Gussen [sic] and they give us all the numbers and so on, the Lagerkommandant, the camp commandant, Zereiss [sic] —

Q. Yes. I don't want to hear again what he said.

A. And he told straight. He said —

Q. I don't want you to repeat it. {1715|1716}

A. So it was a tremendous harvest. The death harvest was every night we used to carry people, dead people. And I'm telling you, every month there was a new transport. I don't know the figures you have there. I don't know if they are correct or not, to be dispute, but what I saw in my own eyes, the people didn't evaporated. They were exterminated. That's why always, every month, through the year in 1941, there was replacement of people. The only time in 1943 the situation improve, improve quite considerably. Why? Because Germany start to lose the War. Everybody was start to think what's happening in the year or two when the War was finished. And that time the situation improved. Not only that. That time in 1944, in the beginning, we allow it, they allow it to Red Cross parcel even to the camp.

Q. Which year?

A. 1944. In the winter. And of course, if the occupied territories of Germany shrink, the manpower shrink. 1942?

They couldn't get those people any more.

Q. Was there a typhus epidemic in 1942?

A. Typhus epidemic in Gussen [sic]?

Q. Yes.

A. 1942.

Q. Yeah. Do you say yes, there was a typhus epidemic in 1942?

A. '42, '41 or '42, but there was typhus. We were quarantined for six weeks.

Q. And many people died of typhus?

A. Many people died, and the only reason we were quarantined, because as I said, it spread beyond {1716|1717} the wires to the S.S. barracks, and they were afraid of contamination and so on.

Q. I thought you said they did get it, they did get typhus.

A. They did, but you know, typhoid, it spreads like fire.

Q. Yes, I'm sure.

A. Because they have cases of typhoid among them they had to impose quarantine for six weeks. And that time they gassed the barracks and things like that.

Q. Yeah. Are you familiar with the kind of gas they used?

A. I don't know what gas. I only know that there were, I saw the tins which — they were round necks, something like that side of that serviette, a little bigger than that. A little bigger and [ ] probably quarter inch thick. They would come in the round tins like that and they put them in the different parts of the barracks, because when this thing was over, we had to pick this thing — I think it was a matter that it release some kind of gas. We only can enter the barracks after twenty-four hours. As I said, we stand naked for twenty-four hours in March, in the weather. So people, matter of fact, that time they cannot stand any longer to stand naked. They throw themselves on the barbed wire and they were electrocuted. They rather prefer instant death to the torture of standing.

Q. You survived, though.

A. I survive. Ask me why so many people die and I survive. I don't know. There is probably {1717|1718} a miracle that I survive. I don't know. I probably survive there was another reason that I was protected from atmospheric environment. I was a stone cutter. I never, in later years, say 1941, I was cutting stone. I was under the roof. I didn't get wet every day. And it was a very delicate stonework. We were cutting a stone for the party building in Nuremberg.

Q. Thank you very much, sir.

A. You're welcome.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths. You indicated before the jury came in that for reasons that reasons that are not your fault or Mr. Christie's that was your last witness.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Today.

THE COURT: Today.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. I don't want anybody's hope up. Just for today, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, {1718|1719} please keep an open mind. Enjoy your weekend. I'd like to start earlier next week. Would any of your number please indicate by holding up a hand if nine thirty is inconvenient for you?

Thank you. Nine thirty Monday morning.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I may, Your Honour, two things. Just to give Your Honour some idea of scheduling. I have two witnesses that are survivors that will be arranged for testifying on Monday. I have for Tuesday a witness from the Red Cross, a representative of the Royal Bank, and Sergeant Luby, who will be introducing some material from the Red Cross Report from 1948, and I think the Chambers Encyclopaedia article will be introduced through him as well.

That would, in essence, be the viva voce [voce] evidence that I will be calling, Your Honour, on Wednesday. I haven't confirmed yet. It is one of the things I will be doing this afternoon. I expect to have an archivist here from Washington about the movie that I {1719|1720} mentioned several weeks ago to you, and also I will be prepared to argue judicial notice at that time, and what areas that I am asking Your Honour to take judicial notice of.

THE COURT: Judicial notice of the movie, or —

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. Not the movie, Your Honour. I think, as I indicated several weeks ago, I will be seeking to introduce as a document kept in the archives in Washington, D.C., under s.30 of the Evidence Act. Now, Wednesday may not complete it, but that is the order that I expect to proceed.

I have advised Mr. Christie that we are a little earlier today, Your Honour, and it may be that the Crown's case may be finished by Wednesday. If not, I do expect it will be finished next week. There are no additional witnesses that I will be calling. That was one thing I wanted to tell you, Your Honour, so that you will have some idea where the Crown is going from here.

THE COURT: Thank you very much. It is appreciated.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And the other matter, Your Honour, is with regard to your ruling this morning. {1720|1721} If I may, I just want to make sure I understand in my own mind as I understood your ruling, it was that expert evidence not just of Dr. Kaufmann but of anybody else purporting to give expert evidence on the question that I was suggesting is not proper, but it is a matter strictly for the jury.

THE COURT: On that particular subject, and in the light of the evidence that I heard, I made that ruling on that motion regarding that application. I don't want to appear to be in any way sly; I didn't intend that ruling to be a blanket ruling with regard to the qualifications or the proposed evidence, expert evidence of others.

Part of that ruling, as I recall it now and it was given extemporaneously right from the Bench, was that the jury would be in as good a position as anyone else to decide the issue that was the subject matter of the evidence itself.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is what I understood. I wanted to clarify this so that if I need to be calling evidence on that specific point, then I will be trying to line that up and change the schedule; and my understanding of Your Honour's ruling was that what is mischief is a question of law, what is public interest {1721|1722} is a question of law where social and racial tolerance in the public interest is a question of law and therefore the jury will have instructions from you to consider all the evidence, the definition of public mischief, and the definition of public interest, and from that could reach their own conclusion without the assistance of an expert. Have I got that right?

THE COURT: Yes, you have.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Nine thirty Monday morning.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 28, 1985.

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Good morning. Anything before the jury comes in?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, please, Your Honour.

I'd like to obtain a ruling on a point that has occurred to me over the last couple of weeks. When I seek to ask a question in cross-examination in which I have produced to a witness something that he hasn't previously adopted or accepted or seen, I am somewhat uncertain as to what Your Honour's ruling is in respect to what I may then do, and rather than make any errors in front of the jury, I'd like to explain my position and ask Your Honour for a ruling on this point.

My position is that there is more in issue in a trial than simply whether a witness accepts a statement of another source as true or false. There is also the additional factor of whether my client has, because of the inconsistency of various statements on this subject, reasonable ground to disbelieve the stories put forward.

This, therefore, involves the assessment of not only the evidence of witnesses that are available {1723|1724} or called by the Crown, but it also involves the publications and information provided from other sources which we would like to test against the credibility of the particular witness who claims to have been an eye witness.

In my respectful submission this case involves more than simply the internal consistency of the various Crown witnesses, because at stake is not just their truth or falsity, but the credibility of the whole of the presentation which they and others have made on this rather large subject.

I would like, therefore, if I may, albeit I should produce the document, if any, to a witness, to ask the witness if he's seen it, I would like to be able to put to a witness information which the defence can later prove.

Naturally, I would not do so unless I was prepared to call evidence on the point, but information —

THE COURT: What, the author, the source that the witness knows nothing about — you propose to do that?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I intend to call persons, including the accused, who say these sources also {1724|1725} provide evidence of their story.

THE COURT: The source is, then, hearsay.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The source is then hearsay.

THE COURT: The client's belief is not.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right. My client's belief is his belief based on many sources. It is, in effect, somewhat similar to this, that if there were twenty-five witnesses to a story, or an event, and the Crown only chose to call five or ten who had consistent observations but did not call fifteen or twenty whose stories were inconsistent, I should be entitled, in order to assess the credibility of the story itself, to call or put to the witnesses that are called the stories of those witnesses who are not called. That is not simply because we are here determining the credibility of various witnesses, but the credibility of the story as a whole, because of course, the booklet in issue is a little more complex than just the evidence of one witness.

I therefore will, in due course, be calling or endeavouring to call evidence to show the inconsistencies between the witnesses who have been {1725|1726} called and the many accounts that are provided from other sources to enable the jury to assess the justification, the reasonable basis for my client's disbelief in this particular version of history.

Therefore I would like to be able to put those to the witnesses and ask them for their comments as to whether they consider this false or true, and to what extent.

I realize that this is not the routine situation, but I think it's because of the fact that a more complex issue arises in this case than just proving a fact, it involves testing the justification for believing or disbelieving in a version of a historical event.

So I would like Your Honour's direction, and I would like to be entitled to put to witnesses called by the Crown conflicting stories from not only other witnesses, but other sources.

Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, the rules of evidence, I suggest, are carefully formulated and carefully evolved through the years and should not, lightly be set aside.

The reason I would suggest it is proper {1726|1727} to ask a witness whether or not they have read and are familiar with a certain source before asking about that source is so that a witness is able to comment not just on one paragraph on page 751 of the book, but is able to comment as well as to whether or not that paragraph is in the context properly put before him.

For example, Dr. Hilberg, when he was being cross-examined about certain statements that were attributed to a Chief Justice in the United States on the Nuremberg Trials, is able to say, because he is familiar with the work, "Well, that refers to the count of war aggression, not to the count of war crimes." Had he not read the book, he may well not have known what the reference was to.

It is only fair to the witness, Your Honour, and to the jury that if something is going to be put before the witness, he be familiar enough with the source to be able to comment on the source at large.

My understanding of the law in putting books to individual witnesses is to ask him whether he is (page 1728 follows) {1727|1728} familiar with it, whether it is authoritative, and if he is, then he can go to it. If it is not, then it is not authoritative work in the eyes of the witness.

If it's true that Mr. Zundel's belief is certainly a part of this trial, and the defence will certainly have an opportunity to call what evidence it will in regard to that belief, but I'd suggest it has to be done properly and not by sources which the witnesses are not familiar with.

With the exception of Dr. Hilberg these are not expert witnesses. They are ordinary men and women, eye witnesses of events. And some of them may have read secondary sources around the events of World War II and the Holocaust, and if it is a secondary source that my friend has that they've read, or a primary source, then that's fine, but most of them, Your Honour, are not historians. They are just ordinary people who went through something that they are describing for the Court.

As such, I'd suggest it cannot properly be called upon to express an opinion about another historical work that they are not familiar with at all. That is my submission.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not asking for {1728|1729} these witnesses to express opinions on other sources, but I was going to ask them to tell me if statements from other sources are true or false in their knowledge.

I am not asking them to weigh some other literary work but, for example, if one witness says Proposition X occurred, and I produce from various sources published, identified to the witness and to the Court, that this statement is made, and I simply say, "What is your comment upon that statement? Is it true or is it false?", then I can develop the line of cross-examination that I hope to, which is to show that between these various sources there are many conflicts that are not just superficial, but are the very fundamental conflicts that lead one to have reason to doubt the consistency of various sources whereas if I was just simply confronted by the Crown's witness saying, "Oh, I don't know that and therefore I don't have to answer questions on what other people have said about this situation", the Crown could then just call the witnesses that are consistent with each other, ignoring historic inconsistencies, and I am not allowed to raise them, I suppose, in my own defence.

I would like to be able to explore this area with the Crown witnesses who claim that they have seen {1729|1730} these events and thereby demonstrate to the jury that there is more to this story than necessarily comes out through the mouth of each Crown witness.

Thank you, sir.

REASONS FOR RULING

In the absence of the jury, counsel for the accused moves for a direction, in effect, from the Court concerning the issue of whether or not he will be permitted, during his cross-examination of Crown witnesses, to draw from those witnesses evidence which has its source in reference books, text books and other documentation created by third parties, namely authors, generally speaking, on the subject of what is said to be the Holocaust which is the subject matter of this trial.

In the earlier portions of this trial I have not permitted Mr. Christie to put to a witness any questions concerning information to be drawn from the witness which Mr. Christie has derived from books unless, of course, he puts the book and the author to the witness first and asks the witness whether or not the witness is familiar with the book and has read the book and is therefore able, on a knowledgeable basis, to comment on the book.

Mr. Christie asked for these directions so that he can, he hopes, put various propositions that he obtains from books and other writings of other third parties to the witness and then ask the witness for his or her comment.

Crown counsel proposes [opposes] this procedure for the reasons he has given. One of the main objections {1731|1732} that Crown has taken is that if the witness is not familiar with the source, namely the book or the writing, then certain aspects of that source or writing can be drawn out of context (inadvertently or otherwise) with the inability of the witness to make any comment by way of modification or rectification of that portion removed from the context.

If I permitted Mr. Christie to cross-examine witnesses by employing source material of other persons on the basis he suggests, I would, in effect, be permitting the defence to place evidence on the record and before the jury which will be hearsay, and which would be evidence placed during the course of the Crown's case.

Mr. Christie has been permitted to ask certain witnesses who testified all about the opinions of other authors. That is so because those witnesses had been qualified as experts in the field of expertise that is the subject matter of this trial. They are therefore in a position, as a matter of law, to give their opinions.

Dr. Hilberg was such a witness. He was asked about the opinion of other authors. He gave them. He did, however, give his opinions on a balanced {1732|1733} basis simply because he was quite familiar with the subject matter on which he was being cross-examined.

The witnesses that are now going to be called, I am told, are not experts. They are said to be survivors of a certain event that occurred during the Second World War, and they are going to relate their experiences.

If they are not familiar with the contents of the books and periodicals that are suggested to them, it is perfectly obvious that they are not in a position to pass opinions on the experiences of third parties.

Mr. Christie is quite free to put to each witness that he chooses, the book upon which he proposes to cross-examine. If the witness is unfamiliar with the book or unfamiliar with the author, or both, then of course Mr. Christie cannot put the opinions of that author to the witness.

That does not stop counsel for the defence from putting suggestions to the witness based upon information that Mr. Christie has derived from the book, but he must not give the opinion of the author. He can put suggestions and propositions to the witness and {1733|1734} ask the witness to comment whether or not he put it within the witness' knowledge. If it is, he is entitled to draw the answer.

However, as I say, to permit this type of cross-examination, the practical result would be that the jury would be obtaining the opinions of the authors who Mr. Christie indicates he does not intend to call, and in the result the defence would be testifying during the course of the Crown's case.

That is not the way that we run trials in this country, as we all know. Quite naturally, the belief of the accused as to the truth of the contents of Exhibits 1 and 2 is very much an issue that the jury will decide.

In due course the defence will have the opportunity of leading evidence with respect to that subject and others, but in the meantime, if the two witnesses the Crown proposes to call are what is called survivors of what occurred, then this ruling covers those two witnesses. They will not be experts, and Mr. Christie will not be permitted to cross-examine in the way he proposes to do so.

THE COURT: Are there any questions?

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I just raise one other question, Your Honour? I was wondering, in respect to the witness on Friday, the situation arose where I think on two occasions in-chief and once in cross he came out with the remark attributed to Commandant Zereiss [Ziereis]. I was somewhat at a loss as to what course to follow in view of that.

THE COURT: It is not an easy problem.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. It's almost as if to raise the issue accentuates it to the jury.

THE COURT: What would you like me to do?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was wondering if perhaps in this situation you might mention to the jury that they should – I suppose it is kind of ridiculous in a way, but that they should disregard the remark. I realize they have already heard it three times.

THE COURT: If that is what you would like me to do, I would be glad to do it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I realize it is hearsay and we cannot test it at all with knowledge or information. I am afraid it may quite inadvertently arise {1735|1736} again. I will be quicker to object, but I was going to ask Your Honour just to mention that to them, that they really should disregard that remark. I think it is rather difficult, but still —

THE COURT: I will do that. Do you have any objection to that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certain not, Your Honour. I think it is quite proper.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I'm sorry, can the jury be held up for just a minute? If I can have your indulgence for just a moment, it's something, Your Honour, that I don't know what Your Honour can do. The police are aware of it.

Mr. Urstein received a telephone call last night at about midnight, and the telephone call was simply somebody saying, "You're next", and hung up, which is in the context of this trial and the fact that he is the next witness obviously [sic] caused him some concern. I just heard about it now from Sergeant Williams.

I just wanted to bring it to Your Honour's attention in the absence of the jury, and we will be looking into that, but there is nothing we can do about it right, now. {1736|1737}

THE COURT: Well, this witness has now joined the group where the Judge, the Crown Prosecutor and defence counsel have all received threats. I don't know that that's unusual and should be the subject of any further comment except that he is not the only one in this world that it's happened to.

Justice will take its course and truth will come out, and that is the way that justice is going to be done in this country, regardless of who is threatened and who isn't. Ready to proceed?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right. Bring in the jury.

— The jury enters. 10:05 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The next witness, Your Honour, will be Mr. Dennis Urstein.

DENNIS URSTEIN, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Urstein, how old are you, sir? {1737|1738}

A. I am sixty-one next month.

Q. And where were you born, what city?

A. In Vienna, Austria.

Q. And were you in Vienna in 1938?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did something happen in 1938 in Austria?

A. Yes. After Hitler marched in, I was arrested and put into a – as a matter of fact, my ex boys' school, that was the place where they put people that they arrested in there for any sake of any other place that they had. It was a boys' school.

Q. May I ask you to speak up, please?

A. Yes.

Q. You were put in your former boys' school?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And over the next two years were you used a certain way?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. What happened over the next two years, in general?

A. Well, from Austria I think it was about three or four weeks later, about two thousand of us that were held in that school were sent to Buchenwald.

Q. Thank you. Do you know what labour battalions [sic] were at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what they were?

A. Yes. We lived in a make-shift, very, {1738|1739} very large tent, because the barracks were probably full, and the work that we did now was extremely unnecessary, like we dug a ditch. We closed a ditch. We dug a ditch. It was supposed to be a road-building Kommando.

Q. And how long were you in that labour battalion [sic]?

A. One year.

Q. And how was it that you came to leave the labour battalion [sic]?

A. Well, one day I was sent back to Vienna, and I found out later on that my parents obtained —

THE COURT: No. Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I have to stop you. You can't tell us what you found out later on; but you went back to Vienna and you had some information and did you act on that information?

A. Well, no. I was only about fifteen years old. My father obtained a visa for Shanghai, and then decided for some unknown reasons to me not to go. So I stayed with my family. I had to report to the police department twice a week.

Incidentally, before I left Buchenwald I was told to swear that I will not reveal anything that I heard or saw or anything that happened to me, period.

Q. All right.

A. May I continue?

Q. Yes, please.

A. Well, instead of leaving as we should have, we crossed the border. We went to Germany. My father paid, I guess we could call them a professional {1739|1740} smuggler, or something like that, that took us across the border to Belgium, and we arrived in Antwerp.

Q. How long were you illegally in Belgium?

A. Until I was re-arrested in 1940, the middle of 1940. I was then sent to a camp called Mechelen.

Q. How long were you in Mechelen for?

A. Until 1942, I think about July, because I arrived in Auschwitz in 1942 in August.

Q. In August of '42 you arrived in Auschwitz.

A. That's right.

Q. How long were you in Auschwitz for?

A. Until October 1944.

Q. While in Auschwitz can you tell us generally which camps you lived in?

A. Yes. After the selection we got out of the cattle cars. Our group contained about fifteen hundred people that came from Mechelen. We were selected and we, obviously, at this time, I or anybody else didn't know what that meant. It looked like nothing – the one part went to the right, the other went to the left, went on to a truck. It was flat and had sidewalls about yeah high.

Q. Indicating about eighteen inches?

A. Something like that, I would say, yes. And we marched into the camp which at that time was Auschwitz I. It was the main camp.

THE COURT: Did you say you got on a truck? {1740|1741}

THE WITNESS: No, I did not, sir. The others went on a truck. The part that went to the left. I went to the right. We marched in and on. Incidentally, before, at the selection, everybody was asked what his profession was, and I don't know for the life of me, I don't know why I said I was a taylor [sic]. I ended up in Block No. 1 which was the taylor [sic] block, and the function there was to —

THE COURT: Just a moment, please. I don't think that what you are saying how is being totally heard by all of the jury.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry.

THE COURT: That's all right. You have a mild voice. Please speak up quite loudly so that everybody can hear.

THE WITNESS: Okay, sir. Thank you. I'll try. So I ended up in a taylor [sic] block, and the I function, there were, I think, forty sewing machines down there, and all the people did was sew on numbers to the left pant leg – at the right pant leg, I'm sorry, and the left breast on the pockets. The numbers were given to the people so that they coincide by the numbers that were tattooed on their arms, which were the first thing that you received when you walked in.

You want me to go through this whole thing again, please, sir? It's rather difficult for me, if you don't mind my saying so.

Q. Did you ever issue a uniform to somebody who didn't have a tattoo on their arm?

A. No, sir. I did not. {1741|1742}

Q. In due course did you ever move to Birkenau?

A. yes. This happened in a very unusual way. In November a transport came in and we issued clothing and numbers.

Q. I'm sorry, what year, Mr. Urstein?

A. In 1942. And I saw a young fellow that went to school with me, and naturally, we laughed at having no hair. He was shorn and I was shorn, and then he went down to serious business when he told me he went with his parents.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to avoid hearsay, if we could.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You can't tell us what somebody else said. I know it is natural in conversation, but we can't have it in the courtroom.

A. Then how will I put this?

THE COURT: Well, Crown counsel will lead you through that field.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Urstein, if I can go back, my question was, were you ever moved to Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us when you moved to Birkenau?

A. In 1942.

Q. And about what month?

A. December. Just before Christmas

Q. Okay. And did you ever work with Kanada command, or the rolling command?

A. Yes, sir. I did. {1742|1743}

Q. Did you ever have occasion to meet trains as a member of the rolling command?

A. Yes, sir. I did.

Q. Was there one train in particular?

A. Yes, sir. I did.

Q. Take your time.

A. That's all right. This is not easy. This is an exact date. If I may I will explain to you why I know it was the exact date. Knowing that my parents were in Belgium, I obviously kept my eye out for trains from Belgium for transports from Belgium. Anyway, it was about four, five o'clock – no, four o'clock in the afternoon, something like that. We were waiting in the ramps. A transport arrived, and I saw my parents get off. Now, our function down there was to do two things – to get the people out of the cars as fast as possible, and sometimes to help them line up in one column and to get the luggage out.

Now, we just threw the luggage out right on the ramp, and I saw my parents. My father at the time was, if I may just figure it out, my father was born in 1879, so that will make him about sixty-three or sixty-four. And they didn't see me. I didn't see them. They went up on a truck, and being already seasoned after a few months, because nobody lived longer than a few weeks anyway in camp – the ones that did were very lucky – and I saw them drive away.

I want to interject one thing if I may. At that time I had absolutely no emotion. I wasn't sad. I didn't cry. I just took it matter of factly. I cried {1743|1744} and thought about it after the War, but not at that time.

Q. Which way did the truck go towards the main camp or Birkenau, or some other direction?

A. No. No. From the ramp at that time we could see two crematoriums. They both had one smoke stack on it. The ones that got built afterwards had two each on it; but that's immaterial, I guess. And they went away. All the other transports went, all the other trucks went, and the thing that struck me when I started with this battalion [sic] was, there was always a doctor there that was doing the selecting, because he had the insignia of the medical corps, and then later on we knew.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can't hear the witness.

THE WITNESS: We knew who Mengele was, so we saw him quite often down there. He was a very good-looking young man. When we saw the Red Cross truck, we knew already where they went and what they went.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I just want to make sure, Mr. Urstein, you said that your parents went in a truck the way all the other trucks went.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And where was that?

A. Towards the crematorium. Because the rest marched. I marched. We saw the people that came off the train later on in a camp. And as a matter of fact, I had long discussions with them to find out how my parents were and all that. This I asked them.

Q. Were you ever inside a gas chamber? {1744|1745}

A. Yes, sir. I was.

Q. Can you tell us about that?

A. Yes, sir. I will. It was late in February 1942 – sorry, 1943. We came back from work and we marched in fives. There was five people in one row. Okay? And just before we were going into the barracks themselves, after we were counted, we were counted at the door and we were counted in front of the barracks, the leader of the block, the S.S. man which was called Blockfuhrer took six rows of fives and told them to step forward. And we did. We stood there for about, I would say, ten minutes, and a truck came along. Incidentally, the same type of truck that we saw at the ramp very, very often that we saw taking dead bodies that either died natural or unnatural, were beaten or whatever it was from the camp, and we were asked to get on the truck. And I remember distinctly what I thought at the time. I said to myself, "This is it, baby." I didn't use the word "baby", but as I said, "This is it." But then, while the truck drove, I tried to rationalize. I think I tried to rationalize the whole thing. I thought, this is not the way the Nazis do it. This is not the way the S.S. does things. When a selection goes on – and we have several selections in our block – they look at your number. The scribe of the barracks took your number down because it had to be done the proper way. One had to know who is who. And then we were put in a truck, or they went to a special barrack down there that was emptied out and they kept it until midnight, and then they drove them out to the crematorium, or gas chambers.

So as we were driving along we arrived in a very manicured courtyard. There were trees down {1745|1746} there. I even saw some flowers. We were told to get off. There were three S.S. men down there, and all three of them – I don't know the term in English – they were Unterschaufuhrer [Unterscharführer]. They had silver piping down here, and colours. I don't know if this is a sergeant or corporal or something like this. I don't know. And we got off the truck and he said to us in German, which was the working language down there ...

Q. I am going to stop you, because unless it's an order, you can't tell us what he said to you.

A. It was an order to get off the truck. And we got off the truck. We lined up, stood to attention, and he said —

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think it makes any difference, Your Honour, whether it's an order or not. I think it's hearsay. I think we should deal with what he did.

THE COURT: Ask him what happened.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Don't tell us what he said. Tell us what you and your comrades did.

A. We got off the truck, he put on the gas mask, and what I heard distinctly was a hum. It was a loud hum, and to me it came from the door and the building that we faced.

THE COURT: Just a moment, please. "I heard a loud hum coming from the door ..."

THE WITNESS: From the door that we faced.

THE COURT: "... of the building."

THE WITNESS: That's right. {1746|1747}

THE COURT: "That we faced". When you say "we", who do you mean?

THE WITNESS: That's the other people, the other twenty-nine, I assume. I can, only talk for myself. As we looked at it, we knew that this was the crematorium because we saw the smoke stack. This was to the left, of it. He, as I said, donned the gas mask and, opened the door. It was a very large wooden door. I cannot tell you how large it was, if it's six feet or twelve feet. It was huge. I did not take any notice. I didn't think I was going to relate this again. The, one thing that I remember was that the door had to be, opened by a wing-type screw-type, of thing. It was closed tight. It was a latch, I would say yeah high, and there was, one in the middle and, one on the bottom, and he just unscrewed that and opened the door. He told us

THE COURT: You get an, order, yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: As a result, of that what happened?

A. He first issued us with hooks that were about that long.

Q. About three feet?

A. That's right. They had a handle on, one side, you knew, where you put your hand through, around, and then he said something that I can't translate. He said —

Q. Don't tell us what he said. Tell us what you did.

A. He said — I must still say what he ordered us to do and what he did.

THE COURT: Just hold it. Listen to {1747|1748} Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. He gave you an order. Don't tell us what it was. And as a result of that order did you do something, you and the other prisoners?

A. Yes. He removed — well, we saw a sight that I wanted to forget. It took me over forty years, and it came up again, and it's unusual.

Q. What did you see?

A. Bodies, lots of bodies. But the unusual part of these bodies were, I saw bodies in a camp, they weren't just laid out, they were entangled with each other. Like we found later on, I found later on scratch marks. They were trying to get on top of each other, I don't know why, but the strongest were on top, the weakest were in the middle, the children usually were in the bottom. And we were told not to be squeamish and get those Jew bastards out, in German. So we did. What I noticed was that there was a lot of water around.

Q. Can you estimate, how many bodies there were?

A. Well, that's extremely difficult, but I would say if I could compare it to the people that were in our block, there were about six or seven hundred. Forty per cent [sic] were children. And when I say children, I wouldn't say very, very young children, but tens and elevens and twelve-year-olds.

Q. Where did you have to take the bodies to?

A. Well, right outside there was a {1748|1749} corridor down there, and we dragged them through the corridor and put them on the outside where there were some crushed stones. This is where we really stood. And we had to line them up.

Now, this I remember we did, and I am not going to say we are told; we did. We had to line them up with one head here and one head here. One head here and one head here. This is how they had to be lined up. And then we piled them up on top of each other.

Now, we couldn't do that with the hooks, so somebody took the legs and somebody took the arms and we just put them on top of each other.

Q. Were the bodies in a state of dress or undress?

A. Oh, they were all undressed and, incidentally, another thing I noticed was that there was a lot of — they were all defected — is that the right word for it? I know the German, I don't know it in English. They were all emptied their bladders, and what do you call it?

Q. All right. So they emptied their bowels as well?

A. Right. But a lot of it was gone already because as I say, there was a lot of water; their bodies were quite wet. But as we got into the middle of it, or below the top, we saw blood on their noses. There was just a trace of foam at the corners of their mouths, and there was a funny smell in there. It was like pickles or mustard. Some of the boys in our group started to cough violently. I didn't. I guess I'm very {1749|1750} lucky. But nothing happened to them. And after we did that, we were told and we did wash the chamber.

The most significant thing that I saw — and I certainly wasn't a builder and I am not a builder — is that there were no columns there holding up the ceiling. The first thing that we saw, I would say, every twelve inches, this I say in size, there was a shower fixture in the ceiling. The ceiling wasn't too high. The ceiling was maybe, I don't know, four, five meters high, something like that. And no windows. And the most significant thing was steel piping. Instead of — the whole room was cement. The floor was cement. The walls were cement. The ceilings were cement. And I saw steel piping holding up the ceiling as a column. And another thing was that about as high as this table here there was a mesh around it on the bottom.

THE COURT: A mesh around what, sir?

THE WITNESS: A mesh around steel piping. You know, a metal mesh, meshing. Now, we washed the walls, the ceiling, the floor, and there were quite a number of grates in there for the water to flow off.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Drains?

A. Grates or drains, you know, like a drain. I am so overcome with emotion. I wonder why the devil I have to relate that after forty-two years.

After we get through with this, we went outside. We were told to go outside, you know. We went outside, got back in a truck, and we were driven back to our barracks in camp.

Q. How long did the whole process take, Mr. Urstein? {1750|1751}

A. About three hours.

Q. And was it ever repeated?

A. With me?

Q. With you.

A. No, sir. The only comment, if I may —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I think you had better just listen to questions rather than comment, Mr. Urstein I would like to know if you have ever testified about this in a courtroom.

A. Yes, but not about the incident. That was about something else in Vienna. The Kommando, there were two Viennese boys, one is Otto Graff, and the other one was Franz Wunsch —

Q. All right. I am going to stop you. You testified in a trial that you were in in Vienna.

A. That's right, sir.

Q. You told us that a man donned a mask before the doors were opened.

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us who it was who donned the gas masks?

A. Yes. One of the three S.S. men that ordered us from the truck.

Q. Were you given a gas mask?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any of the others?

A. No, sir.

Q. At the end of the War did you try {1751|1752} to make contact with your family — your parents or any other members of your family?

A. Yes. I had one sister that luckily lived in England since 1937, and I tried to make contact with her.

Q. All right.

A. Now, I did not go back to Vienna after the War.

Q. Can you tell us how many members of your family —

A. Well, what we counted, one incident — this is not hearsay, this is something that happened to me that I have not mentioned, but I don't know, you get it out of me — in 1943 I opened up some suitcases like everybody else, and I found pictures and a birth certificate of a cousin of mine that lived in Trieste, in Italy. Due to the fact that the suitcases — and I found out through going through the suitcase very carefully so that nobody sees me because we were not supposed to look through letters or anything, but just sort things where they are supposed to be, like shoes to shoes, and dresses to dresses and shirts to shirts and ties to ties, and what have you got — that she was married and she had two children, two small children as a matter of fact, two children. Her name was Rota. I don't recall her married name. After the War I informed her sister, who lived in Indonesia – at that time it was called Java – what I saw, what I found, and she had to make up her own mind what happened to them.

Q. Can you tell us how many members of your extended family, your cousins, parents, brothers {1752|1753} and sisters —

A. Yes. One hundred and fifty-four, sir. One hundred and fifty four. That is uncles, aunts, grandmother, grandfather, cousins, male and female. We were a very large family. My family lived in Austria for about two hundred and forty years and we were quite extended.

Q. All right. Have you ever made any claim for indemnification or compensation?

A. Yes, sir. I did. I was told by —

Q. Don't tell us what you were told, but did you receive anything as a result of your claim?

A. Yes. I received $900. It was transferred to, I think, the Bank of Commerce. They paid me that, and I had to sign a so-called release.

Q. And which government was that from, sir?

A. The Austrian government.

Q. Did you ever receive anything from the West German government?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Urstein, are you a part of any conspiracy or swindle or hoax to fool people into believing that millions of Jews were slaughtered in the Second World War?

A. I don't think so. No, I'm not.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie.

——— {1753|1754}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. I gather your evidence is that you worked in Kanada command after 1943.

A. Will you repeat the question?

Q. I gather your evidence is that you worked in Kanada command, in Birkenau, after May 1943?

A. No. After May 1943 I was not with Kanada. I was not after May 1943.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes, that's right. After May 1943 I was with the Dachdecker, which was the people that fixed the roof.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I have the map of Birkenau?

Q. Could you tell us what the gas chamber looked like from the outside?

A. Yes. It had — all I saw was, when we faced it, it was a wall with a very, very large door, and after we went inside we knew it was the gas chamber. I didn't know it from the outside when I looked at it.

Q. Okay. You say it was a wall with a large door?

A. Yes. Like any other house has. It has a wall and a door.

Q. Was this a building by itself?

A. No. It was adjacent to the crematorium.

Q. So the door you entered, was it from the outside? {1754|1755}

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was from the outside.

A. The one that we entered was from the outside. Well, we had to go through a small corridor.

Q. A small corridor.

A. Yes. About maybe two steps or something like that, which is very, very small, I would say.

Q. Two steps.

A. Yeah.

Q. Two steps where?

A. Where to what, sir?

Q. To the gas chamber?

A. To the gas chamber, yes.

Q. So was this inside the building?

A. No. We saw the door from the outside of the building, but we had to make a right turn, a left turn, which was about two steps, two steps I would say. We saw the door from the outside.

Q. So this door that you are looking at is on the outside wall of a building.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think we had a whole bunch of little maps, too, did we not? Could you identify —

A. I'm sorry, I identified my own map. It is the same one as yours.

Q. How do you know it is the same one?

A. There are other maps, aren't there?

Q. I don't know. You tell me. Let me ask you, where was this building?

A. Right there. {1755|1756}

Q. Exhibit 21?

A. Right here.

Q. Okay. Now, let me just ask you to make a mark on there with a felt pen, and maybe make a number and mark it that way. Would you do that? I'll give you the felt pen. I am going to give you what looks like a felt pen, if you could just put, say, oh, I don't know, No. 3.

A. Yeah. Right there.

Q. Okay. Just put the number 3.

A. Do you want me to sign it?

Q. Okay. You put the number 3 by the No. III Krematorium, and that's where you were?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Okay. Now, could you make a mark with the same pen where the entrance was that you went into the gas chamber?

A. I don't know. Can't tell you.

Q. You can't tell me.

A. No, I cannot, sir. This was a fleeting — I'm sorry, I would love to tell you that, sir, but I can't.

Q. All right. Do you have any idea where it was?

A. No. At this moment, right now, I do not, sir.

Q. Okay. You have given us a description of a door on the outside of the building.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And you said — can you describe it?

A. Well, may I show you what I mean {1756|1757} by this remark?

Q. Put it on a piece of paper so we can put it into evidence. Draw us a diagram.

A. No. I am drawing you what I saw. Now, here, this is the whole complex we saw. The chimney was about here. Now, when I said "corridor", we saw the door from here when we faced it, right there, we saw it right there. And when I say "corridor", it was two steps going this way. We went through this and there we saw the door. The door was also visible from the outside.

Q. So the door — at that point is there a flat roof or a peaked roof, or what roof is it?

A. I think this one, it looked something like that, I think. This is where we saw the door, and this is where we saw the chimney, and again, this is an assumption that you will object to, but I believe that this is where the crematorium was located.

THE COURT: A little louder, please.

THE WITNESS: I said this is where I think the crematorium was located; but this is where we went in.

Q. Well, let's, for the record, because we are eventually going to show this to the jury — can you tell me, then — you have put an "X" for the chimney and you have put grid marks for peaked roofs.

A. No. This is not the roof. This is where I said I think the ovens were, because we, didn't see them.

Q. All right. Where you went into, then, it was a flat roof, was it? {1757|1758}

A. This was a flat roof, yes.

Q. And was it the same level as the rest of the building?

A. No. No, sir. It was not. That is what I showed here, you see. This is flat, and this is a little bit higher. This is what it looked like to me after all that time, sir. That is all that I can say.

Do you mind very much, for one second, if you don't mind — I have angina.

Q. So this building had a flat roof, and you entered from the outside along one of the walls.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Yes. Can you describe any more of what it looked like from the outside?

A. No, sir, I cannot.

Q. How tall was it – this is the building with the flat roof.

A. I would say right up to these ridges down there, the first one. This is presumption of mine. I did not take any notice of it. I wanted to get out of there, so I did not take any notice how tall it was or how wide it was or where locations were. I simply don't want to talk about, you know, my memories; bad enough it comes back. It fades, but I don't want it to come back. It took me too many years to try and get it out of my mind. I don't for you or anybody else, sir, try to get it back in my mind. Sorry.

Q. Well, all I am asking you is to describe the height of the building.

A. Well, I am surmising. I cannot give you exact heights or even approximate heights, sir. {1758|1759} don't know.

Q. Well, you have given us a description of a building that was a flat roof.

A. That I can tell you, yes, but I can't give you height or widths or anything.

Q. I am not asking for exact heights, you know.

A. Not even an approximation. I don't know, sir. I know it was a lot taller than I was. That's for sure.

Q. That's from the ground level to the roof of this flat building was a lot taller than you were.

A. Definitely. Yes, sir.

Q. And you've described – can you describe the door for us?

A. I would say the door was maybe a little wider than the end panel down there.

Q. Wider than the end panel?

A. Yeah. As far as the height is concerned of that door, I would say —

Q. Let's get that for the record, but for the record, you see, there's quite a few panels there.

A. No. The end panel, the one that I am looking at right now.

THE COURT: You are looking at the wide panel.

THE WITNESS: The wide panel right down there. There are smaller ones to the right. Never mind the ones on this wall. This is the panel I am talking about. {1759|1760}

Q. Now that, would you agree, is approximately eight feet wide?

A. I can't give a measurement. You have to tape measure.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you and Mr. Griffiths can get together sometime before the end of the trial and measure it and let us know what the measurement is.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you very much.

Q. It was wider than that?

A. Just a shade, yes.

Q. A shade wider than that. And it had some kind of screw mechanism to close it?

A. Yeah. Not a screw mechanism. May I step down for a second, sir?

THE COURT: Well, I think perhaps you can do it just as well, sir – turn around and face the jury. They are the important ones.

THE WITNESS: It looked like something where there was a latch, a wing-type screw that fastened it together.

Q. More than one?

A. Yeah. One was about my height, would say, about here. The other one was here. The other one was down here.

Q. So the door was taller than you?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you have to walk up to the door, or down to the door?

A. No. It was even. {1760|1761}

Q. Right on the ground level.

A. Yes, sir. I think that's what it was. I'm sorry, you don't ask me and I won't tell you. I nearly wanted to jump in and tell you something.

Q. That's okay. Let's just deal with it as it comes up. As far as height of the building, you've said it was taller than you, and you don't know how much taller than you. So that's from the ground level to the top of the flat roof was taller than you?

A. I would say that any building is taller than I am, but unless it is a dog building, but a building is taller than I am, or you, or anybody in this room.

Q. So it is a normal flat roof building?

A. Not building. That area was flat roof. That area was flat, then it went up like this. The chimney was on the righthand side.

THE COURT: That will be an exhibit, Madam Clerk.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 28.

— EXHIBIT NO. 28: Sketch by Mr. Urstein.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What I am interested in was the flat roof portion which you say is the gas chamber. That is taller than me, but taller than the gas chamber?

A. I can't answer your question. I know it was taller than me, but I don't know if it is a normal building. I don't know. I can't tell you this.

Q. Do you know how long it was? {1761|1762}

THE COURT: Do you mean deep?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The length of the building.

A. You mean —

Q. The room, the gas chamber.

A. I would say it was as wide as this room here. As wide and – no, it wasn't that deep. I think that, if I remember right – you must understand, sir, that I didn't take any notes. All I saw was the bodies. That I had to take immediate note of because they were in the immediate vicinity, right in front of us, but I didn't see how wide, how long, how deep, how high. The only thing I did know is that when I looked up, the shower fixtures were not too high away from me, maybe another meter or meter and a half or something like that. That's where the shower fixtures were.

Q. Was there any other opening in the ceiling?

A. I didn't see. I didn't look and I didn't see.

Q. How, long were you in this room?

A. Well, it wasn't just that we were in. We were in and out. As we dragged the bodies out it took about three and a half hours to complete the job of taking them out, and I cannot testify to say that I was constantly in there, no. I was in and out. We dragged the bodies out.

Q. Where did you take them?

A. We took them outside the same door and we went outside and lined them up in rows like one would line up cordwood. We were told – sorry – head {1762|1763} here, head here. And that's what we did.

Q. Is it your evidence that the bodies there had rigor mortis?

A. No. They were quite soft. As a matter of fact, some were bloated, in a way.

Q. They were bloated already?

A. Not bloated already. Bloated in a way. In other words, I would say that the chest cavities and the stomach protruded. I surmise that he person that I am referring to, the body I am referring to didn't have a stomach like that on a normal, when he was alive, but he certainly had a little protrusion. It is just as if, you eat too much and you have a little protrusion. That is how I can describe it.

Q. This building as a whole in which you say you were in the gas chamber, did it have many floors, or just one floor?

A. Don't know, sir. I didn't notice any. I don't know.

Q. It wasn't a two-storey building?

A. I do not know, sir. I didn't notice. I didn't look. I told you, we were given something to do, and we did it and we wanted to get the hell out of there. Excuse that.

Q. Well, how long had you lived in the camp at that time?

A. Well, this was in February. I came in October, so you count it. Okay. November, December, January, February – four months.

Q. This is February '43?

A. Yes, sir. {1763|1764}

Q. So you came in October '42 into Birkenau – right? Is that right?

A. You have me confused now, whether it was August or October. No, we came in August. I'm sorry. I'm not a lawyer and I can't – I am pretty good in my business, but – it is rather difficult. I'm sorry.

Q. Was this building for gassing people soundproof?

A. It must have been. There were no windows. As a matter of fact, the door as we saw it, when we went in and went out, in and out, was quite heavy. It was a very, very heavy door. If you ask me how thick it was, I can't tell you, but it was a very, very heavy door.

Q. It was a wooden door, was it?

A. Yes, sir. Oh, there is another thing that I can tell you. There was a window about eye high which we saw glass on the inside and glass on the outside of the door where you could actually look in or peep in or whatever you want.

Q. Yes.

A. That we saw at the door, or I saw at the door, sorry.

Q. But you don't know if there was a basement in this building at all.

A. No, sir. I did not know.

Q. So the floor of this building, then, would be on ground level. Is that your evidence? You didn't go downstairs in this building.

A. No, I did not.

Q. We are not dealing with any staircase {1764|1765} at all, then.

A. I did not see any stairs, no.

Q. And if you were hauling bodies up or down stairs you would know about that?

A. Oh, definitely. We didn't. We dragged them out.

Q. No stairs at all?

A. No, sir. I did not see the stairs.

Q. And did you see anything unusual inside in the gas chamber such as – other than the bodies of the people – no utensils or anything?

A. Nothing at all.

Q. Just the naked bodies of these people.

A. In very bad shape.

Q. In very bad shape.

A. Yes. Because they were almost —

Q. Emaciated?

A. Welded to each other. They grabbed at each other because we had to pry some fingers loose, some hands loose.

Q. Okay. You had to pry the fingers loose. And there were no windows except the window in the door.

A. That's right.

Q. Was that window covered at all, or you could just see right through?

A. Oh, you could see right through. It had a little veins of wire go through there, I believe. That's all I can see. I did not stand still for a moment to take an extremely good look at it and identify it. {1765|1766}

Q. Did the building have any chimneys?

A. This building that I was in?

Q. Yeah.

A. No. What we saw, when we went in through, obviously we turned and looked around, because curiosity was always —

Q. Had you ever seen the building before?

A. The only thing that saw was a lot of dense smoke, and and in some cases flames coming out there in some cases, if it was a very, very clear night – I can't tell you how I know, obviously not, or can I?

Q. Go ahead. If you saw something, if you heard something other than conversation with other people, if you, yourself, saw it or heard a sound, or smelt something, you go ahead and tell us.

A. Oh, the smell was always there. As a matter of fact it took me some time to get the smell out of my nose after the War. But when I say flames, I guess it's surmising by me where the flames came from. That's all.

Q. Did you ever see flame coming out?

A. Oh, yes. In several places. You must understand that I – as a matter of fact I came quite early. If I went to – if I may show you something where I saw my first flame, it was prior to the crematorium. It was prior.

Q. Where is that?

A. It was right there. If you want me to show you in the map, it was right there, where I was and where I saw it. {1766|1767}

Q. I show you the same orange pen.

A. All right. This is —

Q. You are using another small map, are you?

A. Of course, yes. I guess that —

Q. There is writing on it?

A. I just put where the kitchen was and the Schreibestube.

Q. The Schreibestube? Where did you get that information?

A. I was there. I walked by it every morning and every weekend. This is the camp where I was, in Camp "D", so on the right was the kitchen, and on the left was the Schreibestube. This is how I know where that is.

Q. Here is a coloured pen. Why don't you use it on this map that is an exhibit? Have a look and make sure it is the same map. Actually, if you look at it like that, there's your Krema III and —

A. I can see it.

THE COURT: Exhibit number ...

MR. CHRISTIE: 21.

Q. Do you want to outline in orange your camp? I think you said "D". I put it to you it is right in there.

A. Yes. Here was the kitchen and here is the Schreibestube.

Q. All right. Schreibestube is the block scribe, or what is it?

A. Something like that, the whole administration. Maybe it is called Schreibestube. I {1767|1768} didn't – it is right here. When we looked out here, you have to understand that there were no walls between us. There were just electrical wires, so you can look right through it. There was a wire. Okay? Now, in this area right here, and then again this is hearsay, according to what you will say, but we asked, what is it? This is flames like crazy.

Q. Crazy flames in a ditch?

A. Not a ditch. We enquired and we were told —

Q. Never mind what you were told. Just mark what you told us.

A. This area right here.

Q. Flames from that area.

A. Mm-hmmm. The one-eyed monster.

Q. All right. I am asking you about Krema III. And how many chimneys did it have?

A. One.

Q. And did you see flames belching out of there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see that from —

A. I could tell you when. It was when, 1944, when we all of a sudden we had a tremendous influx of Hungarians that were deported, and these damn things worked overtime.

THE COURT: A little louder.

THE WITNESS: These things worked overtime. I apologize, sir. It is not by design.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So it was —

A. I saw them in '42 from here, and {1768|1769} '43 from here, but where I saw a lot of them was in 1944. They really worked overtime.

Q. How high did the flames shoot out from the chimney?

A. Sorry, I can't give you a description of the height, but on a very, very clear night when you got up in the morning it was still dark, they were quite high, it was quite an inferno, I would say.

Q. So it was an inferno with flames shooting —

A. That is the way I would describe it, yes.

Q. How high would you estimate it?

A. I don't know. No estimation, sir. I have no estimation of that.

Q. Now, you were in Block "D" and you say you were trucked to Krema III.

A. That's right, sir.

Q. How far would that be to walk?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know.

A. No. Maybe they had other designs for us. Again, this is hearsay. I am just thinking about myself, now, what I thought.

Q. Well, all I asked you is how far it was, and the answer is, "I don't know". Is that right?

A. It wasn't too far, I would say, because we were only riding about five minutes.

Q. Five minutes?

A. Yes, as a very slow rate. You didn't race down there. {1769|1770}

Q. So if I understand you correctly there is one chimney on Krema III that you went into.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One chimney. How high were these chimneys, or did you notice?

A. One thing I noticed is they were very square, they weren't like a slim chimney. They were very wide. I don't know how wide they were, but they looked very wide to our eyes.

Q. Were they part of the building, or did they stand apart?

A. No. To me they were part of the building.

Q. They were part.

A. Yes, sir. They weren't standing apart.

Q. Do you know how many entrances building had on the your side?

A. What building are you referring to, sir?

Q. The gas chamber building.

A. All I saw was one. I did not see any doors going while I was inside, so I assumed it was just the one that I came into.

Q. Yeah. Though this door was on the outside of the building and it was the only door to the gas chamber?

A. Wrong, sir. That is not what I said. What I said is, we could see the door from – the outside, but we could take two or three steps, turn to the left. I drew it up for you. {1770|1771}

Q. It is an exhibit, is it?

THE COURT: Yes. Exhibit 28.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was this building surrounded by a compound?

A. I didn't see. All I saw was that when we arrived down there and we saw the building, we saw very beautiful trees, shrubs, even some flowers that I saw, and that is the only thing I took notice of.

Q. Did you have to go through a gate or barbed wire?

A. Oh, the only gate that we went out was from Camp "D", and then we saw an opening down there. As a matter of fact I think there was a sign out there translated, "unauthorized Personnel Strictly Forbidden", something like that. But in our condition – excuse me, sir, but in our condition I cannot very well describe details. It's impossible. I mean, first of all I didn't take notice of it. I didn't look for them. A lot of time went by and, frankly, I didn't care for it to notice anything. It's just something that the things that I saw, I saw. That's all I can say.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So you said you didn't recall going through a gate or anything to get into the building.

A. Into the building?

Q. Yeah.

A. There were – as I said, there were – it was like an alley – how do you translate it?

THE COURT: You pronounce it by saying "alley".

THE WITNESS: Alley. Thank you. Well, {1771|1772} in Vienna we said alley. That is what it was.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: But by compounds I mean gates and barbed wire.

A. Nothing like that. I didn't see any. It looked like a almost like a retreat. That is what it looked like in retrospect when I look at it, something that is very beautiful. As it happened, it wasn't beautiful, but that is what it looked like as a first impression.

Q. Yes. So that if you had been going through barbed wire gates or locked gates or into a compound –

A. Sorry, sir. I said before, I don't remember. And even if you try to explain to me what you think I saw, I can only say I do not remember that.

Q. You would have noticed a thing like that, I suppose.

A. Again, quote, I say that's wrong, sir. You said I would have noticed. If I would have noticed, I would have remembered.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Now, have you put in your drawing the best recollection you have of the gas chamber itself?

A. Well, I think so. May I?

THE COURT: Yes. Certainly.

THE WITNESS: The only thing that I – yes. It's right there.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Can you put north, south and east and west on it?

A. I didn't know it was day or night. {1772|1773}

You are asking me north and south. It hardly took me twenty years to find north and south in Toronto. North and south. Please, forgive me, sir, but – I am sure there are historians, people that devoted something to them, that can tell you what is south, east or west. I don't know.

Q. Well, you were there for how many years?

A. From August – first of all, told you that four times. Now, why do you ask me again? After all, we're grown-ups. We are not children, sir. You ask me these questions. Now you are asking me again. Okay? I left Auschwitz in October 1944, to make it easy for you. Now, write it down so you will remember it next time. I left 1944 in October. Okay? I was first sent to Buchenwald. We stayed in Buchenwald for two days. We went to Sachsenhausen. We stayed one day. We went to Dachau and stayed till the 29th of April, 1945.

Now, I am not trying to loose my cool. I am trying to be as accurate as I can remember it, but that's it.

Q. I am just curious. So you arrived in Auschwitz ...

A. In August 1942. Now, look, I have written it down. Would you like to get my paper? You are riling me and I don't know why you are doing that. I don't know what you are trying to establish. Would you like my train ticket or something like that? Okay. Down Dennis. That's off the record. That's me.

Q. So from 1944 you couldn't tell us {1773|1774} which way the sun rose from?

A. I didn't look at the sun. I was interested in bread, that lousy soup that I had, and the so-called coffee we had, and being alive within the next hour. I wasn't interested in these things, sir. I am sure that there must be people that know about it. I don't know.

Q. You have given us a description of a wooden door as wide as the panel in the back, and it opened – did it open just to one side, or did it open in the middle, or —

A. I don't know. I don't remember. That part I don't remember. I did not examine it. I know it was a very, very heavy door and I know that there were screw-type wing-type screws on there. That I remember. I remember there was a window on there, but I can't give you any more descriptions.

Q. Do you remember the colour of the room at all?

A. Yeah. Grayish cement-type thing. And there was a lot of lights. It was very bright.

Q. Very bright.

A. Very bright.

Q. So what kind of lights were they?

A. I don't know.

Q. Electric light?

A. I don't know. I am sure they weren't oil lamps. Must have been electric.

Q. Do you remember the colour of the outside of the building?

A. Yes. I would say beige, grayish, {1774|1775} something like that. More beige than grayish, I think.

Q. And you never noticed anything about the roof of the gas chamber at all?

A. Which roof are you talking about? The inside roof or the outside roof?

Q. Well, you looked at the inside roof.

A. Right. But we also faced the buildings, so it could be the outside roof, too.

Q. Well, if you can tell us —

A. I think the outside roof was red. That is what I think it was, but that is surmising that my memory is right that it was red.

Q. And that's the flat part of the roof, is that what you are saying?

A. I think so. Could be.

Q. And it was red

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Now, you've told us that the gas chamber portion had a flat roof, and it was red, and the other portion was higher, was it – what you called the crematoria portion?

A. I think it was the crematorium portion. I told you, I did not see the ovens, but surmised and I think I surmised correct that they didn't gas the people in one room and then drag them fourteen miles away and burn them somewhere else. I think it is a very astute assumption.

Q. So you say it is a stupid assumption?

A. No, I didn't say that. I said {1775|1776} astute assumption that they didn't carry the bodies fourteen, fifteen miles away, and they certainly wouldn't have buried them, or they would have used the whole of Poland to bury them down there.

THE COURT: Is this a good time to adjourn, Mr. Christie? Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:30 p.m.

THE COURT: please don't discuss this case until the cross-examination is completed, with anyone.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, could I speak to you for a moment in the absence of the jury?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend has introduced this witness in the midst of the trial and as a result of that he has provided me with a very brief summary of what the witness would say. On the basis of that I have been {1776|1777} prepared to deal with this matter, but in part the witness says, "After May 1943 he worked in Kanada in Birkenau"; after Dr. Vrba testified that Kanada didn't exist until after April 7, 1944, the witness no longer says he worked in Kanada and Birkenau as I was about to put it to him. He said 54 members of his family did not survive the Holocaust. In his evidence so far he said 154 did not survive.

I am in a bit of a quandary and I don't want to cross-examine in a manner which I shouldn't be able to put to the witness that, "Didn't you indicate to the Crown on a previous occasion that in May of 1943 you worked in Kanada, in Birkenau?" Now, I think that might put my friend in a rather difficult position. I don't know quite how we will do this. It seems to me it is rather relevant in view of other evidence of other witnesses about Kanada and Birkenau; and the 154, I would like to suggest to him that he said 54 on a previous occasion and identify that occasion.

I have never been put in a position when a witness statement provided to the opposite side to facilitate, without notice has been contradicted by that witness' testimony, but it seems that's exactly what {1777|1778} has happened. So I would like to ask, if I may, to put that to the witness in the manner I have suggested, and that's my concern.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

First off, my friend represents quite correctly what the witness statement says. And I think the problem may well be mine. I interviewed Mr. Urstein first a week ago yesterday, took notes of that interview and typed up, or had typed up a brief summary. Mr. Urstein never saw either my notes or the brief summary to read over and make corrections or sign, and provided that summary to Mr. Christie last week on Monday.

When I say the problem may be mine, I mean both in terms of not having reviewed the statement of Mr. Urstein before, and also, Your Honour, the phrase, "After May 1943 he worked in Kanada and Birkenau", I frankly couldn't say right now whether that meant that Kanada was in Birkenau or he was living in Birkenau and working in Kanada, and I think that quite properly, if my friend wishes to go into that matter or others, he should {1778|1779} be permitted to do so.

The difficulty, as I see it, is because Mr. Urstein hasn't read over or signed the statement, in essence it is not his statement. It is not a "will say" for the assistance of counsel – obviously, in this case, not as much assistance as it could have been or should have been, and for that I accept full responsibility.

I am wondering whether to deal with this matter – I have asked Mr. Urstein be out of the courtroom, and he doesn't know anything about this at all o that we are discussing – whether the procedure whereby these matters are gone into should initially be in the absence of the jury, and if Mr. Urstein adopts the statement, then it can go in in the presence of the jury; if he doesn't, indicates that there are errors in this that he did not have a prior opportunity to correct, then I think that that should be the end of it, in the absence of the jury.

And I say that – obviously, if it is not his statement, it is prejudicial to Mr. Urstein to have that put to him. If it is his statement, then it is quite proper. {1779|1780}

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, I just take it that when the Crown provides me with the statement of a witness, it's the statement of a witness.

THE COURT: That does not assist me, Mr. Christie. Do you agree or not that the witness be shown the statement in the absence of the jury and be asked? If I know your position I will make the ruling, but I want to know the position first.

Let me see if I can make it easy for you. I take no objection to that procedure whereby the witness is asked to look at the statement in the absence of the jury and is questioned upon it as to whether it is his statement. In the event that you decline – you are perfectly free to do so if you wish – then the only thing I might suggest to you is that as a simple matter of fairness you show the statement to the witness in the presence of the jury and ask him, "Is that your statement? Do you want to make any corrections? Is there anything wrong or right about it?" In other words, give him a fair chance, either in front of the jury or not.

I am not telling you how to cross-examine. I am too old and too wise for that. In the {1780|1781} event that you don't do that, I will have something to say to the jury when my turn comes to address them last. As simple as that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, to save time, I will do it in front of the jury.

THE COURT: As long as it is done fairly and above-board. Do you take any objections to that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I can't.

— Discussion concerning presenting clean copy of witness' statement.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would it be permissible for me to just ask him, "Didn't you say that, at another time, you worked at Birkenau in 1943?"

THE COURT: Why didn't you ask him, "When you were talking to the Crown Attorney did you tell him ..." Very simple.

MR. CHRISTIE: And show it to him?

THE COURT: Witnesses speak to Crown Attorneys all the time. Witnesses also speak to defence counsel before they testify. {1781|1782}

MR. CHRISTIE: Is that all right?

THE COURT: If it is all right with you and all right with Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right. Bring in the witness and bring in the jury.

— The jury returns. 12:08 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. By the way, did you tell Crown Counsel that after May 1943 you worked in Kanada and Birkenau?

A. I don't remember.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

THE WITNESS: I don't remember.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would it have been true if you did tell him this?

A. No. I did not work after May in Kanada. I didn't, no.

Q. Did you tell Crown counsel that fifty-four members of your extended family did not survive the Holocaust?

A. No. Much more than that, sir.

Q. And you said it was a hundred and fifty four, is that right? {1782|1783}

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you name twenty of them?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Let's hear twenty names.

A. Max Brandiss.

Q. What's his relationship to you?

A. He was my uncle. Heinrich Brandriss, my aunt Mania – I don't know what her name was, second name, so sorry. She had, I think, seven children and they were married and had children themselves.

Q. Can you name those?

A. The children?

Q. No. Your aunt's children, your cousins.

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know them?

A. Because I have only seen them once when I was five years old.

Q. You saw them when you were five.

A. Yes.

Q. You never saw them again.

A. No. They wrote to us frequently. They were in touch. This was on my father's side.

Q. So we have named three so far.

A. I got more.

Q. Okay.

A. There was Esther. She was the oldest one. She had a very large family. They all had large families in my time. I think this was the modus operandi to have large families.

Q. Well, do you remember the families? {1783|1784}

A. Of her? Oh, yes. We lived for years in Vienna.

Q. What were the names of her family?

A. I don't know. Oh, yes, I remember the oldest boy. His name was Dolfi. I think the full name is Adolf. There was – okay, you have to give me a few seconds to recall my memory, but I will. There was Bertl ...

Q. Who were these people? Are they cousins?

A. No. This, as a matter of fact, Bertl was the brother of my mother.

Q. When did you last see him?

A. Bertl?

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. 1937, 1938. I would say it could be January 1938, but surely December of 1937.

Q. That's a man?

A. That's a man, yes.

Q. How old is he?

A. How old was he?

Q. Yeah.

A. I guess Bertl today would be about ninety or a hundred or something like that. My parents married quite late, so ... As I say, just to bring you up-to-date, my father was born in 1878, and I was born in '24. So he got me when he was quite advanced, I would say, in age. So his family was just as old.

Q. That's the end?

A. No, no. About Bertl, yes. But anything else, other names?

Q. Yeah. {1784|1785}

A. Okay.

Q. And their relationship to you.

A. Bertl was my uncle. Let me see now. There was – oh, yes, of course. My favourite aunt. Her name was Anna Sass, and she was the mother of the girl that I found the letters and photographs in her camp. Her name was Rosa. She had, I guess, two small children that I never met because, as I said before, didn't know that she was married until I found the photographs and some comments on it.

Q. Yes. Any more?

A. Oh, yes. Yes. I'm sorry, can't just rattle it off. I have to think. There was, cousin Finni who had two daughters.

Q. Did you meet the daughters?

A. Oh, yes, I did.

Q. What were their names? These are second cousins, are they?

A. Yes. Let me see, just for a second. I will get there. Johanna – I will get it in just a second. And Francesca. That's right. Let me see. Who else? My mother had, I think, three or four cousins in Vienna whose name I just can't tell you. I don't know. But I do remember that our gatherings that happened were quite large, and the —

THE WITNESS: The gatherings were quite large, and when these so-called family reunions came, we had people, some of them lived in Hungary, some of them lived in Czechoslovakia. There was another one, one in the United States, whose name was Leopold Schonthal. {1785|1786}

He was the nephew of my mother. He died, I think, about six or seven years ago. We saw him – I even saw him he went in the States in 1933 or '34. He lived in Los Angeles.

Q. Do you know that all these people were killed by the Germans?

A. Not Germans. I said Nazi. There is a distinction between a German and a Nazi.

Q. Yes. I will accept your term. Were all these people killed by the Nazi?

A. Except for the one in the United states.

Q. Well, how do you know that all these people were killed by the Nazi.

A. Well, the way I see it, there was one way in and one way out. I'm sorry, I cannot bring you a death certificate. I cannot bring you as I have read in the newspaper as you said, you said something that demanded – well that's how I know.

Q. How do you know?

A. A death or an autopsy report? Well, I can't bring you this. The only thing —

Q. Did you see them all go into the camp?

A. No, I did not. That would be a lie. Of course I didn't see them going into the camps.

Q. Some of them were quite old, I expect, when you last saw them?

A. In their fifties, yes.

THE COURT: I don't think that is very old.

THE WITNESS: No, it isn't, because {1786|1787} I am going to be sixty-one.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: But anyhow, for example, your uncle would be ninety?

A. Oh, by now they would be dead for sure, unless they are Methuselah, they would be dead.

Q. Well, I take it, then, that you don't say that you saw all these people enter the camps?

A. No, sir. No. The only ones that I did see was my parents. That I can testify to. But as far as the rest is concerned, again, you are not allowed to talk about hearsay or that say or what say. There was one uncle, incidentally, that was left, and he lived in Switzerland. And I was a stamp collector in my time – you don't let me finish my sentence, sir.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. I think it would be of interest to you. After the War I was lucky enough to visit him in Basil, in Switzerland, and he asked me what my hobbies are. I said stamp collecting.

Q. I will ask you about that another time, sir. The only thing I want to know is who you saw going into the camps.

A; Just my parents; and the others not I saw them, but I found effects.

Q. That's ...

A. That's Rosa.

Q. Okay. And she had two daughters.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. When you were inside this building where you took the bodies out, did you see anything unusual about the colour of the bodies? {1787|1788}

A. Yes. I said that they were a little bit, their stomach was extended, their chest cavity was slightly extended. I think that one can say when you overeat a lot and your stomach extends, this is what I would say it looked like, right now – at that time I didn't.

Q. Have you ever seen people who starve?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Don't their bellies get distended?

A. Well, I was even in that situation once. I weighed approximately seventy-three pounds when I came out of the camp in Dachau, and I am sure that you see that, too, yes. I saw a lot of people that had distended stomachs, but I think it was more pointed. Also their legs were very, very thick. I think it is called phlegmona or phlegmena. I had this myself, where you put your finger into your leg, a cavity exists and it stays there, and that is water. And again, I wasn't ordered to do this, but somebody told me that the only way that I can get rid of it is to try and keep my legs in this position when I lay down in my bunk. So that is what I did. So then I run to the toilet which was a torture in itself, because the toilet was quite a piece away and I got rid of it somehow, the swelling of the legs.

Q. I was curious about the colour of the bodies. Anything unusual?

A. A little grayish, yes, but again, I didn't take any notice of that as one would to testify. This is by memory and it's a heck of a long time ago, but that's what I saw, yes.

Q. If they were bright red or bright {1788|1789} blue you would have noticed that, I suppose?

A. Maybe. I don't know. I just – I can only tell you what I think I saw.

Q. How do you know they were gassed?

A. Well, I don't think they died a natural death in there, because – well, two things. First of all, after we saw the bodies and we smelled the smell which was a mixture of something unknown to us and some thing that smell like excrement, I don't think that – I am not trying to be ironic, all right? But I don't think they crawled on top of each other, closed the door and died.

Q. Do you know what a Leichenkeller means?

A. Oh, yes. That is a death chamber. I know that better than you. I speak German.

Q. But isn't a Leichenkeller an underground mortuary?

A. Yes. But this wasn't underground. It is on the same floor. A Leichenkeller is something where you deposit your bodies. That is a Leichenkeller. Agreed.

Q. Did you tell us how you knew they were gassed? I mean, you told us —

A. I'm afraid I cannot answer that. I cannot answer this question, this particular question logically. It's like you asked me – you asked me the same question that a defence attorney asked me in Vienna ten years ago. He asked me, "How did you know this man was dead?" I said if I see a dead man and I touch him, I know he is dead. So that is the same answer I give you {1789|1790} right now.

Q. There is a difference between a dead man and somebody who is gassed, isn't there? And if so, what is it?

A. I respect your opinion. It is your opinion. It is not mine. As far as I am concerned I saw it. If there are twenty-five thousand people that go into a room and don't come out but dead ones, maybe it was asphyxiation, and I think gas did exactly the same thing. I'm sorry, I cannot get into technical terms with you because I am not a doctor. I don't pretend to be one. This is what I believe in, and that's all I can say.

Q. Yeah, but you weren't talking about twenty-five thousand, were you?

A. No. I said if twenty-five thousand people that were at the time in the camp and it starts to diminish and you see selections and you know where they are going, what are they going to do – take ten thousand people and shoot them somewhere? The Nazis had a much better way of getting rid of the surplus of what they wanted to do, and this was one means of doing it. I mean, it's like the humane society. I mean, the humane society might have ten cats that have no owners and are very, very sick, and what are they going to do – take a gun and shoot it? They have another way of doing it. Again, I only hear what I hear, that they give them injections or they can do some other things, but they get rid of them. What is the difference between death and death? It's death. You are talking the end result, the Endlesung.

Q. You say Endlesung means what?

A. That's it. It's a fait accompli. {1790|1791} If I put you into a room right now with some other people or with your family and I use the methods that they've used, this is the Endlesung. There is no other way out. Which way are they going to go?

Q. Did you say that this gas came n through the shower heads?

A. I didn't say that. You say it. I did not say it. Look, my – I am old, with respect to you, sir, but I feel that I'm old. Inside I am a hundred and twenty, but the point I am trying to say is this: I said to you before, and this memory is good, I said, quote, if I may repeat myself – this is not hearsay – I said I saw the shower fixture in the ceiling. I did not say that there was water coming out. I did not say that there was any gas coming out down there. This is nothing else but a ruse, because why in heaven's name would they put "Brausebad", which means shower, put it on the outside?

Q. Did they?

A. Yes. And I saw it in three languages, and I only understood one which was Dutch.

Q. So now I gather there was some other foreign phrase.

A. Oh, yes. And this was, how shall I say, a way of putting people at ease, and again this is not hearsay, just my feeling and my gut feeling is pretty good. Even my parents probably felt at ease. The only – and this is not editorializing, but I don't believe that when the moment comes that you have to undress, which they had to do because their clothes didn't fall away from them, and you have men and women in one room, {1791|1792} somebody will say to them, "Hey, what the heck is going on?" I mean, let's be honest about it. You must understand that now we go to the German culture. The German culture is something that has been there for years. They are no slouches. No German would take his wife or his daughter and walk into one room without clothes on. Maybe if they are in a nudist camp, but not under normal circumstances.

So I know that my parents probably knew for whom the bell tolled, if I may use that expression from Hemmingway [sic]. That is the way it was, and I am very sad about it, and I am also very, very mad, sir, that I have to go through this whole thing again. I say this to you as a person, and – no —

Q. Well, thank you very much.

A. You are a human being, but to go through this whole thing again is very, very annoying to me. It really is.

Q. Well, can we just deal with questions?

A. Yes. Okay. Count to five and then you can start all over again, because I am getting all hot as a crackerfire. And I say this with a smile.

Q. Are you telling us there was nothing on the ceiling other than the showerheads?

A. No, sir, not that I saw.

Q. Thank you very much, sir.

A. You are very welcome, and I'm sorry if I have – but that's it.

Q. Oh, did you ever work in Kanada command in Birkenau?

A. Oh, come on. Do I look so naive to fall for a simple ruse like that? I told you that in {1792|1793} the beginning. I've told it to you at least fourteen times. Yes, I did. Why do you ask me that question now, sir? I mean, this is rather – I think that you —

Q. You did work in Kanada in Birkenau?

A. Of course I did. I told you that.

Q. Could I ask some questions about that?

A. Please do.

Q. I was going to show you some pictures and ask you if you recognize them.

A. Please show me.

Q. I think maybe I should start with the map. You've got the map in front of you.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Is that area there Kanada? Just below "F"?

A. No, wait a minute. Just a second. You are talking about two different things. Kanada originated in Block IV in Camp No. I, which was the main camp. From Block IV it went into "D", when you build that thing. Okay? And then it was, I think, in Block 24, and later on they moved everywhere from here to this.

Q. Now, you are looking at a map, believe?

A. From Herman Langbein's book.

Q. And that is what you've used to refresh your memory?

A. As best as I could.

Q. And it has the designation for Kanada on it – it refers to 37 barracks.{1793|1794}

A. I don't know how many barracks there were.

Q. It's just next to the sauna.

A. Yes. It looks like it here. Another thing that you must remember, sir, is that when Krematorium II and III was built, Kanada wasn't there. Kanada was in Block 24 in Camp "D". I mean, I am sure that you know that.

Q. Well, you are the one giving the evidence here, and I just thought I would ask you a couple of questions about this. Is that the kind of thing that went on in Kanada? I am looking at page 127 of the Auschwitz Album.

THE COURT: That is Exhibit for Identification number

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know.

THE COURT: It says right on it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe I shouldn't do that.

THE COURT: No, you shouldn't do that.

THE REGISTRAR: It is Exhibit "B", Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Page 137 is what I want.

Q. I am showing you the same picture as on page 137.

A. May I see what this is, please? That's the Auschwitz Album. Just a second. Yes, sir. I never seen this, no. No, I haven't.

Q. Or anything like that?

A. I certainly seen something like that. {1794|1795}

MR. CHRISTIE: Page 138.

THE WITNESS: Page 138, 158. That's the number.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I see that. There's two numbers on the page, 138 and 158.

A. 138 is on the bottom, and 158 is for the picture. Each number has a picture

Q. I wasn't trying to mislead you.

A. No. No, you can't.

Q. But I put it to you that they are unloading onto a truck.

A. That's right. And this, if I remember, was the type of truck that was put on the ramp when the luggage was taken out at the cattle cars. As I told you before, they were dumped onto the ramp, and then later on, when the luggage – I said this – I am sure it is here somewhere – when it was taken out of the cattle cars, once the people were out, it was then collected, put on the truck and put to the barracks where they were to be sorted, and they were just dumped there.

Q. And this is being sorted there, and —

A. No, this is not being sorted.

Q. It is being unloaded?

A. Unloaded. That is what I will call it. Sorted was done on the ground.

Q. And the people are up on top of the truck. {1795|1796}

A. That's right.

Q. Unloading the truck.

A. Yes. If I look closer, maybe it's me. I don't think so.

Q. It's not a dump truck, though, is it?

A. I don't know what kind of truck it is. Maybe you can identify it better than I could. Well, it may be; I will tell you why. Why don't you look at this when I talk to you, sir?

THE COURT: Go ahead, witness. Answer the question.

THE WITNESS: You see this little hinged door that is down there?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Tailgate?

A. The tailgate. Okay. Now, every truck or dump truck had a tailgate. Remember when I said to you that the walls on the side of the truck were about that high at the beginning? I think I said it to you, Mr. Griffiths. Okay. And to dump this off – now, you cannot see any hydraulic lift underneath, you can't see this here; nobody can see that – not you, not anybody.

Q. I just see people unloading on the flat there.

A. I know, but what I do see is this: If this would have a hydraulic lift, it needed that type of a gate, because it has to fall down, and then you unload it and then it runs down. That is what they used to do with the people that they picked up between the barracks every morning. Anyway, what else do you want me to look at? {1796|1797}

Q. I was just going to ask you a final question. You said that the people in the pile of bodies in the gas chamber had the strongest at the top, struggling to get to the top of the pile. Is that your evidence?

A. That's what it looked like to me, yes. Again, without having anybody smirk at me, and I see somebody smirk at me and I can smirk right back in the audience, in the room, but what I say is this, that if you are extremely strong and you are trying to escape something, you are just going to crawl over everything, and this is really the indication, the view that I had, you know. Like, "It's coming. Now, let's get out of here. Where are we going to get out?" Like somebody to a door, he isn't going to go to this side where there isn't a door, but this side where there is a door.

Q. Where would they climb – something that is lighter than air, why would they go to the ceiling?

A. Because they must have been choking on it. Somebody must have happened to them.

Q. All right. Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths?

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. In the summer of 1944 where were you working?

A. Summer, where I was working in, I {1797|1798} was in Dachau.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, before my friend goes any further, rather than cause any difficulty, I wonder if you would permit me to ask a couple of questions in addition?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly.

MR. CHRISTIE: Does that meet with Your Honour's approval?

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How do you leave the camp – by transport, or did you walk?

A. Which camp?

Q. Auschwitz II, Birkenau.

A. Oh, Auschwitz. We went by cattle car. We went first to Buchenwald and we stayed there, I think, two days. Then from Buchenwald to Sachsenhausen, and stayed one day.

Q. I want to know how you got out.

A. Oh, by cattle car.

Q. You left by train?

A. By cattle car, sir. There is a difference between a train and a cattle car. It may be the same vehicle – you have a locomotive put on – but a cattle car is a cattle car.

Q. What is the difference between a cattle car and a box car?

A. Well, if the train you can sit {1798|1799} down, you have seats – there you just stood. As a matter of fact, we were tramped into such an extent that if somebody died, it didn't even fall down. Just stood up. And there were a lot of people who died during that trip because it took us a hell of a long time to get us where we were supposed to go.

Q. And you knew the secret of the gas chamber, but you were never killed yourself?

A. I, kill? I wouldn't even kill you, sir. I wouldn't kill anybody.

Q. You knew the secret of the gas chamber, but you were never killed yourself.

A. No, I was not, sir.

Q. Now, were you ever injured in Birkenau?

A. Yeah. Once. Right there. I am not going to – there is one thing I will tell you right now. I will not go back and destroy my life by thinking I on things that I sincerely tried to forget, and no matter, anybody, nobody is going to do to me. Yes, I have injuries, sir.

Q. And you went to the hospital?

A. No.

Q. You got better.

A. No.

Q. You didn't get better?

A. No. I got better, yes. What I did was that I found a Dutch physician and a Czech physician; and to go to the hospital was almost "like signing your own death warrant". They cut me open – it is still very visible because all the flesh grew the {1799|1800} wrong way. They cut me inside there, down there, and the pus came out. I got hit by a type of a walking stick. It wasn't a whip or something like this. Right on here. And this started to swell up and it got worse and worse, and they cut it open and they put on paper bandages. There weren't other ones. And I tried to hide it when I went out because I didn't want anybody to know that I was injured.

Q. Thank you. Just one final question. How is it that you got away with such a secret about the gas chamber?

A. Whose secret is this? It isn't my secret. It may be somebody else's, not mine. Look, if it happens to you, you react in a completely different way. In other words, if it is something that is very, very bad – and this is very bad – you try to suppress it. What do you want me to do – go around in my office at Loblaw's and say, "Hey, you know me? I used to work in the gas chamber for one afternoon. I saw dead people." What do you want me to do? I don't suppress anything. I only wish to God that this wouldn't have come out, sir.

Q. Yeah. You left Auschwitz and went to other camps knowing what you tell us now.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Thank you.

A. You are very welcome.

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Griffiths.

CONTINUED RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS

Q. The Dutch and Czech doctors that treated your hand, were they part of the administration of the camps, or were they prisoners?

A. Prisoners.

Q. And in the summer of '44 I believe I asked you where you were working.

A. The shingling Kommando.

THE COURT: You were working ...

THE WITNESS: As repairing roof.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Repairing roofs. All right. So you're on a rolling command, the Kanada command at that time?

A. No. I got out of it. I became quite ill, mentally and physically, and I couldn't see it any more, and I had to get out. So after being there for some time, I got to know certain people and there was one, if I may relate this – this is not hearsay, it happened to me – there was one Kapo which run the roofs, the Kommando – sorry, I didn't know I was going to fall into German. Through somebody that worked with me I expressed my desire, and also a prisoner, that I have to get out of there. Kind of just blow my mind, as you say, it was, really. I had illnesses, too, and I got out and started with him.

Q. Okay. Stop there. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

MR. CHRISTIE: What was the last {1801|1802} statement by my friend?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further questions.

THE COURT: We will adjourn till two-thirty.

— The witness stands down.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— Luncheon adjournment.

——

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:30 p.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Call Henry Leader, please.

HENRY LEADER, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Leader, I am going to ask you to speak in a loud, clear voice so that the jury can all hear you. All right? I understand, Mr. Leader, that you were born in Lublin, in Poland.

A. Right.

Q. In 1919.

A. Correct.

Q. And you were living in Lublin with {1802|1803} your family when War broke out in Poland?

A. Yes.

Q. 1939?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us whether you and your family were ever arrested?

A. Before the ...

Q. In 1941.

A. Yes. We were all rounded up, and not only us, but several thousand people, and they were taken to a marketplace and from there we were transported to Maidanek Concentration Camp.

Q. How far is Maidanek from Lublin, approximately?

A. Twelve kilometers.

Q. And how large a city was Lublin back then, again approximately?

A. Lublin was a city about seventy-five thousand.

Q. Did you have any family living with you in Lublin in 19 —

A. Well, I lived with the whole family. All of us lived in Lublin.

Q. How large was your immediate family?

A. The immediate family would have been around a hundred or —

Q. All right. By "immediate family" you mean brothers, sisters, mother and father?

A. Brothers, sisters.

Q. And were your parents both still alive in December 1941? {1803|1804}

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know what month it was that you were all rounded up and taken to the Central Plaza?

A. Month of December.

Q. After you were taken to Maidanek did you ever see any of your brothers and sisters or your parents again?

A. No.

Q. Can you tell us what you found when you got to Maidanek? What was it like as a camp?

A. We were taken to Maidanek. The first thing is like the able-bodied people were taken into a room where we had to disrobe and give up a lot of possessions, and then we were – we got the hair cut, and disinfected, went through a shower, and got striped clothes and took us into the barracks.

Q. How large – did you get a number when you were in Maidanek?

A. Yes.

Q. What number did you get?

A. 1967.

Q. 1967?

A. Right.

Q. And how long were you at Maidanek for?

A. I was in Maidanek December 1941 until June 1943.

Q. While you were in Maidanek can you tell us the youngest age of any of the prisoners that you can recall seeing? {1804|1805}

A. What I can recall, there were two young boys about the age between fifteen and sixteen.

Q. Were there anybody, any boys or girls younger than that?

A. Girls we didn't have. This was a men's camp. The women's camp was in a different camp.

Q. Were there any boys, then, younger than fifteen or sixteen?

A. No.

Q. And can you tell us approximately the oldest age of the inmates that you can recollect?

A. Probably about fifty.

Q. In the year and a half that you were in Maidanek, did you see any boys under sixteen or men over fifty that were brought into the camp?

A. No.

Q. Did you have a job at the camp?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us about your job at the camp?

A. My first job was at a building company. It was called the —

Q. Maybe you can give us the English translation and save the reporter.

A. It was a construction company where we were digging trenches for sewers or water trenches, and I was on that job for about five weeks. And then, after that, the camp was very filthy. We all had lice. The lice were crawling all over us. So they close up that camp for the period of three weeks, and they took us into another camp. Like Maidanek consisted of five camps {1805|1806} and like I, II, III, IV and V. Now, I was in Camp II. They took us over to Camp III, which it was just about brand newly constructed with no heating. They kept us there for three weeks while there they fumigated Camp II.

Q. You said about when in 1941 and '42?

A. That was at the end of January until the later part of February.

THE COURT: 1942?

THE WITNESS: Right.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were you sick at that time?

A. I had typhoid.

Q. Did you get any treatment for typhoid?

A. Not at all. As a matter of fact is that I had to go to work.

Q. Were there other people that had typhoid in Camp III during that quarantine period?

A. Yes. I would say sixty or sixty-five per cent of the people had typhoid.

Q. Did you see anybody get any treatment?

A. No, there was no treatment whatsoever.

Q. Where did you work when the quarantine was lifted?

A. Then we were assigned to, they called it transport gang. It was like one of those vans.

Q. Vans?

A. Yes. And we were eight people to {1806|1807} a van, and what we used to do, we used to haul from the railroad station to the kitchen, or potatoes or kohlrabi. And then, after about five weeks, they assigned us to carry people from the crematorium – from the gas chamber to the crematoriums, because I will explain that.

In Maidanek the gas chamber was a separate building out of the crematorium. It was about three to three hundred fifty yards away. So what they used to do, like the people inside in the gas chamber, they used to throw the people out on a ramp. It was like about two meters by two meters square opening.

Q. Two meters square opening where?

A. In the gas chamber.

Q. All right.

A. In one of the walls. And we used to pick those people up from the ramp.

Q. Would they be living or dead?

A. They were dead. Dead, naked. And we used to load them up on a wagon and transport them over to the crematorium. And in there we drove up again those ramp and we loaded them up on those ramp, and the people inside used to take them in.

Q. All right. Now, the building that you called the gas chamber, was there anything else in that building aside from this place where you would take dead bodies?

A. I'm sorry, sir?

Q. Was there anything else in that building aside from this area where you would pick up dead bodies?

A. No. There was – there were showers. {1807|1808}

Q. There were showers in the same building?

A. Yes. And in the gas chamber building.

Q. Were you ever inside the room that the bodies came out of?

A. No.

Q. How was it that you were able to see inside through this two-meter square opening?

A. Oh, we could see the people inside were dragging the bodies up. They were wearing masks.

Q. What kind of masks?

A. Face masks. Just a face mask.

Q. Face masks.

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wish my friend would not cross-examine his own witness by putting to him what he said and hope that he will change his answer. I don't think he should repeat the question more than once.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I haven't repeated the question, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suggest you put to him what he said again. It amounts to the same thing.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Can you describe to us the "mask" any more than that?

A. It was a mask over the face, like., In reality, or like myself, I didn't pay too much {1808|1809} attention to it because the most important thing was to try to survive.

Q. How many bodies would your van hold?

A. About twenty-five.

Q. And can you tell us [ ] whether or not this was a motorized van?

A. No. It was a one pulled by eight prisoners.

Q. Were there any more vans of a similar nature?

A. There were three vans altogether.

Q. And can you tell us [ ] whether the bodies were clothed or naked that came out?

A. The bodies were naked, completely naked.

Q. Can you recollect if there was anything that you noted as to age or sex of the bodies?

A. Oh, there were children, women, men.

Q. How often would you be called upon to perform this task?

A. If the transports were heavy, so we were working sometimes constantly for the day. And if there were only people who sort of died in camp or half-dead, so we were called sometimes twice a day or three times a day, depends on the workload.

Q. Did the routine ever change – taking them from one area of the camp to the crematorium?

A. No. I did not get it, that question, sir. {1809|1810}

Q. All right. Did you ever take the bodies anyplace other than the crematorium?

A. No. At one point, in March, actually. they brought a transport of white Russians. like families – men, women and children – and the crematorium couldn't handle it, so what they had outside the camp. there was what they call a pit, something like a ravine, and we used to transport the bodies to that ravine. And in that ravine we used to put a layer of wood, a layer of bodies, and then again. And they would pour some kind of liquid and put it on fire.

Q. And how long would those fires burn?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. How long would those fires burn in that ravine?

A. In some cases it was going on for twenty-four hours. The same thing also happened when the Warsaw Ghetto was created. Again, it was a lot of gassed people, so they used the pits at the time, also.

Q. How far outside the camp were these pits?

A. Approximately about one kilometer.

Q. And other than the – when you went outside the camp, was there any other transportation used other than the three vans?

A. Oh, when the load was heavy they also used land trucks.

Q. In June of 1943 you left Maidanek?

A. I didn't leave there. They took me to Auschwitz. They selected several hundred people and {1810|1811} they transported us to Auschwitz-Birkenau.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May I see Exhibit No. 1 please?

Q. On page 18 of Exhibit No. 1 under a chapter heading, "Auschwitz and Polish Jewry", Chapter 6, there's a sub-heading called, "The Warsaw Ghetto", and the first sentence of that sub-heading says:

"In terms of numbers, Polish Jewry is supposed to have suffered most of all from extermination, not only at Auschwitz, but at an endless list of newly-discovered 'death camps' such as Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Maidanek, Chelmno and at many more obscure places which seem suddenly to have gained prominence."

Do you have any comment on the word, "newly-discovered death camps", sir, from Maidanek?

A. I'm sorry, I didn't get it.

Q. All right. Well, I will leave that.

In June of '43 when you went to Auschwitz, can you tell us which camp you were in?

A. I was in Camp "D", Birkenau.

Q. All right. Have you ever looked at a map subsequently to see if you can find where Camp "B" [D] in Birkenau was?

A. I went personally back twice after the War.

Q. All right. And how long were you in Birkenau for?

A. I was in Birkenau from June 1943 {1811|1812} until October '43.

Q. October '43. Okay. Could I see the exhibit, the large map of Birkenau, Exhibit No. 21.

Now, can you find, down here, the camp that you were assigned to?

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe he could mark it with a pen so —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. I will have it marked. I have a coloured pen. It can be distinguished from others.

Q. Can you orient yourself on that map, or if you can't, just say so.

A. Not very well.

Q. All right. Your recollection is, though, that you were working in "BIID", Birkenau "D" camp?

A. Right.

Q. And what was your job while you were in Birkenau?

A. We were in construction company where we worked on roads, digging trenches, building construction.

Q. All right. Can you describe for us the area where you were working?

A. I was working beside the crematoriums like between the road to the crematorium and the hospital.

Q. All right. Can you describe for us how you would get to your work site? And perhaps that way we can figure out which crematoria you were working near.

A. Well, we worked out from Camp "D", {1812|1813} turn to the left, and down the road. The crematorium were located on the righthand side, and hospital was on the lefthand side.

Q. All right. And what were you doing in this area again? You are building roads?

A. We were building roads, gravel roads, digging ditches, right adjacent to the crematorium fence.

Q. Can you tell us what kind of a fence this was, what material it was made out of?

A. It was a wire fence.

Q. Did you ever have an opportunity to look through that fence and look in the direction of the crematoria?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what you saw when you looked through there?

A. Well, we saw daily transports come again by dump, dump trucks. It depended, some days there would be six or seven trucks at a time. Certain days there would be three trucks, and some incidents there was a single truck that yanked people.

Q. And are you able to estimate how many people would be on the truck, or did they vary, or can you tell us anything about that?

A. Oh, rough estimation would be about a hundred people.

Q. And what would happen when that truck came?

A. When the truck drove in through the gate in the matter of approximately a half an hour, there {1813|1814} would drive out empty.

Q. Did you ever see anything on those trucks?

A. Coming out?

Q. Yes.

A. Empty. On some instances, like after a day's operation, there would be a truck-full of clothes.

Q. Where did the people go that were on the truck, the hundred people on one of those trucks?

A. Into the gas chamber.

Q. Well, did you see where they went?

A. They went in the doors of the gas chambers.

Q. And were you ever inside that building?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Did you ever see any of those people come out again?

A. No.

Q. Do you know where the shower was, or we have also described it, described as a sauna at Birkenau.

A. Yes.

Q. Where was that in relation to where you saw the people dropped off?

A. It was in the same area.

Q. And did any of the people enter the shower building dropped off?

A. I really cannot tell those. I don't know it. {1814|1815}

Q. In October you said you moved to a different camp?

A. Right.

Q. And —

MR. CHRISTIE: He said October 1943.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And how long had you been at Auschwitz?

A. Pardon?

Q. How long had you been at Birkenau?

A. From June 1943 until October '43.

Q. Where did you then go in October of '43?

A. October '43 we were taken again, a group of us, to a place called Yavochnov (phonetic), to the coal mines.

Q. And what was your job there?

A. We went to the pits and we were, loading coal on the conveyers, putting in charge to —

Q. How many people would be in your work group, in your Komando at the coal mine?

A. We were two hundred people; two hundred day shift, and two hundred night shift.

Q. Would you always work one shift?

A. Once days and one nights. One week days and one week nights.

Q. Did anybody ever die in the coal mines?

A. All kinds of them. In some cases we had to take our corpses with us, so in some cases there weren't enough people to carry those corpses home.

Q. How long were you at the coal mines {1815|1816} for?

A. Until January 5th, 1945.

Q. And where did you go then?

A. Then, when the Red Army advanced, so they took us to a railroad station and we were transported to Mauthausen in Austria.

Q. Yes. How were you transported?

A. We were transported by cattle cars, on a train, in cattle cars.

Q. How long was that journey?

A. That journey took about six days. To begin with, when they loaded us in into those trains, they did not have a locomotive. So we were sealed up in that railroad station for about eighteen hours. And then, finally, they got a locomotive and they transported us, and then there were, at intervals, at certain stations, they had to stop to give priority to the Army, Army trains.

Q. Was your wagon ever opened, the cattle car that you were in?

A. No. No.

Q. Was there any food or water given to ...

A. No. No food, no water.

Q. Did anybody die in that trip, in your wagon?

A. Quite a few. About thirty to thirty-five per cent of the people.

Q. How long were you in Mauthausen for?

A. Mauthausen I was there for two {1816|1817} weeks, and then I was transferred to Gussen II.

Q. And how long in Gussen?

A. In Gussen it was approximately two and a half weeks.

Q. And where did you go from there?

A. And from there they took us to a place called Risa (ph) near Theresien, which was a munition factory.

Q. And how long were you in Risa for?

A. About seven weeks.

Q. So about where are we now in 1945 when you are finished with Risa?

A. We are now beginning of April.

Q. What happened then?

A. And then again, when the Red Army advanced, so they evacuated us on foot. We didn't know where we were going, but eventually we arrived in Theresienstadt, in Czechoslovakia.

Q. How long did that march take?

A. That took thirteen days.

Q. Were you fed during the thirteen days?

A. No. We were fed what we call three times during those thirteen days.

Q. Anybody die on that trip?

A. About thirty-five to forty percent of the people, that when a person could not march any more, so he would fall off to the side and then he was shot and left behind. Or if someone got out, then ...

Q. Just take a minute. {1817|1818}

A. Or if someone got out of line, you know, there was grass already or leaves, and wanted to catch a leaf or so, and so then he was shot also, because that meant that he was running away, because, you know, we were marching in five. Once you stepped out of line, that means that your attempt was to run away.

Q. And I understand that you were liberated at Theresienstadt.

A. Right.

Q. Can you tell us if any members of your family, cousins, aunts, uncles —

A. No. Nobody.

Q. Nobody survived.

A. No, nobody from both sides. Whole two generations were wiped out.

Q. And did you ever apply to the West German government for indemnification or compensation?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And were you given any award of indemnification compensation?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us how much?

A. Yes.

Q. How much?

A. I got once, I think, about $3,500.

Q. That's it?

A. Now I am getting a monthly pension.

Q. How much is your pension?

A. About $230 monthly.

Q. Mr. Leader, are you involved in any conspiracy or fraud to try to fool the world into thinking {1818|1819} that millions of Jews died?

A. No, sir.

Q. Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. I just want to show you a couple of photographs and ask you if you will recognize these as the gas chambers in Maidanek that you looked at.

I am showing you two photographs, actually. The one at the bottom is the one I am asking you if that is the gas chamber you spoke about.

A. No, I don't. No, I don't.

Q. What do you mean, sir? You don't agree that that is, or you don't recognize it?

A. I don't recognize it.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be marked for identification, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT "M" (For Identification): Two photographs.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I will show you another photograph. Does that look like the place you described as the gas chamber?

A. No. This does not describe anything {1819|1820} to me, because this is an inside photo, unless I stated in my testimony that I haven't been inside a gas chamber.

Q. No. I thought perhaps you had looked inside. That is what I understood.

A. Through the opening to the ramp, which it was the side of the gas chamber.

Q. So you don't recognize that, either?

A. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could we mark that for identification?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT "N" (For Identification): Photograph.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you remember where, in the camp, this was in Maidanek?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. If I showed you a map of Maidanek you could identify it; could you? Could you?

A. I'll try.

Q. Okay. Does this look like Maidanek?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So if I give you a coloured pen you could maybe mark it in with a green circle as to where the gas chamber was?

A. Well, let me get my orientation.

Q. All right. Would it be possible now to find it, sir?

A. Which one was the main road into the camp? {1820|1821}

Q. I will give you a pen, and if you can identify the area where the gas chamber was, perhaps you could circle it, sir. Would that be okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Any problems? You are having a problem?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I do. I want to locate the entrance to the camps.

THE COURT: I see.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: If it's impossible, sir, you can just tell me and —

A. Sir, it's now about forty years, you know, and I really did not anticipate that after forty years that I'll be in Canada as a free citizen and testify and re-live my experience. So it is a little emotional.

Q. Well, it's my understanding that you contacted the prosecutor to volunteer in the middle of the trial to give testimony. Is that right?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Okay. So I am not trying to put you into any emotional difficulties, but can you draw that location of the gas chamber for us?

A. I am not a hundred per cent [sic] sure, because this little map doesn't really tell me too much.

Q. Okay.

A. If you will appreciate, that being there one doesn't pay too much attention how the layout is. The only attention was paid is to try and get a hold of a slice of bread or try to avoid beatings or to {1821|1822} stay alive.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. I don't think that any of the prisoner was pre-occupied with little details how the camp lies, and it's been a long time. It's forty years now, sir.

Q. Yeah. Well, do you know where the crematorium was?

A. The finish line, Maidanek Camp.

Q. In Maidanek Camp. You said you took the bodies to the crematorium in Maidanek Camp.

A. Right.

Q. Can you identify that on that map?

A. Not very well.

Q. When you were taking the bodies out of a room through an opening that was two meters by two meters, and some people you said were with masks over their heads, it seemed to me ...

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. ... was there rigor mortis? Were they stiff?

A. I didn't get it.

Q. Were the bodies stiff?

A. Were they stiff?

Q. Yes.

A. Not really.

Q. No? Were they coloured, a bright colour at all?

A. I really didn't pay too much attention, because there was always an S.S. man with a big whip standing aside and rushing us. {1822|1823}

Q. Mm-hmmm. Do you remember what colour they were at all?

A. What colour of a body? Some bluish.

Q. Bluish.

- A. Or
- Q. Is that right?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Okay. Now, did you see anything in there that indicated that there was gassing going on, or —
- A. All I saw that there were gas people throwing out on the ramp, and we were loading them in our wagons.
- Q. How do you know they were gassed?
- A. Oh, I don't know how to answer you that question.
- Q. Well, was there anything about them that was unusual — their bodies, colour?
- A. I don't think that I can answer that question, because as I said before, that I did not pay any attention what colour they were. The only thing, you know, we were supposed to is grab him, load him up to the wagon, grab him, load him up as fast as we could, and as fast as we did it wasn't fast enough.
- Q. Now, the doorway which was two meters by two meters through which these bodies were hurled toward you — right?
- A. Right.
- Q. What was it like?
- A. You mean the opening? {1823|1824}
- Q. Yes.
- A. Well, the opening was about approximately two meters off the ground.
- Q. Yes.
- A. With a platform.
- Q. Yes.
- A. Of about two by two square meters. And there was a square opening in that crematorium wall.
- Q. I see. How was it opened or closed? Was there a door on it?
- A. I cannot answer, because when we drove up, that opening was open.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. And the minute we backed our wagon up, the bodies were tossed out on that ramp.
- Q. So you don't recall if there was a door at all.
- A. Not really.
- Q. No. How would you distinguish this from a mortuary where bodies are kept?
- A. You mean an ordinary mortuary? Like a ...
- Q. Well, I am not suggesting one like the local funeral parlour; but how was this different from a place where bodies are gathered up and kept until they can be cremated?
- A. I never saw one.
- Q. I see. Well, you said you were cremating people who had died in camp as well.
- A. Right.
- Q. And you took them on the same carts, {1824|1825} I suppose.
- A. In camp the people who died in camp, if I can give you a little — the way it was in Maidanek, we were fed once a day, and in the evening when we lined up for our ration, if someone did not look too well, so he was taken to a Block 19, what they call it, and there, in that block, those people would be finished off like, you know — killed or ...
- Q. How do you know that? Were you there?
- A. Well, it's obvious that ...
- Q. Well, how was it obvious? They were there.
- A. It was obvious that we took people and they lined up for a ration and went to Block 19, which was two barracks away, and the next morning they were layed [sic] out in the roll call field, in fives, counted, and then they were carted the crematorium.
- Q. So because they died overnight in Block 19, you figure they were starved?
- A. They didn't die. They were murdered, gagged or whatever.
- Q. How do you know?
- A. Well, you are asking me questions, how do I know? I have been there for so long, and obviously, that was what happened.
- Q. Well, you were there for quite a while unloading these bodies out of this two-metre square hole, and you didn't look inside and you don't know what's in there, so how do you know it was in Block 19?
- A. Block 19 was a special gang who {1825|1826} they were occupied with finishing people off, and we didn't have any entry. It wasn't like an exhibition, or that we were let in and watch.
- Q. No. Well, obviously you are relying about what other people told you.
- A. No, I am not lying. This is a fact.
- Q. Well, how do you know it is a fact?
- A. The fact is that there were people who worked with me side by side —
- Q. They told you?
- A. — around us, and the next morning they were taken away in the evening to Block 19, and the next morning they were layed out on the ground.
- Q. Mm-hmmm. Why were they taken away?
- A. Because they were too weak.
- Q. Too weak to work?
- A. They figured they were too weak to work.
- A. Yeah. Well, did you get typhus, or typhoid? There is a difference, isn't there?
- A. Typhoid.
- Q. Do you know the difference between typhus and typhoid?
- A. Well, the difference is that I am not a physician, but I had a high fever, dysintery. [sic]
- Q. Well, I put it to you that typhoid you get from drinking bad water; is that right? Do you know that?
- A. No, I don't know. But we were {1826|1827} getting typhoid because it was dirt, lice.
- Q. You get typhus from lice, don't you? Do you know the difference between typhus and typhoid?
- A. Not really.
- Q. No. Well, what symptoms did you have? What did you suffer? What was your disease?
- A. Diarrhea, fever, lack of appetite or no interest in food whatsoever.
- Q. Were you aware that — well, do you speak German?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Did you understand German at that time?
- A. A little bit.
- Q. Was it referred to black fever?
- A. No. This wasn't.
- Q. No? What was the word in German you used to describe the disease you had? Was it Typhus in German?
- A. Fleckenfieber [Fleckfieber].
- Q. Yes, that's what I thought. Fleck fever.
- A. Fleckenfieber.
- Q. Yeah. And that's typhus from lice, isn't it?
- A. I suppose so.
- Q. You obviously recovered from the disease, [sic] eh?
- A. Yes, I did.
- Q. Lots of people didn't, though. Right? {1827|1828}
- A. Right. Correct.
- Q. A lot of people died from that disease, isn't that correct?
- A. Correct.
- Q. They became emaciated and lost interest in food and got dysintery [sic] and diarrhea.
- A. Correct.
- Q. Was there a delousing chamber?
- A. A delousing chamber?
- Q. Yeah.
- A. Well, the delousing chamber, I think I explained before, they took us over to Camp No. 3. While we were in Camp No. 3 they deloused Camp No. 2, sealed up the barracks, and then they took us, gave us a shower and a hair cut and new set of clothes.
- Q. Yeah. Were these bodies that you handled emaciated bodies?
- A. I'm sorry, sir?
- Q. The bodies that you handled, took to the crematorium on the carts, were they emaciated bodies?

A. How do you mean?

Q. Were the bodies that you took to the crematorium emaciated, skinny bodies?

A. Not really. What do you mean by skinny – like we looked in camp?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, there were very well good-looking bodies, tall bodies.

Q. Were they covered in bright colours at all? We have gone through this. I don't know if you {1828|1829} recall.

THE COURT: I think we have.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And these occasions when you had to haul more bodies was when transports arrived, right?

A. Right.

Q. And on your transports to and from various concentration camps, many people died from the lack of food and water, didn't they?

A. Correct.

Q. In some cases you said thirty-five per cent.

A. Correct.

Q. When you handled these bodies did you cover yourself with anything?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you wear gloves?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever get sick from handling those bodies?

A. Well, nauseated, at times.

Q. Because of the appearance, I suppose?

A. Well, whatever it was.

Q. Was there a smell, of course, associated with these bodies?

A. Definitely.

Q. Could that have been why the people were wearing the masks in the room while they were handing them out to you? {1829|1830}

A. I'm sorry?

Q. Could that have been why there were masks on the bodies inside the room when they were handing them to you?

A. I assume so.

Q. When you went to Birkenau, you travelled in a train?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you referred these as cattle cars. These are just boxed cars, aren't they?

A. Well, they call them box cars, you know, sealed box cars.

Q. I think the box cars are with solid wood, sides up to very close to the top where there is a small space. Is that right?

A. Right.

Q. Whereas cattle cars are either open halfway up, or they have a —

A. No. These were closed boxes.

Q. So these were box cars;

A. Right.

Q. Now, when you got to Birkenau, you were there doing — did you go through a delousing procedure yourself at Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't that where they take you to the place where there's showers and they take your clothes and they either steam or put your clothes into a chamber and you have a shower and then you get your clothes back?

A. No. You then — they didn't get our clothes back. When we were taken to Birkenau we were {1830|1831} taken to the women's camp, which there were two camps, and in there we went through showers, gave our clothes up, because like in Maidanek and the last year they took away our striped clothes and we were wearing like civilian garb with a mark on the back, "KL" — Konzentration Lager, and the same thing we had on our right pant, red paint mark with "KL", and when we came to Birkenau, our clothes was taken away and we were given —

Q. Another new set of clothes.

A. — a new set of clothes, like striped clothes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I have that Birkenau map again?

Q. When you got to Birkenau did you go to the camp on the railroad?

A. No. We got off near Auschwitz.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And then they marched us into the women's camp.

Q. Into Birkenau.

A. Right.

Q. When was that again?

A. 1943.

Q. I am going to show you the map again. I am going to make a suggestion to you, and you tell me if I'm right. Is that the women's camp there on the left where it says, "F"? Would you agree that the object immediately left of the "F" would be the showers and the Women's camp?

A. I don't recall, sir.

Q. You don't remember, eh? {1831|1832}

A. No.

Q. You were in "D" you say?

A. Camp "D", yes.

Q. Camp "D". And that is the one that's marked "BIID", is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And you worked where when you went to work?

A. This one, if I am correct.

Q. Around here somewhere.

A. In here, if I got my orientation right.

Q. Well, as I heard you before, you said you went out of Camp "D" and went left and you turned down the road.

A. Right.

Q. How far down the road did you go after you turned left?

A. Oh, approximately about three to four hundred meters.

Q. And was the road straight or did it turn?

A. It jogged a little bit to the right, I think.

Q. You think it jogged to the right.

A. Right.

Q. I suppose it is pretty hard for you to identify exactly where you were in the camp?

A. Well, I can recognize the Camp "D".

Q. Where you went to work and saw the people go into the building and the clothes come out, I {1832|1833} don't suppose you are really sure where that was.

A. I am positively sure where that was. I may not recognize it on the map, but I am positively sure where it was.

Q. Was it a building that you, yourself, had been into at all?

A. The crematorium?

Q. Yeah.

A. The gas chambers.

Q. Well, you call it —

A. No.

Q. You have never been in there.

A. No.

Q. Have you ever been in the building marked "F"?

A. No.

Q. When you went to Birkenau you went into the camp with your old Maidanek clothes on.

A. Right.

Q. You went into a shower room somewhere.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. You left your old Maidanek clothes and got some new clothes.

A. Right.

Q. Did you ever see what they did with your old clothes?

A. No.

Q. You just left them there.

A. That — we did what we were told to do.

Q. I am not blaming you; I am just {1833|1834} asking you.

JOHN THOMAS BURNETT, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Burnett, I understand, sir, you are employed with the Royal Bank of Canada? {1835|1836}
 A. That is correct.
 Q. And what is your position with the Royal Bank?
 A. I am a senior vice-president and general counsel.
 Q. And are you, in your role of senior vice president and general counsel, familiar with the workings of the Royal Bank?
 A. To a large extent.
 Q. How does the Royal Bank compare in size to other banks in Canada?
 A. Well, it's the largest bank in Canada, measured by assets. It is the fourth largest bank in North America, again measured by assets. And it ranks somewhere in the top twenty banks in the world in size, again measured by assets.
 Q. All right. And can you tell us who owns the Royal Bank?
 A. Approximately ninety thousand shareholders.
 Q. It is widely held?
 A. Widely spread, most of whom are resident in and citizens of Canada.
 Q. Does the Royal Bank do any business in countries other than the United States?
 A. Oh, indeed. The bank carries on business in approximately forty-five different countries throughout the world through various vehicles, branches, subsidiaries, representative offices, agencies.
 Q. All right. And in Canada are there any domestic controls, government controls on the operations {1836|1837} of the Royal Bank, or any other Canadian Bank?
 A. Yes. Chartered banks in Canada are governed by the Bank Act, which is a Federal Statute.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, the witness is venturing into the realm of opinion, and I haven't heard any qualifications of him as an expert.
 THE COURT: I wouldn't have thought that would be necessary. He indicated he was the general counsel of the bank. Do you want to go into that?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.
 THE COURT: Please.
 Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: As general counsel for the bank, Mr. Burnett, what are your duties?
 A. I am responsible for the provision of legal services to the bank from both resources within the bank, the bank's law department, and through the use of external counsel. We deal with approximately fifteen hundred law firms throughout the world.
 Q. And your —
 A. I have a department of approximately forty-five lawyers.
 Q. As senior Vice-president and general counsel, is your focus domestic or international or both, of you, yourself?
 A. My responsibilities are for both operations of the bank, both domestic and international. I, of course, am supported by internal staff, and the international banking activities fall into one part of my department, and the domestic banking activities into another.
 Q. Could you speak up just a little {1837|1838} bit?
 A. I say the domestic banking operations fall into another part of my department, in terms of the direct day-to-day responsibility.
 Q. All right. And general counsel, does that mean you have to be a lawyer to be general counsel, or are you a lawyer?
 A. Yes, I am a lawyer. I have been a member of the Ontario Bar since 1958, and I am a member of the Quebec Bar since 1975.
 Q. And I understand that you are Queen's Counsel?
 A. That is correct.
 Q. And does it form any part of your responsibilities to be familiar with domestic and international law dealing with banking?
 A. To the extent that it's humanly possible, yes.
 Q. And are you familiar with the Bank Act, for example, here in Canada?
 A. Yes.
 Q. And the legislation in other countries would govern the operation of the bank in other countries?
 A. In principally, of course, relying on counsel to a large extent in foreign jurisdictions.
 Q. Have you had occasion to travel to other countries to see the operations of the bank?
 A. I have, yes, extensively.
 Q. And have you had occasion to meet with representatives of other banks for whatever reason?
 A. Oh, yes, indeed. {1838|1839}
 Q. And would those be limited to Canadian banks, or would it be a broader field?
 A. No. Understandably, most of the contacts are with Canadian banks, but I've had frequent contact with representatives of many foreign banks American, British, German.
 MR. GRIFFITHS: Subject to Your Honour, I would submit that Mr. Burnett, by virtue of his employment, is an expert in the field of banking.
 THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you want to ask any questions?

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Do you have knowledge of the history of banking?
 A. Some knowledge of the history of banking. Not extensive.
 Q. Do you have knowledge of the history of international finance in relation to events in history, such as the American Civil War, the French Revolution, Rothschild connections in regard to banking and history? Do you have knowledge of those matters?
 A. Very superficial knowledge of those matters. Only what has appeared in novels.
 Q. Have you been trained in economics?
 A. No.
 Q. Do you have any academic or personal experience in terms of economics?
 A. No. {1839|1840}
 Q. Do you have any background in the understanding of the Talmud as it is related in the pamphlet, "West, War and Islam"?

A. No.

Q. As it is relevant subject to the charge, are you familiar with the Koran and its rules in respect to banking?

A. No.

Q. Are you expert in regard to the activities of the Arab Nations in regard to loans and the handling of petrodollars?

A. I have some knowledge of that. I would not claim expertise.

Q. Sorry?

A. I have some knowledge, but I would not claim expertise.

Q. Are you familiar with the manner by which the Soviet Union has financed its enterprises?

A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with the manner in which Eastern Bloc countries have arranged loans from Western banks?

A. To a degree, yes.

Q. Are you expert in this field?

A. I could not claim expertise.

Q. Those are my questions. Thank you.

THE COURT: What are your submissions?

MR. CHRISTIE: My submissions are that the article deals with the financing of Eastern bloc and Soviet countries being referred to as Communist countries, and being referred to as International Communism. {1840|1841} The article deals with the relations between the Talmud and banking, the Koran and banking, and these are the areas of expertise which I suggest an expert could testify. Otherwise, I am not here to debate what the Royal Bank does, whether it is a good or bad bank.

This article does not have any criticisms of the Royal Bank or any other bank. It deals with international bankers. It deals with the moral qualities of international finance, and I, with the greatest respect, do not consider, from what I've heard, and I submit that this witness hasn't any expertise in the relevant areas in relationship of international finance to Communism, to the Talmud or to the Koran or in the realm of the manner of dealing with petrodollars, which is the subject – those are the three subjects raised by the one paragraph in the article, "The West, War and Islam".

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, with respect, Your Honour, I don't see any reference here to Eastern bloc countries. I see a statement —

MR. CHRISTIE: Communist countries.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The pamphlet says, "The foremost evil concocted and directed by the international bankers is international communism."

Mr. Burnett has testified that his field of employment is in the field of international banking, and he can comment on whether international bankers are directing international communism. There are value judgments that are set out here. International bankers are said to be the focal point for the dark forces {1841|1842} against all mankind for the control of the world's wealth and determines what is done and not done in the world, and whether what is done is good or evil. Judging from the state of the world today, there can be no doubt what these evil men are doing with the vast wealth we have put at their disposal. These are areas that Mr. Burnett can testify to as a member of the international banking community, how loans are made and not made, how banks are regulated by various countries, to what extent control is regulated by various countries, and the climate in which international banking communities work in the world.

My friend says, well, he has to know about the Talmud or the Koran. Well, the next sentence is, "While the Bankers' Act is in harmony with the Talmud, they act in defiance of the Koran for their wealth is based on usury and thereby is acquired without honest, productive work."

Well, he can certainly indicate whether he does an honest day's work or not, Your Honour, and whether or not the banks rely on usury for their profits or losses.

"The Islamic Nations are vulnerable to blackmail by bankers who can devalue the money with the stroke of a pen." That doesn't make reference to petrodollars. It is international funds are devalued is what they seem to be referring to there.

THE COURT: What portion of Exhibit 1 are you looking at?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am looking at page 2, Your Honour, about halfway down the page. There is a {1842|1843} paragraph with bold print, "International Bankers", which is underlined, and there is a paragraph there. This is Exhibit 2.

THE COURT: Yes. Exhibit 2, sorry. Anything further?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You have the last word, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: The portions of the paragraph read by my friend are indeed the value portions of the article. The statement of fact portion of the paragraph in the article relevant to international finance and international bankers makes specific reference to and comments upon the Talmud, the Koran and oil earnings. It also deals with international communism and makes a statement in relation to the relationship between international bankers and international communism. While the value judgment portions of the article, anyone could comment on, the factual portions which come after the words, "While the world bankers act in perfect harmony with the Talmud", the rest of that paragraph is an area upon which, I suggest, the witness has quite rightly said he has no special knowledge or expertise. I am not critical of his immense knowledge of the activities and qualities of the Royal Bank of Canada, which is not the subject matter of the article. I am well aware that the gentleman is a highly qualified member of the staff of the Royal Bank of Canada, but with the greatest respect, if that is no more the issue, then it would be the issue on a subject such as international grain cartels, they call a very good {1843|1844} farmer, or call somebody in the field relatively close, but not the subject matter – I mean, his expertise does not cover the fields that this article deals with. And I suggest that for that reason his expertise is established in an area, but it isn't an area relevant to the subject matter of this article.

RULING

THE COURT: In the presence of the jury, counsel for the Crown is in the process of leading the evidence of a witness whose name is John Burnett.

Mr. Burnett, under oath, has sworn that he is the senior vice-president and general counsel of the Royal Bank of Canada. He has testified with objection that he is familiar with the workings of his bank. He has testified as to the size of his bank, comparatively speaking, with other banks, and the rank of the Royal Bank of Canada with regard to assets as compared not only to the North American banks, Canadian banks, but other international banks.

He has sworn that he is responsible for the legal services to the bank. He has a staff of lawyers. He deals with hundreds of law firms {1844|1845} throughout the world. He has testified that part of his responsibilities encompass administering legal matters, as general counsel, through firms or representatives of his bank in about forty-five countries throughout the world.

He has also testified that he, in the normal course of his duties, communicates with other member banks other than his own in the international community. When he was asked a question concerning the regulations of Canadian banks by Canadian federal law, Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused, has taken objection and has questioned the propriety of the answers that might emanate from the witness.

Mr. Christie takes the position that in certain fields this witness is not a qualified expert. Counsel for the Crown, in reply, points to a paragraph entitled, "International Bankers", on page 2 of Exhibit 2 which is entitled, "The West, War and Islam".

It is submitted on behalf of the Crown that there are contained within the confines of that paragraph many subjects upon which this witness {1845|1846} is qualified to testify in his capacity as an expert.

Counsel for the accused, with my permission, has cross-examined the witness on some of the subjects of that particular paragraph such as his knowledge of the Talmud and the Koran, and how Soviet Russia finances its enterprises.

Mr. Burnett has indicated that he has no knowledge on other subjects put to him by counsel for the accused. He professes knowledge, but not necessarily expertise. On yet other subjects put to him by counsel he does state that he is expert.

The subject matter of the evidence of this witness essentially pertains to a paragraph on page 2 of Exhibit 2 entitled, "The West, War and Islam". It is entitled, "International Bankers". I quote as follows:

"These men are the focal point for the dark forces arrayed against all mankind, for their control of the world's wealth directs and determines largely what is done or not done in the world and whether what is done is good or evil. Judging from the state {1846|1847} of the world today, there can be no doubt what these evil men are doing with the vast wealth we have put at their disposal. While the world bankers act in perfect harmony with the Talmud, they act in perfect defiance of the Koran, for their wealth is based on usury and thereby is acquired without honest, productive work. The Islamic nations are vulnerable to blackmail by the bankers who can devalue the money derived from oil with the stroke of a pen, and who can, bribe and browbeat governments into freezing or seizing Islamic assets. But the foremost evil concocted and directed by the international bankers is international communism."

I need not read any further.

This witness has stated that he has certain fields of knowledge which are such that he is very knowledgeable in those fields. He has stated other fields of knowledge in which he does not have that {1847|1848} familiarity.

He is certainly qualified to speak on the subject for which he has professed knowledge. I do not understand the Crown to be placing this witness as an expert in the field of expertise involving the Koran and Islam. Certainly if that is the case, he cannot give his opinion, even if he is asked. When he is cross-examined he can give whatever answers he feels he is capable of giving, provided that they are truthful, and I assume they will be.

In most fields with which he has knowledge as a general counsel, member of the Bar of this Province insofar as the law is concerned, he is certainly entitled to give his opinions. On those which he is not he will not. It is as simple as that.

THE COURT: You may proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

(Volume IX follows) {1848|1849}

VOLUME IX

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I think, Mr. Burnett, I have just asked you whether there are any regulations controlling ownership of the Bank in Canada.

A. Yes, there are. There are provisions in the Bank Act that regulate the maximum number of shares that may be owned by anyone person and/or associates, and that is limited to ten per cent of the shares of any class. And there are provisions in the Bank Act that control the percentage ownership by foreign interests, and those, in the aggregate, cannot exceed twenty-five per cent of the shares, issued shares of any class.

Q. Is there any reference in the Bank Act that you are aware of specifically controlling or encouraging Zionists, Jews or any other group or organization to own more than ten per cent of the Bank?

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this relevant to the subject matter, Your Honour? I don't think the article – I mean, I object to the relevance of this question. The article doesn't say anything of the kind. It shouldn't be imputed that it does.

THE COURT: You can answer the question.

THE WITNESS: There is, to my knowledge, no reference in the Bank Act to any religious sect or organization or denomination.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Can you tell us what the primary money-making operations of the Royal {1849|1850} Bank are, world wide?

A. The nature of the operation of the Royal Bank, as with most commercial banks, retail banks, is the borrowing of money at varying rates of interest for varying terms, and the lending of the money so borrowed, together with its capital, at varying rates and for varying terms.

Q. Okay. And —

A. That's the principal source of income. It also derives income of a fee nature for the provision of financial services of a great variety.

Q. Can you tell us if there is any, again, any restriction by race, creed, religion, colour as to who the Royal Bank will lend money to or borrow money from?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. And what controls, then, the borrowing and lending?

A. The estimate of the capacity to repay, the credit worthiness of the borrower is of prime concern.

Q. So more specifically is there anything that – any policy of your international bank to not lend money to Islamic nations?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. Is there any policy with the Royal Bank to not lend money to certain nations, or some nations that ...

A. Yes. I believe our Chairman has announced that it is our present policy not to make loans to South Africa, and he's given that assurance {1850|1851} to the lobbyist group from the United Church and others who have urged that course of action on the bank.

Q. Are there any other countries that you are aware of that the Royal Bank will not do business with?

A. Yes. I believe there are other countries, but our unwillingness to deal with them is certainly not based on race or religion. We may be concerned about the political stability in some places; but beyond that, there is no prohibition, there are no prohibitions other than those which I have enumerated.

Q. Now, do other countries have regulations as to ownerships of their banks similar to Canadian regulations?

A. Yes, they do. Nearly every country has regulations of that sort. In the United States, if I may speak in the general sense – now, the United States and Great Britain have been more open than most other countries. We have only recently, in Canada, in the 1981 revisions to the Bank Act, admitted foreign banks to carry on business in Canada. And so that we now have what are described as "Schedule B" banks in Canada. They are Canadian banks, but they are Canadian subsidiaries of foreign banks. And there is some curtailment on the scope of business they are permitted to have in Canada.

Q. All right.

A. Reciprocity, though, tends to be the trend in terms of international banking – reciprocity in terms of freedom of access.

Q. Reciprocity in terms of —

A. Freedom of access of foreign banks {1851|1852} into other major economic areas.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could I see Exhibit 2, please? Thank you.

Q. I am showing to you, Mr. Burnett, Exhibit No. 2 in this trial. It's a pamphlet called, "West, War and Islam". And on page 2 of that pamphlet there is a reference to international bankers. You just heard His Honour a moment ago read through that entire paragraph. There are some items in there that I would like to ask you about.

Can you tell us, the first two sentences there, where it talks about international bankers being the "focal point for the dark forces arrayed against all mankind for their control of the world's wealth directs and determines largely what is done or not done in the world and whether what is done is good or evil. Judging from the state of the world today, there can be no doubt what these evil men are doing with the vast wealth we have put at their disposal."

Is there any policy of the Royal Bank to direct international loans to evil purposes?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. "While the world bankers act in perfect harmony with the Talmud, they act in perfect defiance of the Koran, for their wealth is based on usury and thereby is acquired without honest, productive work."

Do you have any comment on that?

A. First I would want to know what the definition is to be applied to the term "usury". Is usury simply the lending of money at interest rate, or is there some connotation that the rate of interest has to be so excessive as to constitute that rate be usury? {1852|1853}

As I earlier stated, the principle function of banks throughout the world is the marshalling of capital and resources by borrowing or seeking investment capital and at various rates and on various terms, and to lend money to accountable borrowers with the full and reasonable expectation that this money will be repaid in accordance with the terms of the agreement, freely and openly negotiated between the parties.

The difference, of course, between the cost of the money that the bank makes available to the borrower and the rate of interest or earnings that the bank receives from the borrower is the profits of the lender, and in most jurisdictions he must first, out of his profits, pay for his own operating costs in his own facilities. He must, in most jurisdictions, provide reserves in the event of the non-payment of the money that has been loaned, and in the case with most Canadian banks, their growth has been funded by the retention of the balance of those earnings other than what is paid out to its shareholders by way of dividends, or to its bonds, the debenture holders, to its debenture holders by way of interest on the money that is borrowed in that way.

Q. "The Islamic nations are vulnerable to blackmail by the bankers who can devalue the money derived from oil earnings with the stroke of a pen, and who can bribe and browbeat governments into freezing or seizing Islamic assets."

First of all, is it the policy of your international bank to bribe and browbeat governments into freezing assets?

A. It is absolutely not the policy of {1853|1854} the Royal Bank nor, to my knowledge, of any other major Canadian bank bank [sic] or any other major American bank or British bank.

Q. Or British bank?

A. Or British bank.

Q. And would that be possible in Canada, to freeze or seize Islamic assets?

A. Not without judicial process.

Q. "But the foremost evil concocted and directed by the international bankers is international communism."

I want to ask you about the concocted part of that, because you've told us the history of banking is not a field of your expertise. But can you tell us whether you are involved in directing international communism?

A. I can tell you categorically, certainly the Royal Bank is not involved in the direction of international communism.

Q. All right. And would you compare at all, or care to compare at all what bankers do in terms of borrowing and lending and charging a fee for services to communist principals? Are you able to do that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think the witness is so far qualified to compare communism with banking practices.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I see Mr. Burnett shrugging as well, so I am content with that, Your Honour. I won't pursue that. {1854|1855}

THE COURT: Go to the next question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

Q. Are you aware of any of the banks in the United States that you deal with as participating in international communism, directly in international communism?

A. No, I have no knowledge of any involvement by any American bank or any bank in the Western world in the direction of the management of communism.

Q. Now, does the Royal Bank loan money to communist countries?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. And are the terms to loan monies to communist countries any different than capitalist countries?

A. No. I could say that the terms – there are variations to the terms because of the state, nature of the borrower. In most instances —

Q. Can you give us an example?

A. Well, these become essentially sovereign risk loans that are made to Poland, Yugoslavia, Rumania – our bank is seldom, not to my knowledge, ever one on one, but is a participant in a syndicate of banks who have joined together to make this credit facility available to either the government or some State agency in that communist country – State agency meaning a government-controlled agency. And so some of the commercial terms that would normally appear in a loan agreement, if a syndicate or a single bank were making a loan to the Gdansk — {1855|1856}

Q. Just a little louder.

A. If they were making a loan to the subsidiary of Alcan, which is a Brazilian company, the subsidiary being a Brazilian company, the terms and conditions of that loan would not be identical to those which would be imposed upon or found in a sovereign risk loan or risk to a government.

Q. Would the loan to the government be on better terms, or not as good terms?

A. The terms to governments are usually better, because of the risk factor being less.

Q. And is there any special treatment given to communist countries vis-a-vis capitalist countries?

A. No. And in terms of rate, no, and other terms and conditions, there would be very little of any significant variance in the terms of the loan agreements, comparing those agreements with loans that would be made to Barbados, Mexico.

Q. Other sovereign risk loans, country loans.

A. That is correct.

Q. Thank you very much, Mr. Burnett.

I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Isn't it true that any sovereign risk loans that certain syndicates have of which the bank {1856|1857} is an apparent partner enter into that from time to time the syndicate has to lay down terms of repayment that they insist on?

A. Yes. But that is so of every loan agreement.

Q. Yes. And when there are larger loans, like with Dome Petroleum or Mexico or Poland, the fact that so much money is at stake, and if the loan went into default, it would be very serious for the bank, motivates the bank to negotiate what is called a change of payment schedule. Right?

A. A re-scheduling, right.

Q. Yes. And that means that all of a sudden, when certain interest payments are due, they are re-scheduled to a later date. Right?

A. Right. Yes. That could be part of a re-scheduling programme.

Q. And sometimes, as a condition of these terms of re-scheduling, governments are expected and encouraged and advised, shall we say, to take certain political measures to cut their spending and to increase taxes in certain areas, is that right?

A. The syndicate of lending banks to the sovereign states are not in a position to dictate such terms, nor do they.

Q. I didn't suggest limitation, but suggestion. That was very clear in my question, sir.

A. Yes. Absolutely. And in the international monetary fund which may be counselling that sovereign state and the management of its internal economy, the lending banks may say to the borrowers, {1857|1858} "You shall first come to an agreement with the International Monetary Fund as a condition precedent to our entering into or re-scheduling the loan."

Q. Yeah. Isn't it true that it's easier to deal with the communist country that has firmer control over its people than it is to deal with, say, a Latin American company where there might possibly be political problems?

A. I can't make this observation.

Q. Isn't it true that a lender concerned with the ability to repay would prefer to deal with a solid communist bloc country like Czechoslovakia than an unstable communist country like Poland where you might not be able to get repaid?

A. I suppose those who make the credit evaluations might have that view.

Q. So that your interest is in repayment and making money, not in equitable fair play or such abstracts; isn't that right?

A. That is not correct.

Q. Well, let's put it this way. If you had to make a loan or reschedule a loan to Poland, and you were part of the international syndicate, I guess, of which the Royal Bank is a part – right?

A. To Poland?

Q. Poland, yes.

A. Yes.

Q. You might make a suggestion to the government about certain things to maintain political stability. Wouldn't this assist your collection?

A. No. {1858|1859}

Q. Are you familiar with the book, "Towers of Gold, Feet of Clay" by Waiter Stewart, on Canadian banks?

A. I am familiar with the book. I have not read it.

Q. You have not read it.

A. No. Nor anything else of Mr. Stewart.

Q. Well, do you consider it improper as a book, or do you think that he's some sort of a purveyor of false news?

MR. GRIFFITHS: He can't say that. He hasn't read it, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am asking a question. I agree he hasn't read it.

THE COURT: Ask him another one. He hasn't read that book. He doesn't know. He hasn't read any of that authors works. He just said that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I put it to you that in Canada you have to keep certain reserves; correct?

A. Correct.

Q. I put it to you that the reserves are two kinds – primary and secondary reserves. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it true that the bank is required, in Canada, to put in a reserve in proportion of its liability?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it true that a deposit to a bank from a depository – like if I put money in a bank that – {1859|1860} is a liability to a bank?

A. No. It's regarded as an asset.

Q. All right. And a loan from the bank to someone else, is that regarded as an asset?

A. Correct.

Q. The level of reserves is currently being shifted downward over a period of time; is that correct?

A. The level of reserves is —

Q. ... is currently being shifted downward over a period of time.

A. No. I don't believe that to be correct.

Q. What are the —

A. In fact, there are pressures to increase the reserves.

Q. I put it to you that historically the reserves required of banks in Canada have decreased.

A. Over what period of time?

Q. Over the last twenty years.

A. And as a percentage of assets?

Q. That's right.

A. The reserves have ...

Q. Yes.

A. I can't comment. I don't know what the provisions were twenty years ago.

Q. The new primary reserves will require two per cent of notice to deposit, one per cent of the amount for which it's Canadian currency noted deposit exceeds five hundred million dollars, and three per cent of residents of Canada held in Canadian banks. Is that true? {1860|1861}

A. That sounds correct. All right.

Q. The secondary reserves by the Bank of Canada on Canadian currency deposits; is that true?

A. That is correct.

Q. And foreign currency deposits held by Canadians in Canadian banks. Is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. And the secondary reserves have historically amounted to about five per cent; in addition, some banks maintain voluntary reserves with the Bank of Canada to provide more flexibility. Is that true?

A. Sounds correct.

Q. And the proportion of reserves to statutory deposits held by the Bank of Canada as of October 1st, 1981, was 4.71 per cent, or about one dollar in twenty. Would that be correct?

A. I have no way of knowing.

Q. I put it to you that when Canadian banks create loans or make loans with Japanese yen or Euro currencies, they are involved in a process of making loans in which reserve requirements are not required at all under Canadian law.

A. When Canadian banks —

Q. All right, I will put it to you this way:

"Thus a Canadian bank can only create a certain number of Canadian dollars". Do you agree?

A. Correct.

Q. One in twenty or twenty times one, really. Right – on the average of reserves? {1861|1862}

A. That's the fact that I said I could not accept.

Q. You don't accept that fact?

A. No. I was unable to comment on the correctness of the statement.

Q. But generally reserves are a very small portion of the amount on deposit – about five per cent?

A. Correct.

Q. So you keep one dollar in deposit for every twenty that are deposited. You are required to do that.

A. Yeah.

Q. All right. I say, thus a Canadian bank can only create a certain number of Canadian dollars – that is, loaning twenty times the amount of money on deposit. Right? You are shaking your head. I want an answer yes or no.

A. No, I am not shaking my head. I am thinking about your question, and I am not understanding it.

Q. All right. I say, thus the Canadian bank can only create a certain number of Canadian dollars by loaning them.

A. I don't understand that statement.

Q. All right. But it can create Japanese yen without numbers as long as someone is willing to accept them in short as the creations are fungible [fungible] and —

THE COURT: What does "fungible" [sic] mean? {1862|1863}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you know what "fungible" [sic] means?

A. Meltable.

Q. Well, do you agree with this statement?

A. I don't understand it.

Q. You don't understand it. I suggest to you that for foreign currency tradings and for loaning money to foreign sources and foreign borders you don't have to keep reserve requirements. You don't have to have one dollar on deposit for every twenty that you loan, under Canadian law.

A. Right.

Q. So you really don't have to keep reserves.

A. Right.

Q. All right. So I put it to you that the Euro currency market and markets where you are dealing with loans to other borrowers overseas has been called a giant ponzi scheme. Are you aware of that?

A. That it's called a giant ponzi scheme?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Well, I put it to you that in fact, without reserve requirements for those kind of loans in foreign currencies or to foreign borrowers, you are in the position where you can loan any amount of money, provided that you can satisfy the borrower that you are able to raise it. You are not required to keep reserves in Canada or anywhere else. {1863|1864}

A. That is not entirely true.

Q. Where are you obliged to keep reserves for these foreign loans?

A. In the United States.

Q. Are you? In American dollars?

A. Yes. In American loans.

Q. For all foreign loans?

A. No. For loans made in the United states.

Q. Yes, but not for, for example, European loans, Japanese loans.

A. No. In the U.K. there are ratios of assets to capital. There are limitations to the amount that you can lend based on your capital base.

Q. I'd like to put it to you that in regard to Poland or Latin America or such countries as these, that there is no limit to how much you can loan.

A. No regulatory limit?

Q. Right.

A. Imposed either ...

Q. ... by the borrower or by Canadian law.

A. That is probably correct.

Q. And as a result, massive amounts of money, without reserve requirements, have been loaned by your bank and other banks to Latin American countries. True or false?

A. Massive amounts of money, you say?

Q. Well, I don't know whether we are going to quibble about massive. I say millions, hundreds of millions of dollars. {1864|1865}

A. Correct.

Q. Billions of dollars to Argentina, to Mexico, to Brazil – true or false?

A. In terms of our bank, not billions.

Q. Hundreds of millions.

A. Correct.

Q. You are participants, again, with syndicates of other banks.

A. Correct.

Q. American banks?

A. European banks, Japanese banks.

Q. Yeah, all of which has some influence on the International Monetary Fund.

A. Correct.

Q. And the International Monetary Fund, in fact, is kind of an international cartel of financial interests. Would you agree?

A. No.

Q. Well, who are they? Who elects them? Who appoints them?

A. I am not sure what you mean by a cartel in that sense.

Q. Well, who is the International Monetary Fund?

A. It is a United Nations sponsored agency.

Q. And who appoints the people that are in it on the board?

A. I am not sure how these people are appointed, Nominated, I am sure, by the member states.

Q. Are you sure of that? {1865|1866}

A. No.

Q. Who is Paul Volcker?

A. He is a member of the American cabinet.

Q. He is?

A. Paul Volcker?

Q. Yeah. You say he is a member of the American cabinet.

A. Is he not a member of the American administration?

Q. Are you stating that as a fact?

THE COURT: He is answering your question. Go ahead and ask the next one.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't hear him whether he was asking me or telling me.

THE COURT: No. He answered it. Do you want to answer it again, witness?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to have it clear. I didn't hear you say whether is he, or he is.

A. He is.

Q. All right. You say he is a member of the American administration. Is he the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board?

A. Right.

Q. And would you refer to him as the other man who runs America?

A. No.

Q. Well, I put it to you that he is frequently referred to as such in the media. Would you agree? I will just show you a headline, for example, {1866|1867} November 26, 1984. Have you met Mr. Volcker?

A. No, I have not.

Q. The other man who runs America, Federal Reserve Chairman Volcker gives a little but does not loose.

Is this accurate of his position?

A. Yes. It's an accurate description of his position of Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Q. Is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board an elected office?

A. No.

Q. Is the Senate Committee on Banking in Canada the source of the Bank Act?

A. No.

Q. What is?

A. The Senate Committee of the Parliament of Canada?

Q. Right.

A. Parliament itself is the source of the Bank Act.

Q. Isn't it true that all modifications to the Bank Act have been drafted by, in advance, the Senate Committee on Banking?

A. I don't believe that to be the case at all.

Q. Do you take the position that you understand the workings of international finance in respect to the international monetary fund and the position of the Federal Reserve Boards, etcetera?

A. No, I do not take that position.

Q. Do you know who the Rothschilds {1867|1868} were and are?

A. There have been several generations of them. Some of them own vineyards in France.

Q. Well, are they a mercantile banker?

A. Arthur Rothschild was, continues to be a banking house.

Q. Where, in New York?

A. They are in London primarily. I believe they would have representative offices in New York as well.

Q. You consider them a mercantile bank and you are distinguishing them by virtue of what, that you a commercial bank?

A. I wouldn't call them a mercantile bank without more definition of what you mean by that term. The term "merchant banking" is one that means a lot of things to a lot of people, and all different.

Q. What's it mean to you?

A. A merchant bank, in my understanding, in the sense that I would use that term, is a financial services organization whose primary function is to bring capital or debt together with opportunity bring borrower and lender together to assist in mergers and acquisitions.

Q. Are these banks in that category of which you are familiar: Warburg, does that ring, a bell?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it a bank?

A. It is a merchant bank, investment banker.

Q. How about the name Schiff? {1868|1869}

A. That. one doesn't mean anything to me.

Q. Jacob Schiff doesn't mean anything to you.

A. No.

Q. Kuhn

A. Yes.

Q. Are they a large bank?

A. Large merchant banking, investment banking, yes.

Q. Dreyfus & Company?

A. Dreyfus & Company, I tend to know them as funding managers.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Lazard Freres?

A. Again, merchant bankers.

Q. Vlochdassault?

A. Not known to me.

Q. The Chase Manhattan Bank is known to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Where most of your money is owed; is that right?

A. Where most of our —

Q. Where money borrowed even by your bank is sometimes owed. Is that not right?

A. They are a correspondent bank of the Royal Bank.

Q. Do you ever go into syndicate arrangement with them?

A. Indeed.

Q. Yes. And in Latin America, {1869|1870} I suppose, to some extent.

A. Yes.

Q. How much money does the Royal Bank of Canada owe or have owed to it, rather, maybe owed, in Latin America?

A. I don't know.

Q. Would it be in the billions?

A. In the billions?

Q. Yes. Sovereign loans to Latin American countries, billions of dollars?

A. I don't know. I doubt that.

Q. And how do you expect to get repayment from government when they have these political problems like collecting taxes and that sort of thing?

A. How do we expect to get paid because they are having problems collecting taxes?

Q. Yeah. How do they pay you if they are not collecting taxes?

A. The taxes are not the only source of their revenue.

Q. Well, how else do governments get money?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't think he had finished answering the question, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: We have negotiated terms of repayment along with the other members of the group who form the part of the syndicate in that we are in the capacity or believe to be within the capacity of the borrowing country to repay. These are predicated on, of necessity, on certain expectations as to the level of economic activity that will be carried on in the country, {1870|1871} the growth in trade balances that the country will experience, that will generate U.S. dollars, with which these loans can be repaid.

Q. And when the country says it can't repay and won't repay, what do you do then?

A. We have not been faced with the situation yet where the country has said, "We won't repay".

Q. No. But there are certainly countries that said, "We can't repay this so and so many millions of dollars of interest." Isn't that right?

A. Oh, absolutely Absolutely.

Q. It's my understanding, then, that this cartel, I suggest, or syndicate as you want to call it — would you call it a cartel?

A. No, I wouldn't call it a cartel.

Q. What is the difference?

A. Well, a cartel, I would suggest, is one which has some suggestion of exclusivity to it, whereas, in fact, syndicates of banks are very, very competitive for the business. One syndicate may end up with the business, but it has derived that business only after a very competitive negotiation with the lenders.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that there isn't a great competition, in fact no competition, to lend money to Argentina, Brazil, Mexico or Poland. In fact, a lot of competition to get out of there.

A. Once you're in, you're in.

Q. That's right. And now the banks, including yours, are in; right?

A. Right.

Q. And they are wanting to get out, {1871|1872} right?

A. We want to get repaid. We don't necessarily want to get out. We have continued interest in doing business in Brazil and Argentina and Mexico and elsewhere.

Q. By what means did the Government of Canada authorize banks to loan money to other governments? Is there an agreement to that effect?

A. There was no prohibition on the Bank Act from their doing it.

Q. No. But if these loans to foreign governments, some of them communist governments, go into default, isn't it true that you, therefore, restrict your lending activities in Canada?

A. Not at all.

Q. Not at all.

A. Not at all.

Q. Because you know you can collect from Canadians, right?

A. If you are suggesting that, because of our foreign lending —

Q. That's right.

A. — we are limited as to the amount of dollars that are available for lending in Canada, that's just not correct.

Q. No. I suppose you may be right because there is no reserve requirements, so you didn't have to have deposits in the first place on those loans.

A. It has no relationship to that at all.

Q. So nothing happens to the Bank of {1872|1873} Canada or any other Canadian bank if these international loans to communist and other countries default; you won't have any insurance at all.

A. Well, of course it would, because if all of the domestic loans were to fail or become nonproductive, it would have a massive impact on Canadian banking. The banking is a risk business, and if all of the assets become non-productive, then there isn't a bank in the world that is strong enough to withstand that, and then I would suggest that that is a condition that would only pertain if economic conditions were that disastrous throughout the country.

Q. What I am suggesting to you is that the international loans you have spoken about, to Poland, Rumania — what other country? ... Czechoslovakia —

A. Rumania, Poland, Yugoslavia.

Q. Yugoslavia. And other Canadian banks loan to other countries?

A. Yes.

Q. You are just speaking about the Royal Bank.

A. Right. Well, other Canadian banks are in those ventures with us.

Q. These loans, you say, if they went into default, would have no impact whatsoever on Canada's domestic situation?

A. If those loans were repudiated, cancelled, not —

Q. Yes.

A. Of course they would have, because it would have affected the banking institutions generally. {1873|1874}

Q. Yeah. So far they haven't been repudiated, but many loan repayments have had to be rescheduled because countries have not been making their payments; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. I suggest to you that this international relationship that you've described with Canadian banks and other banks has created an international network of financial control. Do you deny that?

A. I deny that.

Q. I suggest to you that the International Monetary Fund and the syndicates you refer to actually do indicate to governments changes in their legislation, changes in their laws and things they must do in order to allow re-scheduling to occur.

A. I suggest that the arrangements negotiated with the International Monetary Fund are not imposed; they are negotiated with the country not in any other area than in the management of the economy of those countries.

Q. In the management of the economy of those countries, yes.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And the syndicate of which your bank is one at times makes suggestions and gives advice on the "management of the economy of those countries" in order that re-scheduling may occur.

A. No. We give no direct advice.

Q. No direct advice.

A. Some of the changes that are required in the management of the economies of these {1874|1875} countries are so self obvious that they do not have to be told; it's having the determination to make some of the hard and maybe politically unpopular decisions. Otherwise there is — as a prudent lender you can see no assurance of the ability of the borrower to repay.

This process, I suggest, might be some inferences to direct emphasis to patrol the management of these countries. There is nothing more that happens in the relationship with the commercial banker and the commercial firm with whom he is financing, providing financing, and his conduct of his business in Canada, in Metropolitan Toronto.

The banker works with the borrower. He is interested in the continued success of the business. In the international lending we are interested in the continued survival in growth and development of those countries. We are not interested in having them collapse or die. We are looking to them to be a source of business for hundreds of years to come.

Q. Well, to put it very simply, without too much of that type of – don't you mean the bank wants to make money?

A. Of course the bank wants to make money.

Q. And the way it makes money is to get the loan repaid. Right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And the terms under which it can be repaid are negotiable, but I put it to you that when the final decision is made, the international syndicate of bankers who loan the money could make life very difficult {1875|1876} for a country who refused to repay or failed to follow certain advice.

A. A banker could also make life very, very difficult for the ABC Motor Company in Toronto.

Q. I am not denying that.

A. It is not in the bank's interest to do that. The banker is interested in certainly seeing that the loan that he has negotiated is repaid. He is interested whether that be a commercial enterprise in Ontario, whether that be a sovereign country somewhere in the Caribbean or in Latin America or Europe.

Q. Why is it that the banks decided not to make loans to South Africa?

A. I was not part of the bank when it made that decision, so —

Q. Well, let me give you a suggestion. Isn't it a political reason?

A. Or moral.

Q. All right. So the bank makes a moral or political judgment on South Africa. Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Why doesn't it make a similar moral or political judgment on Rumania or Czechoslovakia where people could be just as oppressed there? May I suggest that they have a preference to those countries?

THE COURT: Which question do you want him to answer first?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: May I suggest that there is a preference for countries like Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia [sic]? {1876|1877}

A. Preference to what?

Q. As opposed to South Africa.

A. As opposed to South-Africa? I suppose that is a valid observation.

Q. Well, I put it to you that it is obviously a political decision.

A. No. It is a moral posture that has been taken by the bank.

Q. Well, do you think that there is oppression in the countries of Rumania, Yugoslavia [sic] and Poland that is somehow subsidized by foreign loans to keep the government from facing some economic difficulties?

A. I have no way of knowing that.

Q. You what?

A. I would have no way of knowing that.

Q. Nor any particular interest in it, neither.

THE COURT: Whether he is interested in it or not, Mr. Christie, is not the issue here.

MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest it is, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I suggest it isn't, and I am saying it isn't, so what is your next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am saying, Your Honour, that the question is whether this individual, as an expert for banking, can tell us whether there is a relationship in support of world communism.

THE COURT: Well, ask him that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was making that same suggestion in the form of a question. {1877|1878}

THE COURT: You were asking him whether he as a person was interested in this.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he is an expert. I thought I could ask that.

THE COURT: It is not within the realm of his expertise. It is a political matter. You were the one that was taking objection to that. Ask him the questions that pertain to the issues that each one of these twelve citizens have to decide.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I put it to you that, in fact, on behalf of the Royal Bank or any other bank, there is more desire to support communist countries than South Africa, obviously.

A. No. No.

Q. Do you or has anyone in your capacity considered the effect of supporting communist countries with loans?

A. Have we considered the effect of supporting communist countries with loans?

Q. Yes. Have you or anyone in the bank that you are aware of considered the effect of that?

A. I am sure some consideration has been given of what effect the lending of money to communist countries would have on the life in those countries, the lives of people in those countries. Most of the lending that is done to those countries – and it represents, I hasten to add, a very minute portion of the total assets, assets of the bank

Q. Of what bank?

A. Of the Royal Bank.

Q. Are you commenting on what propor-{1878|1879}tion of the assets of other banks it reflects?

A. No.

Q. No. I am not suggesting the Royal Bank is somehow extraordinarily culpable when I suggest to you, as I am about to, that lots of other banks are supporting, with loans, communist countries as well as the Royal.

A. Most of the financing that is going into these countries is in the form of trade financing. It is to finance export of Canadian products and services. And if we should be apprehensive as to making Canadian products available to communist countries, if that is sustaining communism or serving the demeanour, the aspirations of world communism to finance this export of Canadian engineering or consumer products —

Q. Or computer parts.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, let him finish.

THE WITNESS: — then I think this is a political decision that our own government should tell us that we are not to do it. It is not the case. We are being strongly encouraged by the government to assist in trade financing, wherever that might be.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Is that the answer to the question as to whether consideration has been given to the effect of this upon communist countries?

A. Well, that is such a vague and general question, I don't know. Depends what you mean what the effect is. If you mean to affect the stability, to improve the level of conditions of these people by improving technology and products and know-how so people {1879|1880} can be employed and their products can be exported and we buy some of their products, certainly we have taken into account this. Financing in the stimulation of world trade is a very desirable thing to accomplish.

Q. Have you ever considered what would have happened to the economies of those countries if this form of exchange of wealth, shall we say, had not occurred?

A. That would engage me in an exercise of speculation that I —

Q. I take it, then, you haven't considered it.

A. No. I have, as others, I am sure, have considered, that we are not an exclusive source of anything that they want, and the fact that if we, as Canadians, said, "We will not export, and our banks will not finance and assist the export of our products", that they aren't going to have those products is naive. They are going to get those products. They are going to get them from somewhere, and they are going to be financed by somebody, by some government or some banking institution.

Now, we are not exporting atomic bombs; we are not exporting military arms. We are exporting capital goods; we are exporting consumable products without which – and we have given a lot of consideration to this – the impact on Canada, if Canadian banks do not do that to provide that kind of support wherever the products are going – and our governments have urged us to play an even more active role in this, and they participate with us in those transactions through the Export Development Corporation – so if we are guilty of sponsoring and supporting and sustaining communist regimes, so is the {1880|1881} Government of Canada.

Q. Is it correct that you suggest the loaning of money to Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia was so that they can buy Canadian products?

A. Primarily, yes.

Q. And without those loans they couldn't buy Canadian products.

A. Realistically they are going to buy the product where the financing is provided. If they can get that product – and there is very little that is unique in what we produce – if they can get that product in West Germany, if they can get that product in the United States or they can get it out of Brazil or whatever, and they can get the financing there, they'll take it. So they are going to have it. And we can't sit back piously and say, "We disagree with you politically; we disagree with your political system and therefore we aren't going to export Canadian goods to you; we won't sell our wheat to you; we don't think, because you are Communist, that you should have Canadian wheat" – do you think they are going to do without wheat? They are going to get their wheat from Argentina, from the United States, from Australia, wherever. And I don't know that it's the role of the banker to be making those political, international political decisions. If we were to receive any directive from our government as to how we were to conduct our banking business, it would be absurd.

Q. Is it not the case that your position in banking is rather influential in government, in fact?

A. I wish it were more so. {1881|1882}

Q. Yes, I'm sure. But isn't it true that fairly prominent Canadians have sat on the board of the banks for some time?

A. Yes. That's indeed —

Q. Some of the same people who are the directors of the companies who benefit from the exports are also sitting on the board of the banks; is that right?

A. Right.

Q. So you say that to save Canada's economy we allow trading with Soviet countries, whereas I say to you that the people who benefit from those types of arrangements are the same people who sit on the boards of the banks.

A. That they benefit, that their employees benefit, that the shareholders benefit I cannot deny; if it were otherwise why would they be in business?

Q. Well, I don't have to answer your questions for a moment.

A. No.

Q. But what I am suggesting to you is that there is a very close relationship from the major exportees to these communist countries and the major banks who base these decisions to make the loans.

A. There is a connection that they sit on the board; that there are a common membership of boards would not be denied; but to then make the big logic leap that their presence – that they were in a position to urge or require the bank to make a business decision that was irrational or irresponsible is incorrect.

THE COURT: I think, Mr. Christie, {1882|1883} we will adjourn for twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:00 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 11:30 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Proceed, please.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Burnett, the last thing I raised with you was the question of the ability to benefit from some of these foreign loans to certain people who sat on the boards of some of the companies making the foreign arrangements. We do agree that that does include many directors of the banks on those boards, do we not?

A. I would suggest that if you examine the Board of Directors of all of the Canadian banks, Schedule A and Schedule B banks, that you would find represented on those boards nearly all of the —

THE COURT: Would you speak up, please, witness?

THE WITNESS: — of the chief executive officers of most of the major Canadian corporations.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Most of the major Canadian corporations having trading relationships with other countries, not domestic companies like small companies. {1883|1884}

A. Yes, there are large and small ones represented. Those who engage in international business and those whose business activities are confined to the domestic market. All are represented on the boards of these banks.

Q. Are you familiar with the quote from Vladimir Lenin in which says, "The capitalists would sell us the ropes with which we will hang them"?

A. I believe I may have heard that before.

Q. Do you think that the relationships of the banks in certainly in promoting the ability of communist companies to, shall we say, import with loans from Canadian banks actually has the effect of supporting those countries in those systems?

A. It obviously is of some economic benefits to those countries, or they wouldn't engage in that activity, but what I attempted to say earlier is, to suggest the refusal of Canadian banks or Canadian manufacturers or suppliers of those commodities, their goods or services, to sell into those markets would be naive, to suggest that you are going to deny them access to those goods, commodities or services.

Q. Why isn't it naive regarding South Africa, then?

A. South Africa, in the view of a number of Canadian companies, a number of Canadian banks and in the view of the — as evidenced in the United States now, the American government — represents a particular moral issue that has led these governments and financial institutions to the conclusion that they {1884|1885} prefer not to deal with them. They may also feel that these degrees of social unrest are such that it will ultimately result in some political and economic instability and thereby affect the creditworthiness of the loans; but I suggest that in the case of our own bank it is a moral posture that has been taken.

Q. In your case it is not a matter of practical concern for the ability to repay; it is a matter of morals.

A. We don't get to that second question because of our position on the first.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Are you aware of some of the sanctions applied by banks against sovereign countries for not being able to repay within time?

A. Do you want to name some specifics?

Q. I will. I suggest to you that the International Monetary Fund and certain banking syndicates have required countries to devalue their currencies. Is it true or false?

A. Yes.

Q. It is true?

A. Yes.

Q. They also have insisted, shall we say advised and encouraged increased taxes on consumer goods in some countries?

A. Yes.

Q. They have in the case of Argentina, in a meeting of the International Monetary Fund with the Minister of Finance of that country, laid down a series of economic measures which he, in fact, at a meeting agreed to. Are you aware of that? {1885|1886}

A. Yes.

Q. And he went home to his country and he was fired.

A. Yes.

Q. Because this country, at least, indicated that they felt it was interfering in their sovereignty.

A. I understand that the government of which he had formed a part was unwilling to accept the terms he had negotiated.

Q. And in the case of Egypt is it true that the International Monetary Fund has even directed the raising of the price of bread?

A. I am not aware of that detail.

Q. Is it true that the United States Government has assumed guarantees of interest payments on the loans to Poland to certain banks in the United States – in fact, I think two other banks, too; is that untrue?

A. Again, I am not familiar with those transactions.

Q. Let me put it to you. You are giving evidence as an expert and I recognize your expertise and I want to ask you a hypothetical question, if His Honour will permit me. Before you try to answer, maybe see if His Honour is prepared to accept this question.

I put it to you that if banks find defaults from countries such as Poland, and governments take over the payments, then the people, through their government, are subsidizing the banks' errors.

THE COURT: The witness can answer it if he can. {1886|1887}

THE WITNESS: Can I ask you to repeat that?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

A. Which people are subsidizing whom?

Q. Well, in the case of Poland, in the United States, I put it to you that the American government has now taken over and guaranteed the payment of interest on the loans of Poland.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Now, I suggest to you that —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, was there an answer there?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You are aware of that, aren't you, sir?

A. I had earlier said I wasn't familiar with that, but I don't deny that it is a fact.

Q. All right. Let me put it just as a hypothetical question that when these countries, be it a Latin American country, Poland, or a communist country, defaults, the government has two choices: to allow the bank to be in a position of massive insolvency, or to assume the liability themselves and pay it off. Right?

A. The government of the borrowing country, or the lending country?

Q. The lender country. The bank of the lender country. For example, your own situation – I am sure you would not be in a position of default of any loan, but if you were in a default to, say, Poland, just simply after several re-negotiations, said, "We are not able to pay", the bank, then, is either guaranteed by the government of Canada, which it is – right, today? Banks {1887|1888} are guaranteed by the Government of Canada, aren't they, in defaults?

A. No.

Q. They're not?

A. No.

Q. All right. But in the case of a default of that kind, doesn't the government have the responsibility to either take over the liability and pay the interest to the bank or watch the bank become insolvent?

A. Are we in Poland, or back in Canada now?

Q. No. The Canadian bank that you represent loans money to Poland. Right?

A. Correct.

Q. I suggest that Poland can't or won't pay, or Argentina or Mexico or Brazil; you are in serious trouble.

A. Because of the diversity of our portfolio, a default on that particular loan would not put the Royal Bank in serious difficulty. To suggest that the government of the lending country would come to the support of its lenders ...

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know of one situation where that has happened. So it's very, very hypothetical. And I suggest that before that would happen there are many steps that would have to be taken, that first of all there would be the capital resources of the bank itself would have to be —

Q. Yes. That's the reserves. {1888|1889}

A. The reserves and the capital base that form part of the capital base of the bank would be, first of all, there answerable, and the funding for that loan would be discharged out of revenues from other sources and out of that capital base. To suggest, as think you are – and correct me if I'm wrong – that the Government of Canada is going to come in and say to any of its major banks, "Okay. You're all right. Don't worry about that" – the fact that you aren't going to be repaid that loan is so hypothetical as to be just totally unrealistic. As you know, there is the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation that provides protection for depositors of the bank whose money is being used by the banks to fund loans wherever they may be.

Q. Well, wait a minute. I don't think we understand each other. I suggest to you that it's not depositors' money that's loaned. Do you agree?

A. No. I disagree entirely. If that is the postulation you are making, then it is totally incorrect.

Q. Well, you —

A. The major sources of the funds of the bank are, in order of their magnitude, are its deposit liabilities – deposits can be in a variety of forms, whether it's a chequing account, a savings account, a certificate of deposit or whatever, whatever form the bank may use to attract funds is a deposit, and it takes that fund; it has, first of all, its own capital base, equity paid in by its shareholders – and this is a constant daily process, shares are being issued and purchased by the public – you've got that capital base and then your {1889|1890} deposit base, longer term debentures that the bank, like any other institution, may issue, and then, on top of that comes your depositor liability base; and then you may borrow for shorter terms. We have commercial paper where you go in and borrow for sixty, ninety days; you borrow in a variety of means, a variety of techniques for a variety of periods and on a variety of terms; and you lend for a variety of terms and on a variety of conditions and at varying rates.

Q. So do I understand you to mean that the only required reserves are, for every dollar loaned you have to have a dollar on deposit; is that it?

A. No.

Q. That's right. I didn't think that's what you meant. What do you mean?

A. I never suggested that.

Q. No. I suggest that takes us back to what reserves are, and it comes to about five per cent.

A. Right. I guess on average.

Q. So you can loan, in fact, $20 for every dollar on deposit.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And that only applies to domestic loans; and foreign loans there are no reserve requirements.

A. Right.

Q. Right.

A. Except in the United States I pointed out.

Q. That's right. So when it comes to loans to countries like Poland, there are no reserves requirements, there are no deposit requirements either. {1890|1891} Right?

A. No deposit requirement, no.

Q. No reserve requirement.

A. No reserve requirement.

Q. So just where do you fund these loans from?

A. We fund them in a variety of means, in a variety of locations and at a variety of rates. If you'd like me to recite some of them ...

Q. I think – it might take a while, but you just generalized, and I am not going to argue about it.

A. There are a variety of markets. The money market is a commodity, it goes out —

Q. So it relies on markets in the United States and elsewhere?

A. Yes.

Q. It enters the commodity market?

A. To the extent that you accept my definition to money being a commodity, yes.

Q. And it can vary and fluctuate the value of the Canadian dollar, in fact.

A. No. No. I think – you mean the value of the Canadian dollar relative to other foreign currencies?

Q. That's what I meant, yes.

A. Those decisions are taken not by banks. Those decisions are taken by government.

Q. Do banks speculate in currency trends?

A. Speculate? {1891|1892}

Q. That's right.

A. They engage in currency transactions in a very sophisticated [sic] way. To suggest speculation, that there is a high element of risk in their foreign currency transactions, I think, would leave an entirely false impression.

Q. Now, in respect to financing of communist countries you, yourself, speak only of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. Do you consider those countries have more or less moral turpitude than South Africa?

A. I haven't formed a personal view.

Q. No, as a representative of the bank.

A. I don't know that the bank has formed a view on the issue of the relative morality of the manner in which these countries are governed.

Q. What about Argentina, has your bank got loans to Argentina?

A. We have a very large presence in Argentina.

Q. What does that mean? Is that a loan presence?

A. We have several branches, and we have a large loan portfolio in local currency, local deposits, funding, local loans, and we have sovereign risk loans, and we have private sector commercial loans in both local currency and in U.S. denominated transactions.

Q. Let me put it to you that in these loans you have thus described there are no reserve requirements.

Q. Although there are in Canada, for Canadian domestic loans.

A. Right.

Q. And let me put it to you —

A. No. No. No. For Canadian assets, or for Canadian liabilities.

Q. That's right. That's right. Now, what I am suggesting to you is, is there a significant difference to your loans in Argentina in another respect? You really can't be sure of foreclosing on the Argentine Government, but you can be sure of foreclosing on a farmer in Western Canada.

A. Well, I think — yes, that should be very clearly obvious.

Q. So it becomes a matter of —

A. But to suggest, however, that lenders to international or sovereign foreign states are without remedy and without security is a wrong impression, as well.

Q. Well, let me put to you the suggestion that the real security is that other banks are also very much concerned about their liabilities in that you protect each other in a network whereby if a government such as Argentina and Mexico defaulted, they wouldn't get loans anywhere else, and you could get them in economic chaos mighty quick.

A. That is hypothetically correct but, suggest, totally unrealistic.

Q. When it is hypothetically correct I suggest to you that the Argentine or any other government doesn't need to have someone tell them the consequences {1893|1894} of not coming to terms with you; they are not that stupid. Right?

A. It is, in these negotiations, the position of both parties is not disproportionately strong. They have very strong negotiating positions in terms of the dislocation to the whole international financial system, monetary system, that a default would cause and stimulate. They are not insensitive to that and they know that banks are not insensitive to that. So to suggest that the great, big, mean old banks are ganging up on these countries and telling them, "Increase the bread's high price to the poor and deny imports of medicine", or whatever you may suggest, is to, you know, totally distort the reality of what this whole process is all about.

Q. Well, this whole process is all about, I suggest to you, very obviously, power.

A. But it's power that I've suggested to you that is shared.

Q. It's an interdependent sort of situation, isn't it, because if the country defaults, the banks suffer, but it couldn't get loans elsewhere; and if a country pays, it still has to cope with its own citizens. Right?

A. If I can — I don't want to phrase it in the form of a question, but I would suggest that if you were to make a loan to someone and that loan were not repaid, you would be disinclined to continue lending to that person when you have options open to you where you can lend money and get repaid. So these sovereign states are not insensitive to this fact, either. {1894|1895}

Q. Isn't it true that it's entirely a matter of the discretion of the lender bank as to when they declare a loan which was an asset to be in default and become a liability?

A. No.

Q. What is the criterion for that?

A. I believe that there are now, in Canada, regulations imposed by the Inspector General of Banks that have to be uniformly applied by all banks. There was an inconsistency in the manner in which various banks treated that question, and I believe, and I may not be entirely correct, but the principle is there that if there has been no payment of interest for ninety days beyond the due date, then it has to be classified as a non-productive loan, and if there's been no interest or principle paid at the end of six months, then it has to be treated in a different manner, and I can't tell you that.

Q. Does that apply to loans to sovereign, foreign countries?

A. Not at the present time, although there is a —

Q. If it did —

A. — there is a tacit —

Q. If it did, it would be in default.

A. Well, being in default is merely a disclosure matter. It's not to suggest that a loan in default has to be written off. It is merely indicating to those who are interested in monitoring the income stream of the banks that that block of money is no longer generating income. {1895|1896}

Q. But it becomes a matter of discretion as to when you say that it can no longer and will not be paid; is that right? You can still hold out hope that it will be paid and call it an asset, meaning a loan, until such time as you decide to say, "Well, there's no hope", and then it becomes a liability.

A. Yes. What you disclose, make a disclosure that it is non-productive, and then the discretion is governed within some confines of reasonableness and sound accounting practices and what your independent auditors will require of you to disclose. So that the integrity of your balance sheet can go forward and support it by their certificate.

There have to be judgment calls with regard to commercial loans as well as sovereign risk loans. Argentina has been there for a long, long time, and it's expected to be there for a long, long time. Mexico was seen as an almost total disaster area five years ago, and today they have generated and declared a very positive foreign exchange trade balance, and it is the country which voluntarily agreed to observe some of the dictates of the International Monetary Fund.

Q. Dictates?

A. Well, the suggestions as to how they could stabilize their economy and regain the confidence of the International Monetary system. They have now moved into a position of a positive trade balance, significant trade balance, notwithstanding the decline in oil prices. And so where you might have been inclined to say five years ago loans to Mexico are just a disaster and should be written off, it would be just totally {1896|1897} unrealistic to have done so, and you have a legitimate expectation that what has occurred would occur. And now those loans could hardly be regarded as in jeopardy — enormous wealth of Brazil; they've got some liquidity problem; they've got exchange problem; they've got balance of payment problem, but the wealth of Brazil will be there for the next hundred years.

Q. And a lot of it will end up in the hands of the banks that loan them the money.

A. Some of it will, but a good portion of it will end up — most of it will end up being enjoyed by the people of Brazil who have received the support of the international banking community in the development of those resources which could not have occurred had the banks not joined in and supported and permitted that to happen.

Q. Let me suggest to you that if you are applying that to the nation of Mexico, it is, in fact, the case that those in the government who made the deals with the International Monetary Fund seem to be doing very well, but are you suggesting that the people benefitted?

A. I suggest to you that unless the economy of Mexico is returned to stability and successfully and properly operated, the people of Mexico have no hope of anything. And the degree to which two or three or so have thrived, I can offer no comment, I have no knowledge or information, and I suggest to you that when – the general level of economic activity in Mexico has increased and if you'd look at the per capita income in Mexico, there's been some significant increase throughout the past five {1897|1898} years.

Q. Are you a Mason?

A. No.

Q. Do you know how many members of your Board are masons?

A. No. It's not part of the qualification test that we put to nominees for presence on the board.

Q. Do you know how many of the machinery and industrial plants of the Soviet Union were financed by Western banks?

A. No.

Q. Do you think it possible that truck plants, motor plants, machine tool plants, chemical plants, atomic plants have been financed by Western banks in the Soviet Union?

A. Let's go down the list. I know that there has been an export of technology. I think Fiat entered into a deal that – where they exported technology, and perhaps some capital funds and capital equipment, machinery, to permit the manufacture of a small compact car in Russia, and I have forgotten the man's name ...

Q. What's the definition of a banker? Is that somebody who loans money at interest?

A. Well, a banker is one, I think, who is engaged in the business of banking, and what is the business of banking in this country is yet to be judicially determined.

Q. I suggest to you that a banker could be anybody who lends money. {1898|1899}

A. Well, if that's the definition you want to adopt then, you think the lending of money constitutes the business of banking, then can't quarrel with your decision to regard him —

Q. Let's not make it just my decision. Is there some legal definition of banker?

A. I suggest a banker is one who is engaged in the business of banking, and there is no legal definition of banking in Canada yet.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of Arnold Hammer?

A. Yes. That is the name I was trying to think.

Q. He financed various Soviet enterprises in the United States?

A. Yes, and some in Libya, I understand, and elsewhere.

Q. Are you familiar with the name Cyrus Eaton?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he a financier?

A. I believe he was.

Q. David Rockefeller a familiar name to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Has he got something to do with the Chase Manhattan Bank?

A. A great deal.

Q. And is international finance apart of his activity?

A. I would think so. {1899|1900}

Q. And Donald Kendall, are you familiar with him?

A. The Donald Kendall I know I doubt it's the one to whom you are referring. This one is the Treasurer of Northern Telecom.

Q. I see. Pardon me, then, it is a different one. I suggest to you that those persons – Arnold Hammer and Rockefeller – have participated in financial enterprises to the development of activities in the Soviet Union. Would you agree?

A. I wouldn't disagree.

Q. And again, your position is that dealing with the Soviet bloc countries is a matter of expediency because if you didn't, others would.

A. I didn't say it was a matter of expediency. I did say that to refuse to deal with communist countries predicated on the assumption that the needs of those countries were not going to be filled is naive.

Q. Would you agree that banks can create inflation by lending large sums of money?

A. I suppose they could.

Q. And can they also —

A. But to remember, inflation is a very complicated and difficult economic notion. And I, again, I don't want to presume to have any great knowledge of that, but inflation is, in one sense, a consequence of the supply of money.

Q. Well, isn't credit today one of the largest sources of money supply?

A. Credit today is a means of dis-{1900|1901}tributing the money supply. The money supply is a decision of central banks of the country that authorizes the issuance of the currency. The Bank of Canada will determine the amount of money supply, and the Treasurer, Mr. Volcker, and his allies will determine the money supply in the United States, and that is to bear some relationship between the goods and services that are available to which the money supply is to represent.

Q. So that's a decision made by, you call it, the central banks.

A. That's right. And you've seen in the past examples of conscious and deliberate policy decisions by central governments, central banks and governments to increase the supply of money which led to the inflationary cycles. The reasons for issuing the money, we were told, was to help finance the Vietnam War, and that these were not producing durable, capital goods and services. The money supply was out there and it meant that there were more dollars available than reflected the value of the goods and services that were produced. As a consequence, the relative worth of the commodity of the product in relation to the dollars dropped and the amount of dollars increased.

Q. To put it in simple terms, would you not agree that banks five years ago were lending a lot more money than they are now?

A. Yes.

Q. In Canada.

A. Yes, indeed. The demand for borrowing was much stronger five years ago.

Q. The price of things was rising then; {1901|1902} is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, the price of things are dropping, right?

A. Right.

Q. And the banks are asking for their money back at the rates that they lent it, plus interest, five years ago; right?

A. The banks do not escape the realities of change in economic conditions any more than the parties with whom they deal. They have been required, in many and most cases, to enter into negotiations with the borrowers to reschedule those things.

Remember, too – and it is very critical – that the big, bad banks borrow that money at rates of interest then extant, and they are still left with the burden of repaying that money that was borrowed.

Q. But didn't they lend $20 to —

THE COURT: Had you finished with your answer?

THE WITNESS: No.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. Go ahead.

A. And therefore, if the borrower is faced with the necessity of meeting those interest rates and terms entered into at that time in an inflationary period, so is the borrower, the bank, to its depositors [sic] who bought term certificates, bought debentures or whatever, at rates of ten, twelve – retirement savings plans, certificates, paid ten and twelve per cent. Those obligations remain.

Q. But isn't it true you loaned at the {1902|1903} rate of twenty to one on deposits?

A. Could have, yes.

Q. So although you might pay interest on deposit which is one dollar, you gain interest at that rate on twenty dollars loaned. True?

A. Mm-hmmm. But that interest, that money had to have been borrowed; it cannot exist if it hasn't been borrowed. How can we lend up to twenty times our deposits if we don't have the deposits?

Q. Because that's what the Bank Act says you can do.

A. That's the ratio of —

Q. Twenty to one.

A. Of deposits, to deposits. The loans you are suggesting can be, the liability can be twenty times the assets, can be twenty times the liabilities?

Q. That's right, because you are allowed to loan $20 for every dollar on reserve.

A. Where are you going to get that money to lend?

Q. You negotiate by virtue of previous loans.

A. No. No. Where do you get the money? Where do you get the money to hand over to the borrower?

Q. Well, when you are only —

A. You go out and you borrow it. It doesn't — this is not manufactured in the air. You borrow it.

Q. It's credit. It's credit, sir, I {1903|1904} suggest. And I am asking you whether it isn't true that, in fact, with one dollar on deposit you loan twenty dollars, it becomes an asset to you alone.

A. Yes.

Q. That's exactly right.

A. But where do we get the money?

Q. I suggest, frankly, sir, that you create it by loaning money more than you have on deposit, which the Bank Act says you can do, twenty times as much.

A. If you are a borrower, you are an oil company and you want funds with which to pay a drilling company, pay your own operating expenses and things of that sort and you say, "I want to borrow two million dollars", you want two million dollars; you don't want two million dollars that exists somewhere on my balance sheet. You need the two million dollars. Where do I get that two million dollars? I borrow it. I borrow it at better rates than you are able to borrow.

Q. Sir, I suggest to you that when the man gets the two million dollars he gets, usually, a cheque. He doesn't get cash. And all he does is turn around and deposit it and you pay certain bills out of it and he pays interest on it; but I suggest to you you didn't have two million dollars on deposit by necessity at any time; you only need to have one dollar for every twenty that you loan.

A. Well, where does — if that theory is correct, where does the money come from?

Q. By the issuing authorities' power to lend credit, sir. That's what I put to you, which is exactly what the banks have under the Bank Act. {1904|1905}

A. The money that is loaned by the bank is real money. The borrower takes that and pays his workmen in real money. He pays his suppliers in real money. That is real money. It's not notionally created.

Q. It's real currency.

A. Real currency or transformable in real currency if it is in real paper.

Q. I suggest to you if all those people who had money on deposit at any time went to claim it, you wouldn't have any money in the bank, sir.

A. Of course we would. We wouldn't be alive if we were sitting in the bank — it's out with the oil company, paying for his employees, paying for other useful economic activity that's going on.

Q. Twenty times as much as you had on deposit.

A. If you are suggesting that that is the case, I am asking you again to explain to me where that money came from.

Q. I'll answer you, sir, because you are asking me. It comes from the fact that when you issue a loan, you issue not currency but credit. And you are entitled to issue twenty times as much credit as you have on deposit; and in fact, it becomes an asset to the bank the minute you have a loan of the amount that you've loaned.

A. I suggest that you are mixing up some accounting notions with reality. Do you think that — you suggested that it was not real currency that was loaned or delivered into the hands of the ABC Oil Company; it wasn't real money, it was credit. {1905|1906}

Q. It was credit. It's not currency.

A. It's not currency, so then payday comes for the ABC Oil Company and what he gives to those people in those pay envelopes is not currency, it is credit. Is he giving them credit?

Q. It is a cheque, a credit on the bank.

A. It is a means of distribution of it.

Q. Yes.

A. But he could, and many do, coin it around, dollars, put them in an envelope and hand them to the employee. Are you suggesting that isn't real currency?

Q. When he does, no, that is real currency; but I am suggesting to you —

A. Well, where did it come from?

Q. I suggest to you that isn't one twentieth of all the transactions that go on. Eighty per cent of them are in the form of credit, cheques and other negotiable instruments. Do you disagree with that? People don't do massive transactions in currency, sir.

A. Of course.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, it seems to me that I am back in first year at University studying economics. Is there a point to all this, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am just suggesting that the banking institutions create money to credit, and that is what I am trying to establish.

THE COURT: Well, I think you can put that to the jury when your turn comes. Now, can we get back to something that is, perhaps, a little more {1906|1907} meaningful to the jury?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I put it to you, sir, that it's evil to create massive loans that in a depressed economy cannot be repaid so that the people who have taken those loans have to surrender their assets. Do you consider that reasonably fair?

A. I think it's extremely unfortunate for those who are caught in such situations.

Q. I put it to you —

A. I also suggest, though, that for you to suggest that the story ends there is a game, telling only half of the story, because what has been in the past loans freely and openly negotiated between people of equal bargaining strength in a competitive framework have, on occasion, been required to be renegotiated and converted from debt into equity, or the term of repayment changed, or the interest rate changed. The lender is not interested in having a farm, a house, a business; he wants that enterprise to continue, he wants to be repaid so that he can repay the obligations he has undertaken to fund that loan.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that when you say equal bargaining strength", it might apply when you are dealing with a foreign country, and it might apply with Dome Petroleum, but there is no reality to the suggestion of equal bargaining strength when you are dealing with the small debtors of this country.

A. That, sir, is incorrect.

Q. So they have —

A. It is a highly competitive market, and if you are witnessing what's happening in mortgage {1907|1908} rates, in the last: six weeks, you will see evidence of the competition between lending institutions and the impact —

Q. Do banks have vast wealth?

A. Vast wealth?

Q. Yes.

A. That's a definitional issue again. They are financially strong and stable.

Q. I put it to you that certainly the largest buildings in every city in Canada are banks; is that true — a sort of real indication of vast wealth?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me any bigger buildings in Toronto than banks?

A. Well, do the banks own those buildings, or do they occupy them?

Q. You tell me. You are the banker.

A. You made the assumption.

Q. Well, tell me the facts if it is a false assumption.

A. As far as I know, the banks do own — the Royal Bank of Canada, through a subsidiary does own the Royal Bank Tower. I don't know what the relationship is with regard to the Toronto Dominion and the Toronto Dominion Centre. I don't know what the relationship is with the Bank of Montreal and the First Canadian Place, and I don't know what the situation is with the Commerce and the Commerce Tower, but that's —

Q. Is that vast power as well? Would you say they have vast power at their disposal?

A. Of course they do, and very {1908|1909} responsibly administered.

Q. Yeah. Well, I put it to you that when it comes to, for example, the Royal Bank, the relationship of the Royal Bank to Canadian Pacific, is that there are four members of the Board of the Royal Bank on the Canadian Pacific Board. Right?

A. Four —

Q. Yes.

A. You mean four people who are directors of the Royal Bank are also directors of the Canadian Pacific?

Q. Right. Sinclair, Terry Pratt and —

A. The last is no longer on the board.

Q. The others were and are?

A. I think so.

Q. I suggest to you that the Canadian Pacific, it also has the directors from the Bank of Montreal on its board, and the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce on its board. Would you agree?

A. No, I wouldn't disagree. I would be surprised if it were otherwise. These are prominent business executives; those are people that you would want on your board.

Q. Would you say that would put them in a position of equal bargaining strength when it came to arranging matters of a financial nature as would be the case of an average farmer or businessman?

A. I don't think the presence on the board would make, have any impact whatsoever. The vast majority of the banking activities between large cor-~~{1909|1910}~~porations and the banks would be negotiated at a management level and would be in accord with market and competitive conditions.

Q. Would you agree that it's likely that the Soviet Government was given treasury fund from the Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve Bank and through the Chase Manhattan Bank to build the State Bank of the Soviet Union?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Is it the case that — you said something about the Vietnam War. Isn't it also true that at the same time banks were financing Eastern block countries who were munitions manufacturers in that same War?

A. I have no personal knowledge that they were financing the manufacture of weaponry for that War.

Q. Well, in the journal of the Vietnam War was the Royal Bank of Canada still loaning money to Yugoslavia, Rumania and Czechoslovakia and Poland?

A. That pre-dates my association with the bank. I have no personal knowledge.

Q. Well, is this a new development that monies are loaned to those countries?

THE COURT: You are not saying that as a matter of fact because you are reading from a book, are you? Do you intend to prove any of this?

MR. CHRISTIE: I intend to prove that this is the basis of my client's honest opinion.

THE COURT: Do you intend to prove what you just suggested from reading from a book that {1910|1911} there was the financing of a building in the Soviet Union, and that money from the United States of America financed the other side, in effect, in the Vietnam War? Do you intend to prove any of that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I intend to place before the jury

THE COURT: Do you intend to prove that by calling evidence? Yes or no?

MR. CHRISTIE: I intend to attempt to prove that by calling evidence, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Then proceed.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you think it likely that the Vietnam War was, in part, financed by funds loaned from Western banks to Eastern bloc countries?

A. I have no way of knowing. Lending on the part of Western banks of which I am familiar, during the time in which I have been involved in such transactions, have for the most part been for the purposes of financing trade or specific project financing of an infrastructural nature — airports, highways, ports and things of that kind, or to finance the sale of consumable products manufactured in Canada for which there may not have otherwise been a market.

Q. Is it your contention that banks do not have anything to do with the politics in those countries to which these loans are made?

A. Yes. It is also my contention that they have little or nothing to do with politics in Canada other than is permitted by and expected of good corporate citizens.

Q. Of course, that's unlimited, isn't {1911|1912} it? Any good corporate citizen can do as much as they like to influence politicians in this free society.

A. No, they couldn't. There are certain bounds of propriety. There are limitations on the contributions that can be — made in support of candidates and policies. They attempt, through, in the public forum, to help formulate public opinion in the direction of certain issues with the hope that government will be persuaded to the propriety and efficiency of those policies.

Q. Well, do you deny that the limits of influence, as far as donations are concerned, may be specified, but the amount of influence and inter-connection between the board of directors of banks and learned and distinguished politicians seems to be rather extensive? Would you agree?

A. No, I would not agree.

Q. What about John Turner and Brian Mulroney — did they sit on boards of banks?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You don't think so?

A. I know Turner did not sit on the board of a bank.

Q. Did he act for a bank?

A. His firm acted for a bank, acted for several banks.

Q. So you are just telling me that there was no connection of any kind between the political leaders of this country and banks other than just casual acquaintances.

A. I am saying that there was nothing {1912|1913} improper in the relationships of banks and the Government of Canada or the Province of Ontario. There are open and continuous dialogue between officials of the bank and officials of government, and that would be insensible for that not to be the case.

Q. Are you familiar with the reason why, in the currency of the United States, there appears a certain Freemasonic symbol?

A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with the Bank of Ambrosiano in Italy?

A. Very much so.

Q. Why?

A. Because of the dramatic events that surrounded its demise and —

Q. Was it a big bank?

A. Yes, it was a fairly substantial bank in Italy.

Q. Did it have anything to do with Masonry or secret societies?

A. It is alleged that that particular bank, it is alleged, was involved in some rightist movement. So it was one bank that clearly was involved in politics and was not interested in the support of communism. In fact, it is alleged it was attempting to prevent the spread of communism through some of its covert activities.

Q. And it is no longer a bank, is that it?

A. No. I believe that the bank still exists. The Italian parent company, the ownership has changed and the management of it has changed. Its {1913|1914} Luxembourg subsidiary is in the process of liquidation, and its Bahamian subsidiary is in the process of liquidation.

Q. You suggested earlier in answer to my questions that it was improper to suggest that banks created money out of nothing, right? Well, how do governments, then, create money?

A. They have the controls of the central banking system, and it is within their power to determine the amount of money that is to be created and distributed.

Q. So they loan it to you, then; is that your evidence?

A. No. No, they do not. They put it into circulation. They use the banking system as a means of distribution.

Q. Then how does the interest get attached to it?

A. Through Treasury Bill interest.

Q. Through what?

A. How does the interest get attached?

Q. Yeah. You say that the government simply creates money out of nothing, simply prints it; then how does it acquire interest? Because it certainly gets attached to interest or with interest when you loan.

A. Well, interest is the – I think, correct me if I am wrong, but interest is the reward attached to the assumption of risk in terms of the obligation to repay an obligation, and the rate of risk will determine the rate of interest.

Government itself has to borrow money {1914|1915} from time to time; it does so through the issuance of Government Bonds and through Treasury Bills for shorter term financing arrangements, and the rate that they have to pay to compete in the money market for that commodity money is what impacts on the rate of other borrowings that have to take place or do take place.

So that one who is in possession of the money and has the opportunity, and that is a depositor, that is a bank, have a number of choices open to them as to what they are going to do with that money. They can decide to put it in Treasury Bills at a relatively low rate of return; they can put it into equity stock at no rate of return but high expectations as to capital gains, or they can put it into one of now eighty-five competing banks and get a fixed, sure return on their money and feel comfortable that there has been no loss experienced there.

Q. You say the governments have to borrow money from time to time.

A. Yes.

Q. I thought you indicated they printed it.

A. Well, they have that option, too, but if they are wanting to keep the money control, the supply in control – because if they were not to do so you have a period of inflation ...

Q. So they borrow it from lenders such as large financial institutions?

A. They borrow it from dentists, doctors, mechanics, everybody.

A. [Q.] But the largest amount of it comes {1915|1916} from large financial institutions.

A. Not so.

Q. Not so?

A. Not so. I think the Government Bond issues would be very broadly distributed and held by people, Treasury Bill transactions ... I don't know if anybody has ever really analyzed these things, but it is an open market transaction.

Q. The largest purchaser [sic] of Treasury Bills, I suggest to you, are the large financial institutions such as the Chase Manhattan Bank, and if they decide not to buy Treasury Bills from Canada, the value of the Canadian dollar drops; is that true?

A. The value of the Canadian dollar drops, or the interest rate on the Treasury Bill goes up.

Q. That's right. Therefore the interest rates to all the banks go up and the economy would grind to a halt.

A. No. You have to put on the brakes. It doesn't follow that —

Q. You put on the brakes, shall we say.

A. No. If the interest rate on Treasury Bills was not such as would attract, if you say Chase Manhattan is the biggest buyer of Canadian Treasury Bills —

Q. I put that to you as the case.

A. I don't know whether that is true or not, but if it were so that they decided they were not going to buy and there were no other people prepared, or {1916|1917} institutions prepared to buy at that rate, then the rate goes up.

Q. Until we get a buyer.

A. Until we find a buyer, or until we decide that, well, there are other ways of financing. If the cost of Treasury Bills and short term financing is too expensive, then you look for other means of doing it. You take a longer term.

Q. What I am suggesting is that these financial interests who deal in great quantities of money such as we have been discussing really have control over the economy of countries like Canada and every other country in the world.

A. They have a very, very important, indispensable role to play in the operation of the economies of these countries, Canada included, but that they have with that a responsibility and a self interest to see that the economies of these countries, Canada included, are kept buoyant, and if they fail in the discharge of that mission, then the economies of these countries will be pulled down, but so will they. And why would they be motivated to do so?

Q. Well, let me put it to you simply that they wouldn't be too badly hurt by the fall of one country's economy, whereas they might if more than one collapsed. In other words, they can manipulate certain countries through that final control.

A. Certainly they are going to be more impacted with two than one, and three than two, but it is not in their self interest. And with respect to this, it seems irrational to suggest that they seem so {1917|1918} motivated.

Q. What I suggest is not that they are so motivated to destroy a country, but to put certain controls on that country to make it, shall we say, more productive, to repay them more capably.

A. It would impose, as a lender today in this city – I might say I am unwilling to lend to you today because of the manner in which you are conducting your business – the amount that you are taking out in salary, the amount that you are paying out in dividends, your existing debt structure is such that you cannot, on your own projected cash flow, meet your obligations as they fall due, and we would suggest to you that if you want x number of dollars from us on these terms, we would be prepared to lend them if these conditions were met; and if they are not met, then try some other lender.

Q. And if there is an International Monetary Fund, I suggest there isn't any other lender.

A. And if you are in that position I guess that is correct, but there are a lot of countries in the world who are just in the position of not being able to accept anything other than what the International Monetary Fund recommends, and there is a certain logical compulsion to what is being recommended in these things. When spending is exceeding revenues there is a distribution of wealth in the state that isn't there. It's ...

Q. So you blame the countries for overspending in their budgets.

A. I believe that the financial difficulties of a good many of these countries are attributable to a lot of factors, not the least of which {1918|1919} was the dramatic escalation of the price of oil in the last decade which brought a lot of smaller nations to their knees because of their need to import sources of energy not otherwise available to them, and that there were some governments told who entered into international borrowings to finance consumables, which is a politically more palatable thing to do than to face the need for the larger capital projects.

Q. Wasn't that very process encouraged by the lenders in order to create a financial dependency upon them?

A. Lenders don't want to create a financial dependency. They want a strong, self-sustaining borrower who is in the position to repay the money that they lend them.

Q. But isn't it the case that countries that have substantial resources such as oil are encouraged to borrow, by lenders such as your bank and others, because of the security of those assets, regardless of the present ability to repay?

A. No. These are the people who least need to borrow. They are generating their own wealth. Why would they borrow? Many of the Euro-dollar market is monies that were paid to those countries for these resources that now have to be recycled, and the London money market interbank offering has provided the mechanism; otherwise there would have been economic chaos the amount of U.S. dollars flowing into the Middle East.

Q. Otherwise it would have been supply and demand without monies borrowed, right?

A. What would be supply and demand? {1919|1920}

Q. Perhaps the price of oil might not have been able to be accomplished if it hadn't been for the fact that international financiers lent them the money to pay those prices, in fact encouraged that spiral, sir.

A. You are waiting for a response?

Q. I am indeed.

A. That if we had refused to lend money, we, the international financial community, refused to lend consumers who needed that money —
Q. Governments and consumer.

A. Yes. If we refused to lend them the money.

Q. Yes. Then the law of supply and demand would have taken effect and the price would not have risen as it did, because there would not have been buyers at those inflated prices.

A. It would have meant that those countries to whom you are referring would have been without.

Q. Or the people who supplied the oil would have had to lower their prices.

A. Provided the loans were not made to the major consumers of Middle East oil. Middle East oil was not consumed by Jamaica, it was not consumed by Mexico, not consumed by these smaller states, but it was the Western powers of Germany, France and the United States, and to a limited degree Canada, who were importing this oil and paying those prices.

Q. But it was not the result of the fact that money was loaned by international financiers that you acknowledged as loaned without reserve?

Q. I don't like to go back over the same ground, but let me just recapitulate what I understand from you, and that is that you acknowledge that the loans in Eurodollars and foreign loans are without reserves; these loans were made at times when you say inflated oil prices occurred.

A. No. I said that this is one of the difficulties in the —

THE COURT: A little louder, please.

THE WITNESS: One of the contributing causes to the economic difficulties now being experienced by a lot of small Third World countries was a consequence of this dramatic escalation in the cost of petroleum. You then suggested to me that the banks contributed to the increase in that price because we loaned the money to the borrower, or to the consumer, and if we hadn't done that they wouldn't have been able to pay the high price so the price would have gone down. And I suggested to you that the United States, Canada, Western Europe were not borrowing; they didn't come and borrow to purchase petroleum products. So your explanation just doesn't seem to be logically consistent.

The others, Third World nations, had no option. They had no choice but to say, "Look, we aren't going to import." We saw what happened in Jamaica last week when they increased the price to forty cents a gallon — the whole industry in jeopardy.

Q. So you are saying that the international financial exchange of wealth, shall we say, that the banks accomplished to finance purchases of oil benefitted Third World countries. {1921|1922}

A. No. They effected a recycling of those dollars. The monies were made available to governments and concerns elsewhere in the world to finance development, to finance, undertake industrial projects, to finance roads, to finance whatever, not just to buy oil. Those dollars were recycled through the international banking system. It worked well and fairly in an open, competitive market which had the effect of minimizing the spread between cost and earnings.

Q. And increasing debts throughout the world to the point where governments now cannot pay them; is that right?

A. In some instances, unquestionably, governments are having difficulty in meeting the obligation that they have, but the international banking community has demonstrated its sense of reality and its willingness and the necessity to re-negotiate the terms that were first entered into by people freely and openly in negotiation.

Q. Such re-negotiation as you described occurring with governments such as Argentina and Mexico.

A. Haiti, the Dominican Republic, whatever. There is a continuous process of dialogue.

Q. By laying down the economic rules under which these loans can be re-negotiated don't you think those dictates that you acknowledge have political effects, too?

A. Why, of course they do.

Q. Did they bring the left wing government in — {1922|1923}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, he is not through with his answer.

THE WITNESS: If, in the view of supposed experts or those who are being called upon to advance additional funds, the affairs of that independent nation are being conducted in a manner which I may analogize to the business in Metropolitan Toronto where it is clearly impossible for those states to meet the obligations that they are now willing to undertake in the course of these negotiations, or seeking from other lenders, if it is clear that they cannot meet these obligations it is — and the conditions necessary to demonstrate that there will be, in the longer term, an ability to repay monies that are borrowed, and if the imposition of those conditions requires the paying of some political price and some adjustment and making the government of that country answer to those political governments, have the responsibility of developing a political consensus [sic] within the country to accept these regimes, then that is something less, I suggest to you, than exercising political control over those countries.

Q. Whereas in a business in Toronto you might petition him into bankruptcy or put someone in charge of their business, I suggest that what you do in the countries we've mentioned is simply put pressure to change the government.

A. I suggest that that is totally without foundation, in fact, historically.

Q. It didn't happen in Argentina?

A. No.

Q. The Minister of Finance of Argentina {1923|1924} was not forced out of office by the dictates of the International Monetary Fund?

A. He was forced out of office by his government. His government was still in power.

Q. Yeah, because he wouldn't accept —

A. The government changed, but according to free election in accordance with their constitution. You can't name [blame] the dictates of the international banking community or the dictates of the International Monetary Fund. It was a change of government.

Q. May I suggest that certain changes in the Government of Poland have been brought about by the International Monetary Fund? Would you disagree?

A. I would disagree.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Just a couple of things, Mr. Burnett. Now, my friend asked you about — Mr. Christie asked you about merchant banks, if you will recall, and named some of those banks. If you will just have patience for a minute I will name some of those banks that you indicated that you were familiar with. I believe one was called Warburg. {1924|1925}

A. Yes.

Q. And there was one called Kuhn, Loeb. A couple of questions around that. First of all, do you have any — can you give us any information as to whether the Royal Bank has a merchant bank affiliate?

A. Yes, it does. A subsidiary, Orion Bank situated in London.

Q. And what about other major banks?

A. I'm not sure whether they have. I don't think they do.

Q. And did Mr. Christie exhaust the list of merchant banks when he named the half a dozen he did?

A. Oh, heavens, no. There must be hundreds of them of various sizes. Those are some of the most prominent and better known. He did not mention Solomon Brothers, and Leeman [Lehman] Brothers, and there are several others.

Q. And are you familiar with the management of some of those merchant banks that Mr. Christie mentioned?

A. Some of them. I had direct dealings with Warburg's, with Solomon Brothers, with Leeman [sic].

Q. And can you tell us if any or all of those banks are controlled by Jews?

A. I can tell you the people I was dealing with, some may have been of the Jewish persuasion or religion, I did not ask, but clearly the majority of the managing partners of these firms that I was dealing with did not appear, on the basis of name alone, to be of {1925|1926} the Jewish religion.

Q. Okay. Mr. Christie asked you whether you morally preferred Poland and Yugoslavia and Rumania over South Africa, and you responded to that.

A. Yeah.

Q. The next logical question is, do you prefer communist countries including those named as borrowers of your funds to capitalist, to Western countries?

A. I think we are far more comfortable with capitalists, far more comfortable with capitalist countries in Western Europe than in the Pacific and Latin America, Asia.

Q. And Mr. Christie mentioned some names of individuals to you. Armond [Armand] Hammer, Cyrus Eaton, David Rockefeller, and the last name you didn't recognize Donald Kendall, and he asked you whether they participated in financial enterprises for the development of the Soviet Union.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what financial institutions are behind those men? What financial institutions they work for?

A. David Rockefeller is the Chase Manhattan Bank.

Q. Is that a publicly owned bank?

A. Yes. But I think – it is publicly traded – I think the Rockefeller interests still have a very, very substantial interest in the bank.

Q. And does the Chase Manhattan Bank loan to others aside from Soviet Russia?

A. Oh, indeed it does. It is, in fact, {1926|1927} very active in Central and Latin America and is, in most of the loans in which we participate, is the lead bank in the syndicate lending to those countries.

Q. Cyrus Eaton.

A. He was – was he not from Eastern Canada, New Brunswick?

Q. I am asking you. I really don't –

A. Well, I have heard of the name. He, I understand, had made, amassed a very considerable personal fortune and then took up a number of causes and was freely and openly associated with people who were thought to have been of communist persuasion.

Q. Is Mr. Eaton connected with a bank? Does he own a bank or work for a bank?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And what about Armond [Armand] Hammer, is he connected with a financial institution?

A. Certainly not in Canada, and I would doubt if he were involved in any substantial way with any financial institution in the United States, although his, again, personal wealth is so considerable that he may very well own a bank.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. You may step down. Two thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Before I rise, your request {1927|1928} with respect to Mr. Tomaszewski's reference to the camp commandant, when he was incarcerated, told all the assembled prisoners that that camp was an extermination camp, I wanted you to give that plenty of thought before this afternoon, either tell the jury to ignore it or ...

What is your pleasure now that you have had some time?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have had time. I thought you were going to do it in your charge to the jury.

THE COURT: No. If I was going to do it, I will do it while it is still fresh in their minds. Do I tell them or not?

MR. CHRISTIE: May I have till after lunch?

THE COURT: You certainly may.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, what is your pleasure?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have concluded that {1928|1929} that evidence is inadmissible and that they should disregard that evidence, that it was hearsay. I think it would have been appropriate to do that as soon as it had happened, but in view of the fact that that did not happen, it should occur as soon as possible.

THE COURT: Thank you. Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:40 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you will recall yesterday or the day before that Chester Tomaszewski testified as a Crown witness.

During the course of his evidence, without being asked, he stated in his evidence that the commandant of the camp known as Mauthausen gave a speech to the assembled prisoners, informing that that camp was an extermination camp.

Members of the jury, you will please ignore that particular piece of evidence. It was hearsay and should be ignored by you and not considered at all by you.

Yes, go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

RENE DE GRACE, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. De Grace, can you tell us where you are employed, sir?

A. I am employed with the Canadian Red Cross Society as a National Director International Affairs.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, you are the Director of International Affairs?

A. The National Director International Affairs.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And can you tell us what relationship, if any, the Canadian Red Cross bears to the International Committee of the Red Cross?

A. Yes, I can. If you will allow me, maybe I could give you a definition of what the International Committee of the Red Cross is and how it fits into the Red Cross movement.

Q. Please do.

A. We do hear about the International Red Cross and we use it ourselves, but the International Red Cross is not an organization; it is a movement, and it is a movement composed of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of the Red Cross, and Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies.

The International Committee of the Red Cross is a private non-political institution composed of a maximum of twenty-five Swiss citizens. It acts as a neutral intermediary in humanitarian matters {1930|1931} during international conflicts, civil wars and international disturbances. It provides protection and assistance to both military and civilian victims, to prisoners of war and civilian detainees, to the war wounded, and to civilian populations in occupied or enemy territories. It also visits political detainees.

The International Committee of the Red Cross role during conflicts is defined in the four Geneva Conventions of 1949, and their additional protocols of 1977.

The International Committee of the Red Cross is responsible for promoting these international humanitarian laws and works for their development and world-wide dissemination.

The League of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies is the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. It co-ordinates the activities of these societies with the main objective of preventing and alleviating human suffering, and contributing to international understanding. The League encourages the creation of national societies in countries all over the world. It advises and assists national societies in the development of their services to the community. It organizes and co-ordinates international relief for victims of natural and man-made disasters, often launching world-wide appeals for aid. It also promotes the adoption of national disaster preparedness plans. The League is a liaison body of societies and acts as their spokesmen and representatives internationally.

Q. So there is a difference between the {1931|1932} League and the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and the International Committee of the Red Cross. Are you a member of the Committee of the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies? By "you", I mean Canada.

A. Yes. The League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies acts as a secretariat on behalf of 145 national societies, but all national societies are independent one from the other, and the League is independent from the National Society, and so is the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Q. Now, are you authorized to speak on behalf of the International Committee of the Red Cross?

A. No, I am not. And that is the reason why I wanted to clarify the fact that each and every body of the Red Cross are independent one from another. The only thing that links all these bodies together is a common goal – alleviating human suffering in natural disasters or manmade disasters.

Q. All right. Do you receive any correspondence or magazines or bulletins from the International Committee of the Red Cross?

A. Yes, we do. We do receive all publications that are produced by the International Committee of the Red Cross, or the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

Q. And what do you do with those publications that you receive from the International Committee of the Red Cross?

A. Well, at the National Office we do have a librarian where we keep a copy of each publication {1932|1933} issued by the International Committee of the Red Cross, or the League, or from other National Societies, and with these documents we disseminate copies of these documents to all of our divisions across the country.

Q. I am showing to you an enlarged word which says "Bulletin". Have you ever seen that document before?

A. Yes, I did. This is one of the regular bulletins that we are receiving. I saw it for the first time, I think, in June of 1984, but it was there in the library.

Q. All right. And who was this bulletin from?

A. This is from the International Committee of the Red Cross based in Geneva.

Q. And is there a date on there?

A. The date is 1st February, 1978.

Q. And can you tell us how often such a bulletin would come from the International Committee of the Red Cross?

A. I believe it is a monthly publication, but it comes in regularly.

Q. And you told us that all those publications you keep.

A. Yes, we do.

Q. A right. Now, I propose to enter that —

THE COURT: Have you seen that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know if I have. It hasn't been shown to me. It is not clear what my friend {1933|1934} is referring to.

THE COURT: Perhaps you should show it to him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder if my friend could refer to Your Honour under what section of the Canada Evidence Act he proposes to introduce this document.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Section 30, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is my understanding that s.30 is one of those sections that does require notice.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, would you excuse us for a few moments while we tackle this problem.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, this document was entered at the preliminary enquiry. Notice was given in that manner. There was also — and it hasn't been introduced yet, if I could see the exhibits from the preliminary inquiry, I believe there was a formal notice served as well as the factual notice given at the preliminary inquiry, and I am prepared to call evidence to this effect given by Sergeant John Luby, who is the {1934|1935} next witness. The notice is on the regular standard Metropolitan Toronto Police form which indicates that certain copies of and/or original books, records and documents, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, including the following: Certified copies of letters of incorporation for Samisdat Publishers Limited, Red Cross documents, Chambers Encyclopaedia, books entitled, "Under Two Dictators", "Adolf Hitler", other publications and writings.

THE COURT: That was served on whom?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That was served, Your Honour, I believe, on Mr. Zundel.

THE COURT: Yes. Would you please show that to Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I haven't seen this before. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. The Crown seeks to lead this evidence under s.30 (1), I assume. That is what I understood from my friend.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes.

THE COURT: I heard s.30. Is it subsection (1), Mr. Griffiths? {1935|1936}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I believe it would be under subsection (1), yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Of course, that is simply a matter of introducing evidence by document where otherwise oral evidence might be admissible. This document, for one thing, is originating from a source from which this witness is not qualified to speak. He has, apparently, received the document. I assume it is being tendered to prove the truth of the contents of that document.

For that reason, I would submit that neither is it admissible as an oral account of anything, because the witness, the person who made it, is not here, nor has notice been provided pursuant to s.30 or the requirements of the Canada Evidence Act referable [sic] to s.30 (1), because in the notice provided which preceded the preliminary hearing — I concede it says "and/or trial" — there is no specification of what particularly is meant. It says, "Red Cross document".

Now, it's my submission that to properly provide notice of the introduction of a document such as this, it should be sufficiently described to enable {1936|1937} the accused to be alerted in a reasonable and timely manner as to what document they are speaking about so, therefore, it could be challenged if need be, by either the calling of other evidence or subpoenaing other documents.

It's my submission that [the notice is therefore defective. The evidence itself introduces large elements of hearsay which otherwise would not be admissible orally without the witness who is making these statements present for cross-examination; and simply because it's a business record doesn't make it necessarily admissible unless the requirement of s.30 (1) is met; and the notice that is required, which I believe is referred to as reasonable notice and not less than fourteen days, I think also implies the specificity of the document itself should be included in the notice. Simply to say "Red Cross documents" by no means alerts us as to what is meant.

THE COURT: Was this document, Mr. Christie, put into the preliminary hearing?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's my understanding that having now seen what the Crown is tendering and having compared it from my file, it is a document that was {1937|1938} put in at the preliminary hearing.

It is my submission that nothing that was done by the Crown at the preliminary hearing has in any way bound the Crown, and I have been in receipt of no end of surprises as to the change from the Crown's case at the preliminary hearing, and I don't think, with respect to the fact that it was tendered there is any indication that it would be tendered here or that I should have assumed it would be tendered here.

THE COURT: Was there an objection taken to its use at the preliminary hearing as far as the record discloses?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't see any. No.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths? Sorry, are you finished?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I am. Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, the requirement for notice under s.30 (7) of the Canada Evidence Act indicates no set format that the notice must be given in – it simply must be a reasonable notice, and it should be for the Court to decide then what is reasonable notice; but at least seven days' notice, and there {1938|1939} have been two notices given, one in a formal document served on Mr. Zundel that Red Cross documents would be served, and second the introduction of that document at the preliminary inquiry – and indeed, a production of a copy of the document to the defence counsel, albeit a different defence counsel, at the preliminary inquiry.

As to the argument that my friend makes – I just simply suggest that notice is properly given here. It is my understanding that the argument my friend makes under s.30 (1) – and I do not have a case in Court, but if Your Honour gives me a half an hour I have it in my office – that the first phrase of s.30 (1) reads as follows:

"Where oral evidence in respect to the matter would be admissible in a legal proceeding ...".

That phrase has been judicially interpreted as meaning relevant, and nothing more. And I would submit —

THE COURT: May I see the document, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I submit that the document is relevant.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have the document {1939|1940} right here. Looking at it, Your Honour can see that my concern is that it makes editorial comment about the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and it calls it conspiratorial and specious, and such remarks as these, I suggest, are a matter of argument, but they are very much a part of the document.

Similarly, I suppose I could introduce opinions from a wide variety of sources on the subject of what the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is, but I suggest it introduces a high degree of prejudicial effect to the document.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, what type of document, as a matter of law, in your view, is contemplated by s.30 (1) of the Canada Evidence Act?

MR. GRIFFITHS: In my view, Your Honour, what is a record is included in the definitions provisions of s.30 as follows:

"Record" includes the whole or any part of any book, document, paper, card, tape or other thing on or in which information is written, recorded, stored or re-produced. Except for the purpose of ss. (3) or (4), any copy {1940|1941} or transcript received in evidence under this section pursuant to ss. (3) or (4) ..."

which definition, Your Honour, I would suggest includes this bulletin that Mr. De Grace has indicated he received in the usual and ordinary course of his business as International Director and stored in the usual and ordinary course of his business, and that that meets the requirements of s.30 (1).

THE COURT: Do you say that you have case law on the matter?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Down in my office, Your Honour, if I can have a half an hour. I can then put it in a more presentable form in presenting you with the case names. Grimba is set out in Martin's, Your Honour, and it stands at least in part for the propositions of Ontario County Court decisions – 58 C.C.C. (2d), 469.

THE COURT: 38 C.C.C.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, I'm sorry Your Honour. It's 38. That indicates that notwithstanding that there may be some hearsay information within a document, that the document can go to the truth of its contents, and it is for the jury to determine the weight {1941|1942} to be given to any document.

THE COURT: Yes. I'd appreciate your getting what law you have.

What I propose to do is to have this witness sworn on the voir dire. If, on consent, what he says now applies, that's fine. I would want to hear from Mr. Christie if he wants to cross-examine the witness. Perhaps he might want to do that. Then I will hear submissions. Do you really need half an hour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: What I have, Your Honour, frankly is a brief that was used – I have borrowed it – by Mr. Justice Hart in the documents case essentially involving Mr. Joe Burnett – no relationship to the gentleman this morning – in New Market, and I have both the Crown brief and defence brief which contains all the articles and the leading cases in the field of evidence.

THE COURT: There is no secret about it; Mr. Christie can see it too if he wishes?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. I haven't got an extra copy, but there is no secret to it.

THE COURT: Does this sound agreeable to you, Mr. Christie? {1942|1943}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: I think time might be saved if you gentlemen looked at what you have there, will full disclosure being made, and then we will decide that after.

If somebody wants to cross-examine now or examine further, that can be done, but I suggest a little later..

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I must confess that at the time I raised my objection I wasn't aware of the complexity of this rather involved legal issue.

My friend has given me a considerable volume of authority from another ongoing case that has no definitive ruling at the moment, but I am afraid, having seen and considered more extensively what I said earlier, there are some other matters that come to mind as reasons for the exclusion of this evidence, and I am specifically referring to the volume that my friend and I have agreed {1943|1944} we should both give to you, both the defence and the Crown's.

I have read the Crown side of the argument because there it is, whatever it is. A couple of points that I wanted to add is that from what I can see briefly, first of all it has to be a record made in the usual and ordinary course of business.

Now, this is a sort of editorial comment entitled, "False Propaganda" which refers to the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?". I don't think it could[ ] be said that this comes in the category such as was indicated in the case of Venner, where a nurse makes a chart which is looked upon as true. It is an involved editorial comment which goes much beyond what I say is an ordinary business record which I take to be true, because people are making them all the time, and they are not judgments, value judgments or things of that kind, or analysis [sic] of situations which gets a little more involved.

I note, too, that ss. (1) says:

"Nothing in this section renders admissible in evidence in any legal proceeding

(a) such part of any record as is {1944|1945} proved to be
(1) a record made in the course of investigation or inquiry ..."

— I think that could be a description of the document in question —

"... or

(2) a record made in the course of obtaining or giving legal advice or in contemplation of legal proceedings."

I think that's very close to what is involved in this document, but especially (4), skipping over (3):

"(4) a record of or alluding to a statement made by a person who is not, or if he were living and of sound mind would not be competent and compellable to disclose in the legal proceedings a matter disclosed in the record."

I think that this exclusion tries to give to the defence or anyone against whom such documents are tendered, the Crown as well, is the opportunity to test {1945|1946} with cross-examination the credibility of a document by, if they see fit to do so, calling the witness.

Here we are confronted with someone, I gather, who is either from Switzerland or someone from out of the country, author unknown, making value judgments about the essence of our case, making some rather derogatory remarks about the author of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" whose identity is unknown and who, presumably, is out of the country, because this comes from the International Committee in Geneva as it indicates, and he is, therefore, or she, I suppose, is not compellable in this country as a witness. They may be competent, but being identified, I suggest they would not be very compellable even if they lived in the country unless they were identified, and they certainly wouldn't be compellable outside of the country.

So I think that that creates a problem for the introduction of this evidence as well, because it involves an author whose statements are not open to cross-examination, far beyond what it would be assumed to be, I suggest, an ordinary business record whose identity is unknown and whose origin is probably quite likely out of the country, and therefore not compellable in this country. {1946|1947}

For those reasons I suggest – and I don't wish to go on any more about it – I would ask Your Honour to rule the document inadmissible.

I was directed to consider whether there was any mention of this at the preliminary hearing, and I see from page 151 of the first volume, when the subject came up, Mr. Griffiths presented this document and said, "Notice was served, Your Honour."

Miss Marshall said, "Excuse me, I haven't seen that. Sorry, Your Honour, I was given a one-page document." Mr. Griffiths: "I handed it to you, actually." Miss Marshall: "No objection to it being introduced for the purposes of the preliminary."

So I don't think that it's something we conceded in any way, and I certainly would object to it because of its highly prejudicial content, if for no other reason.

So Your Honour I would like to just thank my friend for producing these very extensive authorities, and I don't know what other to do than simply to give them back to him, and if Your Honour wishes, then you might consider them, or whatever is appropriate.

Thank you, sir. {1947|1947a}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

One of the reasons why I had these authorities in my office was – and I confess that I got them this morning, which is why I asked for a half an hour ...

THE COURT: I can understand that. I lived two decades in that type of life on the other side of the fence that you're on, but ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: ... is that I was anticipating a difficult argument on the admissibility of a movie that I have commented to Your Honour on, that I would be attempting to admit, and it would be under s.30 ultimately that I would be attempting to adduce the movie.

So that this issue, Your Honour, is one that is, I would suggest, worthwhile spending the time on because it's an issue that will arise again during the course of the trial.

MR. CHRISTIE: I could assist my friend by saying that I will be prepared to deal with that now, too, rather than waste any other occasion or time at another point, because I think what he means is this {1947a|1948} film, called, "Nazi Concentration Camps" – and I think he was going to prove that it was from the archives of the United States; I wouldn't dispute that – and so we could deal with it on that basis.

It's also part of the Nuremberg Trial record, so I could admit the fact that it would come from the archives of the United States, save my friend bringing someone from the archives of the United States, and then we can deal with that legal issue. I don't think I want to argue about whether it comes from the archives or not.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

If I could start with what my friend has said about the document, Your Honour, I will indicate, perhaps subject to Your Honour, that I would expect an archivist, Mr. Murphy – he is a gentleman I have been speaking to on the telephone – to tell about how the movie is kept, and it is really a very similar argument that I will be making.

THE COURT: Tell me this. Insofar as the movie is concerned, am I correct in assuming, if I may do that, that the movie has been kept for some years, it having been made some years ago? {1948|1949}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: It's been kept in the archives.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Do you intend to lead any evidence with respect to that movie, whether or not it was available generally speaking to members of the public?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Is there any documentation that is going to accompany the movie and the archivist?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, my understanding is, if I can indicate, that the National Archives in Washington, D.C., are differently constituted from the Public Archives of Canada in that there is a distinction made in the United States between the National Archives and the Library of Congress, and those two functions are combined in Canada under one roof.

In the United States the National Archives hold documents which it is required to hold by Federal Statute in the United States, have some historical or other significance to the United States.

This movie that my friend has mentioned {1949|1950} and that I intend to attempt to have admitted is a movie of approximately one hour length called, "Nazi Concentration Camps" which was shown as an exhibit at Nuremberg, International Military Tribunal hearings.

The archivist would have records to say that the original print that was seen at Nuremberg was then brought to the archives and has remained in the archives ever since.

THE COURT: In its pristine form?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. From that original print additional negatives have been copied, and those copies are for sale. So that the film, copies of the film are generally available. They are available in Toronto. But the original print is in the archives, and the original print will not be coming to Canada.

The archivist, I expect him to be saying that the movie that we will have here in Court is a true copy of what is being kept in the archives.

THE COURT: I don't know, gentlemen, whether the appropriate section to consider concerning the admissibility of the movie is the one that has been mentioned. There may be an issue with respect to whether or not the movie is a public document. I don't speculate. {1950|1951}

All I am suggesting is that the Bible says, first things first. The first thing that comes first is the matter of this Red Cross publication.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I'd just as soon hear about that and reserve any document and further comment concerning the movie to a separate application.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

My friend has raised three preliminary objections to the admissibility of the document, in addition to notice, and I have nothing further to say on notice.

First he suggests that, he questions whether this is a document which is kept in the usual and ordinary course of business, made in the usual and ordinary course of business. The evidence of Mr. De Grace is that this is a monthly bulletin that is put out every month, on a regular basis, by the International Committee of the Red Cross, and I would suggest that the evidence indicates that it is something that is made in the usual and ordinary course of business, that in the usual and ordinary course {1951|1952} of Mr. De Grace's business those documents are all kept and stored.

So both in terms of the International Committee and the Canadian National Red Cross, it's a document that they have in their hands in the usual and ordinary course of business. The date on the document, Your Honour, was, I believe, 1977, and —

THE COURT: 1978.

MR. GRIFFITHS: '78. This charge was brought in 1983, December, the information was first before the Court, and it refers to the years, I believe, 1981 and 1983. So that I would suggest that s.30 (10) (a) (i) does not apply. There was no investigation or inquiry going on into this matter at the time that the bulletin was produced.

As to subsection (2), which was the other one that my friend said – s.30 (10) (a) (ii), I will clarify that – a record made in the course of obtaining or giving legal advice or in contemplation of legal proceedings, I would suggest that solicitors' letters is what is being referred to, correspondence, usually, of a self-serving nature back and forth with a solicitor – this is not a document that falls within that category. {1952|1953} person who is not, or if he were living and of sound mind would not be competent and compellable to disclose in the legal proceeding a matter disclosed in the record – well, Mr. De Grace is certainly both competent and compellable in that he has made a record by storing all of these bulletins, and as such, he is competent and compellable here in Canada to testify as to a part of that record – namely, the bulletin from 1977 that's proposed.

I would suggest that the manner in which "competent and compellable" is used in that subsection is such as to exclude correspondence or documents as between husband and wife, but it is not, in my submission, referring to competent vis-a-vis somebody being in another territory. It is competent and compellable as specifically modified by the words that follow, to disclose in the legal proceeding a matter disclosed in the record. And simply, the International Committee and the Red Cross is competent to disclose in a legal proceeding, this legal proceeding, the matter disclosed.

Now, I indicated to Your Honour that I would refer you particularly to the case of R. v. Grimba {1953|1954} and Wilder, which was a decision

THE COURT: Yes, I've – read it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, Mr. Justice Callahan – and it is, I would suggest, helpful in this case in that it is a foreign document that is being introduced, being introduced by the record-holder or librarian, rather than the record maker – if the document is not simply an entry but contains an entry such as a nurse's chart; or punching in a time clock, but there are fingerprints in that report and the fingerprints were identified as belonging to a particular man, Mr. Justice Callahan ruled that both parts of that – both the fingerprints and the reference to the particular man that the fingerprint came from, would be admissible in evidence for the truth of their content to be weighed by the juror.

I would also refer Your Honour to a work called, "Documentary Evidence in Canada".

THE COURT: I have it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: By Mr. Ewert, and for the record, Your Honour, that is Carswell Legal Publications 1984, and I am particularly concerned with pages 82 and following which give an overview of s.30, and then, {1954|1955} commencing on page 94 –

THE COURT: Why don't you go back to page 93 and let me have your views on section 5, in respect to the matter, is opinion admissible? You see, as I see the issue –

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am obliged for Your Honour's direction.

THE COURT: As I see the issue, the issue is whether or not when you come right down to it, whether or not this is a similar situation to Grimba wherein fingerprints are obviously kept by the police department in the course of their daily activity and business.

We all know that, of course, they are. I think you will agree that the object of all of this legislation is to admit into Court evidence of the hearsay nature which is considered to be reliable.

Do you agree with that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: The best test of reliability is whether or not the subject matter of the evidence per se has been recorded as a matter of ordinary course in the usual course of business on a daily or at least a periodic basis. That gives the aura of reliability to evidence {1955|1956} which would otherwise have to be proven by going to a lot of trouble to call a lot of clerks to say, "Yes, I made that entry in that book of account", for example.

Is a rebuttal opinion in a Red Cross Bulletin rebutting and branding, "Did Six Million Really Die?" as propaganda something that is made as an entry in the ordinary course of business? The entry itself I am talking about, not the bulletin. Or, in the alternative, is it something that is not made in the ordinary course of business? That is what I would like to know.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I see the distinction, Your Honour.

Leaving aside the editorial comments around the information that's provided in the bulletin, the bulletin categorically states that it did not keep statistics, and its responsibilities during World War II and other times is to care for refugees, not to count bodies, living or dead.

Now, that core of information, Your Honour, is information that comes from not opinion but the usual and ordinary course of business.

THE COURT: Yes. That's the substance of why the Crown wants it in. {1956|1957}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And if Your Honour is of the view that the other matters or opinions expressed in that article or bulletin – and there are many other articles in that bulletin as well – is that the prejudicial effect is outweighed by the probative value without saying whether or not it is relevant, then I would suggest it is open to the Court also to edit out those portions of the document that are inappropriate.

THE COURT: I gather this is the first page only that you are interested in.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour, but I am particularly interested in the further paragraph –

THE COURT: Let me see that, please. Would both counsel agree that the jury has been sitting in that room long enough and they can be sent home?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

— The jury is dismissed until 9:30 a.m., January 30, 1985.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And since a record is {1957|1958} admissible, if the other criteria are met under section 30, in whole or in part, then I would submit that it would be open to the Crown to have Mr. De Grace read the fourth paragraph of that bulletin without making – reference to the other matters contained in the bulletin.

THE COURT: I don't know the answer to this, of course; I am asking you; I am certainly not suggesting. Is Mr. De Grace a person who, in the ordinary course of his duties, is part of the Secretariat of the International Committee of the Red Cross?

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is not, sir. And he quite specifically, as I understand it, as he testified, is not empowered to speak on their behalf.

My understanding, because of the neutrality of the International Committee of the Red Cross, you never know what country may be involved in a conflict, they guard their neutrality carefully, and as a policy they do not appear in court or take sides in issues.

THE COURT: So I gather your position is that your focus, if I can use that term, is on one paragraph on the first page of the bulletin which, in itself, is issued, as you say, in the ordinary course of business {1958|1959} of the International Red Cross on a periodic basis.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. It is issued by them and kept in the ordinary course of Mr. De Grace's business.

THE COURT: You are of the view that subject to my approval and, obviously, from what I hear from Mr. Christie, that if this one paragraph went in, that would be satisfactory to the Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: On an edited basis.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: What jurisdiction do I have as the presiding trial judge to edit a document such as this?

I am aware of my jurisdiction in the case of inculpatory/exculpatory statements made by accused persons to other persons in authority. What jurisdiction do I have in this regard to do that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would suggest, Your Honour, that there a number of places within s. 30 where the Court is given discretion to act, and if I may just have Your Honour's indulgence for a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Subsection (6), Your Honour, "Receive any evidence in respect thereof, orally or by affidavit, including evidence as to the circumstances in which the information contained in the record was written, recorded, stored or reproduced, and draw any reasonable inference from the former content of the report".

THE COURT: Where does that say I can edit?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I think, Your Honour, where it says, "Receive any evidence in respect thereof", that you can receive any part of the evidence, anything, Your Honour, that I would suggest to you – the Crown is not seeking to introduce as evidence in this trial that entire bulletin which contains a great many issues, or speaks to many things but has no relevance to this trial whatsoever and therefore it would be excluded under s.30 (1) ...

THE COURT: Well, it's a very novel point. It is an interesting point.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I indicate to you that the only part of this document that the Crown is seeking to introduce by way of documentary evidence is {1960|1961} the fourth paragraph, then I would suggest that that's the only part that Your Honour would have to consider. And I would amend, I guess, my earlier application and limit the production of the document to just the fourth paragraph.

I have a file, Your Honour, of correspondence, thirty pieces of correspondence, only one of which I wish to put into evidence. I don't see that the Crown is required to put all thirty pieces of correspondence before the jury, only the one —

THE COURT: I don't know that you'd get any argument from the defence on that point. You might, depending on the argument, but I can see your point in that.

All right. I am interrupting a lot. What else is there?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I think those would be my comments, unless Your Honour – I am obliged for the interruptions, Your Honour, because you did direct me to those matters which are of concern. There are a number of other cases, but in fairness – that I can refer to – but in fairness I think most of them would be referable [sic] to business entries and/or files of correspondence.

THE COURT: You referred me to Ewart. {1961|1962} What were the page numbers again?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, it starts on page 82, an overview of s.30, and the progress of s.30, and I would refer you right through to the end of page 110, at which the author starts, "In consideration of the uniform evidence rules", but up to 110; he takes apart the section, subsection by subsection and phrase by phrase and analyzes it, and in the analysis of Mr. Ewart the section should be given broad interpretation and I am obviously generalizing. There is a great deal more than I have indicated.

Subject to my friend, I have those parts of Ewart in this brief, Your Honour, that I have referred you to. The Grimba case is not here. Your Honour has that. May I have the citation for that case?

THE COURT: Grimba, 38 C.C.C. (2d), 469.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And it is contained in the defence material from the case of R. and Burnett. I'm sorry to put such a heavy burden on you.

THE COURT: Not what you would call light reading for the evening.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Griffiths. {1962|1963} Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: If I can just briefly reply to a couple of points my friend made, he covered a great deal of ground here, but one of the things he said is that Mr. De Grace is competent and compellable, and he has seemed to suggest that perhaps that would be sufficient.

Subsection (iv) of (10) (a) refers to a record of or alluding to a statement made by a person who is not, etcetera. I think the operative words are that it must be the person who must be the record who is either living and of sound mind and compellable, and the International Red Cross, of course, is not here.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And in fairness, won't be here.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can see a significant distinction between Venner and the case of fingerprint documentary evidence which would be recorded as ordinary course of business, but I think what this attempts to do, if I may, is to, for example, it is quite consistent with, if it was a newspaper business and their ordinary course of business is to publish a newspaper which apparently the Red Cross International seem to do, monthly, would that {1963|1964} make the contents of the newspaper a business record?

I suggest that is stretching the definition of "business record" further than the section contemplates.

The suggestion of editing alluded to s.(6) I think is a misinterpretation of the section, because if I understand it correctly it is simply a section which enables the Crown to introduce, and I quote, "For the purpose of determining whether any provision of this section applies, oral evidence as to the circumstances in which the information contained in the record was written, recorded, stored or reproduced."

That simply can be done by affidavit or by oral evidence demonstrating, "Yes, this is a copy of a regular record". I don't think it was ever designed, subsection (6), to enable the Court to receive any evidence, meaning some and not all, and thereby to edit. I would be rather opposed to the editing of this thing at all, because it does take it out of context to say the ICRC wishes to disassociate itself – I am paraphrasing here – from statistics of the kind which are being falsely attributed to it.

The only relevance of such a statement {1964|1965} would have to be that somehow or other false statements are being attributed by someone, and presumably by the booklet. I can't say how any other relevance can be attributed to it.

THE COURT: I'm sorry to interrupt you, but I might save you some time. If the item is going to be edited, the false attribution part certainly would not be part of it.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. My difficulty is that I would have to – and I am prepared to dispute this statement of fact here – I would normally say, "Well, produce the person. I would like to cross-examine the person who says this." And I have here a document called, "Number of the Victims of Nationalist Socialist Persecution" which originates with the same ICRC, and I'd ask the witness – put this document and ask him if the National Tracing Service originates this.

If the method proposed by the Crown, can be followed, I would not be allowed to do that, because Mr. De Grace will say, "I don't know. I don't come from the International Tracing Service and I don't even come from the ICRC." That, I suggest, is the result of introducing this kind of hearsay where I cannot compel {1965|1966} someone to come forward and testify to the truth of their statement which normally, if it was an ordinary business record, being as it usually is, true and accurate, no one would ever want to do, but the right seems to be there. So that I could, if I thought, Well, it's not his fingerprint", for example, or, "The nurse's record is wrong" — I recall the nurses in Venor were available in the Court and nobody called them because the record must have been right, but here I am saying you have sort of a statement factually unchallengeable, because we don't have the right to compel the witness to verify.

It is effectively hearsay in that way, I should think. It should not be admitted in an edited or other form.

Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, if I could just, one last thing, Mr. Christie has the right of last reply, but ...

THE COURT: Well, that's not a hard and fast rule. You can go last.

MR. GRIFFITHS: In terms of Your Honour's right to edit, if I can indicate that that would be a request of the Crown that I am only putting in that {1966|1967} part of the document. It is not something that I am asking the Court to impose; it is something that I am submitting is only a part of the document, and as such, it would come within the definition of "record" in s.30, which is said to include the whole or any part of any book, document, etcetera. A part of the document is also a record.

THE COURT: Madam Clerk, would you mark that with a lettered number for identification, please.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: This motion concerns the Crown's application to introduce into evidence before the jury a paragraph or extract from a document known as the Red Cross Bulletin No. 25, dated 1st of February, 1978.

The document is tendered through the witness, Rene De Grace, who has testified that he is a member of the Secretariat in Canada for the International Red Cross Committee and Red Crescent Committee.

The unnamed author of the bulletin lives in Geneva, Switzerland. It is not further identified. The inference to be drawn from the evidence of Mr. De Grace, however, is that the author of the bulletin is an official with the Committee of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent.

Crown counsel has stated in clear terms to the Court that the author of the bulletin does not intend to be present by reason of the policy of the Red Cross not to become involved in litigation of any kind, for obvious reasons.

In this trial the accused, Ernst Zundel, faces charges in an indictment containing two counts alleging that he published false statements or false news, pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. {1968|1969}

One of the two counts alleges publication of a statement in the form of a soft-cover book or booklet, or article, entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?". That document is Exhibit No. 1. Contained within that exhibit there is a specific passage specifying the version of the author of that document.

A number of Jews were said to have perished at the hands of the Nazis during World War II. That reference in the exhibit concerning the number who perished purports to support itself by making reference to the figures said to have been provided by the International Red Cross.

The wording in the document speaks for itself. It is an exhibit before the Court. I do not intend, in these reasons, to elaborate any further in specifics in that regard.

Bulletin No. 25, dated the 1st of February, 1978, on the first page of several, reads as follows – and I intend to read the first page in full:

At the top of the bulletin there are a number of initials, and a full heading. The English version is, "The International Committee of the Red Cross". The same title phrase is used in a number of other {1969|1970} languages. The well-known, universally recognized trade mark of the Red Cross is stamped in the upper lefthand corner beside the words, in large letters, "Bulletin". Directly underneath are the words, underlined, "False Propaganda". On the left of the bulletin is stated, "ICRC Bulletin No. 25", under which is written a date, "1 February 1978". Directly below that is the word, "Contents", and below that appears to be a general index of the contents of the total bulletin.

The message, if I can use that term, on the front page, reads as follows:

"A machination initiated years ago has gone so far that the ICRC is now entangled in its mesh. Its object is to whitewash the National Socialist system in wartime Germany of the accusation of genocide. It is nurtured essentially by the controversy about the actual number of victims, statistics wrongly attributed to the 'International Red Cross' and quotations – distorted or truncated – from the report of the ICRC on its activities {1970|1971} during the Second World War.

The conspiracy's munitions today are a couple of specious pamphlets entitled 'The Myth of the Six Million' and 'Did Six Million Really Die?'.

This propaganda is having some effect. More and more readers of these pamphlets write to the ICRC, most of them in the hope that they will receive confirmation of their opinion that after the war Germany was the victim of a smear campaign.

Consequently the ICRC considers it must make clear the fact that it has never published – or even compiled statistics of this kind which are being falsely attributed to it. The work of the ICRC is to help war victims, not to count them. In any case, how could its delegates have obtained data for such statistics? They were able to enter only a few concentration camps, and then only in {1971|1972} the final days of the war. Everything the ICRC tried to do for the inmates of those camps, and what it finally managed to do, is related in its report entitled 'The Work of the ICRC for Civilian Detainees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945' (available in English, French and German). The same propaganda scheme has recently been making use of other figures, namely the number of deaths recorded by the International Tracing Service on the basis of documents found when the ..."

and then, in brackets, "Continued on page 2", and below that are the words:

"This Bulletin is published by the Press and Information Division of the ICRC. The texts have no official character, and may be freely reproduced."

Below that are the words:

"Prepared and published by the Press {1972|1973} And Information Division of the ICRC, 17, avenue de la Paix, 1211 Geneva" and the telephone number and telex number.

The document in its entirety is now Exhibit "O" for identification in this trial.

I make it clear at this point that counsel for the Crown takes the position that the Crown seeks only to introduce into the record, if permitted to do so, the large paragraph being the third paragraph from the top.

Mr. Griffiths, counsel for the Crown, as I understand his position, states that what he proposes to introduce into evidence pertains to the International Red Cross never having compiled statistics of this kind and never having published statistics of this kind.

Crown counsel seeks the admission of that paragraph pursuant to s.30 (1) of the Canada Evidence Act. That subsection reads as follows:

"Where oral evidence in respect of a matter would be admissible in a legal proceeding, a record made in {1973|1974} the usual and ordinary course of business that contains information in respect of that matter is admissible in evidence under this section in the legal proceeding upon production of the record."

Mr. De Grace has sworn that inter alia the International Red Cross is a movement composed of several autonomous parts. That is the effect I took of his evidence.

Non-political, non-sectarian in nature, and having as its sole essential object the relief of human suffering, the International Red Cross Committee is a body that co-ordinates and administers, with the help of Mr. De Grace and others in the Canadian secretariat, various parts of that far-flung world organization.

In that regard, the Committee, in the co-ordinating and in the discharge of its duty to disseminate current information to its many parts, issues this monthly bulletin. It has done so over some years. That document is received by its members and adherents and is kept, according to the evidence of Mr. De Grace, ordinarily in the library of its offices {1974|1975} as they exist in this country.

A perusal of the document makes it clear that the bulletin, a monthly publication, makes comment upon and communicates information on a variety of differing subjects on a periodic basis.

This document, on consent of the then defence counsel, was admitted into evidence at the preliminary hearing of Mr Zundel. The document was admitted at the preliminary hearing, as have heard from Mr. Christie, with the consent of Mr. Zundel's then counsel "for the purpose" of the preliminary hearing.

Mr. Christie has primarily taken objection to the admissibility of this particular paragraph contained in the bulletin by reason of the fact that he has received either no notice of the Crown's intention to produce it or, in the alternative, he has received insufficient notice of Crown's intention to produce it.

I have seen the notice of intention to produce the documents in evidence, which I find were served on Mr. Zundel a long time ago. That notice of intention produced did not specify the identity of all of the documents in question. However it made, in my review, sufficient {1975|1976} reference to the documents the Crown intended to lead contained within the confines of the notice either at trial or at the preliminary hearing.

As I say, that document was served on the accused before the preliminary hearing. It sufficiently made identification of documents from the Red Cross that the Crown intended to produce. I find the notice was timely.

I have not heard from the defence any specific complaint of actual prejudice to the defence in any event other than a general complaint about the sufficiency of the notice itself.

His Honour Judge Frank Callahan (as he then was) in the case of R. v.

Grimba and Wilder, had occasion to consider this section in a criminal trial over which he presided in 1977. The citation is 38 C.C.C. (2d) 469. In that decision the learned trial Judge held that records of a fingerprint or fingerprints of one of the accused held by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States, which he held to be a business record, were admissible. He held that the F.B.I., if I can use that term, was a business within the meaning of s.30 (12) of the Canada Evidence Act. That section reads {1976|1977} as follows:

"Business' means any business, profession, trade, calling, manufacture or undertaking of any kind carried on in Canada or elsewhere whether for profit or otherwise, including any activity or operation carried on or performed in Canada or elsewhere by any government, by any department, branch, board, commission or agency of any government, by any court or other tribunal or by any other body or authority performing a function of government."

I adopt the reasons of the learned Judge on this point and hold that the International Red Cross, Red Crescent Committee is a business being an undertaking and being non-profit within the meaning of s.30 (12) of the Canada Evidence Act.

The proposed evidence that the Red Cross has never published or even maintained final statistics of the kind in question, if held to be admissible, is certainly relevant to an issue this jury must decide {1977|1978} in this trial. It is capable of rebutting as false the statement of the figures contained in Exhibit 1 wherein the Red Cross is purportedly employed to buttress or support the publication the accused has admitted he made alleging, in effect, six million Jews did not die at the hands of the Nazis in World War II.

Without question, if the author of the bulletin, per se, were here to testify in person as a Crown witness, he would be permitted to say that the Red Cross does not publish figures of this kind and has never compiled figures of this kind.

These facts are, however, from the mouth of Mr. De Grace, hearsay and inadmissible unless they are admissible under s.30 of the Canada Evidence Act.

Mr. Christie has further taken objection to the admissibility in this manner of this proposed extract from the bulletin in question to support its contention.

He has submitted that s.30 (10) or its various subsections operate against admissibility.

I find there is no substance in law {1978|1979} to his contentions with respect to that particular submission. I find that with respect to Mr. Christie. Mr. Christie, however, has correctly touched the issue that I must decide.

In essence, as I understand his submission, defence takes the position that the written information contained in the subject paragraph of the bulletin is not kept in the ordinary course of business because it consists of a value judgment concerning Exhibit 1, which is one of the very important subject matters of this trial. It is an insertion in a bulletin issued by the Red Cross in Geneva on a one-occasion basis only. It is not something that is habitually recorded or placed in a document by reason of a duty incumbent upon the person who created the words contained in the confines of the bulletin itself.

I am reminded that a trial Judge in the R. v. Grimba and Wilder case was dealing with fingerprints, which police departments are likely to keep as a duty and which habitually they keep and to which they habitually refer virtually on a day-to-day, hour-to-hour basis, thereby assuring the accuracy of the contents of the fingerprint file that they must keep in order to {1979|1980} discharge the duties of police officers. These, in the submission of the defence, are far different than a one-insertion record such as the one with which I now deal.

His Honour Judge Callahan, at page 471 of the Grimba decision, in part, had the following to say:

"I had the benefit of extensive articulate and learned argument which underlined for me the difficulty of this particular ruling having regard to the wording of the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act.

Section 30 was placed into the Canada Evidence Act in 1968. It would appear that the rational behind the section for admitting a form of hear- say evidence is the inherent circumstantial guarantee of accuracy which one would find in a business context from records which are relied upon in the day-to-day affairs of individual businesses and which are subject to frequent testing and cross-checking. {1980|1981} Records thus systematically stored, produced and regularly relied upon should, it would appear under s.30, not be barred from this Court's consideration simply because they contain hearsay or double-hearsay. However, before they qualify under that section, the provisions of s.30 must be strictly complied with. (See R. v. Mudie (1974) 20 C.C.C. (2d) 262 at 266)."

In a civil case, Mr. Justice Griffiths of the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the case of Satak Computers v. Boros, 15 O.R. (2d) 750 quoted Mr. Justice Moran in another case at page 757. I hasten to add that I am well aware that Mr. Justice Griffiths, in the Satak case, was dealing with s.36 of the Ontario Evidence Act and not s.30 of the Canada Evidence Act. I am also aware that he was dealing with an issue of admissibility, the same subject of which I deal, but nevertheless in a civil case.

I have had the opportunity of perusing s.36 of the Ontario Evidence Act. If anything, this Act {1981|1982} is more rigorous in its application concerning admissibility and against admissibility than s.30 of the Canada Evidence Act. There is one further requirement in the Provincial Act that is not required in the Canada Evidence Act.

The quotation from Mr. Justice Morand is as follows:

"By this amendment it appears clear to me that the legislature intended to allow in evidence certain matters which could not be admissible without calling the witnesses to prove each particular item in the record, and I am bearing in mind that this section would cover such diverse things as, perhaps, pages and packages of stock brokers dealing with a client, pages of a credit company's business affairs, perhaps pages and pages of records of one of the big stores in the community where the records might have been made by as many as twenty or thirty different people, {1982|1983} and in the ordinary course perhaps we would have had to call all these people to make that record admissible."

So clearly, I think, this section must mean that what would normally be considered hearsay with the Court, that is, a record, may be admitted without calling the person who made the record."

Mr. Justice Griffiths appears, from my reading of his decision, to have been of the view that the approach of the American authorities, and indeed, the approach that I respectfully view as his finding, has been to treat similar statutes as remedial.

He then went on to say on page 757:

"Obviously, the 'true intent and meaning and spirit' should only be obtained from the language employed by the legislature. In my view, if the writings and records offered in evidence fall within the broad wording of s.36 and satisfy the criteria of all that {1983|1984} section, then they should be admitted even if they do not fall into the category of business records such as accounts, payroll records and other routine commercial records at which the legislation was primarily but obviously not exclusively aimed."

It seems to me that the object of Parliament, and indeed the object of the decided case law, is to ensure that the evidence proposed to be called, without calling the author of the item in question, if admitted, and without being cleansed and tested by cross-examination must, in the discretion of the presiding judicial officer, be evidence that is at the very least reliable.

Section 30 of the Canada Evidence Act was intended by Parliament to facilitate the admission of such evidence, provided its reliability is assured by reason of all of the circumstances under which the record itself was created, and provided that it is a record that was made in the ordinary course of business.

Surely that principle, and for those {1984|1985} reasons, Parliament has required that a document of this kind, indeed, be created in the ordinary course of business.

The case of Grimba deals with fingerprints. Satak Computers dealt with minutes of meetings of corporate personnel. The case of R v. Anthes Business Forms Limited and Eleven Other Corporations, 26 C.C.C. (2d) 349 admitted at trial correspondence, as I read the decision, not only of the employees who were at meetings and the like of the accused corporation, it also admitted correspondence and other documents of that nature by personnel and servants of another corporation. The objection to the admission of that evidence was taken, as I understand it, to the Ontario Court of Appeal, but was not given effect to. To decide this important issue, I must look at all of the circumstances and background under which this bulletin, and particularly the paragraph in question, was created.

It was created, obviously, and there is no reason to doubt it, in 1978. That predated this prosecution by a very substantial period of time. Clearly in 1978 no charges faced Mr. Zundel.

The paragraph in question was intended {1985|1986} by its author, obviously, to notify all elements of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent of a policy of some standing by the Central Committee itself. The dissemination of information concerning that policy arose as a result of what appears to have been inquiries concerning the very subject that this trial is investigating as far back as 1978.

The bulletin itself was kept in the Secretariat offices in Canada. There is nothing on the face of the document itself to suggest that there is any self-serving motive made in contemplation of litigation, civil or criminal or otherwise.

The paragraph itself is nothing more than a statement of the past and present policy of the Red Cross in a particular area of whether figures and statistics were ever compiled or disseminated.

In that sense, it cannot be said that the inherent contents of the document are either actually, or appear to be, in any sense unreliable.

I am quite aware of the fact that this insertion of this particular paragraph is not one that is repetitious in nature or part of a constant, continuing system of recording over and over again of its contents. {1986|1987}

The paragraph, in my respectful view, is really not any different than a statement of policy to be found in the minutes of the meeting of the directors of a corporation, in the minutes of the meeting of the servants of the corporation, or in correspondence of any members of any group or undertaking whose motives imply profit or non-profit.

The bulletin itself, I find, is a record that was kept in the ordinary course of the business of the International Committee of the Red Cross, Red Crescent.

I have read with some interest the contents of s.30 (6) of the Canada Evidence Act. That reads as follows:

"For the purpose of determining whether any provision of this section applies, or for the purpose of determining the probative value, if any, to be given to information contained in any record received in evidence under this section, the court may, upon production of any record, examine the record, receive any {1987|1988} evidence in respect thereof given orally or by affidavit including evidence as to the circumstances in which the information contained in the record was written, recorded, stored or reproduced, and draw any reasonable inference from the form or content of the record."

I regard that particular subsection as some authority. I exercise my judicial discretion in deciding whether or not Crown will be permitted to introduce the one part of the bulletin that it seeks to introduce.

Merely because the subject of the paragraph was not part of a series of repetitious entries in a system of recording, but rather is one statement of policy made on one occasion does not adversely, of itself, affect the admissibility.

The paragraph is part of the content of a record kept in the ordinary course of the conduct of the affairs of the business of the Red Cross International Committee.

In all of the circumstances I can see {1988|1989} no essential inherent difference between that paragraph and if it were contained in the correspondence of a meeting of a corporation or of a body or a group of people created in the ordinary course of the conduct of that business or undertaking.

For these reasons, the paragraph itself may be admitted.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is there anything before the jury comes in?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one thing. There was one word in that paragraph and it was discussed yesterday and it says, "falsely attributed", and you said if it was admitted that you did not want the word "falsely" included.

THE COURT: Yes. Have you and Mr. Christie gotten together so that you can make it clear to him precisely what you propose to adduce to the jury? I don't want to bring the jury in, have you start, and then have Mr. Christie, who has not spoken to you, object. It's the logistics of getting juries in and out of courtrooms, things like that. It's that simple.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I could have a moment.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie, is there anything you wish to say?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I have not had an opportunity to discuss what edited portion of that paragraph will be put to the witness, but there was one {1990|1991} thing I wanted to raise, and I suppose it is a formality. I didn't want to pre-suppose what Your Honour would rule in respect to —

THE COURT: It was not an easy ruling, I can assure you of that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour, but I must, I think, and I do make a formal application pro forma at the point we are at to have the Crown produce the author of the report pursuant to s.7. I assume that Your Honour could deal with that. I must at least ask, and I am asking that that witness be produced for cross-examination, in view of the fact that the ruling as to the applicability of the section is only made at this point — and I quite agree it is a difficult thing to decide.

I am submitting that we are caught by surprise, because we have a document from the International Tracing Service marking the criterion of the Committee of the International Red Cross, Geneva, which does say the numbers of victims of Nationalist Socialist persecution, and which derives from the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" from which it is taken.

I am simply saying, unless I can test {1991|1992} the person who made these remarks with cross-examination, I cannot actually put to Mr. De Grace, who says he doesn't know because he didn't write it — I can't put it to him, he will say, "I don't have any idea" —

THE COURT: I don't disagree with that last portion.

MR. CHRISTIE: So I am just asking now. I realize it is probably, shall we say, difficult.

THE COURT: Your request is on the record. For obvious reasons, it is dismissed. Included in those reasons is my view that nothing is prohibiting the defence, if it chooses to do so, from leading any evidence it wishes in rebuttal to the paragraph in question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Just one word is in issue.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will need to speak to the witness as well, Your Honour.

THE COURT: We will adjourn for ten minutes.

— Short adjournment.

——— {1992|1993}

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, in respect to the paragraph of the ICRC Bulletin No. 25, I wanted to be very clear in my position that I cannot, in any way, ascribe some editorial function to myself to a paragraph that I maintain is now properly before the Court.

THE COURT: I do not want to be deemed to be consenting by participating in an amendment.

MR. CHRISTIE: Exactly. And I wanted to add, I know we are trying to deal with the word "falsely". I allude to the fact that much of the paragraph deals with statements about the activities of the ICRC, '39 to '45, at a time during which it is dubious whether the author in 1978 had personal knowledge at all.

So I simply took the position and I take that same position now that, really, I am not qualified to edit, nor am I acceding to the view that this somehow should be before the Court.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Perhaps, Mr. Christie, I {1993|1994} can be of some assistance to you by putting the whole thing in the negative. It is my understanding of my jurisdiction that I may, under proper circumstances, edit. If, after I hear from Crown counsel, I decide to remove the word "falsely" as of my own motion, would you object to that? If you do, I'll leave it in.

MR. CHRISTIE: It may seem rather ridiculous, because it is an accusatorial part of the paragraph, but I think that, in view of the fact I intend to contradict this with other evidence and demonstrate by argument that this is, in fact, a kind of a political statement on the part of the ICRC for obvious reasons of popularity and the like, I don't wish to take a position on that point at all. I'm sorry.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. What is the Crown's position?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am asking Your Honour to permit the Crown to delete the word "falsely" from the paragraph.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

RENE DE GRACE, previously sworn

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. De Grace, you were telling us yesterday about the relationship between the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies which the latter organization in Canada belongs to.

A. Yes. The Canadian Red Cross National Society is a member of the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, but it still is an independent organization, and the Canadian Red Cross Society is incorporated by an Act of Parliament and is auxiliary to the Government of Canada like all other national societies are auxiliary to their government.

Q. And you were telling us yesterday about a monthly bulletin that you received from the International Committee of Red Cross in Geneva.

A. Yes, I was.

Q. And you brought an issue of that bulletin with you to Court?

A. Yes, I do have an issue.

Q. And could you tell us once again the date of that issue?

A. The date is February 1st, 1978.

Q. All right. And there are a number of different matters that are contained in this bulletin {1995|1996} that don't have anything to do with this trial; is that right?

A. Yes, there are a number of matters, actually. The title of the article in this bulletin is entitled, "False Propaganda".

Q. Sorry, there are a number of different articles that deal with what?

A. Some of the contents are, "The ICRC in 1977: Facts and Figures", Vice-President of ICRC Executive Board on Leave" ...

Q. So many things in this bulletin?

A. Many things.

Q. All right. Would you read from the fourth paragraph please?

A. Yes, I will:

"Consequently the ICRC considers it must make clear the fact that it has never published – or even compiled – statistics of this kind which are being ..... attributed to it. The work of the ICRC is to help war victims, not to count them. In any case, how could its delegates have obtained data for such statistics? They were able to enter only a few concentration camps, and then only in the final days of the war. Everything the ICRC tried to do for the inmates of those camps, and what it finally managed to do, is related in its {1996|1997} report entitled 'The Work of the ICRC for Civilian Detainees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945' (available in English, French and German)."

Q. Thank you. Do you have any personal knowledge of the matters contained in that paragraph?

A. The only knowledge I have about the matters contained in this paragraph was as a result of receiving a press clipping.

Q. All right. So you have no personal knowledge. It is something you've read in the press.

A. No.

Q. Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. I now put to you the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross on its activities during the Second World War referred to in the second paragraph you just read between 1939 and 1947, Volume II., "The Central Agency For Prisoners of War", page 314, and I ask you if it doesn't indicate there that the Red Cross prepared cards for those who were lost or had lost friends, relatives and people of that kind, and it says, and I ask you to read this sir – can you have a look down here? It says: {1997|1998}

"These are the statistics, up to the end of March 1946, of P 10,027 cards "..."

which is a form card, right?

A. Right.

Q. "... which reached Geneva duly filled in:

1944 ..... 76,300

1946 ..... 14,996"

– for a total of 247,244. Is that right?

A. That is what is printed there, yes.

Q. Yes. And it says:

"These figures imply double the number of cases. The total number of cards printed, and in part actually issued was over three million."

Right? Have I read that correctly?

A. Actually issued was over three million, yes. Correct.

Q. "The Section stopped work on card indexing cases on April 1946."

For the preparation of this report, is that right?

A. Right.

Q. All right. It also says:

"In July 1947, the International Refugee Organization took over from UNRRA ..."

which is a United Nations Organization, right? {1998|1999}

A. That is what is printed, yes.

Q. Well, this is a report, is it not? Do you recognize that as the Second Volume of the International Committee of the Red Cross on its activities during the Second World War?

A. I do.

Q. And it says from 1939 to 1947, because this Report is released in '48, May. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And it says it "took over from UNRRA all work in respect of DPs ..." – does that mean displaced persons?

A. Right.

Q. "... and the part of the ICRC in tracing and reuniting dispersed families was at an end." Right?

A. Right.

Q. Thank you. Do you know of the existence of the International Tracing Service associated with the Red Cross?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. You do. You emphatically deny the existence of the existence of [sic] the International Tracing Service associated with the Red Cross?

A. I'm sorry?

THE COURT: Do you understand the question?

THE WITNESS: I'm not sure.

THE COURT: All right. Ask it again.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you deny the existence of the International Tracing Service associated {1999|2000} with the Red Cross?

A. I did not.

Q. What?

A. You are telling me that I deny the existence —

Q. I am asking you if you deny the existence of the International Tracing Service associated with the Red Cross at Arolsen, West Germany.

A. May I explain what the International Tracing Service is?

Q. If you know. First of all I want to know if you acknowledge that it exists.

A. There is an International Tracing Service in Arolsen, Germany.

Q. Yes. Is it associated with the Red Cross?

A. The International Committee of the Red Cross is responsible for the administration of the International Tracing Service in Arolsen, Germany, and if I may expand on that, it's a service that was established in 1945, and, to my knowledge by the Allies, and was put under the administration of various organizations which I don't know about; and in 1955, based on an international agreement, the International Committee of the Red Cross was given the responsibility for the administration of that office.

THE COURT: In 1955?

THE WITNESS: In 1955, yes, Your Honour.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: They took over the records of previous organizations that had those {2000|2001} records.

A. I cannot speak on behalf of the International Tracing Service or the International Committee of the Red Cross on matters of this kind, for I am not aware of what actually took place, but I know they are responsible for the administration of that office since 1955.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, I put it to you that the International Tracing Service accepts requests for information from people who have lost friends and relatives and records those statistics, sir.

A. I would prefer that all questions pertaining to the day-to-day operation of the International Tracing Service be put to them. I am very reluctant to speak on their behalf, and I am not competent to do so.

Q. I see. I'd like to put to you a report that is allegedly originating from the International Tracing Service. I'd like to ask you if you have seen it.

THE COURT: Just a moment. Well, you can ask him if he has seen it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I just did.

THE COURT: Have you seen it, witness?

THE WITNESS: No, I have not.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Would you agree that your position is somewhat of a delicate one here today?

A. Yes, I would agree.

Q. Would you agree that you don't want to get the Red Cross involved in any controversy; correct?

A. Well, I would never want that, here {2001|2002} or anywhere else.

Q. I understand. And that's why you very carefully defined your role as separate, or your position as separate from the International Committee of the Red Cross, right?

A. Well, I wanted it to be very clear to this Court that I'm not entitled to speak on behalf of the International Committee of the Red Cross, or the International Tracing Service in Arolsen.

Q. Yes. And as such you are not entitled or qualified to say whether this paragraph that you have read is really true or false. Right?

A. Well, I have no reason to disbelieve the content of the International Red Cross publications.

Q. Are you not aware that those who are in the position who originated that are representing the Red Cross in the same way that you are, and that it is a rather delicate issue as to what they did during the Second World War; is that not right?

A. I'm afraid that I am not competent to answer that question.

Q. Are you aware that some books have been written that accuse the Red Cross of dereliction of their duty to these prisoners in the concentration camps?

A. I'm not aware of them, sir.

Q. You are not aware of the book called, "The Terrible Secret", by Walter Laqueur?

A. No, I am not aware of it.

Q. You are not aware of that.

A. I am not. All right. And when you read — {2002|2003} I think it was a prepared statement, wasn't it, at the very beginning, to identify your position?

A. Well, I wanted to be very clear on that, and it was following consultation with our own lawyers from the International Committee of the Red Cross, for I was not at ease at all.

THE COURT: You can take it as yes. I saw him read it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That's why you were not at ease, because you wanted to be very careful about defining your position.

A. Well, in that as I was called as a witness and I had received a subpoena, I had to be in Court, and I felt I was not competent — Q. And in fact, I guess it would be fair to say that you didn't want any of your remarks to be a reflection on the International Committee of the Red Cross.

A. Yes. That's correct.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no re-examination, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down, Mr. De Grace.

— The witness retires.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sergeant Luby, please.

—— {2003|2004}

JOHN LUBY, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I understand, sir, you are a sergeant in the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And you are one of the officers involved in the investigation of this charge?

A. Yes.

Q. And as such, did you have occasion to go to the Library to look at an encyclopaedia?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: As I said before, Your Honour, I have no objection to my friend simply putting in the Chambers Encyclopaedia that he is asking about, and we will argue what it means at a later time.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

Q. So we all know what we are talking about, Exhibit "E", subject to further identification, is two photocopies — I'm sorry, photocopy of two pages from Chambers Encyclopaedia.

A. Yes.

Q. And did you make that photocopy?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what year is the edition of the Chambers Encyclopaedia?

A. It is from the New Revised Edition published in 1973, Volume VIII, letters "J" to "Mala", pages 99 and 100. {2004|2005}

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: And the subject matter?

THE WITNESS: Jewish history.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'd ask that that now become a numbered exhibit please, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Exhibit 30.

— EXHIBIT NO. 30: (Formerly Exhibit "E") Photocopy of pages 99 and 100, Volume VIII, Chambers Encyclopaedia.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, Sergeant Luby, have you also attended at another library and collected a three-volume book called, "ICRC Report on Second World War 1939 — 1947"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when were those books published — if you will just look inside there?

THE COURT: You've seen these, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not these, Your Honour. I have other — I know what they are.

THE COURT: You have the counterpart to what the officer has, do you?

MR. CHRISTIE: I believe I have the same three volumes in another edition.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: And if the Crown wishes to put the whole works in, I have no objection, and save time.

THE COURT: All right. The ICRC, Mr. — {2005|2006}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour, it's how it is printed on the binding, but in fact ...

Q. If you will just look inside, is that the Report of the International —
THE COURT: I think what it is I want to make sure is that the jury knows what it is.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: It's the Report of the International Committee of the Red Cross On Its Activities in the Second World War, Geneva, 1948?

A. Yes. Geneva, May 1948.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, could I have Exhibit 1 distributed again to the jury, please?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, if my friend intends to lead some evidence regarding the exhibit in a way of some editorial or selective comment, I would be objecting. I don't know if that's what my friend has in mind.

THE COURT: Is that what you have in mind?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have in mind going through those areas that are quoted in here, and any editorial comment I will be making at the end of this case, but looking at those parts that are quoted, and the areas immediately around those parts to satisfy the jury, whether the quotes are in context or not.

MR. CHRISTIE: With respect, I think that's a matter of argument. The book will be exhibited. The volumes are all there. Nothing is going to change. I don't think we need a witness to swear that you read one page and then read another and give his opinion on {2006|2007} whether it's consistent.

I think the jury is to decide that, and it will save a great deal of time if we do that by way of argument rather than by way of some kind of evidence.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. The volumes, as Your Honour can see and the jury can see, are three volumes here — a considerable mass of material.

I am content to introduce the entire volumes, but I wish to direct the jury's attention to particular sections of the book.

THE COURT: Of the volumes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: As against Exhibit 1.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: That can be done with despatch without — the witness isn't going to be asked for opinion?

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is not going to be asked for opinion. He is going to be asked certain portions and will be reading along in our copies of the material here, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Before we go any further, does that clear things up, Mr. Christie, or are you still objecting? If you are, I will excuse the jury and we will talk about it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't really want to send the jury out. I don't see the point of going through this reading process. The jury can do that {2007|2008} when they have the books in assessing and hearing the argument on the point. I think it will amount to taking it out of context, too, because I think that some of the points my friend proposes to make relate to a good deal of the context, and I think we will deal with this in argument quite thoroughly. The books are there.

My friend knows exactly what the booklet says about the books, and he can refer the to exact pages, because they are identified, and I don't see that taking it this way, reading a portion, proves anything. It doesn't improve on the context. In fact, it detracts from the context. It doesn't help the jury. They can read just as well as the witness can.

RULING

THE COURT: Defence counsel takes objection to this witness reading certain passages from three volumes of a report from the International Red Cross of its activities between 1939 and 1947.

The objection is that the practice of the witness being asked by Crown counsel to refer to certain portions of the three volumes of the report as against the content of Exhibit 1 could remove it from context. If it does remove it from context, that affects the weight, if any, that the jury[.]

To merely order that the three volumes be filed without reference to the content, two things would occur. I would be, in effect, telling the Crown how to prosecute its case. That is not my function. In the same way, it is not my function to tell the defence how to conduct its case.

Secondly, if the various portions of the three volumes were not delineated in some reasonable manner, then the jury, when it retires to consider its verdict, would spend inordinate amounts of time hunting through three volumes to find the reference. That is something to be avoided. {2009|2010}

Therefore, provided the Crown proposes to direct the witness, hopefully in an expeditious manner, to certain portions of the three volumes which can be marked with pieces of paper for easy reference later as against Exhibit 1, then the jury would be in the position to decide whether what has occurred has had the effect of removing those passages from the context of the total volume.

Proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

—— {2010|2011}

Q. Page 26, there is a chapter, Chapter 9, "The Jews And The Concentration Camps: A Factual Appraisal By The Red Cross"

A. Which volume are you talking about, sir?

Q. I am talking about Exhibit 1.

It says:

"There is one survey of the Jewish question in Europe during World War Two and the conditions of Germany's concentration camps which is almost unique in its honesty and objectivity, The three-volume 'Report of the International Committee of the Red Cross on its Activities during the Second World War', Geneva, 1948."

Is that work there before you?

A. That's these three books.

Q. On the next column underneath the two photographs, in bold print, the exhibit goes on to say:

"The Red Cross Report is of value in that it first clarifies the legitimate circumstances under which Jews were detained in concentration camps, i.e. as enemy aliens. In describing the two categories of civilian internees, The Report distinguishes the second type as 'Civilians deported on administrative grounds (in German, 'Schutzhäftlinge'), who were arrested for political or racial motives {2011|2012} because their presence was considered a danger to the State or the occupation forces' (Vol. III, p. 73)."

Open up Volume III, please, and page 73.

A. Yes.

Q. And would you read from the beginning of a chapter, would you read beginning, "Civilians in enemy hands", which is the beginning of the chapter?

A. "Detained and Deported Civilians".

"Civilians in enemy hands, as the account of measures taken for their protection has shown, fell into two main categories:

(1) — Civilian internees in the true sense of the term, that is, civilians living in belligerent territory at the outbreak of war and interned because of their enemy nationality;

(2) — Civilian internees described as 'detainees' or 'deported civilians', or 'civilians deported on administrative grounds' (in German, Schutzhäftlinge) who were arrested for political or racial motives, or because their presence was considered a danger to the State or the occupation forces."

Q. All right. Read the next sentence, please.

A. "They included nationals of Axis {2012|2013} satellites of annexed or occupied countries, as well as a great many persecuted Germans, who were mainly Jewish."

Q. Okay. Turning, then, to Exhibit 1:

"These persons, it continues, 'were placed on the same footing as persons arrested or imprisoned under common law for security reasons'

(p. 74)."

Page 74, Volume III, presumably, is the reference. And I would refer you to, on that page, I believe this is what the reference would be.

A. On page 73 or 74, sir?

Q. 74 is the reference in the material. At the bottom of the page there is a paragraph starting with, "The German authorities".

A. Yes.

Q. Read from that.

A. "The German authorities however placed detained and deported civilians on the same footing as persons arrested and imprisoned under common law for security reasons. The majority were in fact not nationals of enemy countries, nor as a rule even aliens, but possessed or had possessed, before becoming stateless, either German nationality, or that of an annexed country. The measures applied to these people were, therefore, {2013|2014} from the German point of view and that of the satellite States, strictly a matter of internal policy, with which the ICRC might not interfere."

Q. All right. Returning, then, to Exhibit 1, it says:

"The Report admits that the Germans were at first reluctant to permit supervision by the Red Cross of people detained on grounds relating to security, but by the latter part of 1942, the ICRC obtained important concessions from Germany. They were permitted to distribute food parcels to major concentration camps in Germany from August 1942, and 'from February 1943 onwards this concession was extended to all other camps and prisons' (Vol. III, p. 78)."

I am going to ask you to commence reading on page 77 under the heading, "Germany".

A. "As early as January 1941, the ICRC applied to the German Red Cross for permission to send food to detained and deported civilians in the camp at Oranienburg, but this was refused. Earlier a similar request made on May 20, 1940, concerning the camps at Drancy, Compigne and in North Africa, had already been turned down by the German Foreign {2014|2015} office. In the summer of 1942, the ICRC was informed by this Ministry that parcels could not be sent to German citizens in concentration camps. A little later, however, in August, a fresh request was treated with more sympathy, and the delegate in Berlin was told that detained aliens, not only at Oranienburg but at Dachau also, could receive small food parcels from their relatives, on condition that the contents could be quickly consumed. Family parcels were thus at last authorized for detained and deported civilians of enemy nationality, and were forwarded through the ICRC.

After further representations in October 1942, in behalf of detained civilians in Germany and Alsace, family parcels of foodstuffs and clothing were allowed for persons detained in Haguenau Prison; an exception was made in the case of those or for imperilling the security of the State or of the authorities in occupation. From February 1943 onwards, this concession was extended to all other camps and prisons in Germany."

Q. "In Germany" was the last word? {2015|2016}

A. Yes.

Q. Keep going.

A. "The ICRC declined, however, to limit its action merely to that of an intermediary between the detainees and their relatives. It claimed the right to send, itself, consignments of foodstuffs, clothing and medications, and to supervise their distribution in the camps. The Committee moreover insisted on ascertaining the situation within these camps and the number of occupants, by nationality. Its efforts were not entirely fruitless. In March 1943, the German Foreign Office informed the ICRC delegation in Berlin that the Committee and the National Red Cross Societies would henceforth be allowed to forward individual parcels to detained and deported aliens whose names and addresses were known to them. This privilege was, however, withheld from those accused of offences against the German State or the German forces. There was no limit to the number of parcels, but the amount of foodstuffs sent to anyone detained could not exceed his personal needs; any surplus would be distributed amongst fellow detainees who received no parcels. The {2016|2017} ICRC delegates were not allowed access to the concentration camps, and the German Red Cross and camp commandants were forbidden to communicate lists of occupants, or even camp strengths."

Q. Keep going just ...

A. "The concession granted by the German authorities was therefore very slight, and indeed more apparent than real, since on the one hand, only individual parcels were permitted, whilst on the other, the authorities made it impossible for the senders to obtain the necessary data for consignments of this kind. Nevertheless, the ICRC was not deterred, but at once set to work on their relief scheme, although they had at that time only some sixty names and addresses of civilian detainees in all the camps in Germany."

Q. Thank you. Now, under the heading, "Red Cross Recipients were Jews", on Exhibit 1 page 27:

"The Report states that 'As many as 9,000 parcels were packed daily. From the autumn of 1943 until May 1945, about 112,000 parcels with a total weight of 4,500 tons were sent off to the concentration camps' (Vol. III, p.80)."

And would you look at Volume III, page 80? {2017|2018}

A. I have it here, sir.

Q. And can you find that sentence at the bottom of the first complete paragraph there, last sentence of the first complete paragraph?

A. Yes.

"The goods were warehoused in bond at Geneva, where as many as 9,000 parcels were packed daily. From the autumn of 1943 until May 1945, about 112,000 parcels, with a total weight of 4,500 tons, were sent off to the concentration camps in Germany."

Q. And the words "in Germany" are in the book.

A. Yes.

Q. In addition, Exhibit 1 goes on:

"In addition to food, these contained clothing and pharmaceutical supplies. 'Parcels were sent to Dachau, Buchenwald, Sangerhausen, Sachsenhausen, Oranienburg, Flossenbürg, Landsberg-am-Lech, Flöha, Ravensbrück, Hamburg-Neuengamme, Mauthausen, Theresienstadt, Auschwitz, Bergen-Belsen, to camps near Vienna and in Central and Southern Germany. The principal recipients were Belgians, Dutch, French, Greeks, Italians, Norwegians, Poles and stateless Jews' (Vol III, p.83)."

Do you have Volume III, page 83?

A. Yes. {2018|2019}

Q. And is that that sentence there that I just read?

A. Yes.

Q. And would you read the next two sentences?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if he is going to read the sentence, he should read the sentence. My friend says, "Was it there?" Well, if my friend is asking for it to be put in context, surely the context is the sentence as it is quoted in Exhibit 1.

THE COURT: Is that all right with you?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: "Parcels were sent to Dachau, Buchenwald, Sangerhausen, Sachsenhausen, Oranienburg, Flossenbürg; Landsberg-am-Lech, Flöha, Ravensbrück, Hamburg-Neuengamme, Mauthausen, Theresienstadt, Auschwitz, Bergen-Belsen, to camps near Vienna and in Central and Southern Germany. The principal recipients were Belgians, Dutch, French, Greeks, Italians, Norwegians, Poles and stateless Jews. This relief work could not unfortunately be extended to all concentration camps, because a great many remained unknown to the ICRC until the end of the war. Moreover, the ICRC was long prevented by the blockade from {2019|2020} procuring sufficient funds and goods. When it could do so at the very end of the war, transport had been seriously curtailed by the destruction of roads and railways."

Q. All right. In Exhibit 1 it goes on:

"In the course of the war, 'The Committee was in a position to transfer and distribute in the form of relief supplies over twenty million Swiss francs collected by Jewish welfare organisations throughout the world, in particular by the American Joint Distribution Committee of New York' (Vol. i, p.644)."

Would you look at Volume I, page 644? And there are a number of paragraphs there. If you look at the paragraph commencing, "Through its delegates" – do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you go down towards the bottom, or the middle of that, I think, "In its capacity as a neutral intermediary" ...

A. Yes.

"In its capacity as a neutral intermediary, the Committee was in a position to transfer and distribute in the form of relief supplies over twenty million Swiss francs collected by Jewish welfare organizations throughout the world, in particular by the American Joint Distribution {2020|2021} Committee of New York. Without the help of the ICRC, this concerted effort made by a whole community would have doubtless been vain, as no Jewish organization was allowed to act in countries under German control. A detailed account of this important relief scheme will be found in Vol. III."

Q. Thank you. Back to Exhibit 1, it goes on:

"This latter organisation was permitted by the German Government to maintain offices in Berlin until the American entry into the war. The ICRC complained that obstruction of their vast relief operation for Jewish internees came not from the Germans but from the tight Allied blockade of Europe. Most of their purchases of relief food were made in Rumania, Hungary and Slovakia.

The ICRC had special praise for the liberal conditions which prevailed at Theresienstadt up to the time of their last visits there in April 1945. This camp, 'where there were about 40,000 Jews deported from various countries was a relatively privileged ghetto' (Vol. III, p.75)."

The middle of the page at 74 there is {2021|2022} a paragraph "Bohemia and Moravia".

A. "In the summer of 1942, the German Red Cross informed the ICRC that the occupying authorities in Prague had given permission for the despatch of medical supplies to Theresienstadt (Terezin), the largest camp for Jews in the country. A trial consignment of a few parcels was sent to the address given, Lagerkommando Theresienstadt, but no receipt was ever returned to Geneva. Theresienstadt, where there were about 40,000 Jews deported from various countries, was a relatively privileged ghetto, and the visit of a delegate of the ICRC in Berlin was permitted, in June 1944, as a special concession."

THE COURT: We will adjourn for twenty minutes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— The jury retires. 11:35 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 12:05 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths. {2022|2023}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. We are still on page 27 of Exhibit 1, and we are in column one. We just finished reading an area dealing with Theresienstadt on the second paragraph below the heading, "Red Cross Recipients Were Jews". And the next sentence in Exhibit 1, or the next long quotation, is as follows:

"According to the Report, 'The Committee's delegates were able to visit the camp at Theresienstadt (Terezin) which was used exclusively for Jews and was governed by special conditions. From information gathered by the Committee, this camp had been started as an experiment by certain leaders of the Reich ... These men wished to give the Jews the means of setting up a communal life in a town under their own administration and possessing almost complete autonomy ... two delegates were able to visit the camp on April 6th, 1945. They confirmed the favourable impression gained on the first visit' (Vol. i, p.642)."

Would you turn to Volume I, page 642? And I am going to ask you to start reading the paragraph before that first quotation from the material. Start reading under the paragraph headed, "Germany – Even when the German Wehrmacht" ... {2023|2024}

A. "Even when the German Wehrmacht was winning, the Committee's activities in behalf of the Jews met with almost insuperable difficulties. Towards the end of 1943, however, the German authorities allowed the Committee to send relief parcels to detainees in concentration camps, many of them Jews, whose names and addresses might be known to it. The Committee was able to collect a few dozen names and by these slender means the system of individual and then collective relief for political detainees was started, an account of which is given elsewhere in this Report. Each receipt returned bore several names, and these were added to the list of addresses: thus the receipts often gave the first news of missing persons. By the end of the war, the Committee's card index for political detainees (Jewish and non-Jewish) contained over 105,000 names. During the last year of the War, the Committee's delegates were able to visit the camp of Theresienstadt (Terezin), which was exclusively used for Jews, and was governed by special conditions. From information gathered by the Committee, this camp had been {2024|2025} started as an experiment by certain leaders of the Reich, who were apparently less hostile to the Jews than those responsible for the racial policy of the German Government.

These men wished to give to Jews the means of setting up a communal life in a town under their own administration and possessing almost complete autonomy. On several occasions, the Committee's delegates were granted authority to visit Theresienstadt, but owing to difficulties raised by the local authorities, the first visit only took place in June 1944.

The Jewish elder in charge informed the delegate, in the presence of a representative of the German authorities, that thirty-five thousand Jews resided in the town and that living conditions were bearable. In view of the doubt expressed by the heads of various organizations as to the accuracy of this statement, the Committee requested the German Government to allow its delegates to make a second visit. After laborious negotiations, much delayed on the German side, two delegates were able to visit the camp on April 6, 1945. They confirmed the favourable impression gained on the first visit, {2025|2026} but ascertained that the camp strength now amounted only to 20,000 internees, including 1,100 Hungarians, 1,1050 Slovaks ..."

Q. There is a misplaced comma?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, how are we able to interpret that from my friend's point of view?

THE COURT: What is that, Mr. Christie?

THE COURT: He is telling us that there is a misplaced comma where the numbers continue with each other, and I don't agree that we should be entitled to interpret what the document says. It may not be interpretable.

THE COURT: I don't disagree with that. Read it, officer, please.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Read the number with the punctuation given for the number.

A. "... 1,1050 Slovaks, 800 Dutch, 290 Danes, 8,000 Germans, 8,000 Czechs and 760 stateless persons. They were therefore anxious to know if Theresienstadt was being used as a transit camp and asked when the last departures for the East had taken place. The head of the Security Police of the Protectorate stated that the last transfers to Auschwitz had occurred six months previously, {2026|2027} and had comprised 10,000 Jews, to be employed on camp administration and enlargement. This high official assured the delegates that no Jews would be deported from Theresienstadt in future."

Q. Perhaps the final paragraph should be read there as well.

A. "Whereas other camps exclusively reserved for Jews were not open to inspections for humanitarian purposes until the end, the Committee's activities were at least effective in several concentration camps containing a minority proportion of Jews. During the final months, the Committee, in urgent circumstances, took on a task of the greatest importance by visiting and giving aid to these internees, providing food, preventing last-minute evacuations as well as summary executions, and even taking charge during the critical hours, sometimes days, which passed between the retreat of the German forces and the arrival of the Allies from the West or the East."

Q. Thank you. Returning to Exhibit 1:

"The ICRC also had praise for the regime of Ion Antonescu of Fascist

{2027|2028} Rumania where the Committee was able to extend special relief to 183,000 Rumanian Jews until the time of the Soviet occupation. The aid then ceased, and the ICRC complained bitterly that it never succeeded 'in sending anything whatsoever to Russia' (Vol. II, p. 62)."

And I am going to then ask you, rather than going to Volume II, page 62, to look at Volume III, page 62. And there is a paragraph beginning in the middle there. Would you read that?

A. "Unfortunately, the Soviet authorities made no response to these proposals, and the ICRC never succeeded, despite repeated efforts, in accrediting a delegate to them, nor in sending anything whatsoever to Russia. Further, the complete absence of information on German and other servicemen captured by the Soviet army prevented these PW from receiving even the family parcels provided for in the 1907 Hague Convention, to which Russia as well as the States at war with her were signatory.

Similarly, these States, with the exception of Finland, did not reveal the places of detention of Russian "PW." {2028|2029}

Q. And on page 61 of Volume III, what is the chapter heading on which that paragraph you've read is contained?

A. It's, "(c) German, Finnish, Hungarian, Italian, Slovak and Rumanian PW in Russia."

Q. Exhibit 1 goes on:

"The same situation applied to many of the German camps after their 'liberation' by the Russians. The ICRC received a voluminous flow of mail from Auschwitz until the period of the Soviet occupation, when many of the internees were evacuated westward. But the efforts of the Red Cross to send relief to internees remaining at Auschwitz under Soviet control were futile. However, food parcels continued to be sent to former Auschwitz inmates transferred west to such camps as Buchenwald and Oranienburg."

Next column, page 27, under the heading of, "No Evidence Of Genocide":

"One of the most important aspects of the Red Cross Report is that it clarifies the true cause of those deaths that undoubtedly occurred in the camps towards the end of the war. Says the Report: 'In the chaotic condition of Germany after the invasion during the final {2029|2030} months of the war, the camps received no food supplies at all and starvation claimed an increasing number of victims. Itself alarmed by this situation, the German Government at last informed the ICRC on February 1st, 1945 ... In March 1945, discussions between the President of the ICRC and General of the S.S. Kaltenbrunner gave even more decisive results. Relief could henceforth be distributed by the ICRC, and one delegate was authorised to stay in each camp ...' (Vol. III, p. 83)."

Go to Volume III, please.

A. Yes, I have it, sir.

Q. Page 83.

A. Yes.

Q. There is a chapter there. Would you read it, or the sub-chapter? Would you read us the title of the sub-chapter and read that entire sub-chapter?

A. It's titled, "Fourth phase, January to June 1945. Admittance of the ICRC delegates to the Concentration Camps."

"In the chaotic condition of Germany after the [sic] invasion during the final months of the war, the camps received no food supplies at all and starvation claimed an increasing number of victims. {2030|2031} Itself alarmed by this situation, the German Government at last informed the ICRC on February 1945, in reply to a request of October 2, 1944, that individual and collective relief parcels could be despatched to, French and Belgian detainees. In March 1945, discussions between the President of the ICRC and General of the SS Kaltenbrunner gave even more decisive results. Relief could henceforth be distributed by the ICRC, and one delegate was authorized to stay in each camp, on condition that he undertook not to leave it before the end of the war. For the first time, therefore, the concentration camps were open to the Committee."

Q. Keep reading.

A. "In order to take advantage of this last-minute concession, road transport had to be improvised, for there were now no trains in service throughout Germany. The efforts made by the ICRC in this respect are recorded elsewhere. Suffice it to say that road convoys at once left for Germany, and that their loads of foodstuffs were issued either in the concentration camps, or to the {2031|2032} many escaped or evacuated detainees wandering on the roads in a state of indescribable distress. Between January 1 and April 15, 1945, 300,000 parcels weighing 200 tons in all were sent to concentration camps by road and rail.

On the return journey to Switzerland, the vehicles brought back women, children, the old and sick who were picked up on the roadside."

Q. Thank you. And it goes on:

"Clearly, the German authorities were at pains to relieve the dire situation as far as they were able. The Red Cross are quite explicit in stating that food supplies ceased at this time due to the Allied bombing of German transportation, and in the interests of interned Jews they had protested on March 15th, 1944 against 'the barbarous aerial warfare of the Allies' (Inter Arma Caritas, p. 78). By October 2nd, 1944, the ICRC warned the German Foreign Office of the impending collapse of the German transportation system, declaring that starvation conditions for people throughout Germany were becoming inevitable.

In dealing with this comprehensive, {2032|2033} three-volume Report, it is important to stress that the delegates of the International Red Cross found no evidence whatever at the camps in Axis-occupied Europe of a deliberate policy to exterminate the Jews."

Now, turn, please, to Volume I, page 641, and that is the beginning of a chapter. Would you read the chapter and sub-heading?

A. "Special Categories of Civilians".

"(A). Jews":

Under National Socialism, the Jews had become in truth outcasts, condemned by rigid racial legislation to suffer tyranny, persecution and systematic extermination. No kind of protection shielded them; being neither PW nor civilian internees, they formed a separate category, without the benefit of any Convention. The supervision which the ICRC was empowered to exercise in favour of prisoners and internees did not apply to them. In most cases, they were, in fact, nationals of the State which held them in its power and which, secure in its supreme authority, allowed no intervention in their behalf. These unfortunate citizens shared the same fate as political deportees, were deprived {2033|2034} of civil rights, were given less favoured treatment than enemy nationals, who at least had the benefit of a statute. They were penned into concentration camps and ghettos, recruited for forced labour, subjected to grave brutalities and sent to death camps, without anyone being allowed to intervene in those matters which Germany and her allies considered to be exclusively within the bounds of their home policy."

THE COURT: What's the reference, there, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Volume I, page 641, Your Honour.

Q. Volume I, page 642, the paragraph commencing at the top of the page, "The Committee" ...

A. Yes.

"The Committee had in fact, through the intermediary of the German Red Cross, asked for information concerning civilian deportees 'without distinction of race or religion', which was plainly refused in the following terms: 'The responsible authorities decline to give any information concerning non-Aryan deportees.' Thus, enquiries as a matter of principle concerning the Jews led to no result, and continual {2034|2035} protests would have been resented by the authorities concerned and might have been detrimental both to the Jews themselves and to the whole field of the Committee's activities. In consequence, the Committee, while avoiding useless protest, did its utmost to help the Jews by practical means, and its delegates abroad were instructed on these lines. This policy was proved by the results obtained."

Q. Thank you. Still on Volume I, page 645, towards the bottom of the page under the heading, "Slovakia", commence reading that, please.

A. "Many thousands of Jews had been forced to leave the country and enlist in what was called 'labour service', but which in fact seems to have led the greater number to the extermination camps."

Q. Thank you. Volume I, page 647, under the heading, "Hungary", read that, please.

A. "As in Slovakia, the Jews were relatively spared, in so far as the local government retained a certain freedom of action. But when German pressure was reasserted, from March 1944 onwards, the position of the Jews became critical. The replacement in October 1944, of {2035}[2036] Horthy's Government by one in bondage to Germany, provoked a violent crisis; executions, robberies, deportations, forced labour, imprisonments – such was the lot of the Jewish population, which suffered cruelly and lost many killed, especially in the provinces."

Q. Thank you. Volume I, page 653, under the heading, "Rumania", second paragraph, "During the period" – do you see that?

A. "During the period in September 1940, when the 'Iron Guard', supported by the Gestapo and the German SS, had seized power, the Jews had been subjected to persecution and deportation to death camps. Later, under the dictatorship of Marshal Antonescu, they met with less severity."

Q. Thank you. Volume III, now, page 513. Read that, sir. I believe that is the beginning of the chapter. Would you read us the title of the chapter and subheading?

A. Chapter 3. "Special Cases", "Jewish Civilian Population".

Q. Would you read that, please?

A. "In its relief work for civilian populations, the ICRC paid special attention to the Jews. In Germany and the countries occupied by her, {2036}[2037] or under her domination, especially Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Jugoslavia, no other section of the population endured such humiliation, privation and, suffering. Deprived of all treaty protection, persecuted in accordance with the National-Socialist doctrine and threatened with extermination, the Jews were, in the last resort, generally deported in the most inhuman manner, shut up in concentration camps, subjected to forced labour or put to death."

Q. Thank you. Page 514, still in Volume III, beginning with the top paragraph, "The question of relief ..."

THE COURT: Volume III, page ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 514, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: "The question of relief for the Jews amongst the civilian prisoners or deportees held in prisons, concentration camps and closed ghettos has already been dealt with. We must now speak of the aid given to the Jewish section of the free population. In Germany and her satellite countries, the lot of the civilians belonging to this group was by far the worst. {2037}[2038] Subjected as they were to a discriminatory regime, which aimed more or less openly at their extermination, they were unable to procure the necessities of life, even in the reduced quantities to which 'Aryans' were entitled."

Q. And the last sentence?

A. "Moreover, the Jewish communities had been seriously impoverished by the discrimination, confiscation and robbery practised on them for many years."

Q. Thank you. Returning to Exhibit 1:

"In all its 1,600 pages the Report does not even mention such a thing as a gas chamber. It admits that Jews, like many other wartime nationalities, suffered rigours and privations, but its complete silence on the subject of planned extermination is ample refutation of the Six Million legend. Like the Vatican representatives with whom they worked, the Red Cross found itself unable to indulge in the irresponsible charges of genocide which had become the order of the day."

So far as the genuine mortality rate is concerned, the Report points out that most of the Jewish {2038}[2039] doctors from the camps were being used to combat typhus on the eastern front, so that they were unavailable when the typhus epidemics of 1945 broke out in the camps (Vol. 1, p. 204 ff). Incidentally ..."

Read that, Volume I, page 240.

MR. CHRISTIE: You're not gonna read that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sure we'll read it.

Q. All right. Starting on the bottom of page 203 – excuse me just a minute – top of page 203, "Although-the ICRC" ...

A. "Although the ICRC raised no protest against measures which the Powers considered necessary in the interest of PW, it constantly urged the repatriation of surplus medical personnel, and took steps in its promotion. The repatriation by groups, which were usually carried out at the same time as those of the seriously wounded, remained infrequent, slow and comparatively small in number."

Acting on the strength of the reports submitted by its delegates after visits to camps and of applications from the camp leaders or the men themselves, the Committee was able to achieve positive results in many individual cases. {2039}[2040]

In Germany, despite the agreements, a very large number of French medical personnel were held indefinitely in camps, without their services being used; Many were in fact improperly compelled to perform duties other than the care of the sick and wounded."

To justify these measures, the German authorities argued that the formation of a 'reserve' was necessary, in order to be ready for any events, such as the effects of air raids or a sudden influx of PW, or in case epidemics should break out in camps."

The ICRC observed that these measures were contrary to Art.12, and even to the special agreements concluded between belligerents. In spite of numerous steps and protests by the Committee, there were in Germany, in 1944, nearly 20,000 French surplus medical personnel. The Belgian and Dutch medical personnel were in a similar position."

The German authorities also opposed the repatriation of Polish and Yugoslav medical personnel, on the grounds that their countries of origin were occupied, and that the occupying authorities refused, for security reasons, to allow the return {2040}[2041] of released PW."

After the capitulation of Italy, a certain number of Italian medical personnel were interned by the Germans, either in Italy, in Germany or in the Balkans. Since Italian combatants were not considered as PW, this medical personnel was refused the benefit of the Conventions, and whilst the efforts made by the ICRC in its behalf were not always successful, they nevertheless led to the repatriation of part of them."

In Germany, members of the medical personnel who were of Jewish origin were invariably retained and placed in the 'reserve' units already mentioned, and a separate camp was even set up for this purpose. Moreover, many of them were obliged to perform other duties, in spite of frequent interventions by the Committee."

Doctors of enemy nationality and of Jewish origin were even sent to the Eastern Front to look after cases of exanthematic typhus amongst the troops."

The German authorities also attempted to refuse sick medical personnel the right of being examined by Mixed Medical Commissions for their re-{2041}[2042]patriation on grounds of health, on the pretext that medical personnel were not PW."

Q. Thank you. Turning to Exhibit 1

"Incidentally, it is frequently claimed that mass executions were carried out in gas chambers cunningly disguised as shower facilities. Again the Report makes nonsense of this allegation. 'Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates. They had often to take action to have fixtures made less primitive, and to get them repaired or enlarged' (Vol. III, p. 594)."

Turn to page 594, Volume III, please.

A. I don't believe there is a page 594, Volume III.

Q. Try Volume I, page 594. Have you got that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Start reading from where it says, "In the first place" ...

A. "In the first place, the delegates had to satisfy themselves that water, the chief factor in hygiene, was available in sufficient quantities. In dry districts, they recommended the internee not to waste it, and {2042}[2043] gave advice for planning its use in a rational manner. Thus, in Saudi Arabia, sweet water was completely lacking, and the German and Italian internees learned how to obtain it by the evaporation and condensation of sea water. At Fayed (Egypt), water was available only for two or three hours a day, at a rate of 50 litres for each person for all requirements of the camp, which meant that it was impossible to have showers.

Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates. They had often to take action to have the fixtures made less primitive, and to get them repaired or enlarged. They supplied quantities of toilet articles (linen, soap, shaving soap, razors, blades, tooth brushes, tooth powder, etc.).

At Mansurah (Egypt) German, Italian, and Greek women internees were living in such deplorable hygienic conditions that, on his first visit in 1942, the delegate gave the camp commandant a sum of 20 Egyptian pounds to meet immediate needs (purchase of insect powder, disinfectants, linen, etc.). Many camps left much to be desired in respect of latrines: here, too, the delegates insisted upon the enlarging or improvement of the fittings, and investigated conditions of cleanliness and the use of disinfectants.

Elsewhere, the ventilation was inadequate, and the cubic air space insufficient, because of the cramped premises. In certain districts, the delegate had to start a campaign against malaria, by providing mosquito nets and quinine, and having the ground drained in order to get rid of the stagnant water produced by floods (for instance in India after the monsoon, and in Egypt after the rise of the Nile)."

Q. Thank you. Is there any reference in that to concentration camps in Germany?

A. No, not from what I've read. No.

Q. Let's turn back two pages and see what this is referring to. Is there a chapter heading, major chapter heading?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if we are going to have editorial opinions by the witness, he should be qualified as an expert, but I am prepared to concede that the major chapter heading is "Activities of the ICRC in Behalf of Civilian Internees", found on page 576, that thereafter there follow eight sub-paragraphs, and then the one on {2044|2045} hygiene, from which the extract has been read.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

Q. We move to Exhibit 1 again.

It says, "Not All Were Interned":

"Volume III of the Red Cross Report, Chapter 3 (I. Jewish Civilian Population) deals with the aid given to the Jewish section of the free population and this chapter makes it quite plain that by no means all of the European Jews were placed in internment camps, but remained, subject to certain restrictions, as part of the free civilian population. This conflicts directly with the 'thoroughness' of the supposed 'extermination programme', and with the claim in the forged Hoess memoirs that Eichmann was obsessed with seizing 'every single Jew he could lay his hands on.' In Slovakia, for example, where Eichmann's assistant Dieter Wisliceny was in charge, the Report states that 'A large proportion of the Jewish minority had permission to stay in the country, and at certain periods Slovakia was looked upon as a comparative haven of refuge for Jews, especially [sic] for those coming from Poland. Those who {2045|2046} remained in Slovakia seem to have been in comparative safety until the end of August 1944, when a rising against the German forces took place. While it is true that the law of May 15th, 1942 had brought about the internment of several thousand Jews, these people were held in camps where the conditions of food and lodging were tolerable, and where the internees were allowed to do paid work on terms almost equal to those of the free labour market' (Vol. I, p.646)."

On page 645, at the bottom of the page, is a heading of "Slovakia", and although it's about a page and a half long, I think you should read the whole thing that is referred to.

A. "Many thousands of Jews had been forced to leave the country and enlist in what was called 'labour service' but which in fact seems to have led the greater number to the extermination camps. At the same time, a large proportion of the Jewish minority had permission to stay in the country, and at certain periods Slovakia was even looked upon as a comparative haven of refuge for Jews, especially for those coming from Poland. Those who remained in Slovakia seem to have been in comparative safety until the {2046|2047} end of August 1944, when a rising against the German forces took place. While it is true that the law of May 15, 1942, had brought about the internment of several thousand

Jews, these people were held in camps w[h]ere the conditions of food and lodging were tolerable, and where internees were allowed to do paid work on terms almost equal to those of the free labour market. In 1944, the Jewish community had managed to secure an almost complete suspension of forced immigration towards the territories under German control. At the time of the rising, the interned Jews escaped from the camps; some returned home, and others took to the hills. The measures of repression which followed fell on the Jewish population as a whole. The German military authorities summoned the Slovak Government to make wholesale arrests for the purpose of deporting the Jews to Germany. The order dated November 16, 1944, laid down [n] that all Jews should be mustered in the camp of Sered, and to that end, that Jews living in the capital should previously be assembled, on November 20, in the Town Hall of {2047|2048} Bratislava. On the same day, the delegate went to the Town Hall and noted that only about fifty Jews had obeyed the summons. The rest had gone into hiding, as the Slovak authorities had foreseen, either by fleeing to the country or concealing themselves in the town in the so-called 'bunkers'. In his concern over this situation, the President of the ICRC wrote to the Head of the Slovak Government asking him to put an end to the deportations. Monsignor Tiso received this letter on January 2, 1945, and answered at length on January 10. He recalled the fact that up to that time the Jews had been spared, adding however that in view of the rising, his Government had been forced to yield to the pressure which had been brought to bear upon them. He concluded by saying: 'To sum up, it remains wholly true that in the solution of the Jewish question, we have endeavoured to remain faithful [sic] to humane principles to the full extent of our powers.' Official aid to the fugitives in the 'bunkers' was out of the question; the delegation in Bratislava, however, with the help of the Slovak {2048|2049} Red Cross, and, in the provinces with that of the Catholic Church, succeeded in providing them with funds, which were handed to their spokesmen, and which allowed them to support life during the last months of the war. The Committee's representative was unable to secure permission to visit the camp of Sered. He was, however, allowed to enter the camp of Marienka, where Jews of alien nationality were interned."

Q. That's the whole section on Slovakia?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I think we are back on page 28 in column one, starting with the first full paragraph of Exhibit 1:

"Not only did large numbers of the three million or so European Jews avoid internment altogether, but the im[m]igration of Jews continued throughout the war, generally by way of Hungary, Rumania and Turkey. Ironically, post-war Jewish emigration from German-occupied territories was also facilitated by the Reich, as in the case of the Polish Jews who had escaped to France before its occupation. 'The Jews from Poland who, whilst in France, had obtained entrance permits {2049|2050} to the United States were held to be American citizens by the German occupying authorities, who further agreed to recognise the validity of about three thousand passports issued to Jews by the consulates of South American countries' (Vol. 1, p. 645)."

Could you read that entire section dealing with France?

A. "In November 1940, the Committee obtained permission from the authorities for one of its members to visit camps in the South, where a certain number of Jews were amongst the civilian internees. The camp at Gurs, in particular, contained six thousand Jews from the Bavarian Palatinate. The visit gave a clear idea of the situation inside the camp and the urgent necessity for relief; appropriate steps were taken in the internees' behalf.

The Jews from Poland who, whilst in France, had obtained entrance permits to the United States were held to be American citizens by the German occupying authorities, who further agreed to recognize the validity of about three thousand passports issued to Jews by the {2050|2051} consulates of South American countries. The persons concerned were lodged in camps reserved for Americans at Vittel. In 1942, when Germany and the States in South America began negotiations for the exchange of internees, it was found that the majority of the internees at Vittel held accommodation passports and consequently were in danger of being deported. The ICRC interceded in their behalf through the Berlin Delegation and succeeded in arranging for them to remain at Vittel, only a few being deported."

Q. Thank you. Exhibit 1, the last sentence from that paragraph:

"As future U.S. citizens, these Jews were held at the Vittel camp in southern France for American aliens.

The emigration of European Jews from Hungary in particular proceeded during the war unhindered by the German authorities. 'Until March 1944,' says the Red Cross Report, 'Jews who had the privilege of visas for Palestine were free to leave Hungary' (Vol. I, p.648)."

And I think this whole paragraph refers to Hungary, so perhaps read it all here, and then {2051|2052} go to the Red Cross Report:

"Even after the replacement of the Horthy Government in 1944 (following its attempted armistice with the Soviet Union) with a government more dependent on German authority, the emigration of Jews continued. The Committee secured the pledges of both Britain [sic] and the United States 'to give support by every means to the emigration of Jews from Hungary,' and from the U.S. Government the ICRC received a message stating that 'The Government of the United States ... now specifically repeats its assurance that arrangements will be made by it for the care of all Jews who in the present circumstances are allowed to leave' (Vol. I, p.649)."

All right. Commencing at page 647 of Volume I, under the section entitled, "Hungary", would you read that, please?

A. "As in Slovakia, the Jews were relatively spared, in so far as the local government retained a certain freedom of action."

MR. CHRISTIE: We've read this once already.

THE COURT: Proceed.

THE WITNESS: "But when German pressure was reasserted from March {2052|2053} 1944 onwards, the position of the Jews became critical. The replacement in October 1944, of Horthy's Government by one in bondage to Germany, provoked a violent crisis; executions, robberies, deportations, forced labour, imprisonments – such was the lot of the Jewish population, which suffered cruelly and lost many killed, especially in the provinces. It was at this point that the Committee, to alleviate these sufferings, took action with vigour and authority. At the same time the aid prompted by the King of Sweden, was given with considerable courage and success by the Swedish Legation in Budapest, helped by some members of the Swedish Red Cross. Until March 1944, Jews who had the privilege of visas for Palestine were free to leave Hungary. On March 18, 1944, Hitler summoned the Regent, Admiral Horthy, to his headquarters. He expressed his indignation that 'in Hungary very nearly a million Jews were able to live in freedom and without restrictions'. Even before the Regent had returned to Budapest, German troops had begun the occupation of Hungary in order to prevent her from abandoning her alliance with {2053|2054} Germany. This occupation forced upon the Head of the Hungarian State a new government that was far more dependent on German authority than the one preceding it. Emigration of the Jews was straightway suspended, and the persecutions began."

Q. Stop there. And if I may have your patience for a moment – there is a paragraph beginning at the bottom of page —

MR. CHRISTIE: I think my friend should read the rest, as he indicated he would, to put it in context.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Very well, Mr. Christie.

Q. Read on.

A. "This was a matter of the gravest concern to the ICRC. The President appealed to the Regent, Admiral Horthy: 'The matters brought to our knowledge seem to us', he wrote on July 5, 1944, 'so utterly contrary to the chivalrous traditions of the great Hungarian people that it is difficult for us to credit even a tithe of the information we are receiving. In the name of the ICRC, I venture to beg Your Highness to give instructions enabling us to reply to these rumours and accusations.' The Regent replied, on August 12: 'It is {2054|2055} unfortunately not within my power to prevent inhuman acts which no one condemns more severely than my people, whose thoughts and feelings are chivalrous. I have instructed the Hungarian Government to take up the settlement of the Jewish question in Budapest. It is to be hoped that this statement will not give rise to serious complications ...'

In the spirit of this reply, the Hungarian authorities allowed the delegate in Budapest to affix shields on the camps and internment buildings for the Jews, conferring on them the protection of the Red Cross. If the use of these shields (hardly compatible, moreover, with the precise terms of the Geneva Convention) was not more extensive, this is due to the fact that the Jewish Senate of Budapest was of opinion that the measure would doubtless lose its effectiveness if generally applied.

The Hungarian Government, furthermore, showed themselves willing to favour a resumption of Jewish emigration. The Committee got in touch with the British and United States Governments as a matter of extreme urgency and, during August, obtained a joint state-{2055|2056}ment from these two Governments declaring their desire to give support by every means to the emigration of Jews from Hungary.

To this end, the Committee was requested to transmit the following message to Budapest from the United States Government: 'The United States Government has been advised by the ICRC of the Hungarian Government's willingness to permit certain categories of refugees to emigrate from Hungary ... The Government of the United States, taking into account the humanitarian considerations involved as regards the Jews in Hungary, now specifically repeats its assurance that arrangements will be made by it for the care of all Jews who in the present circumstances are allowed to leave Hungary and who reach the territory of the United Nations or neutral countries, and that it will find for such people temporary havens of refuge where they may live in safety. The Governments of neutral countries have been advised of these assurances and have been requested to permit the entry into their territory of Jews from Hungary who {2056|2057} may reach their frontiers.'

On October 8, the Hungarian authorities, in conformity with the undertaking given to the Committee, announced the final suspension of deportations and made known that the Kistarcea Camp for Jewish intellectuals, doctors and engineers, had been broken up and the internees released.

The hope raised by this statement was short-lived. A few days later the full tide of the great tribulations of the Hungarian Jews was to set in. In view of the setbacks of the German Army, Admiral Horthy had decided to sever his country's connection with Germany. On October 15, he asked the Allied Powers for an armistice for Hungary. This proclamation had an immense effect amongst the Jews, who were ardent in their demonstrations against the occupying Power. Although the German Army was in retreat both in Eastern and Western Europe, it had still a firm foothold in Hungary. The Regent failed in his plan and was arrested. Hungarian supporters of the G[e]rmans seized power and set about a repression, increasing in severity as the fighting zone came {2057|2058} nearer, placing Budapest in a state of siege. It is alleged that shots were fired from Jewish house on the German troops; however that may be, repression was centred on the Jews. It was immediately decided to remove them from Budapest and to confiscate their property. Sixty thousand Jews fit for work were to be sent to Germany, on foot, in parties of one thousand, by way of Vienna. Moreover, among the able-bodied, men between sixteen and sixty, and women between fourteen and forty were commandeered for forced labour in building fortifications in Hungary. The rest of the Jewish population, including the disabled and sick, was confined in four or five ghettos near Budapest. The only Jews to escape evacuation were those in possession of passports with visas for Palestine, Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal or Spain."

Q. Stop there. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Two-thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Luncheon adjournment.

—— {2058|2059}

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just before the jury comes in, if I may, Your Honour, I have photocopies that I had made of those chapters in two cases, and in one case it's a couple of individual cases where I was reading from, or rather where Sergeant Luby was reading from in the last book, and I propose, subject to Your Honour – I neglected to make any of this matter an exhibit through Sergeant Luby, and I will do that when the jury comes back in, but I propose, subject to Your Honour, to make the volumes an exhibit – I think we are at 31 – 31A, and the photocopies 31B.

THE COURT: Has Mr. Christie seen them?

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

THE COURT: If Mr. Christie wants to look at them and comment on that – if you want to look them over, Mr. Christie, and let me know later, that will be satisfactory.

MR. CHRISTIE: These are, I would be taking it from my friend, photocopies from the volumes that he has referred to.

THE COURT: That is my understanding. {2059|2060}

MR. CHRISTIE: I am prepared to take his word for that. He is certainly an honourable and credible member of the Court.<sup>[SEP]</sup> THE COURT: Certainly. We all know that. But I want to make sure that you are content with the context in the sense that if there is anything more that should be added –

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, they will have the whole volume, because I can always take the volume and argue it from the volume.<sup>[SEP]</sup> What I would like to say, though, about the whole thing is, I don't object to them going in, but I am making it clear, as my understanding of the matter, that they go in not as proof of the contents, but to prove that they are the reports, and to the extent that as they refer to the brochure of "Did Six Million Really Die?", that they test the accuracy of the brochure's citations from them, and not to prove facts extrinsic of any other evidence. I think we agree on that.

THE COURT: You will not get any argument from me on that. You agree with that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's simply, Your {2060|2061} Honour, whether the quotations that were used were representative from the book. I can't say whether the book is accurate any more than the pamphlet – just whether they are in context.

THE COURT: Yes. They can be the next exhibit, having heard from Mr. Christie.

Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:36 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, there is just one matter that I forgot with Sergeant Luby this morning.

Q. Sergeant Luby, you have the three volumes that you have been reading from here?

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I'd ask that those three volumes of the International Committee of the Red Cross Report on Second World War 1939 to 1949 be the next exhibit. I ask that they be 31A, and there are some photocopies that are taken from it.

Q. Would you have a look at those, Sergeant Luby, in those areas that I was reading from that you were reading from, and other than a photocopy of the pages, are there any other markings on those pages? {2061|2062}

A. Just the passages that I read from.

Q. There's a line down the side of those passages that you read from.

A. Yes.

Q. Down the margin of the page.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And at the top of each stapled document there's some writing.

A. It indicates the volume number that the photocopies are from.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. The books will all be there, Your Honour, and the jury will have the benefit of the volumes. I am asking that those photocopies be Exhibit 31B.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 31A: Volumes I, II and III of I.C.R.C. Report on Second World War 1939-1947.

— EXHIBIT NO. 31B: Photocopies of pages cited by Sergeant Luby from I.C.R.C. Report.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I now have no further questions of Sergeant Luby.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes, Mr. Christie.

— {2062|2063}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Witness, I heard you read from parts of this massive three-volume report. The part that concerns me was your reference to the question of hygienic conditions.

Did you read the whole of "B" Section under Activities of the ICRC in behalf of Civilian Internees", not on the stand but some other time?

A. No.

Q. You haven't. Well, I put it to you, witness, that if you had, you would see that the general principles of this are to give the general activities of the ICRC throughout the world. Would you agree?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, I am afraid I am going to have to put the book in front of you and ask you to follow along with me, and put it in context. I've got a different volume, but I am looking at page 594 of my volume, and do you see the same words that you were reading from the volume provided by the prosecution that is now, I think, 31A?

A. Yes.

Q. The words:

"Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates. They often had to take action to have the fixtures made less primitive, and to get them repaired or enlarged."

That is what you read? {2063|2064}

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I suggest to you that if you go back to the beginning of this section, the section is, "(B)" "Activities of the ICRC in behalf of Civilian Internees" throughout the world, and specifically I am referring to the previous sections of this – subsections of this same topic dealing with Japan, China, New Zealand, Italy and many other places throughout the world.

Would you agree?

A. I don't know, sir. I haven't read those sections, so I don't know.

Q. Well, maybe you had better look and follow with me. I put it to you that what they have done here is described their procedures, that is, the ICRC procedures, throughout the world.

Would you agree?

A. Again, you are asking me to agree to something that I haven't read the entire thing.

Q. Well, then we will have to read it. It says, "Visits to Internee Camps": "The conditions in which visits to internment camps were carried out have already been set forth in the chapters dealing with visits to PW camps."

During hostilities and the period following, delegates of the ICRC not only visited internment camps in Europe, but also carried out 177 visits to such camps in the Dutch East Indies, 14 in New Zealand, 109 {2064|2065} in Japan and occupied China, and, lastly, thirteen in Free China."

Have I read that correctly, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you aware that that is the same process of distinction that they deal with in terms of living quarters; secondly, and then thirdly, food, and fourthly, correspondence, and then, fifthly, family camps, and sixthly, clothing – wait a minute – sixthly family camps, seventh, clothing, eighth, employment, ninth, hygiene, and it's from "Hygiene" that you read? Right?

A. Yes. All from the same main –

Q. They come under the main topic of what the ICRC did throughout the world to investigate these general topics in civilian internment camps; is that right – on behalf of civilian internees?

A. That is what it says.

Q. Now, what I want to ask you to confirm is that if you look at the other topic headings, like “Living Quarters”, they state a general proposition that applies in their visits to living quarters throughout the world, and then they use specific examples.

I put it to you that they say, for example;

“Conditions varied considerably, according to the country and place where the internees were detained, and the climate in which they were obliged to live.”

Right under “Living Quarters”. And then {2065|2066} they say:

“At Vittel, in occupied France ...” – for instance – and they give a description of that.

A. Yes.

Q. And they say:

“... at Fayed, in Egypt ...” – and they give a description of that; right?

A. Yes.

Q. And then, “Terza-Guiza”, they are dealing there with Egypt, I see; and in Germany they refer to them, and in Canada – in fact, they had civilian internment camps in Canada according to this, and in England. So I put it to you that in each of these topic areas, sir, they give a general description of their activities throughout the world, and they follow it by specific examples.

Does that appear to be so?

A. That appears to be so, yes.

Q. So I suggest to you in regard to the subject of hygiene, where they make the general statement:

“Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates”

they were not just referring to the nation of Egypt there, as in previous paragraphs, making a general statement followed by examples – right? – one of which was Egypt and another which, later on –

A. It refers to Egypt here.

Q. Yes, Egypt; and later on it refers, {2066|2067} to Rhodesia and Yemen and Japan – all under the general topic in relation to washing places; is that right?

A. It would appear so, yes.

Q. So that if anyone suggested that the remarks pertain only to Egypt when it refers to washing places, you would agree, would you not, that it also refers to washing places in Japan, Egypt, Yemen, Rhodesia and other places?

A. But that specific part that read there, I believe, refers to Egypt.

Q. Well, how do you believe that when it generalizes in other parts, and then –

A. It comes under the title of Egypt, under here, in Egypt.

Q. Where is there a title of “Egypt”?

A. It says, “At Fayed (Egypt)”, and it goes on to refer –

Q. Well, it’s a new paragraph where it says, “Not ...” –

A. But then it goes on, down here, on the same page.

Q. That’s right. That’s right, And in the same way, I put it to you, that when it refers to the general topic of clothing, it makes a general statement about clothing, in topic 7:

“The States which had agreed to apply to civilian internees the PW Convention by analogy, were obliged, under Art. 12, to supply them with clothing, linen and footwear, and to provide regularly for their replacement- {2067|2068}ment and repair. Several of these States, however, were disinclined to carry out their undertakings, pleading that it was in fact impossible to clothe the internees. The delegates, who were anxious to improve the clothing situation which they noted during their visits, after approaching the responsible authorities without success, could only call upon the ICRC for assistance.”

Right? That is the general statement applicable throughout the world, isn’t it?

A. It would appear so, yes.

Q. And they give five, or three, examples:

“In Germany, the British and American internees received issues of battle dress through the ICRC. In occupied France ...”

and they give other examples. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I suggest to you that what they have done here is give a general statement of their activities, then giving examples from various places throughout the world, isn’t that true?

A. At the beginning of each sub-title there appears to be this type of generality, but this section that I read from –

Q. You are going to make a value judgment and tell me that this section – {2068|2069}

A. No.

Q. Go ahead and say what you were going to say.

A. I am saying there is the mention of the word “Egypt”, and it continues to talk about the word “Egypt” and further down it still talks about Egypt and the rise of the Nile, so I assume this is still talking about Egypt.

Q. You assume so, and –

A. And under here it says Japanese.

Q. But it is still under the topic of hygiene. And under laundry facilities I suggest to you, and the care of people from disease [sic] through cleanliness, I put it to you that the general topic of cleanliness and the installation of washing facilities is the start of a new paragraph.

Do you agree or disagree?

A. It is, yes.

Q. All right. I put it to you that in that paragraph and others it follows to describe the particular sanitary conditions throughout the world in various camps inspected by the ICRC. Do you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Thank you.

Now, I put it to you that in regard to the whole subject of whether the reports, the three volumes, refer to extermination and Jewish extermination camps and death camps, you’ve read numerous parts where they say those words, don’t they, in these reports?

A. I read what I read this morning.

Q. Yes. Well, you recall what you {2069|2070} read this morning, don’t you?

A. And it mentions extermination, yes.

Q. Extermination camps and death camps, right?

A. Yes.

Q. This report was written in 1948, wasn’t it?

A. That is what is on that book that I was reading from, yes.

Q. And do you know what the climate was about the subject of death camps?

A. I was only six years old, sir. I couldn’t tell you.

Q. I put it to you that anybody in 1948 that didn’t believe in death camps would have been very unpopular. Right?

A. I don’t know, sir.

Q. You don’t know. You just read what you’re told.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. What I suggest to you is that you have read these and read through them – have you?

A. No, sir.

Q. I put it to you that if you have read these, you won’t find any evidence of death camps or extermination camps. Do you agree?

THE COURT: It is pretty hard for him to answer that.

THE WITNESS: I couldn’t answer that, {2070|2071} sir.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I withdraw that.

In your reading did you find any evidence in these reports of the existence of death camps verified by the ICRC in their visits?

Q. Only what I read his morning from the excerpts where they mention death camps and extermination. Other than that, no, sir.

Q. All right. I put it to you the ICRC actually published earlier reports of visits to the camp of Auschwitz. Are you familiar with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you agree that throughout the portions that you read from the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” the words quoted, with the exception of one instance where the numbers were different, were actually found where they were alleged to be in these reports?

A. I would say so, yes.

Q. Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have nothing arising out of that.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

The witness retires [sic].

MR. GRIFFITHS: I wonder, Your Honour, if I might address you in the absence of the jury for just a moment.

—————
(Volume X Follows) {2071|2072}

VOLUME X

— The jury retires. 2:50 p.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour. The reason I asked the jury out is because Mr. De Grace is still waiting at the request of my friend, and I didn't want to get into anything prejudicial.

THE COURT: Do you have further requirements of his presence?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: And does the Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: He is free to go.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Your Honour, as of this moment I have no other viva voce evidence to call. I think I indicated last week my rough schedule of events. A gentleman is coming from Washington, D.C., and will be in Toronto at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning to be available to testify tomorrow afternoon.

I am prepared, and Mr. Christie and I have been comparing notes on this off and on; to commence argument now on the issue of judicial notice, and hold off on discussing the movie, admissibility of any movie, until the gentleman is here.

————— {2072|2073}

THE COURT: What is the argument on judicial notice, just generally speaking, so I can get a drift of what it is?

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right, sir. I am going to ultimately be asking Your Honour to take judicial notice of two matters:

First, that millions of Jews were annihilated from 1933 to 1945 because of the deliberate policies of Nazi Germany.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Secondly, Your Honour, I will be asking you to take judicial notice that the means of annihilation included mass shootings, starvation, privation and gassing.

Those are the two matters that I am going to ask you to take judicial notice of, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You are prepared to argue that now?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am prepared to argue both the law and to present to you, Your Honour, material in support of that application, material in support of my position that these are notorious facts commonly known to all people. {2073|2074}

THE COURT: How long do you think that your side will take?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think in terms of arguing the law, Your Honour, that I expect to be a half an hour. I have cases here and copies for Your Honour. As to referring Your Honour to sources and materials, I will be longer. I will be about an hour.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

Mr. Christie, are you prepared to argue it now? And if so, what are your views as to the time that this all may take?

Actually, I want to tell the jury something, and I want to hear from Crown.

MR. CHRISTIE: I said to my friend earlier that you can send the jury home because we are going to take the rest of the afternoon.

THE COURT: About that I have no worry. What about tomorrow morning?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't intend to be more than an hour and a half on the matter of judicial notice. I have said to my friend in respect to this man from Washington about the film he wants to show, I am prepared to admit as a fact that the film he purports {2074|2075} to bring with him is the authentic original from the archives of the United States, made just after the Second World War. That is not to say I agree it should be evidence, but I am not going to argue about the superficial formalities of its origin.

I will be arguing the substance of the matter of whether it's admissible, and I'd just as soon not allow the confusion of the formalities to cloud our consideration, but – so that I think helps to alleviate the necessity to prove that formality from Washington or anywhere else.

I have seen the film. I have a copy I think. I am sure I do. So that will speed that up, I think.

THE COURT: As far as you are concerned, they are two separate items:

One is judicial notice along the lines Mr. Griffiths has mentioned, and the other is the admissibility or otherwise of a film.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: About the film, I would be prepared to argue that in half an hour, and as {2075|2076} far as judicial notice is concerned, although I've got a volume of cases here, I think I could be as brief as forty minutes.

THE COURT: Well, then, my instincts indicate that the jury should be excused till tomorrow afternoon at two thirty. Is that overly long?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, it isn't overly long, Your Honour. If we are going to be discussing the film, and Mr. Christie did advise me that he was prepared to make the admissions that he's indicated now and for which I am much obliged, but I do take the position that formalities are important in determining the admissibility of evidence, and that there may be aspects to the storage and the distribution of this film that I can't advise Your Honour without the assistance of this gentleman.

So I am going to have him come, in any event.

THE COURT: What time is he coming?

MR. GRIFFITHS: He, I understand his flight gets in – he is leaving at eight o'clock in the morning and his flight gets in at eleven o'clock, but prior to his arrival, if we get that far, I have a copy of the film here, projector and screen will be here {2076|2077} tomorrow, and we can go that far for Your Honour to look at the movie to consider its presentation and content without him.

THE COURT: Depending on – sorry, did I cut you off here?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Depending on the ruling with respect to the judicial notice and with respect to the film, would that be the end of the Crown's case?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 3:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, in your absence I think I can say to you that there are certain problems that, from what I've heard, will occupy this Court in your absence for certainly the balance of this afternoon. They will, in all likelihood, take up most of tomorrow morning. You will recall that I mentioned to you longer ago than I consider to think about now that there would be time when you would be asked to leave the courtroom. This is one of those {2077|2078} times.

I still have not forgotten what the inside of a jury room looks like. You are free to go until tomorrow afternoon at two thirty. Thank you very much.

— The jury retires. 3:01 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, the law in Canada with respect to judicial notice is referred to in Chapter 24 of McWilliams on Evidence (2d) which is at page 637, and it sets out the general law in this area, and I would suggest it sets it out correctly.

Many of the cases that I will be referring to, really, repeat the same propositions over and over again, and I will spare Your Honour reading the same phrases over and over again.

Page 638 of McWilliams, under the heading, "The General Rule", the general rule of when judicial notice can be taken is set out as follows, and it's a quotation from the case of R. v. Bennett, 4 C.C.C (2d) 55 at page 66, a decision of the Nova Scotia County Court: {2078|2079}

"Courts will take judicial notice of what is considered by reasonable men of that time and place to be indisputable either by resort to common knowledge or to sources of indisputable accuracy easily accessible to men in the situation of members of that court."

And in an article of Mr. Morgan called "Judicial Notice", from the Harvard Law Review – also Wigmore, Stephen's Digest, and an article by G.D. Nokes – is also cited as authority for that principle.

That, in a nutshell, Your Honour, is what occurs over and over again in the cases as the test that the courts should apply in considering whether or not to take judicial notice of any matter.

It is repeated again at page 639 in a variety of ways. Page 640 at McWilliams, in relation to expert evidence, it indicates that, "The fields of judicial notice and expert testimony are on the whole mutually exclusive. The doctrine of judicial notice does not have as its criterion the actual knowledge of the judge, but rather general knowledge. So that although its scope is continually enlarging, it lags behind the advance of {2079|2080} expert scientific knowledge. Thus a judge cannot take judicial notice of a fact based on expert evidence given in the case when such fact is not sufficiently general or notorious.

Under the next heading, "Reference to Sources", the author, McWilliams, indicates that the other authorities, Stephen, Phipson, and I looked in MacCormack as well, Your Honour, which says that, "A judge may insist that before taking notice of matters of common knowledge the party requesting that notice be taken should produce references."

It goes on to indicate that those references are produced by way of argument and not by formal proof or evidence through a witness box. It is simply produced for perusal with the judge's consideration.

The article refers also, on page 642, to the particular field of history as a subject matter of judicial notice, and it indicates as follows, under that heading:

"Phipson says approved public and general histories may be referred to to prove ancient facts of a public or general, though not those of a private particular or local, nature." And there is a {2080|2081} citation given there in support of that proposition.

"The Court may take judicial notice of the facts of history whether past or contemporaneous ... and the Court is entitled to rely on its own historical knowledge and researches ... The assessment and interpretation of the historical documents and enactments tendered in evidence must be approached in the light of present-day research and knowledge disregarding ancient concepts formulated when understanding of the customs and cultures of our original people was rudimentary and incomplete and when they were thought to be wholly without cohesion, laws or culture, in effect a subhuman species." {2081|2082}

I have here the case dealing with the rights of our native population; and it refers to original decisions from the eighteen hundreds where they were referred to as savages who were not entitled to this land, anyway, because they wouldn't know how to use it, and Mr. Justice Hall has taken a certainly more enlightened, modern and proper view of this situation, but has taken it by way of judicial notice, Your Honour. I have the Calder case here, Your Honour. That citation of Mr. Justice Hall is often quoted and is on page 169 of that Supreme Court of Canada case, and notwithstanding that Mr. Justice Hall is writing in dissent, that area in which he is dissenting doesn't appear to cover this area on judicial notice.

The general principles, Your Honour, of judicial notice are again discussed in the article referred to in McWilliams under the "General Rule" that I read earlier at page 638, the article of Mr. E.M. Morgan from the Harvard Law Review, and I have that here. I just want to make sure that I don't hand up my marked copy. And it's from the Harvard Law

Review, Volume 57, January of 1944, article entitled, "Judicial Notice", and it's a very, I would suggest, thoughtful article, {2082|2083} Your Honour, in, that Mr. Morgan considers a number of the different problems that can arise and attempts to analyze those problems and how they might be resolved in the judicial proceeding, and I would refer you, Your Honour, in particular, to page 286 of that article – sorry, page 285, beginning at the first full paragraph, where the author indicates:

"The truth, then, is that there are at least some matters of fact in the realm of judicial notice which are not subject to contradiction by evidence, and that the decisions rejecting or disregarding the contrary evidence can be explained on no other theory."

If I can pause there for a moment, Your Honour, part of what the article is concerned with – and I think ultimately will be a concern in this trial as well – is whether or not the Court having taken judicial notice, whether this is a prima facie matter that is subject to subsequent rebuttal, or whether that is a final finding of the Court that is not subject to rebuttal evidence; and this is what Mr. Morgan is discussing in this section:

"It is also true that in some cases a trial judge has been reversed for rejecting evidence as {2083|2084} to matter which he ruled to be within the domain of judicial notice. There is not a single decision reversing, and it is believed not a single judicial expression disapproving the action of a trial judge in rejecting evidence of a matter held by the Appellate Court to be a proper subject of judicial notice. The reversals are easily explained as holding that the matter in question was not within the field of judicial notice. The decisions affirming the rulings rejecting the contrary evidence, as well as others reversing rulings receiving or giving effect to such evidence, cannot be harmonized with Mr. Wigmore's theory."

And of course, that is Mr. Wigmore on Evidence, Your Honour, that he is referring to.

*"In his opinion there is no matter of fact that is not subject to dispute. All judicially noticed propositions of fact are only prima facie true. Mr. Thayer seems to concede that some judicially noticed matters are indisputable – 'cannot well be supposed to admit of a question' – but insists that others are only prima facie to be taken as true. If these others are not what they seem to be from his examples – overbroad statements or overbroad inter-{2084|2085}pretations of statements of the tenor of the matter to be judicially noticed – then Mr. Thayer in effect recognizes two classes of judicial notice, conclusive and prima facie. Are these learned authors really making the field of judicial notice a segment of the field of presumptions? Mr. Wigmore's explanation of the cases asserting the indisputability of matter judicially noticed read much like his explanation of so-called conclusive presumptions. Both his and Mr. Thayer's statements of the proper effect of taking judicial notice are startlingly like their statements of the effect of presumptions."*

*"It is fortunate that thus far the Courts have not enmeshed problems of judicial notice in the language of presumptions; to do so would open another legal Pandora's box. But if judicially noticed matter is subject to rebuttal by evidence, it cannot be long before members of the bar will be demanding rulings as to the exact effect of judicially noticing a matter. If the matter is subject to judicial notice, the court may, by universally declared authority, seek information from any and all sources which it deems reliable. {2085|2086} Must these sources be disclosed to counsel and the authors of the material relied on be produced for cross-examination? Is the court to be subject to cross-examination as to the extent of its search for relevant data and the validity of its deductions? How much evidence is required to make the contrary of the judicially noticed matter an open question for the trier of fact? How much will entirely nullify the prima facie effect of judicial notice? In a jury case may the judge reveal to the jury either the data which has caused him to deem the matter a proper subject of judicial notice or the fact that the matter is within the field of judicial notice? Must he reveal this? In either case, what instruction must he give as to this aspect of the case? Does the party disputing judicially noticed matter have only the burden of producing evidence, or the burden of persuasion also, or something less or something more? If rebuttable judicial notice is not just another* name for a presumption, how does it differ from a presumption? If it is a presumption, is it a species of presumption which requires special treatment?

"The problem is more than one of terminology. If the field of judicial notice of facts contains only {2086|2087} the indisputable, then the path of counsel is clear. The party seeking judicial notice has the burden of convincing the judge that (a) the matter is so notorious as not to be the subject of dispute among reasonable men or (b) the matter is capable of immediate accurate demonstration by resort to readily accessible sources of indisputable accuracy. There is no artificial limit upon the sources of information which he may furnish the judge, and none upon those which the judge may consult of his own motion. The opponent likewise is not restricted by rules of evidence in offering, or inducing the judge to consult reliable depositories of relevant data. If the judge believes it doubtful whether the matter falls within the domain of judicial notice, or if the sources available are inadequate, he leaves the subject within the domain of evidence, and all the ordinary rules applicable to the process of resolving an ordinary issue of fact are enforced. If he is convinced that the matter is within the field of judicial notice and of the tenor of the matter to be noticed, he removes it from the field of dispute. If the field of judicial notice contains both the disputable and the indisputable, where is the line drawn? What guide can counsel or a trial judge {2087|2088} use? When do the rules of evidence come into operation, and when are the ordinary criteria for directing a nonsuit or a verdict or finding applicable? If all matters within the field are disputable, then all possible questions as to the exact function of judicial notice and its relation to presumptions will demand answers.

"It is submitted that not only theoretical [sic] symmetry but also practical considerations strongly support the thesis that matter in the field of judicial notice is not subject to attack by evidence. If there be a dispute as to whether a matter is a subject of dispute, the question to be answered is whether the matter lies within the field of evidence or within the field of judicial notice; and the material which may be presented or consulted in a search for the answer is in no respect limited by the rules of evidence."

Your Honour, I'm sorry to have read that long passage, but I commend that to you as a most useful, I would suggest, statement of principles, and the way in which the principles are to be applied.

I adopt Mr. Morgan's conclusion that if Your Honour finds that a matter does come within the field of judicial notice, that this ends the matter; it is not {2088|2089} a rebuttable presumption.

THE COURT: Let's assume, for the moment, that we are talking about another subject, for example, altogether.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Let me ask you this. I Would you agree that, as a general proposition of history, that it would be open to me, as a trial judge, to take judicial notice that in 1807 Wellington won the Battle of Waterloo against the French?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Would you be of the same view if the subject was not who won the Battle of Waterloo in Belgium, but rather how many regiments were on Wellington's side of cavalry that charged in that case?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would say, Your Honour, that if we have reference to – as McWilliams says, as Morgan says, and the other authorities that if it is a fact considered by reasonable men of this time and place, in Toronto, to be indisputable either by resort to common knowledge or to sources of indisputable, easily accessible to men in this situation, and members of the court, then yes. {2089|2090}

THE COURT: Yes. As long as those sources are. accurate. Let's assume for the moment that we have a writer writing for the French, and one writing for the British. You don't mean to say that all those sources are deadly accurate as to who had most men on the field at that time.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. What the court would have resort to, if the application is made, is to look at sources of counsel or; from its own researches, determine whether that is something that is indisputably accurate. If the court finds that it is not —

THE COURT: Then it will become a matter of evidence.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Fair enough. Sorry to interrupt. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I am obliged to Your Honour.

Page 293, Your Honour, still in the Morgan Report, the first full paragraph starting there with the American Law Institute's Code of Evidence, just to paraphrase, Your Honour, rather than to read, I commend {2090|2091} that to you over to the end of the article on page 294.

There is, in the United States, the American Law Code of Evidence dealing with judicial notice, and the proper way that it can be dealt with, and I would suggest that the criterias set out in that Code of Evidence meet what is going on in court here now, that the criteria have been met by the Crown in bringing this application.

THE COURT: All right. That's number one, or (a), is it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I will go through it, and before I am through, hopefully I will have met the criteria:

"(a) requiring that the party requesting judicial notice furnish the judge sufficient information and give each adverse party notice necessary to enable him to meet the request; (b) —"

MR. CHRISTIE: May I just ask what you are reading from?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am reading from the Morgan Article, page 293, and it is the first full paragraph about two-thirds of the way down the page:

(b) by providing that the judge shall decline to take judicial notice of a matter unless it {2091|2092} clearly is indisputable; (c) by directing the judge, where the fact would in the absence of judicial notice be determined by the trier of fact, to direct the jury to find the matter as judicially noticed, or, in a non jury case, to include in the record of the trial a statement of the matter so noticed; (d) by making it mandatory that the judge inform the parties of the tenor of any matter to be judicially noticed by him and afford each of them reasonable opportunity to present to him information relevant to the propriety of taking such judicial notice or to the tenor of the matter to be noticed; and (e) by allowing both the trial judge in proceedings subsequent to trial and the reviewing [sic] court to take judicial notice, but requiring in such event that the parties be afforded reasonable opportunity to present information relevant to the propriety of taking such judicial notice and to the tenor of the matter to be noticed."

Which doesn't apply to us.

THE COURT: Assuming, for the moment, Mr. Griffiths, that you succeed, what do you propose that I do with my finding of having found judicial notice that millions of Jews were annihilated between 1933 to 1945, and because of the policies of Nazi Germany, and that the {2092|2093} means were as you've set them out? What do I do with that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I would say, Your Honour, that as I understand the authorities, that the jury is instructed by Your Honour that this is a finding, an instruction of law that the following facts are found, and they are binding on the jury as findings of fact.

THE COURT: With what issues, if any, is the jury then left?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, the article that clearly – that is what it is most concerned with. I don't think it is concerned with Exhibit 2 at all. It is concerned with Exhibit 1.

I have purposefully, Your Honour, made the definitions or the material that I am asking you – not the material, but the phrase, the historical event that I am asking you to take judicial notice of, quite broad, not to the particular of how many people were in Auschwitz, or how many people died at Belzec or whether Nuremberg was a properly conducted trial, but dealing with the broadest, most commonly known, I would suggest, generalization of history, and it would leave the particulars which are in dispute, and there are certainly {2093|2094} quite a number of those indicated in the pamphlet, and it would leave Mr. Zundel's belief in dispute, and whether or not this pamphlet, Exhibit 1 created a mischief to a public interest.

This doesn't, by any means, Your Honour, I would suggest, take all the issues away from the jury, but it leaves a great deal open to dispute and a full and complete defence available on a number of issues.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

I next refer Your Honour to the case of the Prince Edward Island Supreme Court of The King v. Savdant, which is cited at 19 Maritime Province Reports, page 448, a decision of Chief Justice Campbell given in 1945, and I would refer you in particular, Your Honour, to the bottom – and this was a case where judicial notice, as the head note indicates, of facts of common knowledge is confined to notice of facts of general and notorious knowledge not necessarily co-extensive with the actual knowledge of the judge. It does not extend to the opinion of scientific or technical experts; and what they are {2094|2095} concerned with here is a process of alcohol fermentation in impaired driving cases.

At page 449, starting at the last paragraph, Mr. Justice Campbell says as follows:

"The actual knowledge of the Judge or jury is not the criterion of the limits of judicial notice in either direction. The limits are rather those of knowledge imputed by the law, and within those limits a Judge may refresh his memory or knowledge by reference to maps, dictionaries, text-books or evidence. It is therefore conceivable that if a witness informed a Judge of some such imputed fact (of which the Judge happened to be ignorant or forgetful) that fact could in a subsequent case be judicially noted, – not because of the evidence in the previous case, but because the fact is in reality one whose knowledge the law imputes to all Judges.

Knowledge so imputed tends to be general, rather than particular, and notorious, rather than obscure or technical. So that although the scope of judicial notice, is constantly enlarging, it lags very far behind the advance of expert scientific knowledge."

And that has a familiar ring to it from McWilliams. {2095|2096}

Going to the leading cases, Your Honour, in Ontario is the case of R. v. Potts of our Ontario Court of Appeal which dealt with a minor traffic violation which occurred in the Colonel By Drive in Ottawa, and the Crown, Your Honour, forgot to prove that the Colonel By Drive was under the auspices of the National Capital Commission, and was bringing an application that judicial notice be taken of that. And other cases of judicial notice that I have indicated, Your Honour, from McWilliams and from Morgan are indicated again by our own Court of Appeal, starting on page 201.

Actually, if I could, at the bottom of page 200, the same principle is set out again. Judicial notice is defined. Your Honour, this is a judgment of the entire court:

"Judicial notice, it has been said, is the acceptance by a court or judicial tribunal, without the requirement of proof, of the truth of a particular fact or state of affairs that is of such general or common knowledge in the community that proof of it can be dispensed with. The doctrine is thus said to be an exception to the general rule that a judge or jury may consider only evidence which has been tendered in court and may not act on personal {2096|2097} knowledge."

And on the first edition of McWilliams it is referred to there, Your Honour, and another case, I would move down again to where our court is speaking:

"Thus it has been held that, generally speaking, a court may properly take judicial notice of any fact or matter which is so generally known and accepted that it cannot reasonably be questioned, or any fact or matter which can readily be determined or verified by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned."

At page 203, Your Honour, around line "e", if I may, the court indicates: "There are, it seems to me, at least two distinct threads running through these cases. The first has to do with the standard to be applied in determining what is common knowledge, and the point which the cases make is that what constitutes common knowledge is to be judged by reference to what is common knowledge in the community where and when the issue is being tried. The second has to do with the proper function of an appellate court ...", which we needn't go into, Your Honour, at this point. {2097|2098}

said in McWilliams, the manner in which the court can inform itself as well as counsel, to provide information to the judge which are reputed to be indisputable sources.

Your Honour, I have lots of other Canadian cases here, another half a dozen, but as I indicated at the outset, they all basically indicate the same principle. The principle has been used in the past to determine, to take judicial notice of historical events when a certain battle takes place, or that conditions in Southern Saskatchewan in 1933 at the height of the Depression were the worst conditions – matters of general and local history where the matter is being tried.

Finally, Your Honour, as promised just a short month ago, I have the decision of Mr. Justice Thomas Johnson, the Honourable Thomas Johnson, a judge of the Superior Court of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, in a civil trial, Mel Mermelstein, plaintiff, v. The Institute for Historical Review, Legion for the Survival of Freedom, etcetera, et al, defendants. {2098|2099}

As I understand, Your Honour, this was a case where the defendants had offered a reward for anyone proving that there were gas chambers in Auschwitz.

Mr. Mermelstein came forward with an affidavit of his own experiences in Auschwitz and claimed that reward. The defendants indicated that that was not sufficient proof, and Mr. Mermelstein launched the lawsuit, I believe in the sum of fifty million dollars, requesting payment. The lawsuit, the civil suit, my understanding is, Your Honour, is still outstanding, but early on in that lawsuit an application was made by the plaintiff's lawyer for His Honour Judge Johnson to take judicial notice of – as Mr. Christie muttered, [sic] the very fact in issue.

On page 11, Your Honour, I believe is where it is. He is asking the judge to take judicial notice of the fact that Jews were gassed to death in Auschwitz, in Poland, in the summer of 1944; and after considering the material put before him by both counsel as to whether or not that was an indisputable fact, the Court ruled on page 36 – and what I've given you, Your Honour, the thirty-six pages, is not all ruling; it is a transcript of the proceedings before the judge where {2099|2100} the argument is being made, and there was discussion between counsel and the judge, and the ultimate ruling is very short, Your Honour. And on page 36, starting at line 17, the Court:

I am going to take plaintiff's motion for summary adjudication under submission other than the point with respect to Mr. Brandon's status as a director, but going back to the plaintiff's request for judicial notice, and I do not know that the ruling that I am going to make on that right now really determines conclusively any of the causes of action completely.

I think the plaintiff's request is entitled to be complied with to this extent [sic]. Under Evidence Code s.452(H) this Court does take judicial notice of the fact that Jews were gassed to death at Auschwitz Concentration Camp in Poland during the summer of 1944.

That is the extent of his judicial notice, Your Honour. He goes on to say, at line 6 on page 37:

It is not reasonably subject to dispute and it is capable of immediate and accurate determination by resort to sources of reasonably indisputable accuracy. {2100|2101} It is simply a fact. It does not determine this lawsuit necessarily.

Now, before – I have quite a number of material, Your Honour, that I am prepared to launch into, of resource material that I would refer Your Honour to, but perhaps we should do that after recess.

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes..

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Over the recess, Your Honour, one more case was brought to my attention that I would like to refer Your Honour to, and I do not – my apologies, I do not have copies of it.

THE COURT: I can find it. Give me the citation.

MR. GRIFFITHS: British Columbia Law Reports, Volume 55, page 78. It's the case of R. v. Bartleman. It's a decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, Mr. Justice Carruthers, Lambert and Essen on the bench, and the decision is rendered by Mr. Justice Lambert. It's a decision, Your Honour, dealing again with aboriginal Indian rights. {2101|2102}

A man was charged with hunting, contrary to the Wildlife Act, in a given area of British Columbia, and raises as a defence that he was exercising his right to hunt as a member of a particular tribe of Indians who had a right to hunt under a Treaty of 1852.

The applicability here, Your Honour, is that the Justice took judicial notice of historical facts, again relating to that particular Treaty, and to Indians in British Columbia, and he sets out in the judgment at page 82; quite a number of scholarly writings that he referred to, in addition to just the Treaty, to determine the historical facts and whether or not it was beyond dispute.

That's the same principle, Your Honour, that I would be seeking to introduce into this trial. The volume I have is from the York County Library.

THE COURT: I will see that it is returned.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And Your Honour, I am suggesting, or would suggest to you that the test is – there are really two separate tests of when judicial notice may be taken, and if either one of those tests are met, then Your Honour should take judicial notice. {2102|2103}

The first test is whether the facts that I asked you to take judicial notice of are indisputable by reasonable men by resort to common knowledge, and then whether – the second test would be whether it's a fact that it is easily ascertainable by resort to different sources.

With respect to the first arm of the test, Your Honour, I would respectfully suggest that the Holocaust, and perhaps for precision in terms, rather than referring to Holocaust, referring to it as the annihilation of European Jewry between 1933 and 1945 by reasons of deliberate policy of Nazi-Germany, is one of the most documented events in human history.

It is, as Your Honour has heard from Dr. Hilberg, it is the subject matter of vast numbers of documents that are in repositories, in archives in the United States, Germany, France, other countries. Those documents, Your Honour, and that documentation, have been studied for the last forty years by numerous historians, and the events surrounding that historical event, Your Honour, have been – the individuals involved in those historical events have been charged and tried, many of them, in various countries by various tribunals. {2103|2104}

So these matters have been repeatedly tried in courts of law, and my understanding, Your Honour, and I may be proven wrong, but this is the first time that these events have been denied in a court of law.

In the trials, Your Honour, began, again as Your Honour has heard some evidence of in this proceeding, with the trials of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg. The judgment of the International Military Tribunal was a judgment rendered on behalf of all the Allies of which Canada was one, and it was subsequently adopted by the United Nations of which Canada is a signatory.

I will be referring, Your Honour, to some specifics that are in that judgment, but initially I'd like to have an overview of other trials on these issues.

There have been, following the International Military Tribunal, a number of trials that were held by both the Americans in Germany, and by Russian and Polish courts of war criminals.

In the American Military Tribunal there were the following cases which are referred to as the Zyklon-B case, and I said this was American, and I will {2104|2105} refer to which tribunal it is as I go along, Your Honour I have the notation here – held before the British Military Court at Nuremberg, 1st to the 8th of March, 1946, which is cited in the Law Reports of Trials of War Criminals, a series selected and prepared by the United Nations Commission, the Chairman of which was Lord Wright of England, in Volume 1 of that series, page 93 to 103 where the gassing procedure at Auschwitz was described in detail by German eye witnesses, two of the three accused were trial, which held before a September to series that sentenced to death and hanged.

Your Honour, the so-called Belsen trial was the trial of Josef Kramer and 44 others held before a British Military Court at Luneberg, 17th September to the 17th of December, 1946, cited in the have indicated at Volume II, Case No. 10, pages 1 to 54, thirty of the accused – and there were forty-five in that trial – were found guilty and sentences varying from a death penalty to imprisonment were imposed.

The trial of Hauptsturmführer Goeth, the commandant of a forced labour camp near Krakaw held before the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland, 27th of August to 5th of December, 1946, cited at Volume 7, Case {2105|2106} No. 37, pages 1 to 10, this trial, I understand, Your Honour, dealt at length with atrocities committed as part of a general pattern of German atrocities. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to death.

Next was the trial of Rudolf Hoess, commandant of Auschwitz Camp, held before the Supreme Military Tribunal of Poland, 11th to the 20th of March, 1947, Volume 7, case number 38, pages 11 to 26, the charges included responsibility for the death of millions of people, mainly Jews, and specifically that the killings took place by asphyxiation in gas chambers, shooting, hanging, lethal injections of phenol, as a result of medical experiments, and systematic starvation.

The evidence relating to the medical experiments on the inmates, mainly Jews, included castration, sterilization of women by pumping chemicals into the uterus, and by x-ray.

The accused was found guilty and sentenced to death.

There is the trial of Oswald Pohl and 17 others before the United States Military Tribunal No. 2 at Nuremberg, 8th of April, 1947 to 3rd of November, 1947. It's reported, Your Honour, in a fifteen-volume set of {2106|2107} a report commonly referred to as the Green Series. That is the colour of the binding. Volume 5, pages 195 to 1273. That trial dealt among other things with the systematic persecution of the Jews, culminating in a policy of wholesale extermination in all parts of German-occupied Europe.

Pohl and three others were sentenced to death and the remaining accused had varying terms of imprisonment.

Next, Your Honour, is the trial involving Dachau Concentration Camp, a man by the name of Weiss and 39 others, held before the General Military Government Court of the United States Zone in Dachau, Germany, 15th of November to the 13th of December, 1945, cited as Volume 11 of the Green Series, Case No. 60, pages 5 to 52.

The case dealt with killings, beatings, tortures and starvation of inmates in the camp. All forty accused were found guilty. Thirty-six of them were sentenced to death.

Your Honour, there is the trial of Orich Greifeldt and 13 others before the United States Military Tribunal, Nuremberg, 10th of October, 1947, to {2107|2108} the 10th of March, 1948, Volume 13, Case No. 73, pages 1 to 69.

The trial dealt with racial persecutions and the implementation of the policy of genocide. Thirteen of the accused were found guilty and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

Next, Your Honour, is the trial of – I will give you his last name – Greiser, before the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland, 21st of June to the 7th of July, 1946, Volume 13, Case No. 74, pages 70 to 117.

The trial dealt, amongst other things, with the encouragement and organization of local pogrom, seizing of Jews for compulsory labour, and later killings by gas vans at the Chelmno Concentration Camp. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to death.

Next is the trial of Dr. Joseph Buhler before the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland, 17th of June to the end of July, 1948, Volume 14, Case No. 8, pages 23 to 48.

That case dealt, amongst other things, with the extermination of Jews. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to death. {2108|2109}

Immediately since, Your Honour, the years immediately preceding the War – I'm sorry, succeeding the War, there have been a number of other trials involving war crimes, and the most famous of which was the Auschwitz Trial, and that is the one that we have here reference to in this court, and held by the Federal Republic of West Germany, in Frankfurt, from the 23rd of December, 1963, to the 20th of August, 1965, and that's the accused Mulka and 21 other former S.S. personnel.

That trial, I understand, Your Honour, was an ordinary criminal trial held before a German court, and nine members presiding – three judges and six jurors.

The accused were charged with complicity in mass murders by gasings and other means, and also murder of individual inmates.

In the course of 182 days of hearings, 288 witnesses gave evidence. The systematic mass killing in gas chambers was not disputed either by the accused or their counsel. They merely denied individual complicity or relied on the defence of superior orders.

Seventeen of the twenty-two accused {2109|2110} were found guilty of complicity in mass exterminations.

Those proceedings, Your Honour, are reported in Bernd Naumann, title "Auschwitz". English translation was published in 1966.

It is worthy of note, Your Honour, that in his closing address at the Auschwitz trial, I understand one of the prosecutors observed as follows:

If the survivors of the hell of Auschwitz could no longer bear witness, and certain circles are waiting for just that, than Auschwitz would become nothing but a legend in a short time. Were it not for this trial in which the truth was heard out of the mouths of the survivors, those who refused to learn would have continued their attempts to minimize. That this is no longer possible is next to the punishment of the guilty of the lasting achievement of this exemplary [sic] trial.

Your Honour, there is also the trial of Franz Stangl – this was a West German trial – who was the commandant of Sobibor from March 1942 to September of 1942, and also the commandant of Treblinka from September 1942 to August 1943, who was sentenced on the 22nd of December, 1970, by a German court at {2110|2111} Dusseldorf to lifetime imprisonment for co-responsibility in the murder of some nine hundred thousand men, women and children, namely Jews, inmates of Treblinka.

There are other trials, Your Honour, one of which is referred to in Exhibit [sic] 1 as the Eichmann trial in Israel, a trial that lasted fourteen weeks up to the 11th of December, 1961, when Eichmann was found guilty on all counts of his involvement in the final solution and sentenced to death by hanging.

Eichmann's counsel, Your Honour, Dr. Robert Serbatus [Servatus], who was hired by Eichmann, who I understand was one of the defence counsel from the Nuremberg trials, I am advised commented both before the trial court and the appeal court that Eichmann had received a fair trial. Nowhere, either in the trial court or the court of appeal, was there a denial by Eichmann or his counsel that the Jews were systematically annihilated – in accordance with the first area that I am asking you to take judicial notice of.

Eichmann, Your Honour, in his final appearance in court just answered the following:

Today, of my own free will, I would ask the Jewish people for pardon and would confess that {2111|2112} am bowed down with the shame at the thought of the inequities committed against the Jews and the injustices done to them, but in the light of the ground given in the judgment, this would in all probability be construed as hypocrisy.

There are other judicial proceedings, Your Honour, which have been going on in West Germany, and I will be passing up to Your Honour a brief document that's about a hundred pages long put out by a Mr. Delbert Ruckerl [Adalbert Rückerl] who was the Chief Prosecutor of German war crimes for the last twenty years. He has statistics of people that were prosecuted and where they have been prosecuted and what for and the result of the courts.

Again, to my understanding, it has never been in issue before the court that the Holocaust, as I have indicated, in the first area that I am asking you to take judicial notice of, happened.

Your Honour, I have the benefit, and I will give Your Honour the benefit, of material that was filed in the California Court in support of the application there for judicial notice.

THE COURT: You say the Mermelstein application has not yet been adjudicated upon? {2112|2113}

MR. GRIFFITHS: The ruling has been made with respect to judicial notice, Your Honour, but the final decision as to who wins the fifty million dollars hasn't been decided.

THE COURT: What does this material, therefore, mean?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That material, Your Honour, is in a ruling that I gave you earlier and before the recess of – this material was before the judge at the time that he made that ruling.

In other words, in the United States, as here, counsel is permitted to present material to the judge in support of their request for judicial notice.

These are some of the materials, as I understand, that were presented to Judge Thomas in support of the application for judicial notice.

I can review that, Your Honour, in detail, but I can also outline to Your Honour that what it contains are references, some brief some long, to historical works. In particular, there is a lengthy reference to John Toland's biography of Adolf Hitler. There is also a lengthy reference to a book written by Mr. Hausner, the prosecutor of Adolf Eichmann, relating {2113|2114} that prosecution and some of the details of that trial.

There are also references, Your Honour, to photocopies of that affidavit of four or five historians indicating their background and their position in this matter.

There's also quotations from dictionaries [sic] and from the Encyclopaedia Britannica [sic] and from, I believe, reference to the proceedings at the Auschwitz trial that I have referred you to already. There are some quotations from that proceeding. And I would suggest to you, Your Honour, that those are all matters I won't take the Court's time by reading them, but I commend them to you.

THE COURT: Well, they speak for themselves.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. In addition, Your Honour, I would, in dealing with the issue of whether or not this material, or whether or not these are facts that are notorious, commonly known, to which anybody has reasonable access.

I refer again to the Encyclopaedia Britannica [sic] article that is quoted in the material as a common, reliable source of information, and I have also, Your Honour, some words photocopied out of Webster's Ninth {2114|2115}

New Collegiate Dictionary. I chose that particular dictionary rather than the Oxford Dictionary because I thought this was one that was more immediately accessible to people, and I asked my student, Your Honour – and can't say for the record what the date of the publication is – it is the Ninth Collegiate Dictionary.

THE COURT: And the reference from the extract is what?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I had my student look up several words, and I would refer you in particular to the last photocopied page to the word

"Holocaust", which is on the righthand column, and it is defined, leaving aside the Greek, as follows:

- (1) "A sacrifice consumed by fire;"
- (2) "A thorough destruction, especially by fire, as in nuclear holocaust;"
- (3) "Often capitalized, the genocidal slaughter of Jews during World War II." That is how it's referred to there, Your Honour.

There is, since the Mermelstein material was put before the California Court, Your Honour, several years ago, there is a new edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica [sic], and this is the Fifteenth Edition, and {2115|2116} photocopied, Your Honour, references to the history of Germany.

Commencing at page 119 of Volume 8 where the "History of Germany" is found, the last paragraph:

"The regimes were of particular hostility towards the Jews. In April of 1933 they were dismissed from government service and the universities and were debarred from entering the professions. The Nuremberg laws of September 19 forbade marriages between Jews and persons of German blood, and the Jews virtually lost all civil rights. Their persecution reached its climax in the pgrgom [sic] of November 9th to 10th, 1938, carried through by the S.S. The greater part of all Jewish property was confiscated, and the surviving Jews were restricted to ghettos until World War II when they were systematically exterminated. {2116|2117} Altogether in German-occup[i]ed Europe six million out of a total of eight hundred [sic] million Jews were killed or died in concen- tration camps."

And that is the reference I would refer you to there, Your Honour.

I have numerous histories, Your Honour. There are hundreds. And if I can refer you to some that are general and some that are more specific, William Carr, a writer in modern history with the University of Sheffield, published a book called, "The History of Germany 1981 – 1945", published in London 1969. He writes, page 38:

The most frightful chapter in the history of wartime Germany remains the extermination of the Jews. Words are quite inadequate to convey the enormity of the crime without parallel in the whole of modern history. Several hundred [sic?] Jews, men, women and children from all parts of occupied Europe, were murdered in the short space of three years to gratify the crude racist illusions of a handful of ignorant fanatics.

Your Honour, Marshall Delgar was an American historian and he wrote a book called, "Germany – {2117|2118} Modern History", published by the University of Michigan Press 1961, and I can quote from it, Your Honour, but it's the same content.

A J.P. Taylor of Cambridge University in his book – the title of the book is, "From Sarajevo to Potsdam", London 1965, deals with the systematic extermination of Jews. He says as follows:

It has been possible to imagine before the War that the Jews in Germany, a comparatively small number could be eliminated by expulsion or even voluntary emigration. Now the Germans had some millions of Jews in their power and they could not simply be turned out. They could only be exterminated. This policy was now adopted with every refinement of civilized skill. The Jews were segregated in nearly every European country. The able-bodied were worked to death. Women and children and the elderly were at first massacred. When this method proved too slow, they were consigned to gas chambers of the most scientific type. Every civilization has monuments. The monument of Western civilization is the monument at Auschwitz.

That is page 69. Dr. Hanna Vogt wrote a book called, "The Burden of Guilt – Short History of {2118|2119} Germany 1914 – 1945". John Tolland I've mentioned, Your Honour, "Adolf Hitler". Dr. Raul Hilberg you heard from. Historian Dawidowisz "War Against the Jews 1939-1945" published in 1975.

Your Honour, I could go on. Gerald Reitlinger is also mentioned in the pamphlet, "The Final Solution" – "Attempt to exterminate the Jews of Europe" is his sub-title, second edition, published in 1968.

Each of those writers recognized that Hitler's final solution envisaged the systematic annihilation of European Jewry.

My friend has brought histories into court by Poliakov, Bauer; they said the same thing, Your Honour; both from common sources readily available to anybody, such as dictionaries and encyclopaedias. Your Honour also heard the testimony of Dr. Hilberg. He is the author of articles on concentration camps and individual camps. The Encyclopaedia Americana and the Funk and Wagnall's Encyclopaedia – that would be in addition to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

We have in evidence, Your Honour, the Chambers Encyclopaedia which indicates, Volume 8, page 99:

"When in 1939 war broke out in Europe {2119|2120} anti-semites acted as 'fifth columns' to help to secure German predominance, and the conquest of every country was succeeded by the disenfranchisement of the Jews and the introduction of legislation based on the Nuremberg code. As time passed so the enforcement became more and more severe. The 'Jewish badge' and in eastern Europe even the ghetto were generally reintroduced. The policy was formulated of rendering western Europe free of the Jews and deportations took place on a vast scale to the Jewish reservations which had been set up in Poland. Ultimately there was begun a systematic campaign of annihilation, in a series of death camps of which that of Auschwitz, where 1,750,000 persons were killed, was the most notorious. On the continent of Europe apart from {2120|2121} Russia, whose western provinces also suffered terribly, only a handful of numerically unimportant communities in neutral countries escaped and of the 6,500,000 Jews who lived in the Nazi-dominated lands in 1939, barely 1,500,000 remained alive when the war ended six years later. In these six years the Jewish people lost one-third of its total numbers; in Europe as a whole over one-half and in central Europe, three-quarters. In lands such as Greece, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Norway and Poland, which harboured the greatest Jewish agglomeration of all, less than 10% of the former Jewish population survived. Never in history had any section of mankind suffered so inhumanly."

These are facts, Your Honour, and they are facts that are beyond dispute. Thank you. {2121|2122}

MR. CHRISTIE: Do you wish to hear from me?

THE COURT: I think the hour is a little late. If you wish to start, I could hear you for fifteen minutes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps maybe you should, Your Honour.

My friend concludes by saying these are facts, Your Honour, and these are facts beyond dispute, and he quotes a number of sources which have given support to his opinion, but he asks you basically to decide that the side of the case for which I contend should not really be heard on the basis of truth. He asks you to decide the case after hearing only one side of the case, and his assertion is that these are the facts, and the facts should be indisputable. He asks you, in effect, to find, by judicial notice, that it is all right to deny what he says courts have found.

I could bring before this Court, I am sure, evidence that throughout history, points of view that he would agree today are ridiculous were the commonly held views of the day, and if my friend is successful, they would still be the views of the day, because it would be {2122|2123} illegal to deny the judicial notice taken of them by some authoritative [sic] court, and there is no doubt that an authoritative court took judicial notice in the time of Galileo that the earth was the centre of the universe, and judicial notice could be taken of many other facts throughout history, too, that my friend would say are facts, and yet in time they become certainly first of all disputable, and later are found to be unfounded beliefs; but at any given time in history there are beliefs that everyone holds sacred, and often they are not true, and courts, I suggest, are ill-suited to making findings of historic fact on the basis of only one side of the case being heard.

If the tribunal of fact, in this trial the jury, decide that there is no justification for the opinions held by the author of the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", I suggest they should do so after hearing both sides, but not before.

It would have been better timing if my friend brought this application before the trial began. Then there need be no trial except the peripheral issue of whether my client had a mistaken belief, which he might plead, like Galileo, that he honestly held, and then {2123|2124} we recant saying he was sorry, he was wrong, but trials of that kind are more suited to countries other than ours.

I point out that my friend refers to trials in Germany, or what's left of it, and I might point out, too, that in that country people are incarcerated and go to jail for denying the Holocaust, already. Many have. It becomes a crime against the law of that country to raise the argument that the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" appears to raise here: and suggest to him that he considers whether that ought to be the law of our country, de facto and de jure before I hearing the case of "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Everyone has different views of history today on many subjects, and my friend contends that we should not be entitled to put before this jury the views that support the allegations in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

I would say, in argument, that my friend may have his views, and I may have mine, but how does he impose his views, or how does this court have the ability to decide the question and impose the views of my learned friend's contention without hearing my evidence on a subject that is not as simple as whether {2124|2125} alcohol is the result of fermentation, or whether certain streets are in the City of Ottawa, or whether many of the regulations associated with the enactment of treaties or are in conflict with it are a historical basis?

Those are questions which are, in the opinion of some courts, and I am aware of them, that are far more limited than the proposition for which he wishes Your Honour to find a fact, and I might point out a near-rebuttable fact, because when the judicial notice is taken, I think my friend has clearly pointed out it is an irrebuttable fact, and that has implications to the defence far greater than he was prepared to concede, because it implies that if we raise questions to prove that my client's views, or the particulars, are correct, it is certainly open to the jury in the charge, that no doubt will result from a finding of judicial [sic] notice, to say that those particulars cannot be taken as being true because it would contradict [the] basic thesis which is articulated in the judicial notice that he would have had Your Honour decide before they ever got to decide anything.

Surely the issue is who is right in this dispute. My friend says they are indisputable facts. I am aware I will have time tomorrow to bring, {2125|2126} before you lots of authority such as he's brought; they may not be regarded by him as credible; they may be regarded by him or by Mr. Vrba or somebody on his side of the case as being neo-Nazi, or they may be regarded by any of the epithets that have been thrown against the accused; but surely that is a matter for the jury to decide, and it cannot be taken that these are indisputable facts when, in this country and in France and in the United States and in West Germany there are many who dispute these facts.

So I say they are not indisputable facts. So far we haven't created a category of indisputable facts except the ones that are fairly obvious, like locations of streets and things that are empirically verifiable. By "empirically verifiable" I mean those that can be proven by reference to the five senses and, I suggest also, are evidence from proven cases of fact.

My friend, therefore, relies on his legal arguments from cases in West Germany, but I would point out that his allegation that no one ever denied the existence of the Holocaust is not quite apt or correct. I suggest when he concedes that everybody denied knowledge but no one denied the fact, well, if you {2126|2127} deny knowledge, how do you affirm the fact of the Holocaust?

I suppose these people in whom he has placed his assurance that the Holocaust is proven by saying they didn't know anything about it are not admitting that it occurred, as is defined by the prosecution.

I suggest that the cases in West Germany are not quite so simple as they would portray. In fact, already in this case, through cross-examination, I brought out evidence that tends to show – and especially in one instance, the Dachau trials, many justifiable beliefs about torture being a factor in those trials. Also, there's questions to be raised about Nuremberg. Now, we wouldn't be here raising them if we weren't involved in an academic debate which we feel should be our entitlement, but surely if we are faced with a prosecution in which those are the facts to be tried, and the jury is the tribunal of fact, we should be able to put before the tribunal of fact our information and evidence to prove our case, and not to have that pre-empted by a finding as broad as determining, really, {2127|2128} every issue of fact in the case. The rest becomes state of mind and intent.

It seems to me there is, with all due respect to my friend, there is a diabolical twist to his argument with which I am sure he isn't for a moment, likely to associate himself, but I suggest that it is this:

He would like to have this Court prevent the occasion of what he calls the first questioning of the Holocaust. He says it has never been questioned in this way before, in a court of law. I think he is probably right. I don't think that that necessarily means it should never occur. We are here not because we want to be, but because we are obliged by legal process to be, and I say "we" in the collective sense – my client.

I suggest that we, the accused's position, that of the defence, should be entitled to present the evidence to support the view, and not have that decision made without the right to present the evidence.

I am sure that it is well-known that in history, before, views that would today be common views were heretical views. {2128|2129}

I have eighty-seven cases of judicial notice that I have found through use of computer research that I haven't got duplicated copies of, and I don't intend to recite them all, but I'd like to file them in due course tomorrow, together with what other authorities I have, to show that never before in Canadian history has a court been asked to take judicial notice of facts forty years ago involving another country and policies of another government, intentions of another government involving millions of people. Never in Canadian judicial history has such a proposition been advanced, and it is advanced to stifle the defence's opportunity to raise the issues of fact in those wide-sweeping generalizations.

I suggest that is the pressures upon my learned friend an indication of to prevent the defence from putting its case. It shouldn't be allowed. It should be all right to dispute these allegations that my friend makes from his reputable sources with whatever evidence the accused can muster; and to prevent that happening and to decide the case without the right of a full defence on the issues of fact in dispute would be to usurp the function of the jury and place in a {2129|2130} category of indisputable judicial fact the widest sweeping generalization of history that, I suggest, any judge has ever been asked to make, one condemning to, I suppose, a perpetual judgment of this court and, presumably any other that would follow it, the condemnation of a nation of people who, so far, have not yet been able to raise any scientific answer or refutation to the charges; but I suggest if we are to be the accused in this time and place, then we should be entitled to defend them in this article as the article defends them with what we can produce in the way of evidence and what I suggest we will produce in the way of evidence, scientific evidence that will cause certainly reasonable doubt about the assertions of my learned friend's distinguished authorities and will give the jury certainly something to think about at the end of the day.

My friend, by his submission, will have them think about nothing but the intent of the accused. He forgot one very famous case where someone dared to question the authorities', official view of history when he was referring to the numerous instances I in which accused persons of the West German government, or accused by the West German government, he forgot to {2130|2131} mention that others who have disagreed with the authorities' view of history would include such living persons as Solzhenitsyn, [Solzhenitsyn] who has served time in jail for disagreeing with his country's history – in fact, daring to write contrary opinions to history in his time and place, and I am suggesting that my friend is trying to make a similar kind of offence – in fact, to rule upon history without trying the fact at all, after hearing only his assertions and his witnesses.

I'd like to point out a fact that may not even be known to him, that in the trials in West Germany, although it's dangerous and illegal for West Germans to come to the defence of their position on this issue in a court, one source who attempted to do so came from France, an inmate of a concentration camp, Rassinier, who attempted to testify in the trials in Germany and was prevented from doing so by the authorities. That's a historical fact that, I think, I could verify without too much trouble, with no more difficulty than my friend could verify his statements of fact from the various sources he's quoted.

I would like, then, to reserve my further comments to tomorrow, Your Honour, and I will have {2131|2132} at that time, the intention or I will have, then, I think, photocopies of these decisions for my friend. I don't intend to go into them in any depth, but I intend to produce some examples of the fact that this is not an undisputable view of history. Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 31, 1985.

—— {2132|2133}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I'd like to begin this morning by calling evidence to prove a judgment in the Court of Appeal in France on the same issue.

My friend introduced a decision from the District Court of California, and I have one on point, I think, in France.

THE COURT: Well, have you shown it to Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: I haven't.

THE COURT: Why would you do that? I don't know that you might be pleasantly surprised. He might not want to hear from your witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness is Dr. Robert Faurisson, and the judgment is in the Court of Appeal in France. I don't have the ability to translate as efficiently as I should, but it's in French and I haven't been able to produce a complete translation of the {2133|2134} whole judgment. I only have a translation of excerpts.

I thought, perhaps, it would be permissible to file it, nonetheless, on the understanding that because we are officially bilingual, it would be acceptable.

THE COURT: Some are more bilingual than others.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am well aware in regard to that that I am one of the last to be justified in raising a bilingual case, or a French case in the French text, and I can't translate it.

THE COURT: Well, I am afraid that I am a creature of my own environment and I want an English translation. So when you have that, I will be glad to look at it.

Mr. Griffiths, do you want to hear a witness on a French case until you've read it and seen it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would prefer to read the judgment, Your Honour, but I don't want to put obstacles in the way of Mr. Christie, either: if he has the judgment, perhaps we can get it translated through services of our office and have it translated.

THE COURT: Is that agreeable? {2134|2135}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I have no objection to that. I can provide the translation, but my client had asked that the translation be prepared, and only part of it is translated.

I am prepared to argue part of it and prove the translation of that part, but I haven't got the whole thing translated. I could file it, leave it to my friend to —

THE COURT: Perhaps you might show it to Mr. Griffiths, get it translated one way or another, and I will look it at.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a photocopy of what is the original manuscript of the judgment. I have a certified copy of that same document which my friend can compare and satisfy himself it is a true copy.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, I am satisfied, Mr. Christie.

THE COURT: Then perhaps you can go on with your submissions, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

What I said yesterday about this whole subject, Your Honour, was that I had available a number of sources which dispute the allegations made by the Crown {2135|2136} yesterday.

First of all the Crown said that it's beyond dispute by reasonable men, so to speak, and there fore should be taken as judicially noticed. He referred to a couple of dictionaries and one, I think — my mistake if I said two, one dictionary. I would like to refer to Double Day Dictionary 1975 which defines "Holocaust" as "a sacrifice wholly consumed by fire; whole destruction; and loss of life by fire, War, etcetera; burn".

Therefore, I suggest that definition doesn't quite enshrine the beliefs my friend articulated in that dictionary, at least.

Funk & Wagnall's Standard Desk Dictionary of 1975 defines "Holocaust", and it is also uncapitalized, as "wholesale destruction, loss of life, especially by fire; the sacrificial offering which is wholly consumed by fire; Greek holos, whole"; it also means [means] "burn".

So so far, at least, not all authorities have recognized the Holocaust as a [as a] uniquely Jewish experience or in relation to Jews necessarily; nor has it necessarily accepted the proposition as somehow enshrined in some authority in such a manner that one should say that it is {2136|2137} not disputed by reasonable men.

I also said that I had a number of sources. I don't intend to refer to them all in detail, but I have tried to capsule what each says. What I am suggesting is if we take the view this subject is not disputable by all reasonable men, then all these sources must be regarded as reasonable sources, and I suggest that a ruling such as my friend would make you make, that all these people who author these books would automatically be subject to a judicial exposition or notice or ruling that as a fact they are false, thereafter never again could they publish without being guilty under s.177, because they would have to be taken as knowing that courts have held their views are false.

So not only is my client to be subjected to a ruling such as this, but it has implications on a lot of other authors. I would like to briefly summarize some of them.

There is a book called, "The Myth of the Six Million" by an anonymous author, but it is alleged, and I think it is quite widely acknowledged, that one author by the name of Hogan took an overview of the Third Reich policies vis-a-vis Jews as compared to the {2137|2138} Allied war stories, and he alleged that the war stories were not justified. Secondly, "The Six Million Reconsidered" by Grimstead [Grimstad] is another book which deals with what is referred to as anti-German propaganda v. analysis of the story as this author presents it. He disputes the story of the six million. He also disputes the gas chambers.

There is the book, "Exiles from History" by McAldon, which is a psychological analysis of certain tendencies and certain persons and religions. This, too, would be subjected that it was false because it concludes that the stories of gas chambers are not true.

Then there is a book which was alluded to, "Der Auschwitz Mythos" [Mythos], and this is in German, but say that this ruling applies to every book printed in all languages in this country. This book is still available in this country. It is by Dr. Wilhelm Stäglich, who was a judge, and in West Germany has been, because of the publication of this book, removed from the bench.

So are we to assume that this book, in the hands of anyone, published by anyone, distributed by anyone — because of course s.177 covers that — would also be guilty under the section? Because they would no {2138|2139} longer say, after a ruling like this, that my friend seeks, that it is disputable by reasonable men; therefore it would be deemed false, judicially so, for all time. Articles by Udo Wallendy [Walendy], who was available some time ago to testify here; he is no longer in the country. But this article, "The Methods of Reeducation", deals with the methods of propagandizing and the methods are analyzed in relation to the allegation of the six million, which it disputes. There is also the book entitled, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" by Arthur Butz which, of course, certain factions in our society would also like to see banned. I gather it is already circumscribed the Department of Finance as obscene or immoral. That's under appeal. Of course, this Court will be deeming its contents to be false, too, because it definitely disputes in minute detail and at great extent, with numerous footnotes and analysis from everything from the Gerstein statement to the subject of the chemical properties of Zyklon-B in relation to the stories put forward to support the extermination view. That book would also be circumscribed. Its author and publisher would be conducting dissemination of publication of false news if the {2139|2140} judicial finding can be made of that.

An interesting point can be made that even the book, "The Destruction of European Jews", which could be analyzed by others and thought about and the it contents published to show its contradictory nature, and to publish an analysis that shows that the chemical properties of the substances alleged to be used for the gassings do not fit with the book, even that could become caught within the ruling the Crown desires.

Another book which is in German but which is distributed and published in Canada — and of course, you are allowed to read books in other languages so far, and we are allowed to talk about them, think about them, but "Auschwitz in the I.G. Farben Process" [Auschwitz im IG-Farben-Prozeß], which deals with the trials of I.G. Farben, published by Wallendy [Walendy], and it deals with the transcripts of the trial — and my friend has reiterated his view that all the trials have resolved the issues completely — well, the trials are debatable: much of the trials' contents are not as clear as my friend has put before you — but this book is also deemed false by what my friend says.

"Truth for Germany Second World War" again disputes — and that is in English — disputes with {2140|2141} detailed analysis, over a period of 367 pages with numerous footnotes, transcripts of many parts of the Nuremberg trials, analysis of some material that was not otherwise published – this, too, would be deemed false because it would be contrary to judicial notice ruling of this Court which my friend seeks, and I suppose to avoid having to prove the truth of what he says.

Dr. Rudolf Adenauer [Aschenauer] who, to my understanding, is one of the lawyers – he is a publisher and lawyer from Germany – published a book on the defence cast at Nuremberg at Malmedy trials and the absence of appe[als]. He assessed that. This book also disputes the accuracy of the statements that my friend asked you to take judicial notice of.

Now, there were people of certainly non-German origin who dispute the allegation of, well, that the Crown seeks, that you should take judicial notice of, some of whom were incarcerated during the War under regulations propounded for those who were not in sympathy with the government of the day in the War, and that includes a member of Parliament in the United Kingdom of that time, Captain Ramsey, who wrote the book, "The Nameless War". All this would become suspect and {2141|2142} contrary to the ruling my friend seeks – I should say that the Crown seeks. Numerous books.

I could go through more that demonstrate the policies of government, the question of whether or not these views are true or false – all these books, and I have many, many more, would become subject to the pronouncement that they are not true because they question the validity of the proposition. And if the Courts have deemed a historical view to be the truth, then all views contrary to it become false by virtue of the fact that a Court has decided, just as my friend has asked you to find judicial notice, because a Court in California decided in an interlocutory proceeding in a civil matter which is not yet decided and could be subject to appeal; he has to take that as a justification for disallowing the right to put forward the defence case here in this country.

The volume of material is enormous with questions, and I don't intend to go through all of them, of pages of two-line summaries of the books that are on this table, and that is only half of what I could produce.

The world cannot be excluded from the {2142|2143} right to consider varying points of view, because the majority has spoken, even if the majority did speak. I suggest to you what my friend has produced is not the voice of any majority; it is the voice of authority.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica [sic] speaks, but if we were in the Soviet Union, the Soviet Encyclopaedia might speak, but that doesn't justify the suppression of views contrary to it, nor does it entitle any court to decide that contrary views are false.

May I point out that even the authorities the Crown seeks to rely on as proving the validity of their case, or have so far, in writing this book, "The Final Solution", six million is not referred to as a valid figure.

Now, the Crown has avoided a problem which is the essence to the whole case by saying, "We don't ask you to take judicial notice of six million, but only millions", so that we are over the figures in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" That same tactic was used, I suggest, in the Eichmann trial, because there they never talk about six million; they talk about millions.

When particulars are sought for proof, it seems the tendency in these types of trials is to {2143|2144} become abstract and avoid particulars and just say, "What do you want me to produce – six million bodies?" Or, "Don't you believe this? You have no right to disbelieve this."

I suggest we should not entrench in judicial notice rulings any formal views of history, I because history is controversy and history is subject to revision, always. Every day new views of history emerge, and at the beginning they are always minority views; in some cases eccentric views of history have become later accepted as justifiable majority opinions. And I am the first to argue that no view of history is ever entitled to be regarded as the sanctified eternal judicially noticed view, whether it be millions gassed in gas chambers, or who won the Battle of the Little Big Horn, or many other issues that historically have been debated and will continue to be debated, as they should be in a free and democratic society; but to impose judicial notice on these trials and to create an atmosphere in which the official view is sanctioned by judges' rulings, however justified the Crown may view it in view of their authorities, is to establish an official view of history that will stifle all debate and freedom of {2144|2145} discussion such that the various views will no longer be free to be expressed. They will be suspect, driven underground, driven to the point of being forced to do other than to talk openly in society. It is far better for society that these debates occur, and I suggest not in courts but in academic circles and in public circles, open and free to be rebutted, and that courts should never take the view that many authorities may be martialled against any view or be entitled to impose that as the only truth held by the court and I might put out a rebuttal.

The words of John Stewart Mill come to mind by saying the world cannot be justified in silencing the opinion of one man than that one man can be in silencing the power of opinions of the whole world, for opinions are opinions, and they are not ever to be regarded as sacrosanct because ten people agree and one I disagree.

On the very issue of whether millions were systematically killed, and I emphasize that because that is a very important part of the Crown's endeavour to find systematic, we've had some evidence on this point, and it is not very clear, even from the reputable authority of Dr. Hilberg. I might point out that he has {2145|2146} not identified an order of Hitler for the extermination of the Jews.

Now, systematic extermination requires a plan, and in a society such as Nazi Germany, I doubt that anyone would dispute that authority is the ultimate source of power. There is no suggestion that in Nazi Germany people made their own decisions, and whatever your position, you could do what you liked. I mean, everyone is prepared to concede that it was a dictatorship. I am certainly prepared to concede that. Therefore, in the absence of an order and a plan and a budget, how can it be said that there is some reason to believe it was systematic in the sense that that would mean, in a dictatorship?

Dr. Hilberg referred to the Commissar order, but that doesn't cover gassings and it doesn't cover concentration camps. – That refers to the Einsatzgruppen who are alleged – and I might say disputed that allegation by, for example, the lawyer who defended Manstein, a man by the name of Paget who published a book and said that the Einsatzgruppen, when challenged, were not promoted in that case, but Dr. Hilberg did not produce a direct, identified order in any way at all, he alluded {2146|2147} to someone having said that one existed; and that, I suggest, is not to be taken as an authoritative view that historically is undeniable by reasonable men that such an order existed.

And I suggest the substantial author who has been published widely, David Irving, in the United Kingdom, who is not circumscribed nor are many of the authorities here – some are, some are not – he has denied the existence of an order of Hitler or anyone else for the extermination of Jews.

So that is being debated by, I suggest, many reasonable men and women. How can it be said that because my friend's views are promoted by Hoess in power or authority they are somehow sanctified with reasonableness, – and those who disagree with them are somehow unreasonable?

I think it would be interesting to point out that the first person to raise the question of whether there were gassings in the Polish concentration camps was none other than Georg Orwell in 1946 in his publication. He was tossing the idea back and forth, saying that we are approaching a time of news speak when an official version of history will be read and it will {2147|2148} be illegal to disagree about these matters.

That is exactly what my friend seeks to do, not only make it illegal to disagree – he has brought us to trial; the Crown has made us pay a heavy price already and we are anxious to at least have the right to defend these so-called eccentric views with what facts we may muster – he seeks now to further stop us from even questioning the truth of a proposition he says is the essence of his case by having Your Honour take judicial notice of it. He says, "Well, you can deny particulars, so you can still say you have a mistaken belief. You can still say you are honestly confused. You can still say you are a repentant liar", I suppose, or something of that nature. He might leave us that in the case. "The case isn't over because you can still be regarded as an idiot – an innocent, honest idiot." That's about all that is left to us in the defence if the proposition is accepted.

Somehow or other, I suggest that is denying us the opportunity to present ourselves as something less, or something more than an idiot.

I would like to point out that the {2148|2149} Holocaust, as it's been defined throughout the period since 1945, an emotionally imprecise – I could produce twenty different versions of the Holocaust. I've heard from so-called survivors about steam chambers, people were gassed by monoxide gas, steam, people have been hung with confessions in concentration camps saying there were gas chambers where now authorities, even as learned as some who have been called here, say that there were no gas chambers.

So this has become a very difficult proposition to pin down with precision, and it's laden with problems, because certain things that we do have is the indisputable fact, in 1946 and '45 – if I was I given the opportunity to call evidence I could now prove – well, we don't maintain there were gas chambers in Germany now, and I, who started months, years ago now to analyze this whole question, thought that was a ridiculous proposition; there were gas chambers in Dachau, Belsen; I have seen the movies; I have read the stories myself. Indisputable. What reasonable man can dispute that?

I have now read authorities of respect and ability who say no, there were no gas chambers in what {2149|2150} they call the Altreich.

We have discussed this with Dr. Hilberg, and he says, "Well, maybe." Maybe. Well, there was no maybe in the last forty years in many of those cases, and there was even at Nuremberg produced documentary evidence of confessions, yes; commandants I and other officers confessed, yes; these things took place here and now, well, maybe, or maybe not. That's the basis of the belief.

And it is said by my friend that reasonable men should not debate. It is beyond dispute by reasonable men. I thought he had a powerful proposition and it concerned me greatly when he referred to the Calder case in the Supreme Court, because I thought, well, if the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled, as my friend quoted from Mr. Justice Hall, that the Court may take judicial notice of the facts of history whether past or contemporary in some profound way, then maybe the point, even there there may be debate, I might argue about whether we should, but then the power to do so exists.

Having checked into the Calder case which Mr. Justice Hall's decision, a dissenting opinion, does not rely upon the proposition that judicial notice {2150|2151} may be taken of the fact of history, that is obiter dicta on page 169, and he then, in the next paragraph, goes on to say: "The assessment and interpretation of the historical documents and enactments tendered in evidence must be approached ..."

– and I find this almost ironic –

"... in the light of present-day research and knowledge disregarding ancient concepts formulated when understanding of the customs and culture of our original people was rudimentary and incomplete and when they were thought to be wholly without cohesion, laws or culture, in effect a subhuman species."

That would be the interpretation we would be ill-inclined, or unjustified in saying to Your Honour that we are not entitled to take judicial notice of history, but I point out that he says, in the next sentence:

"This concept of the original {2151|2152} inhabitants of America led Chief Justice Marshall in his otherwise enlightened judgment in Johnson and Graham's Lessee v. McIntosh (1823) which is the outstanding judicial pronouncement on the subject of Indian; rights, to say, 'But the tribes of Indians inhabiting this country were fierce savages whose occupation was war ...' We now know that that assessment was ill-founded."

I thought it was a little point of ironic humour that I could raise here today that here is an obiter dicta remark of Mr. Justice Hall saying we have the right to take judicial notice of history, and he is correcting a judgment of a historical person in 1823, which demonstrates that obviously history changes its views from time to time. And ironically, to say that courts should take judicial notice of historic opinions in the light of present-day research, I suggest, is to take the view that it is open to conduct that research and that we should not foreclose this research with a firmly-fixed judicial view of fact.

After all, fact should be for the jury, {2152|2153} and I suggest that at no time should a court take the view that it can pre-empt the position of the jury by a determination of fact when, first of all, there is dispute in society.

I don't think I should have to prove these books, but I say they are evidence of dispute, and it is not justified to decide who is a reasonable man and who is an unreasonable man without hearing from the other side of the dispute.

It is said my client's view is that of an unreasonable man. Well, let's hear what he says first before we judge. Let's not decide on the basis of one publication alone. If he can substantiate there were substantive or authoritative argument, let him do that. After all, isn't that what we are here for, to have both sides justified as they may be to have the jury decide? They may decide what is the authority of a reasonable man, if they are twelve reasonable people in a society of reasonable people.

I would suggest that it would be far preferable [sic] if the whole of society in a free and open debate decide what is reasonable. In fact, that is what usually happens with most opinions over time. We are {2153|2154} here, however, and the Crown wishes to even prevent us from having the opportunity to present as truthful, as fact, not as our mistaken belief but as fact, the views asserted in the article. They don't even want us to get that right to put across this view to twelve reasonable people.

Well, to do that, in my opinion, is to deny us the basic right of not only freedom of speech, but the right to be presumed innocent till proven guilty, the right to hear both sides, the fundamental basic equitable principles that our trials, throughout history, have always held to be reasonable and sacred.

Numerous references were made to the judicial decisions in West Germany and elsewhere, and in Israel. All I can say is, the views presented by the Crown as to the substance of those cases and the remarks attributed to people are not beyond debate by reasonable men.

I can go on to quote numerous sources of dispute upon the point, but I would like to point out that even the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?" was publicly debated in fairly lengthy publications in the United Kingdom, called, "Books and Bookmen". {2154|2155}

This article was written by Richard Harwood and published all over the world. In "Books and Bookmen" in November 1974 a review occurred of this particular article by Colin Wilson. He basically said – I suppose I could file it – I will eventually – I don't intend to put before you the whole of the defence case. I thought at one point I would have to, to prove that we should have the right, as reasonable men, to question these things. I don't think I would be well and wisely advised to try and do that.

I think that I want to put before you submissions that demonstrate that there is ample reason to believe that many men, women and other people, I suppose children included, have a right to debate and discuss these issues. This isn't a religion, and if it was, we believe in freedom of religion, too. These are not sacred beliefs, and it's not sacrilege to question these beliefs.

Many people might say, well, you are hurting those who died if you question these beliefs. Is there a question thus far that every belief we question from Christianity to Islam to all the beliefs there are, those who believe them will say; "You are hurting my {2155|2156} feelings"? And there is no doubt that may be true; but if we are to, in the desire to protect people's feelings, prevent the points of view that do so, I suppose the most powerful group in society will eliminate all other opinions. That is what will happen. And by accomplishing judicial notice of the desired opinion and enforcing that as a rule of law, there need be no freedom of speech; there is no point to it because if courts can decide what are legitimate opinions and impose those views, and s.177 can make it illegal to have false views, well, then, we have established judicial historical opinion in a category that will create a crime of those who disbelieve.

THE COURT: You don't really take the position that s.177 is something that restricts people from views.

MR. CHRISTIE: I do.

THE COURT: Oh, well. Come, come.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suggest that if judicial notice is taken of this, it can be taken of other historical opinions, and if judicial notice is taken of this, to have a view that has been interpreted by a court to be false, you certainly could be charged. You might prove you are an idiot and thereby get off; {2156|2157} you might prove that you had a mistaken but honest belief, but you could never maintain, contrary to the opinions of courts – because I point out again, as the Crown acknowledged, to hold judicial notice of these wide-ranging things is a rebuttable presumption; we cannot contradict them with evidence; that would be almost contempt of court – the Court rules that's a fact, you can say that you were mistaken and honestly believed, but what if the court has already ruled in the previous case that this is the truth?

THE COURT: Now you have changed your position, which you well should have done. You are now back to rebutting and arguing against this Court making what is, in effect, a judicial declaration, a finding of the existence of what has been referred to as the Holocaust.

That is a legitimate position in law for you to take; but for you to indicate that s.177 has the effect of restricting someone to have his or her own views is patent nonsense, and you know it. You should know it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know that at all. {2157|2158}

THE COURT: Well, I do.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think I argued in the beginning that it is contrary to freedom of speech. Your Honour has ruled on it. I am not arguing with Your Honour's ruling. I am saying here is a practical situation:

If the Court holds what Crown has suggested, a judicial notice of these facts, and if someone wishes to disbelieve that and publishes that disbelief —

THE COURT: That is a legitimate submission. I accept that as a legitimate submission from an adversary to the Crown. I understand that point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Well, what I am saying is that that will create a limit to freedom of speech, a very severe one that could readily be submitted to other so-called facts of history.

THE COURT: You have made that point and I have it. I understand that point. As long as we don't go back to s.177, I am content.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Well, I just think that the effects of s.177 are that if you publish false news or statements, you can be prosecuted. No {2158|2159} doubt about that. The effect of that —

THE COURT: If you do it wilfully [sic], and if in doing so you have the intention of creating mischief, then you can be charged, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, you can be charged whether that is proven or not. Whether you are convicted will depend on whether it is proven.

THE COURT: Agreed.

MR. CHRISTIE: But what I am saying is, it is a very short step from finding as a fact that this is the truth in history, and then saying that those who publish otherwise are publishing falsehoods, and then saying that they are wilfully [sic] publishing falsehoods. They believe it is true, but courts have held that it is false. Their honest belief cannot exist because every one is deemed to know the law. They are deemed to know what courts have said that it is false, therefore you had better not publish that view or question that judicial interpretation. And I think, then, s.177 becomes an instrument of intellectual oppression, and I think that we should avoid extending it beyond its present meaning in any way.

I know many who disagree with that, like {2159|2160} to see it extended, debate about it; but if you compound s.177 with a judicial notice of fact, I say you have a deadly combination for those who disagree, and I think also a very serious curtailment of debate on these matters.

If the case of the Crown is so powerful, and if they have such overwhelming proof and that it is as they say, an encyclopaedia, just a matter of numerous proofs, overwhelming evidence, he shouldn't have any trouble with the jury, and the jury can decide. We will be either deemed to be mistaken in our belief, or we are falsifiers of history, or some other judgment, and the conviction will follow. I don't see why he needs the additional reinforcement of a judicial determination.

The last thing I wanted to point out was as late as the 19th of January, 1985, in one of the leading newspapers of — this is an example of how news of history are debatable and rather sensitive issues, and this is very much on the point, I suggest. In the Globe and Mail of this country, fairly obviously wide-read newspaper, an article appears which repeats that the Soviet News Agency Tass yesterday published charges that Zionists have been partners of German Nazism and shared the blame for millions of Jews during the Second World War {2160|2161}. The Tass interview with Soviet historian Lev Korniev said Zionists have helped Adolf Hitler during his rise to power and, by implication, were encouraging Israeli policies. Mr. Korniev said Jewish owned banks loaned Hitler ..... in 1929, while a Cologne based banking house also owned by Jews had discussed with the Nazis their final solution with Jews.

Now, I am not asking any credibility be given to that opinion.

THE COURT: I am actually relieved that you said that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, everyone may find that very amusing, but the point is, a newspaper publishes that view without comment. Are we entitled to — perhaps people might just wish to believe that. There are specific references made. I suppose because it is a Soviet source, we are supposed to disbelieve it.

I don't care whether anyone believes it or not, but it is published, and it should be freely published. In fact, there may even be some truth to the statements that come from the Soviet sources. I am not here to judge what they are, nor am I here to condemn those who publish them. I am saying that the cherished beliefs of many people in this room may be wrong, but if we impose judicial notice on a historical point of view, the debate that enables truth to emerge will be stifled. And those who find today, to their convenience and to their satisfaction to stifle someone else's views might find, very shortly, with political changes occurring as rapidly as they do in this world, that that same power in {2162|2163} the hands of somebody else might produce the very society in which Nazi Germany suppressed their views, or the views of people like them.

That's the danger of establishing, in the hands of authority or in the hands of the judiciary or in the hands of anyone the ability to define history to the satisfaction of a powerful or majority opinion.

I should think the dangers of that have been demonstrated throughout history to a point where it would be realized that it is an affront to the principles of freedom of speech, and an affront to the principles of a fair trial.

It should be embarrassing for anybody to suggest that a judicial view of history be taken to the exclusion of other views, but I found no embarrassment here; in fact, I found the Crown presenting its view without the slightest hint that there was any reason to be embarrassed about it. I found no question of it from Your Honour. I found it received without too much concern.

If that is the view, so be it, but the country and the freedom of people in this country is in far graver jeopardy from applications such as this one than any minority opinions held by anybody in this country. {2163|2164} Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Christie. Reply from the Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

I don't really find it necessary to reply to the personal comments made about me, Your Honour. I will just go on to the legal argument.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't mean any personal comments. I want to make that clear. I think my friend is putting forward the views he is putting forward as the officer of the Crown. I am critical of the views. I intend no criticism of my friend who, in my view, is a courteous — well, it is not my point to comment, but he is certainly doing his job as it is his job to present that view.

I must say I am entitled to present that view on the position he has taken without any intent whatever to criticize him

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie. I am obliged for your comments. Your Honour, I would suggest that the judgment of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Hall, {2164|2165} which has been cited with approval in other cases, commended to you yesterday as a correct proposition and a powerful authority coming as it does from an eminent jurist of our Supreme Court, that that comment of Mr. Justice Hall really speaks to and answers many of the concerns of Mr. Christie. In applying for judicial notice in this case, would certainly not have the temerity to ask Your Honour to decide once and for all an issue for all time, nor would I venture to suggest that such a judgment would, or such a ruling would stifle debate.

As Mr. Justice Hall has indicated, an application for judicial notice is considered in accordance with contemporary knowledge and contemporary findings, circumstances.

Mr. Justice Hall, himself, overturned an earlier finding in the light of new and better views of our native people – new to the, I should say, Your Honour, new to the non-native peoples, riot new to the native people. So it's not a final determination, Your Honour. It is a determination.

And in this case, having regard to the community that we're in, that community being Canada, {2165|2166} 1984, [1985] if twenty years from now, ten years from now, five years from now that community view is changed, next year that community view is changed, then obviously it would be open to the court to take judicial notice of the matter in a different way, or to find that the matter is no longer indisputable, and there are now matters that are open to dispute, and this should be subject to the full proofs of an inquiry by the Court.

That, I would suggest, is what Mr. Justice Hall was saying, and it speaks to the problem that my friend raises. Such a ruling, Your Honour, is not to prevent someone from holding an opinion. No law in Canada that prevents anyone from holding an opinion, and certainly not s.177.

John Stewart Mills, in the final quotation that my friend referred to, was talking about the holding of opinions, not the publishing of lies. That is what s.177 speaks to.

The books and materials that my friend has referred you to, some of them are the authors, if not the books, I have some familiarity with – I don't know who the anonymous author is – certainly as my friend fairly indicated to Your Honour, "Dr. Wilhelm Stäglich, {2166|2167} in his book, "Die Auschwitz Mythos [Mythos]", he was removed from the bench according to my friend. I don't know that. I know that the book has been banned in West Germany following five years of proceedings as incitement to racial hatred. The book which has been seized by our Customs in Canada – and that matter is before the Court as an indecent or immoral work – Mr. Udo Wallendy [Walendy], as far as I know, is not a historian.

There is a historian mentioned by my friend, I believe it was David Irving, who I understand has written quite a lengthy book about whether or not there was an order from Hitler, but it does not deny in the book that millions of Jews died as a result of Nazi policies, Your Honour.

There was Captain Ramsey I am not familiar with, who wrote – I didn't get the name of the book. There was Dr. Rudolf A[s]chenauer. I assume from my friend's comments that he was a defence lawyer in Nuremberg. I don't know what his persuasion was at that time or, indeed, at the present, but I would indicate, Your Honour, that those, certainly those sources were not within the common knowledge of people, which is one of {2167|2168} the requirements of the judicial notice section, and they are certainly not sources of indisputable accuracy, easily accessible to men, members of this court, myself or the jury.

The accuracy of all of those works, is clearly, from what I indicated, very hotly contested by reputable historians around the world. I would respectfully suggest, Your Honour, it isn't just a question of majority or minority view; it is a question of, in this instance, that the propositions that I have put to you – and there are two which are independent one from the other in my request for judicial notice, are beyond reasonable doubt at this point on our history, and that is why I make the application, Your Honour.

I would not ask you to make a final ruling until my friend's case is before you. It may very well shed new light on the issue, or have an important bearing on it. I will, through our office, call on the translating services and see if I can have that available by two-thirty this afternoon.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, this is a charge against Mr. Zundel pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. It alleges that he published false news, {2168|2169} or a statement or something like that, wilfully [sic], with the intention of creating a mischief harmonious to racial relations in the community.

Would you please indicate to me how, at this stage of this trial, such a finding, or such a taking of judicial notice by this Court of the Holocaust as it has been defined here – and again without my having to elongate the question I put it to you – is going to assist in this jury in coming to a conclusion as to whether or not the Crown has proven beyond a reasonable doubt the four elements of this offence?

MR. GRIFFITHS: What I am asking you to take judicial notice of, Your Honour, would involve aspects of one of those four elements on one of the two charges, and the charge is wilfully [sic] publishing material that he knows is false.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And so I see it as the Crown's obligation to prove that the material is false.

Exhibit 1 the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", has a number of propositions, one of which is that six million Jews did not die, that in {2169|2170} fact something less than three hundred thousand Jews died in prisons and concentration camps between 1939 and 1945, that in the words of the pamphlet, the myth of six million people dying is an enormous fraud, a swindle on Germany.

THE COURT: It is a fraud and a swindle because it is not six, it was only two?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Or something less than one.

THE COURT: Less than one? That is why it is a fraud, because the numbers are different? Is that one of the —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry. What the pamphlet says is that it is a fraud.

THE COURT: I know what the pamphlet says. That's right. You need to call a spade a spade. You could use a judicial declaration of the happening of the Holocaust in order to buttress a certain portion of the elements of proof that the Crown must prove.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Absolutely, sir. I am not making any bones about that. It is, as I understand the law, an alternative to calling viva voce evidence, or evidence through documents, and when that {2170|2171} alternative is proper is defined in the case law that I referred you to.

THE COURT: That answers the question. Thanks.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir. If there is anything else, I would be pleased to assist.

THE COURT: I have no further questions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further submissions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I intend to reserve until later today, because I want to read the material that has been proffered [sic] for my perusal. I have read some of it. I haven't read all of it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I just offer you what I had? I didn't file it. I had eighty-seven cases in Canada where judicial notice was taken. I asked my friend if he wanted them. And they are all cases I could obtain from 1984 back to 1970.

THE COURT: Perhaps you can deliver that to the Clerk and I will peruse it. Now, what I propose, subject to your approval, is this. Mr. Griffiths, if you are ready to {2171|2172} let me have your submissions, if any, with respect to the matter of the film, which I understand is the last item on the Crown's agenda so far as the Crown is concerned – if it is not convenient for you, I will adjourn and come back and hear it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I would request – and as always I am in your hands – that we deal with things one matter at a time.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And I don't want to inundate you with more material; and just deal with one matter at a time. But I am in Your Honour's hands as always.

THE COURT: If there is nothing further, we will adjourn till two fifteen.
— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. I am in somewhat of a quandary in that now I have a translation of the transcript that I referred to in France, and {2172|2173} I wonder if I might – I suppose in a way it is improper to re-open the argument, and it is at a late stage, but it was of some significance.,

THE COURT: Certainly you can re-open the argument. I was never one to get overly technical on important matters.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, then, if I may –

THE COURT: Crown has a right of reply, of course.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, then, may I – I only have two copies of this. I'll give one to my friend and one to Your Honour, if I may.

This is the verdict of the Paris Court of Appeal after a trial in which – it sets out what took place and it involved a statement in Le Mans originally by Mr. Faurisson, and it was alleged by these nine organizations – I think the best way I could deal with that is to have Dr. Faurisson explain the situation.

THE COURT: No. I'd just as soon you didn't do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Then I would like to refer to some excerpts. You have the full copy of the judgment there, Your Honour. I would just refer to excerpts {2173|2174} that there are in that judgment.

In essence what it said was:

Mr. Faurisson's research has dealt with the existence of gas chambers which, if one were to believe the many testimony, were supposedly used during the Second World War to systematically put to death Jews deported by the German authorities.

Limiting ourselves to the historical problem that Faurisson wants to raise, and that is beside the point, it is proper to state that the accusations of frivolity made against him are lacking in pertinence and are not sufficiently proven in fact.

Faurisson's logical approach consists in trying to demonstrate by using the line of argument –

THE COURT: What page are we on?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have to make sure that this coincides with – on the original it's page 9, apparently. Yes. Now, I have the original French text, and I believe it's in the English version in brackets but it's written on the original French, text in French, off to the side by, I guess after the fact, that he thinks of a scientific nature that the existence of the gas chamber as they have usually been described since 1945 {2174|2175} runs into absolute impossibility which would sufficient by itself to invalidate all the existing testimony, or at least to make them suspect.

This is the important part that I would like to allude to in the Court's judgment:

It is not the job of the Court to make pronouncements about the legitimacy of such a method or about the full significance of the arguments set forth by Faurisson, nor is it any more permissible for the Court considering the research to which he has devoted himself to state that Faurisson [Faurisson] frivolously or negligently or that he has deliberately chosen to ignore them.

And further on it says:

Furthermore, this being the case, no one can convict [sic] him of lying when he enumerates that he studied and that he supposedly did research for more than fourteen years.

And the part that I would like rely on, and that I suggest is of some significance:

Therefore the value of the conclusions defended by Faurisson rests with the appraisal of experts, historians and the public. {2175|2176}

There is a great deal more to this, and it's all there for my friend to deal with, but what I am suggesting is, the Courts in France took the view that the matter was certainly not one upon which they would take notice, and furthermore, one upon which they were not qualified to give any condemnation in terms of historical analysis of the party.

Now, there is a little complexity to this because in France they sue people and, apparently, that results in criminal prosecutions, whereas in this country it is normally the function of the Crown, and consequently I am at a loss to put this in the context of civil or criminal proceedings. Maybe a French lawyer can do better: but you have a judgment that the Court in France, the Court of Appeal – and from this no appeal has been taken – has taken the view that the conclusions defended by Faurisson – and they are identical to the conclusions defended by the pamphlet – rest solely with the appraisals of experts, historians and the public; and I think that that is an indication of some assistance to a court in Canada, if we are to take foreign authorities as – here is one that seems to take the view that courts should not decide historic questions. {2176|2177}

THE COURT: Notwithstanding all that, I am reading at page 10, Mr. Faurisson is sentenced to pay, in accordance with Article 700 of the CCPC, the sum of 2,000 francs to each of the association accused on appeal, with the exception of the sons and daughters of the Jewish deportees of France. What does all that mean?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, what it means –

THE COURT: He is condemned to pay something.

[MR. CHRISTIE:] Your Honour, I have here the portions that refer to that, and I only have a bit of transcript, but what I do know is that this comes out of the fact that – and I am reading here – but when reading the full context of the papers submitted to the Court one gains the impression that Mr. Faurisson takes abusively advantage of his critical work in order to try and justify under its cover, while largely exceeding his allegations of a more general nature, and this is where he made remarks about Zionism, which are no longer a scientific character and are nothing but polemics that he has left the field of scientific research and has taken a leap which is not authorized by anything contained in his previous {2177|2178} writings, namely, when resuming his line of thought in I the form of a slogan he proclaimed, "The alleged mask in the gas chambers and genocide is in one and the same lie"

So that is what he is condemned for. But in addition to denying the existence of the gas chamber, he avails himself of deportation by furnishing a personal, although altogether unfounded, extirpation [extirpation] of the special actions mentioned in fifteen occasions and with horror in the diary of Dr. Kramer [Kremer].

So he explains what his actions were.

Quoting again: [sic]

He undoubtedly protests in his recent plea against the falsification of his line of thought, giving the impression that it is his opinion "that there were no Jewish victims" of Nazi Germany. His wording does, however, leave the reader in a more or less insinuating fashion that "gas chambers" and "genocide" are one and the same thing. There were certainly Jewish victims, but that the massacre of Jews is an exaggeration, nay even a war rumour, for it appears that when reading Faurisson, the deportees of Auschwitz died above all from typhoid, and that moreover the term "genocide" would be {2178|2179} strictly speaking incorrect; and that the figure of six million Jewish victims is evidently an approximate figure and that, by the way, a written order on the part of Hitler laying down his decision to "exterminate the Jews" has never been found.

Mr. Faurisson, who is angry about what he refers to as the religion of the Holocaust, has never found a word to express his regrets for the victims by reminding his much racial persecution and mass deportations which caused the death of millions of people, Jewish or gentiles. So that in spite of the partial character of his work, his revisionism, which is the cause of the exterminationists' ..... could play an overall rehabilitation of the Nazi war criminals.

The positions thus adopted by Faurisson are just as offensive for the survival of racial persecutions as the victims, since the general public is induced and must appreciate the suffering, if not even to cast doubt on them.

They are furthermore of a nature, as has been justly pointed out by the tribunal, as to provoke passionate reactions of passivity against those who thereby, find themselves implicitly accused of lie and {2179|2180} imposture.

So if I might sum that up, in my submission it is the tribunal who felt that he was not unscientific, but they did not like the quality of his opinion. It is there for Your Honour in English, black and white, and I can say it is a rather tortuous intricate rationalization, but what I do say is that they do not find it proper to come to a conclusion of history and say that he was wrong in his historical research, or to conclude that the court could decide that issue. And I think in France the truth doesn't seem to be an absolute defence in these matters, but —

THE COURT: Well, we are all groping in the dark on that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that. I'm sorry, that's the truth. I am no expert in French law, but it struck me as rather complicated in some of its reasoning, but it struck me also as clear that they were not prepared to make conclusions of history, and that's why I thought it relevant.

That's all I have to say on it.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have nothing to add, Your Honour.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the Crown, in the absence of the jury, toward the end of the Crown's case, has moved the Court to take judicial notice of two things. The first is that millions of Jews were annihilated in Europe during the years 1933 and 1945 because of a premeditated policy of the hierarchy of Nazi Germany. Secondly, the means of annihilation included mass shootings of Jews, their deliberate starvation, privation, and death by gassing.

It is submitted that there are two requirements the Crown must prove. The Crown having led the evidence that it has up to this time, it now remains upon the Crown to show that what is referred to as the Holocaust is so well-known, so notorious, so public and so open, over many years to public examination, scrutiny, and the writing of history that through the eyes, in effect, of all reasonable men the fact of the Holocaust should be judicially noticed.

In his submission Mr. Griffiths has submitted a number of essays and words on the subject cases judicially noticed, cited cases and decided cases both in our Courts and elsewhere. One of those cases is R. v. Bennett, 4 C.C.C. (2d). His Honour Judge O'Hearn of Nova Scotia had the following to say on the subject:

"Courts will take judicial notice of {2181|2182} what is considered by reasonable men of that time and place to be indisputable, either by resort to common knowledge or to sources of indisputable accuracy easily accessible to men in the situation of members of that court."

The 9th New College Dictionary of Merriam-Webster publication, page 576, defines Holocaust in the following terms, and I purposely leave out the Greek and the Latin: "Thorough destruction, especially [sic] by fire; the genocidal slaughter of European Jews by the Nazis during World War II".

I have perused the article contained in the Encyclopaedia Britannica published by William Benton, 1943 – 1973, and by Helen Hemmingway Benton, published 1973 – 1974. The relevant portion is contained on page 119 of the article in Volume 8 under, "Germany, History of". In the lower right hand corner of Article No. 119 the following is quoted:

"The Nurnberg Laws of September 1935 forbade marriages between Jews and persons of German blood, and the Jews virtually lost all civil rights. Their persecution reached its climax in the pogrom of {2182|2183} November 9-10, 1938, carried through by the SS. The greater part of all Jewish property was confiscated, and the surviving Jews were restricted to ghettos until World War II, when they were systematically exterminated. Altogether, in German-occupied Europe, 6,000,000 out of a total of about 8,300,000 Jews were killed or died in concentration camps."

There was mention of other material to which I will not refer that has been submitted not only by the Crown, but by the defence. I have received the transcript of the proceedings in the civil case of Mel Melmelstein plaintiff, vs. The Institute for Historical Review, et al, defendants, taken in the Superior Court of the State of California. It is Case No. 365C642. The date was August 1981. In accordance with the American Code of Evidence then applicable in that jurisdiction, a judge of that Court in very short terms, in response to what I infer was a I similar application to this, took judicial notice of the Holocaust insofar as it referred to the country of Poland. As I recall the transcript of the judgment, it referred {2183|2184} to a certain concentration camp or death camp in Poland.

I have read with interest the extract of the Honourable Mr. Justice Hall (as he then was) a Justice in the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Calder v. The Attorney General of British Columbia, 34 D.L.R. (3d) 145. In his words:

"The assessment and interpretation of the historical documents and enactments tendered in evidence must be approached [sic] in the light of present-day research and knowledge disregarding ancient concepts formulated when understanding of the customs and culture of our original people was rudimentary and incomplete and when they were thought to be wholly without cohesion, laws or culture, in effect a sub-human species."

Mr. Griffiths submits that the Holocaust, or the annihilation of Jews, is one of the most documented events in human history. Those documents are contained in archives, universities, places and centres of learning, Courts of law, and they are contained in much judicial precedents, including the trial held at Nuremberg where it {2184|2185} would appear that just and proper punishment was handed out in what I regard as a proper judicial, fair and democratic manner, after lengthy trials. Then he submits and recites all or many of the trials of individual persons tried for war crimes relatively soon after the conclusion of hostilities in World War II from June of 1945 and thereafter. Included are the American trials of certain persons, the Belsen trial, the trial of one Rudolph Hoess whose name has been brought up in this trial, and others.

Crown counsel then reviewed the works of various authors, all of whom have directly touched upon the Holocaust in great and massive detail.

In essence, Mr. Griffiths takes the position that in the light of all this massive documentation, including the historical transcriptions of the Holocaust as given in evidence at various Western oriented judicial tribunals, that the occasion of the Holocaust and the fact that it occurred is so well-known that it is just and proper that this Court take judicial notice thereof.

Counsel for the accused, not unnaturally, takes much opposition to this motion. I am reminded that the opinions that are given by the authors of the various books, articles and the like, as submitted by the Crown, {2185|2186} are opinions and nothing more than opinions.

Secondly, it is submitted by counsel for the accused that the Crown is asking this Court to decide one of the very issues that the jury will ultimately be asked to decide. I am reminded by Mr. Christie that historical figures of the past whose opinions at one time were greeted with derision and were not believed are now believed. As I recall his example, it was one Galileo, who lived and gave certain scientific and other theories several hundred years ago.

The defence submits that it is improper for the Crown to impose his views through this Court upon the jury until both sides of the case had been heard. Further, this Court, of itself, cannot be taken as holding the indisputable facts of the occasion of the Holocaust when other learned authors take the opposite position to that taken by the authorities cited by the Crown. The defence wants to present the evidence and let the jury decide the issues.

It is further urged upon me that never before, in Canadian judicial history, has a Court been asked to take judicial notice of an event of history that is the subject of the contest between Crown and defence. Mr. {2186|2187} Christie submits that Funk and Wagnall's Dictionary does define Holocaust as a sacrificial ceremony by fire, but it says nothing of Jews. Further, that my granting of this motion would preclude freedom of publication on the part of other authors where similar opinions were held to the author of Exhibit No. 1 and that would be unfortunate, unintended and a quite improper result.

With that submission I totally and strongly disagree. I do not agree, for one minute, that if I take judicial notice of the existence of the Holocaust the result would be that writers of the future are prohibited from freely expressing their views should they take a contrary position. I do not agree that all existing books on the subject taking a position similar to the one contained in Exhibit No. 1 would become suspect.

Mr. Christie submits that it is not clear, even now, whether there were plans to annihilate Jews. If that is so, inter alia there should be produced tangible evidence of an identified order emanating from Hitler which existed at the time to confirm the order for such extermination. Finally, to make this finding would deprive the defence of its ability to defend itself.

The pressures of this trial prohibit a {2187|2188} thorough and considered ruling with respect to this matter. I have only had time for minimal research on my own. The Oxford English Dictionary, Volume 5, at page 344, includes in its definition of the word "Holocaust" as follows: "A great slaughter or massacre, a complete destruction of a large number of persons". The original says nothing about the destruction of Jews by the Nazis; however, the supplement to the Oxford English Dictionary dated 1976, Oxford Clarendon Press, at page 122 of the supplement, has the following to say, in part: "Holocaust" "Frequently applied to the mass murder of Jews by the Nazis in the War of 1939 to 1945".

It would appear to me, on what I have read and heard, that there exists wide and highly regarded opinion that the Holocaust did occur. The issue now revolves on whether or not, in the light of the circumstances of this particular trial, it is judicially prudent on my part to grant the Crown's motion. In order to decide that issue one must surely consult the subject matter of the trial itself.

I have what appears to be Exhibit No. 1. The introductory paragraph in Exhibit 1 reads as follows:

"In the following chapters the author has, he believes, brought together irrefutable evidence that the allegation {2188|2189} that 6 million Jews died during the Second World War, as a direct result of official German policy of extermination, is utterly unfounded. This conclusion, admittedly an unpopular one, resulted from an inquiry which was begun with no pre-conceived [sic] opinions, beyond a general notion that the statistical possibility of such huge casualties was perhaps open to doubt, as well as an awareness that political capital was being made from the implications of this alleged atrocity. A great deal of careful research into this question, however, has now convinced me beyond any doubt that the allegation is not merely an exaggeration but an invention of post-war propaganda."

One should then, I think, consult the very last paragraph in this tract. I read from page 30 under the heading, "Imaginary Slaughter":

"The question most pertinent to the extermination legend is, of course: how {2189|2190} many of the 3 million European Jews under German control survived after 1945?"

I then go down to the following words:

"Nothing could be a more devastating proof of the brazen fantasy of the Six Million. Most of these claimants are Jews, so there can be no doubt that the majority of the 3 million Jews who experienced the Nazi occupation of Europe are, in fact, very much alive. It is a resounding confirmation of the fact that Jewish casualties during the Second World War can only be estimated at a figure in thousands. Surely this is enough grief for the Jewish people? Who has the right to compound it with vast imaginary slaughter, [sic] marking with eternal shame a great European nation, as well as wringing fraudulent monetary compensation from them?"

I intend to instruct the jury when my turn comes that it is incumbent upon the Crown to prove {2190|2191} beyond a reasonable doubt four elements:

- (1) that the accused published this tract;
- (2) that the tract is false;
- (3) that the accused published it wilfully, knowing it was false; and
- (4) that he knew it was likely to cause the evil that s.177 of the Criminal Code is designed to curb or eliminate.

It seems to me that from my perusal of the author Wigmore on Evidence, and as a result of other cases I have read, to grant this motion, however tempted I may be to grant it, would have the effect, in the eyes of the public, as well as perhaps in the eyes of the jury and the accused, of not providing the defence and the accused with full answer and defence. It would have the effect of substantially eliminating a portion of the duty incumbent on the Crown insofar as the guilt of this accused is concerned.

It is with no little regret that, for these reasons, I decline to give effect to the motion which I now dismiss.

——— {2191|2192}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I know the jury is once again waiting in their little room.

THE COURT: No, they are not. I have taken care of that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: As I believe I indicated yesterday, the gentleman from Washington was flying up this morning. Last I heard at eleven o'clock, he was in Buffalo getting snowed on from a great height.

I have what I expect the gentleman will say is a true copy of the movie here in the courtroom, and I am going to suggest that rather than adjourn early or not proceeding with the argument, that I be permitted to commence to show Your Honour the movie in the absence of the jury so that you will be able to consider whether or not it is a business document properly within s.30.

I heard Your Honour mention, and my ears perked up, earlier in the week you made mention of a public document which I would satisfy under s.25 of the Canada Evidence Act, and Your Honour would have an opportunity as well, from the face of the proposed exhibit to see whether it would be that criterion, and the {2192|2193} archivist could speak further to that matter.

The other section, frankly, Your Honour, the most tenuous on which I would submit that this movie should be admissible, is under s.23 of the Canada Evidence Act, which deals with records of prior proceedings, copies of which, under seal, may be – I'm sorry, the wording ultimately is important.

THE COURT: Your position is that, subject to what I hear and subject to what I hear from Mr. Christie, that what you propose to put on the screen may become admissible under s.30 of the Canada Evidence Act.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: And under s.25, and you are now down to the least strong arrow in the quiver, which is s.23.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's right, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I have not seen s.23 recently. I will look.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Section 23 is evidence of judicial proceedings, and it provides that and I am reading from the section: {2193|2194}

"Evidence of any proceeding or record whatever of (a) before any Court in Great Britain or the Supreme or Federal Court of Canada or any Court in the Province of Canada or any Court in any British Colony or possession or any Court of record of the United States of America or of any state in the United States of America, or any other foreign country or before any Justice of the Peace or Coroner, any Province of Canada may be given in any action or proceeding by an exemplification or certified copy thereof purporting to be under the seal of such court, or under the hand or seal of such justice or Coroner as the case may be without any proof of the authenticity of such seal or the signature of such Justice or Coroner or the proof thereof."

My understanding is, Your Honour, there are several ways of demonstrating this to you, ultimately. {2194|2195}

It was an exhibit at Nuremberg, International Military Tribunal. It is the narration from this film, is transcribed and contained within volume 30 of the trial of the major war criminals International Military Tribunals, and as Your Honour may know, the first twenty-two volumes of that series contains the transcript of the proceedings, and the next twenty volumes contain not all, but most of – some of the evidence, documentary evidence that was introduced.

I have it in a book that has a seal on it, Your Honour, and I believe that there is reference to the Military Tribunal as well.

THE COURT: Who wrote the book? A private author, I gather.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. This is the official record published at Nuremberg, Germany 1948.

THE COURT: All right. Proceed. Sorry to interrupt.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And it says on the fly of the volume I have, English edition, "Documents and other material in evidence". And then it gives the document numbers. {2195|2196}

MR. CHRISTIE: I think my friend could find greater consolation from the words that are on the other side of these words, "These documents are published in accordance by the Secretariat of the Tribunal under the jurisdiction of the Allied control for Germany."

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Christie, you are one step ahead. So that, Your Honour, as Your Honour has fairly put it —

THE COURT: What is the page?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I believe it is page 459 is where it starts, and it is document No. 2430-PS. That's the exhibit number.

The difficulty with that, Your Honour, I think that the Courts have widely held that a seal can be almost anything. There is no real formalities to what is a seal, but the real difficulty, Your Honour, is that the authorities — and I referred to a Mr. Ewart's book on documentary evidence and I had the opportunity to speak to Mr. Wilmur about this, and the authorities seem to indicate that that section provides more for the admission into evidence of a record of conviction, or a {2196|2197} record of the finding of the court rather than admitting into evidence exhibits or parts of a record, and I can see some rational for that.

THE COURT: So can I. I think we all can.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Okay. Having said I that, I will move to my next argument.

Section 30, Your Honour, of the Canada Evidence Act is, I would suggest, applicable here, and it is merely relying on the same body of a case law as I did in submitting the bulletin of the International Committee of the Red Cross to you.

Section 30 (1) indicates:

"Where oral evidence in respect of a matter would be admissible in a legal proceeding ..."

— and I submit again that that means where it's relevant, and Your Honour will have an opportunity to seeing the movie to determine whether it is relevant to these proceedings —

"... a record made in the usual and ordinary course of business that contains information in respect of that {2197|2198} matter is admissible in evidence under this section in the legal proceeding upon production of the record."

In the volume from the International Military Tribunal that I have produced, there are a number of affidavits which also were filmed and show at the beginning of the movie.

The affidavits purport to be by people who made the movie and who edited the movie, and indicate that the movie was made basically within a fifteen-day period, beginning of April, end of May, 1945, on the orders of the Allied Command as Allied Forces in the various concentration camps.

The affidavits also say that there were some eighty thousand feet of film taken. This film represents some six thousand feet, and that six thousand feet is representative of the eighty.

The archivist, Your Honour, I understand, would say that he received this film, as generic film taken by Allied Forces going into concentration camps, and I must say, Your Honour, I have talked to him on the telephone, but that was one of {2198|2199} the things I wanted to enquire further, whether what we were talking about was the whole eighty thousand feet or some edition of that.

This film and other generic film taken by the Allies immediately in the dying days of the War are held in the National Archives at Washington, D.C., pursuant to Federal Statute requiring them to hold it, and there is —

THE COURT: Are held whereabouts?

MR. GRIFFITHS: In the National Archives in Washington, D.C. And the original films are all there.

From those original films the archives have made negatives and those negatives have been sold and distributed and are available to the public and, indeed, are, I understand, fairly readily available in Toronto, which is where I received this copy.

THE COURT: Which is what?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Which is where I have the copy that I have in court now. My submission on s.30, Your Honour, is that the archivist is required to keep a record of all these films, in addition to other matters, that {2199|2200} this particular film forms a part of the record that he is keeping, and as such should be admissible into evidence in much the same way as fingerprint evidence is admissible, or any other business document.

The film itself, Your Honour, or the contents of the film, what the film shows, I concede, is hearsay, in that I will not have the Navy Lieutenant who took the film present in court, nor, after forty years, do I expect anybody else will; but as we have seen in the Anthes, if I can paraphrase it, in that decision, and in the Grimba decision and in the Sayec decision, hearsay, double hearsay are admissible under this section, and that, in itself, should not be a bar to the admissibility of the film.

Finally, Your Honour — and I still have my two case books here if Your Honour wishes to refer to those case books again, under s.25 I think I would really have to wait until the archivist is here, and perhaps give us some indication of his knowledge as to how widely this film is distributed, and that is something that I do not know and I am hoping he can give us some evidence to that effect.

THE COURT: What time do you {2200|2201} expect him?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, Sergeant Williams, who is conspicuous by his absence today, left a message at a quarter to one that he was on his way out to the airport to pick him up. So I am hoping he will be in this afternoon, but I am not sure. The film that I have, Your Honour, I have seen and it lasts about an hour.

THE COURT: Anything further?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I will hear from you now, if you wish. You might want to wait till you hear from the archivist so that you will have it all before you and make your submissions.

What is your pleasure?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, sir, I think since we are here, that I should respond immediately to what's been said, and when the archivist comes, if something new arises I might have to respond again, but I don't think it is necessarily what would occur.

First of all, I'd like to explain my substantive reasons for objecting to the film. I have {2201|2202} seen it.

The substantive reason is that in it we have a voice-over process whereby an officer of the armed forces of the United States, I presume, gives his explanation of what is taking place in the film.

The film is extremely gruesome, extremely shocking and deplorable in all human terms in that it offends anyone's sensitivities to life.

It is not possible to ascertain whether the things said about the situations depicted are true or false. Often German personnel — I was thinking of the Hadamar incident that is referred to in this film; I can refer to it by the transcript that is available —

THE COURT: It is not possible to what?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is not possible to ascertain about whether the situations depicted are true or false. In fact, they appear to be somewhat coloured.

For example, bodies are hauled out of the ground. They are exhumed. And statements are made about the bodies on this film by the narrator and he says these people were killed in this manner, or these {2202|2203} people were — and I don't think he says in most cases gassed, but I think he says they were killed by injections, or statements of that kind are made. And then many, many bodies are dragged out of graves, and obviously most of us would be offended by the sight. I mean, it's impossible to know whether we are looking at the victims of atrocities or just people who died. So I say it creates certainly an impression which I don't know may be true, maybe false, but there is no way to test it.

THE COURT: Do I gather that one of your positions is that the code of values was out-weighted by the horror of what the viewer sees?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. And it is compounded by the explanation that is provided by the narrator who, in great detail, for example, describes what people are saying in the German language, although you don't hear the German people speaking. You hear his, not translation, but his description of what they are saying. It very well may be true or it could be false, but we are never able to know. And that's the problem with the substance of the film.

THE COURT: Doesn't it go to weight {2203|2204} rather than admissibility?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it's obviously hearsay. It's highly prejudicial. It is not even an attempt to be a translation of things. It is an interpretation. I suppose you could say that goes to weight, and I think if that's the case, my response would be to fall back on what, in effect, Your Honour said that the probative value is so far outweighed by the prejudicial effect of these remarks that it constitutes nothing in relation to the substance of the charge.

I would like to reiterate that very little, if any, of the film deals with the allegations analyzed by the book or pamphlet or whatever it is.

The reference in the book to Hadamar does not exist, or to Penig or to Leipzig do not exist, not even mentioned in the book.

THE COURT: You mean in the exhibit.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. And Arnstadt Hanover, Mauthausen – Mauthausen is mentioned in the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” I hope I can paraphrase and explain my position this way, that the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” does not deny suffering, death, cruelty, privation, evil actions on the part of {2204|2205} the Nazis in the way they treated prisoners. The basic essence, although one can say that it has obviously a semantic bias and inclined to that view, the basic premise is that gas chambers did not exist. That is the basic allegation.

If you come to the heart of it, it comes towards the end of it, but it is a denial that gas chambers, which are the justification for, in that book's view, the story of six million, are dubious, to say the least, and that book says more. It says they don't exist.

THE COURT: I thought the opening I paragraph says that the allegation that six million Jews died during the Second World War as a direct result of official German policy of extermination is utterly unfounded. Isn't that the issue?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. But the official German policy of – German policy expounded in Nuremberg is that gassing was the official German policy. That is the essence of the case in my opinion. The official German policy in concentration camps, or the results of privation of War is not the issue.

There is no denying concentration camps in that book; there is no denying the intention camps {2205|2206} to concentrate people in those camps, and to treat them with cruelty and hardship; and my friend – this is where we disagree, I think. My friend says it's enough to prove millions died by privations. The gas chambers are not the issue. But the gas chambers are the means for the specific crime of genocide. That book says there are no gas chambers; it is a myth, that book says, and that is where the policy alleged to be attributed to the German government is false in that book's view, because it says that it could not be accomplished without gas chambers, and there were no gas chambers. And that's why he quotes Christopherson and all those who have questioned that story. And it may come as a surprise, but there may be some scientific evidence to support that position. That remains to be seen.

But what I am saying is that the book does not deal with the camps in the film at all. Buchenwald is not said to be, in the book, it is not said to be a nice place to live, or Belsen, or any of these places referred to in the film.

The film attacks things the book does not defend. The book does not say that thousands of people didn't die in the last stages of the war. In fact, {2206|2207} the film says they did and shows how they did, and where their bodies are, and then it piles the bodies up in a place and then it bulldozes the bodies around and pushes them into a pit, and I don't think that is relevant to what the book has to say.

But what I am suggesting is, if it was relevant to the subject matter of the charges, its probative value might justify its prejudicial effect, but it's really off the mark because the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” is not going to attempt to say, nor does it say in any way, that people did not die in Buchenwald, they did not die in Mauthausen, they did not die in Arnstadt, Hadamar or Ohrdruf, Leipzig or Penig, all of which is alleged in the film.

THE COURT: Mauthausen is in the film.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is. So that one camp that is in the film out of eleven – I think Belsen is the last, I think two out of eleven, maybe three, would be referred to in the book, but I would like to just point out, to reiterate what I said, that the book admits, on page 27, towards the end, that Jews, like many other wartime nationals, suffered rigors and privations, and I think that's what the book's position is, that those {2207|2208} rigors and privations can only constitute six million casualties when we believe that the gas chambers exist.

And that's where the defence concentrates its attention. That is the issue for the defence. Now, it may not be the issue for the Crown, and I guess, ultimately, it is the jury who will decide what is right and what the issue is, but that is the defence issue on this book.

It is the understanding of the defence and the accused that the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” is essentially attacking the gas chamber aspect. Nobody denies the privations and the suffering and the justification of that suffering for Jews in other aspects of the War and other circumstances.

So the essence of the film attacks a problem that the book does not address, so I say it's off the mark. That was my substantive reason for objecting to the film, that it portrays a picture of horror that is unjustified if its purpose is to attack the credibility of the book.

We could bring film, too, of the horrors of War, and it would be irrelevant to bring that unless it's relevant to the charge. We could {2208|2209} bring film of thousands of victims of all sorts of atrocities. We could bring films of the forest where they are hauling fourteen thousand or so Polish officers out of the holes in the ground, but is it relevant; does that prove anything to the charge?

Katyn is mentioned in the book as being a Russian atrocity, but I don't think that advances the case any. The issue is whether the gas chamber story is true or false, in my view, and that is what we should concentrate on.

Now, there's allegations in the film which actually help the defence, and I suppose in that sense they would be of some value to the defence, because it alleges gas chambers and places that I think we can now demonstrate are no longer held to exist.

I think in Dachau it is true, and many historians now view that as an unfounded allegation.

To deal with the technical and legal reasons why I suggest this is inadmissible and get away from the substantive portions for a moment, I point out that my friend seems to be caught on the horns of a dilemma, because if he relies on s.30 and if the Nuremberg International Military Tribunal is a legal proceeding, {2209|2210} it is not the legal proceeding of a country; it is not set up in the jurisdiction of any country or by the jurisdiction of any country, but it would be the transcript or recording of evidence taken in the course of another legal proceeding. It would be in the same —

THE COURT: Is this section 30 or section 25 that you are talking about?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am talking about s.30.

THE COURT: What subsection?

MR. CHRISTIE: Subsection 10 (c). It says:

“Nothing in this section ...”

— that is s.30 —

“... is admissible in evidence in any proceedings

(c) any transcript or evidence taken in the course of another legal proceeding.”

Unless my friend is prepared to concede that Nuremberg Military Tribunal was not a military proceeding —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not. {2210|2211}

MR. CHRISTIE: But that is what it appears, that the narrative portion of this film was an exhibit, and was viewed and accepted as evidence, I suppose. I don't know if the officers testified, or how do you cross-examine a film? I don't know. But it was exhibited as evidence, it appears. And it's not evidence taken in "any other foreign country or of any other foreign country". It is taken in another foreign country, but it is not of another foreign country. It is of a new creature not contemplated by s.23. The creature is the International Military Tribunal set up by the London Conference of Allies.

So I suggest that, really, we can't admit evidence of this nature when it is, in fact, circumscribed by s.30 (10) (c). And if it wasn't absolutely precluded by that, which I suggest it is, it would still be – well, that, I suggest, answers it.

It is also made in the course of an inquiry or investigation and in contemplation of legal proceedings, all of which is referred to in (10) (a), and it says:

"Nothing in this section renders admissible in evidence in any legal {2211|2212} proceeding any of those things".

That's under s.30. So I suggest s.30 cannot apply.

Section 23 cannot apply because it's not the transcript of any other foreign country. It's not a record as is contemplated by the section.

I think my friend correctly said that the section contemplates the introduction of a record of conviction, which this is not. It's a piece of evidence, but it's not a record of conviction.

Section 25, then, seems to be the only way that one could avoid the problem created by the sections I've mentioned, and it, in essence, says where a book or other document is of so public a nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from its proper custody – those words strike me as rather ambiguous because I would suggest that it doesn't – that section has not been interpreted to mean that hearsay is somehow admissible. It would be my submission that that section contemplates the introduction of a document or book which could prove its own existence, but not the truth of its content by its introduction. {2212|2213}

For example the Bible, or a book that is similarly well-known, the proof of which is simply to prove that it exists and it says this.

But we are going a step beyond when we introduce a film to prove a fact which is alleged by the film, to prove the truth of its contents.

THE COURT: Aren't you getting into the issue of weight against admissibility again?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I am. It would be my submission that s.25 is actually designed to produce means of proving or introducing a copy in place of an original that would otherwise be admissible.

It seems that section is a rather ambiguous section. It doesn't seem to encompass, in my respectful submission, the introduction of hearsay at all.

If my submission is correct, the item introduced by s.25, or that which would be permitted by it is simply the proof of an item's existence rather than the proof of its contents, and therefore hearsay would not be admissible under that section as it might be under s.30, and as the authorities under s.30 referred to by my friend indicate. {2213|2214}

So s.25, in my submission, does not justify the introduction of the item, either. Since the film does not direct itself to a matter in issue, and since the Crown has not explained, really, how it does, it would be my respectful submission that you should give greater weight to the consideration of whether its prejudicial effect exceeds its probative value.

I did not hear the Crown say at any stage that this is why the film is being introduced, this is what it proves. Having seen the film, it certainly proves the existence of bodies, many, many bodies. It proves the effects of typhus, which is actually identified in the film at one stage as the cause of many of the deaths, but in that sense I suggest it's not relevant to the subject matter of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", because repeatedly the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" affirms that typhus was a massive killer in the camps, and that it was the reason for most of the deaths, and the explanation for the belief in the gas chambers, in fact, because cremation, on occasion, has been confused with gassing, and the explanation for the belief in the six million – cremation {2214|2215} as a result of death, and it's also a precaution against contagion, especially in circumstances where typhus is the cause of death.

So this film proves the existence of typhus, but I don't see how that, with respect, relates to the issue of gas chambers or not.

The whole essence of the case from the defence of this book is that the existence of homicidal gas chambers is denied, and the intention of the defence is to prove that there is ample reason for believing that, much as it may be both unpopular and ridiculous at times; it may not be so ridiculous after it's heard, if it's heard. Maybe that's why people don't, or some people object to it being heard. don't know.

THE COURT: Is there any reference to gas chambers on the film?

MR. CHRISTIE: There is. There is. A ridiculous one.

THE COURT: Well, that may be your view. Just answer the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: It says, "Here the gas chamber", and "Here the dummy shower heads", in {2215|2216} Belsen.

THE COURT: You've just indicated, as I thought you had, that it's the intention of the defence to, in this trial, to convince the jury that gas chambers did not exist.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Well, now, talking about admissibility, if it is admissible, wouldn't the reference of gas chambers on the film be a piece of relevant evidence for the jury to consider?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it would. It is one piece, to my point of view, that is relevant, but there is so much more that is irrelevant and shocking.

THE COURT: And prejudicial.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: That outweighs the —

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: I have that point.

MR. CHRISTIE: There must be an hour of the most horrible pictures I have ever seen, but there is one reference there to, "This is the gas chamber", and then, "Those are the dummy shower heads". I think the implication is that that is the way the gas came in {2216|2217} shower heads – which in light of what scientific evidence can be available, would demonstrate a belief which is illogical. In fact, from the defence's point of view, we can prove that there were signs put out by the authorities of Dachau that say, "Gas chambers never used", and yet there are all these bodies, and the statement made, "This is the gas chamber", and "This is the dummy shower head". So this is one piece of relevant evidence. I don't think the Crown mentioned that. I hope that we have mentioned that. And I think, to my mind, that's the only relevant evidence, but it is so minute, compared with the real horror that the film presents, that —

THE COURT: That will all depend on the issue that the jury considers. Your version of what the issues are, obviously, are quite different than Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: So that one would think that you will forcibly put your version of the issues that the jury should consider, and that Mr. Griffiths would do likewise.

MR. CHRISTIE: No doubt that's true, {2217|2218} Your Honour.

THE COURT: How is that relevant to whether the film is admissible, other than what you've said, what I understand?

MR. CHRISTIE: Because it portrays a picture of horror in the concentration camps and gives an explanation which we are not able to rebut with evidence of either cross-examination of a person, or evidence in any way.

THE COURT: If it went in, it would go in under one of the sections of the Canada Evidence Act. Aren't you repeating to me another way, that in essence the horror outweighs the probative value?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I'm sorry if I repeated myself.

THE COURT: Well, you are going at it from all directions, which counsel do; but I understand your point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I don't think I should repeat myself again, but I thought I was answering a question. I wasn't sure.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: But as far as I {2218|2219} can, I have explained my concerns about s.23 and s.30, and I don't know that I should say any more until the expert, or rather archivist, is here and that matter is to be explored further.

THE COURT: Is the archivist here? You'd like to talk to him?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'd like to, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes..

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just before the recess, and without referring to law, and Mr. Christie is quite right and I apologize to the Court, I should have referred directly to the exhibit and what it was that I wished to adduce through this movie, why I am suggesting it is relevant.

Pages 24 and 25, Your Honour, of Exhibit No. 1, under the chapter heading, "The Nature & Condition of War-Time Concentration Camps", and there is a sub-heading, "Humane Conditions", the pamphlet says as follows: {2219|2220}

"That several thousand camp inmates did die in the chaotic final months of the war brings us to the question of their wartime conditions. These have been deliberately falsified in innumerable books of an extremely lurid and unpleasant kind. The Red Cross Report, examined below, demonstrates conclusively that throughout the war the camps were well administered. The working inmates received a daily ration even throughout 1943 and 1944 of not less than 2,750 calories, which was more than double the average civilian ration in occupied Germany in the years after 1945. The internees were under regular medical care, and those who became seriously ill were transferred to hospital. All internees, unlike those in Soviet camps, could receive parcels of food, clothing and pharmaceutical supplies from the {2220|2221} Special Relief Division of the Red Cross."

These are films, Your Honour, taken in the dying days of War, but I think the films are representative, and it would indicate that it was many thousands, not several thousands, who died.

Part of the film shows inside some of the barracks and places where people are living and give an idea of what conditions are like and which people were living.

On page 25, Your Honour, of the pamphlet, lovely photographs of "Healthy and cheerful inmates released from Dachau", I don't know where that photograph comes from, Your Honour, but I think you see some of the inmates, they were less than cheerful and healthy in this movie.

Under the paragraph heading, "Fake Photographs", still on page 25, first paragraph:

"Not only were situations such as those at Belsen unscrupulously exploited for propaganda purposes, but this propaganda has also made use of entirely fake atrocity photographs {2221|2222} and films. The extreme conditions at Belsen applied to very few camps indeed; the great majority escaped the worst difficulties and all their inmates survived in good health."

Again, Your Honour, this film, I would suggest, puts the lie to that.

There are other references as well to the starvation of the people in the community, as well as the people in the camp. The film shows pictures of S.S. officers, civilians who are fat and cheerful in the film when compared to the inmates of these camps, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Anything further?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not until I call Mr. Murphy, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a reply to those remarks, if you wish, at a later time.

THE COURT: I may.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Mr. Murphy, please.

— {2222|2223}

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of the fact that my friend has identified the portions of the text in Exhibit 1 to which he alleges the relevance of the document, if I might reply to that, or would you prefer that I do so at a later time?

THE COURT: A later time. We are getting a little out of order here.

Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Mr. Murphy, please.

WILLIAM MURPHY, sworn on Voir Dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Murphy, I understand, sir, that you are employed by the National Archives, Washington, D.C.

A. Yes. That's correct.

Q. And what is your job at the archives?

A. I am the Chief of the Motion Picture Sound and Video Branch, and we have custody of audio-visual records maintained by the National Archives.

Q. And you were explaining to me the {2223|2224} difference between the Canadian Public Archives and the National Archives in the United States. What is it that you are charged, as an archivist, with keeping?

A. Well, we are primarily in charge with the preservation of the permanently valuable records of the United States Government. We don't branch out into the entertainment areas such as a lot of other archives. So we are primarily concerned with records, although we do have news reels as well which are not considered record materials.

Q. And is there some legislative mandate for you to keep those records?

A. Yes. Well, we are required by several pieces of legislation, to begin with, the National Archives Act of 1934 which established the National Archives and laid out its mission to preserve the permanently valuable records of the United States Government, and also, by subsequent legislations in authority that relate to the preservation of Federal records.

Q. All right. And can you tell us if any of the film that you have in the archives deals with World War II?

A. As a matter of fact, probably over forty, perhaps fifty per cent of our motion picture records relate to World War II, and most of those are from military origin – that is, from the former War Department, Navy Department and other agencies.

Q. All right. Is there any film that you have in the archives that relates specifically to concentration camps? {2224|2225}

A. Yes. We have, in terms of motion pictures, we have the unedited 35-millimeter black and white film shot by the Signal Corps of Cameramen as they liberated the camps towards the end of World War II. We also have the edited films that were submitted to the Nuremberg proceedings, and we have probably four, five reels of colour film made by the Army-Airforce that show conditions in the camps at the time of liberation.

Q. And are these films available to be seen by the public?

A. Yes, they are. They are available to any person sixteen years of age or older, and American citizens as well as people from other countries have access to these films, and indeed, they have been viewed over and over again by countless numbers of researchers over the years.

Q. Is there any copyright [sic] that the American Government claims on these films?

A. The United States Government, by law, is not allowed to copyright [sic] its films, and so the films are available without restriction. There are no copyrights for films of government origin.

Q. Do you have any facilities at the archives for copying films?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. Or video tapes?

A. Yes. We have our own internal laboratory. We also, from time to time, use government approved laboratories, who do some of our preservation work.

Q. And do the Archives get involved {2225|2226} in the sale of copies of any of the materials that they have?

A. Yes, they do, in two respects. One is through our National Audio Visual Centre Program which has a distribution function, and they sell complete copies of edited films only. Most of the films that they sell are modern-day films, but they handle some classic documentary as well because of the continuing interest in these documentaries; and one of the films is "Nazi Concentration Camps", which happens to be significant to man.

In my particular office we have the preservation copies, and the record copies. We provide a service that supplements that of the Audio Visual Centre. We sell not necessarily an entire reel, but we make copies of portions of the films for use in documentary productions. A lot of our research or assistance with the public are aiding film makers and television who are making films about historical events, and they can come to the National Archives and obtain copies of the records in our custody for a fee.

Q. And can you tell us what [ ] it would cost for a copy of a film of "Nazi Concentration Camps"?

A. Well, the complete film is available through our National Audio Visual Centre, and forgive me, I am not sure of the exact price, but it must be under $200, as a sixty-millimetre print, and probably cheaper as a video cassette.

Q. It is sold as a video cassette as well?

A. Yes. {2226|2227}

Q. And have you had an opportunity to view some of the – I use the expression Soviet generic film in the eighty thousand, thirty-five millimeter feet of "Nazi Concentration Camps" from which the edited version was made?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Can you tell us whether the edited version, whether or not it is representative of the larger amount of generic film?

A. I think it is quite representative of the generic film, and probably doesn't even contain the most graphic material which may be found in the unedited subjects.

Q. You received the original print of "Nazi Concentration Camps" — did you receive that print?

A. Well, we did not — when you use the term "original", in film archives we take it to mean original negative. We did not receive original negative. The National Archives received a print from Justice Jackson in 1946, and in 1956 we received another print from the Adjutant General's Office of the Army.

Q. And do, you still have those in your records?

A. Yes, we still have those in our records.

Q. And do you have records of when those materials arrived and how they arrived?

A. Yes, I have. We have records covering the accessioning of those films. Each of the transactions involving accessioning of records into the {2227|2228} Archives is fully documented so each transaction dossier which gives you a statement of the materials and the date it was turned over to the National Archives' custody — in effect, it's the legal transfer of the property from one agency to another — and the accession dossier is very important as a record, a permanent record of when the material was acquired, and that covers all of the records in the National Archives, not just films, but any kind of record.

Q. Excuse me just a moment, Mr. Murphy.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I am aware that the hour is late, and as I indicated, the film is an hour long, and I have no other questions for Mr. Murphy until after the film is shown.

I understand he has looked at the preservation copies in the Archives and would be able to say whether what we have here is a true copy of that.

Again somewhat out of order —

THE COURT: Do you say that your examination-in-chief is not completed?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's not completed subject to the showing of the film to Your Honour, and I don't know whether we will get to that this afternoon or not. I am in Your Honour's hands.

THE COURT: I gather from that, then, that you don't have any more questions, just the film to be seen.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just the film and the question at the end of the film whether that is a true copy. {2228|2229}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I assume that I am not really necessary at this point except to Your Honour as a matter of convenience.

THE COURT: I should say that my plans are, first of all, if you wish to cross-examine Mr. Murphy now, you may. I will be rising before five, but not much before, if that is of any assistance.

Tomorrow morning, at nine thirty I have a judgment which I will deliver until, I would think, a little time after ten, but not very much. We will then proceed with this case.

You can cross-examine now or after the film has been seen by me, as you wish. What is your pleasure?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it would seem we are not going to get all the way through the film today, and I have a few questions I think it might be best if I asked them now.

THE COURT: Then I think, gentlemen, if Mr. Christie wishes to ask his questions now, he may do so, and I will see the film tomorrow morning after I deliver the judgment in the other case. It has nothing to do with this case — another case entirely.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE: (Voir Dire)

Q. A couple of questions, Mr. Murphy. How many hours of this film have you watched? {2229|2230}

A. Of this film?

Q. Yeah.

A. I've watched it completely.

Q. I should have more accurately defined it, as my friend seemed to, as the generic film.

A. Well, over the years I probably have seen half of it.

Q. How many hours of it have you watched?

A. I don't know how it breaks down in terms of hours. Probably around, let's say, thirty, thirty-five hours.

Q. Thirty-five hours. Well, then, you've seen it several times, haven't you?

A. Are we talking about the generic film?

Q. I understood it is eighty feet of generic film. If this is six thousand —

A. No. That is a sixteen-millimetre copy. It should only be two thousand and so feet. You see, they are referring to thirty-five millimeter footage. That is greater than sixteen-millimeter equivalent.

Q. So is this the sixteen-millimeter equivalent of the six thousand feet?

A. Right.

Q. But it is the six thousand feet that you see in an hour.

A. Approximately.

Q. Then you are saying that you saw eighty thousand feet in thirty-five hours?

A. I assume that if you can see a {2230|2231} six thousand foot, thirty-five —

A. I made a mistake. Let me correct myself. I think I've seen less, let's say about nine or ten hours' worth of it.

Q. Yeah. Because the total of eighty thousand feet you can see in thirteen hours. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. How do you know that's the footage from which was taken the six thousand feet?

A. Because it covers the exact same subject matter. It describes each camp.

Q. Was this sworn to by anybody?

A. Well, we have detailed descriptions of the generic footage that were prepared by the Army. They are of a set of five by eight catalogue prepared by the Army Pictorial Center, and the subject matter relates very closely to that portrayed in the film.

Q. Do you have any film of Auschwitz, Treblinka, Sobibor or Belzec?

A. I don't think those are the camps that are covered in the generic footage.

Q. So you don't have any film of those camps?

A. No. Well, there are some, but —

Q. Really?

A. I'm not sure. There may be a reel or two; but those camps, I don't believe those camps are referred to in this particular film you are going to see tomorrow.

Q. No. These films were made after {2231|2232} the occupation by the Allies in 1945; is that right?

A. No. They were made just prior to the occupation, or during the final entry of Allied troops into these areas. You could say they were made simultaneously with the occupation. I don't know when – I don't know if there is a precise date marking the occupation. It seems to me it was a series of events.

Q. Anyway, they were made in 1945.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Is the other eighty thousand feet, is that narrated as well?

A. No. It's silent, unedited film.

Q. So it's obvious that the narration was provided after the film was made; is that right?

A. Right.

Q. Are you able to say that the person who narrated the films was there when it was made?

A. I can't say that.

Q. So the narration may very well be the result of somebody else giving their observations; he wasn't even there when it was made.

A. Perhaps, but there are several affidavits accepted by the Military Tribunal [sic] which attest to the veracity of the film.

Q. I noticed that. But what confused me about it is that they were read by somebody, and that seems not to be the person that swore the affidavit. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. You are not saying the person who swore the affidavit read the affidavit, are you? {2232|2233}

THE COURT: He read it before he or she signed it?

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

Q. What happens on the film is this, isn't it, Mr. Murphy – that somebody reads this affidavit and swears that, "I, so and so Kellogg, from Hollywood, California, make oath and say", and that's not Mr. Kellogg at all, is it? It is a narrator, because he reads the others, too.

A. Well, I think, perhaps, you know, you have to think of the necessities [sic] of film-making.

Q. I am not blaming anybody, but that is the truth, isn't it? It is the narrator who reads all these affidavits. Right?

A. Yes. That's correct. [sic]

Q. It's also someone who isn't identified at all as the narrator.

A. No. As I recall only the filmmakers are identified.

Q. Yes. All right. Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Any re-examination?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one, Your Honour.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. You brought up copies – do you know where those affidavits are?

A. Well, I have copies with me, yes. {2233|2234}

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's all, Your Honour, until tomorrow. [sic]

THE COURT: I have a question, if may.

The dossiers effecting the transfer of the films from military sources to your sources, Mr. Murphy, are those dossiers available to anyone who wants to ask to look at them?

THE WITNESS: Oh, yes. There are no restrictions on them, and copies can be obtained quite easily.

THE COURT: So that do I understand the situation to be that your employer is a government owned agency of the United States of America which has the responsibility of holding and maintaining valuable documents and the like, including films, for the perusal of the general public? Is that correct – and the use of the general public?

THE WITNESS: Yes. Yes, that's correct.

THE COURT: I presume for a fee.

THE WITNESS: Not – well, there are no fees involved if it was just perusal. The fees come in if you want to obtain a copy.

THE COURT: If you want to buy.

THE WITNESS: Yes. You have to pay for a service.

THE COURT: And it's a responsibility of your employer to disseminate and to permit the public at large —

THE WITNESS: Yes. We believe that {2234|2235} this is an inherent right of the American public to have access to their government records.

THE COURT: Fine. Has that been the case – how long have you been there?

THE WITNESS: I've been there about sixteen years.

THE COURT: Over the last sixteen years has that situation that you've described continued to exist?

THE WITNESS: Yes. And even more so with the passage of the Freedom of Information Act which I am sure many of you are aware of.

THE COURT: Yes. We have our own counterpart here. Any questions arising out of mine?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down, Mr. Murphy.

— The witness stands down.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one other matter. My law student had a flash over recess that she recollected from law school that public documents are contained not only in the Canada Evidence Act, but also —

THE COURT: Common law.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Common law. And I intend to do some reading on that and make comments on that in the morning, and I want to say that to you, and also to Mr. Christie sitting here. {2235|2236}

THE COURT: My instincts tell me that ten thirty is an appropriate time for your appearance.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 1, 1985, at ten thirty.

FEBRUARY 1, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I ask that Mr. Murphy sit at the counsel table so that he can view it and, at the end, advise us if it is the same movie.

It is a black and white film. I don't think it will be necessary to lower the lights. If it is, there is a switch whereby some but not all of the lights can be extinguished.

Subject to Your Honour.

THE COURT: Are you all ready? Go ahead.

— The court views the movie, "Nazi Concentration Camps".

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I wonder if a short recess would be in order.

— Short adjournment. {2236|2237}

— Upon resuming.

WILLIAM T. MURPHY, previously sworn (Voir Dire)

FURTHER EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Murphy, you have had the opportunity to review the film in the courtroom. Can you tell us what relationship it bears, if any, to the film "Nazi Concentration Camps" in the Archives?

A. This was made from a print of a negative I have in my office, so it was made from the National Archives.

Q. Did you bring documents relating to this film, or photocopies of documents?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What have you brought with you?

A. I have brought with me the related exhibits that go with the film that were submitted to the IMT at Nuremberg, and they are five of Exhibit A, a certified copy of a statement by Robert Jackson, Exhibit B, an original affidavit by Lieutenant Colonel George Stevens, Exhibit C is Ray Kellogg, Exhibit D, affidavit by Eric Tabeau, and finally Exhibit E, which is a copy of the complete transcript of the narration of the film.

Q. And you brought photocopies of those exhibits?

A. Photocopies, yes.

Q. From the Archives?

A. Yes. {2237|2238}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'd ask that the documents so described, Your Honour, be the next lettered exhibit.

THE COURT: Exhibit "T".

— EXHIBIT "p" ["T"] (For Identification) Photocopies of Exhibits from National Archives, Washington.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Murphy. I have no further questions, but Mr. Christie may.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a couple of questions, Mr. Murphy.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE: (Voir Dire)

Q. Do you know if in the National Archives there have been retained any captured German films of their explanation or description of these camps?

A. There's virtually no film of German origin about the concentration camps.

Q. Are you saying that there never was any, or that there is none in your possession?

A. I have no personal knowledge regarding whether or not there ever was any, but we do not have any in the National Archives.

Q. Are you aware in the National {2238|2239} Archives if any reports or studies were done of the effects of epidemics or treatment of inmates or reports of daily life activities in the camps from German sources?

A. That is not in my particular area of responsibility. I can only surmise that there are those kinds of documents, but I have had no first-hand experience with them.

Q. Do you have records in the National Archives of the Allied bombing raids on Germany and whether any of those relate to the camps?

A. I have no first-hand experience with that kind of documentation. I work primarily in the audio visual area.

Q. It is my understanding, though, that in the area of audio visual records there are films of bombing raids of Germany at the end of the War.

A. Yes, there are.

Q. Have you looked at those to see if they relate to the camps?

A. I have not been able to find any that relate to the camps, but there is a lot of bombing footage that describes the Allied bombing raids over Germany at the end of the War.

Q. I take it that as far as the people whose documents you purport to tender, those of Robert Jackson, George Stevens, Ray Kellogg and one other person, you don't know from any personal knowledge whether those persons exist or where they are. Robert Jackson is dead and George Stevens and Ray Kellogg, I suppose, you don't know who they are or where they are? {2239|2240}

A. Ray Stevens was the famous Hollywood director. I believe he is deceased.

A. Yes. But like other Hollywood directors during World II, they were given commissions in the Army and other services, and they made films for the U.S. Government.

Q. I don't suppose you are aware who wrote the narrative to the film.

A. No, I'm not aware of that.

Q. And you have no personal knowledge of the accuracy of the statements contained in the narrative.

A. I have no personal knowledge, no.

Q. None. Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. Nothing arising out of that.

Thank you, Mr. Murphy.

— The witness stands down.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no other evidence to call, Your Honour, on the application.

THE COURT: Thank you. Do you wish to call any evidence on the voir dire, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me a minute, Your Honour, if I may have a second.

Thank you very much, Your Honour. I have no evidence to call in respect to the matter.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

— {2240|2241}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I mentioned at the very end yesterday afternoon that there would be one additional area of law that I would be arguing for the admissibility of this movie, and that is a common law, which according to s.36 of the Canada Evidence Act continues in full force and effect, and is to be considered in addition to and not replaced by the Canada Evidence Act.

There is an area of the common law, Your Honour, which provides for the admissibility of public documents, and that is a common law exception to the hearsay rule. The leading cases in Canada that have been able to find on the matter are two, and they are both in the same volume of Criminal Cases, Volume 107. The first is Finestone v. The Queen at page 97 of that volume, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, and it is a per curiam decision, and the second is R. v. Kaipainen, a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal reported at page 377 of Volume 107 of the C.C.C., and it is, again, a judgment delivered by a five-men bench. Judgment is delivered by Mr. Justice Aylesworth and there are no dissenting opinions. {2241|2242}

First, Your Honour, Finestone v. The Queen deals with the admissibility of a bill of lading, a document said to have been made in the United States at the Port of New York City, and argument was made that it should be admitted as a business document — I'm sorry, as a public document. The report says, page 94, in the middle of the page, that —

THE COURT: Yes, I have it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

"The argument made to us somewhat confused the admissibility of an entry made strictly in the course of business and one made pursuant to a public duty. The rule in relation to the latter does not seem ever to have been doubted. As early as 1785 in R. v. Aickles, 1 Leach 390 at p. 392, 168 E.R. 297, it is said: 'The law reposes such a confidence in public officers that it presumes they will discharge their several trusts with accuracy {2242|2243} and fidelity; and therefore whatever acts they do in discharge of their public duty may be given in evidence and shall be taken to be true, under such a degree of caution as the nature and circumstances of each case may appear to require.'"

That is on page 95, Your Honour.

The Court, in considering the ground for the exception indicates, the first full paragraph on that page:

"The grounds for this exception to the hearsay rule are the inconvenience of the ordinary modes of proof and the trustworthiness of the entry arising from the duty, and that they apply much more forcefully in the complex governmental functions of today is beyond controversy. They have equal force in the case of an entry made pursuant to a duty under a foreign as well as a domestic law."

The matter, Your Honour, was further {2243|2244} considered and indicated in the case of R. v. Kaipainen at page 377 of Volume 107 C.C.C., and that was a murder case in which the defence sought to have admitted some medical records of the accused from Finland which would tend to support the defence evidence that the accused be given the benefit of a defence of insanity, because they were the only copies available.

There was considerable argument at trial level as to how these reports could be made admissible, and the trial judge admitted them in part. The Court of Appeal indicated that they were not, in fact, admissible at all under the rubric [sic] of public document and went on to say —

THE COURT: Under the principle of what?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Of the common law admissibility of or the hearsay exception of public documents. I will just find a good starting place here, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes, I have it now. We are now looking at the appeal.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's correct, Your Honour. Page 382, the first full paragraph: {2244|2245}

"The question what are public documents has been considered in at least four decisions of the utmost importance ..."

and the four decisions are then cited, Your Honour. I won't read them all out.

"The dictum of Lord Blackburn in Sturla's case, explaining his interpretation of the judgment in Irish Society v. Bishop of Derry, and the dictum of Lord Goddard, C.J. in Lilley's case, delivered in his considered review of both the Sturla and Irish Society judgments, have received the express approval of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Ioannou v. Demetriou, wherein Lord Tucker, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships, laid down the tests which must be met if documents of the nature which fall to be dealt with in this case are to be established as public {2245|2246} documents and if the statements therein are to be accepted as evidence. Dealing with a document of a similar nature termed 'Report and reference of Salim Effendi', Lord Tucker at page 94 said: 'Applying Lord Blackburn's test to the document in question, their Lordships consider that it was not shown by the plaintiffs in the action, either intrinsically from the contents of the document itself or from other evidence, (1) that a judicial or semi-judicial inquiry was ever held by Salim (2) that the inquiry in fact held by Salim was held with the object that his report thereon should be made public; or (3) that the report was in fact at all times open to public inspection or that an inference to this effect should be drawn from the fact that {2246|2247} it was produced in evidence without objection by the Land Registry Authority.'"

That seems to be the test that Lord Blackburn is laying down, Your Honour, and it is approved by the Ontario Court of Appeal in the following paragraph on page 383 where they approved implicitly where they state:

"Merely to state these requirements as to the admission in evidence of a document alleged to be a public document is to demonstrate, on the record before the Court, the complete absence on the motion before the learned trial Judge of any attempt whatsoever to meet anyone of them."

And in indicating that I am suggesting they are implicitly accepting that set of criteria.

The matter, Your Honour, is further considered by the learned authors of the text, "Documentary Evidence in Canada", published by Carswell Legal Publications. It is at page — {2247|2248}

THE COURT: Who is the author?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The author, Your Honour, is Mr. J. Douglas Ewart, in association with Mr. Michael Lomer and Jeff Casey. It is published in 1984, Your Honour.

Chapter 5 of that [ ]work deals with public documents, admissibility at common law. That particular article in the book is written by Mr. Ewart. In his introduction, Your Honour, to that chapter he says at page 149:

"Cross refers to this exception to the hearsay rule as one of the two most important of all of the many inroads which have been made on that basic evidentiary principle.

There is no denying the breadth of this exception, which encompasses such diverse documents as legislative records, military records, government department documents of all kinds, marriage, birth and death records, surveys and maps, vital statistics and certain corporate {2248|2249} records. However, notwithstanding its importance and breadth of application, this exception remains one of the most difficult to elucidate."

On page 150 of that work, Your Honour, the criteria are set out by Mr. Ewart, in his opinion, as follows:

"It was noted above that the common law has, tended to develop numerous categories of public documents, each having its own unique features. Nonetheless, the topic can best be understood if public documents are considered as following into three basic categories. These are:

- (i) entries made in public registers or files by public officials;
- (ii) the results of official investigations or inquiries carried out by public officials;
- (iii) certificates prepared by public officers. {2249|2250}

The analytical framework which results from this tripartite [sic] division is sufficient to explain the admissibility or rejection of almost all documents encompassed by this exception. The first two of these categories will be jointly discussed in detail in the ensuing sections, while common law certificates ..."

will be dealt with in another manner.

"Whichever of the two major categories is under consideration, certain basic rules can be said to underpin the determination of a document's status as a public document.

These rules, on which the common law doctrines in Canada, England and the United States are in general accord, are:

- (1) The record must have been made by a public official;
- (2) In the discharge of a distinct public function or obligation; {2250|2251}
- (3) With a view to a permanent record being created."

There is a fourth possible criteria, Your Honour, and the law is not clear in Canada as to whether this fourth criteria applies here or not. It does not apply in the United States; it does in England. As in so many things, we fall somewhere in the middle, and our case is going both ways.

The fourth criteria, Your Honour, is the English condition that there be public access to the record as an error deterrent device.

THE COURT: What is the second — what are the second and third criteria?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, Your Honour. First, that the record must have been made by a public official.

THE COURT: I have that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Second, in the discharge of a distinct public function or obligation, and third, with a view to a permanent record being created. And the fourth is that there be public access to that record.

I would suggest, Your Honour, that {2251|2252} on the evidence of Mr. Murphy and the evidence of the film itself, which the case law I have given to you indicates we can use analysis of its content to see whether it falls within the rules, the record, the film record was made by a public official, an officer in the U.S. Navy — I'm sorry, in the Army, it was in the discharge of a distinct public function or obligation, and in the documents file, Your Honour, it's indicated on the movie as well that this was an order made by the Supreme Allied Commander, General Dwight Eisenhower, that these films were made with a view to a permanent record being created, and we've heard from Mr. Murphy that about half of the film footage in the National Archives, Washington, are from the Second World War, were made by various Armed Forces to keep a record of their activity, and that those form part of the permanent collection of the National Archives.

Finally, Your Honour, that there be public access, and as I said, the cases go both ways. In this case I don't really have to argue that because Mr. Murphy has indicated that there is free public access, free both in the material sense and also in the sense of liberal, to the viewing of these films and {2252|2253} the distribution of these films.

With those four criteria met, I would suggest that there is the protections that [ ] the case law and the commentaries indicate are important protections against errors being made in the production, or in what is being shown in the film; and it goes to support the truthfulness of what is contained in the record.

I would suggest that this record also falls into one of the three basic categories that Mr. Ewart defines. They are the three categories and the criteria that have to be applied in each one of the categories; and the categories, as I read the commentary of Mr. Ewart, Your Honour, are devised by him rather than judicially, but they were, as I've indicated:

- (1) Entries made in public registers or files by public officials; and
- (2) the results of official investigations or inquiries carried out by public officials; and
- (3) certificates — which doesn't affect us here.

I would suggest, Your Honour, that {2253|2254} this falls within the first basic category as an entry made in a file, register, by public officials, that the entry, Your Honour, I will suggest, does not need to be a written entry that consideration has to be made to changing forms of record-keeping, even as our courts have considered changing forms of record-keeping in interpreting the Canada Evidence Act in such a manner that computer records are included in that, and in this case I would say that the terms of the exception, the common law exception, are broad enough to include a film record.

In fairness, though, I should indicate to Your Honour I know of no law where a film record has been accepted. I also know of no law where no film record has been attempted to be introduced.

There is some law on maps, charts, which simply require the interpretation of individuals, bearing all kinds of data, and of course a great many documents that might also be introduced as business documents would fall under the category of public documents.

I have, Your Honour, photocopies of the chapter in Mr. Ewart's book, and again there is some underlining, but I haven't annotated it, and I'd be {2254|2255} pleased to hand that up to Your Honour.

Unfortunately, I didn't get copies all around, but I do have the one I have been speaking from.

THE COURT: I have made notes. I don't know that I need that right now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I will be happy to give it to Mr. Christie.

So Your Honour, my final basis on which I would be requesting admissibility of this film is as a public document, at least in the law as I understand it as I have advised you, and on the evidence of Mr. Murphy as to the manner of the making of this record and the keeping of this record. And of course, the film itself speaks to a considerable extent of the taking, treatment of the record.

Just one other matter as to the content of the film itself, Your Honour, that is indicated at the very beginning of the film for what reason the generic eighty thousand film was taken. This particular film, "Nazi Concentration Camps", was made to be shown at Nuremberg for the International Military Tribunal.

As Mr. Murphy has indicated, having {2255|2256} seen a large portion of the generic film, this is not the strongest that is available. It is representative. And that, indeed, is what was indicated in the affidavit as well that was filed as an exhibit.

The narration, Your Honour, was indicated in the supporting documents describing what is shown in the film and describes what is being seen in the film. The film was accepted as an exhibit by the International Military Tribunal and shown there, which I would suggest says something about the veracity of the film.

THE COURT: What's the title of the film?

MR. GRIFFITHS: "Nazi Concentration Camps". As to whether or not the film is prejudicial I don't doubt, Your Honour, that the film is prejudicial. So is a confession in a murder case. But I think it's relevant, it's probative, it speaks to the issues that are contained within the pamphlet and should be seen by this jury.

Thank you, Your Honour.

——— {2256|2257}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I agree that a confession in a murder case would be admissible evidence, but usually the confession is attributed to the mouth of the accused, and that, of course, is not the case here, nor is it really the case that it is attributed to anyone whose responsibility is alleged. It comes as a narrative in the preparation for prosecution documents which is ultimately admitted into evidence, apparently.

I have provided my learned friend with the copy of one case that is referred to with approval by the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case he cited, which was the case of Sturla v. Freccia in the House of Lords, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I would like to provide Your Honour with a copy.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: There is one case of which I am aware in which films were attempted to be introduced as documents, and that is the case of R. vs. McKiller (1968) 1 O.R. 797, and in that case the films were not accepted.

There is the exception which has been allowed in regard to films where, for example, the charge is assault and the film footage, in a hockey game, for {2257|2258} instance, the film footage of the actual event —

THE COURT: I am somewhat familiar with the case. I tried it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Pardon me. But I think there is quite a difference there where we are not dealing with something to which the accused has any personal knowledge, nor is there apparently anyone before the court who can be cross-examined on the content of the film.

I would submit that the categories my friend has explained are acceptable to, and accurate descriptions to the Court's dimensions, but I would like to suggest that what they apply to are very minute pieces of evidence in comparison to what he intends to have the principles tended to in this case.

I think with respect it's somewhat like the Courts accepting the admission of certain pieces of evidence the size of a gnat, but we are presented with evidence the size of a camel that we are supposed to accept under the same terms as we were a birth certificate, a death certificate or a certificate of destination of export as in the case of the Finestone case in the Supreme Court. That is a document which speaks for itself. It {2258|2259} doesn't contain judgmental or hearsay portions. It is, in effect, a piece of paper which says the designation of the contents of this box are, and the country is specified.

In the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Finestone it says on page 95:

"The grounds for this exception to the hearsay rule are the inconvenience of the ordinary modes of proof and the trustworthiness [sic] of the entry arising from the duty ..."

It's my submission that there is, indeed, reason to have doubt about the trustworthiness of the entry arising from the duty when, as in this case, it is not prepared by, I suggest, at least by a public official in the impartial administration of some judicial or quasi judicial function such as the attachment of a stamp, the issuance of birth certificates or some other public duty.

These documents, as my friend quite candidly related, were prepared with the specific objective of prosecution.

Now, I refer to McWilliams where this {2259|2260} subject arises, the second edition of Canadian Criminal Evidence at page 184.. We are dealing with the hearsay rule and the admission of documents at common law. He says halfway down the page:

"Parliament has recognized that persons who are engaged in an investigation consciously or unconsciously develop an identification with their task and a motive which ranges from a workman like will to solve a problem to a zeal in some cases to do so at all costs."

Douglas, J. in Palmer et al, Trustee, v. Hoffman, Administrator 318 U.S., 109, (1943), stated the objections to such reports thus at page 206:

"In short, it is manifest that in this case those reports are not for the systematic conduct of the enterprise as a railroad business. Unlike payrolls, accounts receivable, accounts payable, bills of lading and the like, these reports are calculated {2260|2261} for use essentially in the court, not in the business. Their primary utility is in litigating, not in rail-roading."

The significance of those remarks, suggest, are that if these documents were prepared in a neutral sense, perhaps even hearing both sides and perhaps there's two sides to the statements made in some of these investigations, if that was the case, it could be taken to be somehow a judicial or quasi judicial and trustworthy document in that it is not made with the objective of prosecution, which it is very clear these films were made for.

McWilliams goes on to say:

"Where the business is that of a police force, its business is inherently investigative and the records kept by it are ultimately, if not inevitably, prepared with a view to a prosecution of a criminal, if, in fact it is concluded there was a crime. The adversarial nature of criminal investigation and prosecution renders it necessary for courts to be vigilant to {2261|2262} protect the right of an accused to a fair trial and to make full answer and defence from the encroachment of trial by records, which would deny or at least impair those rights by dispensing with the right to confront and cross-examine.”

Having said that, it is submitted that in many cases defence counsel would be tendentious [sic] to insist on proof of routine matters such as drugs' continuity as, apparently, was done in Clarke.

Now, if it was merely a matter of formality or the continuity of an exhibit or a stamp upon an exhibit, I think it would be tendentious for the defence to object. It would be obviously inherently futile, anyway, but we are not dealing with a formal document, simply testifying to a simple fact; it's a very complex piece of information.

I am sure it's obviously horrible, but I would like to point out that, in the document itself there are many confusing things which, on first sight, do not appear confusing because one is shocked {2262|2263} by the horror of it all, but it appears there is quite a distinction between that the bodies of the dead were emaciated and obviously very sick, and the photographs of the living who do not appear to be approaching the emaciation or sickness of those photographs.

These conflicts we could never explore or inquire into nor, I suppose, would it be seen as even humane or considerate by the jury who would no doubt be shocked by the film, and naturally so.

So in view of the fact that we are not presented with a simple statement of fact that, for example, a death or birth certificate or stamp or something of that nature, we are not able to cross-examine what is, in effect, a prosecution document we are extending the rule that permits the introduction of real evidence, or should I say documentary evidence, far beyond those which are trustworthy documents. They are obviously coloured by the intention of the producer of this film who was indeed preparing it for the purpose of a prosecution.

In that sense it's my submission it doesn't quite conform with the usual character of a public document or prepared by a public official in the sense {2263|2264} that it is generally understood.

To reiterate this proposition, I would like to refer to the cases I handed to Your Honour of Sturla v. Freccia where the subject is considered at great length, because in this issue, which no doubt occurred a long time ago, in 1880, the Court having considered whether or not proof of a person's birth could be accepted by a prepared record from a number of people who were interested, to some extent, in promoting the belief that he was born at a time and place and entitled to a portion of an estate, the House of Lords initially, through the judgment of His Lordship The Lord Chancellor, Lord Severn, considered the law of England at that time which permitted the introduction of aspects of formal proof through documents, and he said, at page 632 – I should begin probably at 631, at the bottom of the page where it says:

“If Your Lordships look through that information you find it concludes by stating that every Genoese who, during the time Mr. Mangini had been consul in London, had occasion to ask for his good offices, {2264|2265} had been received by him with courtesy and hospitality and was very well satisfied with the manner in which Mr. Mangini discharged his duties as consul. The Giunta, therefore, had probably been in communication with some persons who had become acquainted with Mr. Mangini, in the discharge of his duties as consul in London, and there is nothing to shew that all the information received may not have been obtained by some such persons; and, if from them, there is nothing to shew whether those persons obtained the information from Mangini himself, or from others who were acquainted with him and talked about him.”

Stop here to say that that's the same situation with the film. We have no way of knowing whether the statement of the narrator is acquired from first-hand knowledge or from someone who was there, or from someone who was not there and who formed these opinions, perhaps, on hearsay. It is certainly not clear {2265|2266} that the narrator is a witness to anything particularly.

I noticed there were actually two narrators, one would narrate one affidavit, the other would narrate the second, and they would alternate, and the same with camps.

Reading further on that same page, 632:

“There is nothing to shew that at that time there were not people living in Genoa who, though not his relations, were more or less acquainted with Mr. Mangini, who might have heard these things from others, and from whom this information might have been obtained. That those persons obtained their information from the members of Mangini's family, or from Mangini himself, is of course quite possible; – it may be so, but that is a mere conjecture, which has no element of reasonable certainty about it. If, therefore, it is necessary that the information received by the Giunta ...”

and this is the body of the prepared report, within that, {2266|2267}

“... which is contained in this report should be founded on statements proceeding from Mangini himself, or from some member of the family to which Mangini belonged, to make it admissible in evidence for the purpose for which it was tendered, there is not anything either in the nature of the case, or in the tenor of the report itself, or in any other evidence which has been brought to Your Lordships' knowledge, to lead to that conclusion; and, my Lords, am of opinion that it is necessary, by the law of this country, in order, to make this report receivable in evidence, that it should at least appear to have been founded upon statements made by members of Mangini's family or by Mangini himself.”

Then he goes on to say: {2267|2268}

“My Lords, several classes of cases in which evidence, not depending upon the oath of persons who have personal knowledge, is received in matters of pedigree, by the law of this country, have been referred to at your Lordship's Bar. It appears to me that none of these classes of cases has really any tendency to support the Appellants' proposition. Two of them may be laid aside at once – those which consist of declarations made against the interest of the persons making them – and those which relate to entries made in the course of business by persons whose duty it was to make those entries.”

Neither applies. He goes on at page 633, halfway down the second paragraph, he says:

“It does not appear that this Giunta di Marina had any legal jurisdiction whatever.” {2268|2269}

Now, the film was made at the instance of the prosecutor, Robert Jackson. He had, I suppose, a legal right, no question about it, to make the film, but he wasn't authorized by any legal authority to do so in some objective way. He made it, no doubt, with the objective of prosecution which it ultimately was used for.

In that sense I say he made the film, or he authorized its creation, and so did the Commander of the Allied Forces in Europe, with the objective of being part of the prosecution's case.

Reading on:

“Its members were not in the nature of a Court ...”

And that's where I say this is true of the film,

“... not in the nature of persons who, like the heralds, had authority by law, for a public purpose, to make particular inquiries ...”

And I might add, an objective authority in that case. I am interjecting my own comments in that point. And {2269|2270} I will continue by reading:

“... whose duty it was, in the exercise of that authority, to proceed upon just proof, and who may be presumably supposed to have discharged that duty properly, and to have taken such proof, and only such proof, as the law of the country required concerning the several matters before them.”

Well, it's my submission that there is no doubt that this document was prepared with the objective of proving something, but it was prepared by one side to the dispute, and it certainly appears to be loaded with, shall we say, editorial expressions of opinion founded upon obvious hearsay to support the point of view of the prosecution.

No one can know, to this day, whether the statements contained in the narrative are true or false, because it doesn't appear likely that anyone could cross-examine Kellogg or the narrator. I am not sure that Kellogg is the narrator. It doesn't appear from the film that he is. {2270|2271}

So it might even be taken as some indication of the type of evidence received at Nuremberg that this is admitted. And how do you cross-examine a film? I am sure that defence counsel at Nuremberg had the same question posed in their own mind, and I think the answer would be, probably, if that film goes in, what's the point? With that narrative and those piles of bodies, no judge, no jury in the world is going to even consider it likely to have the right to question what is such a horrible, obvious travesty. There may be explanations, but I am sure after one sees a film like that, one is not going to bother raising them.

I would point out that those words in that case gave it very careful consideration to just what type of documentary evidence one can accept from the general rule that you should be entitled to cross-examine the person presenting evidence. They concluded that where the body creating the document was not a body which had any legal jurisdiction – and by that, I should ask Your Honour to conclude they mean some impartial legal jurisdiction, such that one would hear both sides, giving the certain principles of justice to the process {2271|2272} of preparing a document, or it's a simple statement such as a stamp or something of that kind. They go on to say:

"... it was not a body which is shewn to have been, or which can be presumed to have been, bound to proceed on any such kind of proof. It appears to me to have been perfectly open to its members to receive any species of information, on hearsay or otherwise, to which they themselves at the moment thought credit could be given; ..."

I think that is an essentially apt phrase, this situation, because I think, with respect, as I said earlier, it can demonstrate that statements pertaining to the gas chamber allegedly at Dachau, even the authorities in the prison at the time – it's a museum now – put up a public statement that this chamber was never used. They don't say when it originated as a chamber, but they say it was a gas chamber never used.

But for the purposes of my argument, I would like to say that this film is containing regular hearsay which they, the formers of it, themselves, at the {2272|2273} moment, thought credit could be given. And he goes on to say:

"... and, therefore, I am unable to apply to them any analogy derived from the cases of Courts, Commissioners, or other persons having a special duty or authority under the English law to make particular kinds of inquiries, to whose inquests or recorded proceedings credit is prima facie given."

In other words, Your Honour, why would prima facie credit be given to the proceedings of Courts and Commissioners and others having a special duty? It's my submission that that is so because they are in a situation of impartiality. They apply certain basic principles of fundamental justice such as the right to hear both sides, the right to cross-examine, or in some instance that would apply certainly to Courts, but that does not appear to have been the case in the film-making enterprise of the Director from Hollywood.

In other parts of the judgment, Lord Hatherley says at page 636:

"It appears to me, as I said before, that the Giunta was simply a {2273|2274} committee."

By that they mean the author of the report that is in dispute. Right at the bottom of the page:

"If the document were admitted you might take a committee of any public body as making statements which you would be entitled to bring in to prove collateral matters which happened to form part of the statement; and if you are to be at liberty to make this statement evidence, you would thereby extend the rule laid down in Doe v. Turford (1) in a most alarming degree."

What it amounts to, in my submission, is the view that if he were to allow the rule to allow reports made by special committees – and one could classify the prosecutorial body as a simple committee by the Allies in a very highly-charged atmosphere – to provide evidence for the prosecution.

Lord Blackburn, referred to in the judgment my friend produced by His Lordship Mr. Justice Aylesworth, simply reiterated what I suggest the other {2274|2275} learned Lords have said. He, in effect, concurred. I think the concurrence is not distinguishable from the substance of the other remarks of the other Lords. In fact, he says, at page 643:

"Now, my Lords, taking that decision, the principle upon which it goes is, that it should be a public inquiry, a public document, and made by a public officer."

And by "public inquiry" I suggest is meant the term earlier defined by other Lords to mean not "prosecutorial" in the sense that my learned friend has very aptly conceded is the case at bar; a public inquiry of an impartial nature is deemed to be so constituted that its results are therefore given prima facie credit, whereas with respect, that by the definitions of McWilliams, that is not the case with, for example, a police document or a prosecutorial exhibit.

It does, indeed, cause me great concern that such a document would be admitted, because of course, of the inability to cross-examine the witnesses; but I suggest it creates a far greater devastating [sic] inability to answer to the charge, because – and to a large extent {2275|2276} it is quite irrelevant to the issue of, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

"Did Six Million Really Die?" refers to Jews, because that is the issue. The film, to a large extent, refers to prisoners of war – Polish, Russian, Belgian. It doesn't differentiate in terms of the position of Jews at all.

It would appear that, for that reason, it is quite off the mark of whether six million really died, which is the issue raised by the pieces in question.

It has highly inflammatory, prejudicial effects upon the sensitivities of human beings, and having seen it two or three times, it has less impact on me, but the jury is comprised of peace-loving people who have never seen War.

THE COURT: How do you know?

MR. CHRISTIE: On our land.

THE COURT: How do you know anywhere?

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry if I made a misstatement. I can't say that they haven't seen a war, but I suspect that most of us have not seen war as close as these films portray. {2276|2277}

THE COURT: It depends on how old one is, doesn't it?

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, but I am stuck with my unfortunate prejudices, the results of my youth.

It is my submission, however, that most of us have not been confronted with this type of scene.

THE COURT: Your point is that the content of the film is highly inflammatory. I have your point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. The authorities my friend produced, two in number, I think I have dealt with what I suggest distinguishes this application from the application in Finestone.

The Finestone case was the admission of a certificate of designation, I think, a document, simple statement of designation of a piece of exported goods, and I think it is quite significant that it does maintain the simple principles articulated by Lord Blackburn that it must be a public inquiry, a public document made by a public officer, and the other words defined "public" in a sense of inquiry to mean "impartial". {2277|2278} Now, in the Kaipainen case where, I might say, the records were excluded, the Army records of the accused from Finland —

THE COURT: Excluded by the trial judge, or were they excluded totally?

MR. CHRISTIE: They were excluded, to my understanding, in the — maybe I am misunderstanding this case, but I think —

MR. GRIFFITHS: It was the Court of Appeal who excluded them, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: So I think I was right. The Court of Appeal took the view that I thought the trial judge had also taken that view, may be wrong, but taken the view that the documents should not be admitted.

They do reiterate the point I made earlier in that they apply Lord Blackburn's test, and in one they say that a judicial or semi-judicial inquiry was held. That is one criteria. And number two, that the inquiry [sic] in fact held by Salim was that his report should be made public.

Well, this film is obviously intended for, first of all, for prosecution purposes, [sic] and then {2278|2279} later became used for public purposes, and that the report, in fact, was at all times open for public inspection.

Well, it is not without doubt, I think the significant thing is that this is not the result of any attempt at judicial impartiality or semi judicial impartiality, and that, I think, is the major problem with the exhibit.

I noted throughout the film that the narrator frequently says that it was reported that, in the official report, "This man says this". Numerous things are attributed to causes, intentions. Motives are displayed. Statements are made pertaining to people in camps. No one hears from them. Words are said about them. They do not reply. They do not have an opportunity to reply.

I think that it does tend to indicate the kind of atmosphere that prevailed after the Second World War, quite justifiably. I am not suggesting that the Allies did not have every moral to be horrified, but one might, in response to that, say that one will never know what would have happened to the civilian internees of Canadian or American internment camps if {2279|2280} we were losing a war and could not feed our people. It is hard to say whether we would have fed them before it our people, or what would have been the conditions of such camps if we had.

So in effect we are saying that, the judgmental aspects of the film, although we are unable to answer them because we are unable to cross-examine the participants, would have a prejudicial effect somewhat beyond the justification of the case at bar.

If it pertained to the issues in "Did Six Million Really Die?", that is, the extermination programme for the Jewish people, it could be, perhaps, justified in terms of its prejudicial effect because the allegation is one of a horrible crime, and it would be justified to show examples of horror; but these horrors are not the crime denied by the booklet. In fact, these horrors, and I know my friend was earlier making a remark about this and I didn't, at that time, reply and I don't want to be too long, but the point I make is that the report of "Did Six Million Really Die?" skims over – and I confess, skims over, obviously, to avoid discussing the horrors that are shown in this film. It says: {2280|2281}

"That several thousand camp inmates did die in the chaotic months of the war brings us to the discussion of the wartime conditions."

The remarks about conditions prior to the end of the War are not denied by these films. I think it could be attributed without some justification from the film itself that the deterioration in the final days of the War – in fact, I remember the film said they hadn't been fed in six days. Certainly people in a weakened condition die more readily when they aren't fed, and at the end of the War conditions in Germany may not have been the same as they were throughout the War.

So I think the book does not dispute these films in any way, and if they did, maybe it will be justified to introduce them to rebut some statement to the effect that conditions were wonderful at the end of the War. It said they were not wonderful at the end of the War. He doesn't go into detail about them at the end of the War, but it does say that prior to the end of the war conditions were not that bad.

Now, I suggest it does deal extensively {2281|2282} with typhus; it does attribute to the deaths in the camps that cause, and I don't think that the film necessarily disproves or proves that either, so I don't see how that is relevant to the charge.

What I do say about it, Your Honour, is that it really does extend the law pertaining to documentary evidence to an extent, I am sure, unforeseen in any case of which my friend, with his diligent efforts could find an example.

I think my friend is quite accurate in his perception that, if such a film as this could be shown, it would be highly effective in conveying to the jury an impression of horror, but I would respectfully suggest that, although that is certainly his duty as Crown counsel, which he is fulfilling, I must object, because it really is quite irrelevant to the issue in the book, and its effective prejudicial nature far outweighs any probative value it has in relation to the book.

My friend reiterated that, he cross referred to exceptions to hearsay rules of documentary evidence and he enumerated them, the usual ones – military record, marriage, death and birth certificates, corporate records, which surely are a category far less loaded with {2282|2283} value judgments and far less in the nature of editorial comment than the film in question.

Another question which I endeavoured to find an answer to which is not really answered very clearly from what I can read, although the document in the Kaikiainen case – sorry, in the Finestone case was an American document, the Court I don't think is clear in saying that if a document is kept by a foreign country as public access that it necessarily implies that it's accessible to Canadian citizens as a public document, and that issue is one that I don't know can be resolved with any authority, because it doesn't seem to have arisen.

In conclusion, let me say that it certainly appears that my friend is confronted with a very difficult case, with a very great body of evidence involved, greater than, I suppose, has ever been the duty of any Crown counsel that I am aware of in a trial before, but to merely adapt the rules intended for admission of otherwise uncontested evidence to the introduction of highly prejudicial, large parts of irrefutable evidence – and by "irrefutable" I mean incapable of being answered by cross-examination or otherwise, and I think, too, what might [sic] be regarded as {2283|2284} another aspect of an ancient document such that we couldn't call the people involved, we could not test the accuracy even if we wished to call those people because we can never see them identified – no one is identified except, I guess, for Commandant Kramer who we see escorted out of the camp, I think that's about the only person, and I think that he is most certainly dead.

Your Honour, I am going to ask that the extraordinary nature of this application, justified as it is by necessity on the part of the Crown, does not justify in a legal sense the extension of rules not intended for the admission of such evidence.

Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Any reply from Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My friend asks cogently, how can you cross-examine a movie? I guess the same way you cross-examine a document, Your Honour. It is an exception to the hearsay rule, which means that {2284|2285} cross-examination is not possible, but as a movie I would suggest that, and as a potential judicial exhibit, I would suggest that significant lengths were taken to ensure that the document, in this case the movie, was accurate.

My friend really seems to be objecting to the narration rather than to the photography itself. While this movie titled, "Nazi Concentration Camps", was as I understand it prepared for [the prosecution at Nuremberg, at the time that the film footage was taken, there was a war on. They weren't trying criminals. There was a war on, and the eighty thousand feet referred to of thirty-five millimeter film from which this film was made, edited down, had been made pursuant to orders of Allied Command – public duty.

This film contains footage in-keeping with that eighty thousand feet, and indeed, not even the strongest portions and what stronger argument could there be, Your Honour, than that nobody was intentionally trying to make this film as prejudicial as possible? There is far more prejudicial material in the eighty thousand feet.

Included in the affidavit, Your Honour, {2285|2286} at the beginning of the film, and copies of which I have filed with the Court by way of document, in the affidavit of George Stevens, the fourth paragraph indicates, "The accompanying narration is a true statement of the facts and circumstances under which these pictures were made."

Those were military personnel, Your Honour, the people who made this film, and I am sure it would have been available, if required, to testify I at Nuremberg. I don't know that they were required.

So I would respectfully submit, Your Honour, that there was certainly judicial or quasi judicial purpose for this which, rather than detracting from its veracity, lends to its veracity, and that it is most certainly a film footage and a narration taken pursuant to a public duty by public officers.

In the forty years since this film has been taken, ample opportunity has been provided given the wide distribution of this film, for those people who disagree with its contents or feel that it is inaccurate to come forward, have the matter looked into, and the film modified, and that's the other part {2286|2287} of the proceedings of making public documents public.

That has not happened, to my knowledge, so I would respectfully submit it does, indeed, come within the hearsay exception to public documents.

THE COURT: Thank you, gentlemen.

— Luncheon adjournment.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury I am required to rule on the admissibility of a film. The film is entitled, "Nazi Concentration Camps". It was recorded in 1945 by personnel of the American Armed Forces who, as part of the Allied Armies, advanced into German-controlled and occupied countries of Europe, including Germany itself.

The film depicts or purports to depict conditions of Nazi concentration camps as each was liberated by the advancing American and British Forces during the course of that War. The original film, according to the evidence of an archivist, is in its original form in the National Archives of Washington in the District of Columbia in the United States of America. The length of the original footage is eighty thousand feet. Six thousand of that eighty thousand feet now composes the film. It has been marked here as a lettered exhibit for identification.

I have viewed that six thousand feet of footage on the film titled, "Nazi Concentration Camps". Crown counsel submits that the film should be part of the Crown's case along with the sound track. Dubbed in, the voice of the commentator, in the English language, is identifying certain places and things in the film itself.

The Crown's case against the accused is contained in two counts pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal {2288|2289} Code. One of those counts alleges that the accused published Exhibit 1, a booklet entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?". The Crown's request that this film be admitted is to constitute evidence, if it is admitted, in response to certain portions of Exhibit No 1, the booklet in question. On page numbers 24 and 25 of Exhibit 1 there are several headings and a photograph. The first heading is entitled, "Humane Conditions". The second heading is entitled, "Unavoidable Chaos". Then there is depicted a photograph of what appears to me to be a number of inmates of a concentration camp all with round, healthy-looking, smiling faces waving at the lens of the camera. Underneath the photograph are the words, "Healthy and cheerful inmates released from Dachau". The purport, essentially speaking, of the words and paragraphs under each of the headings I have mentioned is very definitely to the effect that the S.S. in Germany during the Second World War punished its own for unnecessary brutality to civilian prisoners in concentration camps, that the alleged inhumane conditions in the camp are gross exaggerations, that the camp itself was clean, and that the inmates thereof were kept in a reasonably healthy state, both physically and, as I read it, from an emotional or mental point of view. {2289|2290}

Having viewed the film, "Nazi Concentration Camps", it is clear to me, at least, that if the film is admitted by my order in this trial as an exhibit, that exhibit showing the state of inmates in these camps as depicted would provide the jury with a good deal of evidence which, if believed, would permit the jury to certainly come to an opposite conclusion than the conclusion that is stated on the pages of Exhibit 1 that I have just described.

Crown counsel submits the film is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under three authorities. The first is s.30 (1) of the Canada Evidence Act. The second is s.25 of the same Act, the third is under the common law as a public document. For reasons that I will include in this ruling, I rely on the third authority, namely, the common law authority, the submission being that the film constitutes a public document. It is unnecessary that I make a ruling with respect to the admissibility or non-admissibility of the film pursuant to the other two authorities, namely s.30 (1) and s.25 of the Canada Evidence Act.

William T. Murphy testified as a Crown witness on this voir dire. He testified that over the past dozen or more years he has been employed as a Records Officer {2290|2291} with the audio-video section of the National Archives located at Washington, D.C. in the United States. He testified that under American legislation the National Archives is an institution designed to preserve valuable records of national interest to that country. Probably over forty to fifty per cent of the motion picture section, over which Mr. Murphy presides as an officer of that institution, consists of unedited film records of World War II. The film in question, which is now an exhibit, "Nazi Concentration Camps", he testified, was "shot" by the Signal Corps of the United States Army during the course of World War II as the camps were liberated. The film itself is kept in the archives permanently, and has been kept, according to the evidence of Mr. Murphy, since it was deposited there, as I recall his evidence, from about the year 1946.

Copies of that film are made available by the archives to the members of the public domaine generally speaking, provided they are over the age of sixteen years. The public not only has access to the film itself through copies made by the archives or a division thereof, but also as the public always had, in a similar manner, access to the dossiers or the records confirming or tending to confirm {2291|2292} the authenticity, the fidelity and the continuity of the individual record – in this case the film itself. The National Archives sell copies of the film and, in that sense they have a distributor function to the public. He gave the set prices when films are sold to the public. He said each film, including the one in question, was fully documented. Insofar as its origin and the mechanics of the transfer of the property itself into the archives, the records in that regard, he said, are important because they show the transition from one department of government to another.

In cross-examination he stated that he had watched nine or ten hours of the eighty thousand total feet shot. In the absence of the jury, he viewed this six-thousand-foot segment during the course of this trial. The film in question is sixteen millimeters. He swore that it covers the same subject matter that was described by the Army Pictorial Centre. There are certain omissions, certain concentration camps not included – I believe Mr. Christie mentioned Auschwitz, Treblinka, Sobibor and Belzec.

The narration is adequately dubbed in. Mr. Murphy was not able to say that the narrator was present when the film was made initially. He swore that the orders {2292|2293} for the making of the film emanated from the Supreme Allied Command Headquarters under General Eisenhower. The films are unaltered from their originals, although portions of the originals only are taken and sold, as I have indicated. Mr. Murphy then proceeded to identify the affiants who made the certificates in affidavit, now Exhibit "T", to the film, James Donovan, Commander, United States Naval Research; he identified the accompanying documentation of George C. Stevens who, in paragraph 4 of the affidavit, appears to have sworn that, "The accompanying narration is a true statement of the facts and circumstances under which these pictures were made". Lieutenant [sic] Kellogg of the United States Navy, in another affidavit marked Exhibit "C" to the proceeding to which it was then relevant, includes in his affidavit that, "These excerpts comprise six thousand feet of film selected from eighty thousand feet, all of which I have reviewed and all of which is similar in character to these excerpts". Attached to the same document as Exhibit "D" is affidavit sworn the 21st of December, 1945, by Eric T. Tabeau. It says in part, "I am the director of Army Pictorial Division Office, the Chief Signal Officer, Theatre Service Forces European Theatre". The photograph of German {2293|2294} concentration camps under Lieutenant Colonel George C. Stevens, Army, of the United States, as described in his affidavit sworn on the 2nd of October, 1945, was a military operation order by Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Forces on or about the 1st of March, 1945.

Mr. Griffiths, for the Crown, submits that this film, under the heading of, "Exception to the Common Law Rule against Hearsay", is properly admissible because it constitutes a record made by a public official. That public official made the record in question due to a distinct obligation to create it. The obligation was the order of an official superior officer of a sovereign nation. It was designed to be a permanent record, to be created and maintained as such, and according to a British case precedent, and perhaps to some Canadian case precedents, the public has had access to that film for the past approximate forty years of time. Mr. Griffiths was frank in his submission to the Court that he knows of no law where such a film has been introduced.

Mr. Christie for the defence takes the position that the film ought not to be shown to the jury. He made it clear that the film's contents were inflammatory. The film should not be accepted because no cross-examination upon it is possible. It contains judgmental and hearsay portions within its confines. It is untrustworthy because {2294|2295} it was not prepared by a person being solely objective in the exercise of a public duty to create the film. It does not conform to a document prepared by a public official in the ordinary course of his duties on a totally objective basis, as it should. The statements of the narrator on the film are obscure in their origins. There is no evidence that the narrator was present when the film was recorded. In essence, the element of impartiality is missing and to admit it would extend the law on this subject. Whether the film's contents are essentially irrelevant to the contents of the exhibit the film purports to rebut is not, in law, a record.

Mr. Christie then further made the observation that the film's contents are so inflammatory that this jury, unaccustomed as it is to seeing horrible sights, would be unduly influenced by it. With that submission I totally disagree for obvious reasons.

Section 36 of the Canada Evidence Act reads as follows:

"This part shall be deemed to be an addition to and not in derogation of any powers of proving documents given by any existing Act, or existing law."

Public documents in common law are {2295|2296} admitted as an exception to the hearsay rule. They relate to documents made by a public official in the discharge of a public function with a view to making a permanent record, and to which the public has had access. In the case of Finestone v. The Queen (1953) 107 C.C.C. 93, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized this exception to the hearsay rule. The Court noted that this exception is often confused with the business record exception. However, here the existence of a public duty is what makes the entry trustworthy.

The question as to what constitutes a public document was considered by the House of Lords in the 1880 case submitted by the defence of Sturla v. Freccia (1880) 5 Appeal Reports 623. In that case one group of claimants, who had to prove their connection to a certain gentleman, introduced a report made by a government body seventy-five years before that. The report was an investigation into the person in question and included the date of his birth, which the claimants thought to rely upon. The House of Lords concluded that the document was inadmissible because the public did not have the right to see the report. In 1952 the Privy Council adopted the above decision and stressed the dual requirement that documents should be available for public inspection and brought {2296|2297} about for that purpose. The Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of R. v. Kaipiainen (1953) 107 C.C.C. 377 considered the admissibility of certain reports which included a medical diagnosis relating to the mental condition of the accused in various hospitals in Finland while the accused was a member of the Finnish Army. The trial Judge admitted the documents on the basis that they were public documents without a thorough [sic] examination of the issues. On Appeal, the Ontario Court of Appeal adopted the English authorities and set out the tests that should have been considered by the trial Judge as follows:

- (1) There was a duty to inquire and report on the matters in question;
- (2) that an inquiry was held;
- (3) that an object of the inquiry was that a report should be made public; and
- (4) that the report at all times was open to the public.

Finestone was decided by the Supreme Court of Canada in the same year as Kaipiainen.

In my respectful view, once a document is found to be a public record in common law, the maker of {2297|2298} the document need not be brought to testify as to the genuineness [sic] of the document. The person introducing the document must simply show that the record came from the proper custody and emanated from a proper, legal environment to make it admissible.

Mr. Murphy, in this case, was that person. It would appear that all of the requirements for admissibility in the film had been complied with as a matter of law. It is therefore going to be admitted. In making this ruling I disagree with Mr. Griffiths that films have not been admitted into Courts before. Albeit for a different purpose, there is a case of R. v. David Williams, once known as "Tiger Williams". A film in three speeds was admitted on consent. The speeds of the film were the normal speed, high speed and half speed. Adjudication was made upon that and other evidence, as I say, with capable counsel for both sides present. That film was admitted by a Judge of this Court at the Crown's request and, as I recall, without objection from either side. This film will be admitted. {2298|2299}

THE COURT: The film will be the next exhibit.

— EXHIBIT NO. 32: Movie, "Nazi Concentration Camps"

— The jury enters. 3:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, thank you for your patience. I can assure you that while you have been kept waiting, we have been quite busy. What is going to occur now, as you can see, a film is going to be exhibited. The title of the film you will see. First of all, can every member of the jury see the screen on my right? You are all nodding your head. I do not see anyone that shakes his or her head. If there is any difficulty with seeing everything on it, please indicate, and I will make other arrangements so that you can see it.

Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one thing, Your Honour. Because the film is a numbered exhibit, I wonder if Mr. Murphy can be released, or does Mr. Christie {2299|2300} require his presence further?

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought it would be possible to cross-examine on some of the points in the film from Mr. Murphy. I thought that was part of my right.

THE COURT: There is your answer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. In that case, Your Honour, I would call Mr. Murphy at this point to introduce his role in this.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

WILLIAM T. MURPHY, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Murphy, I understand you are from Washington, D.C.

A. Yes.

Q. And where are you employed in Washington?

A. I am employed at the National Archives.

Q. All right. And what is your job title at the National Archives?

A. I am the Chief of the Motion Picture {2300|2301} Sound and Video Branch in the National Archives.

Q. And can you tell the jury what it is that the National Archives does?

A. The National Archives is a federal agency, and its primary mission is to preserve and make available the permanently valuable records of the United States Government.

Q. And are you familiar with a film by the name of "Nazi Concentration Camps"?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And what can you tell us about that film?

A. This film has been in the National Archives for a long time. I believe the first copy came in in 1946, and then another copy was accessioned in 1957 or '57. It is an exhibit film that was made for the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, and it was given an exhibit number and submitted before the International Military Tribunal.

We have the edited film, which is six reels and thirty-five millimeters, and approximately eighty reels of thirty-five millimeter, unedited material from which this film was made.

Q. And can you tell us if the public has any access to seeing these films?

A. As a public document in the National Archives, without any restrictions, it is available for study purpose in our research room. Also copies may be purchased for a fee.

THE COURT: Is this available to the public? {2301|2302}

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And in what format is it available to the public, this film we have here, "Nazi Concentration Camps"?

A. That film is available in, well, in sixteen millimeter or thirty-five millimeter, and also in various formats of video tape.

Q. All right. And do you have any knowledge as to how widely this is distributed?

A. I don't have any firm statistics, I but I am told that quite a number of copies have been sold over the last few years.

Q. Can you tell us what source the majority of your film at the archives comes from?

A. The overwhelming majority come from other agencies of the United States Government. They were films that were produced in the course of the official business of these federal agencies, civilian or military.

Q. Other than the eighty thousand feet of film from which the edited version we have here is made, is there any other war film in the archives?

A. Yes. There is a very substantial quantity of war-related motion picture documentation in the National Archives produced by the various arms of the United States Military establishment, and quite a large percentage of our holdings relate to World War II. Of course, we have a large collection on World War I, in addition.

Q. And do you, sir, have any personal {2302|2303} knowledge of matters of wartime Germany from 1940 to '45?

A. I have no personal knowledge. I have read books and seen some other films, but I have no personal knowledge.

Q. All right. And the film that we are about to see, have you viewed it?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us whether or not it is a copy of what you have in the archives?

A. Yes. It's an exact copy of what we have in the archives.

Q. And have you seen the raw footage, if I can call it that, the eighty thousand feet of film from which the movie was made?

A. I have not seen all of that. I have seen a good portion of it.

Q. And can you tell us whether or not, from your viewing of the eighty thousand feet, the edited movie is in keeping with that eighty thousand feet?

A. I think the edited film is characteristic of the raw material.

Q. Is there anything that was stronger in the raw material —

MR. CHRISTIE: That's a leading question. I don't think it should be asked.

THE COURT: Do you want to rephrase it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Well, I will leave it, Your Honour.

Mr. Murphy, I have no further questions, subject to Mr. Christie.

——— {2303|2304}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Murphy, do you know if this film accurately depicts the whole of the circumstances in the camps that it shows?

A. Based upon my education and readings, personal readings —

Q. I'd like to know from your personal knowledge, sir.

A. I have no personal knowledge of the subject.

Q. Do you know if the film we are about to see has been made in the narrative form by someone who viewed the scene?

A. I don't know if that's the case.

Q. So we understand that the narrator could have been provided a script after the film was made.

A. That is very typical of other productions.

Q. Other Hollywood productions.

A. Any kind of documentary productions, usually a professional narrator reads the script.

Q. Yes. And this was produced by a Hollywood director; is that right?

A. I think that the —

Q. By the name of Stevens?

A. George Stevens did not produce the {2304|2305} edited film. He supervised the unedited material.

Q. Well, this is part of the unedited material, and it is the part that George Stevens produced, isn't it?

A. I can't agree. I am not sure what role he had, if any, in producing the edited film itself. I know from the records that he supervised the photography of the liberation of the camps.

Q. Well, now, let's get this straight. The eighty thousand feet is the unedited version.

A. Right.

Q. Some of which you have seen.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And that was produced by a Hollywood producer by the name of George Stevens. Correct?

A. Yes. Except I am not sure I agree with the use of the word "produced".

Q. Well, what do you mean by the word "produced" in a film?

A. He supervised the footage of the shootings.

Q. That is what I call production. Isn't that what you call production?

A. Not exactly.

Q. What is supervising the shooting of the film? Isn't that directing where the camera will focus and what will be seen and how it will be cut? Isn't that production?

A. I expect it meant that the officers who are in charge of the combat camera unit reported directly to George Stevens and took their orders from him. {2305|2306}

Q. Yes. As to what to film.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Yes. Thank you. So it is correct that George Stevens, a Hollywood producer, produced the eighty thousand feet in the sense you have described as to the directing and how it would be going.

A. Yes, in the sense I have described.

Q. Then in the sense you have described, he also directed the six thousand feet of thirty-five millimeter film that we are about to see, did he not?

A. I think the records suggest that the two naval officers co-directed the film, Commander Kellogg — Lieutenant Kellogg and Commander Donovan.

Q. Are you sure there was even such a person as Lieutenant Kellogg?

A. I have to assume that such persons existed.

Q. Well, I put it to you that the supervision of the shooting of the entire eighty thousand feet from which this is an extract was under the direction of George Stevens, the Hollywood producer. Do you deny that?

A. I don't know. I don't know the answer.

Q. Well, you do know that he supervised the filming of the eighty thousand feet. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. He directed what should be included, what should be filmed and what should not be filmed. Correct? {2306|2307}

A. Presumably.

Q. Well, isn't that what you produced from the documents that accompanied this film? Isn't that the sworn evidence that accompanies this film?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. Is it true that you store newsreel in the National Archives in the same way you store this film?

A. More or less.

Q. What difference do you do for a newsreel film of that time?

A. They are stored pretty much in the same way. They are given climate controls and they are stored in secure vaults and they also are made available to the public for research and duplication.

Q. Do you know if this film was made with an objective viewpoint of explaining the cause of any diseases?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know if this film was made with an objective to explain conditions or merely to describe the German Government in the worst possible light as this was made during the War?

A. I don't know the answer.

Q. Was this made during the War itself?

A. It was made during the closing days of the War, yes.

Q. And was this film, in fact, made with the objective of showing it to the German people to convince them of the evils of their government? {2307|2308}

A. No. Not —

Q. Isn't that part of the film itself that you, yourself, have seen?

A. The U.S. Military made another film to show the German people, which is called, "Death Mills", or "Tod[e]smühle[n]" in German, which is a different name from this.

Q. This film was produced by the same director as that, wasn't it?

A. I don't know the answer.

Q. Do you know if, on this film, the German officials who were responsible for the camps were given an opportunity to explain the circumstances?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you seen the film?

A. "The Death Mills"?

Q. This film.

A. Oh, yes, this film.

Q. Is it true that the German officials responsible for camps were given an opportunity in this film to explain the circumstances and their cause?

A. They are not given an opportunity in the film, but I think that occurred later at the Nuremberg trials.

Q. Do you? You are an expert on that, are you?

A. No.

THE COURT: Oh, now, come on, Mr. Christie. He is not an expert on that, and you know it. Get on with the next question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sir, I object to that {2308|2309} remark. I didn't think I was totally out of order.

THE COURT: You were totally out of order. You asked the question, you asked for an answer and you got an answer and you didn't like it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't say that I didn't like the answer.

THE COURT: It is perfectly obvious from your tone that you didn't like it.

Get on with it, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sir, I would appreciate it if I would be permitted to ask that question and get an answer.

THE COURT: You are not. Now, if you want, you may appeal it. Now, what is your next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: From your viewing of the eighty thousand feet of film can you say that they were a selection representative of the condition of the camps as they existed at that time?

A. I, from the literature that I am familiar with, I would have to say yes.

Q. And you are familiar with the literature that you have accomplished through your activities as an archivist in the United States Army.

A. Archivists are not historians, but from my own personal interest in the subject I have concluded that the footage is fairly accurate and represents the conditions that existed at that time.

Q. Oh, so are you saying that there were no healthy people in those camps, from your knowledge?

A. I really can't answer that. I {2309|2310} don't have enough knowledge of the subject to say that.

Q. You are familiar with the type of films and newsreels made at that time because you keep a lot of them and have viewed them. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it the case that the newsreels and the films at the time were highly and emotionally charged?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. With the objective of depicting the German people and the German government in the worst possible light: is that correct?

A. I agree with the first part of your statement. I am not sure what the objectives were.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Are you, not knowing what newsreels you have seen, but are you able to compare the newsreels you referred to to Mr. Christie to this movie?

A. Well, newsreels by nature are very short. Most of the theatrical newsreels that one used to see in the United States, at least, were only seven or eight minutes long and they usually preceded the feature film that was going to be shown. And so, by the limits of their {2310|2311} form, they could only cover a subject very, very briefly and only touch upon the most superficial aspects of whatever it was they were describing or reporting on.

Q. Thank you very much, Mr. Murphy. have no further questions.

THE COURT: Is there any objection to this witness departing back to Washington, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir, I have no objection to the witness leaving for Washington.

THE COURT: Mr Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: None at all.

— The witness retires.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, with that I would show the film.

— The Court and jury are shown movie, "Nazi Concentration Camps".

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's the case for the Crown, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you have now heard the case for the Crown. This case is far from over. Please keep an open mind. Please do not come to any conclusions with respect to the guilt or non-{2311|2312}guilt of this accused until the whole of this case is over — and when I say that I mean until such time as you have heard all of the evidence that you are going to hear, and until such time as counsel for both sides have delivered their closing addresses and I have delivered my charge. Please totally ignore whatever you may read or happen to see on any forms of the media. Have a good weekend.

— The jury retires. 4:18 p.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour, something has arisen that I would like to ask you about.

This exhibit, I've noticed, seems to be different from the transcript of the IMT version. I may be wrong, but —

THE COURT: This film?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I'd like to check that point and I would like your permission to have the opportunity to see this now. I don't think it has to be in open court, but I think I should be entitled to do this. It comes in the Buchenwald portion, after the {2312|2313} words, "All bodies are finally reduced to bone ash", and there is quite a different version from then on it and there is something wrong with this and I would like to be able to see it.

I don't think that the Board of Jewish Education will mind if I use their projector.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. The film is theirs.

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, the film is theirs. I see. The film belongs —

THE COURT: It is open to the public. If you want to buy one, I am told.

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought it came from the National Archives.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I made it quite clear in questioning Mr. Murphy that the film was here obviously before Mr. Murphy was here. He saw the film, watched it.

THE COURT: I am unconcerned about that. It is now an exhibit in the court. Defence counsel is entitled to see the film.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is what I wanted.

THE COURT: No problem. There is no proprietary [sic] interest in an exhibit. You are an officer {2313|2314} of the Court and entitled to see it.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 4, 1985.

(Volume XI Follows) {2314|2315}

VOLUME XI

FEBRUARY 4, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I ask to speak to you in the absence of the jury about two matters arising from the film.

First of all I want to put on record that I originally was under the perhaps misapprehension that the film was originating from the National Archives or a copy of it. That was my understanding, but I gather that it didn't come from that source; but the more substantive thing which I am concerned about is that I was under the impression that the witness swore in the affidavit which is provided that the film as it existed was a true copy of what is revealed in the transcript.

Now, I have checked that transcript, Your Honour. That transcript conforms to the Exhibit 2430PT of the International Military Tribunal found in Volume 30 at page 459 and following, but I found — I was reading along with the transcript of the narrative and I got to the point of dealing with the Buchenwald camp where it said, "All bodies were reduced to bone ash", and then I was reading on and reading on and I was very surprised to find that large parts of the film as re-{2315|2316}vealed in the transcript and as sworn to in the exhibit before you that is the lettered exhibit which is the transcript of the film, identical to the 1945 version, large parts of that film are missing, and I couldn't believe my ears. I thought that I had fallen asleep and missed something.

Then, when the jury left, I asked my friend to replay the part which I had found missing, and sure enough, it is missing.

Now, further analysis revealed that it had been cut out of the portion revealing the text of Buchenwald and spliced into the portion revealing the portion pertaining to Nordhausen. So it's been rearranged in that respect and is, in fact, not a true copy either of the exhibit that is before you which was sworn [sic] to by Mr. Murphy as being the transcription and true copy of the transcription of the film of 1945, nor is it a true copy of what was revealed in the International Military Tribunal.

In other words, anyone who swore that film to be a true copy of the original has to be either mistaken or lying.

Now, had I known that at the time, I {2316|2317} would have objected to the introduction [sic] of the film, because it is not the document that it purports to be. In fact, it's quite a re-arranged document, if it's a document, and Your Honour has ruled it is a document; but unfortunately we weren't provided the opportunity to see this film beforehand, and I have found out that several of the copies being distributed by the National Archives are not true copies; they are as untrue a copy as the one that's introduced here, but I find it difficult to believe that Mr. Murphy was not aware of that fact, but in any event, when he went through and saw the film and read the transcripts, he would have seen exactly what I saw, and it doesn't involve a minor part of the film, it involves the following narrative which Your Honour will probably recognize having seen the film. It follows after the words: —

THE COURT: What page are you on?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know what page it is of that. It is open on that page, Your Honour.

"All bodies were finally reduced to bone ash." Then it goes, "Twelve hundred civilians walk to ..... That is part of the film all right, but it {2317|2318} is in another part of the film. That is, apparently the original has been cut and that portion from there to the word, "malaria", which is approximately ten minutes of film, have been extracted from that portion of the film and placed, I believe, in the area of the Nordhausen camp.

In other words, the film has been substantially altered from its original form. I think there other alterations, too. It's just that it's obvious that the document is not a true copy of what was presented in 1945, and I suppose, having the jury having seen it, all I can do now is simply put on record what I have to say.

I was almost tempted to stand up when this was occurring and interrupt the film, but I thought better of it because I wasn't sure I had missed something. I couldn't understand what was going on at the time, but you can see there's eight paragraphs of narrative, and approximately ten minutes of film is not in the place that it was in 1945; it's in another place, re-arranged in the film.

I think there are other errors, too, but I haven't researched them enough to prove the point. {2318|2319} I was hoping we could show that part of the film, and I could demonstrate what I mean from the film itself, but I see the film is here but the projector is not, and at times I may need to refer to that film, and I think in view of the fact that it was shown by the Crown, that it should be available for me to show so that other witnesses may comment on it. I have the intention of calling people who were present at the time that the film was made, and so I want to be able to have them comment on what it says there.

THE COURT: Well, is there any indication that the projector and the film won't be here for your use?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it's not here. I have no control over it. I guess I could get a projector that was supposed to be part of the proceedings that I could refer to when and if I need to.

THE COURT: Subject to what I hear from Mr. Griffiths, what I expect to hear will not disturb the present thoughts, you will not have any trouble at all. The projector will be here and the film will be here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think it {2319|2320} should be here, and that's all I have to say about it.

Now, I just want to indicate those matters on the record. The other thing I have to do, which is brief, is simply to indicate at the outset that I wanted to have commission evidence, and I think Your Honour we can go through it very quickly. I want commission evidence of Mr. Fried who testified at the preliminary hearing.

THE COURT: Mr. Who? [sic]

MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Fried. John Fried. It proves, his evidence proves the position of the defence in that he was one of the advisors to the judges at Nuremberg, and it's my — it would be my argument that he was obviously very biased. He makes comments about some of the judges, calls them anti-semitic at one point, and it was just my hope that under the rights I have, even at trial, to obtain commission evidence.

You see, we were not told until very shortly before the trial that John Fried would not be coming. My friend explained at the beginning why he was not calling him. My submission is that we have a right to rely on him, because he was a substantive witness about the Nuremberg matters in the booklet. That {2320|2321} was transferred to Dr. Hilberg, and we wanted the right to have the evidence of John Fried on the point that here was someone who has very strong feelings and was an advisor to the judges at Nuremberg in some respect, and we wanted the right to demonstrate to the jury that those who were involved in the prosecution and those who advised the judiciary were very close together and were, in fact, very strongly opposed to the views that would otherwise be regarded as impartiality.

He was obviously very committed to the Jewish cause, very concerned about the Jewish people, himself being Jewish, and he was an advisor to the judges. So we wanted to demonstrate that to the jury in the trial. We are not allowed to because he is in New York, unavailable for comment.

Now, under s.637 (a) and 637 (b), witnesses outside of Canada — I am simply making the application, Your Honour can then dispose of it. It is just my submission that it is very unfair that a witness who was available to testify at the preliminary beneficiary to the defence is made unavailable at the trial by virtue of both circumstances, and either unwillingness or unavailability of the Crown's capacity to call him as a {2321|2322} witness.

Section 637 deals with the power to appoint a Commissioner. So that's what I have to say, Your Honour. The other thing I was going to mention briefly is the matter of Sabina Citron, but it is not the end of the trial yet and we can deal with that later.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. First of all, Your Honour, the projectionist that was here last Friday reviewed the film. There's no splicing or changes in this film as it was received from the National Archives, and I think Mr. Christie made that point in that he's seen other copies from the National Archives identical to the one that was shown here in court.

Really, Your Honour would – Mr. Murphy testified to that the written documents, the affidavits and the transcription of the narration were as received from Nuremberg and filed, and he took a copy of those to bring up to court with us and they are filed as a lettered exhibit here. He also testified that the movie that is in court that we saw on Friday is a true {2322|2323} copy of the original that's being held at the Archives.

It may be that between the transcription and narration and the showing of the movie at Nuremberg the movie was changed around, and the narration – I remember I was typing up the narration and made some mistakes, I don't know, but I do know that the evidence here is that this was the public document that was on display, and it's in the vault at Washington, D.C. at the National Archives, but there is nothing to indicate – well, I don't know if I want to go back that far, but I would say that there is no one here who can say what film was shown at Nuremberg, and we have to take the inference from the evidence of Mr. Murphy.

A projector, of course, will be made available, Your Honour, and I have already spoken –

THE COURT: I assumed that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have spoken to Sergeant Williams. I can't guarantee to have a projector standing by.

THE COURT: Well, you and Mr. Christie can liaison when required. I assume you will co-operate, as always.

MR. GRIFFITHS: As to the application {2323|2324} of my friend under s.637, first of all Dr. Fried was called as an expert witness at the preliminary hearing. He is a gentleman who is in his eighties and does live out of the country. He lives in New York. I advised my friend, I think shortly before Christmas or immediately after Christmas, I can't remember which, that Dr. Fried would not be called by the prosecution and that I intended to adduce his evidence as to the conduct of the Nuremberg trials through Dr. Hilberg, one of the reasons for that being, Your Honour, that part of the discussion of the pamphlet deals with the conduct at the International Military Tribunal when Dr. Fried was not present at the International Military Tribunal. He was involved in the American Military Tribunal and didn't go over to Nuremberg until after the trial, and the judgment, the sentences had been handed down at the International Military Tribunal.

I would suggest, Your Honour, that while it is certainly open to my friend, he has indicated from my recollection the very first day that he will be bringing this application, it's open to him to bring it in the course of the jury trial, but it is not evidence that is of the type, if Your Honour should interrupt the

That is all I will say about that, Your Honour. He is not somebody who is an eye witness to an event or circumstances of the death of the six million Jews. He is somebody who, to my understanding, has proffered [sic] some advice and was hired by the judges at the American Military Tribunal.

His background is in public law. I can speak further on that if Your Honour requires, but that will be my essential submission. And I think that the case cited in Martin's, R. v. Bulleyment, 46 C.C.C. (2d) 429, a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal, considers the circumstances under which a jury trial should be interrupted for the taking of Commission evidence, and the brief note in Martin's of that case indicates that:

"In deciding whether to grant the application, the trial judge is entitled to consider such factors as to whether the trial will be seriously disrupted, the possible prejudice to the opposite party {2326|2327} resulting therefrom, as well as the consequences that the trier of fact will not have the advantage of observing the demeanour of the witness."

And finally, Your Honour, I indicated to Mr. Christie with respect to Dr. Fried and, indeed, any of the other witnesses that testified at the preliminary inquiry that I am not calling, that I was prepared to provide him with such phone numbers, addresses that I have to assist him in contacting those witnesses and making arrangements, his own arrangements for them to appear, and I've had no such requests.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused, has made two observations concerning this trial. Both of the observations pertain to the subject of evidence yet to be called, or evidence which has been called.

Mr. Christie has taken objection to what he refers to as a discrepancy involved in the narration of the film, "Nazi Concentration Camps" which was shown to the jury last Friday. He states that in his view there is a portion taken from the original raw footage of eighty thousand feet missing from the film that was placed into evidence before the jury last Friday.

In place of that missing part there appears, in Mr. Christie's view, to be a spliced edition concerning another prison camp which was not in the original. Mr. Christie makes it clear that he makes this observation for the purposes of placing his objection to the film on the record, and apparently nothing further.

I have not had any request for any relief with respect to this matter at the present time except that Mr. Christie wishes to be assured that when {2328|2329} he calls evidence in this regard during the course, presumably, of the defence, there will be a projector available, and the film itself, which is now an exhibit.

Crown counsel has clearly stated that a projector will be available and, naturally, the exhibit itself will be available.

Not having received any request for any relief other than what I have set out, subject to being corrected by Mr. Christie when I finish speaking, I intend to take no further action at this time with respect to his observation.

Mr. Christie's second observation or request is that he wishes an order of the Court pursuant to s.637 of the Criminal Code to order the taking of Commission evidence from a witness who resides, I am told, in the United States in the State of New York. That witness is Dr. John Fried. Dr. Fried testified, I am told, at the preliminary hearing of this matter. He was an advisor, apparently, to certain judges at Nuremberg. He is a person whose evidence is requested and required by the defence in order to show that the Nuremberg Trials were improperly conducted. What I gathered from Mr. {2329|2330} Christie was that the judges were biased at the Nuremberg trials.

Crown counsel stated that he informed the defence in this case that Dr. Fried, a man in his eighties, would not be called as a witness. Any evidence that was to be given by Dr. Fried could be given and was given by Dr. Hilberg who did testify here.

Crown counsel states that he made it known to the defence that he would provide the defence with Dr. Fried's address, phone number and the like so that that proposed witness could be called to testify by the defence. No such request was ever made of the Crown in this regard.

Defence has known since last December that Dr. Fried would not be called. Defence made it clear that it would be bringing this motion for this type of evidence to be taken on Commission. Mr. Christie has indicated that I might dispose of this motion of his now.

I do not propose to do that unless Mr. Christie assures me that he is unable to call any witnesses on behalf of the defence if, indeed, he intends to lead evidence by way of defence in this trial. I do {2330|2331} not believe that to be the case, but I stand to be corrected. I wish to read the appropriate case law in this regard. I presume that the motion is a serious motion. If it is a serious motion, it is going to be treated in a serious manner by the Bench.

I will want full argument, precise argument to be put to me so that I can be assisted in making a proper judicial decision with respect to whether or not the evidence is relevant to an issue, whether it is properly receivable in its essentials, and whether or not, under all of the circumstances, including decided case precedents, the order should or should not be made.

I have no intention, at the moment, of making any imprecise order at this particular time.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I will hear from you later on that. Are you prepared to call a defence now?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: I presumed that you are. Then at the appropriate time let me know sometime in {2331|2332} advance so that I can say to the jury not to come in for a certain period of time. That is the only decent way to treat juries.

I will read Bulleyment and a few other cases between now and the time you bring that motion.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, Your Honour, in view of what you have said, I should provide some cases in support of my view which I have available, although I don't happen to have them with me at the moment.

THE COURT: We will just adjourn that for further argument.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was then going to, as the Crown closed its case, make an opening statement to the jury in which I outline the position of the defence on the case as a whole, the case of the Crown and what we propose to provide by way of answer.

THE COURT: It seems to me that certainly, if you wish, you can make an opening statement. I don't think the opening statement should go any further than what the Crown is permitted to do. I would think you'd be permitted to outline what your {2332|2333} defence is, if you wish, and to let the jury know in advance what you hope to prove. In the same way that the Crown is not entitled to give evidence to the jury in its opening statement, the same applies to you. You are not entitled to give evidence, either, to the jury. However, if you wish to give a statement about what you hope to prove, then certainly it is admissible, unless I hear from Mr. Griffiths to the contrary.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, I don't know that there's any clear delineation in law for what it can be used in an opening statement, but I intend only to demonstrate or indicate our position with the usual traditional warning that nothing I say constitutes evidence. All I am saying is the position of the defence and what we hope to prove and what we say our position is.

I wanted, because it is a rather involved case and it is considerably longer than most, I wanted to explain to the jury what our position is in answer to the case and what we understand the case to be.

Now, I didn't want to do this in such a way that it caused offence to the usual fair play that prevails, and yet I recognize that it may involve more than what most opening statements involved. {2333|2334}

THE COURT: If it is going to become an opening statement which really is a disguised second address by counsel for the defence, then of course that is objectionable. It all depends on how far you want to take it. If you will take it beyond a certain point, you will incur judicial censure.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't want to take it to that point.

THE COURT: I don't want you to, either.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't want to take it to the point where that is necessary, and I'd like to find out, somehow, just where Your Honour would like me to draw the line. I mean, you can understand how I would rather not cause Your Honour to have to interrupt me. And yet it's an unusual case where a lot more may be said than usually would be said, and I know exactly what Your Honour has said about the matter, and I can see how that might be the appearance of the thing.

THE COURT: In order to decide that issue I'd have to hear what you are going to say first in the absence of the jury, and I have no intention of doing that. I would have to think with your experience {2334|2335} and with your obvious ability and knowledge, you having had the opportunity to assess me over the last three weeks or four weeks, or whatever it is, that you would be able to successfully blend moderation with getting your point across.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'll do my best, Your Honour. I wanted to be fair and to explain what I was going to do, and I think I will make my most conscientious [sic] effort at restricting myself to what is appropriate. I may be wrong, and I am sure I will be corrected.

THE COURT: Thank you. Bring in the jury.

Mr. Griffiths, do you have any comment on that last exchange at all?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

— The jury enters. 10:35 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

— {2335|2336}

OPENING ADDRESS TO THE JURY BY MR. CHRISTIE

MR. CHRISTIE: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, there are two occasions in the course of the trial where I have an opportunity to speak to you person to person. This occasion is the occasion of the opening of the defence. On this occasion it's my right to outline to you the position of the defence.

I must explain, at the beginning, that everything I say in this portion, well, in fact, throughout the trial when I speak to you person to person, is not evidence. It is my hope to prove the propositions that I am about to explain as the position of the defence.

Now, at a later stage, after the defence is over, then I get an opportunity to address you, then the Crown addresses you, then His Honour addresses you on the law. So at this stage my duty is to explain to you what is the position of the defence in brief, and what is the defence, and in saying this, anything I say about the facts or the evidence is not to be taken as proven or a fact, or it's not anything other than, perhaps, my presentation of the defence. That's what it is.

Now, in order to do this, I have to make certain statements about the case as it has proceeded so far, and only to the extent that I am trying to explain what the defence position is in regard to the whole case. Now, may {2336|2337} I say that we are dealing with two publications, to start with. This is the first, and it seems to be the most controversial. This is Exhibit 1 in these proceedings. It is called, "Did Six Million Really Die?" And I'd like to emphasize the question mark.

The position of the defence on this booklet is this, that it isn't, as the Crown has presented it, a debate over what happened in the Western camps. It directs its concern to what occurred in the Eastern camps. Now, I don't think I could explain the position of the defence better than by reference to the map on page 17, because this is the core of the question presented by this booklet. When it says, "Did Six Million Really Die?", the position of the defence is, did six million Jewish people really die. It's not a debate about the War, not a debate about who was right or wrong. This booklet, the position of the defence is not that Jewish people didn't suffer, Jewish people weren't important. It doesn't say that at all. It doesn't say Jewish people didn't die. It doesn't say all those things. The question raised by the publication of the accused is, did six million Jews really die.

Now, the position of the defence is that {2337|2338} what really is the core of the question is the question of the gas chamber, because on page 17, the Western camps, what are sometimes referred to as the German camps or the abkreit (ph), as it was referred to in the evidence, in the west were called concentration camps – not that any of them were justified, we are not here to say whether they were justified or not; but the extermination camps are considered a different category by not just this book, but by other authorities.

The position of the defence is that there is a historical consensus [sic] pertaining to this issue that indicates that those of Auschwitz-Birkenau, Chelmno, Stutthoff – although Dr. Hilberg questioned that – Treblinka, Sobibor, Maidanek are concentration camps. Why are they? It is the issue of gas chambers, the specific issue of gas chambers for the specific crime of genocide. That's the issue. "Did Six Million Really Die?" means, when you capsulize what this book has to say, is, is there proof for the specific crime of genocide and the specific weapon of gas chambers, and that is why the position of the defence, as you saw, was that it was traumatic, that it was horrible; the booklet, its position is that those circumstances existed at the end of the war, and I will be referring {2338|2339} to the booklet where, at the end of the war, due to the breakdown of the German economy, the German government and all the provisions that existed previously – now we will be calling witnesses to prove those Western camps were not extermination camps in the deliberate sense; they resulted in massive extermination of people, but the issue is whether there was a plan to exterminate six million Jews, or whatever the numbers – that is not really the issue, not the issue at all. The issue is whether the extermination through gassing is proved.

Now, the Western camps that you saw in the film certainly did not account for six million people. That's the position of the defence, whatever their condition in the west, and that can be dealt with and will be dealt with by the defence, but that is not the issue. We will be presenting evidence to show that there is great reasons to doubt, that ought to be discussed, that genocide allegation, and the gas chamber specifically, because without the gas chamber it will be the contention of the defence, there is no plan of genocide. The gas chamber, the defence will contend, is founded upon certain pillars of information in evidence – you've heard a lot about them – Gerstein, Hoess, – “Commandant of Auschwitz” – {2339|2340} the rest of the evidence comes from the IMT Nuremberg, and from Dr. Vrba. So the defence position is, you have heard the origin of the extermination or genocide crime allegation. The position of the booklet by Harwood – and I point out not by the accused but by Harwood – is that those extermination claims are false. The position of the accused is that he honestly believes that, has a right to believe it, has a right to discuss it, has a right to question it, has a right to publish what he believes to be true from the point of view of this booklet. And in fact, you will find at the very beginning the position of the defence is very clearly articulated in what is over the signature of Ernst Zundel, which I don't know if you had an opportunity to read, but you will have a chance and we will go over this. Ernst Zundel's position is that we ought to be free to discuss this question. That was his position and it will be his position, and he will be testifying here that after extensive research both into this book itself and to all the references in it which, page by page, we will produce or endeavour to produce, the booklet appears to have substantive basis in fact. And furthermore, he will introduce, through himself and other witnesses, substantial verification of the positions even {2340|2341} from outside the book. Now, this is an unorthodox view, but we are not dealing with religion here but the right of belief or disbelief, the right to question, the right to publish questions, the right to take a position that other people might not take, controversial positions. So what is at stake here is far more than the book, far more than Mr. Zundel's own views. The position of the defence is that the basis of the importance of this case rests on the issue of how much do we actually rate freedom of opinion in this country. So it becomes a far more important issue than myself or this Court or Mr. Zundel. It becomes an issue fundamental to all people who will live in this country hereafter. Many of us will not take controversial views in life, but the position of the defence is that the right to take controversial views is at stake here.

Now, the defence intends to introduce evidence of what is described in the literature as a gas chamber. We want to go to the heart of the question, and we will introduce experts who have studied this at great length. We will endeavour to show you where Mr. Zundel got his beliefs that this is true that everyone says is false so far. You have heard what they had to say and why they {2341|2342} had to say it. When you've heard the position of the defence, you will then know why he holds these beliefs, and then you can assess whether he honestly holds them. We intend to lead evidence as to the dubious nature of all the evidence about gas chambers – that is, in this case, the evidence of Vrba, the evidence of Urstein, the evidence of Lederer, and the peripheral [sic] evidence of Friedman and Phillips. We intend to lead evidence as to the chemical nature of Zyklon B. We intend to lead evidence to prove that Zyklon B is lighter than air, which means it rises to the top of any room, and we will ask you to consider that in relation to Urstein's evidence about people screaming to get up to the top. We intend to lead evidence as to the internal conditions, the plans and the surroundings of Krema II. We intend to lead evidence of the state of the roof of the mortuary on the plan where Vrba says he saw a man climb up. We intend to prove the physical conditions are totally contrary to that from photographs taken at the scene by witnesses we intend to call, and we intend to also prove that the chemical properties of Zyklon B leave effects on anything they touch in the nature of concrete, porcelain [sic]. We intend to show what those effects are, and we also intend to show that {2342|2343} those effects do not exist inside Krema I or Krema II, which is a profound piece of evidence we will ask you to consider. Through all of this calling of evidence we will be asking, if the physical effects are not there, we will ask you to draw certain inferences. We intend to produce evidence to demonstrate how the specific recollections of the witnesses, Urstein and Vrba, are inaccurate or impossible. Their generalizations, we will be putting to you, in another way, are equally dubious.

The significance of this case is probably not yet fully realized by many, but it is, my my [sic] submission, our right to introduce this evidence, and we intend to introduce evidence of the varying accounts of so-called witnesses to analyze their possibility and thereby to demonstrate to you the justification for doubt. We intend also to lead evidence as to the origin of the statements and the internal consistency of the statements at the International Military Tribunal. We intend to introduce evidence of torture. We intend to introduce evidence of the condition of the men at those trials. We intend to introduce evidence also of the results of their interrogations to analyze, with the text and documents expert, someone who analyzes the internal consistency of documents, what {2343|2344} their meaning really is.

As I said in the beginning, this booklet, the controversial one – I think they are both controversial, but this seems to be the centre of the Crown's attack – is not to say that Jews didn't suffer and Jews didn't die and that there wasn't concentration camps and that there wasn't the things that existed in Dachau and Bergen-Belsen; that is not denied by this book at all. This book is intending, and it is the position of the defence, to direct your attention to the Eastern camps where the issue is, did six million really die. That is the population of Quebec, for example.

I made a few little notes that I would be able to follow through with certain things that I wanted to say. I wanted also to say certain general things that I haven't already said. The film you say is disputed as to the narrative. Some of the things on that film will be disputed by the defence as to the narrative. There were a lot of statements in the film, narrative that is attributed, in a way, and we will call evidence to show it is not quite the way it was, especially in regard to Belsen. We will also draw your attention to the fact that very little reference is made there to Jews at all in the film. It is {2344|2345} obvious that the suffering that existed there was not directed against the Jewish people specifically.

So the position of the defence will be that Mr. Zundel is a man who holds views – you may not agree with his views, but we will be calling him to prove that he has made a diligent, honest search for the last twenty-five years to seek answers to questions that trouble him, questions that he conscientiously [sic] examined, that he thoroughly searched, not just in the ordinary sources, that we can all watch television, but he searched for eye witnesses, he searched for direct knowledge, he searched for truth and he concludes, after all his research, this is the truth. He will give evidence that he sought this information to vindicate people that he loved – his own people. He has a deep love for the German nation. He is a member of it, and he's travelled the world, he will tell you, to try and find out if what they say about his people is true. Naturally, he has a bias. We all have a bias, and the defence will introduce evidence to show that his position is reasonably founded and he has, therefore, a right to believe it in a free society. He will give evidence as to where he has gone, what he has sought, what he has found, how he has found it, and what he's done with {2345|2346} what he found. With this intention my client has contacted people all over the world and discovered there are others like him who are troubled by the same question and have done research to find an answer.

In the course of this trial two terms will be used by the defendant and defence case. One term, I will suggest to you, has a meaning. It's called revisionist. After the I [First] World War, it will be alleged, revisionists started to say that some of the stories in the I [First] World War were not true. We will be calling evidence about who those people were. They are accepted historians. One is Harry Barnes in the United States – fairly well known. After the II [Second] World War no such enterprise was undertaken. It was much more emotionally charged, largely due to the six million allegation, but if the position of the defence is taken, it can be categorized as revisionist, which is to doubt, to question and disbelieve the six million allegation in much the same way that people disbelieve the Belgian baby stories after the I [First] World War which were then publicly denied by the British.

The other side of this controversy will be that it is the defence position that it is a reasonable controversy to allow this kind of discussion in the world. The other side of the position is the exterminationist view. It will be referred to by our witnesses. It is the view Dr. Hilberg represents which, he said, we don't ask what happened. He asks how and not why. Well, these people, these revisionists, the defence contends, have a right to ask how it happened and did it happen. That is their position. So they have been called heretics at a different time, but we suggest they are called revisionists. They are confronted by a position. We are saying this is the truth, and that our position is that Mr. Zundel ought to be able to publish it. To the contrary, the position of the Crown is that it is lies, and that he ought not to be allowed to publish it. Well, he is here. Our very first position of the defence is we ought not to be here. We ought not to be in this Court debating history. That's the first position of the defence. We are here not by choice. We are not here because we like to interest you or we are not here because we want to debate history in Court. We would rather not be here. The position of the defence is that this is a debate that should be taking place in a free market of ideas where there is peace and the public can decide, and nobody has the ultimate stamp of approval from anybody, that history is not carved in {2347|2348} stone, and that this man and others ought to be free to debate. We say, our first position is, we ought not to be in this case or in this Court for four to six weeks or whatever we are here for, but we are here, and the defence will fight for what it believes to be true. That is the basic position. And these heretics or revisionists will take the position they have honestly believed founded on reasons, and a right to believe them. I would like to ask that you consider the position of the defence this way, because this is what the defence takes as a position, that it's an emotional issue, but we ought to detach emotion from the decision as to what actually happened. When we try to find out facts we set aside emotion, that the film and all its emotions doesn't prove or disprove anything about the book. That's the position of the defence on that aspect of the case.

It will be the position of the defence that, although this process has never happened before, that historical views have been the subject of a judicial inquiry such as this, that this is therefore a historical trial, not so much about liars or lies as about freedom of speech, freedom to research, freedom to think, freedom to communicate and freedom to disbelieve. The defence, in its position, is {2348|2349} not here merely to assert the freedom of right to err, but it is here for the reasonable basis of these disbeliefs in an arena where history ought not to be debated. We are obliged to prove the validity of a historical point of view. This is our position.

The defence proposes to prove the truth of the book's thesis. We are not going to prove that it is all true by page by page, boring, methodical analysis, which we would rather not do but we will do if necessary, but we are here to prove that the book's thesis is that six million did not die, because the gas chambers are a myth. That is the thesis of the book, and that is the position the defence takes, by reference to its own sources, as I said, and by reference to other sources as well.

We will also endeavour to call, and all of this is subject to the caveat that none of this is evidence, this is nothing more than a stated intention of the defence as to what it intends to prove, what position it intends to take, this is all I am telling you now, and all of it is subject to the admissibility of evidence which His Honour will rule upon from time to time as things come up, but the defence intends also to call people who read the book to indicate what effect it had upon them, and that {2349|2350} will be our position on the book, that it ought not to be subject to judicial sanctions. It ought to be available for people to think about them, and that it ought to be tested not in a court, but in the free market of ideas where everyone has an opportunity to answer with all types of argument and evidence. And I would conclude by saying that the position of the defence is that there is more at stake here than probably has been at stake in any other trial probably in Canada's history. That's why the defence takes as much time as it does with the witnesses. That is why the defence intends to take as much time as we unfortunately are obliged to do. The defence is not going to abandon its beliefs and perceived truth, nor does it intend to abandon its right to believe without the greatest possible fight. And my client takes the position that his reputation is that of an honest man, that he is a man honestly communicating his ideas for a number of years, and much as the media may have said contrarywise, you will assess him for yourselves, you will hear him for yourselves, and it is my belief and hopeful opinion that you will consider the evidence in Court as His Honour said. We are not to view the decisions and promulgations of the media as law or fact, and I am sure you are well aware of those opinions. {2350|2351} It is almost as if we have to pretend they don't exist. We live in an artificial world that way.

The position of the defence is that we'd like to ask you to look at the evidence impartially, and look at it from the point of view of what is going on here, not what you will hear about it, which I suggest has happened so much, but what can you do. That is what we are trying to do, is to deal with the case in Court. We will endeavour to freely express the opinions of those who have assisted Mr. Zundel in his research. Now, that may be a problem. We will see about that. His Honour will decide. But the position of the defence is that whether or not these opinions of other people whether experts or not is really irrelevant to whether Mr. Zundel had an honest belief or not, and that you should be able to hear those opinions and decide if his belief was reasonably founded – whether you consider him expert or not, we all get beliefs from other people's information. So does Mr. Zundel have the right to do that.

The position that we take is contrary to a great weight of prejudice. I am going to have to impose upon your patience so far. It's been onerous upon us all. We take the position on the part of the defendant that it's {2351|2352} a matter of freedom, and it's a matter of truth, and I regret, as a representative of the accused, that we have to put this burden on your shoulders, because by no means is it pleasant, and by no means is it easy, but all the defence can do, and intends to do, is demonstrate that he has a right, reasonably believes and does believe what he published to be the truth.

THE COURT: Just a moment. Members of the jury, would you excuse us, please?

— The jury retires. 11:05 a.m.

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Christie, I marked down the time. The law states that the Crown is entitled to give a short indication to the jury of what it intends to prove.

In thirty years I have never heard Crown counsel in any case exceed ten minutes. You have been talking for twenty-five, and you are now making a speech to the jury which is an undisguised second address.

You will cease and desist doing that. You have made your position clear. You have done it without interference from me. You were warned before {2352|2353} this started. You have ignored the warning. You will please wind up your address and cease giving a second address to the jury before you have called a defence. Are there any questions? Do you have any questions?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I have no questions.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.

— The jury returns. 11:08 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to call my first witness, Dr. Robert Faurisson.

ROBERT FAURISSON, affirmed

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How old are you, sir?

A. Fifty-six.

Q. And what is your academic background, sir, please?

A. I am a professor in France in a university called Lyons II. Lyons I is a scientific {2353|2354} university. Lyons II and Lyons III are law, literature, sociology, etcetera.

Q. I see. And what is your academic background in relation to the specific subject of texts and documents?

A. My speciality is what we call text and document criticism, but at the beginning it was not that. At the beginning my speciality was Greek, Latin and French literature. Then, from 1973, what we call text and document criticism, and I think that, perhaps, I must explain what it means.

Q. Yes.

A. Everybody, I think, knows what is a text. A document is anything from which a meaning can be provided. It could be a photo; it could be an article of a newspaper; it could be a stone, if you do any archeological research. So it could be about literary text or historical text. It is a method which is rather spartan, I mean dry, difficult. I am going to try to give you some example.

In France, the method of teaching, for example, French literature is to make the people express their feelings about texts which are supposed to be literary. Some are supposed to be poetical, some others are supposed to be novels, some others are supposed to be historical.

We would say, we must consider all those texts as texts only, and instead of trying to express feelings or comments, we must be very careful about the text.

Since few weeks that I have been {2354|2355} there, I have noticed that many times it was said, to understand the text you must be very careful about the context. I agree. But I think that something is more important than the context. It is the text itself, word by word. We don't stay enough on the text, if this text has 128 words, this is the principle of our work.

Q. All right. So you have studied, you are qualified as a professor in this speciality; is that right?

A. That's right. And also two specialities, French, modern literature, and this one.

Q. As a result of your specialization in texts and document analysis did you become interested in the problem of the gas chamber?

A. It was certainly not as a specialist of text and document criticism that I got interested in this matter.

Q. When did you get interested in this matter?

A. In 1960.

Q. And why did you become interested?

A. Because of what a very distinguished professor

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Dr. Faurisson. I think we should have the Doctor finish his qualifications before he gives us his opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was trying to do so, but my object is to have Dr. Faurisson qualified as an expert in the matter of the Holocaust in the same way {2355|2356} that Dr. Hilberg was, so I will go point by point.

Q. When did you begin to study the gas chamber question?

A. I begin in 1960.

Q. And what did you do to study the question?

A. First of all I read what we could call classic books about the question.

Q. How do you mean, classical because some people think Greek and Latin?

A. So at that time Raul Hilberg had not yet published his book.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed that. Could you – who published his book?

THE WITNESS: Raul Hilberg had not yet published his book.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So who were you studying at the time?

A. Reitlinger, "The Final Solution", on one side, and on the other side Rassinier, Paul Rassinier.

Q. And you say on the other side. Who was Paul Rassinier?

A. Paul Rassinier, born in 1908, was a resistant.

Q. What does that mean?

A. A man who fought against the Germans during the War, very courageously. He didn't wait for the end of the War. He fought in 1933, was arrested by the Germans, very badly treated, sent to a concentration camp, Buchenwald and Dachau, stayed nine-{2356|2357}teen months, came back very ill.

Q. What did he write and what did you study?

A. I read, first of all, a book called, "Le Passage de la Ligne". It was a story of his time in concentration camp, and this book provoked, in France, some emotion because Rassinier was nearly the first to say that, in those camps, at least, the inmates had very few relations with the S.S., and that they suffered very much from the kind of self-government by the inmates that the Germans had installed.

Q. Yes.

A. That was his first book.

Q. And you studied that in 1960. Did he write more that you studied?

A. But should I say, please, why I was suddenly interested in 1960?

Q. Go ahead.

THE COURT: Well, perhaps you should ask him the general idea so that we can assess this gentleman's qualifications. He can be asked on that. He's read one book, and I would like to hear more.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: His Honour would like to hear all you studied, and then find out whether you are an expert. Just what you studied, not what was in it. Now, you said Reitlinger and Rassinier.

A. That was in the beginning.

Q. What else did Rassinier write that you studied?

A. He wrote many books.

Q. Name them. We have to get to the {2357|2358} books.

A. "Ulysses is Lie". Must I explain the title?

Q. Perhaps if you want to explain what the book was about.

A. It was about the experiments of the camps. Rassinier was very surprised to see that people who had suffered as much as he had suffered himself seemed to invent some other conditions, and he called that the complex of Ulysses.

We know that Ulysses new hundreds of sufferings, but when he came back he told thousands of sufferings, which is normal, because when we suffer, we have few words to express our suffering, and often we are continued to invent some of them.

Q. So you studied Ulysses?

A. Yes.

Q. What else?

A. "Ulysses Trahi", treated as traitor by the same people as himself. Paul Rassinier took many witnesses' reports and showed that there was a question about the gas chamber.

Q. All right. Now, any other works of Rassinier that you can recall?

A. Yes.

Q. That you've studied.

A. Mm-hmmm. "The Eichmann Trial".

Q. He wrote a book on the Eichmann trial?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. {2358|2359}

A. A book also called, "The Drama of European Jews".

Q. Yes. You studied that as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Did he write more on the subject?

A. Yes. Another book about Gerstein. The title is a bit difficult to translate in English.

Q. All right. So those were how many books, Dr. Faurisson?

A. He wrote five books about what we call the Holocaust question, and some other books.

- Q. What studies did you conduct of those books? You read them?
 A. I read those books, yes.
 Q. What else did you do? Did you check the material in them?
 A. Yes, but I must say that I read before many books which were not on the side of Rassinier.
 Q. Such as – please name them.
 A. Yes. So I went into the forty-two volumes of the Nuremberg transcripts and documents.
 Q. Yes.
 A. I even checked sometimes the French text, the English text and the German text.
 Q. You speak French, English and German?
 A. I speak French, badly English, and understand German, yes, but I need sometimes to be helped.
 Q. Yes. {2359|2360}
 A. Okay. The fifteen volumes of what we call the Green series.
 Q. That's the —
 A. The American NMT.
 THE COURT: American ...
 THE WITNESS: National Military Tribunal. We call that the Green Series, fifteen volumes.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The other series, the IMT, is how many volumes?
 A. Forty-two.
 Q. Forty-two. And you studied those in relation to —
 A. Yes. The French edition has only forty-one volumes because one volume of index is missing, which makes our work very difficult.
 Q. Yeah. The index volume is in English, but not in French?
 A. In English and in German you have it.
 Q. I see. So you studied those?
 A. And also I studied the nineteenth volume produced by Amsterdam University about all the trials in West Germany.
 Q. I see.
 A. But we don't have the transcript. We have only the judgment.
 Q. Yes. You studied those in Amsterdam?
 A. No.
 Q. Where?
 A. I discovered this in Amsterdam – {2360|2361} no, in Vienna, Austria, and then I studied that in French.
 Q. All right. What other texts and documents did you analyze in the course of your studies?
 A. I work specially very, very long time in what we call the Centre of Jewish Contemporary Documentation in Paris.
 Q. Yes. How long? People want to know facts about that, so ...
 A. Yes. The first time I went in this place was in '64.
 THE COURT: That's the centre of what?
 THE WITNESS: The Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation, in Paris. This is the place where I worked so much.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you have worked months or years in that place?
 A. Years. So first in '64, then in '67, from time to time from '67 to '74, and very hard from '74 to January '77, I think.
 Q. What happened then?
 A. I was chased from this Centre.
 Q. You had then published some of your findings, is that right?
 A. Yes. Very little because it was very difficult to find somebody to publish it.
 Q. Okay. Now —
 A. But what I would say – may I say what kind of documentation I studied in this place?
 Q. Yes, please do.
 A. Instead of studying books, printed {2361|2362} matter, I wanted to go to the originals. So I needed the documents themselves, all those documents that we call, "NO" – Nazi Organization; "NG" – Nazi Government; "L" – London; and "IT", etcetera, etcetera.
 Q. These are documents where, sir? The judge is wondering where these documents were tendered.
 A. These documents were published by the American Government.
 Q. Mm-hmmm.
 A. The prosecution in Nuremberg.
 Q. Yes. That is what I wanted to bring out. Those are the Nuremberg documents, then.
 A. Yes.
 Q. You studied the originals of them?
 A. Originals or copies. It could be in National Archives in Washington.
 Q. Have you studied there?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Yes. How about – have you studied in Vienna the subjects of these documents as well?
 A. Yes, but for a very short time, because I was chased also. But in America I could work, yes, National Archives in Washington, National Archives in Suitland, Maryland, and also in Auschwitz Museum.
 Q. You have been to the Auschwitz Museum?
 A. Yes.
 Q. When did you first go there, sir?
 A. In 1975 for one day.
 Q. Have you been there for longer {2362|2363} periods since?
 A. Yes. In 1976.
 Q. For how long?
 A. Ten days.
 Q. And what did you do when you went there?
 A. I visited spots, made photographs and so on, and I worked in the Archives.
 Q. What are the Auschwitz Archives?
 A. We are not able to answer, really, because when you ask a document in those archives, you must have already the idea of this document. You must ask, for instance, "I want a plan of Krematorium I, of Krematorium II", and they may answer you, "We have that. We have not that." Or, "We have it but we must ask permission."
 Q. Mm-hmmm.
 A. And it is a very bad sign if they have to ask permission. You may have to wait a very long time. I can explain you how the first time I got into those archives.
 Q. Yes, if you could. That would explain how.
 A. I could explain by the way what I call text and document criticism.
 Q. Yes. Please do.
 A. Which is something very matter of fact.
 Q. Right. Show us the factual basis of how you found the archives information.
 A. I must ask a question to Your {2363|2364} Honour. Have I the right to say something that I have heard or shall I be cut and ...
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well —
 THE WITNESS: — and it will be said hearsay? Because beginning like that, you see.
 THE COURT: I don't know that we are interested right at the moment in what you've heard.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps if I could explain to you – just deal with what you said, what you saw and what you did. And then what happened. Don't give the conversation from the other side. Okay?
 THE COURT: This, I gather, Mr. Christie, is going to be evidence about the trouble he had obtaining documents and information from the Archives of the Auschwitz Museum?
 THE WITNESS: It was easy.
 MR. CHRISTIE: It was his method of operation and how he got information to show his expertise. That is why it was so, and that is what I want to ask him.
 Q. Now, just tell us, Doctor, what you did and, therefore, what you saw. This is an example of how you got into the Archives.
 A. Yes. I want to show that I tried to be as matter of fact as possible.
 Q. Right. In your inquiry what did you do then?
 A. So I went to visit first what is called Crematorium I.
 Q. Where is that?
 A. In Auschwitz I. {2364|2365}
 Q. Yes.
 A. You have in the same building a path, on the left, called "Krematorium", and on the right a place called "Gas Chamber".

Q. Yes.

A. I got first into the place called "Krematorium". There were there two furnaces with two openings.

Q. What did you do?

A. I noticed some things which were not normal.

Q. What did you notice? Tell us what you noticed.

A. I noticed, for example, that there was no soot at all.

Q. How did you find that out?

A. Putting my finger like that, I saw that there was no soot.

Q. Inside the furnace?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. So I decided to find the highest possible responsible ...

Q. Person.

A. ... person, of the Auschwitz Museum.

Q. And then what did you do.

A. I found that man called Yan Machalek. I asked him to come on the spot. I asked him if those ovens were genuine or not.

Q. Yeah. Don't tell us what he said. {2365|2366} What did you then ask him for?

A. I can say that I showed all the same that there was no soot?

Q. Yes.

A. Okay. The conclusion was that it was a reconstruction, a rebuilding and not something genuine.

Q. So what did that lead you to do?

A. I thought, if it is a rebuilding, there was a plan, an engineer or an architect saying to the people, "You must put those bricks like this or like that." I said at the time that I'm a Professor at Sorbonne, that I was interested in the gas chamber.

Q. You were a professor at the Sorbonne?

A. Yes.

Q. So you asked for what?

A. For a plan of the place.

Q. Did you get it?

A. Yes.

Q. Until this time, in all your research, had any plan been published?

A. No plan. I think that I have been the first to publish really a plan.

Q. All right. What is your method of research? We are just showing to His Honour —

A. Okay.

Q. Now, as a result of that, what did you do?

A. So I tried to find other plans. tried to find also other documents about those {2366|2367} crematorium, but that's the part of my research, and there are many others.

Q. At the moment, rather than deal with all that you found, I am going to deal with your method of research, and what more research you did. Was that all the research you did at Auschwitz?

A. Essentially, yes.

Q. All right. Did you go to the other camps as well?

A. Yes. In Maidanek. I went to also Dachau, Mauthausen, and I studied — and very important, the Hartheim Castle.

Q. Can you give us roughly the years for those visits?

A. It was '75, '76, '78, '80. Dachau only in '82. I was not interested in Dachau because it's known since 1960 officially that there were no gassings in Dachau.

Q. Yes.

A. All right. Now, this is the onsite research you did.

A. I forgot something important, please.

Q. Yes.

A. And in France, Struthof-Natzweiler, (sic) where we have a gas chamber presented as in its genuine state.

Q. I see. So you were inquiring into — why were you going to all these places?

A. Because I think that the gas chamber, the homicidal gas chamber — let me persist that {2367|2368} in many German documents we have the word Gas Kammer for disinfection or for the training of soldiers to wear the gas mask. Many other Gas Kammer, as they say, exist, but I was interested in the homicidal gas chambers.

Q. What do you mean, homicidal?

A. For killing people. I thought it was the cornerstone of what we call genocide. For me, if I may explain that, the genocide is the specific crime without precedent in history. It is defined like this by Dr. Raul Hilberg, and I agree with him; but this specific crime needed a specific weapon. This specific weapon were supposed to be those enormous gas chambers.

Q. Yes.

A. For killing people.

Q. Yes. So how does that relate to your investigation at the camps?

A. So I wanted to go on the spot and to see if I could find any gas chamber supposed to be in its genuine state, or any ruins of gas chamber, because ruins are very interesting. We cannot say there are only ruins; We go back, we must study the ruins.

Q. Yes. So your process of research was to read the literature. Have you told us all the literature that you studied?

A. Oh, certainly not. No.

THE COURT: I think we will hear about that after we adjourn. Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:30 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

—— {2368|2369}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 12:05 p.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have given a copy of this to my learned friend, and it is background information on Dr. Faurisson. I would like to ask him if he read this material and file it as part of having him qualified as an expert.

Q. Dr. Faurisson, I now produce and show to you a photocopy of a document marked, "Personal background" and an article about yourself involving listing all your publications and your text and documents criticism. Have you read that, and is it true to the best of your information and belief?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: And my friend having a copy, I would like to give Your Honour a copy and file it as an exhibit.

THE COURT: It will be a lettered exhibit for identification.

— EXHIBIT "Q" (For identification) Curriculum vitae of Dr. R. Faurisson.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, Dr. Faurisson, you were telling us about the visits you made to the various —

THE COURT: Just a moment. It's in English, is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, yes.

THE COURT: All right. The first page isn't. The second page {2369|2370} is.

MR. CHRISTIE: The first page is a photocopy of the doctorate from the Sorbonne. All the rest is in English, sir, I believe.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Except the titles of his books, which are in French.

THE COURT: That's no problem.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, Doctor, I suppose you said you went to see all these gas chambers and you were explaining why, and maybe you could expand on that for a moment, why you were going to visit all these places where the gas chambers existed.

Q. Because when somebody tells you a crime has been committed, if he says this crime has been committed in such or such places, you must go and see those places.

Q. Yes. So when you had seen the various representations of gas chambers in Europe, what did you do then in your research?

A. Then I decided to make an inquiry about the American gas chambers, because the American, to execute one man, use hydrocyanic acid, and Zyklon-B is exactly hydrocyanic acid. I must say that I should have begun by that.

Q. Where?

A. An idea on which I insist very much with my students is that we must begin by the beginning, but it is sometimes very difficult to do it.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And perhaps I spent many years {2370|2371} instead of beginning by the beginning —

Q. Yes. So you went to the American gas chamber where the people are executed.

A. So my question, to explain you my method, if I have somebody who tell me I believe in the gas chambers, another one says, I do not believe, I think that most of the time the first question would be, why do you believe? Why do you not believe? Instead, the first question should be, but what is a gas chamber?

Q. Yes.

A. Have you thought on those two words, "gas chamber"? Could you tell me what you have in mind? Could you draw me something so that I can see your mental representation? If you mean that any room any place could be a gas chamber used as a gas chamber, I must tell you that you are doing a terrible mistake because the problem, the first problem, is when you have gassed somebody, the problem is to go into the place to take out the cadavers. To gas is rather easy. I say easy because it is a weapon very difficult to handle, the gas. Most difficult is to go into the place and to take out the corpse.

So I made an inquiry. I wrote to, perhaps, ten American penitentiary with a lot of questions, technical questions. I received six answers, and I must say that they were more or less identical. I discovered that, as I suspected, it was very, very —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. Again, Your Honour, we are still just qualifying Dr. Faurisson, and before we hear his opinion, we should have his qualifications. {2371|2372}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Before you express an opinion we would like to examine the basis of your inquiries so if you tell us what inquiries you made, rather than the conclusions of those inquiries

A. So I made this inquiry.

Q. Where did you go and what did you do?

A. And I decided to visit an American gas chamber, and in 1978 I visited the penitentiary of Baltimore, Maryland, and I asked to see this gas chamber. I asked explanation. I got the procedural check sheet. So I don't describe it?

Q. No. Don't bother at this stage. You got the procedure check sheet. Did you take photographs?

A. Yes.

Q. Of the inside and outside of the gas chamber?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am going to lead the witness a bit, if I may, if my friend has no objection.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. So you made photographs of the Baltimore, Maryland gas chamber?

A. Eight photographs.

Q. Eight photographs. You then went to other gas chambers as well?

A. No.

Q. You got information from other gas chambers.

A. Yes. Five others. {2372|2373}

Q. Can you say why you were getting all this information in the course of your research?

A. Because I wanted to see what could be the procedure, how could Zyklon-B or hydrocyanic acid kill somebody, and how it could be possible to get into the place and to take the body out.

Q. Okay. Then did you make other inquiries about the use of hydrocyanic acid or Zyklon-B?

A. Oh, yes. Many in books.

Q. Could you describe some of those inquiries, sir?

A. Yes. There were many technical works in German about Zyklon, and also many American books, few French books.

Q. And some French books.

A. Few.

Q. The books in German, would they be Second World War books about Zyklon?

A. No. Before the War, because Zyklon has been invented in 1917, but the label was given in 1922. It was used currently before the War, during the War, after the War and today.

Q. It is still used?

A. It is still used, yes. I can give you the address in America, or —

Q. You have inquired as to all the development and use of Zyklon, then?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you done anything else to assist you to understand what Zyklon is like? You say that you visited the gas chambers, etcetera? {2373|2374}

A. I visited also technician, a French technician, and I made inquiries about the use of hydrocyanic acid for many purposes. For example, for the foxes' burrow.

Q. And can you describe other uses to which you inquired into?

A. Yes. How was done the delousing of the sheep by Zyklon-B, of a building of a mill.

Q. Of a mill, what do you mean a flour mill?

A. A flour mill, yes.

Q. That's all the things you've inquired into the method of use of Zyklon?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And times of use and time of airing and that sort of thing, have you inquired into that?

A. Yes. And I consulted also toxicologist, the most well-known in France. His name is Truffert, and toxicologist also of what we call Prefecture de Police in Paris, Laboratory of Prefecture de Police.

Q. So did that exhaust your research into the subject of Zyklon-B?

A. I don't know if it exhausts.

Q. There were other —

A. It's very, very wide.

Q. All right. And how long have you been engaged in that aspect of your research?

A. Oh, perhaps three, four years.

Q. Have you investigated other areas {2374|2375} in respect to the gas chambers? You have described the visits to the concentration camps; you've described the visits to the gas chamber in Maryland and its operation and use, and inquiries into other uses. Have you done other research into the Holocaust as well?

A. Oh, yes. Principally in reading and studying books, Raul Hilberg book — I esteem very much Raul Hilberg, although we are not the same opinion.

Q. Yes.

A. There are other people, like Leon Poliakov.

Q. Yes. What has he written that you've studied?

A. "Harvest of Hate" is the name.

Q. Have you studied other what might be called exterminationist sources?

A. Yes, especially the thesis made by French historian, a Jewess, Olga Wormser-Migot. And can I say, perhaps, why those books?

Q. Yes, please explain.

A. Why they were important, the most important date in my inquiry, since twenty-five years, the most important date in 1960, because of what Mr. Brochat [Broszat] published in a German newspaper that I don't want to go into detail, saying that there were no mass gassing in the West, and I knew that there were so many proof, some many testimonies and so many trials about those gas chambers in the Western part of Europe. It was very surprising for me.

Q. I see. So that began your inquiry.

A. Yes. {2375|2376}

Q. The next most important day in your research?

A. 1974, when I had an exchange of correspondence that I can show with Mr. Brochat [Broszat], who was at that time the Director of the Historical Institute in Munich, and I asked him very simple questions. It was a list. Were there any gas chambers in Bergen-Belsen, Buchenwald, Dachau, Mauthausen, Auschwitz I, Auschwitz II, Belzec, Sobibor, etcetera. It was a simple question.

Q. Did you ask those questions of other historical researchers?

A. Yes. To many others.

Q. How many others?

A. I couldn't tell you today, but I sent it, I think, I sent this kind of questionnaire to every representant [representative] in the world of what we call Committee of History of World War II. I remember that I even sent a letter in New Zealand about that.

Q. Yes. There was a Committee of Historians about the Second World War?

A. Yes.

Q. And you sent this questionnaire to each one of them?

A. We had every country as has committee, and there is an International Committee.

Q. Yes.

A. The historian Henry Michel was President of the French Committee, but he was also presiding the International Committee; but this Committee hasn't exist for a few years. So the second date important {2376|2377} was '74 when I asked those questions to Dr. Martin Brochat [sic]. I have his letter. He said —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me.

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: We won't go into what you said, and unless you are qualified as an expert you will be giving hearsay.

So you got responses that led to further inquiries, right?

A. I had answers which made quite clear that there was a problem, called the problem of the gas chamber. And this problem is the problem of the existence or not of such or such gas chamber, or of all the gas chambers.

Q. All right.

A. Olga Wormser-Migot, for example, say —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Never mind what she said. We will be getting — until such time as you are qualified as an expert you may not give an opinion. Maybe not then. Who knows? Now —

A. Can I say an important date?

Q. Yes. For you it was an important date. Maybe you can explain why without quoting anybody. It was an important date ...

A. Because once more it was said that there was a problem, and even a complicated problem.

Q. You concluded it was a complicated problem, is that right?

A. No. It was written by somebody.

Q. All right. Well, then, we can't {2377|2378} go into that. Try to avoid that kind of thing altogether. Right?

A. Then in 1978 when I first published my findings —

Q. What book did you publish?

A. Well, at that time I published only an article in the Journal "Le Monde".

Q. What's "Le Monde"?

A. "Le Monde" is what is so-called an important journal in France, supposed to be independent, but rather leftist.

Q. All right. So you published —

A. An article called, "The problem of the Gas Chamber", and a long letter, also, and there was quite a disturbance in France about that.

Q. What kind of disturbance was there?

A. Worries with my university.

Q. Yes. And you are still a professor there?

A. I am still a professor, but I do not teach.

Q. Yes. We will go into that later, but what area of your research was the result of what you found in 1974 when you got the questionnaire back?

A. I don't understand your question. Please excuse me.

Q. Well, I was going back to the questionnaire that you sent to all those committee members.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What did you do after that in {2378|2379} terms of your research?

A. I had to notice that those people didn't give me a clear answer, or tried not to answer, and I must say that before that I had made a kind of competition between Paul Rassinier and the others. I asked the same question to Paul Rassinier and to the others.

Q. Yes.

A. And I collected those answers.

Q. The others being who — the exterminationists?

A. What we call the exterminationists. Among them there was a judge, a prosecutor in Nuremberg. His name is Edgar Faure.

Q. Was Rassinier an exterminationist or did he have other views about the gas chamber?

A. You mean a revisionist?

Q. Yes.

A. He was a revisionist.

Q. Are these the books that Rassinier published and you studied? I am showing you now, "The Operation Vicar", about the role of the Pope.

A. It is about Gerstein.

Q. All right. Did you study that? Is that his book?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. I will not file it as an exhibit but — is this the "Drama of European Jews" by Paul Rassinier? Did you study that?

A. Yes.

Q. "The True Eichmann Process"? {2379|2380}

A. Yes.

Q. And is that his book?

A. Yes.

Q. And "Ulysses Betrayed by his Allies", is that his book?

A. His companion, [sic] so yes.

Q. And "The Song of Ulysses"?

A. "The Lie".

Q. "The Lie of Ulysses"?

A. Yes.

Q. And those are the books that you call the revisionists. Were there further earlier books by revisionists?

A. Yes, by German people.

Q. And who were they?

A. Franz Scheidl, for example.

Q. And is there a historian, Helmut Dewalt? (ph) [Hellmut Diwald]

A. Yes. Later on. He was a professor in the University of Erlangen [Erlangen]. He wrote a very big fat book like the German are used to publish called, "History of the Germans", and in two or three of these pages is said —

THE COURT: Well, it's a book, a fat book, as you say.

THE WITNESS: Yes. One containing two, three books about the question of Auschwitz, yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Would you categorize him as a revisionist in that respect?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, you published — {2380|2381} you described a publication in "Le Monde" and the outburst that occurred. You haven't gone into detail, but did you publish other things as well?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you publish? Now, the "Le Monde" article was when?

A., This article was — the short article was in December '78. The long letter was on the 16th of January, 1979.

Q. All right. And did you publish a book after that?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the first book you published?

A. I published a book with Serge Thieon called — I will translate it in English — "Historical Truth?" or "Political Truth?". The meaning is, is it a truth or a lie? And the sub-title was the question of the gas chamber and L'Affaire Faurisson — the Faurisson Affair.

Q. And is this the book you described?

A. Yes. This one.

Q. Now, how long was that out before you published another one?

A. This was in 1980, the same year I published a book under my own name called, "Memoire en Defiance" – Memorandum in Defiance – against those who claimed that I am a falsifier.

Q. And it's, "La Question des Gas Chambres"?

A. The question of the Gas Chamber. {2381|2382}

Q. And did someone write a foreword to this book for you?

A. Yes. Norman Chomsky wrote a letter on my behalf, and he said to my publisher —

Q. Never mind what he said. Did you have permission to use that letter as an introduction to that book?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you do so?

A. We didn't have the permission to publish it as a foreword. We had the permission to publish it anyway.

Q. I see. So it was not a restricted publication? You published it as a foreword to your book.

A. And it doesn't mean that Norm Chomsky shared my views about the Holocaust. It was only for freedom of speech.

Q. Yes. But do you know who Norm Chomsky is?

A. Yes. He is the godson of a Rabbi, and he is a very distinguished linguist and sociologist in the MIT, Massachusetts [sic] Institute of Technology.

Q. Yes. And have you published other works as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Why was it necessary to publish other works?

A. Because in France many things were published about the problem of the gas chamber at that time, and especially a professor called Pierre Vidal-Naquet published a very long article. The title was, in English, {2382|2383} "I was supposed to be like Eichmann".

Q. So did you write a response to Vidal-Naquet?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the book you wrote as a response?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was published in France?

A. Yes. In 1982.

Q. And both those books, his and yours, are circulated today in France?

A. Yes.

Q. And they are pro and con on this issue?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. All right. And I gather that thereafter you published other articles as well.

A. Yes.

Q. How much have you published on this whole subject?

A. I have not counted exactly.

Q. Can you give us an idea?

A. I think that I gave the number of pages somewhere. I cannot remember.

Q. And is it —

A. And I have books in progress.

Q. I see. You have published other things other than —

A. On specific subjects. I mean, about the album of Auschwitz, the Auschwitz Album.

Q. Yes. {2383|2384}

A. And about a book which has been published in Germany. The title means "Gas Masks by the German National-Socialist Regime".

Q. So you have published some articles?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have some works in progress.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you exhausted the study that you have undertaken of all the Holocaust literature?

A. Certainly not.

Q. Could you carry on and describe for the benefit of those who don't know the extent of your studies? What other things have you studied?

A. I consider that, for instance, there is no more curiosity, intellectual curiosity for the question of the gas chamber. For most it's finished, I must say. No intellectual curiosity; but there are many subjects around this one which are not clear at all, and I agree with Raul Hilberg when he says, for instance, okay, you say that there were no gas chambers, but all those people, where did they disappear? Did they go to China, or what?

Q. Yes.

A. I agree with this question, but I think that we are giving answers who are too automatic, and we should do a very important work, and very easy, with the computers and with all the information that we have, especially in International Tracing Service in Arolsen. {2384|2385}

Q. Have you been there?

A. I have not been there because I knew that it was not possible —

THE COURT: You haven't been there.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you conducted research there through agents of yours?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you conducted research there for a period of time and obtained documents from there?

A. Yes.

Q. And how long have you been researching there through agents?

A. I had quite good relations with the International Tracing Service in, I should say, perhaps '74, '75, '76.

Q. But after you published what your findings were, then they cut you off.

A. It was finished, yes.

Q. Well, what extent of information have you received from the documents? How many documents have you received from them?

A. I received what they call their activity report, annual activity report.

Q. Have you conducted studies into the area of Anne Frank's Diary?

A. Yes.

Q. What are the researches into that area? What have you done to research that subject?

A. This is a subject that I studied with my students.

Q. With your students. {2385|2386}

A. In university, yes. The question was —

Q. What did you, specifically, do to study the Anne Frank Diaries? Did you go and talk to Otto Frank?

A. Yes, I did that, but before I read the text.

Q. All right. You read the text.

A. I mean the French text, without the Dutch original.

Q. Yes.

A. When I read this French text, as a specialist of text and document criticism I was conduct to some conclusion that I cannot say, eh?

Q. Well, I just want to know what research you undertook. Did you read the Dutch version as well?

A. Yes. After the Dutch version —

Q. And is there a German version?

A. And there is a German version.

Q. Are they all the same?

A. No. Really not. Two books quite different.

Q. And you studied them all.

A. Yes.

Q. In detail.

A. Yes.

Q. And did you then undertake an inquiry by interviewing Otto Frank?

A. Yes. {2386|2387}

Q. How long did you interview Otto Frank?

A. One day five hours, and the other day four hours.

Q. When did you conduct the interviews, in Switzerland?

A. Where?

Q. Yes. Where?

A. In Basil.

Q. You travelled to Basil, Switzerland, to conduct the interviews?

A. Yes.

Q. And therefore you derived conclusions from the interviews?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you done other scientific research into Anne Frank's Diaries?

A. Yes. In Amsterdam itself, in the so-called Anne Frank house. And I had to do some research in the Centre of Documentation in Amsterdam, and research also into the files of — it's difficult to say — of the City Hall, about the state. I wanted to know —

Q. The plans of the house?

A. I wanted to know how the house was done in 1939, up to 1944.

Q. The physical arrangement of the house?

A. Yes.

Q. And [ ] you undertook those studies as well?

A. Yes. {2387|2388}

Q. Any other studies in respect to the Anne Frank Diary?

A. Yes. I studied books about —

Q. What books?

A. A book from Schnabel. I have the title in French. It would mean, "On the traces of Anne Frank".

Q. Any other research into any other —

A. And I noticed that there were many differences between the French version, German version, and Dutch version.

Q. Any other research into the area of Anne Frank, the Diaries?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. All right. Have you described all the sources of information that you have read in respect to the subject of the Holocaust generally?

A. No. Certainly not, because in the bibliography — you mean bibliography?

Q. Yes.

A. Because in the bibliography you need to give only the principal works, and the principal work about the Holocaust has been published in 1976 by Yad Vashem [Yad Vashem] in Jerusalem.

Q. Have you studied that?

A. By Jacob Robinson. It's a very important book, a very interesting references of all the possible documents about Holocaust.

Q. Yes. And have you studied that?

A. And it is impossible to work without {2388|2389} this book.

Q. Have you studied this book?

A. Yes.

Q. And in what terms of time, how much time have you spent studying that book and those documents?

A. It is what we call Livre de Cheveq. (?)

Q. And what is that?

A. A book that I have near my bed.

Q. You studied all the time?

A. Yes.

Q. It is a constant reference work?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read Yehuda Bauer and Hilda —

A. Paxton and Marrus. I have studied also George Uellers [Georges Wellers], Joseph Billig, and many others like that.

Q. Have you read Miklos Nyiszli's "Doctor at Auschwitz"?

A. Yes.

Q. Filip Muller's "Eye Witness Auschwitz — Three Years in the Gas Chamber"?

A. I have read Filip Muller in the three versions, the German version called, in English, "Special Treatment", then the English version called, "Eye Witness Auschwitz — Three years in the Gas Chamber"

Q. Are they all the same?

A. No.

Q. Have you studied Dr. Vrba's book, "I will not Forgive?" (sic) {2389|2390}

A. "I Cannot Forgive".

Q. Yes. Have you studied that?

A. Yes. I had to study, especially, the three people that I think that there are, that their testimonies are the three pillars of the story of the gas chamber. The first one is Dr. Vrba or his companion, Wetzler. That is the War Report.

Q. Yes. Have you studied that?

A. Yes. That is the first one chronologically. Second one, the Gerstein statement. I made many discoveries about Claud Gerstein because we know one or two of his confessions, but there are many more than that.

We could say that —

Q. Where did you get the confessions of Gerstein?

A. I got them from the Archives of the Military Justice.

Q. Where?

A. In Paris.

Q. Was he supposed to be killed, or died in Paris?

A. He was supposed to have committed suicide, and many people do not believe that.

Q. Well, never mind. But —

A. But I think —

Q. He was supposed to have died in —

A. In Cherche-Midi.

Q. So where did you get all the —

A. And the third one, the third one is Hoess, who has been one of the three successive commandants of Auschwitz. {2390|2391}

Q. And where did you study the documents or texts referable [sic] to Hoess?

A. I had to read the book of Martin Brochat [sic], published by Martin Brochat, eleven years after the death of Hoess. We had to wait eleven years to have the German text. Then we have another text, an English text, with additions by Cyrus Russel of Liverpool.

Q. Lord Russel of Liverpool?

A. And I studied other versions that we have not, I translated in English, not books of Auschwitz, but I never saw myself, the manuscripts, and I have no qualifications to study manuscripts. That's not my competence.

Q. Right. So you studied the texts and documents provided?

A. The text published.

Q. The text published.

A. And many, many document PS or NE or NO of the American. There are many, many coming from Hoess.

Q. These are documents. Where are they filed?

A. Yes.

Q. Where are they filed?

A. U.S.A.

Q. And where did you get them?

A. The IMT and —

Q. IMT and NMT?

A. Yes. IMT and NMT.

Q. And you have examined those documents in the original form? {2391|2392}

A. Copies from the National Archives.

Q. Yes. Now, have you studied the works of Herman Langbein and the book —

A. Yes.

Q. — "Six Million Did Die" by the South African Jewish Board of Deputies?

A. From Herman Langbein I read a book called, in English it would be, "Man and Woman in Auschwitz", and I especially read a very long book more than one thousand pages about the Auschwitz trial in 1963, 1965.

Q. Yes. And have you studied the book, "Six Million Did Die" by the South African Jewish Board Executive?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you study all these books to make your analysis of your account?

A. I am obliged to do that, compare constantly, yes.

Q. Compare constantly. Why do you do that?

A. Because I think that we must cross-examine everything, everybody. We must check, and when we have checked, we must double-check, because I do many mistakes, as everybody.

Q. Yes. Have you examined the works of various accounts for the observation of what is known as plagiarism?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you found plagiarism?

A. Yes. For instance from — {2392|2393}

THE COURT: Well, he's found them.

THE WITNESS: I found them, yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Until we are entitled to ask you your opinion, you cannot say what you found.

A Mm-hmmm

Q. Have you exhausted the studies or descriptions – have you exhausted your description of the studies you have undertaken of the subject of the Holocaust from the exterminationists' point of view?

A. No. Certainly not.

Q. Well, we'd better go on, then, and describe further studies that you have undertaken.

A. I studied – I was in relation with Association of Deportees, for example, with the Association of Deportees of Dachau. So in Dachau, Germany, and the International Committee in Brussels.

Q. Yes. The International Committee of what?

A. Of the former inmates of Dachau.

Q. Yes.

A. The former inmates of Struthof [Struthof], the former inmates of Auschwitz, and of the camp of Upper Silesia.

Q. What did these correspondences enable you to find?

A. Difficult to say like that, if I cannot go into details. I cannot —

THE COURT: He is absolutely right. The witness is quite correct. He studied those documents.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Any other studies {2393|2394} you have undertaken, sir, to be qualified in this area of special skill?

A. Oh, yes. Many. I studied, for example, all the reviews published by our Committee of Second World War, and specially something which is not known at all, which is a bulletin.

Q. A bulletin?

A. Confidential bulletin of the Committee of the Second World War in France.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. I interrogated people who have been inmates, but I must say very few. I cannot leave you a number because I prefer what is written, you see. Because somebody could tell me, "No, I've not said that." So I need something written. I studied also many things, many documents coming from the OSS.

Q. OSS. What's that?

A. The ancestor of the CIA, about the kind of information that they got during the War about Auschwitz, specially, but about other camps. They were overwhelming with information, and the OSS and —

Q. How did you get access to this information?

A. National Archives, Washington,

Q. And who got it for you – a researcher?

A. A researcher, yes. So I cannot say anything about that?

Q. Not really, no. Have other scientists or researchers in this field recognized your work? {2394|2395}

A. I think —

THE COURT: What does recognition mean?

MR. CHRISTIE: Recognition means when someone announces that you have the resource of information to them, such as Dr. Hilberg said that Mr. Faurisson and others raised questions which caused researchers to increase their effort in a vigorous manner.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did that happen with Dr. Hilberg?

A. Le Nouvelle Observateur —

Q. When?

A. In June or July 1982, a very long interview, it was when Raul Hilberg was in Paris for the Sorbonne Convention, 29 June to July 1982.

Q. All right. And what research had caused that comment that you had recently published, or made?

A. I don't understand.

Q. What research was he commenting on at the time that you had recently initiated when he mentioned your name? Was it about the gas chamber?

A. It was about the gas chamber, yes.

Q. What was it that you had made known that had brought about that comment?

A. I cannot give an answer because I would have to go into detail.

Q. Well, you can go into detail as long as it is not hearsay. Can you tell us what it was? {2395|2396}

A. No, because it was a deduction from my part.

Q. Very well.

A. He didn't say expressly, "Faurisson has done a good work because he has said this or that." He didn't give any precision.

Q. Do you remember exactly what it was he published or said on that occasion that was attributed to him?

A. No. I have that on a piece of paper.

Q. All right.

A. I can give the text and the translation.

Q. Mm-hmmm. As a result of what you published were you prosecuted in France?

A. Yes.

Q. Under the Civil Code?

A. Civil Code, yes.

Q. Yes. And was that litigation widely followed in the media?

A. I had three trials, three different trials. Must I explain?

Q. Yes. Go ahead.

A. The first, first I have been sued by Mr. Leon Poliakov because in my book I have said that Mr. Poliakov had manipulated and fabricated texts.

Q. Yes. And was that proven or unproven?

A. It's difficult to say. The judgment say that I had no right to say that about Leon {2396|2397} Poliakov because Leon Poliakov had failed to the scientific spirit in some detail.

Q. Had what?

A. He had not been scientific in reproducing, for example, one text of Gerstein. He had changed words and so on, and figures; but the Tribunal said that we had to consider that Mr. Poliakov was animated by a passion to make known the document Gerstein.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. That was the first lawsuit.

Q. And have there been other lawsuits at all?

A. Yes. Another one because of a phrase of sixty words that I pronounced on the radio.

Q. What did you say?

A. I said – I can say that?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's what he said. It's not hearsay.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: So before those sixty words that I had prepared for years and years, I said, "Be careful not one of those words are inspired by a political ..."

Q. Motive?

A. Reason. Motive.

Q. Then what did you say?

A. And I said very slowly those sixty words.

Q. Can you repeat them?

A. I am going to try to tell them in English. I said to the people, "Be careful. I am not {2397|2398} anti-Jewish. I am not even anti-Zionist, because if I were Jew perhaps I would be Zionist, and if I say something bad about a country, it doesn't mean that I consider that the other countries, when we go into their history, have not dirty things also." So I said, "The alleged Hitler gas chambers and the alleged genocide of the Jews are one single and the same historical lie ..." – I should explain historical lie.

Q. Well, finish the sentence, and then explain.

A. "... of whom the principal beneficiaries are the State of Israel and the International Zionism, and whom the principal victims are the German people, but not their leaders, and the inter Palestinian people." And I said also that I considered as victims the young Jewish generation because they believe there was terrible stories. I think that the War is terrible, but we don't have to add anything to it.

Q. Yes. So then what did occur? There was a lawsuit, is that right, over those words?

A. A lawsuit, yes.

Q. You were accused of being a falsifier of history; is that correct?

A. No, no. I was accused of racial hatred, incitation to racial hatred and defamation. Incitation is very grave, and defamation is less grave. I couldn't attend my trial because during all the 1981 year I have been sick, and I had many troubles, but I know, by —

Q. Never mind. Can you tell us the end result of the trial? {2398|2399}

A. It was terrific.

THE COURT: It was what?

THE WITNESS: It was terrific for me. I was condemned to pay the publication of the judgment on the TV and on the radio, which has never been done in France.

THE COURT: You were condemned to do what, sir?

THE WITNESS: To pay the publication of the judgment on the TV and on Radio Europe, number one, and I made a calculation of cost to me, and it was at that time 3,600,000 francs.

Q. Francs. And a franc is worth one-seventh of a dollar, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you appealed that judgment?

A. Yes.

Q. And what happened on the appeal?

A. On appeal — oh, I was also condemned to three months of custody, I think, suspended.

Q. Suspended sentence.

A. Yes. Of ninety days. And to pay, I don't remember also, many things. And on appeal I came and I was able to talk five minutes, I think. It was to explain my phrase of sixty words, which could look very scandalous, I recognize. And the judge suppressed totally the story of publication on the TV and the radio and newspaper. He suppressed all that, but he kept the ninety days of suspended conviction.

Q. Has that judgment been translated?

A. No. {2399|2400}

Q. All right. Now, was there one other —

A. Yes. The third one was really the most important. May I say why I consider it like more important? It was —

THE COURT: Oh, I don't know. What — was it? Let's hear what it was and I will decide.

THE WITNESS: So I was accused in 1979 by nine organizations of causing them damage, and a damage by what they call a falsification of history.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So this is where the issue of falsification of history —

A. It was very important for me, yes. So —

Q. Incidentally, in your experience, was truth a defence to either of the other two charges?

A. Excuse me?

THE COURT: I missed that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was truth a defence to any of the other two issues?

A. Yes.

Q. Truth was a defence?

A. Yes. But in France I think it is not the same as in Canada. I mean that defamation doesn't mean automatically, in France, that you have lied. You can make a defamation by saying a truth. For instance, in saying something about the private life of somebody, even if it's true, you have not right to say that.

Q. All right. Now, in the —

A. Now I am not very competent in law, eh? {2400|2401}

Q. Well, you've had some experience

A. Yes. So this third trial was very important for me. It lasted four years.

Q. That you were a falsifier of history?

A. Yes.

Q. So how long did it go on?

A. Four years.

Q. And what was the end result in the Court of Appeal in Paris 26 of April, 1983?

A. 26 of April, 1983, to sum up twelve-pages, I should say that the judge said that I was serious, that I was honest, that I had a method, that I was not a liar but they said that I was polemical, nit-picking, that I had a tendency, perhaps, it is very difficult to understand, to rehabilitate the Nazis.

THE COURT: To do what?

THE WITNESS: To rehabilitate.

THE COURT: To rehabilitate?

THE WITNESS: Yes, the Nazis. And they said that the simple fact of talking about swindle and lie implied that there were swindlers and liars, which could think that they were shown by me as liars and swindlers.

I think this a very important word among those sixty words is historical lie. When I say historical lie, it means that there are very few liars, and the more we go, the more we are victims of the lie.

Q. I see. All right.

A. I don't call the people who have {2401|2402} not my opinion, I don't call them liars. I say once something of this kind about Mr. Leon Poliakov.

Q. All right. Now, in view of all your experience in this area, you have been involved in litigation and you have done the research you've described, why did you conduct your research?

A. It was simply my intellectual curiosity to say the thing, more simply my curiosity. The day I discovered that there was a problem, I wanted to know the solution.

Q. And have you approached the subject with any political preconceptions?

A. No. And during the War I was terribly anti-German and anti-Nazi, and there was no difference for me between Nazi and Germans.

Q. Now, I think I will ask for the judge to make a ruling, and my friend will then be cross-examining you on your expertise.

MR. CHRISTIE: I see it is one o'clock, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I think there will be a little cross-examination before I make my ruling.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is what I suggested.

THE COURT: I thought you said the other way around.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't mean to imply that. I didn't know that I'd said that.

THE COURT: We understand one another.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

—— {2402|2403}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder, Your Honour, if I could ask two more questions of the witness.

THE COURT: Yes.

— The jury enters. 2:20 p.m.

THE COURT: Do you have some more questions, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Faurisson, how much time have you spent researching the question of the gas chamber?

A. I began in 1960, up till 1974. I worked from time to time on this topic, and from 1974 till now constantly except during the year 1981.

Q. Have you been supported by Jews in your research as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you name those who have supported you of the Jewish faith?

A. Yes. One name is very well known in France. He is a professor of German. His name is Jean Gabriel Cohn-Bendit. Another one is Gabor Tomas Rittersporn. Another one is — so Rittersporn is a researcher in the National Scientific Research. And Claud Carnoouh, scientific researcher also.

Q. What's this scientific research?

A. Centre de Recherche National Scientific. It's a centre in France resembling field locality. It is attached to the university {2403|2404}

Q. Anybody else?

A. Yes. Jacob Assous.

Q. What's his function?

A. I don't remember. It is not in the teaching matter.

Q. It is not in the teaching profession.

A. No. All those people belong more or less like Serge Thion to a group which is called, "The Old Mole". They are people coming from the left, pacifists, [sic] anti-racists, in fact and in words.

Q. Anti-racists in facts and in words?

A. In fact and in words. By that I mean, Serge Thion wrote a book very well known in France against apartheid. He is a friend of Naom Chomsky. And the most important of them is Pierre Diom is my publisher.

Q. And he is a Jew?

A. No, he is not a Jew.

Q. A member of the group of the old mole. Is that what you mean?

A. Some of them are Jews. That is what I mean. And seven of them decided to be on my side in this trial for falsification of history. They were what we call volunteers internant in the trial for four years.

Q. I see.

A. And in newspaper and elsewhere they said that they were my side, and Claud Carnouh even published a book with the resistance. At the beginning I {2404|2405} was considered as a madman, Nazi, whatever. Now people think that I am leftist, but I am not leftist, not Nazi.

Q. All right. Could you answer questions from my learned friend, please?

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Is it Dr. Faurisson?

A. Yes.

Q. Doctor, my learned friend, Mr. Christie, when he first introduced you, suggested that he was going to be asking that you be qualified as an expert in the Holocaust. And as I understood your testimony, a great deal of, if not most of your researches have been in the field of gas chamber. Is that fair to say?

A. It's the centre.

Q. All right. Do you have any knowledge or have you done any researches on what we have here referred to as the Einsatzgruppen, this group that worked on the Russian front from about 1942 on?

A. Yes. I did some research on this topic. I didn't publish anything, because I think that the book of Reginald Paget about Marshall Manstein, brings an answer, a partial answer to this story of the Einsatzgruppen.

Q. So you read one book.

A. I mean this book, it seems to me that {2405|2406} this book brings a good answer about the story of the Einsatzgruppen. Sir Reginald Paget tried to be matter of fact. He calculated how many people were in those Einsatzgruppen and so on, and I studied documents about that all the same.

Q. You studied documents about them.

A. Yeah.

Q. All right.

A. The Yager [Jäger] Report and so on.

Q. Now, you have your doctorate and were teaching at Lyons in French literature?

A. In French literature and in text and document criticism.

Q. We will come to that, but you were teaching in French literature?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you ever taught history?

A. Taught history?

Q. Yes. In university.

A. No. But in text and document criticism we had very often the occasion of using historical texts. For example – can I give an example?

Q. Yes. Please.

A. For example, what was said about the Germans by the French during the First World War, and about the French by the Germans during the First World War. We studied the books of John Cru called, "Witnesses about Testimony". We studied also about – Naughton, I think, was his middle name. We studied also about historical myths, inventions.

Q. This text and document criticism, {2406|2407} that's a course that you took at university, allegedly?

A. Yes.

Q. And how many courses did you take in that?

A. I had three hours by week, and it was two hours by week.

Q. Three hours a week?

A. Yes. Because in France the most of the work done by the students is written. We have few lectures.

Q. When did you take that course?

A. It was in 1974.

Q. This is after you had your doctorate, then.

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I must object to one thing about this, and that is the misleading use of the word "take". The Doctor taught the course.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I didn't hear him say that.

Q. Did you take a course or taught a course?

A. I taught.

Q. And where was that?

A. In the Université Lyons Deux.

Q. And my question was, what courses did you take?

A. It was a decision taken in '73, '74, and we had in France to re-organize, to organize in every university lectures and teaching, and we had to try to find something specific for every university. So {2407|2408} I was candidate to that, teaching text and document criticism. So I had to submit a dossier to the responsible of my department, and it was submitted to the Scientific Council of the University and it was accepted, and I had a code number. It was accepted in consideration of the kind of publication that I had already done.

Q. Yes. And the publication that you had already done at that time was studies of Rimbaud and various French authors.

A. The French authors, yes.

Q. And the course that you were teaching in text and document criticism, did that also relate to French literature?

A. It could be French literature, journalism, or whatsoever.

Q. All right. And the course that you had approved by the university and taught, my question is did that course apply to French literature?

A. Also, yes.

Q. All right. And in addition to French literature did it relate to historical documents?

A. Yes. Historical documents.

Q. It did relate to that.

A. Yes.

Q. And aside from teaching at Lyons II in this course, did you have any qualifications in the area of text and document criticism?

A. My qualifications are my books. We don't have a title saying this man —

Q. Doctorate of Texts? {2408|2409}

A. Excuse me?

Q. I'm sorry, you have to forgive me because I don't know the French system and I am relying on you to help me. You don't have such a thing as a doctorate of text criticism?

A. No. It doesn't exist, and there is in France only three or four places where text and document criticism is taught – I know especially Paris University.

Q. When was the last time you taught in —

A. The 14th of May, 1979.

Q. And for the last almost six years.

A. I didn't teach any more.

Q. All right. My understanding is correct me if I m wrong – that you are still on the salary – you still receive a salary from the university.

A. I still receive my basic salary, yes.

Q. And that's what you are using to survive on; that's what you live on.

A. Yes. ...

Q. All right. Now, you indicated to Mr. Christie some of the basic reading that you have done and some of the different researches that you have done. And you said that you started off with Rassinier.

A. That's right.

Q. All right. And I gather from something you said that you knew

Rassinier; you had met him.

A. I corresponded with him, but I {2409|2410} never met him.

Q. All right. Were you aware that Rassinier was involved in a lawsuit in 1964?

A. Yes, I know this lawsuit. Yes.

Q. All right. Where it was alleged in an article that Rassinier had made common cause with the Nazis and he sued the author of that article for libel?

A. That's right. For ...

Q. For libel.

A. That's right.

Q. And he lost.

A. And he lost. May I say something about that? No? Yes?

Q. That's my question. If Mr. Christie wants to follow up ...

I understand that you speak French, English and German.

A. I don't speak German, no. I read German.

Q. You read German.

A. Yes. Every time that a text is in English or in German or in Dutch or Spanish, I always ask to somebody to help me to check what I have done, and I double check.

Q. So the documents from the International Military Tribunal and the American Military Tribunal you read in French; is that what I understand?

A. Some of them are in French. The transcript, twenty-first volumes are in French. The two others, the International editions are indexes, and the {2410|2411} eighteen others are sometimes in French, sometimes in English, and sometimes in German.

Q. Dr. Hilberg explained to us that his methodology was to seek corroboration for whatever he did. If he had a fact, he would look for documents that would support that fact or not, and he called that an empirical process.

A. Yes.

Q. As I understand it, your method is to study the text.

A. To study – to give the priority to the text. If I may comment about that, the difference between —

Q. Please.

A. — Dr. Hilberg and myself, I admire very much the work that Dr. Hilberg did, and I told him, but I don't know exactly how to qualify this method. It is a kind of method which was perhaps too typically of a professor. May I make a kind of demonstration? If the text is there, a professor, most of the time, I noticed that since thirty years, instead of attacking the text itself, likes to show that he know many things about a text. He goes on quickly about the context and the context, and always like this. I noticed that when I had already, when I was already twenty years old, when I had a text that I could not understand, for instance from Rimbaud, I went to see those books and I was looking for the explanation of a text that I could not understand, and I saw that those people had written volumes and volumes about an author, and they didn't seem to have really read this author. They knew everything about his {2411|2412} life, about his loves, about his money affairs, about the time, about if he was a novelist, the novel, the story of the novel – always around; but the text itself ... So my work, since a very long time, is to say to the people, please, remember that the text, the context is important, but the text is more and more important. And my method, if I may explain it, my method is to say to my students, "You have there a text. I advise you to consider that this text is from an unknown author. I don't want you to tell me anything about the identity of the author, anything about the time. I want you to try to understand this text, to try to take it like this. Don't express any feeling. Try to be dry. And then you will go to the context, but please not the far context because what is the far context? All of us, we have little brains. We cannot embrace a vast context. So the nearest context is the word coming before and after, and perhaps a little bit further, but we must be very, very careful."

Q. All right.

A. So if I may criticize Mr. Hilberg that I admire, I will say it is typically a professor, and even a German professor.

Q. Would you agree with me, Doctor, that there is a difference between studying literature where the text itself is the item of study, and studying history, which deals with the continuum of documents?

That is my first question. Perhaps you can answer that and then I will go on to my next question.

A. I answer now? {2412|2413}

Q. Yes. Please.

A. No. I think that everything is inscribed in a continuity. For example, the meaning of the words change with the time. So a text is supposed to be historical and another one who is supposed to be literature, another one who is supposed to be poetical, another one who is supposed to be a novel. I say that those categories have something which is rather artificial. In fact, we have words, a document. When it is a written document, words. So we must try to understand those words one after the other. It's the principle – I think that Raul Hilberg should have been very careful when he used a word like "Endwesung". He translated by extermination. And if you see the context, the context means extermination of men. Instead, if you are precise, you try to find the dictionary with this word, you try to see the context itself, and you will see that it means "delousing". And the historians are like every people, like a journalist. I don't think that there is a difference of natural between a journalist and a historian, a novelist, and so on. I don't think so. I know that many of my students did not agree with that. I say, you consider that they are a poem. You have no right to say that. It is because it is set in this position that you say that it is a poem. Myself, I say that it is words with holes between the words. I must say and we must try to understand what is said in it, and then you will say, for me it is poetical, but you also have to say, for me it's not poetical.

Q. Have you ever been qualified as an expert in any court in the world to testify as an {2413|2414} expert on the Holocaust?

A. No. But for the Anne Frank Diary I can tell you what happened.

Q. No, I am not asking about the Anne Frank Diary. I am asking you if you have been qualified as an expert.

A. No. But I know what an expert is. And then the Court of Hamburg decided an expert is of the manuscripts of Anne Frank, and that is how they discovered that it was a literary fraud.

Q. All right. Is this as a result of your testimony, did you say?

A. I think.

Q. Did you testify as an expert at that trial?

A. I gave a long text to the lawyer of the man who was attacked, and he used it.

Q. Did you testify?

A. Personally?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Thank you. You've told us of many texts that you studied, and you named many different authors, most of whom I would suggest to you are secondary sources, historians who have studied documents. Have you studied the original documents?

A. Original documents?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Since 1960 have you been financing your own research? {2414|2415}

A. Yes, I have been financing my own research.

Q. And has anybody been assisting you in that?

A. I have been assisted for my trial.

Q. No, I am not talking about your trials, but your research.

A. My research, myself, which means my wife and my children, also.

Q. You've mentioned some legal difficulties that you found yourself in, and I believe you mentioned three different trials.

A. Yeah.

Q. And the first was where you were sued by Leon Polkiov [Poliakov].

A. That's right.

Q. And it was a libel suit?

A. Libel suit.

Q. And you had accused him of being a manipulator or fabricator of documents.

A. The two, manipulator and fabricator.

Q. And you were found guilty of lying.

A. Of libel.

Q. Libel. And you were ordered to pay a fine of 2,000 francs?

A. I don't remember, but I remember that I had to publish, to pay the publication of the judgment, but never Leon Poliakov published this judgment.

Q. All right. And the next case, the next two cases, they arose out of this radio broadcast {2415|2416} that you told us about; is that right?

A. So Poliakov, then the other one, only the radio, the radio broadcast, and the third one, the most important, about Le Monde, my article in Le Monde, and my letter.

Q. All right. The radio broadcast you told us what the substance of that was. I understand that you were charged criminally with incitement —

A. Yes.

Q. — to racial hatred and violence.

A. The violence — I don't think violence.

Q. Incitement to racial hatred?

A. Incitement to racial hatred and defamation.

Q. And you were convicted of that?

A. Of defamation, not incitement.

Q. And for the defamation you received a sentence of — suspended sentence of three months in jail.

A. That's right.

Q. And a fine, 5,000 francs.

A. Yes.

Q. And the defamation that you were charged with is a defamation against Jews, was it not, against a group?

A. They said against a group, I think. I never used, in this case — very often I say "Jews"; I don't say "Zionists". But in this case I said Zionists and State of Israel. May I comment?

Q. I am going to ask you — I have a {2416|2417} translation here and I would like you to have a look at it and tell me if it's accurate or not, from that trial.

A. May I see?

Q. Please. It's not the transcript.

A. Oh, patterns of prejudice.

Q. It's a report.

A. Yes.

Q. You can tell me whether or not that's accurate.

A. I must read all this. I could read it loud?

Q. Just read it to yourself, first. If it isn't accurate, then the jury shouldn't hear it. The page that I showed you is the end of that report.

A. I suppose that's — I don't know very well this text, but I think it's true, but I would have to check any translation.

Q. All right. Do you have that judgment here with you?

A. No, not here. And I would have to check everything, because I have noticed many mistakes in translations of judgment.

Q. Well, if you dispute the accuracy of that ...

A. No, I cannot say that I dispute. I would be very interested to have the French text and to compare, but I think that — No, I don't want to argue. I think that it might be fidel. It wasn't the first instance that, I suppose, eh?

Q. I believe this was the first instance, and then there was an appeal from that, and {2417|2418} you appealed not successfully, though. You still got the suspended sentence for three months and the fine, but you didn't have to publish on T.V.

A. No, not on T.V. And other things were suppressed also. For instance, not one publication, which is very rare in France, because in France, if you have a judgment, if you are condemned, convicted, you must pay the publication of the judgment.

Q. All right.

A. And I think, I am not sure, that those people went into the Court against that, and that they lose. They lost.

Q. About the publication.

A. About this — about the judgment and appeal.

Q. Well, let's be clear, if I may, Dr. Faurisson. Nobody has ever overturned the Court's finding that you are guilty of incitement to racial hatred.

A. No. Defamation, not incitement. Incitement has been suppressed. This is, I think, the first instance, and in the appeal they suppressed incitement.

Q. And what do you say you were convicted of on appeal?

A. Defamation.

Q. Defamation of whom?

A. Of a group, I suppose.

Q. Yes. The group being Jews.

A. I suppose.

Q. Yes. The third lawsuit arose out {2418|2419} of some articles that you wrote in Le Monde.

A. Yes.

Q. And as I understand it, there is a civil suit, not a criminal suit but a civil suit that can be brought in France, and that that civil suit would go to historians' obligation to provide objective information. A historian who couldn't provide objective information could be sued if he wasn't affected by that.

A. No. It's not exactly that. No, I don't think so. If a historian is not serious in his work. Because it was for damage. I was sued for damage.

Q. I understand that is a civil lawsuit.

A. If somebody makes badly work for you, you pay him, he does his work badly, you can sue him. And then, for the first time, I suppose, they said, Faurisson did badly his work, He is a falsifier.

Q. A falsifier of history?

A. Of history. That's what they say, but it does not exist in the French law. You don't have falsification of a story. It does not exist.

Q. All right. You've used that word a number of times, and I want to make sure that I understand it. Falsification.

A. Falsification of history.

Q. And that is the act of falsifying history?

A. Yes. That is what they said.

Q. All right. And in that lawsuit where they were suing you for falsification of history, {2419|2420} they received a judgment from the Court.

A. Yes. But the Court didn't say that there was falsification. Not even the first.

Q. All right. Now, there was a trial court, and then the matter went to appeal.

A. Yes. But without the story of the text there.

Q. Do you have the English text there?

A. Yes.

Q. You have provided me with an appeal decision and this is a translation, I understand that you approve of.

A. Yes.

Q. The people that sued you have an acronym called "Licra".

A. Yes. It means League Against Racism and Anti-Semitism, but there were eight other associations.

Q. And on page 6 of the report you've given me they have the ground for the Court's decision. Were you required to publish this at your own expense, grounds for the Court's decision?

A. Oh, yes. And something interesting happened. They had to publish the publication of page 7 to 10 and I had to pay. Instead of doing that, they published a text completely twisted in a review called, "Historia", and we are suing them because of that. We are suing them because they distorted the publication. They didn't take page 7 to 10. They took pieces of the first judgment to suppress some words. I can't tell you the words suppressed. {2420|2421}

MR. CHRISTIE: . You asked him and you should let him give a full answer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not interrupting him in any way. I am quite happy that he answer. I am suggesting that he read the whole judgment and nothing will be suppressed. It will be an exhibit on this hearing.

MR. CHRISTIE: But you asked him if he was ordered to publish, and he indicated publication was made, and he suggested suppression of part of it, and I would like him to answer the question.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, the practice in this Court – I don't know what it is in British Columbia – is that if you have an objection you stand up and give it to the judge.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was trying to do that, Your Honour. What I said was, my friend asked about publication. The witness was in the course of giving the answer and my friend, with great care, tried to direct him to another question. I would like him to answer that.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is my objection overruled?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will do it this way.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like His Honour to rule.

THE COURT: The objection is overruled. There was no interruption, and the shoe is on the other foot, and you can proceed with your cross-examination. Hopefully you are not going to ask the witness to read the whole judgment. I have one here that goes for a number of pages.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will shorten it if I may, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: May I perhaps read one page, page 8?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Please.

A. And show what has been cut in?

Q. All right.

A. Page 8:

"It derives from these various publications and from the plea submitted to Court that Mr. Faurisson's researches have dealt with the existence of gas chambers which, if one were to believe the large number of testimonies, were supposedly used during World War II to systematically put to death some of the persons deported by the German authorities."

I think that they suppressed the words, "which, if one were to believe the large number of testimonies", something like that. I cannot guarantee, but something of this kind.

"Limiting ourselves for the time being to the historical problem that Mr. Faurisson wanted to raise with this precise point, it is proper to {2422|2423} state that the accusations of frivolity made against him are lacking in pertinence and are not sufficiently proven. Faurisson's logical approach is indeed to try to demonstrate, by using a line of argumentation of a scientific nature ..."

And then suddenly, in the margin, the words, "that he thinks is of scientific nature" were added, written, handwritten.

Q. Written by the Court?

A. Yes.

"... that the existence of the gas chambers such as they have usually been described since 1945 runs into an absolute impossibility which would be sufficient by itself to invalidate all of the existing testimonies, or at least to make them suspect."

So they suppressed after "runs into an absolute impossibility which would be sufficient by itself to invalidate all of the existing testimonies, or at least to make them suspect."

"It is not the job of the Court to speak up on the legitimacy of such a method or on the full significance of the arguments set forth by Mr. Faurisson, nor is it any more permissible for the Court, considering the research to which he has devoted himself, to state that Mr. {2423|2424} Faurisson has frivolously or negligently set the testimonies aside, or that he has deliberately chosen to ignore them. Furthermore, this being the case, nobody can convict him of lying when he enumerates the many documents that he claims to have studied and the organizations at which he supposedly did research for more than fourteen years."

And there's the conclusion of the Court which makes this judgment important:

"Therefore, the value of the conclusions defended by Mr. Faurisson rests solely with the appraisal of the experts, historians and the public."

So since this date, 26 of April, 1983, it is official in France that we have the right to deny the existence of the gas chamber and of the genocide.

Q. All right. Now —

A. And I can read, now, the bad part.

Q. Let me read the bad part. You tell me if it's true or not. The judgment goes on: —

A. You mean that I can interrupt you if there is something which is not exact?

THE COURT: Certainly you can tell him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly. I want the exact translation. The judgment goes on: {2424|2425}

"But when reading the full content of the paper submitted to Court one gains the impression that Mr. Faurisson takes abusively advantage of his critical work in order to try to justify under its cover, while largely exceeding his target, allegations of a more general nature which have no longer a scientific character and are nothing but polemics, that he has deliberately left the field of historical research and has taken a leap which is not authorized by anything that is contained in his previous writing, namely, when giving a summary of his line of thought in the forum of a slogan, he proclaims that, 'the alleged massacres in gas chambers and the alleged genocide are one and the same lie.'"

A. May I interrupt you there, please?

Q. Sir.

A. This phrase is not mine. This phrase was in a journal, "Le Methode de Paris", and the judge made the conclusion. I didn't express myself like that. It is a little bit vulgar. I don't say that. I say a historical lie.

THE COURT: You said it was what?

THE WITNESS: A historical lie, which is quite different. {2425|2426}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: "That in addition to denying the existence of the gas chambers, he avails himself of every opportunity to mitigate the criminal nature of the deportations. .... example by furnishing a personal but altogether unfounded explication of those 'special actions' mentioned on fifteen occasions and with horror in the diary of Dr. Kramer."

A. Once more you have to excuse me to criticize that. Not your reading, eh? But never Kramer expressed his horror on fifteen occasions, and nothing to do with gas chamber.

Q. Well, you say the Court found something different here?

A. Yes. The Court said fifteen because it was mentioned fifteen times, but twelve times without any error whatsoever.

Q. I see. But fifteen times it was mentioned, but only three with horror?

A. Yes. Because of the execution of the women.

Q. "He undoubtedly protests in his recent plea against the 'falsifications' of his line of thought imparting to him the opinion that 'there were no Jewish victims' of Nazi Germany. His wording does, however, induce the reader, in a more {2426|2427} or less insinuating fashion to believe that while 'gas chambers' and 'genocide' are one and the same thing, there were certainly 'Jewish victims' like that, the massacre of Jews is an exaggeration, nay, even a 'war rumour', for it appears that when reading Mr. Faurisson the deportees of Auschwitz died above all from typhoid and that, moreover, the term 'genocide' would be, strictly speaking, incorrect, if the figure six million Jewish victims is evidently an approximate figure, and that by the way, a written order by Hitler laying down the decision to 'exterminate the Jews' has never been found. Mr. Faurisson, who is shocked about what he refers to as the religion of the Holocaust, has never found a word to express his respect for the victims by reminding his readers of the reality of racial persecutions and mass deportations which caused the death of several millions of people, Jewish or not. So that, in spite of the partial character of his work, his 'revisionism' which he opposes against 'the cause of the exterminationists' could play a role in an attempt of {2427|2428} an overall rehabilitation of the Nazi war criminals."

A. Has never found a word to express his respect for the victims, etcetera, those words were exactly those ones in a video tape submitted to the Court. There was something like, perhaps, seven, eight lines above that. And I express also my feeling about the resistance and all that in the journal Le Monde.

Q. I guess the trial court and the Court of Appeal were not impressed by your expressions.

A. I don't know. I see that sometimes we read too quickly, everyone of us.

Q. Is that all, or shall I go on, or is there something else?

MR. CHRISTIE: Read it all. I object to this. Unless there is a question arising out of it, what is the point of reading the judgment?

THE COURT: There may be a point, there may not, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, usually we have questions that associate themselves with the substance of a reading.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: "The positions adopted by Mr. Faurisson are just as offensive for the survivors of persecutions and deportations as they are insulting for the victims, since the general public is induced to misappreciate the suffering, if not even cast doubt on it. They are, in {2428|2429} addition to this, of a nature as has been justly pointed out by the inferior Court as to provoke passionate reactions of regressivity against those who thereby find themselves implicitly accused of lie and of possible power

A. And my comment there would be once more, lie, historical lie.

Q. "Mr. Faurisson's offences has caused the detriment invoked by the associations which are defendants on appeal. The sentences promulgated with the previous judgment will ensure a rightful compensation for it."

And they, thereby, upheld the decision of the lower court. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And I suggest to you that what they say is that they falsify history, the sections that I just read.

A. No, not for one minute. Excuse me.

Q. All right. I suggest to you that you were accused of falsifying history in a book of memoirs written by Jean Pierre Blanc.

A. Oh, that is quite interesting, because I sued Pierre Blanc. And the conclusion now given by Pierre Blanc, we have a conclusion, written plea, and his lawyer said that I was not called a falsifier, that the word was not concerning my person, {2429|2430} but that somebody else.

Q. Do you know what's happened to this libel suit?

A. To this libel suit? I don't know exactly the result now.

Q. I am going to suggest to you the result came out two weeks ago on January 16th.

A. Saying that ...

Q. Saying that there was no libel, that Jean-Pierre Blanc

A. But there was injury, that's right.

Q. No libel.

A. No libel, but injury. If I sued him for injury, I would have won. Instead I sued him for libel. And the French judge said that he had no right, because in the first judgment it was like that, that he had no right to change the motif. So I come back to the story of falsification of the story.

Q. I think we had better have the judgment here, then.

A. The judgment, I think, says —

Q. No. I mean the judgment of two weeks ago.

A. I don't have this judgment.

Q. I will see what I can do. Do you have any studies or background in the field of toxicology?

A. No, not myself.

Q. Chemistry?

A. Chemist, crematorium, gas chamber themselves, certainly not. Not more than Mr. Hilberg {2430|2431} or any other historian.

Q. All right.

A. And I must say that something which is interesting is that about Holocaust, you have nearly no historians writing about Holocaust. Most of them are coming from elsewhere. Mr. Reitlinger is a specialist of art.

Q. Specialist of ...

A. Of art. Raul Hilberg is a social scientist. Mr. George Villers is a specialist in medicine. I notice that the historians are very prudent. And I can understand that.

Q. Well, now, just a minute. Yehuda Bauer, is he a historian?

A. I don't know.

Q. Leon Poliakov, is he a historian?

A. No. Leon Poliakov, he has no degree in history. He has a degree, I think, in philosophy.

Q. And Martin Gilbert, is he a historian?

A. I don't know.

Q. Lucy Dawidowitz, is she a historian?

A. She is something like a political scientist. No. If you will permit one more, I say, like Dr. Butz, that I wish that the historian by profession would have studied the question. I say that, really.

Q. Well, I just indicated to you quite a few historians, and —

MR. CHRISTIE: I hope the same rules {2431|2432} apply to my learned friend, and I rise to object as to who is a historian and who isn't, when he rises for evidence.

THE COURT: I agree. Have you concluded, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I haven't quite, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. Do you have any biases in this matter? Do you bring any biases to it?

A. Prejudices? Biases?

Q. Yes.

A. I hope not. I don't think that I have any biases, no. I am anti-racist.

Q. You are ...

A. Anti-racist.

Q. Anti-racist.

A. Yes. I think that's a pity.

Q. What's a pity?

A. Racism.

Q. I see. You don't think that — do you think it's racist to say, as you did on the radio, the alleged Hitler gas chambers and the alleged gas chambers of the Jews —

A. No. The alleged Hitler gas chamber and the alleged genocide of the Jews.

Q. Okay — are one and the same historical lie?

A. Yes.

Q. Of whom the principle beneficiaries are Israel and Zionists? {2432|2433}

A. The State of Israel and International Zionism, yes. I think that every country is founded on something which is not clean. The United States of America, France also, on massacres. Every country has something like that. Nations are founded like that.

Q. Do you belong to an organization called The Institute of Historical Review?

A. Yes. The Institute of Historical Review.

Q. Are you on the board of directors of that organization?

A. I am on the scientific council. I don't remember the English word.

Q. Okay. And that's in Southern California, I believe?

A. Yes. In Los Angeles.

Q. Is a man by the name of Richard Varrel [Verrall] also on the board?

A. No, I don't think so. I know this name. It's a British writer. He is the author of the booklet, no?

Q. If you don't know, you cannot say.

A. I know there is a Richard Varrel [sic], but it is a name for me.

Q. Okay. And has your research been funded at all by the Institute of Historical Review?

A. Funded? Paid, you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Thank you. I have no further {2433|2434} questions.

THE WITNESS: One word, please. This institute would have difficulty to pay me, because this Institute has been entirely devastated by an arson the 4th of July, 1983.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. My friend raised the statement of Rassinier's lawsuit that he says he lost.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any more information about that?

A. Yes. He lost his lawsuit as I lost my lawsuits, as many revisionists lost their law-suits, but it was presented at the time like a condemnation of the demonstration of Rassinier, and it was not the case. The Courts say, yes, it could be interpreted as if Rassinier, somebody who says that Rassinier is more or less on the side of the Nazis; yes, we could consider that because he says that the gas chambers did not exist. I am fighting myself against that since years and years. "Oh, you deny the gas chambers?" And first of all the people think that I deny the concentration camps, and I have trials and trials, lawsuits and lawsuits; but it's now my turn.

Q. The Poliakov judgment raised the issue of whether you had falsified or manipulated texts {2434|2435} or, rather, you accused him of it.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether the Court found that he had or not?

A. The Court said that he had not been fidel.

Q. What is "fidel" – "faithful, accurate"?

A. Accurate. He had not acted like a scientific in certain poems. For instance, finding the Gerstein document that 700 to 800 people were put together in twenty-five square meters. Leon Poliakov changed and put ninety-three, although the manuscript itself is quite clear when Gerstein said in forty-five cubic meters, Poliakov suppressed forty-five cubic meters, because with ninety-three square meters it gave him have a meter. He suppressed it one more. Forty-five cubic meters was suppressed, and at the time, in the text, you have a man with his auberge, his name and his village, but as we know, that this man was not in this place, Leon Poliakov said not visible, and many things like that.

Q. He changed the text to make it —

A. Oh, yes. And it is mechanic, you see.

Q. Did the court agree with your proposition that he had done so?

A. The Court said that on certain points he had done that, but he was animated by such a passion to make this statement known that he could be excused. And the interesting part is that the trial {2435|2436} was not at all about that.

Q. Have you won on judgments, too?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you allowed by the Court's ruling to publicize those?

A. Oh, I see. In 1978 it was written that I had been criticized for that in university, a complete invention, and many others. I sued these people. I won my case. I received one franc of damage, as we say, but the judge added that, this being the case, because of the particular day of the case, the judgment would not be published. So I was insulted, but I had no right to publish. I understand that it is kind of fight, or battle. I am not surprised by all that. Everybody who tries to go in this way must understand that it's a terrible life for himself, for his family, but I think that we must go our way all the same.

Q. My friend brought out the fact that you were not allowed to teach after the 14th of May, 1979. What happened that brought that about?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. I didn't bring that out. My friend indicated that he was no longer teaching.

MR. CHRISTIE: The question was raised by my friend. I have it in my notes.

THE COURT: Did you raise it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I asked him for how long he had been teaching, but I got it from in-chief that he was no longer teaching.

THE COURT: You can ask the question. {2436|2437}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What happened to bring that about that you are no longer teaching?

A. It all began on the 16th of November, 1978, when suddenly a French newspaper published something about me. So I had many troubles.

Q. Tell us just some of the troubles that prevented you from teaching.

A. My security couldn't be guaranteed. I was beaten up seriously one time.

Q. Where?

A. In the university.

Q. Where?

A. On the sidewalk. They run after me. They kick me. There were six. All that was done by Jewish association directed by Dr. Mark Aron. They came in the university. They published leaflets with their signature saying that I was a man of hatred and of lie; and I had many incidents of this sort.

Q. Did these things happen in your classes?

A. Sometime I had to, yes, to get away from my classes.

Q. Why?

A. Now – because, for instance, once a guard came and said, "They are coming, a lot of them. So we must try to get away." Because the guard of the university decided that they were there to protect the premises, but not the individuals. So it was difficult for me to have any security.

Q. Are you still a tenured professor at that university? {2437|2438}

A. Yes.

Q. And are you available and ready to teach?

A. Yes. Sure.

Q. Would you like to teach?

A. Yes.

Q. In these defamation actions that you have been discussing with my learned friend, if you had proven that it was the truth, was that an offence?

A. I don't think so, because you can defame somebody —

THE COURT: He doesn't know law, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it was brought up by my friend and he asked many questions about it.

THE COURT: I don't think you should pursue it. Unless this man is a lawyer, let's not get into what legal defences there are. If you want to go at it another way, you are perfectly entitled to do that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you ever lied in any of your publications?

A. Lied in my publications?

Q. Yes.

A. No. Never.

Q. Have you ever been convicted of lying?

A. No. Never. And never of falsification of history.

Q. Those are my questions. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: And I must add something, because fifteen days after the publication of {2438|2439} this judgment of the 26th of April, 1983, Mrs. Simone Veil, she is very well known, she is the President of the European Parliament, said that she was very perturbed by the result of this legal suit against me.

She said we had to prove in a newspaper —

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's all hearsay what Mrs. Veil said, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I have just one question, sir, if I may, perhaps two.

I am a little puzzled. Can you explain to me the difference between a historical lie and an ordinary lie?

THE WITNESS: Yes. An ordinary lie comes in a short time and touch few people. A historical lie can be for centuries and centuries. We can take an example.

If we say that Nero set fire to Rome, this is a fact which is not established at all. We have no right to say that; but the more we say that and the more this historical lie extend itself. And it doesn't mean that the people are liars. They think that it is the truth. I can give other examples.

THE COURT: No. That's fine. The second question I have is this:

Do you recall indicating, I think to Mr. Christie but I could be wrong, that you have spent some time, 1960 to 1974, researching gas chambers, and that you've done that to the present, but there was some time in between – do you recall, –is that —

THE WITNESS: Yes. It means that I was not working all the time on that. Certainly. {2439|2440}

THE COURT: And then you were asked if you had been supported in that research by Jewish people.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: And you mentioned the name of Cohn-Bendit ...

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: ... and Gabor Rittersporn, Pierre Guillaume, and Jacob Assous.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: In the Court of Appeal of Paris, the 5th of May, 1983, was Jacob Assous, Jean-Gabriel Cohn-Bendit, Gabor Rittersporn, were they involved —

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Were they charged with something?

THE WITNESS: No. They were voluntarily internists.

THE COURT: That is what I am looking at.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: What does that all mean?

THE WITNESS: It means that somebody can come on your side, considering that if you are condemned, it has a bad effect on them, on what they write, think, and all that.

THE COURT: I see. So they intervened on your side.

THE WITNESS: They intervened. And everything which was written about this judgment or the {2440|2441} previous one, specially in what we call the Bible of the jurist, the Bible has been published, and all things about those people who were on my side, all has been suppressed.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, any questions arising out of my questions? Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:32 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 3:50 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to have Your Honour qualify the witness as an expert because of his research, and specifically on the Holocaust, because it is my contention that the issue of the gas chambers is the central issue of the Holocaust, and I am prepared to contend, if you want to restrict him to give me his evidence about the gas chambers and the testimony surrounding it, but I say the Holocaust because I think it is the essence of the gas chamber issue, which is the question of the booklet. {2441|2442}

I have as background photocopies of Dr. Faurisson's doctorate. I have given you the information as to his education, which is all in his personal background.

He obtained the highest competitive result in the examination for teachers in France, as well as a doctorate in Human Sciences, and he was qualified and did teach in the areas of text and documents criticism and analysis, which he described, I think, fairly and clearly in his evidence to be the analysis of documents which can include historical documents, literary documents or other documents for their internal consistence and meaning.

He has given you a detailed description of the work he has done to research in the area of the gas chamber issue and why he has done it. His interest was intellectual and curiosity, and he has been, I suggest, involved with research in all aspects of this field which, apparently, is a recognized field as far as Dr. Hilberg is concerned, and it may be said that he takes a different view — than Dr. Hilberg. There is no doubt about that, that he takes a different view. But he is researching in the same field and did conduct {2442|2443} research in a different manner. His manner he described as being one in which he examined the physical evidence for the purposes of considering the consistency of that evidence with the various views of that evidence taken by alleged witnesses.

He analyzed the texts and documents of the IMT and the NMT for the purpose of analyzing the internal consistency of Gerstein, Hoess and other witnesses. He has written extensively on the subject and, as obviously is the case, has been the subject of much controversy. He has paid a high price for his views.

He is certainly not into this line of endeavour for his remuneration, it would appear, but out of intellectual curiosity and honesty which he demonstrated in numerous manners, albeit through numerous battles in France which appears to be a rather letigious [sic] country.

Now, it is my submission that this witness has done something which most of us have not done. He has researched into this area in depth. He has examined the allegations. He has read the literature. He has formed his own conclusions and he is prepared to give those opinions and defend those conclusions and {2443|2444} be cross-examined on them as he was endeavouring to be qualified.

Now, it's my submission that throughout history the subject of who is an expert and who is not has been flexible and fluid. In other words, there's been expanding categories of what is expert evidence and what is admissible as expert evidence, and it is my submission that not until very recently, at least in this case, has there been an expert in history, at least in giving opinions on allegations of fact based on hearsay.

Dr. Hilberg was so qualified. He, for his good fortune, has never had to be criticized anywhere in court, and is scrupulously above reproach in all his conduct in terms of where he's published. He published one book which, you know, is an extensive book, carefully researched and all sorts —

THE COURT: Are we talking about Dr. Hilberg or are we talking about this witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am just comparing the two.

THE COURT: But who published the the book? You said "he". {2444|2445}

MR. CHRISTIE: "He" meant Dr. Hilberg, of course. Now, that was a book based on no first-hand experience — the concentration camps, and the documents that he had read — and he said he analyzed in relation to other documents.

On the subject of who may be an expert, in referring to this matter in McWilliams, page 239, I was inclined to the view that we might defer with some benefit to Carter v. Boehm, Smith's Leading Cases, where it says:

"... it appears to be admitted that the opinion of witnesses possessing peculiar skill is admissible whenever the subject matter of the inquiry is such that inexperienced persons are unlikely to prove capable of forming a good judgment upon it without assistance, in other words when it so far partakes of the nature of a science as to require a course of previous habit or study."

Dr. Faurisson has undertaken a previous study which he is prepared to explain and defend, and it is a detailed study. He has expended massive amounts of time and his own money, of course, as {2445|2446} he indicated, to get to the bottom of this question.

It is for the jury, I say, to decide whether they wish to believe him on any point or any other witness, or they may disregard any or all of any other witness as the time may come; but the thing I am trying to do now is to obtain the permission that Your Honour can give that he give his opinion.

I think with respect to this case I might even argue that even if he wasn't an expert, he could demonstrate how he got his opinion, and that he give his opinion, however unqualified it may be, because the accused has relied upon his opinion which was published in his book, which are freely, legally available in the nation of France, and so far, available here in Canada, albeit in French, which the accused reads.

So I am saying that this witness should be qualified to give his opinion as he has demonstrated already and has published books, and the jury can decide whatever weight they wish to give to it.

In Rice v. Sockett, referred to in McWilliams, (1912) 8 D.L.R. 84, Divisional Court judgment, Falconbridge Chief Justice of King's Bench as it then {2446|2447} was said, and cited with approval, that an expert is one "who by experience has acquired special or peculiar knowledge of the subject of which he undertakes to testify, and it does not matter whether such knowledge has been acquired by study of scientific works or by practical observation."

I think, with respect, the witness has shown that he has undertaken both the study of scientific works in respect to Zyklon and other works on the subject, and by practical observation.

In R. v Silverlock, regarded as a judgment of the House of Lords [1894] 2 Q.B. 766, Lord Russell of Killowen said:

"The question is, is he peritus? Is he skilled? Has he an adequate knowledge? Looking at the matter practically, if a witness is not skilled the judge would tell the jury to disregard his evidence. There is no decision which requires that the evidence of a man who is skilled in comparative handwriting, and who has formed {2447|2448} a reliable opinion from past experience, should be excluded because his experience has not been gained in the way of his business."

Now, I suppose the criticism may well be made that Dr. Faurisson is not a historian, not a trained historian. Well, that same criticism could be applied to Dr. Hilberg who was, in my understanding, an expert in political science and public international law. They are unrelated, and yet they are slightly related to the International Military Tribunal transcript. However unrelated they may be, however, to the subject of history and the Holocaust, [sic] but he does teach and study on the Holocaust. I don't know if that is a separate subject or maybe it is now. I don't know.

The point being that, apparently, nobody so far who has a reputable historical background has ventured in this field except to agree with Dr. Hilberg. So this is a first time opinion; not really first time in history. But has anyone attempted to be qualified who does not agree holus bolus with what those who say six million did die have said?

The evidence of the witness is that {2448|2449} his is not the first opinion to this effect, however, that is published fairly widely throughout the world, that Rassinier, an inmate of concentration camps as a resistance fighter, was also to the same effect, and became the basis upon which Dr. Faurisson ultimately agreed.

It's my understanding that qualification by the Court to enable the witness to give his opinion doesn't have to establish the credibility of that opinion any more than to say that he possesses a peculiar skill derive, from either experience or training, and that his evidence is designed to help the jury to consider the facts from the benefit of his experience and his training, which is peculiar to the field.

The grounds for admission have been broadly stated by Ainsworth, J., in Fisher v. The Queen, (1961) 130 C.C.C. 1 at page 19, a Court of Appeal decision, which was approved by the Supreme Court of Canada at page 24. Then I quote from McWilliams where it says:

"It is trite to say that a witness may not give his opinion upon matters {2449|2450} calling for special skill or knowledge unless he is an expert in such matters nor will an expert witness be allowed to give his opinion upon matters not within his particular field. Finally, opinion evidence may not be given upon a subject-matter within what may be described as the common stock of knowledge. Subject to these rules, the basic reasoning which runs through the authorities here and in England, seems to be that expert opinion evidence will be admitted where it will be helpful to the jury in their deliberations, and it will be excluded only where the jury can as easily draw the necessary inferences without it. Where the latter is the situation, the intended opinion evidence is superfluous and its admission would only involve an unnecessary addition {2450|2450a} to the testimony placed before the jury."

Over sixty years ago Thayer, in his Preliminary Treatise on Evidence at Common Law wrote:

"There is ground for saying that, in the main, any rule excluding opinion evidence is limited to cases where, in the judgment of the Court, it will not be helpful to the jury. Whether accepted in terms or not, this view largely governs the administration of the rule."

My submission pertaining to Dr. Faurisson is that whatever the jury may decide in respect to his evidence, he has certainly conducted more inquiries than an average layman. He has a peculiar skill and knowledge acquired over many years of diligent and conscientious [sic] research. He has been indeed maybe one of the few of us among – few among the school of experts to have had a court decide that he was serious in his work as a result of litigation.

It is certainly true to say that he has been in controversy for many years now since he published the results of his findings, but that, in itself, does not mean that those findings are credible or incredible, nor does it mean that he is not an expert in the field.

I suggest that it may very well be fair to say that he demonstrates by having been in so many court controversies, a higher degree of understanding {2451|2452} in the field of the necessity of precision than many who have not had the difficulties that he has had.

Generally, it is my submission that opinion evidence excludes hearsay, but of course, it has been already ruled in this case that Dr. Hilberg can base his opinions on hearsay.

The necessity of a witness doing so, of course, rests upon the fact that much of the evidence of an expert must be inevitably derived from secondary sources, and no one suggested that Dr. Hilberg could not do so. No one should suggest that Dr. Faurisson ought not to have done so.

Now, it's my submission that Dr. Faurisson's evidence is essential to the theory of the defence, and it would be my submission unfair to deny the accused the opportunity to call opinion evidence which has been published widely, upon which he could and did rely, otherwise the jury cannot know the basis of the opinion of the accused, and this in a case where the opinion of the accused is supposedly false, and knowingly false, is all the more relevant to how he derives his opinion.

He derived it to a large extent from {2452|2453} the information he received from Dr. Faurisson, and if he is qualified, then Dr. Faurisson can give that opinion evidence as an expert, and the jury can decide between the many experts, if there are more than one, whichever they wish to believe; otherwise it would be seeming rather biased that the opinion of one side of the case can be given blanket condemnations of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" being expressed by Dr. Hilberg. And because of the fact that the point of view expressed by the book is so unpopular or so controversial that no one can be called to refute that of the establishment, shall we say, experts, it becomes almost a vicious circle.

If you write a controversial point of view or if you hold an opinion that is counter to the large number of people, you become subject to the type of thing that Dr. Faurisson has been through, and when you do, then your right to testify as to your opinion can become suspect, if that is the way the procedure operates it would seem to be rather a vicious circle and rather unfair.

THE COURT: That last submission is not being of any assistance to me. This is a speech to the jury. Let's get down to the point here. {2453|2454}

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I've got down —

THE COURT: What specific subjects do you specifically propose to put to this witness if he is qualified as an expert, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I already indicated that I was hopeful that Your Honour would qualify him in the areas of his research, those areas being his special studies and information he had undertaken to understand the process of the gas chamber.

THE COURT: Yes. I have that. Is there anything else?

MR. CHRISTIE: The process by which it operates, the effects in which the gas chamber demonstrates, for example, the effects of the use of the gas chamber, how it operates, the relationship of the evidence that supports the gas chamber to that derived from a study —

THE COURT: I missed that. Could you do that one again?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The evidence that supports the existence of the gas chamber coming from Hoess and Gerstein in the transcripts of the {2454|2455} International Military Tribunal, and the conflicts that exist between the various stories about the gas chamber published by eye witnesses, such as Dr. Vrba, such as Primo Levy and others that have been writing upon the subject. Not all of the works that Dr. Faurisson has studied have been mentioned in his evidence, but he can give more evidence on that if he is qualified to do so.

I think I have made myself clear that I am endeavouring to qualify Dr. Faurisson to give evidence on the gas chamber, what it is, where it is, how it operates, and upon the sources of evidentiary basis for the belief in the gas chamber such as Gerstein, Hoess, Vrba, the War Refugee Board Report. These are areas that he has studied in. These are areas that he has acquired special skill and knowledge in, and I would like him to express opinions on this subject.

I realize that Your Honour would want me to specify exactly what areas. I would like to leave this final comment with Your Honour, that the evidence of Dr. Hilberg was generally sort of upon the Holocaust. Now, that term seems rather elastic to me. I was not in {2455|2456} any way disinclined to permit him to testify to the extent of his special skill and knowledge, and I didn't object to the use of the word "Holocaust", but I don't know quite how to be more precise in defining the area than that. I suppose it's what's classically been called the Holocaust, because the issue of gas chambers is the very core of the Holocaust, and at least, that's the opinion of Dr. Faurisson.

Now, Dr. Hilberg may say otherwise, or my friend may say otherwise, but I'd like my client to be able to tell us what he understands the Holocaust to mean, and to discuss it in relation to what he has found.

THE COURT: What is the specific basis upon which, in your submission, this witness can testify regarding the chemical properties of Zyklon-B?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he's conducted research into the field, Your Honour. He indicated that he had gone to and examined the process of the American gas chamber system, how it operates, what the results of it are.

You see, I didn't go into the whole {2456|2457} area of what his evidence is because I didn't think it was proper in the realm of qualifying him.

THE COURT: No, it isn't.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I can tell you that he has photographs of the operation of the American gas chamber to demonstrate how dangerous the substance is, and how certain measures have to be taken that, obviously, would have to be taken in a gas chamber for many people when one person is gassed, demonstrating thereby the impossibility of some of the things that are said about gas chambers in the literature, and the gas chamber alleged in Krema I, for instance, which he has photographs of all these things, and he would be able to testify about that as a basis for his opinions.

Those are my submissions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

With respect, Your Honour, I would ask that Dr. Faurisson not be qualified as an expert, and particularly in the field that my friend asked him to be qualified, if I have it right, in the use and {2457|2458} operation of gas chambers.

He has no training, no special skills as a toxicologist, the study of how toxic chemicals work on the body, or as a chemist. No indication, from what I understand, from the qualifications, that what was being used in the penitentiary at Maryland was Zyklon-B. In fact, contrary, I understand it was not Zyklon-B.

He is, and this is a good French word that I am sure Dr. Faurisson would appreciate – he is an amateur, somebody who has looked into a matter, and certainly Dr. Faurisson has, but he is not skilled to give expert evidence in that field because of, I would submit, his lack of any formal training in body chemistry that he wishes to tell the jury about. He is not an archeologist, and yet we are going to hear something about what he determined from ruins. And I would suggest that he is not skilled to give that evidence.

In fact, from what I understand, Dr. Faurisson says some of what he observed at Auschwitz were things that were rebuilt and not the original matters that Dr. Vrba, for example, or Mr. Urstein, saw. {2458|2459}

I haven't heard that he is qualified to examine blueprints or diagrams of buildings, and yet that is part of what he will be purporting to do. I understand that, from what my friend has said and Dr. Faurisson said, that he has examined the documents from the International Military Tribunal and the American Military Tribunal, and we certainly heard from Dr. Hilberg that there were a great deal more documentation that was available from those two proceedings – I forget how many linear feet in Alexandria, but certainly an enormous amount of documentation.

I would suggest that there is a bias – I say this with respect – to Dr.

Faurisson's research.

THE COURT: Does that go to weight or does it go to admissibility?

MR. GRIFFITHS: His methodology, I would suggest, goes to admissibility and then to weight, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Why?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have a case for Your Honour which I believe speaks to that. It's from the Manitoba Court of Appeal, and it's R. v. De Tonnancourt, cited at page 337 of the Western Weekly Reports, Volume 18, {2459|2460} and I pass that up. I have given my friend a copy already. That is a decision, Your Honour, I believe, of Mr. Justice Freedman and it deals in part with expert evidence. It was a murder case where two psychiatrists gave evidence during the course of the proceedings as to the insanity of the accused, and that defence was rejected by the jury. At the bottom of page 341 it is indicated as a ground of appeal that – it is about the second last sentence:

"This Court is asked to hold that the jury was perverse in rejecting the defence of insanity. After a study of the evidence I hold that not only was there evidence on which the jury could reject this defence, but that its verdict was correct."

And over, the top of page 342 – I am not going to read it all, Your Honour – there is a quotation from Phipson's Law of Evidence which I would commend to you, and then a quotation from Taylor on Evidence which I would also commend to you, and the conclusion at the last paragraph on that page, the first sentence – and I would suggest the principle I am {2460|2461} speaking to is that the evidence of an expert witness, to be useful, should be moderate, fair and strictly professional. I am suggesting that if the evidence isn't useful, then it should not be heard.

THE COURT: Yes

MR. GRIFFITHS: In the past, Your Honour, Dr. Faurisson has never given expert evidence in this field before.

THE COURT: Should that necessarily restrict him?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, that does not, Your Honour. It does not, but in the past, Your Honour, his work has been criticized by other courts.

THE COURT: That may be so because it was unpopular, as Mr. Christie says, or perceived to be unpopular in some quarters is a better way of putting it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: With respect, while that may be a ground for criticism, it was not a ground that I see in this case translated before you, and where the report indicates that – and I am reading from page 8 of the judgment, the last paragraph:

"One gains the impression that Mr. {2461|2462} Faurisson takes abusively advantage of his critical work in order to try to justify under its cover, while largely exceeding his target, allegations of a more general nature which have no longer a scientific character and are nothing but polemics."

And I would suggest that that is an indication that, as Mr. Justice Friedman would indicate, the expert to be useful should be moderate, fair, and strictly professional. And another Court on another occasion found that Dr. Faurisson was not.

There is, certainly from his own testimony, Dr. Faurisson has indicated that the core, the centre of his research has been around gas chambers, and I would suggest that that really is the weakest area of where he's qualified. He may well be qualified to speak to documents of the International Military Tribunal and the American Military Tribunal that he has read and studied, but not those other matters dealing with gas chambers in which field he has no expertise or special skill.

Those would be my submissions, Your {2462|2463} Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Just briefly, I don't understand the Tonnecourt case to say that the doctors whose evidence the jury disregarded ought not to have been able to testify. I think the Court of Appeal merely said that they took the view that the jury had properly disregarded the evidence of the experts, because the Court of Appeal felt that the experts' testimony was not of great weight and therefore could be disregarded. I don't think the Court of Appeal went so far as to say, from my reading of the case, that they ought not to have been allowed to testify.

If the jury wants to, after hearing Dr. Faurisson's opinion, to consider him of a biased nature or a liar or a falsifier, then they may do so as they may with any witness, indeed with any expert as well, which being charged as triers of fact they may do.

I would suggest that certainly Dr. Faurisson has been very candid in discussing – that is for the jury to decide, anyway, but my friend's remarks respecting Court proceedings in France I am sure are no better qualified than mine, which are really not {2463|2464} qualified, to say precisely how the Court in France functions or what their conclusions really mean. I have not sought to bring evidence on that point of a professional or legal nature and I don't think that my friend or I should really speculate.

The jury can decide on the basis of having heard whatever has been said about him to what extent they wish to rely on his evidence, and if the Tonnecourt case had said more as to not being qualified as experts, then I will have nothing to say.

Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I see it's four thirty. I've got some homework for myself tonight on what I have heard and what you have heard. I will be working on it. You may very well find better ways to pass the time than I will, but that is because we do different jobs and perform different functions.

Nine thirty tomorrow morning.

— The jury retires. 4:30 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 5, 1985.

RULING

LOCKE, D.C.J.:

Counsel for the accused has moved the Court to qualify the evidence of Robert Faurisson as expert evidence when he testifies. If the order is made, the witness can then give his opinion with respect to the particular field of expertise in which he is held to be qualified.

The indictment alleges that the accused, Ernst Zundel, published a false statement wilfully knowing its contents to be false when he published it, and intending mischief to the public in the field of racial harmony in the community at large. The Statement is Exhibit 1. It is entitled "Did Six Million Really Die?" The "six million" refers to Jews said to have perished at the hands of Nazi Germany during World War II.

Counsel for the accused wishes to lead from this witness evidence essentially bearing on what I have been informed by defence counsel as being the heart of the defence, namely, whether or not gas chambers were employed during the Second World War, and even before, to exterminate Jews. More specifically, defence counsel proposes to lead from this witness an opinion that gas chambers were not employed by Nazi Germany to kill the Jews or anyone else in World War II. Further, defence counsel proposes to lead from the witness evidence to the {2466|2467} effect that Zyklon-B gas, by its chemical composition, cannot be used to kill people; rather, its use is confined to fumigating clothing and the killing of vermin in buildings.

It was also proposed to lead from the witness, as I understand from the submission, evidence concerning the construction, engineering and operation of gas chambers generally speaking, and whether any were constructed or used by Nazi Germany between 1933 and 1945 in Europe.

Quite apart from the subject of gas and gas chambers, Mr. Christie seeks to qualify the witness as an expert able to give opinion evidence on the information and thinking contained in literature. Various pieces of literature and various authors were named during the course of the application for this order. Literature was read by Dr. Faurisson concerning allegations that the Nazis in World War II carried on a program of intentional annihilation of Jews in Europe. In that regard, it is sought that this witness be permitted to give his evidence on the trials, testimony and the judgments in the American Nuremberg trials of certain prominent Nazi officials held during the years subsequent to 1945.

In 1972, Dr. Faurisson appears to have been certified with a doctorate in literature and life sciences by the University of Paris, Sorbonne. He swore that he commenced his career in its early stages by teaching Greek, {2467|2468} and French. He then progressed to study French literature as a whole. He abandoned that field of endeavour in 1973 to commence the study of a subject that he called "Text and Document Criticism". [sic] He said that in France, people express feelings and opinions about history text books and novels. As a result, the examination of the true meaning of every word contained within the confines of these texts and other pieces of literature become very important in order to decide and discuss the true meaning and import of these texts and pieces of literature.

His interest in the matter of gas chambers began in 1960. That subject appears to equate Dr. Faurisson with a term that he used, "holocaust". This subject led him to read text in literary works by such persons as Paul Sange, Gerald Reitlinger, Raul Hilberg and others, each espousing one side and opposing that side. The witness became interested in a thesis of Rassinier, who was, it is said, himself held in one of these camps as a detainee. The witness, when he testified in connection with this application, expressed interest in Rassinier's thesis, or one thesis, upon which he wrote, namely, that people who experience suffering invent mere suffering when they later recount their experience.

Dr. Faurisson has read books taking, of course, the opposite position to that of Rassinier. He has studied {2468|2469} the judgments of some American Nuremberg trials, as well as having perused what has been referred to as the Green volumes of the International Archives Tribunal. He has published only some work in writing. He stated that he has had difficulty finding a publisher. He has never been qualified as an expert in any court of law before. He has visited the Auschwitz camp for one day in 1975, and for ten days in 1976 he has visited Maidanek and Dachau. He searched for an original gas chamber. His object was to see if genocidal gas chambers existed. He has made several inquiries by mail to the United States of America concerning American gas chambers and their use. He visited one such chamber in person in the United States in comparatively recent years. He wondered how Zyklon-B could kill anyone, and has read about its uses. He has not taught or engaged in the teaching of students for some years. He gave security problems as one reason for that, personal security problems to him.

He has written a book concerning the subject of gas chambers. He has another in progress on the subject of mass gassing. He has read Dr. Vrba's book titled "I Cannot Forgive". He has read books and documents on Hoess, one-time commander of a concentration camp, Auschwitz, I believe. He, when questioned, has admitted his conviction by a French court and the sentence meted out {2469|2470} concerning statements he made on, generally speaking, the same subjects as those with which this trial deals.

McCormack on Evidence, 2nd edition, page 29, has in part the following to say on the subject of expert testimony, and I quote:

"An observer is qualified to testify because he has firsthand knowledge of the situation or transaction at issue. The expert has something different to contribute. This is a power to draw inferences from the facts which a jury would not be competent to draw. To warrant the use of expert testimony, then, two elements are required. First, the subject of the inference must be so distinctly related to some science, profession, business or occupation to be beyond the ken of the average layman. Some courts emphasize that the judge has discretion in administering this aspect of the rule, and other courts will admit expert opinion concerning matters about which the jurors may have general knowledge if the expert opinion would still aid their understanding of the fact issue. Second, the witness must have sufficient {2470|2471} skill, knowledge or experience in that field or calling as to make it appear that his opinion or inference will probably aid the trier in his search for truth. The knowledge may in some fields be derived from reading alone, in some from practice alone, or as is more commonly the case, from both. While the court may rule that a certain subject of, inquiry requires that a member of a given profession, as a doctor, an engineer or a chemist, be called, usually a specialist in a particular branch within the profession will not be required."

That this witness has not been qualified as an expert does not of itself disqualify his being accepted as an expert in this trial. Because Dr. Hilberg testified as an expert when the Crown's case was in progress concerning Exhibit 1, does not automatically qualify Dr. Faurisson as an expert witness also entitled to testify in the capacity of an expert called by the defence.

The fact that Dr. Faurisson has been convicted by a court in France of having said "The alleged massacres in gas chambers and the alleged genocide are one and the same lie" is but one factor that I have and must consider in exercising my judicial discretion. {2471|2472} It is no more than that. That he apparently has not been successful in a recent lawsuit brought against someone in France on a subject similar to the one with which this Court deals, is a matter of weight for the jury to consider and not a question of admissibility [sic] for me to consider.

It seems to me that either the evidence discloses that this witness is possessed of a certain field of knowledge and expertise beyond the ability of the ordinary witness, or it does not. If it appears that he does so possess that expertise, and provided it is relevant to an issue that the jury must ultimately decide, then the witness should be qualified as an expert witness. The jury will decide what weight, as I say, if any, to give to the evidence of any witness who testifies through the whole of the trial.

Before a witness is qualified as an expert, he or she must bring to the Court a properly recognizable, acquired special knowledge. That knowledge must have been acquired through the academic route or the practical route, or both. It must be acquired through actual experience in either or both fields. Mechanics who read books about car repairs are not licenced unless they have worked on cars. Doctors who have read about medicine are not licenced to practice on members of the public their chosen profession {2472|2473} unless they have actually worked with the human body. Teachers who read and receive doctorates in the humanities become expert in the field of literature and human relations, but by so doing they not often become expert in the chemical proclivities of Zyklon-B or the details of the construction of gas chambers. Architects are not qualified to build buildings until they have had practical experience in that field of endeavour. If that were not so, then anyone wishing to become an expert could merely read up on any given subject, digest the ideas of others, and then hold himself or herself out as an expert in that particular subject. That is not the object of our law.

There is no evidence that I heard that Dr. Faurisson has received training or expertise in the chemical composition of gas in general or Zyklon-B in particular. He knows only what someone else said about it. He has received no training as an architect or engineer. It follows that, lacking expertise in those fields, he will not be permitted to give his opinion on gas chamber construction or operation or on the subject of the proclivities and capabilities of Zyklon-B gas or its effect on people.

Others may be called with that expertise. The background of this witness, by way of life and education, {2473|2474} is unscientific in these subjects. His inspection of a gas chamber in the United States after 1945 is irrelevant to the issue the jury must try here. Dr. Faurisson's whole orientation is in the field of literary history. Although not a historian, he has gathered a certain field of expertise on a certain subject. He has studied documents, judgments and the ideas of authors from the subject of whether the Nazi German government in 1933 to 1945 deliberately embarked on a scheme to annihilate Jews in Europe. That is a subject that is contained within the confines of Exhibit #1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" The use or the non-use of gas chambers, as well as other methods of killing human beings, as is alleged, is contained in that exhibit. These matters have been the subject of comment by an expert, Dr. Hilberg, who was permitted to testify in that regard as an expert witness of the Crown. He gave his opinions in that regard and the jury in due course will weigh and assess those opinions along with all of the other evidence that has been given and will be given at this trial.

Dr. Faurisson is, by background and education, in my view, a person who should be permitted to testify {2474|2475} as an expert witness and to give his opinion on the same subject, and with the same latitude [sic] as was permitted the Crown expert. His opinion will be based on the knowledge that he has acquired from the sources that he has studied. His bias, if one exists, is an issue of weight that the jury will assess in due course. He will, therefore, be permitted to testify along the same lines as Dr. Hilberg, but subject to my ruling with regard to what I have already ruled as subjects upon which he will not be permitted to testify.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

May I just ask one point in clarification? In the course of Dr. Faurisson's evidence – I undertake that I will be calling a chemist, but there are some photographs of American gas chambers that I would like to introduce that Dr. Faurisson has taken, not to prove anything other than they are the photographs for the purpose of evidence.

THE COURT: I have no intention of permitting that. I have already said that the photographs he has taken, if they are of American gas chambers, are irrelevant.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, as I said, I was going to call a chemist to – an expert in chemistry to explain the relevance, Your Honour.

THE COURT: No one said you couldn't do that. In fact, I indicated that you could.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. But can I not prove the photographs at this point, just to be photographs, and prove their relevance later?

THE COURT: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

I'd like to call Dr. Faurisson.

THE COURT: Just to be technically and procedurally proper, I think we should swear him again on the trial.

THE REGISTRAR: Yes, Your Honour.

You wish to affirm?

State your name, please.

THE WITNESS: Faurisson, F-a-u-r-i-s-s-o-n, Robert.

ROBERT FAURISSON, affirmed.

{2476|2477}

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. If you could turn to page 24 of the Harwood booklet, I'd like to direct your attention to a sentence.

THE COURT: That is Exhibit I?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. Under the heading "Casualty Figures Reduced", it says – this is dealing with the figures of Dachau casualties, it says:

"The figures of Dachau casualties are typical of the kind of exaggerations that have since had to be drastically revised. In 1946, a memorial plaque was unveiled at Dachau by Philip Auerbach, the Jewish State-Secretary in the Bavarian government, who was convicted for embezzling money which he claimed as compensation for nonexistent Jews. The plaque read:

'This area is being retained as a shrine to the 238,000 individuals who were cremated here.'"

In relation to that sentence, do you have a photograph of that plaque?

- A. Yes.
- Q. Where did that photograph come from?
- A. This photograph comes from a book called – I translate it in English.
- Q. Is it in French?
- A. German book.
- Q. It's a German book?
- A. "The Tragedy of the Jews" from Eric Kern, {2477|2478} K-e-r-n, 1979, page 225.
- Q. And is that plaque depicted there which says "This area is being retained as a shrine to 238,000 individuals who were cremated here"?
- A. The text says exactly, "This area is being retained as a shrine to the 238,000 individuals who were cremated here. Please don't destroy."
- Q. Yes. Is there a caption that describes where that is located?
- A. Yes. It says that it is in Dachau.
- Q. You've identified the book and the author and the year of publication; is that correct?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. And the page number?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. All right. It goes on to say:
- "Since then, the official casualty figures have been steadily revised downwards, and now stand at only 20,600."*
- Do you have any documentary evidence on the issue of the casualties in Dachau from 1933 to '45?
- A. Five, yes.
- Q. Where does it come from, please? Identify the source.
- A. First, – a book – a booklet published by Monsignor Johan Neuhaeusler, N-e-u-h-a-e-u-s-l-e-r, Bishop of Munich.
- Q. Bishop of Munich, yes.
- A. Fourth edition, 1960, page 4, he says that —
- Q. Is this in German, French or —
- A. The title – it's in French, but we have {2478|2479} it in English and German.
- Q. Yes.
- A. I bought it in Dachau itself.
- Q. You bought it in Dachau itself?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Yes.
- A. The title means, "How Was It In Dachau?"
- Q. Yes.
- A. Interrogation mark.
- Q. Yes.
- A. On page 4 it says that – about the number of people who died in Dachau, the answers to this question is variable, very variable. For example, we have the estimation of Dr. Zeuner, Z-e-u-n-e-r, Mayor of Dachau, 20,600, and this time it is not 238,000, that's much more precise, 238,756. I repeat, please. Two-three-eight-seven-five-six. This by Pastor Neimoeller, N-e-i-m-o-e-l-l-e-r [Niemöller], and also in a journal called "Sunday Express", 10 January 1960: I have not checked that.
- Q. All right. Now, on page 25 of the Harwood booklet there is a photograph which says "Healthy and cheerful inmates released from Dachau" ...
- A. Yes, I see.
- Q. Have you seen that photograph in any other publication?
- A. Yes.
- Q. In what publication?
- A. Precisely in the book.
- Q. Show us the book. Hold it up so the jury can see it. What is the name of the book, please?
- A. I translate it in – it's in French, but we have it in English and German. {2479|2480}
- Q. Yes.
- A. "Dachau concentration camp, 1933 – 1945". It has been published in 1979 by the International Committee of Dachau in Brussels.
- Q. Yes. On what page is the photograph that's located in the Harwood booklet?
- A. It is on page 205. May I show it?
- Q. Yes. I'd like to – show it to His Honour, please, if you may.
- THE COURT: What language is it in?
- THE WITNESS: It's in French.
- THE COURT: This is an English trial. What do you want to show?
- MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to show the photograph.
- Q. What is the photograph described as in the booklet published by the source you've indicated?
- A. Yes, it is the same photograph, apparently, yes.
- Q. Where does that photograph originate, or is it described as originating in the book?
- A. They gave something like 400 photographs —
- THE COURT: Do you want to show the photograph?
- THE WITNESS: Yes.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.
- THE COURT: For what it's worth, you may show the photograph.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Does it describe where this photograph was taken and when in the book?
- A. It implies that it is in Dachau.
- THE COURT: No, no, no. You weren't asked that.
- THE WITNESS: Excuse me?
- THE COURT: As the question again. {2480|2481}
- THE WITNESS: Oh, yes, excuse me.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Where does it say the photograph was taken?
- A. Oh, Dachau, liberation of the concentration camp, Dachau.
- Q. All right. I'd like to —
- A. And Dachau Allach.
- Q. Dachau what?
- A. Dachau, and Dachau is sometime called "Allach", A-l-l-a-c-h. All this part is Dachau.
- THE COURT: Yes, you can go ahead and show that, Mr. Christie.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. I wonder if the jury could have their exhibits, please, Your Honour
- THE COURT: Yes.
- MR. CHRISTIE: I'll show this photograph. I didn't want to exhibit this, Your Honour, because it's rather rare. I have a photocopy of it. If the witness can identify it as being checked with the original, would that be —
- THE COURT: Have you seen it, Mr. Griffiths?
- MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I haven't.
- MR. CHRISTIE: If I show it to my friend and he can check it and see that it is a photocopy of the original ...
- Q. You've identified the place, the date of publication and the author, is that right?
- THE COURT: I missed the date. What is it?
- THE WITNESS: 1979.
- THE COURT: That is when the photograph was published?
- MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. {2481|2482}
- THE COURT: What is the date that the photograph was taken? The photo shows the liberation of the camp?
- THE WITNESS: Yes.
- THE COURT: Does it say the date?
- THE WITNESS: Not the precise date, but think it's the 29th of April, 1945.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. What I would like to do, Your Honour, is file the photocopy, which my friend acknowledges is a photocopy of the picture number 421, which the witness has identified, as the next exhibit. And then I'd just like to show the jury the one in the book.
- THE COURT: Do you agree with that, Mr. Griffiths?
- MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, yes, Your Honour. Thank you.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Do you agree, witness, that it shows only half the picture in the Harwood book?
- A. That's right.
- Q. All right. It's cut off in half at the guard tower; is that right?
- A. Yes.
- THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 33.
- THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT 33: Photocopy of two photographs taken at Dachau Concentration Camp

MR. CHRISTIE: If anyone wants to handle this and look at it, is it okay if I give it to them, Your Honour, so they could look closely at it?

THE COURT: I think they can all see it by you holding it, Mr. Christie. Did you say 33, Madam Clerk?

THE REGISTRAR: Yes, Your Honour. {2482|2483}

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Is it correct, witness, that what is in the Harwood booklet is the left-hand half of the picture?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Anyway, the photocopy's an exhibit, Your Honour, so ...

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. You can keep your book. Now, did you examine the documents of the trials pertaining to Dachau in order to determine the casualty figures and the months of casualty?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you prepared a graph from those casualty figures?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you substantiate those casualty figures from documents in trials?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you produce those documents?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: May the witness do so, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. I don't object to it at the moment. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Is this the folder it is? I'm specifically drawing your attention, witness, to the part of the Harwood booklet where it says that several thousand – page 24, under "Human Conditions", "That several thousand camp inmates did die in the chaotic final months of the war brings us to the question of their wartime conditions."

THE COURT: Just a moment. I don't think {2483|2484} anybody can see the witness right at the moment. He's busy.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

THE WITNESS: Excuse me. I cannot find the document.

MR. CHRISTIE: If it's not there, perhaps you can tell me where to look, doctor.

THE WITNESS: The Dachau casualties have – may I go perhaps to my —

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. There it is, all right. Anything else? Yeah, you'd better take that with you. Thank you.

A. Excuse me.

Q. It's all right. Now, Dr. Faurisson, did you examine the documents to determine if, in the Nuremberg International Military Tribunal there were casualty figures for Dachau presented month by month?

A. Yes, from the National —

Q. What's the exhibit, from the National Archives?

A. From the National Archives, Washington, I have exhibit, Praisler, P-r-a-i-s-l-e-r,

Q. Number?

A. Prosecution exhibit number 35.

Q. What does it say?

A. The reference – must I give the total reference? It gives the figures for – of the death – died in camp Dachau in 1940, '41, '42, '43, '44, and beginning of '45, because Dachau has been liberated the 29th of April, 1945.

Q. Is there any source for the month-by-month figures? {2484|2485}

A. Yes, month-by-month.

Q. And is it in that document?

A. It is in this document.

Q. Have you instructed the preparation of a graph to indicate those monthly figures?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you checked that graph to determine its accuracy?

A. Yes.

Q. Against the exhibit?

A. Yes, I've checked it.

Q. Could you show that graph to the jury – to the judge first.

A. This is 1940.

THE COURT: Yes, I see it.

THE WITNESS: Through 29 April.

THE COURT: You have to speak up so the jury can hear.

THE WITNESS: Excuse me.

THE COURT: Show it to the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Now, you can show it to the jury, please.

A. So – I read first this.

Q. Read the printing then, sir.

A. Deaths in camp Dachau from February 18, 1940, to April, 1945. So the source is given there.

Q. Read that all.

A. Prosecution exhibit number 35, National Archives, U.S.A., May 13th, 1945, reference number M-1174, reel frame 54, total including 11 women, 25,613.

Q. All right. You've checked those figures and checked that graph to make sure they compare with the {2485|2486} document?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Thank you. Could the document itself be the next exhibit?

THE COURT: 34.

THE WITNESS: May I —

MR. CHRISTIE: Just a moment.

— EXHIBIT 34: Copy of list of deaths in Dachau, 1940 – 1945

MR. CHRISTIE: The document then is Exhibit 34. And the graph, could that be the next exhibit, 35?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT 35: Chart depicting deaths in Dachau, 1940 – 1945

THE WITNESS: I cannot keep the graph for myself?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not if it's an exhibit, sir, so ...

THE WITNESS: Because – okay.

MR. CHRISTIE: It's either an exhibit or it's not, sir, so we have to —

THE WITNESS: Okay. We have the same, the numbers are the same.

MR. CHRISTIE: Right. Then that should be the next exhibit, number 35.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Could you explain to me, sir, from your knowledge of the International Military Tribunal {2486|2487} documents, such as Dr. Hilberg mentioned, could you indicate the date to us upon which Dr. Hilberg mentioned the existence of a Hitler order to kill the Jews, on that graph?

A. The order is supposed to have been given in June, 1941. There.

Q. Was there a date referred to by Dr. Hilberg as the date upon which Himmler was supposed to have given an order to stop killing the Jews?

A. He said 25th of November, 1945, there. So, there.

Q. '45 or '44?

A. '44, excuse me.

Q. Right.

A. So the order of Hitler to kill the Jews, the alleged order, there. This is, I must say, a typhus and typhoid epidemic in Dachau.

Q. When was that?

A. It was from August, 1942, to February, 1943.

Q. From your knowledge of the defence evidence at the I.M.T., are you aware of any explanation provided there for the high incidence of deaths indicated in the last months of the war?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have the document to substantiate that?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the document to substantiate that?

A. Can I first say something about that?

Q. If it's relevant and if my friend has no objection, go ahead.

A. I must say that when the Allied came in Dachau, like in Buchenwald and other camps in Belgium, they {2487|2488} found this situation, and I must recognize that we could think that this situation had been all the time like this.

Q. So the Allies could have thought that it existed all the time?

A. Yes, quite normally.

Q. Yes. Could you now identify the document, and that is now Exhibit 35, is it?

A. So this document —

Q. Excuse me just a moment. This is Exhibit 35?

A. 35, yes.

Q. Yes. Do you now have — excuse me — in your possession a document to substantiate your statement that at Nuremberg at the International Military Tribunal the defence tried to explain the conditions in Dachau?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is the author of that evidence?

A. Dr. Konrad Morgen.

Q. Who is he?

A. He was a judge; we call that in French, examining magistrate, juge — juge d'instruction, into the camps.

Q. Yes. And what did his testimony say and when was it tendered?

A. Shall I give the — first the source?

Q. Yes, please identify the source.

A. So, I.M.T., volume 20, page 498 and 499. I'm going to read —

Q. Only those portions referable to the explanation provided for the casualties at the Dachau camp, please.

A. "To a great extent, the horrible conditions at times prevailing in some {2488|2489} concentration camps did not arise from deliberate planning but developed from circumstances which, in my opinion, must be called force measure."

Q. What does that mean in English?

A. In the English text, we have the French expression, "force measure".

Q. All right. Read on.

A. "That is to say, evils for which the local camp leaders were not responsible."

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. "I am thinking of the outbreak of epidemics at irregular intervals. Many concentration camps were visited by typhoid fever, typhus, and other sicknesses in the concentration camps. Although everything humanly possible was done to prevent these epidemics and to combat them, the death rate which resulted was extremely high. Another evil which may be considered as force measure was the fluctuating numbers of new arrivals and the insufficient billets."

Q. Insuffic[i]ent what?

A. Billets, b-i-l-l-e-t-s.

Q. "Billets"?

A. Billets.

Q. Does it say anything else about that subject, sir?

A. "Many camps were overcrowded. The prisoners arrived in a weakened condition because, due to air raids, the transports {2489|2490} were under way longer than expected. Towards the end of the war, there was a general collapse of the transportation [sic] system. Supplies could not be carried out to the necessary extent. Chemical and pharmaceutical factories had been systematically bombed, and all the necessary medicines were lacking. To top all, the evacuation from the east further burdened the camps and crowded them in an unbearable manner."

Q. Now — thank you, doctor. Could that — you've identified the source and the author of that testimony; is that right? Was he a German examining magistrate?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, doctor, you have yourself taken certain slides, with the exception of the —

A. For Dachau, please, if possible.

Q. Yes. How is this related to Belsen, for example, or other camps?

A. Because the situation was the same for those camp. The situation was not the same for Auschwitz, because the German had the time to evacuate the camp on the 18th of January, and the Russian arrive only on the 27th of January, '45. But three, four months after, it was a kind of apocalypse in Germany.

Q. Apocalypse in Germany?

A. Apocalypse. About the people detained in Dachau, my reference is still this book, "The Concentration Camp of Dachau", 1979, on page 212.

"Number of inmates arrived in Dachau from 1943 to 1945. The total is 206,206 inmates." {2490|2491}

I repeat: two-o-six point two-o-six.

Q. Two hundred and six thousand?

A. Two hundred six thousand two hundred six.

Q. All right. And how many of those died?

A. So we have noticed that there were variation in the figures. We have noticed 20,600, then we had twenty-five thousand and some, —

Q. Yes.

A. Now, today, in Dachau, they make reference to the International Tracing Service ...

Q. How do they refer to the International Tracing Service now in Dachau?

A. On page 436 they say that to believe the inquiries of the International Tracing Service in Arolsen, there were 31,951 deaths, and they say that it is a minimum.

Q. A minimum. So they say roughly 39,000 people died in Dachau?

A. Thirty-one.

Q. Thirty-one thousand?

A. Nine hundred and fifty-one.

Q. In what period of time?

A. During '33 to '45.

Q. From 1933 to 1945 —

A. Yes.

Q. Thirty-one thousand people, approximately, died in Dachau?

A. So the rate is 15.5 per cent died; 84.5 survived.

Q. And did that include those periods indicated on your graph at the end of the war?

A. Yes, the terrible period of the end of {2491|2492} the camp.

Q. Yes, is included in those figures?

A. Yes.

Q. And in that percentage?

A. Yeah.

Q. All right.

A. And we have also on this page a photo showing the caravels (sic) discovered in Dachau, caravels of people.

THE COURT: The what?

THE WITNESS: Caravels.

THE COURT: Spell it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: "Cadavers", I think, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: Cadavers.

THE COURT: Bodies.

THE WITNESS: Bodies, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Is that the extent of what you have to say in respect to your researches pertaining to Dachau?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, in relation to the text of Exhibit 1 and the work of Paul Rassinier, have you read the Harwood booklet in respect to the paragraph pertaining to Paul Rassinier?

A. Yes.

Q. From the basis of your research of the International Military Tribunal, the N.M.T., and all your sources of inquiry that His Honour has permitted you to testify upon, can you comment on the truth or falsity of that paragraph 10, if you'll just open it up and have a look? {2492|2493}

THE COURT: Paragraph 10.

THE WITNESS: May I have the copy, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. You don't have the exhibit?

A. No, I have not the exhibit.

Q. Here we are. Now, —

THE COURT: Page?

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry,

MR. GRIFFITHS: Twenty-eight.

MR. CHRISTIE: Twenty-eight.

THE COURT: Twenty-eight.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Let's deal with the first paragraph. Now, from your research of Paul Rassinier's work, is that paragraph true about his work?

A. The paragraph — the title is, "The Truth At Last"?

Q. Yes.

A. "The Work of Paul Rassinier".

Q. Yes. Have you read that paragraph?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it true, to the best of your knowledge?

A. Yes. I agree with Paul Rassinier.

Q. Is it true what is said here about Paul Rassinier, that he — that he experienced the German concentration camps?

A. Yes.

Q. That he was a socialist intellectual and anti-Nazi?

A. Yes.

Q. That he was disinclined — it says nobody was less inclined, but I ask you whether he was disinclined {2493|2494} to defend Hitler and National Socialism?

A. He was certainly not a Nazi, certainly not.

Q. Do you know whether he indicates in his books why he spoke out on the subject?

A. Yes. I think that Paul Rassinier had a terrible experience, he suffered terribly in Buchenwald and Dachau, and when he came back he wrote a book to try to explain his sufferings and the sufferings of the others.

Q. Yes.

A. But few years after, he was surprised to see that so many people talked about gas chambers, even in Dachau, or — even in Buchenwald.

Q. Has there been evidence produced in tribunals and books written to substantiate gas chambers in Buchenwald?

A. In Buchenwald, testimonies, yes.

Q. What testimony?

A. I should have in my book there of — from a priest, describing quite in detail the so-called gas chamber in Buchenwald. His name was Henocque, H-e-n-o-c-q-u-e.

Q. Is there any official source that now believes or holds that there were gas chambers in Buchenwald?

A. Nobody now.

Q. Was there an allegation raised — well, of course we've seen the film "Nazi Concentration Camps", about Dachau. There was a suggestion of gas chambers there. You've been to Dachau.

You shake your head. You must answer one way or another on the record.

A. Yes, I've been in Dachau, yes.

Q. And you're aware, and you've seen the film {2494|2495} "Nazi Concentration Camps" where it refers to the hanging of clothing outside the shower room, the dummy shower heads, the evidence of gas chambers? Yes, you wish to say something?

A. I have not seen the film, but I have read the text in the I.M.T. volume.

Q. In the I.M.T. volume?

A. Number 30.

Q. Volume 30? And the text of that film is in volume 30?

A. I think, yes.

Q. Now, having been to Dachau, is there any official allegation now that there was any gas chamber at Dachau?

A. Today, you might see a room where you have a poncard (phonetic) — a placard, a mobile placard where it is said in five different languages —

Q. Have you seen this placard?

A. Yes. I've taken photos also.

Q. You have also taken photos?

A. Yes.

Q. What does it say, please?

A. What?

Q. What does it say in English?

A. It says in English, "Gas chamber disguised as shower room — never used."

Q. "Never used."

A. So the problem for me was, how can we say that it was a gas chamber? I asked this question, I wrote to the International Committee of Dachau in Brussels.

I wrote to the Dachau Museum; we had an exchange of correspondence during eighteen month.

Q. Did you ever get an answer? {2495|2496}

A. Never.

Q. Okay. Were there other camps in Germany where allegations were made after the war that there were gas chambers?

A. Yes, Ravensbrück.

Q. Ravensbrück. Have you gone there?

A. No.

Q. Have you researched the literature in support of that allegation?

A. Yes.

Q. What literature have you researched?

A. Especially what Germaine Tillon, T-i-l-l-i-o-n, wrote about Ravensbrück, either in a book, either in the Review of the Second World War.

Q. Yes. Do you recall what the allegations were there?

A. Yes, that there was a gas chamber, but she gives a plan of the camp, she does not indicate where it could have been, and the testimonies are very variable. They put this gas chamber in a place called Uekermunde, or in Ravensbrück itself, but the most troubling is that we had confessions of German officials about that and a German doctor also. I can give the name.

Q. Well, name them then. Who confessed to the existence of these things?

A. Commandant Suhren, S-u-h-r-e-n; Commandant Schwarzhuber, S-c-h-w-r —

Q. Do you want a pen to write it?

A. — a-r-h-u-b-e-r; and Dr. Treite, T-r-e-i-t-e. Germaine Tillon gives the text of that. Olga van Gemo (phonetic), so, I think, and her comments are, It [sic] is strange that Suhren didn't do any difficulty {2496|2497} to confess the existence of this gas chamber, but Schwarzhuber was of bad faith, insisted [sic] — didn't want to recognize, and then finally recognize[d].

Q. Was there ever any evidence produced at the I.M.T. or N.M.T. to support the allegation that there was a gas chamber at Ravensbrück?

A. Yes.

Q. What was that evidence? You've given —

A. I should have my dossier about Ravensbrück and to give all the references in the —

Q. Just give as best you can, where you are.

A. In the I.M.T. volumes we have that gas chamber in Ravensbrück.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, in — and even we have steam chambers in Treblinka. The official truth about Treblinka is not that there were gas chambers, but steam chambers.

Q. What do you mean by the official truth?

A. I call official truth the document P.S. 3311, and signed by a representative of the United Nations.

Q. Why do you call it the official truth?

A. Because the Article 21 of the Statutes of the International Military Tribunal makes an obligation to ask — to consider as authentic or verace — I don't remember the word — all the reports of the — of the United Nations; et cetera.

Q. How does this now —

THE COURT: I'm a little confused. You were talking about Ravensbru[ü]ck.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right.

THE COURT: Did he go to another camp about steam chambers? {2497|2498}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, we did, the camp at Treblinka.

THE COURT: Treblinka.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. I want to deal specifically with Ravensbru[ü]ck. Are the official historians in agreement now on there being gas chambers at Ravensbru[ü]ck?

A. I don't know any — I do know up till 1983 that there would be anybody to believe any more in the gas chamber of Ravensbru[ü]ck. I can give the name of important people, historian who said no gas chamber in Ravensbru[ü]ck.

Q. Who now says there is no gas chamber in Ravensbru[ü]ck?

A. And I was very surprised to see a book published in Germany last year —

Q. I'd like to know the names of those historians who now say there were no gas chambers in Ravensbru[ü]ck.

A. Martin Broszat.

Q. Who's he?

A. B-r-o-s-z-a-t.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is now director of the Institute of contemporary History in Munich.

Q. Yes, and who else officially says that there was no gas chamber in Ravensbru[ü]ck?

A. Olga von Salmego (phonetic).

Q. Who is she?

A. She is a historian, French historian, who made a thesis about the story of the concentration camps.

Q. All right. Who else says there were no gas chambers in Ravensbru[ü]ck?

A. I would say, anybody who in his book {2498|2499} doesn't — quotes Ravensbru[ü]ck as having a gas chamber.

Q. And who does that include?

A. I think it includes everybody except those people who have published this book in Germany last year.

Q. Who is that?

A. Those people are Hermann Langbein, L-a-n-g-b-e-i-n, Eugen Kogon, K-o-g-o-n.

Q. Yes.

A. And Rueckerl, R-u-e-c-k-e-.

Q. Are those three books or are they one book?

A. One book written by those three people, with twenty-one other people.

Q. And what's the name of the book?

A. I'm going to give the translation in English.

Q. Yes.

A. "Nazi Gas Massing" (sic).

Q. You mean "Mass Gassing"?

A. "Mass Gassings".

Q. Yes.

A. "Nazi Mass Gassings by Poison Gas".

Q. So that there is now, according to you, several reputable sources who say there were no gas chambers at Ravensbru[ü]ck, and this one new book that says there was?

A. Yes. It is a kind of return suddenly. This book has been written to answer to the arguments of the revisionists and especially to the French revisionists. That's what they said. It was published first in German and then in French.

Q. Are there other camps —

A. Can I give — {2499|2500}

Q. Go ahead.

A. — a detail about that? On the 21st of April, 1982, has been created in France an organization of former inmates like Kogon, Langbein, Rueckerl and so on, in French, saying that they were going to try to find proof of the existence of the gas chamber.

Q. So this is an organization with that specific objective?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Can you name other camps in which the allegation was made after the war of the existence of gas chambers in Germany that it is no longer maintained had gas chambers?

A. Yes, in Oranienburg-Sachsenhausen.

Q. Yes.

A. And we have, for example, a book —

Q. I'd like you to tell me first those who said at the time there were gas chambers and then quickly, those who said there were not, if you can just identify those two?

A. Mm-hmm. So there were trials about the Oranienburg-Sachsenhausen ...

Q. Were confessions made in those trials?

A. Yes, about Oranienburg, yes.

Q. Who confessed to gas chambers in Oranienburg at the trials?

A. A man called Sakowski, S-a-k-o-w-s-k-i.

Q. And what was he?

A. I cannot recall exactly.

Q. Was he a German?

A. He was a German, yes.

Q. Was he a military man? {2500|2501}

A. We have a photo of this man showing how he operated the gas chamber, which is always photographed from the outside.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. From Mauthausen we have also many, many so-called proof, testimonies, but for Dachau we have an extraordinary amount of testimonies of official truths about the gassing in Dachau. For example, we have a report from — signed by Congress, American Congressmen, there were twelve.

Q. They conducted an inquiry after the war?

A. Yes.

Q. They went there?

A. Went there, and we have this report, saying that the gas chamber was at such-and-such dimension, was operated on such-and-such way. We have many things about that. And the question for the revisionists, since 1960, is always the same. Please, tell us what is the difference between the proof and the testimonies about Dachau, Ravensbru[ü]ck, Mauthausen, Stutthof, whatsoever, and Auschwitz, Majdanek, Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec.

Q. So that's why —

A. And we cannot have an answer to this question because we don't know why it has been decided by a sort of consensus that we didn't have to believe any more in those gas chamber. Why —

Q. What gas chamber? We didn't have to believe any more in what gas chambers?

A. Ravensbru[ü]ck, Dachau, et cetera.

Q. How do you know that it's officially said that we don't have to believe any more in those gas chambers? If — you know, the jury has to understand why {2501|2502} you say that we no longer have to believe in gas chambers in Ravensbru[ü]ck, Dachau, Buchenwald, et cetera?

A. Because the historian abandoned that.

Q. Abandoned what?

A. Abandoned the claim that there was a gas chamber, that people were gassed, and, for example, we cited yesterday Raul Hilberg, Raul Hilberg says, and that's typical of the way of denying suddenly, he says, "Although no gassings took place in Mauthausen", and he continues like that.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. So we have only few words, and it is very often the case that the truth or the new facts are enveloped in a phrase, given like that, and we must be very careful.

Q. Have you got another example of that pertaining to Dr. Broszat?

A. Dr. Broszat published in 1960, the 19th of August, 1960, in the newspaper, "Die Zeit".

Q. "Die Zeit", where is that?

A. A German newspaper.

Q. And what did he say there?

A. He sent a letter, and the letter – the title of the letter is not from him, I suppose, but from the newspaper.
 Q. So they put a caption on his letter?
 A. A caption.
 Q. All right.
 A. The caption, was, “No gassings in Dachau”.
 Q. Uh-huh.
 A. The text himself – itself, says —
 Q. Do you remember it exactly? {2502|2503}
 A. What?
 Q. Do you remember it exactly?
 A. I would prefer to have the text itself here, yes.
 Q. Do you have it here?
 A. But – no, I didn’t bring it. I don’t think so, no. But I could bring it.
 Q. All right. Give us the best recollection you have on it and then we’ll bring the text itself in.
 A. Yes. He said that there were no mass gassing – his letter is complicated. No gassing at all in Dachau, Bergen-Belsen, Buchenwald, then he used the word “no mass gassing in old Germany”, it means in Germany, its frontier of 1937.
 Q. Yes.
 A. And he said only, before all – I don’t understand what means “before all”, in six point of Poland, I think, and he said, “Auschwitz, Birkenau, Sobibor, Belzec, Treblinka, Chelmno,” and I think that he didn’t quote Maidanek.
 Q. Mm-hmm.
 A. So I had to ask myself to Mr. Broszat, I wanted an explanation, but I don’t know if I have the right to say that.
 Q. Well, what did you – what questions did this raise in your mind?
 A. My question is simply this one. “Since many, many years, could you please tell me where we had gas chamber, called that for gassing or mass gassing, I don’t know very well the difference. This is a list of the camps. Please tell me if there was one or several gas chambers.” And the answer that I had from Martin Broszat, {2503|2504} I have the text of his letter, is that he could not answer to a letter which had questions like traps. I don’t think that my letter was a letter with traps. And he employed exactly those words, “the complicated problem of the gas chambers”, and I think that for many people there is not even a problem, but for the people who have worked on it there is a problem, this problem is complicated, and sometime is so complicated that people prefer not to answer, or they say maybe, maybe not.
 Q. Mm-hmm. You heard the evidence of —
 A. Because there is the difficulty between what is called extermination camp, by the Allied, and concentration camps. The use is to say, concentration camp, camp without gas chamber; extermination camp, camp with gas chamber.
 Q. Mm-hmm.
 A. I mean, gas chamber to kill people.
 Q. Right. Now, in the gas chamber question, have people been executed for the allegation of gassings in camps where now no gassings are held by historians to have occurred?
 A. I cannot say that, because when somebody like Schwar[z]huber tried to committed suicide, or Suhren or others, when they were judged it was not said expressly —
 Q. “You had gas chambers”?
 A. They had used gas chamber, but Germaine Tillion, for instance, say, it’s strange that Suhren and Schwar[z]huber and others installed a gas chamber right at the end of the war, February 1945. If they had not done that, they could perhaps have not been convicted to death.
 Q. Mm-hmm, and they were?
 A. That’s her opinion. {2504|2505}
 Q. They were hung?
 A. Yes.
 Q. They were hung, right. Now, in your examination of the International Military Tribunal activities and the documents and transcripts, did you have an opportunity to consider the basis of the belief that there were millions of people, six million alleged, gassed during the war in the camps of Auschwitz, Birkenau, Maidanek, Belzec, Treblinka, Chelmno, Stutthof?

 MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. My friend can certainly ask that question, but that has formed no part of the Crown’s case, and it’s not in this pamphlet either, that six million people were gassed.
 MR. CHRISTIE: You mean it’s not part of the Crown’s case to deny the publication?
 MR. GRIFFITHS: It’s not part of the Crown’s case to say that six million people were gassed.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, we can argue about what the Crown’s case is later, but my position is that when the booklet says, Did six million really die?, and it concludes “No,” then that becomes an issue, and it becomes a relevant issue, because the Crown’s saying “You’re lying by saying six million didn’t die,” and we’re asking the question as to what the evidence is to support that. That’s all.
 THE COURT: As[k] the question.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Okay.
 Q. It’s a general question. Have you examined the I.M.T. transcripts and the N.M.T. transcripts to consider what the evidence is to support the allegation that six million people, six million Jews, died in those eastern camps? {2505|2506}
 A. If I tried to find evidence?
 Q. Yes.
 A. And evidence on which could – real evidence on which this belief in the gas chamber exists?
 Q. Yes.
 A. My answer is, after I should say twenty-five years of inquiry, not always on the same tempo, eh? —
 Q. Yes.
 A. — is that there is not the slightest proof of the existence of even one gas chamber even, and especially in Auschwitz and Birkenau.
 Q. Why do you say “especially Auschwitz and Birkenau”?
 A. Because I have especially studied Auschwitz and Birkenau, which are supposed to “be the heart of all this machinery. We have to believe that there was a genocide, specific crime, and without precedent [sic], a specific weapon, the gas chamber. If the gas chamber do not exist, it’s impossible to sustain any more those fantastic figures like six million.
 Q. So that’s why you inquired?
 A. So I said – my method was, we are supposed to believe that in the same building we had a crematorium with furnaces, a gas chamber, an undressing room and so on.
 Q. Yes.
 A. So, when we try to find proof of all that, we don’t find anything about the gas chamber. I mean, we have proof of the existence of crematorium, of bathroom.
 We have even something which – a document which is very important coming from Auschwitz, the locksmith book of Auschwitz where every operation of this kind is described. We know exactly the amount of money that everything cost, {2506|2507} even the trees planted around the crematorium. But we don’t find anything material. We have some witnesses, and when we go and see on the spot our – all the things, we see that those testimonies are not exact, not possibly exact. If I go Auschwitz I, for instance, many tourists visit Auschwitz I, and I said yesterday that I asked a question about the furnaces, that I had shown that there was no chute; my intention was not to say it’s all false furnace, that’s no intention at all. My intention was to say, “If it has been rebuild, you have a plan. I want to see this plan.” So I was the first to obtain – to see the plan of crematorium number I which – with furnaces and gas chamber. I discovered that this place had been first a mortuary, up till July 1943, then transformed and then from April 1944 it was an air shelter with a room for surgical operation, because quite close to the crematorium you had the S.S. hospital. But anybody who has eyes to see could notice that the place called gas chamber in Auschwitz I has been totally changed. You see very well that walls have been broken down. You can see when you have the plans that all that is a fraud. The mortuary was dead end.
 Q. What do you mean, “dead end”?

A. Dead end, with no opening.

THE COURT: Excuse me.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. We are getting into an area where Dr. Faurisson is not qualified to speak. He's talked of plans for the building. He's not an architect.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can he not testify, with respect, that he obtained plans? It's not to prove that they are other {2507|2508} than what he obtained. I don't think he's giving an opinion on those.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, did you understand my ruling?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir, I certainly did.

THE COURT: Nobody complained – just hear me out – nobody complained when he said he got the plans.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Please don't lead answers from the witness concerning architectural, engineering or building plans. He's not an expert. It's as simple as that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wasn't leading the witness at all, really, Your Honour.

THE COURT: He was just headed that way when the objection came, because you are not controlling him. Please control him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I'd like —

THE COURT: It's your responsibility, not mine.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir, I appreciate that.

Q. Dr. Faurisson, can you tell us about the documentary evidence in support of the extermination claims for the concentration camp of Auschwitz that was tendered at the I.M.T. and what your views of it are?

A. In the I.M.T., it was said that four million people had been killed in Auschwitz. That's the document, U.S.S.R. 008. I know how they made the calculations.

This was the figure that we had to believe at that time. But I know also how the Pravda and the New York Times announced the novel, the big novel about Auschwitz. Auschwitz was liberated on the 27th of January, 1945, {2508|2509} and the first article in the Pravda was on the 1st February, 1945.

Q. Have you seen that article?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Yes.

A. And this article has a first phrase where appears the words "gas chamber", but it seems very vague, and they insist on the fact that the people in Auschwitz were killed by electricity. There was a conveyor belt; the Jews were put on this, electrocuted, and then got into smelt furnaces. This was written by Boris Polevoi, P-o-l-e-v-o-i, and repercut-ed (phonetic)

Q. "Repercut-ed"?

A. "Repercut-ed"

Q. "Reproduced"?

A. "Reproduced".

Q. Yes.

A. In the American newspaper, and especially by the journalist, Shapiro, S-h-a-p-i-r-o. And when I went in the Archives, National Archives of Suitland, Maryland, U.S.A., I studied especially the case of Otto Moll, M-o-l-l. This man was commending —

Q. He was referred to in the evidence in this case by one witness, wasn't he?

A. What?

Q. Wasn't he referred to in this case by one witness?

A. I don't understand the question, excuse me.

Q. Didn't this witness – this person —

A. Otto Moll.

Q. Otto Moll, wasn't he supposed to have been a person in Auschwitz-Birkenau?

A. Yes. {2509|2510}

Q. And wasn't he referred to by one of the survivors, I think perhaps —

A. Oh, yes, I remember.

Q. Yes.

A. Especially Filip Muller, yes, gave an extraordinary description of this man. So Otto Moll was in charge of the crematorium, which means not only for the burning of the bodies but also for the collecting of garbage which was burned in the same place.

Q. I have a question pertaining to your earlier evidence, and I'd like to ask you, what is the current position, official history version of this question of electrification or electrocution now? Is that believed as the truth by historians?

THE COURT: Can we get an idea of what "official history" means?

MR. CHRISTIE: The Crown will be giving the official history, I suppose. They seem to maintain they have it.

THE WITNESS: I am ready to

MR. GRIFFITHS: I object to that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I object to the editorial comment.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't claim to have the official history, but —

THE COURT: Then why ask the question?

MR. CHRISTIE: Because the witness has said there are official historians who say these things.

THE COURT: That's what I'm asking.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I ask him?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. What does Martin Broszat or other historians say about the story of electrocutions now, mass electrocutions?

THE COURT: Let's get to the official part, official historians. The jury would perhaps be interested in what official historians are.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm not here to argue about that.

THE COURT: You asked the question. If you want to say "historians" and leave out the word "official", then I'm content. If you are going to use "official", let's hear what it means.

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought you were objecting to that word.

THE COURT: I'm not objecting at all. I just want to let the jury know what "official" means, if it means anything.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Well, do you have an answer to that question? His Honour wants an answer. —

A. To what is an official historian?

Q. Yes.

A. On this topic, I would say that it is somebody who takes for granted what has been alleged or affirmed in the I.M.T., in the N.M.T., in all those German trials.

Q. Why are they official historians?

A. I see that they take this for granted.

Q. Why?

A. I wonder why. I think we should research about something which an official truth.

Q. Yes.

THE COURT: All right. If there is nothing {2511|2512} more on official historians, then you can go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. So you say —

A. And I call, if I may, I —

THE COURT: Certainly.

THE WITNESS: I would call official historians those who, when they publish something about Holocaust, as have no – no trouble whatsoever, as I can have, Dr. Staglich, Dr. Burg, and so many others.

THE COURT: Go ahead, sorry to interrupt.

THE WITNESS: I have no right to teach, you see, for example.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Yes.

A. So we go back to Auschwitz?

Q. Yes. That's what I think we should do, because you said the story originally was, people were electrocuted?

A. Yes.

Q. At Auschwitz. Now, in the official histories, that you've defined as those who accept the I.M.T., is there any suggestion of that today?

A. Not today, no. I'm sorry, there's not, not even among those 24 people who have published this book just last year in January, not even. There is a consensus, and I don't see why this story of the electricity has been abandoned for the gas; why the steam has been abandoned for the gas.

Q. What steam?

A. Steam chambers.

Q. Where?

A. Treblinka.

Q. Where does that information come from? {2512|2513}

A. From P.S. 3311.

Q. All right. Who originated that?

A. A member of the organ (phonetic) – United Nation Commission.

Q. They held that as a fact; is that right?

A. It is in volume, I think 33, of the Nurnberg, I.M.T.

Q. What do you have to say —

A. His name is Dr. Cyprian, C-y-p-r-i-a-n.

Q. What do you have to say about those allegations as to their truth or falsity, made in official records, such as Dr. Cyprian's findings? What do you say about them?

A. It's something without any proof.

Q. What do you call that yourself in your own opinion?

A. I call that a mistake or a lie.

Q. Who was it that said there were steam chambers at Treblinka first?

A. I couldn't say who said that.

Q. What does Dr. Gerstein say about that?

A. No, himself he says gas chamber with mono – no, with dioxide of carbon, I mean, with diesel engines.

Q. Diesel engines?

A. Diesel engines.

Q. And what gas?

A. I am supposed not to be competent on that.

Q. Oh, excuse me. Thank you. You can at least quote what Gerstein says, though.

THE COURT: Certainly, he can.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. {2513|2514}

Q. What does Gerstein say was the gas at Treblinka from the diesel engine?

A. He didn't say what was the gas. He said it was with diesel engines. May I go back to the case of Otto Moll, which is so important?

Q. Yes. Sorry to interrupt. Go ahead.

A. So, I had the chance to discover the dossier of Otto Moll, the dossier of what the American call, I think, the juge avocat general, or avocat juge general. I found this dossier, and I had an idea by this dossier of things that I later on discovered about other people, is that when you open a dossier of those Nazis, —

Q. Yes.

A. you open that and you find the W.R.B. report.

Q. The jury may not know what that means.

A. Oh, the World Refugee Board report.

Q. How does that relate to Dr. Vrba?

A. Is one of —

Q. — the three authors of the report?

A. You have more than that.

Q. Three or four?

A. You have the first report, two people, Vrba, then two other people, then a Polish major, but the important part is Vrba-Wetzler.

Q. Yes.

A. So we have that, and the juge avocate general has that at the beginning.

Q. What's it say at the beginning?

A. "It is beyond denial that Nazi Germany" – I don't quote exactly the words; it's the meaning; — {2514|2515}

"It's beyond denial that Nazi Germany murdered systematically millions of people, Jews or not", something like that.

Q. Mm-hmm. Why is that relevant to the issue of this trial?

A. I don't know. But when I open this dossier I found that. Then the major part of the dossier was constituted by clippings.

Q. Clippings?

A. Clippings of the American newspaper, reproducing the Pravda?

Q. Reproducing the Pravda?

A. Yes.

Q. What was this file used for in prosecution terms?

A. It was because Otto Moll had been arrested in Dachau, and he was judge by the American in Dachau and hanged.

Q. Now, in support of the – your criticism – do you believe that two million Jews or a million Jews or seven hundred thousand or how many Jews do you think were killed – do you believe were killed in Auschwitz-Birdeau?

A. I cannot answer to this question. But know that it would be quite possible, and rather easy, I think, to answer to this question. We should have the answer since thirty, forty years. I can only say what I have said in one of my books. I said that I would publish the reason why I believed that in all the concentration camps during the war from 200,000 people to 350,000 people died, and in Auschwitz around 50,000, which is already a terrible figure. I can give an example to show how it is {2515|2516} terrible.

Q. Well, not to show how it is terrible, but how do you arrive at that figure?

A. I think that what the International Tracing Service has published during years and years is quite close to the right figure, even if they say now we don't believe that those figures are complete, they are more or less counted for Dachau, Buchenwald, not at all for Auschwitz. Myself, I think that it is probably the right figure.

Q. Why?

A. But I know how we could check it. We have a very simple way of checking those figures. We could take the book of Serge Klarsfeld.

Q. Yes. What is that book?

A. "Memorial of the Deportees of the Jews of France"

Q. All right.

THE COURT: I think we will do that after the recess, Mr. Christie.

THE REGISTRAR: Members of the jury, you may retire.

— The jury retired at 11:30 a.m. Proceedings adjourned.

— Proceedings resumed at 12:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. I now produce and show to you – thank you – Exhibit number 26, which is an excerpt from the War Refugee Board report. Do you recognize that document?

A. Yes.

Q. That says on the bottom, 1,765,000. Is that right? {2516|2517}

A. Yes.

Q. And it says, "France, 150,000". Is that right?

A. Jews gassed between April 1942 and April 1944?

Q. All right.

A. Twenty-four month.

Q. In twenty-four months, this report said that 150,000 Jews were gassed, between April '42 and April '44; is that right?

A. Jews coming from France.

Q. Jews from France. And do we have any current histories which deal with the deportees from France by French-Jewish authors?

A. Yes.

Q. And who is the author?

A. Serge Klarsfeld, K-l-a-r-s-f-e-l-d.

Q. Do you have his book with you?

A. Yes.

Q. Hold it up so the jury can see. And does that book have thousands of names in it?

A. Yes.

Q. And does the author make statements as to the number of Jews deported from France in that book?

A. Yes.

Q. What does he say?

A. He says that the number of Jews deported from France was around 75,000 – 75,721. He added recently in an American publication of translation of his book called, in English, "Memorial to the Jews Deported From France", published in 1983, on page 20, Roman characters, he says:

"Total number of deportees. We have established {2517|2518} the total number of Jews deported from France at 75,721. This number is the minimum. The maximum cannot exceed 76,500."

Q. "The maximum cannot exceed 76,500." Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. The casualty official deportation map in West Germany shows 50,000 to 65,000 Jews deported from France. French authorities claimed more than 100,000. In fact, I think that in Nurnberg, I'm not absolutely sure, the total was 120,000, and I don't know if it was not the total of the Jews killed. I don't remember exactly.

Q. I'm not interested in other figures, but I want it very clear as to what Serge Klarsfeld, after his research, concludes were the number of total deported Jews from France —

A. Yes.

Q. — from all countries, that came to France; is that correct?

A. Yes, Jews from — of French citizenship, —

Q. Yes.

A. — foreigners, apatheid (phonetic).

Q. That means "without country"?

A. "Without country", yes, stateless.

Q. Stateless Jews?

A. Yes.

Q. Foreign Jews and French Jews deported from France?

A. From France.

Q. The total in Klarsfeld's opinion is {2518|2519} 75,721 or 76,500 maximum?

A. Yeah.

Q. That's right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, does that mean Jews deported to Auschwitz?

A. No.

Q. Does that mean Jews deported from France during the war?

A. Yes.

Q. So that's all Jews deported from France during the war?

A. To all camps.

Q. To all camps?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Thank you. Now, what's the status of the W.R.B. report? That particular page number 26, what happened to it?

A. So, from France the total was 150,000.

Q. Yes, it says a hundred fifty thousand ...

A. Gassed.

Q. Gassed, in two years?

A. In two years.

Q. Right. Now, that's what it says, but what I mean by the status is, what became of that document at Nuremberg, was it accepted as a fact?

A. Yes, it was the document L022.

Q. L022, an exhibit at Nuremberg?

A. "L" means "London", because it was in London that most of the document pertaining to the concentration camps were sent.

Q. Sent? {2519|2520}

A. And classified.

Q. All right, and classified.

A. It was the — excuse me — it was the only page taken from the W.B. report.

Q. Yes.

A. No other page was taken into consideration.

Q. And that document was received into evidence under L2022 at the I.M.T., International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg?

A. That's right.

Q. What was the significance then of that document being accepted as evidence? Did it become part of the official history?

A. I would call that the official history, but perhaps it is a personal judgment.

Q. All right. Rather than make personal judgments, is there any reference in that document of Klarsfeld's which caused an awareness that some people who were alleged to have died actually were still alive?

A. Yes, and for —

Q. Can you give us an example that is evidence from the book of Serge Klarsfeld?

A. Yes, but to prove it I would need another book, but I am going to say that by memory.

Q. Yes. What book, what author?

A. So all that concerns especially Mrs. Simone Veil.

Q. Yes.

A. V-e-i-l.

Q. Yes. {2520|2521}

A. President of the European Parliament.

Q. Yes.

A. She was born Simone Jacob in Nice, Nica, 13 of April, and she was deported on the 13th of April, 1944.

Q. April 13th, 1944, yes. Where was she deported to?

A. From France.

Q. Where was she deported to?

A. To Auschwitz.

Q. Yes. And what is the record referred to and the transport in which she was deported?

A. So, when we consult the notebooks of Auschwitz, which is a quite official publication —

Q. Yes, who publishes it? Who publishes it?

A. The Polish — National Polish Museum of Auschwitz.

Q. What does it say about that transport?

A. About this convoy, it is said that this convoy from the 13th of April arrived the 16th of April, and that all the women of this convoy were gassed.

Q. And Simone Veil, born Simone Jacobs, is alive?

A. Yes. And we have many other case like that.

Q. What is the observation —

A. I must ...

Q. Go ahead.

A. I must say that Serge Klarsfeld does not really give the figure of the Jews who died. He said in his book that he considers as died every person who had not given his name before the 31st of December, 1945, to the Ministry of the Veterans, which means that if somebody had given his name two or three days after, he {2521|2522} is considered as dead by Serge Klarsfeld.

Q. Right.

A. With an exception, he did a research in Belgium, and he said — now, we must add — I must correct what I've said, because some Belgium Jews were deported from France, et cetera.

Q. So he's made some corrections?

A. He made very important corrections because the Centre of Documentation, Jewish Centre of Documentation in Paris had given many figures about the Jews deported from France, and Klarsfeld had to say that many convoys had been invented. They are not — no real existence, it was a mistake from this Centre, so we have many thousand of people that we don't know if they are — were alive at the end of the war or not, but they were told by the Centre to have been — to have died in Auschwitz, and it was a mistake. Sometimes it was because Centre of Documentation thought that those people had been sent from France for Auschwitz — to Auschwitz, and in fact the people got out of the train in a place called Kosel, K-o-s-e-l, and there are many mistakes of this kind. Because when they see — we have a tremendous amount of leads, we can't check everything, every body. Somebody can disappear but he cannot make disappear the proof of its existence before.

Q. Yes.

A. It's difficult. So we have many correction to do with this book of Klarsfeld, because people who are sent from France, who we suppose it was to Auschwitz and it was elsewhere, and they were considered as dead — gassed, gassed. This is the terrible danger of this reasoning, the way of reasoning, saying those people left and we {2522|2523} don't know where they are. We must be very careful. We must not conclude that they were gassed, killed. We must try to make a research, and it is easy to make a research. If I had the right to work in the International Tracing Service of Arolsen, I could, I think, very quickly say how many Jews deported from France were alive at the end of the war. But this work has not been done, and it is this kind of work that I would be ready to make with Dr. Hilberg, Raul Hilberg or anybody else.

Q. Could we deal with the testamentary [sic] foundations for the allegation of the numbers killed at Auschwitz now? Specially, the War Refugee Board report and the activities of Vrba, who was a witness here. Can you tell us what you know that —

A. I know that his total is 1,765,000 of Jews gassed during two years.

Q. Are there other conflicting totals with that?

A. Oh, yes, because we have so many different totals.

Q. Tell us about them, giving the names of the persons, the books they published and the differences they give.

A. Excuse me, I am going to do something which would be more easy, perhaps. I would say that we must read an article published in Lemangerie (phonetic), a Jewish word, by George Wellers, W-e-l-l-e-r-s, —

Q. Yes.

A. — very recently. It is a tentative to try ...

Q. A tentative or an attempt? {2523|2524}

A. An attempt to try to determine the right number of Jews gassed or killed.

Q. Yes.

A. So in his article on something like half a page, he gives some example of figures.

Q. Yes.

A. And the figures given by George Wellers, he quotes the sources every time. I cannot remember all those sources.

Q. Yes.

A. It begins at eight million.

Q. Yes.

A. Then suddenly we have five million, four hundred and fifty and so on.

Q. Four million five hundred thousand?

A. Thousand, yes. That's the Russian Commission of Auschwitz who established that.

Q. Is this pertaining to Auschwitz specifically?

A. Oh, yes, excuse me, only Auschwitz.

Q. We are not talking about the total figure?

A. No, no, no, only Auschwitz. And then this Russian Commission said after, "But sometimes gas chamber were not operating, so we must make a reduction." They made a reduction up till four million or more than four million, something like that. We have seven million, we have four million, we have three million and a half.

Q. Who does that come from?

A. From different sources.

Q. Can you name them?

A. Quoted by Wellers.

Q. Yes.

A. I could quote the Russian Commission.

Q. Yes. {2524|2525}

A. I could quote the Polish Commission.

Q. Are those figures different?

A. Yes, a little bit. I think that the Russian said something that more than four million, and the Polish said four million. It was a kind of dispute.

Q. What other figures are provided at International Military Tribunal?

A. Yes, we have the figure given by Rudolph Hoess, himself.

Q. Which is ...

A. Which is three million. He said two million and a half gassed, and five hundred thousand who died by other causes.

Q. Yes. And now we have — do we have other —

A. And we have many confessions of Hoess refuting these figures. I have even there a book.

Q. Now, I'm interested in the figures, doctor, so I want to concentrate on any other estimate of figures from current historians.

A. Yes, and then after — I cannot quote the source given by George Wellers.

Q. What does Hilberg say?

A. We have one million and seven hundred thousand.

Q. From who?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. What does Hilberg say?

A. Hilberg says sometimes over one million and sometime one million.

Q. Yes. Does anybody give less than that for Auschwitz? {2525|2526}

A. Gerald Reitlinger, R-e-i-t-l-i-e-n-g-e-r, says more than seven hundred thousand gassed.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. And it's difficult to understand Reitlinger because you have page 501 and page 502. On page 501 it seems that he says between eight hundred thousand and nine hundred thousand, and on page 502 you have more than seven hundred thousand. It's difficult to understand. And it's interesting to study the different version given by Reitlinger.

Q. All right. What do you make of all these confusions from eight million to seven hundred thousand? What's your opinion of all that?

A. I think that those figures are given — are not accurate. Never we are told how those figures have been found.

Q. Now, what other evidence —

A. Or sometimes, George Wellers tried to give explanation, but I must say that I tried to understand I his explanation; I didn't succeed.

Q. What other reasons are we to believe these the story that six million or thereabouts, Jews, were gassed during the war? What other support is there for that belief other than the various testimony of figures you've just given?

A. Oh, we have something very important who happened on the 14th of December, 1945, at the Nurnberg Trial.

Q. What is that?

A. That's very important.

Q. What happened there then?

A. A german [sic] called Wilhelm Hoettl had signed an affidavit, I suppose, and the American prosecutor quoted this affidavit ... {2526|2527}

Q. Yes.

A. ... saying that there had been I think six million, I think it was this — yes, it was six million, that six million Jews died during the war. This was on the morning of the 14th of December — did I say 14th?

Q. You did.

A. Yes, it was in the morning. And the defence lawyer of Anton Brunner, I think, didn't say anything. At the beginning of the session after lunch, this defence lawyer said to the president of the Tribunal, "This morning it has been said that Hoettl has said that six million Jews were — died during the war. I would like this witness to come here," and it is very easy to do it because [he] is in the jail itself of Nurnberg.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. And then the American prosecutor, I think it was Walsh, W-a-l-s-h,

Q. Yes.

A. ... said that — that's a sum up of my part, I cannot quote exactly, said, "Your Honour, no, we do not intend to affirm anything with that." It has been given like that, like an approximation. I think that the defence lawyer insisted and — to have Hoettl, and the president said — decided. "No, he is not coming."

Q. Was that the basis of the six million figure?

A. I cannot say what is the basis of any common faith, because I don't know why exactly the people believe what they believe.

Q. Was William Hoettl ever accused?

A. Yes, he was accused, but I cannot give any detail about him. {2527|2528}

Q. All right. What of significance is the Hoess statements, H-o-e-s-s?

A. I said, yes, that as we had no material proof, not one, of the existence of a single noticeable gas chamber, all this story of the gas chamber stands on three pillars. The first one is Vrba, the W.R.B. Report and Dr. Vrba.

Q. Yes.

A. The second one is Rudolph Hoess.

Q. Yes.

A. He was one of the three successive commandants of Auschwitz. We must remember that there were two others.

Q. Yes.

A. And the third pillar is Kurt Gerstein. When you take those three people one by one, when you see their testimonies, I don't think that you can give them any credence.

Q. Why not? Let's deal with them one at a time. First of all, let's deal with Gerstein.

A. Gerstein, chronologically, is the last.

Q. Is the last. All right. Which is the first, chronologically, that you'd like to deal with?

A. The W.R.B.

Q. Why should we not believe the W.R.B. report?

A. Because of those figures that we have commented.

Q. Yes.

A. But surely, because of the plans given of the alleged crematorium, alleged gas chamber, they are total impossibilities in that.

Q. Yes. You're not allowed to comment on {2528|2529} those because your expertise —

A. I'm not an architect, so I have no right.

Q. You can't say anything about the plans.

A. I can say only something perhaps. It is that if — I'm not going to give my plans. I was the first to publish that.

Q. I'll —

A. In this book.

Q. In your book, in the book "Verite Historique and Verite Politique", you published some plans at page 320. Are those the plans you're referring to?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did they come from?

A. From the archives of the Auschwitz Museum.

Q. Yes. And were these published for all the world to see by you?

A. Yes.

Q. And were they published and distributed to Ernst Zundel?

A. Yes. Ernst Zundel knew even this plan, I can tell you exactly, in September, 1978, in Los Angeles, he saw this plan.

Q. How do you know? Were you there with him?

A. I was there, he was there, and because of my bad English I remember that I asked him to read my conference. He did it.

THE COURT: This is Mr. Zundel, is it?

THE WITNESS: Mr. Zundel, yes.

THE COURT: You asked Mr. Zundel where?

THE WITNESS: We were in Los Angeles.

THE COURT: In Los Angeles?

THE WITNESS: Los Angeles, excuse me. {2529|2530}

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. At a historical review conference; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had a paper to present?

A. Yes, I presented the paper, about the technical impossibilities of the gassings.

Q. And you had Mr. Zundel read it because of your English?

A. Yes.

Q. And probably because you were tired? I'm leading you, but ...

A. No.

Q. No, all right. Now, in respect to this W.R.B. report, you say because of the drawings respecting the gas chambers that are in the W.R.B. report and that in relation to the plans you found; is that right?

A. Yeah.

Q. Any other reason why you say we should not believe the W.R.B. report of Dr. Vrba and others?

A. The plan of Auschwitz, the plan of Birkenau, the plan of the crematorium.

Q. What about them?

A. They do not — they are nothing.

Q. What do you mean, they're nothing?

A. When you see the reality of the place ...

Q. Yes.

A. ... it does not stand, that's all. When you see on the same level a gas chamber, then a track to put the people, the bodies in the furnaces, and when you see that in fact this place which was a mortuary was underground, that you had a little lift, and on the — at the other level you had the furnaces ... {2530|2531}

Q. Yes.

A. ... and the furnaces are not at all like they have been drawn by Dr. Vrba, and he said —

Q. What do you conclude from that, doctor?

A. I conclude that it is not exact,

Q. What do you conclude about the author of that, if he says it is exact?

A. I say, "You say something which is not exact."

Q. All right. So is there any other reason why we should not believe the W.R.B. report?

A. Yes, because, for example, you have the report of the Polish major.

Q. Yes, which is part of the W.R.B. report?

A. Yes, I remember that, that there are many things; this Polish major says that the people were gassed by a hydrocyanic bomb.

Q. That, too, is included in the same W.R.B. report?

A. Yes, but we must know that — about the handle — the handling of this gas.

Q. You are not qualified to comment on the handling of the gas.

A. Not about that, no. I want only to say what the witnesses claim.

Q. All right.

A. We have all the explanation possible, absolutely all.

Q. From who?

A. From all the people who have written about that.

Q. Uh-huh, and what is it that creates a problem {2531|2532} with it?

A. The problem is that Sophia Lezinska (phonetic) says, for example, that the gas was coming from the ground, that there was an alarm clock, and that the ground was like that, and the gas emanated. Some other people say that this same gas came by showers. For an acid, it's impossible — oh, excuse me. So, others say that it was thrown by window even in an underground. Others say —

Q. You mean some people say that it's thrown from a window underground?

A. Yes, we have that, yes.

Q. Where is that from?

A. I don't remember. We have that.

Q. Well, you have to — if you're going to quote a source, you should identify it.

A. I would have to find among all those testimony.

Q. In future, if you're going to quote a source, just identify it.

A. So I mustn't say if I cannot say my source?

Q. You should identify the source.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, what other reasons do you say that the W.R.B. report is inaccurate or should not be taken as credible?

A. I think it's sufficient for me.

Q. All right. Now, the other pillar to the belief in the gas chambers at Auschwitz and the 2.5 million people killed was Hoess, eh?

A. Yes.

Q. He says 2.5 million or 3 million?

A. Two point five. {2532|2533}

Q. Million gassed, and three million killed?

A. And other died.

Q. Were there camp records kept and are those available to researchers?

A. Very difficult question. Myself, I found documents that —

Q. Where?

A. In the Auschwitz Museum, for instance.

Q. Yes.

A. Or elsewhere, in Paris in the – in the archives of the Military Justice.

Q. Yes.

A. Plans or document that I thought that they were no more existing. I found them. We cannot know. We can suppose that – we have reason to suppose that the policy of interesting documents, and especially books about the surgical operation in Auschwitz, but we had only one of this book which appear in a trial in England.

Q. Why should we not believe Hoess when he tells us in his confessions that 2.5 million people were gassed, and does he say Jews were gassed or just people were gassed?

A. "People", I think.

Q. People were gassed.

A. I think he said "people".

Q. Why should we not believe that?

A. For material impossibilities

Q. Such as ...

A. I cannot tell you.

Q. You cannot tell us what material impossibilities are?

A. I know them but I'm not qualified to say. {2533|2534}

THE COURT: They have to do with architectural structure?

THE WITNESS: Yes, architectural structures, the time you need for a cremation, the quantity of coke, c-o-k-e, and all that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Uh-huh.

A. Because, you see, those extraordinary slaughter-houses, which normally would have needed so many studies between architects and

Q. Yes.

A. — and so on, chemists and all that, no proof whatsoever of that, no budget; that's very important, no budget, and I think that Dr. Hilberg agrees with that.

Q. So you can't, because of your lack of expertise in the areas of chemistry and architecture, tell us the reasons why you disbelieve the Hoess confession?

A. No.

Q. Oh.

A. The right point about the three million, but for other things I can say why.

Q. What can you say is dubious about the Hoess confession?

A. What is dubious is this story that he tells us. In June, 1941, he says that he was called by Himmler, who received – without anybody, and who told him "We have to organize the final solution of the Jewish problem."

Q. Yes.

A. "And you have to do this yourself, try to find a way."

Q. Yes.

A. And it got back, that's what he says in {2534|2535} his memoirs

Q. Yes.

A. It got back to Auschwitz.

THE COURT: Who says, in whose memoirs?

THE WITNESS: Hoess, Rudolph Hoess.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: And it got back to Auschwitz, and he went for a trip, I think, and one day coming back his ajudent (phonetic), his name is Fritsche, F-r-i-t-s-c-h-e,

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Yes.

A. ... told him, "I have gassed so many people with Zyklon-B," and Hoess says, "So we found like that the solution." But the thing which is strange is that in the book, in the memoirs, published by Martin Broszat in 1958 in German, we had to wait eleven years to have those memoirs

Q. Yes.

A. — in their original language.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. And in footnote, Martin Broszat says elsewhere that Fritsche was dismissed as a man who was incompetent, a man who is supposed to have invented that.

Q. What do you find dubious about the procedure you have described that comes from the Hoess memoirs?

A. What I found dubious is the fact that something which is so important was oral.

Q. Why is that dubious?

A. I think it is dubious because you cannot say, it seems to me, "We are going to kill millions of people and there will be no paper, nothing, it will be between us two."

Q. What was your finding as to the usual {2535|2536} practice for carrying out and transmitting orders in the German military practices of the day?

A. I could say that it's very surprising to me how many orders we needed – German needed for anything.

Q. Such as ...

A. Such as for the dogs in Auschwitz.

Q. What about them?

A. How many dogs, what amount of money, et cetera, et cetera.

Q. Was everything committed to writing?

A. I cannot say everything, but ...

Q. Pertaining to dogs, were there orders in writing?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Pertaining to the deaths of anyone by any cause?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What happened there?

A. In the case of a natural death, you had something like more than twenty signatures. In the case of a non-natural death, execution or suicide or things like that, you had about thirty signatures.

Q. We don't understand what you mean by "we had about thirty signatures"

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What do you mean by that, so the jury can understand?

A. The German had to sign papers and papers for – I would say everything, but in this case we had so many signatures.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. My – I can indicate my source. {2536|2537}

Q. Yes, I think you can. Tell us your source.

A. It has been published in a Polish medical review.

Q. Yes.

A. It has been translated into French, English, et cetera, in what we call the Blue Anthology of Auschwitz, which is not very well known. It is not even printed. It is what we call typewritten.

Q. Typewritten?

A. Yeah.

Q. And that comes from Polish authorities?

A. I think that it comes from Dr. – I'm not sure, Feijkl, F-e-i-j-k-l. I'm not sure.

Q. Can you tell us any other reasons from your research why you disbelieve the Hoess confession?

A. Because is extremely vague about the gassings. When he gives for once a little – it is about those people who get into the gas chamber eating or smoking. I remember that Dr. Hilberg commented that page

Q. Yes.

A. — that you showed him.

Q. Yes.

A. But it was done a little bit too quickly.

Q. Why?

A. Because Dr. Hilberg thought that this operation of transportation of the corp (sic) was done outside to the pits. The text says to the ovens, which means inside, or to the pits, and all that was supposed to be done by people eating, smoking, which is an impossibility. You cannot touch a corpse —

Q. Never mind, you can't say anything about that.

Do you have any evidence to indicate whether {2537|2538} there was torture involved with the Hoess confession?

THE COURT: That's a leading question if ever heard one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, of course, I have to move from one subject to another. You've told me to control the witness. I'm trying to —

THE COURT: I didn't tell you to control the witness by leading the witness. Go ahead and ask the question, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. What do you know about torture in respect to Hoess?

THE COURT: What, if anything, do you know about torture?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I'm sorry.

THE WITNESS: I have – there is memoirs in an English edition, "Commandant of Auschwitz", Cleveland, New York, 1960, page 193. I am going to read only what he said, and the interest – interesting point is that the Poles permitted him to write that. How is it that the Poles permitted – permitted Hoess to say that he had been maltreated by the British?

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Tell us why it's interesting, because maybe we don't understand that.

A. Okay. Why it is interesting?

Q. Yes, why is it interesting in that the Poles permitted him to say he was tortured by the British?

A. It is surprising that the Poles could let him say those things, "I have been maltreated, and I have signed a paper not knowing what was inside this paper." It was the most important paper for the Nurnberg trial. The most important date for the Nurnberg trial is the 15 of {2538|2539} April, 1946, because this day Hoess came and the American prosecutor read his affidavit.

Q. Yes.

A. And Hoess was there saying, "Yes, yes, yes," and sometime he gave also some extended answers, but it's this day that officially his confession has been taken for granted in Nurnberg, and now we see that Hoess, if we have to believe Hoess and what the Poles let him write, he said,

"I was maltreated by the field security police. I was taken to Heide", H-e-i-d-e, "where I was put in those very barracks from which I had been released earlier. At my first interrogation, evidence was obtained by beating me. I do not know what is in the report, although I signed it." May I read the footnote? Footnote number 1:

"A typewritten document of eight pages which Hoess signed at 2:30 a.m. on March 14, 1946. It does not differ substantially from what he later said or wrote in Nurnberg or Krakow."

And I must admit that.

"Alcohol and the whip were too much for me. It seems that – It means sometime they used my whip against me, and sometimes when I fainted, more or less, they gave me alcohol."

I suppose.

"The whip was my own, which by chance had got into my wife's luggage. It had hardly ever touched my horse, far less the prisoners. Nevertheless, one of my interrogators was {2539|2540} convinced that I had purposefully used it for flogging the prisoners. After some days I was taken to Minden on the Weser," W-e-s-e-r, "the main interrogation centre in the British Zone. There I received further rough treatment at the hands of the English public prosecutor, a major. The commission in the prison accorded with this behaviour." Et cetera.

Q. Do you have a photograph of the event you've last described?

A. Of the ...

Q. Event you last described involving the English major?

A. Yes.

Q. Where does that photograph come from?

A. So this book is from Torn Bower, B-o-w-e-r. The title is, "Blind Eye-to Murder, Britain, America and the Purging of Nazi Germany, a Pledge Betrayed". It's published by Granada, 1981.

Q. Does it show a picture of Hoess being interrogated, or is there a caption to that?

A. We see Hoess, and a wall behind himself, and a colonel, Gerald Drapper [Draper], of the British War Crimes Group. He is photographed as he finally secured the confession of Rudolph Hoess, the Commandant of Auschwitz, to the murder of three million people.

Q. It's not clear what you were reading there. Were you reading the caption?

A. Yes, excuse me, it was the caption.

Q. So let me just show that, if I may, to the jury. First, show it to His Honour. {2540|2541}

A. And may I say, because there is another photo, may I say something about the other photo?

Q. Well, does it pertain to Hoess?

A. It pertains to Josef Kramer, who received, I think, the same treatment. I have the proof there.

Q. Who was Josef Kramer?

A. Josef Kramer was at the time in Auschwitz, then he was in Stutthof, then he was in Bergen-Belsen.

Q. Who was he?

A. Chief of the camp.

Q. If His Honour will permit us, I would like to show that picture that you've shown to us to the jury.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could I see it for a moment Your Honour? Is this to go to the truth of the allegation or to somebody's belief in the allegation? If I can ask what the purpose of the —

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's to demonstration the type of oppression that was used. The photograph is very clear and the jury can draw their own inferences from it, but it's to support the allegation that he was intimidated and was a wreck. That will be my argument.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is there any photo credit?

MR. CHRISTIE: Photo credit? No.

THE WITNESS: We can make a photocopy.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, he wants a photo credit, meaning who took the picture.

THE WITNESS: Excuse me.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no objection to the photograph being shown to the jury. If it goes to the belief. If we are talking about the truth of it, then I think we {2541|2542} should know more about the photo.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, the photo – how do you define the truth of a photo? I mean, —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I mean, when was it taken?

MR. CHRISTIE: As to when it was taken?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, before or after he testified —

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, the caption underneath, which was read, is the identification, the only identification we have. The book, it's published, it's public knowledge.

THE COURT: Do you propose to show a picture in the book to the jury to support or buttress the belief of this witness that the commander of this concentration camp, Hoess, was abused by his captors?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: You may show it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: It's to support a belief; it's not for the truth.

THE WITNESS: That's —

THE COURT: You just – please – it's to show – it's not introduced to prove the truth of the contents.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I understand now, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then you may show the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. Thank you.

Q. For the benefit of the jury, do you identify the person on the right with his back to the wall as Hoess?

A. Yes.

Q. And the person on the left with his hands on his hips as the person —

A. Supposed to be —

Q. — Colonel Gerald Drapper? {2542|2543}

A. Drapper.

THE COURT: We won't get into how he recognizes them. I don't suppose either one of them were friends of this witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

THE COURT: Perhaps you could show it to the jury and let's get on with it.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Can I hand it to them, Your Honour?

THE WITNESS: How about Josef Kramer?

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Yes. And you were saying something about Josef Kramer, whose picture is underneath, and to your belief about his treatment. He was a commandant of another camp; is that right?

A. Yes. He was commandant of another camp, and the last time at Bergen-Belsen. He has been hanged. I have there a book.

THE COURT: Are we going to talk about Kramer now?

THE WITNESS: Kramer, yes, excuse me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. You see, I think we'd better just stick with Commandant Hoess, because that's getting off the track, and His Honour wants to deal with one thing at a time, as we must do with the jury.

Now, have you any other reasons for raising doubts in your own mind and publishing those doubts about the accuracy and truthfulness of Hoess' confession, any other reasons to doubt?

A. I have other reasons, because of the figures given by Hoess, because of —

Q. What about them?

A. Three million. {2543|2544}

Q. What about that, what's dubious about that?

A. I think that this figure is absolutely impossible, and that now we realize it because even Dr. Hilberg says one million.

Q. Yes. So you say because he confessed to three million and we now recognize — or authorities and official historians recognize one million, that that's a reason to believe that he was —

A. Yes, yes.

Q. All right.

A. And the other reason for the manuscript itself, I know that we do not have the drafts of Hoess. I have seen photocopies of his memoirs, written with a pencil, and we don't have the draft. It would be very interesting to have the draft.

Q. Mm-hmm. Any other reasons respecting Hoess?

A. I myself, I think that the material impossibilities are the most important, for myself.

Q. All right, and you are not allowed I to go into them.

A. That's the kind of argument that I think, for myself, important.

Q. All right. Now, let us deal then — because you can't deal with those material —

A. And the story of the gassing of the Russians in Auschwitz I were also —

Q. What about that?

A. That the Russian prisoners were put in the gas chamber and that during this time holes were made into the cement to put Zyklon.

Q. You mean that Hoess said that? {2544|2545}

A. Yes.

Q. When and where?

A. In his memoirs.

Q. He says that Russian prisoners were gassed in Auschwitz I, and while they were there the holes were drilled to put the gas in?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you think about that?

A. I don't believe it.

Q. Anything else you can recall from your research about Hoess that raises doubts about his credibility?

A. I would need to have my dossier there.

Q. All right. There are other things you could remember perhaps from your dossier, is that it?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Rather than do that at this point, I would like to ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it's five to one. I wonder, Your Honour, if we could break for lunch. I was about to move into the area of Gerstein. Would it be appropriate or should I —

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I am going to be otherwise engaged, I hope for a very short few minutes, at 2:15. You are excused till 2:30.

THE REGISTRAR: Members of the jury, you may retire.

— the jury retired at 12:55 p.m. Proceedings adjourned to 2:30 p.m.

VOLUME XII

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I wonder if I may speak to you about a matter in the absence of the jury.

I have had, for the last two days, a professional model maker from Ottawa. Now, the reason I wanted to introduce his evidence, he has made from the plans provided from Dr. Faurisson, that he will be able to testify he obtained from the Auschwitz Museum, he made models, scale models of the various crematoria from the plans. Now, this I would not propose to tender for the proof of the truth of either the plans or the models, but to prove the honesty of my client's belief and the level of diligent inquiry into — the type of inquiry he conducted into the feasibility of the stories of the gas chamber there put forward by various eye witnesses.

This is not necessarily to prove the truth or falsity of anything in particular, but to demonstrate the inquiry that my client has undertaken. These inquiries were undertaken a long time ago in terms of obtaining the plans. The models are a more recent {2546|2547} inquiry.

I didn't want to raise the subject in the presence of the jury for obvious reasons, but the models are here, the model-makers are in the witness room, and if I could I would like to introduce that evidence to be analyzed, because Dr. Faurisson and the accused have inquired into the feasibility of certain of the stories that have been published about the gas chambers.

THE COURT: Let me see if I have it. You want to introduce a model of the plan of the concentration camp Auschwitz, I gather.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry, not the concentration camp. The original crematoria building.

THE COURT: That a model maker has made from plans of the camp?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: You want to do that to buttress or support the honesty of the belief that what your client was publishing was true.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: The model having been made since this litigation started. {2547|2548}

MR. CHRISTIE: This particular model. There's three of them, yes. The others, there were previous ones.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I frankly don't see how that can be evidence of anything, Your Honour, in particular, evidence of the belief of the diligence or honesty and belief of Mr. Zundel. The model wasn't made until after he was arrested or charged. If it was before the arrest, then I might have a different submission.

I'd like to think about that, but if it was made after the arrest, I cannot have a different submission, Your Honour.

I am not sure what a model will tell us unless we have what was existing in Auschwitz as to what was above-ground and what was below ground and what-have-you. So I would object.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. The question that arises is as to why it should be admissible in view of the fact that it has been created after the charge.

My client will be testifying that he {2548|2549} is a person with an ongoing inquiry, that he has an open mind and has willingness to learn both from all other evidence and even in this trial. He has listened to the evidence, and he is conducting and continuing to conduct inquiry into this subject; it isn't something that he has carved in stone. This is honestly his view. He honestly believed it and still believes it, but he is not a close-minded person. He is trying to understand the theory of the extermination process of the gas chamber, so he made the inquiry.

My friend's question about the great and other circumstances I had hoped to answer by the introduction of photographs taken by Dr. Faurisson at the scene with his own presence there, so he could prove that the scene depicted is the scene of Auschwitz and the crematoria building. I have other photographic evidence to prove that as well. I had hoped to introduce that, because I have the people who took the photographs, and they are available, and I had hoped to say, not to prove the truth or falsity of anything, but that that is a photograph taken at the scene because the eye witness has taken it.

I don't know any better way to show {2549|2550} the jury what there is to consider. That is really why I hoped to introduce this evidence, that it demonstrates my client's serious, sincere inquiry to examine the available evidence, and to test it to see if it makes sense, as an ordinary human being not as an expert, because he is trying to assess the credibility of a complex question as a layman. That's all.

He has to prove to the jury, I suppose, his honest belief; if the jury, as they may, take it that's he's wrong, they have to decide whether he's honest in his belief. And that, I think, involves the level of inquiry that he has undertaken; and one of the most detailed and time-consuming he spent on inquiries that he has undertaken was the commissioning and creation of scale models.

So I realize my friend's concern and all I can say is, this was done to enable the accused to understand the situation as depicted in the various stories that are from eye witnesses.

MR. GRIFFITH5: If I may, Your Honour – I don't want to have a tennis match, but just a couple of comments. First of all, I would not say now, and {2550|2551} never would say there is any obligation on Mr. Zundel to prove anything. This is a criminal trial, and I am not calling for proof, nor can I call for proof of Mr. Zundel.

Secondly, Your Honour, I think the question as to grates – and I am purely basing this on the cross-examination of Dr. Vrba – it may be an important one to the defence if it's based on photographs of what we heard of installations, but the photographs are taken thirty years after the events, and we are going to be asked to take conclusions from that. I would suggest that that evidence would be misleading in the extreme and would be asking the jury to compare apples and oranges.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Just one point my friend raised. The plans do indicate the ground level, and they are original plans. They are made during the War prior to construction. I mean, they come from the Auschwitz Museum.

We are not here to prove their truth or anything, but they do set out all the necessary data for the creation of these models – not that we are trying to prove the truth, but their reasonableness. {2551|2552}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused has moved, in the absence of the jury, for leave to lead evidence in the form of a model of what is said to be a gas chamber, as I understand, or the crematorium in a concentration camp known as Auschwitz.

He makes it clear that that model has been recently created by a model maker upon the instructions of the defence.

He seeks to lead it through the witness, Faurisson. His purpose is to buttress or support a belief by the accused in the truthfulness of the publication, Exhibit 1, entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Mr. Christie has indicated that he intends to call the accused as a witness. There is no obligation, of course, that the defence call any defence at all, to say nothing of calling the accused. If that is the intention, the accused certainly can testify as any other witness in his own defence.

It seems to me that it would be quite inappropriate at this time to admit such evidence through Dr. Faurisson simply because the belief, if any, in the truthfulness of the publication surely must be a belief {2552|2553} in the publication at the time the publication is made and not in retrospect in preparing for a defence.

Mr. Christie makes it clear that Mr. Zundel's mind is not fixed by way of notions concerning the contents of Exhibit 1. He submits that the accused has been carrying on an ongoing inquiry into the issues that are contained within the pages of Exhibit 1. That may very well be.

There is no evidence to that at this time from the source that is said by the Crown to have had no honest belief in what was published.

For these reasons, at this time, the motion to lead this evidence through this witness is dismissed. It may be renewed at a future time when there is relevant evidence on the record.

It is a model made in contemplation of creating a defence. That, in itself, is natural and normal. Unfortunately for the defence, at this particular stage of the trial the belief must be the belief, as a matter of law, at the time the publication was admittedly made, and not a belief made in retrospect, or an honest belief even now.

The motion is dismissed for those {2553|2554} reasons.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. Then can I proceed?

THE COURT: Yes. Certainly. Is there anything else before the jury comes in?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir, unless my friend has. I would like to recommence with Dr. Faurisson.

— {2554|2555}

— The jury enters. 2:50 p.m.

ROBERT FAURISSON, previously sworn

(?) Q. Can you tell us, sir, what happened as a result of Hoettl's affidavit which was not relied upon in the IMT for anything particularly to the reporting of that event in the public minutes and press of the day?

A. Yes. I think that this figure of six million Jews has been concentrated this day, I mean the 14th of December, 1945.

Q. Why do you think that?

A. Because I see that many times it is referred to this declaration of Hoettl in every book – Hilberg, Reitlinger, and so on. We have a reference to what Hoettl said this day, he maybe said in exactly in his affidavit read by the American prosecutor. The American prosecutor said that it was not important, or something of this kind, but we must say that, all the same, this figure has been kept in memory and reproduced by the medias, by the historians, and they think that with good faith, that this figure has been really established in the Nuremberg trial, which is not the case.

Q. So that is why you mention that.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. We were going to go {2555|2556} into the subject of Gerstein, but was there anything more you wanted to say about Hoess in relation to the credibility of his evidence?

A. Yes. I wanted to rectify something that I said this morning.

Q. What was that?

A. I said this morning that Hoess said that when the Russian prisoners were in the gas chamber, holes were made during this time.

Q. What do you mean by the holes – the holes of Zyklon-B?

A. The holes to put Zyklon-B.

Q. What is exact?

A. The German text said during the unloading of Russian this was made.

Q. What was made?

A. Holes into the cement.

Q. So that is the exact text of what is supposed to have been said?

A. The German word is Entladen.

Q. Now, you have heard Dr. Hilberg's testimony about the reasons why he relied on Gerstein, and I would like to ask you what is your opinion of the statements of Gerstein. What do you have to say about them?

A. My opinion is that we cannot building anything from those statements.

Q. Why?

A. Because they are totally unbelievable.

THE COURT: They are what? {2556|2557}

THE WITNESS: Unbelievable.

MR. CHRISTIE: Why?

A. I am going to give some examples. I am going to talk first about the most well-known of the Gerstein statements.

Q. You mean there is more than one?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. Six.

Q. Carry on.

A. The most well-known is in French. The French is as bad as my English. Document called PS-1553 Gerstein is supposed to have written this statement in Germany when he was prisoner of the French army.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. We are told that he gave this statement to the French people, but it seems that they were not interested by his statement. Then he saw a British and an American, kind of two members of a commission of inquiry, and he gave them his statement. So the American people had this statement. In Nuremberg, in the Nuremberg trial, this, statement was not used. When we say that in Nuremberg trial PS 1553 was used, it is a mistake. Only the part of it which was constituted by voice of Zyklon was taken and presented in the Nuremberg trial.

Q. So then why does Hilberg rely on it so often in his book, as we found from his testimony?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that's a question for Dr. Hilberg, Your Honour, not Dr. Faurisson. {2557|2558}

THE COURT: You can ask him what comments he has on the number of references in the book.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You are the person who counted the number of references in Dr. Hilberg's book as to the Gerstein statement, didn't you? You counted how many times Dr. Hilberg states "Gerstein" in his book?

A. Yes. His name, I think, appears twenty-three times, and this document is quoted ten times. And I think that the people who believe in the gas chambers, they need absolutely something. So I think that they are ready to take anything.

Q. So what's incredible about Gerstein?

A. Gerstein tells us this story. He was a specialist of disinfection, and one day he was asked to go to Belzec. He says – may I quote?

Q. Yes.

A. "On 8 June, 1942, the S.S." – I leave the rank – "Guenther of the RSHA entered my office. He was in plain clothes and I did not know him. He ordered me to get a hundred kilograms of prussic acid and to accompany him to a place which was only known to the driver of the truck."

In all the versions we have 260 kilos.

"We left for the potassium factory near Colling (Prague). Once the truck was loaded, we left for Lublin (Poland). We took with us Professor" — Q. At any point you want to comment on incredibility, stop and go on. {2558|2559}

A. Okay. "We took with us Professor Pfannenstiel [Pfannenstiel] M.D., Ordinary Professor for Hygiene at the University of Narburg [Marburg] on the Lahn. At Lublin, we were received by S.S. Gruppenfuhrer Globocnik. He told us: this is one of the most secret matters there are, even the most secret. Whoever talks of this shall be shot immediately. Yesterday, two talkative ones died. Then he explained to us: at the present moment – 17 August 1942 – there are three installations:

1. Belzec [Belzec] on the Lublin-Lemberg road, in the sector of the Russian demarcation line. Maximum 15,000 persons a day."

And he says, "Seen". He means that he have seen that – fifteen thousand killed by day, maximum.

"2. Sobibor, I do not know exactly where it is located. Not seen. 20,000 persons by day.

3. Treblinka, 120 km NNE of Warsaw. 25,000 persons per day. Seen!

4. Maidanek, near Lublin. Seen in the state of preparation."

So those figures are incredible.

Q. Why?

A. Because if I see what Dr. Hilberg says in "Documents of Destruction", page 205, he says that the number of people allegedly gassed in the three camps were as follows: Belzec about 600,000, Sobibor about 250,000, Treblinka over 700,000. So if we take those figures of Dr. Hilberg, it would mean that those camps killed for Belzec, all of them 600,000 in forty days, Sobibor all of them 250,000 in twelve and a half days, Treblinka all of them over 700,000 in twenty-eight days.

Those camps, the first one, Belzec {2559|2560} was established in 1942. It seemed that he has been in operation for ten months. Sobibor, in 1942, '43, it seem[s] that he has been in operation for seventeen months and a half. Treblinka, 1942, 1943, it seems for fifteen months. Excuse me if I say "it seems", because I have studied the question of Belzec, Sobibor and Treblinka, and really, we have nothing consistent about those camps.

First of all, we have no plan. We, in some books, we have so-called plans. They are said to be done by the memory of a former inmate, and generally it is said that the German accused agreed with those plans. Those plans seems [sic] to show us very little camp.

Raul Hilberg speaks about Treblinka of the square meter compound. So those figures are very surprising. Then:

"Globocnik then said: You will have to handle the sterilization of very huge quantities of clothes ..."

Q. Do you say clothes?

A. Yes. "... clothes and textile collection, which is only arranged in order to conceal the source of these Jewish, Polish, Czech and other clothes. Your other duties will be to change the method of our gas chambers (which are run at the present time with the exhaust gasses of an old Diesel engine) ..."

Q. Old diesel engine?

A. So I wonder now, an old diesel engine could kill so many people by day. "... employing more poisonous material, having a quicker effect, prussic acid." Prussic acid is hydrocyanic acid or Zyklon-B.

"But the Fuhrer and Himmler, who were here on 15 August – the day before yesterday – ordered that {2560|2561} I accompany personally all those who are to see the installations."

I have not made myself an inquiry to see at that time if Hitler and Himmler were on the spot, but we are told by Poliakov, by Mr. Hilberg and all the historians that Hitler was not there. They don't say anything about Himmler. I suppose that if they had to prove that Himmler was there at that time, they would give us this proof. Then he goes on talking about a Doctor Lindner, which never existed, which is probably Dr Linden. And there is a reflection from Hitler to Globocnik, "That is what we are supposed to do."

Q. So this is supposed to be a direct quote from Hitler to Globocnik?

A. Yes.

Q. In the presence of Gerstein?

A. Yes.

Q. What rank is Gerstein?

A. I would say Lieutenant, in your country, perhaps.

Q. So just so we understand this statement, now, I want to make it clear. If I am not misunderstanding you, you are saying that this statement indicates a conversation between Adolf Hitler, somebody called Globocnik, in the presence of Lieutenant Gerstein.

A. And we suppose Professor Pfannenstiel.

Q. Do you know who he was?

A. Yes.

Q. Where was he from?

A. He was a professor of medicine in Marburg.

Q. Where is that? {2561|2562}

A. In Germany.

Q. Is that near Treblinka?

A. No. Treblinka is in Poland.

Q. Is there any source that this professor was ever in Poland?

A. It seems that he has been in Poland, that he has been with Gerstein, but it is a very complicated matter, this matter of the Professor, because he was sued after the War, and he made his sort of confession saying, "Yes, I agree. Yes, I was there. But Gerstein said so and so, and it is not true."

We don't know what the Professor did really think.

Q. What is your opinion about this statement of Gerstein?

A. My opinion is that Gerstein, perhaps, went to Belzec for disinfection purposes, and that's all.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

THE WITNESS: For delousing purposes. He was a specialist of delousing.

Q. Did he ever testify?

A. No, he never testified.

Q. Why?

A. Because he committed suicide in France, in Paris. Many people believed that his suicide is not true. I could give names of historians, but myself, I have studied this story of Gerstein, and at the moment, some years ago, I doubted about his suicide, but I believe now that it is possible. I would say after

why. I want to take things which looks impossible. {2562|2563}

Q. All right. There are more: is that right?

A. Yes. Much more, yes.

"Globocnik introduced me to S. S. ... Overmayer from Pirmasens", and by footnotes of German editions we know that this Overmayer, the village of Pirmasens never existed. So sometimes this is published with the – the name is changed and they put Overmayer, and they suppress Pirmasens.

Q. Where is that?

A. The place where the man comes from, is supposed to come from.

Q. I see.

A. And another confession is supposed to be a friend of Gerstein.

Q. Oh. So there are inconsistencies with other confessions on that point?

A. Yes.

Q. And in respect to that point, what is your opinion about the matter?

A. I would be pleased to give my opinion about Gerstein at the end.

Q. All right.

A. Then he says that there were three garage-like rooms on each side, four by five meters large, and 1.9 meters high. And he says that, "Next morning, a few minutes before 7, I was informed in 10 minutes the first train will arrive. And instead, a few minutes later, the first train came in from Lemberg, 45 cars containing 6,700 persons."

It looks to me extraordinary important {2563|2564} convoy. I have never heard myself, I think, about a convoy for more than 3,500. I don't think I have seen something about this kind. And he says, "1,450 of whom were already dead on their arrival."

It is difficult to conceive how he could counted that. "Behind the little barbed wire opening children, yellow, scared half of death, – women, men, The train arrives", etcetera. And he says that a small Jewish boy of four years of age is there giving a little piece of string to everyone to tie one's shoes. It would mean that the little boy of four years would have to do that 5,150 times, I think.

Then they go into the gas chamber. There are 700 to 800 pressured together to twenty-five square meters in forty-five cubic meters – which would mean twenty-eight to thirty two people in a square meter.

The doors are closed. Meanwhile the rest of the transport, all naked, wait.

Q. Naked.

A. Then he talks about the diesel engine. He says that he had to wait. He has a stop watch. He had to wait fifty minutes, seventy minutes, and the diesel engine does not start.

We really wonder how those people could stay fifty minutes, seventy minutes in such a space, twenty-eight to thirty people in a square meter.

Then, the Ukrainian were helping a man, eleven or twelve lashes in the face with the whip. "After two hours and forty-nine minutes" – so he is a man who seems to count very precisely – "as registered by my stop watch the diesel engine starts. Up to that moment {2564|2565} the people in the four already filled chambers were alive."

Before he said that I think there were six chambers, now we have four chambers. "Four times 750 persons in four times forty-five cubic meters."

That is the place where Leon Poliakov cut the text twice and put instead of twenty-five square meters, ninety-three. And he suppressed forty-five cubic meters. He suppressed forty-five cubic meters the second time.

"Another twenty-five minutes go by. Many of the people, it is true, are dead at that point. One can see this through the little window through which the electric lamp reveals for a moment, the inside of the chamber."

I really wonder how it is physically possible if those people are crushed like that, if you had a window who could resist to the pressure, I don't see how you could count the people as he does.

"One could see through the little window through which the electric lamp reveals for a moment, the inside of the chamber. After 28 minutes only a few are living."

How does he count?

"After thirty-two minutes, finally, all are dead."

How does he know that? Because they are not falling down, those people.

Q. What do you mean, because they are not falling down?

A. They are so crushed. {2565|2566}

Then he goes on saying, "The families can still be recognized, their hands still clasped".

And he talks once more about Overmayer from Pirmasens. Then he said, "The bodies were then thrown into large ditches of about one hundred meters by twenty meters by twelve meters."

That's something.

"The bodies were then thrown into large ditches. After a few days the bodies would swell up and the whole contents of the ditch would rise two to three meters high because of the gasses." "After a few more days the swelling would stop and the bodies would collapse."

But we know that Gerstein was there only for one day. How could he describe what is coming after? And then he goes on saying, "At Belzec and Treblinka nobody bothered to take anything approaching an exact count of the persons killed. The figures announced by the BBC are inaccurate. Actually, about twenty-five million of persons were killed."

And it means in August 1942, twenty-five millions.

Q. Well, this statement was attributed to that date.

A. He says that all that happened the 17th or 18th of August, 1942.

Q. Okay.

A. I think he arrived the 17th, and so that on the 18th, "The next day Captain Wirth's car took us to Treblinka, about 75 miles NNE of Warsaw. The installations of this death center differed scarcely from those {2566|2567} at Belzec, but they were still larger. There were eight gas chambers and whole mountains of clothes and underwear about thirty-five to forty meters high."

Thirty-five to forty meters high would make something like ten to twelve storage.

Q. Storeys?

A. How could we send all those clothes up to thirty-five, forty meters? And there are many things like that. He talks about the son of the Guenther of the Racial Theory, and it is said by the historian that it is not true. He talks about killing eight million people. He says the most disgusting camps were not Oranienburg, Dachau or Belsen, but Auschwitz and Mauthausen-Gussen near Linz. "These are the places in which millions of people disappeared in gas chambers or gas chamber-like cars."

"The method of killing the children was to hold a tampon with prussic acid under their nose."

You can ask it a specialist if it has sense.

"At Oranienburg, I saw how all the prisoners who were there for being pervers (homosexuals) disappeared in one single day." "I plan to write a book about my adventures with the Nazis. I am ready to swear to the absolute truth of all my statements."

And I cannot read the many, many other things from Gerstein, especially the document which is not quoted by Dr. Hilberg which is Document PS 2170, which is even more absurd.

Q. Absurd.

A. Yes. You have the story of people {2567|2568} who are taken by – how do you call that? They are taken to the top of a smelt furnace, and the S.S. is on the top waiting for them and he shot them one by one. You can imagine the state of the S.S. on top of this smelt furnace.

Q. A smelting furnace?

A. A smelting furnace, yes.

Q. That is a story told by Gerstein as well?

A. Yes. And he tells many, many other stories like that.

Q. And this is a source that was referred to by Dr. Hilberg?

A. Dr. Hilberg and everyone who says that the gas chamber existed, because those persons need absolutely testimonies so they have to take what they have. But the best way to do, I noticed that because I have been studying a very long time those Gerstein confessions, I would say, and I noticed that nobody except a man, a person called Peochva (phonetic), a person who believes in gas chamber, give the text entirely.

The technique is this one. The story of Gerstein is given up till the entrance into the gas chambers. Then it is cut. The text is cut. Nothing. And we have what is called the result.

Q. That's presented by what historians have used that technique?

A. Dr. Hilberg.

Q. Yes.

A. Reitlinger.

Q. What about Poliakov?

A. Poliakov, yes, absolutely, but he {2568|2569} proceeded on the other way. He took the story, but he cut all the end of it, and he transform and manipulated the core of the story.

Q. By changing numbers.

A. By changing numbers and by other things he did. And even that is surprising. In the NMT —

Q. The Nuremberg Military Tribunal.

A. Yes. We have in the volume concerns Oswald Pohl. This document is used, but he is not reproduced entirely, and it is a document of somebody who did not live at that time any more.

Q. So he didn't testify. They introduced the document.

A. And the book of Peochva in French is very interesting, because he went and visit the French prosecutor. His name is Dubost.

Q. His name appears in the transcript of the IMT, is that right?

A. Yes. That's right. And he saw him many, many years after the trial. And Charles Dubost told him, "I never understood why the American didn't want me to use this document which was in their files. We have found this document in their files." The woman who find this document is Madeline Jacob. She brought that to Charles Dubost. She said, "It is an extraordinary document." Charles Dubost wanted to use it, and Francis Biddle didn't want. And he never said why.

Q. And what function did Francis Biddle perform?

A. It was one of the judges, I think. {2569|2570}

Q. Okay.

A. I'm not sure.

Q. Is there any other reason why you disbelieve Gerstein?

A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. In his statement Gerstein said something which I think is quite true, because even somebody, [sic] even a liar says the truth sometime. And lie is a way of saying the truth. He says that, immediately after that, he took the train from Warsaw to Berlin, and that during the night they didn't find any place to lay down, and in the corridor he met a Swedish Ambassador, Baron von Otter.

Q. A Swedish ambassador?

A. A Swedish ambassador. And he told him this story. And he said, "You must say that to the world." So we know now, at least since the book of Walter Laqueur, the terrible secret. We know now.

Q. That is the name of his book?

A. "The Terrible Secret" is the name of his book. We know now that never the Swedish ambassador wrote anything to Stockholm. After the War Mr. Poliakov tried to make us understand that all the same, the Swedish, "Yes, I had received something." But we don't find anything. We know that Baron von Otter met one small Gerstein in Berlin one day.

Q. How do we know that?

A. We know by another confession of Gerstein, and by what Baron von Otter said in a French Tribunal, at least. He met him, and it is said in the book of Peochva that he met this man when he was {2570|2571} getting out of his Embassy. And it seems that he said to Gerstein, "Oh, you see, I cannot do very much", etcetera. And after the War Baron von Otter – this is a supposition from my part when I studied all that —

THE COURT: Now, just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: You are not expert to draw inferences from their experiences.

THE COURT: They are not allowed to make suppositions. They are allowed to make inferences, but not suppositions, like a guess.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your opinion what happened there from what you studied?

A. Baron von Otter after the War tried to find Gerstein, and he used the intermediary of his colleague in London which was Baron Lagerfeldt.

Q. How do you know this?

A. From the archives of the National French Security.

Q. Yes.

A. And the Baron Lagerfeldt said that Gerstein – I think he said that Gerstein was dead, and he wrote a letter that I have, I have a copy, to Baron von Otter saying, "Don't be disturbed. I have arranged the things. I have not given you a name, but you see, Gerstein is dead now."

And what I say is that Baron von Otter maybe thought after the War, "My God. What this man has told me was the truth."

THE COURT: Now, did you say the Baron may have thought that?

THE WITNESS: The Baron von Otter. {2571|2572} I said maybe he thought that.

THE COURT: Maybe he did. But did he think this? This is the problem with what others may have thought. Experts are experts, but they cannot go into the minds of other people.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I understand that.

Q. Do you have any reason to say that except as a speculation?

A. Because I noticed this kind of phenomenon many times.

Q. What do you mean, this phenomena?

THE COURT: What is a phenomena? Let's define what that is?

THE WITNESS: Yes. I am going to try and explain it. The man in charge of international amnesty, his name is an Irish. I cannot remember his name. Shane McBride. Shane McBride a few years ago wrote a letter to the journal Le Monde and he said, "See how fantastic catastrophe can happen, may happen, and nobody knows about it. For example, the Jews were exterminated during the War and nobody knew." And he says, "And I must confess that during the War I was in Dublin and I had good relations with the American ambassador, and one day he show me papers saying that Jews were exterminated. I must say that at that time I made an inquiry, a short inquiry, and I didn't believe it, but now I understand that I was wrong."

And I think that those people think that they are right today and that they were wrong in '42. I think myself they were right in '42, wrong after.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And why do you say {2572|2573} that they changed their minds after the War?

A. Yes.

Q. Why?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Can he testify as to why they changed their mind, Your Honour?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, what the Nuremberg Military Tribunal had to say about these things, maybe you can testify about that. What were the judgments of Nuremberg? What did they have to say about that?

A. I think that I thought myself that the judgment of Nuremberg and other tribunals were just, were exact.

Q. And you still think so?

A. No.

Q. Why?

A. Because I have studied the question and my conclusion is that it is not true. For example, we have to take judicial notice of the fact —

THE COURT: Well, let's not go around taking judicial notice now.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I don't think you understand the witness at this point.

Q. Did the IMT take judicial notice?

THE COURT: Of what? No. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is part of the record, Your Honour.

THE COURT: This witness is not going to be permitted to say who takes judicial notice. You can argue that to the jury. Now, let's just change the vocabulary and keep going.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. {2573|2574}

Q. But in describing the International Military Tribunal are you aware of the process therein of taking judicial notice?

A. Yes. Article 19.

Q. Tell us what that meant.

A. Article 19 or 21, perhaps, 21, an article saying — I have not the English word — but saying that in case of evidence, what we call in France evidence, you have only to take judicial notice and not to bring any proof. So if I read the judgment of Nuremberg, which is in the first volume, and not in the last, I have to believe in things like the soap rumour?

Q. Why?

A. It is written in the judgment, without appeal. At that time I believed that it was true.

Q. So what is your conclusion in respect to Gerstein, and why was he not believed at the time but believed later?

A. I had the text of his interrogatory by a French examining magistrate.

Q. He was examined by a magistrate, and a record was made of the proceedings?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did you derive from that?

A. The man was called Colonel Mattae, and it's very interesting to see how this man, very logic, had to discuss with Gerstein. Gerstein told him the story of the gassings, of the cyanic acid that he didn't use, etcetera, that he had no written order, that when he came back he didn't give any account. Mattae told him, "But that's not German." And he asked him many questions, very {2574|2575} matter of fact, and Mattae, it's evidence, thought this man is lying, and he thought that Gerstein was a culprit, was a Nazi trying to hide something.

Q. How do you know that is what he thought?

A. By the text.

Q. Is it indicated in the text?

A. It is not indicated in the text, but it is so tight. He says at a moment, he says, "You are trying to evade my question. What have you done really?"

Q. Is there any other reason why Gerstein is incredible in your opinion?

A. Because when I put all those six confessions side by side, there are so much extravaganzas, so much difference, so many differences, that it is impossible to believe somebody who tells you the same story on so different ways;

Q. All right. I am now going to try to deal with the subject of the Red Cross, unless there is something further you want to deal with in Gerstein.

THE COURT: We will do that after recess. Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:40 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Short adjournment.

—— {2575|2576}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 3:58 p.m.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In the book, "Did Six Million Really Die" written by Richard Harwood it is stated that the Red Cross did not find any evidence of extermination camps. What do you say about that? They did not say anything about extermination camps

THE COURT: Page number?

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm afraid I'm summarizing.

THE COURT: Oh, you are summarizing from a portion.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The Red Cross portion. That comes on page 26, 27, and ends at the portion, "Not all were interned". There is some reference to the Red Cross there and I just wanted to capsule a point from that portion of the book.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Dr. Faurisson, have you read Richard Harwood's booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes.

Q. I tried to paraphrase by suggesting to you that — and I agree this is leading, I am just trying to get to the point — it indicates that the Red Cross did not say anything in their reports about extermination or death or gas chambers, death camps or gas chambers. Would you agree that that's an accurate indication of what the book says? {2576|2577}

A. No.

Q. Please correct me.

A. It would be correct if he had added, "During the War". I mean, the Red Cross, during the War, never published anything saying that there were gas chambers.

Q. Did they publish anything saying there were extermination camps during the war?

A. I don't think that this expression was used before the end of the War by anybody.

Q. Can you explain why it was used after the end of the War?

A. It was a word, I think, perhaps it appears in the propaganda, War propaganda in '44, perhaps, I don't know. But after the War we had this German expression, Vernichtungslager as if it was something used by Himmler or Hitler.

Q. Where did the word come from?

A. It came after the War, I think, and it meant extermination camp, but never the camps which were called extermination camps.

Q. So if the word had been used, "During the War the Red Cross never reported any extermination camps", would you have said that was correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In other respects have you examined the book of Richard Harwood?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read it in detail?

A. Yes. {2577|2578}

Q. And what is your opinion on the book?

A. My opinion that it is basically true on three points, very important. One, the Anne Frank Diary is a fake. Two, there was no genocide, specific crime. Three, there was no gas chamber, specific weapon of a specific crime.

Q. And have you published to that effect in France?

A. Have I quoted?

Q. No. Have you published books in France to that effect?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it legal to do so in France?

A. Yes, it is legal in France. We have the right to say that the Anne Frank Diary is a fake since the kind of confirmation given by laboratory of Weisbaden.

Q. When was that?

A. In 1982, I think.

Q. And was that given in your trial?

A. Yes. It was a trial against a man called Ernst Roemer. He had distributed leaflets at the entrance of a theatre giving a piece called, "The Anne Frank Diary".

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. If I may, Dr. Faurisson. I am not sure what this has to do with the issue before this trial, Your Honour. There is a paragraph or a section of Exhibit No. 1 that claims that Anne Frank's Diary is a hoax, and in support of that claim it cites a civil action, {2578|2579} apparently, before the Courts in New York State, and I have no objection if Dr. Faurisson wishes to address himself to that civil action or to the allegations that are contained in the pamphlet. If we go beyond that, then I think we have gone beyond the scope of this trial.

THE COURT: What do you say to that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I disagree, Your Honour. If the statement is made that the Anne Frank Diary is a hoax and that can be proven to be true, the evidence in support of it can be given. It doesn't have to come from the booklet itself.

We have led evidence from all sorts of sources to support the book. We have not gone page by page and analyzed the quoted sources, and we shouldn't be precluded from showing other evidence to show that the statements contained are true.

THE COURT: Sorry to interrupt you just for a moment. I wanted to ask the Crown, is the issue of the Diary – I don't recall it being covered when the prosecution evidence was going in. I may be wrong. Is that part of your case?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I didn't call any evidence on it, Your Honour. It is contained in the pamphlet, and if my friend wishes to adduce evidence of those matters contained in the pamphlet, then I have no objection to that, of course, but if we are going, if we are saying, as I understand my friend, that it's a fake but not for the reasons in the pamphlet, then we are off on some other frolic, Your Honour, and we have to – the essence of this trial is the truth or falsehood {2579|2580} of two pamphlets before us, and not other matters.

THE COURT: Does that change your thinking, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: If I can understand from my friend that he is not going to be disputing that part of the book in this trial, I won't pursue it further. If it is his intention to dispute that, I want to call evidence. I only have this one chance.

THE COURT: Sounds fair enough to me. What do you say about that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't want to make it an issue unless —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I would dispute the ground that it is a hoax as set out in this pamphlet – from what I've read in terms of what's in this pamphlet and what I am prepared to deal with. But now we are prepared to bring in other material that is not in this pamphlet. I am not sure how it goes to the truth or falsehood of that pamphlet.

THE COURT: Well, on that narrow basis, Mr. Christie, you can either ask or not ask. It appears to me that since no evidence has been led by the Crown with respect to that specific subject, that that might affect your thinking, but I am not suggesting that it should. You do what you want.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am just not sure how my friend, what he is meaning there, but ...

Q. Your opinion pertaining to the Anne Frank Diary relies on other evidence than is indicated in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes. {2580|2581}

Q. But your opinion is what, sir?

A. That it is a literary fraud.

Q. All right. Do you have other basis for your opinion than the case you mentioned? Do you have any personal reasons for saying that?

A. Yes. I have done a long inquiry about it.

Q. Yes. And you mentioned having talked to Otto Frank four interviews?

A. Five hours the first day, four hours the second day, but it was not the principal fact.

Q. All right. I don't intend to pursue that. Now, you said the other thing about the Harwood booklet was the —

A. The genocide did not exist.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. It is an accusation against the German, which is not proved at all.

Q. And that's your reason.

A. And that's my reason.

Q. All right. Pertaining to gas chambers, what does the book say from your understanding of reading it about gas chambers?

A. I don't remember very well the argument of Richard Harwood, but the principal is that, I agree, is the fact that it is a myth, a common belief. I don't know the origin of this common belief, but it is a common belief.

Q. From your examination of the documents supporting it, why do you disbelieve it? {2581|2582} We have discussed Hoess, we have discussed Gerstein. Now, from the documents re the gas chambers why do you disbelieve it?

A. Because if it had existed, we should have thousands of material proof. We have not one proof. May I mention my trial about that? Because I had nine organizations against me trying to bring proof that the gas chamber existed. Can I talk about my case?

So I had the possibility of asking to my lawyers to take my defence on the behalf of freedom of speech, or because a tribunal is not able to pronounce something about a historical fact. Those two possibilities existed for me. But I said, no, I don't want those kinds of vague arguments. "I want you to say that Mr. Faurisson does not believe in the gas chamber because the gas chamber did not exist, so I must convince you of that. Then I would ask you to ask to those associations to bring me only one proof as they could bring me proof of the existence of a gas chamber, of a crematoria, or ectetera [sic]." I asked, only one witness. I was ready to willing to one witness, and I wanted only one proof of my alleged falsification.

I must say that those people went – we know that because it has been published – went in Germany, in Poland, in Israel, to contact everywhere, and they didn't bring anything.

Q. Have you heard proof of the existence of a gas chamber rendered in this court?

A. In this court? {2582|2583}

Q. Yeah.

A. I consider no.

Q. Why?

A. Because of the fact that I cannot repeat there, because I am not – I mean, for material items, material reasons.

Q. What do you mean by material reasons?

A. I know the location. I know how it is, how the place is supposed to be gas chamber and all that, and it is impossible.

Q. Why is it impossible that these witnesses could be right?

A. Yes, in theory they could be right, and perhaps they believe what they say.

Q. Well, why do you say they are not right in fact?

A. Because in fact – but I cannot explain it there, you see.

Q. Why?

A. I would need plans. I would need photos. I would need things like that.

Q. You took photos when you were in Auschwitz?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've made copies of them.

A. Yes.

Q. You can verify that the photos are true copies and depict the scene?

A. Yes.

Q. You obtained plans from Auschwitz? {2583|2584}

A. Yes.

Q. Auschwitz Museum?

A. Yes.

Q. The German plans?

A. The German plans.

Q. For what?

A. I remember that yesterday —

Q. For the crematorium, is that right?

A. I remember yesterday, yes. I am not finished what I wanted to say, when I said that putting my finger on the opening of a furnace, I said there is no soot. It was not to prove that this crematorium, this oven, was built after the War. It could be a rebuilding, an honest one, and it was an honest one, but I said, "It means that you have a plan of the crematorium and the room which is beneath the crematorium that you call gas chamber. And this is how I got plans of the place called gas chambers.

Q. When you went in the public gas chamber did you see shower heads in Auschwitz or Birkenau?

A. In Auschwitz I we have a gas chamber which is supposed to be rebuilt, but without any shower. And they don't say that there were showers there. They say that there were leads. They took out the leads and they put Zyklon, like that. And for Krema II, III, IV and V we have ruins which are very interesting, because I think that we can study ruins. Archeologists do that, and for forty years it's nothing.

Q. No examination? {2584|2585}

A. Never. Never. No examination.

Q. Has there been any forensic – in all your research has there been any study of a gas chamber in the world?

A. Yes. In Struthof [Struthof], in Alsace. Professor Rene Favre in December 1945 did write a report about the bodies found in the Strasburg Hospital which were supposed to have been gassed in Struthof [sic], fifty-five kilometers from Strasburg, and also to examine what he could scrap from the so-called gas chamber.

Q. Scrapings from the walls of the gas chamber?

A. Around ventilation system.

Q. Yes. Was there any report published as a result of those inquiries?

A. Yes. This report has disappeared from the Archives of the French Justice Militaire, French Military Justice, but we know by a report of three doctors that Rene Favre was a toxicologist, and answered no for the bodies, and no for the scrapes, meaning no poison gas.

Q. And those three doctors' reports are located where?

A. In Paris, 5 Rue Sadilier.

Q. What is that location?

A. Military Justice, gendarmerie and military justice, direction.

Q. What?

A. The direction of the gendarmerie and Military Justice. {2585|2586}

Q. The Director of Gendarmerie and Military Justice.

A. Yes.

Q. Has there ever been anywhere in the world, other than that, to your knowledge, a report of a forensic nature to examine bodies or to examine what was alleged to be a gas chamber to determine if such had been used for that purpose?

A. Not to my knowledge. What is sometimes written is that the Poles made chemical inquiries about hairs and about items discovered, so they say, in the place called crematorium, and they say that they discover in the air and in those things trace of hydrocyanic acid.

Q. Yes.

A. But in the two cases, it has no interest whatsoever, because hair were disinfected by Zyklon-B. It was systematic when they used it in firms.

Q. In what?

A. In firms.

Q. They used hair in firms?

A. In firms, to make pontouf, in French.

Q. So human hair was made in Germany, was used by Germany from prisoners?

A. Yes. And from Europe in France hair was taken every week from any hairdresser room.

Q. Why?

A. It was called recapiration [recycling], and during the War we recapirated anything [sic], even nails and {2586|2587} pieces of string. That's why we see sometimes so many photos of glasses, photos of mounds of shoes, etcetera. It is particularly interesting in Maidanek because in Maidanek you have – I don't remember – they say something like 800,000 of pairs of shoes, meaning that they are shoes from victims.

Q. Yes.

A. If you examine at least some of them, you could see that they are very old shoes, but they are not been used. And if you see —

Q. The documents?

A. The archives, the documents, you can see that Maidanek had a film, an S.S. film fabricates shoes.

Q. So shoes were made at Maidanek?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. By the S.S. using slave labour?

A. Yes,

Q. And these pictures of shoes are very often portrayed in the literature, is it?

A. Very often.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The answer could come from Dr. Faurisson, rather than Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that, and I am aware that that is not the best way, but sometimes language difficulties —

THE COURT: That is why there are interpreters, and that is why you haven't been interrupted in doing it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, getting to the Red Cross, you have said that Harwood would have {2587|2588} been totally correct, I gather, if he had said, "During the War the Red Cross found no – reported no gas chambers or extermination camps". Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did the Red Cross conduct an inquiry at Auschwitz during the War?

A. We have a report called, "Visit by an ICRC delegate to the Commandant of Auschwitz Camp, September 1944". The reference is, "The work of the ICRC For Civilian Detainees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945;" This edition is Geneva 1975, but I have a French edition from 1946 with the same document which was written originally [sic] in French.

Q. All right. So when did the Red Cross visit Auschwitz or Birkenau?

A. So in September 1944 the name of the man who visited, that is not given, but his name is Dr. Russell. I wrote to him, and there is a passage which is interesting about a rumour of gas chamber.

Q. Yes.

A. Can I read it?

THE COURT: Whose passage is it? Who wrote the passage?

THE WITNESS: Dr. Russell. At least, it is an account by the Red Cross.

MR. CHRISTIE: The booklet says so, sir, so I am hoping that the —

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Read the passage, {2588|2589} please, Dr. Faurisson, referring to the matter of Auschwitz-Birkenau."

A. On page – not everything?

Q. No. Just the portion – if the Crown wants more ...

A. "Here as at Oranienburg and Ravensbrück the Officers were polite but reticent. Every word was carefully weighed, and we sensed their fear of letting slip the slightest scrap of information."

I think that we should say that it was known because it was a centre of armament, of industry, and those people didn't want that the Swiss people get the information.

THE COURT: Please, just read the passage.

THE WITNESS: "A British prisoner of war commando working in Auschwitz is in contact with these people, the Auschwitz detainees. We have asked the principal spokesman at Teschen", which is fifty kilometers south of Auschwitz, "The principal British spokesman from Teschen spontaneously asked us whether we knew about the shower room" – singular and in quote.

"A rumour was, in fact, going around that the camp was equipped with a very modern shower room where groups of detainees were being gassed. The British spokesman tried to secure confirmation of this through his Auschwitz command, people in contact with Auschwitz. "It was impossible to prove anything whatever. The detainees themselves said nothing."

Then we have a last phrase, but it is not a conclusion of what I read. It is a conclusion {2589|2590} of all the report. And it says, "Once more as we left Auschwitz we have a feeling that there is a well-guarded mystery. We are sure of one thing. As much relief as possible must be sent with the utmost despatch.

We repeat our belief that whatever is sent there is handed over to the detainees."

Q. Now, can I ask you something about that, Dr. Faurisson? When was that written?

A. It was written in September 1944. The visit was in September '44, and it was written, I have the report in September 1944.

Q. Was this document used at the IMT at all?

A. Oh, yes. Yes.

Q. Was it altered in any way in its use?

A. It was altered, yes.

Q. Why was it altered, or how was it altered, rather? The jury can decide why.

A. So I am going to quote document NO 2620.

Q. Just the portion that you've read.

A. Yes. So the title is, "Publication on the Activity of the International Red Cross in Favour of Internees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945". They say booklet, original language French. This report has been made in June 1945 and this is what I found, what I read. Page 29.

"A detachment of British prisoners of war worked at a mine at Auschwitz – spontaneously, the {2590|2591} chief British man of confidence asked us whether we know about the matter of the shower bath" in quotes. "As a matter of fact, there is a rumour that very up-to-date showers exist at Auschwitz where the prisoners are gassed in large numbers." And we have an exclamation mark and nothing else. We don't have the British spokesman tried to secure information of this through his Auschwitz commando. "It was impossible to prove anything whatever. The detainees themselves said nothing."

Q. So that was supported in the trial documents?

A. Yes. And something else did the same. Mark Hillel was a historian. "Archives of Hope". On page 252 he says – I am going to translate it: "The British spokesman tried to secure confirmation of this through his Auschwitz commando. It was impossible. Once more getting out of Auschwitz we have the impression that a mystery is well guarded."

Q. So those two documents have eliminated part of the Red Cross Report; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Why, in your opinion, was that done?

A. It is difficult for me to answer this question. I don't know very well why those texts are cut, but I think it is not honest.

Q. In your reading of the Red Cross material have you ever found a confirmation during the War that there was any knowledge of gas chambers or death camps or extermination processes by the Red Cross {2591|2592} in any part of the German Government's concentration camps?

A. I don't think I have seen anything of this kind. We have a report about Ravensbrück, but made after the liberation of Ravensbrück, and the man said that he had visited Ravensbrück; he had seen Suhren, but at that time it didn't – he visited the camp, but he didn't dare to ask where was the crematorium and the gas chamber. And later on he was in Berlin, I think this man, and he met a woman who had been inmate at Ravensbrück, and he asked her, "But where was the gas chamber?" And she said, "Underneath the big place, central place".

Q. The parade ground?

A. Mm hmmm.

Q. Was that part of the report after the War?

A. After the War, yes.

Q. Yes. And have other historians concluded that there was a gas chamber underneath the parade ground at Ravensbrück?

A. No. We have many variation about the gas chamber of Ravensbrück, but not this one.

Q. That's a novel one, is it?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Has there been proof tendered of the gassing of six million Jews at the Eichmann trial?

A. I think that the Eichmann trial it was said that millions of Jews had been killed, not six millions.

Q. Yes. {2592|2593}

A. And I studied the Eichmann trial by the transcripts that I had in the Jewish Centre of Documentation in Paris.

Q. You studied the transcript?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you conclude as a result that it proved the stories of the gas chambers?

A. I was looking for what Eichmann could have said about that. And I have an excerpt that I can read about that.

THE COURT: An excerpt from what?

THE WITNESS: An excerpt from the transcript.

THE COURT: What transcript?

THE WITNESS: Of the Eichmann trial, 1961.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, would you just cover it so that we all know what he is reading from? Transcripts of trials include comments of judges, comments of lawyers, rulings and the like. Now, what is he going to read?

MR. CHRISTIE: He just said, Your Honour, he was reading the portion of Eichmann's testimony.

THE COURT: I didn't hear him say that. Would you ask him again, please, so we will know? Ask him.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What's this about, Dr. Faurisson, for the jury and the judge?

A. It is a part, a tiny part of the transcript where the man called the Commissioner is {2593|2594} asking to Eichmann, "Did you talk with Hoess about the number of Jews who were exterminated at Auschwitz?"

Q. So it's Eichmann's testimony, is that right?

A. It is Eichmann's answer to this Commissioner.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's what I thought. So can we now give that?

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So this is Eichmann's testimony at his trial, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Thank you.

A. "No. Never. He told me that he had built" —

Q. You had better, to get any context, we'd better get the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would that be fair, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Let's get the question that precedes the answer.

A. "Did you talk with Hoess about the number of Jews that were exterminated at Auschwitz?" "Eichmann: No. Never. He told me that he had built new buildings and that he could put to death ten thousand Jews each day. I do remember something like that. I do not know whether I am only imagining that today, but I do not believe I am imagining it. I cannot recall exactly when and how he told me that, and the location where he had told me. Perhaps I read it, and {2594|2595} perhaps I am now imagining that's what I had read, that's what I had read I heard from him."

That is also possible, because we know that Eichmann collaborated, really, with the examining magistrate called Less Avner, and that really they tried to find the truth, and that's why he was given so many books from Poliakov and others. This is said by Professor Vidal ...

Q. Do you believe, then, that that proves the existence of gas chambers?

A. No. I see a man, perhaps, has read too many books about the question. He doesn't know exactly what he has heard, what he has seen, what he has read. He is a bit in the same situation as, I think, unstrung Governor of Poland.

Q. Could you tell us a bit about the situation of these defendants that would cause them to make these statements if they were not true, from the analysis of the trial record?

A. I would say that, when I take the case of the Governor of Poland, we know his reaction is not only by the transcript of the Nuremberg Trial but also by the book of Gilbert, called "The Nuremberg Diary", he was astonished to learn that there were extermination camps in his country, Poland. He said, "Hitler betrayed us." And all of them, Goering, Streicher, all of them during all the trials, were wondering what had happened exactly.

Q. How do you say that, sir? How do you know they were wondering?

People are going to want to know the answer. {2595|2596}

A. We know that by Gilbert who is a psychologist.

Q. Did he publish a book on the subject?

A. Yes. "The Nuremberg Diary".

Q. Is that the source of your —

THE COURT: Was he a psychologist?

THE WITNESS: A psychologist.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. This is a public document published by Mr. Gilbert, a psychologist.

THE WITNESS: Yes. So Gilbert was inform himself that millions of Jews had been executed, millions of Jews had been gassed, and those, some twenty Germans, were there in a kind of room asking themselves, "What's that?" Because Goering and Kaltenbrunner must have known. It is impossible that Kaltenbrunner didn't know. And all of them were wondering what had happened really. All of them thought, except perhaps Goering and Streicher, thought that Hitler had did something absolutely disgusting, and strongly said, "This is a blame for Germany for one thousand years." He believed in that. He believed in what Hoess said on the 15th of February, 1945. They didn't think that it could have been invented, exaggerated, except once more Goering was intelligent and Streicher was not very intelligent, but the two of them, the same reflection, they said, "Technically impossible". At the moment, not at the beginning. "Technically impossible".

Q. What do you mean, at the moment {2596|2597} not at the beginning?

A. At the beginning when they had heard Hoess, they thought, "It's terrible".

Q. When you say, "they thought", is that information from Gilbert?

A. Yes, from Gilbert.

Q. And did they express anything about Nuremberg in the matter?

A. Yes. About that Goering said once, "Technically impossible", and I think that Streicher said it twice. And not about six million, if I remember; only about three million. He said, "Technically impossible." They thought that if this thing had happened in the heart of Europe, they would have known.

Q. And did they make their position known on the record about that?

A. As I told you, Heinz ... became a Christian, plenty of repentance, and so didn't say anything about this subject, but it seemed that they believed it. But Gilbert says that somebody, like is it Seyss-Inquart or another one — at the beginning believed that those horrible things happened, and then, suddenly, doubted. I think that they would know very well where they were about all these stories. And I think it is very difficult for somebody who has not studied the question of the gas chambers to go and demonstrate that it is impossible.

We have a trial, the trial of the two architects of the crematorium of Auschwitz. It was in Vienna, Austria, in 1972. The names were Dejaco, and Hirtle. I tried to have the transcript. It was not possible {2597|2598} for me, so I had to read newspaper about that. And I saw that Dejaco said to the tribunal, "Yes, we have built that, sure, but we didn't know that it was to be used as a gas chamber". Because this man was architect for that any place could be used as a gas chamber. You need to study the question to see how difficult it is. So those people thought like everybody, like myself after the War, that nothing was as easy as to use gas. They said, one does not need any special technique, so it's possible.

Q. In your observation study of the accounts of eye witnesses have you found plagiarism?

A. Yes. In the case, for example, of Filip Mueller, by taking a text from Nyiszli — in fact, not Nyiszli.

Q. Well, you have to explain that. The jury doesn't know, His [sic] Honour doesn't know and most people don't know. What do you mean it wasn't[?]

A. It was a man called Kremer, a French Jew from Toulouse, by the inquiry on the question by Paul Rassinier.

Q. So you are saying there was a book written by whom?

A. Tyberg [Tibère] Kremer.

Q. Yes. And it was called?

A. In English, I think you call it, "Doctor in Auschwitz".

Q. And the alleged author of it was?

A. Miklos Nyiszli.

Q. And he was a doctor in Auschwitz? {2598|2599}

A. Yes.

Q. Tell us what the book was about.

A. I was interested specially in the part concerning the gas chamber.

Q. All right.

A. So I compared that with what Filip Mueller wrote, what was written in the manuscript that Pohl said that they had discovered around the crematorium of Birkenau. I compared those texts and I saw that they were copies of copies.

Q. How did you come to that conclusion?

A. Because we had the same stereotype, and in different situations, for example in the manuscript miraculously discovered in Auschwitz.

Q. When?

A. We have — some of them in 1946, '47, and another one, I think, later on. We have the story of those people in the gas chamber, and a Polish girl is making a speech to the people who are there, and the Poles go on their knees and they pray, and then they sing the National Polish Anthem, and the Jews sing the Hatisva — and the doctor made a mistake. He said, "and the International", because there were communists there, also. The story says that the sound of those two songs were confused to give the International. This is the first story. The second story —

Q. Where is that story first found?

A. It was found in Auschwitz and published by the notebooks of Auschwitz, I think, in 1972, published in 1972. {2599|2600}

Q. And then where is it published after that?

A. It was published in Filip Mueller's book, but this time, I can't remember very well, but I think it is the Czechoslovakian, the Jewish, and there is no International. And we have also fragments who are the same from a book to another.

Q. Can you tell us about those books?

A. I mean the same, Filip Mueller and Nyiszli.

Q. And Dr. Vrba, you read his book?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Does it refer to Filip Muller?

A. Yes.

Q. What about Filip Mueller does his book rely on?

A. He mentioned Filip Mueller and he has also a very short story, if I remember, about a national anthem. I don't remember. Perhaps Czechoslovak, and the Jewish anthem, it seems to me.

Q. Is it possible these are different accounts of the same event?

A. It seems — no, because when we look closely to it, the places are different, and you see the simple difference of the hymns.

Q. Yes.

A. Czechoslovak, Polish.

Q. And this is supposed to occur where?

A. In the gas chamber or near the {2600|2601} gas chamber. Sometimes it is quite nearly in the gas chamber. Sometimes you don't see very well if you are in the gas chamber or before the gas chamber.

Q. Yes. Now, in your study of the subject of the Holocaust and the subject of the literature supporting the story of the gas chamber, have you studied the book of Arthur Butz [Butz] called, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century?"

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read it thoroughly?

A. Yes.

Q. What would you say about this book?

A. I would have been pleased to write this book.

Q. Why?

A. I find it very accurate. I call him — no, I don't want to qualify, but I have a very big respect for Dr. Butz, something I can judge for what I have done myself, certain aspects of World War that I have not studied. What I admire, for example, is that this man already said in 1975 it is impossible that the Allied didn't know what was in Auschwitz, because – and you think that he is looking his idea, because he is very synthetic in his manner. He says in Auschwitz, in Monowitz we have industrial centres, very important.

Q. Was that true?

A. Yes, that was true. Trying to make synthetic fuel, synthetic rubber. So he said, certainly there are photographs taken by aerial {2601|2602} reconnaissance. He said that. He wrote that in 1975 —

Q. Was that true? Are there aerial photographs?

A. And four years after we had this publication by Brujioni and Poirier about some of these photos showing Auschwitz and —

Q. Have you, yourself, obtained aerial photos of Auschwitz?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you get them from?

A. From the National Archives.

Q. And did you examine the source of those photographs to the National Archives?

A. I asked to see the first copy of the negative.

Q. Yes.

A. That's what I had, but I didn't have the negative.

Q. Who publishes that series of aerial photographs?

A. I don't remember the name of the agency.

Q. The CIA?

A. Those two people were from the CIA, but was it published by the CIA? I don't remember.

Q. And have you relied upon that aerial reconnais[s]ance material for your part of your opinion?

A. Certainly. It is one of the most important facts. I would say that the most important fact during those recent years are the publication of some of the aerial reconnaissance photo and of the {2602|2603} Auschwitz Album.

Q. Why do you say that the aerial photographs are important to this question?

A. Because we have perfect photos of Krema II, Krema III, Krema IV and Krema V, and we can see that we have nothing about what is said in the story. You see, those crematorium [sic] were a landscape well-drawn. If you had thousands of people there it would have been in a terrible state. I must say, also, that I have read reports about the aerial reconnaissance photo, and I noticed that the American were very interested by everything which was smoke, steam or fire.

Q. Why?

A. Because they needed to know if a bombing had a good or a bad result, if locomotives were going or not.

Q. If what?

A. Locomotives.

Q. Locomotives, yes.

A. If plans were functioning or not.

Q. Plans?

A. Plans, factories.

Q. [A.] Factories, yes. And I think that every time, when they saw smoke or steam, it is easy to see that. We could see by the photo.

Q. Have you examined those photos?

A. Yes.

Q. What month and date was the first photo taken in that series?

A. In the series published – I {2603|2604} don't remember if it is April or June '44.

Q. April or June.

A. But we have a splendid photo of the 25th of August, 1944.

Q. Does it indicate two roads going in and coming out of the camp?

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, are you a photo interpreter? Is this witness qualified as a photo interpreter?

THE COURT: We will cover that in the morning. Nine thirty.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Faurisson, you mentioned the exchange that took place on the 14th of December, 1945, between Major Walsh, the President, in respect to the affidavit of Hoettl. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you an excerpt of the transcript of that occasion. Does that accurately set forth the exchange you were describing?

A. Yes. But remember that Major Walsh was not the President. He was the American prosecutor.

Q. Yes. That's right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Have you seen it, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not recently, but I am familiar with it, Your Honour. I am content.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. What is the importance of that occasion, Dr. Faurisson?

A. The importance of what Hoettl said {2605|2606} is that it was the first official tape of the story of the six million Jews. He said in his affidavit that at the end of August, 1944, he saw Eichmann, and that Eichmann told him that six million Jews had been exterminated.

Q. Well, just so that I understand that, the affidavit was Hoettl's. Hoettl was quoting Eichmann and you said yesterday that Hoettl wasn't called at that time.

A. He wasn't called, although the defence lawyer of one of the German accused asks to the President if Hoettl could come, because he was right there in the Nuremberg jail. Major Walsh said, "We don't want to insist about that, but" —

Q. What do you mean, "We don't want to insist about that"?

A. About this affidavit of Hoettl and this figure of six million. But the second step was —

Q. The second step in what, sir?

A. In the official story of the six million. I mean, said by the IMT, International Military Tribunal, was what Sir Shawcross said in his final speech. He said that the extermination of the two-thirds of the Jews of Europe, more than six million. He said more than six million, according to the statistics of the murderers themselves.

Q. Was there any other statistic other than that referred to in December 14, 1945, to support that statement?

A. The statement of six million?

Q. Yes. {2606|2607}

A. No.

Q. So that was the affidavit reference of Hoettl to support that statement.

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

A. There was another statement with another figure by Dieter Wisliceny. That's something else.

THE COURT: The jury might want to know who Sir Hartley Shawcross was. I know, but they might not.

MR. CHRISTIE: Might I put it to the witness?

Q. He was the British prosecutor?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was addressed to the International Military Tribunal?

A. Yes.

Q. And what was the effect in the official historical views of the day as a result of that?

A. I can only say that since this time this figure has been repeated and repeated and repeated, and the result is that when you ask a Frenchman how many Frenchmen died during the War, a Frenchman usually doesn't know how many Frenchmen died, but the same thing, I suppose, for the British, the American, the Canadians, but everybody knows that six million Jews died. It's not because the information is right, accurate. It is because it is repeated and repeated and repeated. {2607|2608}

Q. In the course of your investigations you attended to take photographs of American gas chambers. You said that.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. Not that you are an expert or saying anything in the way of opinion about that. Did you communicate that in the form of a paper published to a historical review convention?

A. Yes.

Q. In Los Angeles in 1979?

A. Yes. It was in '79. Yesterday I said '78. It was a mistake. It was September '79, the first convention.

Q. At that time did you have any communication about that paper with Ernst Zundel?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have him do something in respect to that paper?

A. He read my paper.

Q. Why?

A. Because my English was too bad.

Q. That paper was the result of your research at the time; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you a paper called, "The Mechanics of Gassing" by Dr. Robert Faurisson, published in the Journal of Historical Review in the first issue of the first volume in 1979.

Do you recognize that article?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that the paper communicated to {2608|2609} and delivered to Ernst Zundel for the purpose of reading in that convention?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: No

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I am requesting that I file that on the ground that the accused acquired knowledge from this paper, and it was acquired before the time when he was alleged to have committed this offence of publishing false news, that he depended on it.

THE COURT: That evidence is before the jury. That is not the best evidence. The evidence is before the jury itself. The answer is no.

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness can identify this. I am simply putting on record this request that this paper which was shown by Dr. Faurisson as a result of his research, he had a right to and did, in fact – I want to introduce it so he can later identify it. I undertake, before the Court right here and now, to call the accused at a later point to identify this as a paper that he read and from which he derived his information.

THE COURT: Your undertaking is not enforceable. Any undertaking on your part is meaningless. The answer is no. That's it.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I introduce it for identification for a later date?

THE COURT: You can introduce it for identification only. {2609|2610}

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be the next exhibit for identification?

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit "R".

— EXHIBIT "R" (For Identification) Excerpt from article, "The Mechanics of Gassing" by Dr. R. Faurisson.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you take photographs at the time of your inquiry into the American gas chamber?

A. Yes. Eight photographs.

Q. Why did you do that?

A. Because I need to have a physical representation of an American gas chamber and to compare that with other gas chambers supposed to have been used to kill victims of the German people.

Q. And —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May the jury be excused for a moment, please, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes. Excuse us, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 9:55 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I have patiently sat here for five weeks while the rules of evidence have been trampled on by my friend. {2610|2611}

THE COURT: Yes. So have I.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour has made a ruling very clearly yesterday about what Dr. Faurisson can and cannot say about gas chambers. The photographs were specifically referred to yesterday and we keep coming back to it today. I think it's improper, it's unfair to the prosecution. The defence isn't the only person entitled to fairness in this trial.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: First of all, Your Honour, the witness has the right to introduce photographs produced by him if they are relevant. Your Honour yesterday made a ruling about relevance. Your Honour yesterday also made a ruling about the qualifications of the expert. I recognize the words Your Honour spoke. I listened as carefully as I could. You said he was entitled to be qualified in the same sense that Dr. Hilberg was.

Now, you said he was not an expert in gas chambers, that he was not an expert in Zyklon-B. I understand that. But that doesn't mean he can't have firsthand physical observations of which he has the right to, as any other witness, introduce the physical {2611|2612} evidence. Now, it is not my intention to ask him any thing to do with a professional opinion or any expert opinion about the photographs.

THE COURT: Well, then, how is it relevant?

MR. CHRISTIE: First of all it's relevant because the jury exercises what is known as common sense. They can look at photographs of an American gas chamber and see the physical construction of it. They can also look at photographs of what is purported to be the gas chamber in Auschwitz which is physically present today, put forward by the authorities as the place of gassing. I can then argue that, looking at those two items with common sense, they can derive the conclusion that they are not one and the same creature, that there are different requirements for gassing than could possibly occur in those places represented as gas chambers.

I can also call other evidence, which I intend to do. Your Honour says my undertaking is meaningless. I don't believe that to be the case. If as any other officer, undertake to the Court to do something — {2612|2613}

THE COURT: And if your client changes instructions? Don't be ridiculous, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, many, many times I have been indicated by Courts that I have given an undertaking to call evidence to link in the case, then I will link the evidence. If I am not prepared to give the undertaking, I will not. Every day counsel make undertakings.

THE COURT: Not with respect to accused they do not, not in this jurisdiction.

MR. CHRISTIE: As Your Honour wishes in that respect. I have no desire to argue with Your Honour; but when Your Honour makes rulings as to evidence, I inquire into the subject of just what the Courts generally do in terms of relevance, and I would like to refer to McWilliams, where it says that the first and general principle of admissibility is relevancy. And an earlier statement made by Park in Wright vs. ... He said, one great principle in law is that all facts which are relevant to this issue may be proved. The courts so far as they can, reading from another judgment of Baron Pollock (ph) are disposed to receive into evidence whatever can throw light on the {2613|2614} matters in issue and advance the search for truth.

Now, the issue raised by the defence is that there is no truth to the allegation of gas chambers. That is the issue raised by the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" It is the central issue to the case. However much my friend may say the Holocaust means something else, the book doesn't talk about the Holocaust in those words. It talks about six million gas chambers and Zyklon-B as the means of execution.

THE COURT: Where?

MR. CHRISTIE: The front page speaks about six million.

THE COURT: Six million gas chambers, is that what you say? Now, where does it mention six million gas chambers? I will repeat your very words.

MR. CHRISTIE: The book talks about six million and gas chambers. I didn't say it talks about six million and gas chambers in the same sentence. It is the thesis that the gas chambers are the problem with the six million, that without the gas chambers you don't have the six million. The book doesn't deny deaths in Dachau and deaths in Belsen.

MR. CHRISTIE: My point is that you cannot say that it is irrelevant to the defence. How can Your Honour decide that it is irrelevant to the defence that gas chambers are not possible, that there is a false statement about gas chambers in much of the represented literature of the day? How can Your Honour decide that it is impossible for us to make relevant that those things that are gas chambers, that are scientifically used for such purposes, are totally inconsistent with the uses alleged to large buildings which have no sealed entrances, which have glass windows, which have – we can prove all this through the photographs and the people who have been there physically.

You will not allow us to introduce those photographs. You will not allow us to introduce photographs of the American gas chambers which show the complexity and the danger of gassing people, not to the victim. Of course people can be readily gassed, but to the people surrounding, that is what makes the gas chamber story ridiculous in the theory of the defence.

I am not asking Your Honour to accept the theory. I am not asking Your Honour to rule upon {2615|2616} the theory [theory]. I am asking Your Honour to let us prove the theory, [sic] that's all.

If the jury considers the theory [sic] ridiculous, they will give us their verdict, but all I am asking for is the right to put before the Court the evidence which the defence alleges disproves the existence of gas chambers.

Page 28 says, "The imposture of gas chambers", in quotes. It refers to Rassinier who denies the gas chambers. It quotes Rassinier extensively. It says that gas chambers are impossible. It quotes it says, "Six million falsehood rejected in relation to gas chambers." It quotes from the book of Thies Christopherson who denies gas chambers. It refers to the problem repeatedly of this central fact that without the gas chamber you can't substantiate the six million story.

Nobody, not even in the Crown case does it say that Mauthausen, Buchenwald or Dachau substantiates that. And the booklet says that you can't substantiate the six million figure or close to it without gas chambers, and the booklet says that gas chambers by the evidence put forward by the IMT, the {2616|2617} NMT and the physical evidence today is not credible.

That's why it becomes relevant, to prove that the research done by Dr. Faurisson in some gas chambers should be available to the jury to consider whether those things that are said today to represent gas chambers can really be considered gas chambers. That's all.

Now, I don't think I am asking for anything extraordinary when I ask for the right of a witness who is an eye witness to a physical structure to show us what he saw. If I cannot demonstrate to the jury through the physical evidence that he saw that the theory of, the Crown is wrong, well, then, I know the consequences; but to prevent the defence from even showing the evidence that they have means that this trial becomes like fighting with one arm tied behind their back. We can't prove that what we say is true. We can't even prove that the evidence of what we say proves our case.

Now, I respect deeply and highly Your Honour's ruling on all these matters, but I don't understand the ruling to go so far as to say that his common sense, ordinary eye witness account cannot be {2617|2618} given. I recognize he is not an expert and cannot say what the physical evidence means. I can and I will try, if Your Honour doesn't accept my undertaking, tell you that I certainly have every intention of calling other experts to link that to the defence, and if I couldn't, if I couldn't link more than the physical evidence of the photographs of Dr. Faurisson, I will call the accused and he will say, "I used common sense, I used a layman's mind and I looked at this physical representation of an American gas chamber and then I looked at the pictures presented all over the world of what gas chambers are supposed to be and came to the common sense conclusion, using my brain, that these two things are incompatible."

Now, he is entitled to use that common sense and ordinary brain to draw those conclusions. Then, if the conclusions are considered unreasonable or dishonest, the jury will convict him; but if he can't even prove the basis of those things that he considered to establish his honest opinion, then what can we do? Can we just have, as Dr. Hilberg did, someone stand up and say, "This is the way it is and that's all false" and not produce a single thing to prove it? Are we {2618|2619} bound to do that, too? Are we bound to not produce evidence, physical evidence?

That is remarkable, in my opinion, and it is not consistent with the general principle that if the accused can demonstrate some relevance in a logical theoretical [sic] way – not that Your Honour has to believe it or agree with it: certainly not. But how can courts prevent the accused from bringing in the very things he relies on to prove his case and prevent him from even putting that before the jury?

That, I don't regard, I don't understand Your Honour's ruling to mean that, because he is not an expert, that he can't use common sense, he can't take photographs, he can't introduce them and he can't – he's been to Auschwitz. He has taken photographs there. I want to introduce those, photographs of what, photographs of the ruins of the crematorium, photographs of the representations by the official sources there.

There are models made by the officials there, Your Honour, of which we have photographs, which put forward the theory of the Crown. It's not our theory. But the witness would like to introduce those {2619|2620} to show that it doesn't make common sense.

Now, if we are not allowed to use common sense here, then I'd better understand right away, I had better understand that the accused is not allowed to look at the evidence in the world and draw common sense inferences, if that is the way we are supposed to be bound; and if those are the rules of evidence we are supposed to have trampled on, then I don't see how I can introduce any common sense logical evidence at all.

Is that what my friend contends for? We are not asking that this witness give evidence on gas chambers, Zyklon-B or anything other than what Your Honour has said, and I don't recall Dr. Hilberg avoiding talking about Zyklon-B. I remember him saying Zyklon-A and Zyklon-B was Zyklon-B. He gave expert evidence about railroad schedules. What does he know about railroad schedules?

It's a very difficult case. We are dealing with a lot of new issues. I am not critical of anyone that there isn't more precision in some of the rulings. I don't know how we could be more precise. It's a very obscure issue as a whole; but I am only {2620|2621} asking that if Dr. Hilberg can go that far – I don't ask that my witness be qualified to give an opinion on these so-called technical matters, but at least we should be allowed to show the physical evidence that he, himself, has seen, and thereby show that my client, using his ordinary common sense, drew inferences – the jury will weigh their value – to the effect that these represented gas chambers were false.

The accused will be able to allege, as he has by his plea, denied the falseness of this document; he will be able to show that common sense and logic, from ordinary, physical evidence derived by and through other sources – because it's a state of mind that's at stake not the physical act itself – that he could conclude that, with reason, he could believe that gas chambers did not exist as they are represented in the literature, as they are represented at IMT, and as they are represented, apparently, by Dr. Hilberg who produces no physical evidence.

It's a very important point, in my submission, that we should have the right to prove what is relevant to our defence without Your Honour deciding that issue before the jury gets a chance to hear our {2621|2622} evidence.

Thank you.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, in the examination of his witness, Dr. Faurisson, in the presence of the jury, has asked the witness whether or not he took eight photographs of gas chambers in the United States of America.

The evidence is clear that this witness took those photographs about thirty or forty years after the conclusion of World War II.

Counsel for the accused submits that he is entitled to ask this witness this question, and to produce the photographs that the witness took so that a comparison can be made by this witness between the construction characteristics of American gas chambers currently in use in the United States to punish criminals, and gas chambers said to have existed during World War II in Nazi Germany.

In a very free-wheeling course of submissions covering a great deal of ground, containing many complaints that defence is not being permitted to have full answer and defence, containing veiled innuendos that I am not conducting a fair trial if I don't bow to Mr. Christie's demand that this evidence be admitted, I observed once that yesterday I thought I made it abundantly clear that, with no little misgivings, I {2623|2624} ruled that this witness could testify as an expert in the field of literature that he says he read concerning whether or not six million Jews; or three million Jews, or two hundred thousand Jews died as a result of World War II while they were in prison camps and the like.

I made it very clear that this witness was not an expert in gas chambers, their construction their propensities, proclivities and characteristics, and that he could not testify in that regard.

I made it equally clear that he was not an expert in certain fields the details of which need not mention here. His evidence was restricted, clearly, to the field upon which Mr. Christie has been questioning him for the last day and for the last little while since this Court opened at nine forty-five this morning.

Mr. Christie now purports to put to the witness photographs of gas chambers that this witness, apparently, took in the United States. Mr. Christie is going to try to do indirectly what I said he could not do directly. I make it clear that the defence, if it wishes to call evidence concerning matters that are {2624|2625} relevant to the issues as the jury must decide, may do so. There is no relevancy that I can see between the construction of an American gas chamber in the nineteen seventies or the nineteen eighties with what was said to have existed in that regard controlled by the Nazis during World War II.

In any event, if I am wrong with respect to that, I am certainly not wrong in regard to the non-expertise of this evidence emanating from this witness.

Mr. Christie has indicated that he undertakes to call the accused. That, in my respectful view, is a worthless undertaking.

I rule, therefore, that this witness cannot be asked questions further about his taking photographs of American gas chambers. If other evidence is to be called, let it be called, but let it be called as competent evidence and let it be called from any witness who is an expert in that field.

Dr. Faurisson is not an expert in gas chambers. If I am wrong I can be quickly corrected elsewhere. I make it very clear that those questions will not be further asked, nor will any photographs be {2625|2626} produced of American gas chambers.

Mr. Christie seems to be complaining that I may not allow the witness to be shown pictures that are said to have been taken by him of one or more prison camps still in existence. They are apparently museums and show places in Europe.

That is not part of my ruling at all. If Mr. Christie wants to show him pictures that the witness took of those camps, then I will deal with that when the time comes. I will not deal with it now. That is the ruling.

THE COURT: Are there any questions?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I understand, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then let's get on with the trial. Bring back the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Before we do, Your Honour, because I don't want to have to go through the process of having my friend exclude the jury any more than Your Honour does, may I just put on record in respect to the last ruling that the defence would have undertaken {2626|2627} the proof of the fact that the gas chambers in question were established in the nineteen twenties and not in 1970.

THE COURT: That will be hearsay. He is not competent to say that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I understand that. I wanted just to ask another question so that I might get Your Honour's ruling now rather than interrupt the proceedings.

There are a number of slides which I had proposed to show of the physical evidence of the Auschwitz Concentration Camp at Birkenau. Unfortunately they are not isolated, at the moment, but will be, if Your Honour permits me to do this, from the other evidence that Your Honour has just ruled upon; but I would like Your Honour's ruling on whether the witness may, at some stage this morning, show the slides that he took of the Crematorium I and II and the surroundings of Auschwitz-Birkenau as they pertain to the allegation that this is where four million or 2.5 million or 1.765 million or one million or seven hundred thousand Jews were gassed.

Now, I'd like to know where I stand on {2627|2628} that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I couldn't possibly assist you at the moment because I haven't seen the slides. In addition to that, I don't suppose that the Crown has seen the slides. I just come to these trials totally disabused of what they are all about. This is the first time I have heard about it.

I cannot rule in a vacuum, and I don't suppose that Crown can make a decision in a vacuum, either. Surely, if you want to do that, if it is relevant and if it is not otherwise inadmissible, then it can certainly be done, but one would think that you might want to show your opposition what you intend to do so that time can be saved. It might very well go on consent. I don't know. But I can't rule now until I see them or until somebody sees them so that I can get a total picture from both sides as to what it is all about. It is very simple.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wanted to put on record my application.

THE COURT: It's on record.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't have another opportunity to do this. I want to get through, if {2628|2629} possible, Dr. Faurisson's evidence this morning.

THE COURT: Do you have the slides there?

MR. CHRISTIE: They are here.

THE COURT: Do you want to show them to the Crown?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will be glad to.

THE COURT: He may want to see them first, otherwise he may want the jury out to have a voir dire on them. That is to be avoided if at all possible.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Is there anything else before we call the jury back?

Mr. Christie, you might have a look at the last exhibit. All I can see is, "The Mechanics of Gassing," about four times, four pages, and then three pages going through another Mechanics of Gassing. So we've got two pages number 27 and four pages marked "The Mechanics of Gassing". That's hardly a coherent exhibit. You might show that to the Crown, it is a lettered exhibit, but it does not make any sense to me on its face. {2629|2630}

MR. CHRISTIE: That exhibit is not put together in the proper order. I can have a look, maybe.

— The jury returns. 10:20 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In relation to Exhibit marked "R" for identification, is the same exhibit contained in the first volume of the journal of the Historical Review?

A. The number of pages, please?

Q. The number of the page isn't indicated there.

A. Yes.

Q. That is the same article?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file the journal, then, itself rather than —

THE COURT: We will fix the exhibit up later. It is already in as an exhibit for identification only, so that it can be worked out later.
Go ahead with your questions.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You heard Dr. Vrba say – well, Dr. Vrba said that Dr. Butz and Dr. Staglich [Stäglich], he referred to them as Neo-Nazis.
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know those two men?
A. Yes. {2630|2631}
Q. Do you know them personally?
A. Yes.
Q. How long have you known Dr. Butz, for example?
A. I met him for the first time in 1976, perhaps, in Paris.
Q. Is he a neo-Nazi?
A. No.
Q. What's he do for a living?
A. He is a Professor of Computer Science in the University of Northwestern University, Illinois.
Q. Do you know Dr. Staglich personally?
A. Yes.
Q. Could you tell us something about him, as to what he did or does?
A. He wrote a book called, in English, "The Myth of Auschwitz".
Q. Yes.
A. And the graphic documentation is mine, because when I came back from Auschwitz I sent in some photos, as those that are sent to Ernst Zundel.
Q. Yes. And those were photos you took at Auschwitz.
A. Yes.
Q. Could you tell us something about Dr. Staglich, his occupation or —
A. Dr. Staglich [sic] was a magistrate, and in 1973, '74, he had trouble because of his non-belief in the gas chamber and the genocide. He was judged {2631|2632} by a court, a special court for the judge themselves, I think. The prosecutor asked that his career would be interrupted and no money for his retreat.
Q. For his retirement.
A. Yes.
Q. Is he a judge now?
A. No more. No more.
Q. Is he retired now?
A. He is retired now, but the tribunal decided to take one fifth of his rent during five years. That was the first sanction.
THE COURT: One fifth of his —
THE WITNESS: His pension during five years. That was the first sanction. He wrote a little booklet about his experience of Auschwitz, his proper experience of Auschwitz and where he was a soldier. He was not an S.S. He was in the flak.
Q. Anti-aircraft?
A. Yes.
Q. And then, does his work – what is his work in relation to yours? Is it agreed or disagreed, what is it about?
A. He completely agrees with me. I agree with him.
Q. And has anything happened with respect to his academic qualification?
A. Yes. First his book has been forbidden in Germany.
Q. Yes. Is it forbidden in France?
A. Not in France.
Q. Is it forbidden in Canada? {2632|2633}
A. I don't know. I don't think so.
Q. No. And what else happened to him?
A. The police came at his house and take even the printed matter. Then the President of the University of Göttingen [Göttingen], from whom he had from this university as a doctorate in law, the President of the University decided to take out his title of Doctor in Law that he had, I think, in 1953.
Q. Yes.
A. So he introduced a kind of suit, and he used for that a law from Hitler Germany of 1938 or 1939.
Q. To take away his doctorate?

A. To take away his doctorate of law.
Q. I want to understand this clearly. The application to take away his doctorate was brought in nineteen what?
A. I think in 1980. But it is not finished, not decided yet.
Q. But it is brought under a law of 1938?
A. '38 or '39, from Hitler.
Q. Yes. Do you know him personally?
A. Yes.
Q. Is he a neo-Nazi?
A. No.
Q. Other than the Butz book which identified the hoax of the twentieth century and the book of Staglich, are there any other authorities that support your views? {2633|2634}
A. Yes. We have in Germany even a Jew called Burg – his real name is Ginsburg – and he wrote some books purporting about Jews, particularly a book translated into English, "Maidanek Forever?" And he had many troubles himself. For instance, one day he was going to the grave of his wife with flowers and he was attacked, beaten up. He is an old man.
Q. Do you have any knowledge of the maps of Auschwitz put forward in various publications? Do you know those maps?
A. Yes.
Q. Have any of them been altered in any of the publications that support the Holocaust?
A. Yes.
Q. Could you tell us in what publications the maps have been altered in their published form?
A. Yes. In the Auschwitz Album, not the first American edition, not the second American edition, but the French edition.
Q. Yes. By whom was that put out?
A. Serge Klarsfeld.
Q. Do you have a photograph of the contents of those books that you discussed, the Auschwitz Album, the map and the other maps?
A. Yes.
Q. What map do you regard as authoritative and accurately descriptive of the outline and topography of Birkenau?
A. This one which has been put in exhibit. {2634|2635}
Q. The one in exhibit?
A. Yes.
Q. Now, could I see that? And where does that come from, the map that you regard as authoritative?
A. From the Auschwitz Museum. The title is "KL", which means concentration camp, "Auschwitz" It is in Polish, English, French, German and Russian. It has been published in 1980.
Q. All right. That's the map that you regard as authoritative.
A. Yes. It's like all the other maps published by the Poles. Somebody else did some transformation.
Q. There is a map in there. I don't know what number it is, really. Does your knowledge of the topography come to some extent —
THE COURT: I would like to see that exhibit, please.
Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Does your knowledge of those maps come from having been there?
A. Yes. And I have studied in the Auschwitz Museum the original card of Auschwitz which was presented to me by Mr. Iwas[z]ko as the responsible of the archives in the Auschwitz Museum.
Q. Okay. I now produce and show to you Exhibit No. 21, and I'll ask you to tell me how that map is altered in the publication you described by Serge Klarsfeld.
A. So Serge Klarsfeld published the {2635|2636} Auschwitz Album. The title in French is, "L'Album d'Auschwitz", and he had a card which does not figure in the American editions.
THE COURT: We have the American edition, I think, here.
THE WITNESS: Yes. You have it.
THE COURT: Why are we going through this?
MR. CHRISTIE: To demonstrate that certain people have altered the evidence.
THE COURT: But not the one that's here.

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

THE COURT: That's all right. Go ahead. So long as we understand one another.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Just tell us how it was altered, Dr. Faurisson, and what the significance of the alteration is.

A. Very-simple. It's on page 42.

Q. Of what book?

A. Of the book of Klarsfeld, the French edition of the Auschwitz Album.

Q. And what has he done?

A. There is a road going between Krema II and Krema III. He cut it just after Krema II and Krema III. Then there is a road, we can see it on the Polish map. This road goes to the sauna, big sauna, and it has been cut once more by Klarsfeld. So it is cut, if I may ...

Q. You can show it on the map, perhaps, to the jury. {2636|2637}

A. I am going to show it. He cut it there and he cut it there. So they showed photos of people in the Auschwitz Album, and they did quite a good job, I think, because they found where all those photos had been taken. And they said those people are there and there and there. And they showed us people in front of Krema III, and by the map you can understand that those people couldn't go further.

Q. By what map?

A. By the map what's been doctored by Klarsfeld.

Q. In the map that's been doctored by Klarsfeld.

A. Yes. Because in this map they put numbers for some of those photos. For instance, No. 15. You go and see No. 15. Those people are there between Crematorium II and III, and the caption says that those people are there. They are going to be cremated, because it's a dead end.

Q. Is it really a dead end?

A. It's not really a dead end. It's false.

Q. All right. I now produce and show to you an enlarged plan, or two enlarged plans. Do you recognize these two plans?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. The first plan is the plan in exhibit.

Q. All right.

A. The real plan. {2637|2638}

Q. Could you define it by the plan on the right and the plan on the left, if you hold the map?

A. I think it better to hold it like this instead so the map on the top is the real map, which is an exhibit. And the false map is there on the bottom.

Q. Where did you get that map from?

A. From Klarsfeld.

Q. In his book?

A. I mean from the book of Klarsfeld. And there I put this on my comments, my personal comments. My comments are, "Cut here" and "Cut here". And there is something else, but I must show it very precisely, I think, because you are too far to see that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to exhibit that if I may, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: It has been cut here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Never mind, Doctor. The judge has got to rule on this and he is thinking about it. So don't carry on.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, the jury has seen it. I have no objection. I question really the relevance of the maps the doctor calls the proper maps are here before us already in evidence, and I don't know how that goes to the truth or falsity of anything in the pamphlet, but if my friend wants to put it in, I don't object.

MR. CHRISTIE: I could explain that if I were to argue the point. {2638|2639}

THE COURT: No. We don't want you to argue the point at this time. You will have a full opportunity to do that at the proper time.

Yes, all right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. That will be the exhibit. number, please.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit No. 37.

— EXHIBIT NO. 37: Photocopy, "Plan de Birkenau"

THE WITNESS: Serge Klarsfeld, if I may add something about this map —

THE COURT: I think you should answer counsel's questions. If he wants you to do that, he will ask you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you contribute to the understanding of Ernst Zundel pertaining to gas chambers in 1979 and '80?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you give him the benefit of what your experience had been?

A. Yes. And I always found him very greedy.

Q. What do you mean, greedy?

A. Asking always new photos, new information.

Q. Why was that greedy?

A. Because I have no time to send photos and information like that all over the world.

Q. I see. How often did he ask you for information about the gas chambers in 1979 and '80? {2639|2640}

A. Constantly in September '79, and then when you wrote to me in 1980, when he phoned to me, etcetera. Many times.

Q. And did you give him all the information that you had acquired?

A. No. I cannot. I had no time.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Now, I want —

A. And sometimes he gives me some idea, because he is a good photographer, and he gave me some good ideas for a short demonstration. For example, yesterday the death rate in Dachau, where we could see that Hitler was supposed to give an order of killing the Jews in June '41 and the death rates is the same. It does not increase. And then Himmler is supposed to have given an order, some say in September '44, others in October. Dr. Hilberg says 25th of November. I don't know where he found that. But if we see those dates, we see that the death rate at the right moment when Himmler was supposed to have said, "Stop killing the Jews it's going like this."

Q. Now, you have said that there are, in your opinion, some false confessions by people like Gerstein and Hoess.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you give us your opinion from the basis of your research as to why you believe such false confessions were made?

A. Why they were made —

THE COURT: Did we not cover all that yesterday, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, we didn't. I {2640|2641} never asked that question about what is his basis for the belief in the false confession. Not the particular ones, but the surrounding circumstances is what I am trying to get at.

THE COURT: Oh, so this is not going to be about torture again.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Well, it could be, but it is not about Hoess particularly. It is not about Gerstein particularly, but about the surrounding circumstances of the IMT. I'm sorry if I weren't more explicit.

Q. What surrounding circumstances of the International Military Tribunal and the Nuremberg Military Tribunal of the United States do you believe brought about false confessions?

A. The fright of being sent to Poland or to Russia. That was very important, especially in the case of Sauckel, because even his wife and his ten children were to be sent to Russia. There many, many facts to explain that, but I would stress one thing, that in a certain manner I experienced it myself. I am not being tortured. I don't know what is torture, and I think that many people talk about torture. They do not know what it is, but I have experienced it as pressure, and I know very well by myself how those people could have been under pressure.

Myself, I have never wear any German uniform. I am not an S.S. I've killed nobody. I am a professor and I have a life impossible, although I am paid and I don't work. I can give you an example of the impossibility of my life. {2641|2642}

When I see that there, in this tribunal, it has been said that I have been convicted of falsifying history, even the lower court says falsification of history, that's not our matter, and the Court of Appeal said, but I had the logic, that I had the method, that I was not negligent, that I was not ignoring systematically such thing, that I was not a liar, and the consequence was so now, 26 of April, 1983, in France we have the right, the expert, the historian and the public to say that genocide and gas chamber did not exist, how could it be possible if I was condemned for falsifying history? I read that yesterday in the Toronto Star, and day after day – you see, I experienced that during years. My wife was called wife of a falsifier. And I want to tell you why, because my name begins by “Fau”, Faurisson, and falsifier in French begins with “Fau”. And if I not heard that, read that, Faurisson falsifier, and when you hear people accused of fantastic crimes, your conclusion – if a German in front of me in 1945, and if this man had been like Joseph Konrad saying, “I didn’t know no gas chamber”, I would have said, “You are going to confess because there were gas chamber”. So day after day, in France, I have been called “fauteur” [faussaire], and except for one man, Mr. Pierre Bloch, in his monthly, my name appear[ed] five hundred times. I never sued him. I couldn’t. I have no money to do that. And then he call[ed] me “fauteur”. So I sued him. Mr. Griffiths, you remember that. I sued him. I said, “You call me fauteur”, and his lawyers said in the paper that they have to give to the judge. They said, no, no, Mr. Bloch {2642|2643} does not call Mr. Faurisson fauteur. Mr. Faurisson has badly read the text. And this is what the court decided. The court decided that, yes, Mr. Bloch had treated me of fauteur. But I couldn’t sue him for slander. I had made a mistake. I should have sued him for injury. In a French court, I don’t know for the Canadian Courts, but the French courts you cannot change. If you sue somebody for slander the tribunal cannot say it is not slander. It is injury. And then Mr. Bloch says, “Victory”. The same thing for Rassinier. Rassinier had an impossible life. His wife the same thing. My children, the son of Rassinier, impossible also. My son wanted to be judge. He had to resign. A Nazi is a man. A communist is a man. A Jew is a man, and I am a man, but if you have the principle that a Nazi is not a man, that you can say about him anything, everything, read the newspaper, the newspaper of yesterday, see those impossible stories – baby boiled in the fat of their parents, Mengele having in his place eyes of different colours pinned on the wall – anything.

So if your principle is that a Nazi is not a man, and I am ashamed to say that in 1945 it was my belief, I thought that there were categories like that of people, that we are criminal by naissance —

Q. By ...

A. By birth, and myself, I could be criminal by accident, but certainly not like a Nazi. And the French soldiers in Algeria, in Indochina, I think they made many slaughters.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, would you {2643|2644} like to ask some more questions now?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don’t think it’s irrelevant what the witness is saying, but if Your Honour directs me.

Q. I will ask you to get what you said and relate it to the position of the Nazi accused and the charges against him. And how does that relate to false confessions?

A. Because in this state you are already to make any confession. Excuse me, Your Honour, if I talk about my experience. I can tell you that in 1979, when there was this explosion in France, when thousands of people were in the street saying that I was a fauteur, they did that about myself fauteur; when they do that you are ready to recant, and I assure you that we have people coming – excuse me. That’s personal experience, and when I read the story of Johann Paul Kramer, Doctor in Auschwitz and those people confessed, I understand that perfectly.

So when you have somebody who comes on your side, it could be Mr. Pierre Bloch or a judge of the International Military Tribunal, or a prosecutor, he comes and he says, “Now, so on. Give a signature.” For Hoess, they didn’t even ask to Hoess that he invented the gas chamber, but quite usually, I was for a trip like that and when I come back there was a gas chamber. It was not me. You have the same story for Ravensbrück [Ravensbrück]. You have the same story for Mauthausen. The story comes after. So they say, “Go on. Confess. You will have something. You will be free. You can leave.” Instead of that, the people who are on your {2644|2645} side, they say, “You are courageous, but now you must be heroic”, and you don’t want those people. You are ready to fall on your knees in front of the others, because the others, they are powerful. Your friends, they are nothing. And Frisch, who was one of the accused in Nuremberg, he was the Chief of the Radio Propaganda —

Q. He was an accused at the IMT?

A. Yes. He wrote something interesting about his experience, and he said, “When you confess, it’s not by fear. It’s by hope.” He was in the hands of the Russians, and the Russians didn’t really torture him, but they knew how to do, slowly, slowly, they take day after day and everybody would confess, especially if the confession can be absolutely vague, “There was a gas chamber. I don’t know very well where”, etcetera. And the same thing for the story of the atrocity, medical atrocity. If I may say that, there is a book which must be read, and it is, how do you say it, food for thought.

Q. Food for thought.

A. Yes. This book is an English book published in 1964, I think. It is the story of Dr. Dering. I think that it is really, we are in the heart of the story of confession and false accusation, if I may say something about the story of Dr. Dering, who has been a judge in England.

Q. How does it relate to the coercion aspect of the matter?

A. Dr. Dering was a surgeon in Auschwitz. {2645|2646}

THE COURT: Let’s – all right. Go ahead,

MR. CHRISTIE: I am familiar with the story. I am not ignorant of the story.

THE COURT: I didn’t suggest for one minute you were. I want to make sure it is relevant. Yes, if he wants to say that ...

THE WITNESS: Dr. Dering was a surgeon in Auschwitz. One day a Jewish novelist, Leon Uris, wrote a book, I think it was “Exodus”, and at the beginning of his book he said, “Dr. Dering, who in Auschwitz did practise 17,000 surgical operations without anaesthesia, on women”, Dr. Dering, after the War, was doctor in Somaliland, British Somaliland, then he went to the suburbs of London. When he read that, he decided to sue Leon Uris for slander. Not injury, slander. And then we have this book about this trial, and this book has been written by two defence lawyers absolutely convinced of the existence of the gas chamber, absolutely convinced that four million Jews had been killed in Auschwitz and so on.

Okay. At the beginning Leon Uris was asked, “Do you say, really, 17,000 women without anaesthesia?” That was the first. Next step, he said, “No. 17,000 men and women without anaesthesia.” Suddenly, a great number. But the judge said, “What is it, a great number, 130?” Because the Poles sent to London the register of the surgical operation in Auschwitz, and you had everything. When the Germans did those things, they put it in Latin and you had the signature of Derring [sic]. So 130. Next step, with {2646|2647} anaesthesia, and with a special anaesthesia which only half your body was anaesthetised. And then, then the British discovered [sic] that probably the Poles had doctored the document by the two lawyers, it is said probably.

Q. In this book you are talking about?

A. Yes. In this book which is partial. And I must say that Dr. Derring evidently spoke about gas chamber, but it was like, you see, you need the gas chamber, the German need the gas chamber to say, you see, when I was doing that to those people they were not sent to the gas chamber. Even the Nazi they need that now. And from 130 you wouldn’t figure that, but suddenly we got to five, and then I think that they finished with two women. They gave only the first name, something like Martha, Bertha. Then what happened to Dr. Derring? The jury decided that there was slander. So he received one farthing. It’s English money. One farthing. And I didn’t know this manner of the British justice, but the judge retired, recessed, came back and decided that Dr. Dering would have to pay, and Dr. Dering said, “I washed my honour, but I am ruined”, and he died a fauser after. But what did Leon Uris do? Leon Uris wrote a novel. He sold this novel for $250,000 to make a film about it. The title is, “Queen’s Bench VII”. And what is awful is that he couldn’t call the Dr. Dering. He gave him another name. And he even invented the son of Dering and you could see in the film the son of Dering looking at his father and thinking, “Now, my father was a criminal”. And that’s what could happen to {2647|2648} my son, my daughter of people like me.

Q. Now, in Germany, Dr. Faurisson, many tribunals have condemned soldiers for having been in so-called extermination camps such as the Auschwitz Trial. Are you familiar with the Auschwitz trial?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you studied the transcript of it?

A. No. I couldn't get the transcript so that is how I studied this trial, which is very interesting. 1963, 1965, eighteen months.

Q. Yes. What have you studied to —

A. So I have studied the book, a very thick book of Herman[n] Langbein.

Q. Called?

A. "Der Auschwitz" in English, "The Auschwitz Trial". Herman Langbein was himself in Auschwitz and he is the big responsible of the International Association of the inmates, former inmates of Auschwitz. So it is a book quite, in one sense — I read another book from a defence lawyer called, "La Ternser" [Latenser], a terrific book also, called in English, "The other side of the Auschwitz Trial".

Q. Yes.

A. And I want to precise right now that "La Ternser", I know that, believed in those gas chambers as many of those people. And a book was quoted by Mr. Griffiths. I think it is the book of Bert Newmann [Bernd Naumann], I think, called also something like the Auschwitz Trial.

Q. Was there ever any indication of what {2648|2649} was it they considered a gas chamber?

A. If I read those three books, if I read the clippings of this time, because I have all documentation of Paul Rassinier about it, Paul Rassinier had the right to ask to attend this trial, but when he took the train, he was stopped at the frontier and sent back to France.

Q. Yes.

A. So I had those clippings. I see by the photos also, the tribunal and all that, that never the question of the gas chamber has been examined. It was, the gas chamber was there like a sacred cow. Nobody would touch it. And in the courtroom you had a plan. The plan, like this one, our plan, and you had a little drawing, Krema II, Krema III, Krema IV, Krema V, but what was in Krema II, Krema III, Krema IV, Krema V? The question, if I see the book by Langbein and so on, the question has not been asked at all. And I can understand that because this is what the gentlemen decided, and that is —

Q. Have you read the judgment?

A. Oh, yes. I have it.

Q. Have you studied it in detail?

A. Yes. In detail.

Q. All right. What does the judgment conclude?

A. I must say the method, first on what was based the judgment. That's what is typical of the German trials. They said, "We are not interested to know who was doing anything in those gas chambers, who poured the Zyklon or whatsoever, because not one man {2649|2650} has been condemned for that. No. There were gas chambers. People were gassed, but they were coming from the ramp, after the detraining, on the ramp. So we want to know who was on the ramp. If somebody has been on the ramp it means that he has been co-responsible"

Q. Co-responsible, yes.

A. Co-responsible of so many murders and this is how the calculation was made. The judge said, "On such or such date, Dr. Lucas", for example, "has been on the ramp. On those four days arrive four trains. Each train, we can suppose, was of one thousand people, and we can suppose that 750 people were gassed. So he is responsible of four times 750 people."

It remind the witchcraft trials when the judge was saying, this is a quarter of proof. This is a quarter of proof. This is one half a proof. It makes one proof. And the Germans, you see, always higher bid. You ask them something, the East Germany is repeating what their liberator of the East want them to say. And West Germany, the same thing with the West. But they do always more.

For instance, the people, the free people who were acquitted in Nuremberg, Goering was condemned and so on, but three people were acquitted. So the American people said, "You are free." They said, "We don't want to get out because the Germans will attack us." But they were told, "You can go. You are free." So they were tkaen [sic], they were judged and they were condemned.

Q. You mean people have been tried {2650|2651} in one court —

A. By the International Military Tribunal. They were acquitted. I can give the name, but it is too difficult for the recall to spell the name.

Q. Have people been tried more than once for the same offence?

A. Oh, yes. Quite commonly. Dr. Kramer spent something like eighty days in the summer of 1942 in Auschwitz. It was at the right time of this fantastic typhus and typhoid epidemic and malaria. He had to replace a doctor who was sick, and the doctor of the camp died from typhus. Many Germans —

Q. Who was that?

A. Dr. Pupopiersch [Popiersch]. And many people died. The wife of the man called Ceaser [Caesar] died from typhus also in 1942. Many Germans died. So he came to this place and he was, we call that in French an old bachelor, and he was used to have a diary. So in his diary he tells all about Auschwitz. And fifteen times you have the word Sonderaktion [Sonderaktion]. So he give them his diary thinking he wouldn't have any trouble with it, and the Poles condemned him to ten years of jail, or perhaps more, but he was liberated after ten years, but he confessed that those Sonderaktion were gassings, and to maintain this myth you can see the diary of John Paul Kramer very often quoted with words taken off by Poliakov, for instance. When, you say that a Sonderaktion was outside, it was difficult to make the people believe that it was a gassing, so the word outside was taken off. And many things like that. So this man was con-{2651|2652}demned. Then, ten years after he was liberated, he came back to Germany. He was a professor, a very imminent professor of anatomy, and when he came back he said nothing had the right to talk in this trial except hatred. He protested against all that, and he said, "I want to go back to my work." Like myself I do, eh?

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. So at that time people in Germany protested against his protestation and he went to trial. He was condemned. To ten years, and they say ten years he had already done ten years, so finished, but they suppressed his right to teach, his rent, I think.

Q. Rent, you mean —

A. Pension, I mean.

Q. Yes.

A. And any civil rights. And this poor man was, after that, he was something like eighty years old. He was taken to the Auschwitz trial, that I talk about in Frankfurt, 1963, 1965, and this old man was asked, "We have that in Langbein, so what about the gassings in Auschwitz?" And it's a pity that I have not the text.

Q. Do you remember?

A. The text of Langbein. He said, "Oh, the German soldier, we are pleased because when those trains arrive, they had more schnapps and cigarettes and things like that." And he did not deny that the gasings had existed. He didn't touch that. And he went away, but the most pathetic thing that I have {2652|2653} perhaps ever read in my life is what this poor Johann Paul Kramer [Kremer] said in his own trial in Munster, in Germany, when he came back. He said, "I am totally innocent, but I am taken in a dilemma. I am taking in dilemma and only God could solve that."

Q. In the Auschwitz trial was there any forensic investigation of any gas chamber?

A. No.

Q. Was there any investigation of any process of gassing?

A. They tried in a trial against Gerrard [Gerhard] Peters who was the manager of the firm who was responsible for the Zyklon-B. They tried. I see that they tried to understand how — I think it was the first time. They tried to understand how Zyklon could have been used to kill people, I have only the judgment, which is rather long, and it is nearly comic, you see. Sometime you have also comedy, because they I are there. The judge says, "We had this kind of explanation by somebody, some expert." Another one said that. But it is impossible. And the ending sentences, the tribunal is satisfied to think that the explanations, I don't remember what, so I cannot call that a real inquiry, eh?

Q. Was there ever, in the Auschwitz trial, to the best of your knowledge, the presentation of any drawing, diagram, model or other practical demonstration of the gas chamber?

A. No. The gas chamber, we must understand, that is a sacred cow. Never touch it.

Q. Could you give us examples in your {2653|2654} investigation of false testimony in respect to the Dachau gas chamber? You are referring to your book.

A. I am referring to my book called, "Memoire en defence". Memorandum in defence against those who accused me of falsifying a story. From about page 212 I gave, I think, fifteen and even more after, fifteen examples of perfect proof of the existence of gassings in Dachau.

Q. Yes. Do they describe actual gassings at Dachau?

A. Even you had this film talking about.

Q. That's right.

A. Okay? You had that.

Q. With the clothes hanging on the wall and the dummy shower heads in the film.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Could you pick just one example that you know of from your research of a false statement that —

A. I want to give a little idea. Already the 14th of May, 1945, you had this investigation commission of the Congress of the United States, and they give the description., They say, twenty feet by twenty feet by ten feet. Sealed door. I don't know the technical term in English for the admission of gas. The peephole, etcetera. It is in Volume 36 of the IMT, page 621, 622. The code is L-159.

Q. That's the exhibit number?

A. The exhibit, yes. So those senator[s] of [or] representatives, I don't call them liars. I {2654|2655} have the photo of those people. They are looking to the ceiling of what is supposed to have been a gas chamber. I think that it is true. I would have thought at the time that it was true. They are not liars. It is the common belief. They are very respectable. And specially something which is terrible about that is that we have many, many testimonies of priests. It does not mean that the priests are more liars than others. Not at all. It means that when you want to pick up a testimony, you are not going to pick up the testimony of a poor man, but of a man supposed to have respect for the truth.

So you have many testimonies of scientific people, priests, doctors, even the Bishop of Claremont Fernad [Clermont Ferrand] told about the priest, Polish priest, gassed in Dachau.

Q. Were they true?

A. It was false. So I could give those examples, and they were quite official. You have a report of the OSS section of the Seventh Army.

Q. Dr. Faurisson, the jury might think that there was gassings in Dachau. Now, why do you say that we should not believe there were gassings in Dachau with all those testimonies?

A. Because it is recognized now by every historian, it is recognized by the Dachau Museum. They say it is a gas chamber, the beginning of the building has been in 1942, but in 1945 it was not achieved because of the boycott of the inmates.

Q. I see.

A. That's the story. So I wrote to {2655|2656} those people. I think —

Q. You've gone through that.

A. Okay.

Q. But I want you to give an example, if you have one, of a statement made by someone who said that they saw a gassing there, and then I'd like you to tell us where it was false.

THE COURT: We will take an adjournment for fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:15 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Discussion concerning Exhibit "R" — to be sorted out after recess.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Now, about the photographs.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think my friend and I have discussed the possible solution. I think we should be a half an hour more, and then we can have somebody set up the slide projector, watch it from twelve thirty to ten to one, and Your Honour can advise me what, if anything, I can do, and then the jury can be excused as soon as this part of my examination is finished. Perhaps that would be the end of it, depending on whatever came of the matter. And then we probably would be through by one.

THE COURT: Yes. All right. Bring in the jury, please.

— {2656|2657}

— The jury enters. 11:35 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHIRSITE [sic]: Dr. Faurisson, you are going to give an example of a fabricated story about Dachau. Is there a published story?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it published in a book?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you give the name of the book and the author, please?

A. Yes. The name of the book, translated into English, is, "So it was", 1940, 1945. The name of the author is Fernand Grenier.

Q. Could you just read the passage that you say is a fabrication respecting the gas chamber allegation in Dachau?

A. Published in 1970. "Beside the constantly working four furnaces of the crematorium which never stopped, there was a chamber, a room with showers on the ceiling with spray nozzles. The previous year, in 1944, 120 children aged eight to fourteen had been given a towel and a piece of soap. They entered the chamber joyfully. The doors were closed. From the shower head came asphyxiating gas. Ten minutes later death had claimed those innocents, and the crematorium furnaces reduced them to cinders in one hour.

Q. How many falsehoods are there in that portion quoted?

A. So most gassing had happened in Dachau, and in this short story you have many lies. For {2657|2658} example, first, beside the constantly working four furnaces of the crematorium which never stopped, this is a material impossibility. There was a room with showers on the ceiling, invented the showers on the ceiling. With spray nozzles, he invented that. The previous year, in 1944, he invented the date, but a thing which is strange is that he does not give, as usual, to look sincere the month and even the day.

Q. Yes.

A. 120 children, he invented the children. He invented the figure of 102. Age eight to fourteen, he invented those ages. Had been given a towel and a piece of soap, he invented the towel and the piece of soap, which is quite recurrent in all those stories. It is a stereotype. They enter the chamber joyfully, he invented that they enter. He invented this joy. The doors were closed, he invented that the doors were closed. Doors, plural, for a gas chamber, which is strange. From the shower heads came asphyxiating gas, he invented that. Ten minutes later, new invention. Death had claimed those innocents and the crematorium furnaces reduced them to cinders in one hour, 120 children in four four [sic] furnaces in one hour, quite impossible.

So I think that we are used to read all those stories. We so well-used to read those stories that our brain does not function any more.

Q. Why do you say that story is false?

A. Because there were no gassings in Dachau.

Q. Why do you say that? {2658|2659}

A. I say that because this accusation of the Germany having doing that is now suppressed.

Q. What do you mean by suppressed? That is a difficult word.

A. Nobody now says that there were gassings in Dachau, and it is said that there were no gassings.

Q. Right.

A. By Dachau Museum, by the Association of the Former Inmates of Dachau.

Q. All right.

A. But I must say that in nineteen, perhaps, forty-seven, this inquiry of the Congressmen, American Congressmen has been used against Oswald Pohl by Judge Musmanno [Musmanno]—

Q. In an official trial?

A. In an official trial. The reference is NMT, Case No. 4, Volume 5, page 1133.

Q. And what happened to Pohl?

A. He was hanged.

Q. Thank you. Well, how many satellite camps are there in Auschwitz-Birkenau?

A. Auschwitz and Birkenau, and you have thirty-eight other satellite camps.

Q. Thank you. Are there any consistencies, or is there any consistency in all the published accounts of the survivors that you have read in your studies?

A. No. No consistency.

Q. Are there currently new inconsistencies that you are discovering in the accounts as they {2659|2660} arrive in the various publications of our time?

A. Oh, I must say that every week I receive a new story. I can give an example?

Q. Could you give us an example of the current and the newest one that you have heard and your opinion of it? Just a portion referable [sic] to gas chambers. Identify the source and —

A. I give the source. Alberta Report. Weekly News Magazine. From January 21, 1985. the title is "Auschwitz". Author, Eva Brewster.

Q. Is she supposed to be an eye witness?

A. She is supposed to be so, remembers the death camp.

Q. She remembers the death camp and describes it in an article?

A. Yes. On page 36 she says, Mrs. Brewster realizes how upon passing the gas chambers of whose purpose they were still ignorant, an S.S. guard slyly remarked, "This is our most productive factory, working day and night shifts." The following day she is learned their purpose. "The factories," Mrs. Brewster testifies, 'were gas chambers where all transports were given a piece of soap and a towel and driven into huge rooms with innumerable shower heads in the ceiling. When the doors closed gas instead of water was pumped in. After a few minutes the bodies were dropped through trapdoors into a crematorium and burned."

Q. Dropped through trapdoors into a crematorium and burned. {2660|2661}

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Have you heard that eye witness account before recounted by any other survivor?

A. I think that I have never found a trapdoor into the crematorium.

Q. That's a new one, is it?

A. Yes. It's a new detail.

Q. Okay. Do you regard that as a credible [sic] detail?

A. Not at all, especially when we know the plans and so on.

Q. Mm-hmmm. The plans of what are you speaking?

A. Of Auschwitz, of the crematorium.

Q. Thank you.

A. Even if we had to believe that Mr. Vrba said the truth, even with his plan you cannot explain that.

Q. Even with the evidence that he's led in this trial.

A. Yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm. What is the final solution, and where do you go to find the definition of that? We've heard Dr. Hilberg give us his definition of that term. What do you understand it to mean?

A. The final solution is a territorial final solution.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. The word was used by Heydrich already in 1940. {2661|2662}

THE COURT: Who?

THE WITNESS: Heydrich. In 1940. And then when we have the Luther memorandum of 21 August, 1942.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Saying?

A. We see that he repeats what Heydrich said.

Q. Who was Heydrich?

A. I could say, to simplify the thing, Chief of the Police, but under Himmler.

Q. Yes.

A. And Luther, in his memorandum, he was in the Ministry, Undersecretary in the Ministry of Interior, he said at that time, August 1942, and I recall you that Hitler was supposed to have given an order in June '41 to kill the Jews ...

Q. Yes.

A. ... said about those transfer of Jews that they had to be sent east and further east, as soon as the military situation could permit that. So final solution, the people had that, but it doesn't mean that the final solution is to kill. When you say that you try to find a final solution to the problem of unemployment, it doesn't mean that you want to kill the people unemployed; or I don't know. The final solution of the Palestinian problem doesn't mean that anybody wants to kill the Palestinians.

Q. Most authors today have said that that means to kill the Jews; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you considered the sources of {2662|2663} that belief?

A. I think that up till, perhaps, last year, even the specialist thought that what we call the Wansee [Wannsee] Conference, 20 of January, 1942, that the Wansee Conference had decided the extermination of the Jews.

Q. Yes.

A. If you read the text, you don't I see that. And now, since the Convention of Stuttgart, from the 3rd to the 5th May, 1984, perhaps, yes, since this convention it is recognized.

Q. By whom? People don't know that convention, Doctor. You do, they don't. Tell us what it was.

A. I mean that the account that we had of this convention —

Q. Who was at that convention? Do you know?

A. Dr. Hilberg and historians and German historians and so on.

Q. Do you have the description for those —

A. Yes, I have that. Even in press clippings. And I think also in patterns of prejudice, I think.

Q. Publications of the results of that conference, is that what you mean?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Do you understand what those people are in relation to yourself historically? What do you call them? {2663|2664}

A. Those people are people believe in extermination, but since few years there is a kind of academic dispute.

Q. Among who?

A. Between what they call themselves intentionalists and functionalists.

Q. What's the difference?

A. Difficult, because it is more or less metaphysical. And when we have metaphysics, it is a bad sign. It means that —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed that last one.

THE WITNESS: I mean when we have metaphysic conception into history, like intentionalism and functionalism, I say that it is a bad sign, something not clear.

Q. Something is not clear?

A. Something is not clear.

Q. Could you define the difference between the functionalist schooling of the exterminationist view and the —

A. Yes. Many definitions have been given of that.

Q. Wasn't this discussed by Dr. Hilberg in a publication recently?

A. Yes, he wrote about that, yes. Now, intentionalists are the people who believe that there was an intention to exterminate the Jews, that an order was given, an order that nobody has found, but an order must have been given. Those are called intentionalists. It is the case of Raul Hilberg. {2664|2665}

Q. He believes in the order, is that what you are saying?

A. Yes. He cannot show us an order, but he says an order must have existed.

Q. Yes.

A. And the other, the functionalists are the people who say that my kind of automatism the German bureaucracy improvised an extermination of the Jews.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Who is in the latter school?

A. Now, Martin Broszat, Director of the Institute of History of Munich.

Q. And is this a government-sponsored body in Munich?

A. Yes.

Q. By what government?

A. Bavaria. They are paid by Bavarian government.

Q. So that dispute is going on over the issue of what?

A. How it happen[ed] what they call the extermination of the Jews. They say there was an extermination, there were gas chambers, but how did that happen? It is the how which interests those people.

Q. What interests you?

A. What interests me is, if this thing existed, because many times in the life we say, how is it possible that such thing happen? But did such thing happen? It would be the first question to ask. {2665|2666}

Q. Right. Now, I am not going to ask to introduce this directly into evidence, but did you obtain from the Auschwitz Museum a plan of the crematoria?

A. Yes. Many.

Q. Do you have that?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: And I'd only ask that it be, perhaps, marked as an exhibit for identification, Your Honour, if I might.

Q. Have you received that plan and do you have that plan with you?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Is that a plan of the crematoria?

A. I suppose, yes. But I don't think that —

Q. What I am going to do is, in view of the fact that the hour is now lunchtime and I have something to ask His Honour ...

MR. CHRISTIE: If we might, then, perhaps, if Your Honour could excuse the jury till after we deal with this and probably after lunch, and then maybe I could deal with this, then.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, there is a matter that was discussed in your absence that I should hear about in your absence.

You are excused now till two o'clock.

— The jury retires.

—— {2666|2667}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, as you can see, just another detail arose that I thought I should ask in the absence of the jury in view of what Your Honour has said.

I would like to introduce the plans obtained by my client through Dr. Faurisson. He obtained them from Dr. Faurisson. Dr. Faurisson obtained them from the Auschwitz Museum. I want to introduce them to be able to later show how my client, in his research, can demonstrate the truth of his position having constructed, as I said earlier, models, scale models that I can prove are accurate to scale to the plan from these —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I may be able to cut this short. I have no objection if Dr. Faurisson received the plans from Auschwitz. I have no objection to that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Neither do I.

MR. CHRISTIE: Then if that's the case, maybe I could mark that now, Your Honour, or maybe in the presence of the jury later. I've got to show my friend what I am talking about. Maybe he already knows more than I think he does. {2667|2668}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'd be astonished if I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: I meant no affront by that. But I hadn't shown these to my friend before. I will show them to the witness, if I may.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have seen a smaller version of this plan before, Your Honour, and I have no objection.

THE COURT: It is a plan of what, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is a plan of the crematorium buildings, Your Honour. This is Crematorium II, and there is also other Crematoria buildings.

If I may, I'd like to ask the witness on the record just a couple of identification questions.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Dr. Faurisson, I am going to lead you and suggest to you that this is the plan that you obtained from the Asuchwitz [sic] Museum, and it purports to be, to the best of your knowledge, the crematorium plan of Krema II. Is that right, sir?

A. That's right. It could be also Krema III, because it's built on the same type. {2668|2669}

Q. The same plan was used for both those two buildings?

A. In mirror. They were in mirror.

Q. Mirror images of each other.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to mark that, perhaps, the next lettered exhibit.

THE WITNESS: Not exhibit, no. I keep those plans. I don't want to give them as exhibit.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

THE WITNESS: No, no.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, you have identified those, have you, sir?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if they go in just for identification —

THE WITNESS: I can give the reference.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I can be of any assistance to Mr. Christie, I have seen this in a book. I have the book, Your Honour, and I would be happy to provide a photocopy of the book, but it is not as large as this.

THE WITNESS: Excuse me, can I ask you, Mr. Griffiths, if it is the book of Filip Muller [Müller]?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, it is the book of Langbein from 1983 —

THE WITNESS: Which one?

MR. GRIFFITHS: You have referred to it a number of times, Dr. Faurisson. It deals with various documents having to do with gassing, Langbein and twenty-one others, published last year. {2669|2670}

THE WITNESS: Yes, I see.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is in a book.

THE WITNESS: But I think that the dimensions are not given.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's clearly smaller than this, but even the dimensions are not given.

THE WITNESS: That is a very important point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me for interrupting this conversation, but what I propose to do, and I agree and I appreciate my friend is trying to help, what I propose to do with my friend's consent, perhaps, is to introduce these for identification, at which time, as at such time they may be useful to the accused, he may say that he has seen these, and if he ordered the production of the model from them and then they would not be introduced to prove the truth of their contents, but merely that the models were made from the plans that this witness has identified as having obtained from Auschwitz Museum.

THE COURT: It sounds reasonable with me except for the fact that the witness does not want to let them out of his hands. I imagine you have access to a printing plant that could make copies of this so that there could be no problem there.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think we can solve that.

THE WITNESS: May I say something? A copy would be bad. For this plan you cannot have a good copy of this plan. It's not possible.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I think we {2670|2671} can solve this problem by copies, since the Crown apparently doesn't dispute the authenticity as described by the witness of the plans.

THE COURT: What other problems do you have?

MR. CHRISTIE: None that I am aware of on this issue.

THE COURT: What is the next issue?

MR. CHRISTIE: Then I'd like to show the slides and ask Your Honour if I might show them to the jury. So if we could set up the projector . . .

Your Honour, for the benefit of this short interlude, I have prepared a description of each of them.

THE COURT: Now, these are slides 1 to 8 of the American gas chamber?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I thought we could go through them very quickly. Can I start with them?

— Slides being shown to the Court on projector.

MR. CHRISTIE: This, as it says on {2671|2672} the document, Your Honour, is a photograph of an American gas chamber at Baltimore, Maryland. Another photograph of the door. That's a photograph of the chair for the execution of the person. And the door to the gas chamber. Another shot of the door to the gas chamber. The venting system for the gas chamber, and the scrubber for the hydrocyanic acid after the execution is complete. That's indicated on the slide as an area where the medical personnel conduct their examination; That's a further photograph of that.

This is photograph No. 10 on the list. It says, a sample of Zyklon-B containers. This is from a textbook on the use of Zyklon-B which shows how it is used for various other purposes than delousing ships, fumigating ships, fumigating other things from a German text.

This is the fumigation of a building – preparation for the fumigation of a building.

This is slide 15. They're all numbered Your Honour as on the list. I will read off the list, if I may.

That's the gas chamber of a modern delousing plant, the doors that we intend to show, in {2672|2673} 1942, Your Honour, from texts of that year. These are examples of fumigating processes.

THE COURT: Just a moment. What did you say from 1942?

MR. CHRISTIE: Slide 15 is from a textbook and identified on the list, and page 32, photo 17, gas chamber of a modern delousing plant from the text on Zyklon by G. Peters indicated previously.

Slide 16 is from that book as well, the gassing – no. This is slide 17.

THE COURT: I missed 16.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will go back, sir.

That's sixteen, showing the compartment for gassing a van in a chocolate plant. That's from the same book.

Then this is 17, for the delousing or fumigation of a train. This is from the same book.

Slide 18, a Zyklon Booklet, 1972, front cover, showing various uses of the Zyklon.

Slide 19, Zyklon tins with gas-impregnated material, granules and discoids. The discoids the book describes as being used in conjunction with the use of the gas.

Slide 20 depicts the gas, use of hydro-~~{2673|2674}~~gen cyanide for gassing foxes in burrows.

Slide 21 depicts the gassing of a ship, feeding Zyklon discs into the hold. In Germany port regulations prescribe personal supervision by public health authorities.

Slide 22 is an aerial photograph from Washington taken in 1944. A description is not listed, Your Honour.

Slide 23 is another aerial photograph of Auschwitz I and its extension, workshops, etcetera.

Slide 24 is the aerial photos of Auschwitz II or Birkenau showing the road continuing between Kremas II and III on the left. It's rather dark; unfortunately the light being on it is hard to see that, but it is quite clear if the lights were darker. It shows Kanada and a sauna, taken June 26, 1944.

Slide 25 is an aerial photo of August 25, 1944, showing Kremas II and III on either side of the railroad tracks, and in the description of Professor Hilberg at the preliminary, he says the people are going in the direction of the crematoria in this depiction. {2674|2675}

Perhaps, Doctor, you could point that out just for the record. That is described by Dr. Hilberg in his testimony at the preliminary, but we haven't – and the crematoria are on either side, as described by —

THE COURT: What about his testimony at the time?

MR. CHRISTIE: He referred to aerial photographs as being a source for the belief in gassings, but he didn't – because we couldn't show the slide, I didn't put it to him.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Slide 26 is obscure, but it is a plan of Auschwitz I from the archives. It is already in evidence.

Slide 27 is Auschwitz Camp, a street. From the Museum Archives. It shows the large brick buildings in Auschwitz I.

THE COURT: What Museum Archives?

MR. CHRISTIE: Auschwitz Museum Archives. That was slide 27.

Slide 28 is Birkenau liberation day, 27th of January, 1945, from the Auschwitz Museum Archives. Depicts the people leaving the camp. The {2675|2676} same as slide 27, it is obscure, but you could see the faces if it were clear.

Same with slide 30. This is from the Auschwitz Museum Archives, 27th of January, 1945.

Slide 31 is From Auschwitz-Birkenau. People liberated. From the Museum Archives.

Slide 32 is a photo from the museum archives in Auschwitz of the Monowitz factories.

Slide 33 is another shot of the Monowitz factories of June 1944 taken from the Durrfeld file in the National Archives in Washington.

Slide 34 is Auschwitz I, Krema I, which is the outside view taken as a photograph by Robert Faurisson, 1976.

Slide 35 is Auschwitz I, Krema I, chimney. A photograph taken by Robert Faurisson 1976.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. You are saying Krema I. I assume this is the crematorium in Birkenau.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Auschwitz I, Krema I. That is why the first Krema mentioned in Birkenau is called Krema II, III, IV and V. In both camps. We are looking now at the chimney which is slide 35. {2676|2677}

Slide 36 is again Auschwitz I, Krema I. Door closed. This is the entrance door to what is called of the gas chamber. Photo by Faurisson, 1976.

Next slide, door open.

Next slide furnaces inside that building. Again, Faurisson 1976.

Slide 39, Corpse carrier which puts the corpse into the furnace.

Slide 40 is a furnace opening showing the side referable [sic] to the number of bodies that could be cremated at one time.

Slide 41 is the rear of a furnace with the coke and ashes.

Slide 42 is the east door, again the entrance door to what is known as the gas chamber.

Slide 43 is a view of the gas chamber, easterly direction.

Slide 44 is another view of the gas chamber to the entrance to the crematoria. The entrance to the crematoria is on the right, as you can see on the slide. And all these are taken by Robert Faurisson.

Slide 45 again is the west view. That is the west view looking towards the entrance door. {2677|2678}

Slide 46 is Plan No. 1 until July 3 from the Auschwitz Museum Archives of Krema I which we were just looking at. That is the plan of the same building until 1943. Plan No. 2 ...

Do you want to say something, sorry, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: I don't know. Am I allowed to say something?

MR. CHRISTIE: Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: I need the previous one. The place is called Leichenkeller, which means mortuary. It is dead end. There is a washroom. There is a place called the exposition of the coffin. There we have the ovens. There the place for the coke.

MR. CHRISTIE: Coal, the fuel.

THE WITNESS: Coke. The fuel, yes. This is for the urns, the urns for ashes, and this for the coke.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Are you reading off the descriptions on the plan?

THE WITNESS: Yes. I translate those German words.

MR. CHRISTIE: They are depicted on {2678|2679} the plan in German, right?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness has just described the process. That was slide 46.

Looking now at slide 47 is the second plan of the same building from April 1944 from the Museum Archives from Auschwitz. This is Auschwitz I, Krema I, and it will show some alterations on the original plan.

THE WITNESS: It has been, the place has been transformed to be an air shelter with surgical operation rooms for the S.S. hospital, which is at something like fifteen, twenty meters there. They open the door there with a little vestibule. Then you have different rooms, like in an air shelter, with this disposition, [sic] a long wall, a short wall, a long wall, in zigzag. Then the operating room, the surgical operation room. All that is suppressed, not used.

MR. CHRISTIE: So the crematorium was no longer used.

THE WITNESS: We should, today, visit this.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. 48 is an {2679|2680} opening on the roof with twisted iron, and another photograph by Faurisson in 1976 showing the entrance to which the Zyklon is supposed to have been brought.

49 is another photograph taken by Dr. Faurisson. I think you are in the picture, Doctor, lifting the lid on the entrance to the alleged gas chamber.

50 is the shot of the opening in the roof taken again by Faurisson.

51 is a slide of a photograph in the Auschwitz Museum showing the orchestra in Birkenau referred —

THE WITNESS: No. In Auschwitz.

MR. CHRISTIE: In Auschwitz, excuse me, referred to by Fania Fenelon. Am I mistaken, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Fania Fenelon is in Birkenau, of women, forty-three women.

MR. CHRISTIE: 52 is Birkenau, the fumigation chamber. A shot by Faurisson.

This, Doctor, I gather, was for fumigating clothes, is that right?

THE WITNESS: Yes. {2680|2681}

MR. CHRISTIE: You can note the door similar to the door in the gas chamber in Maryland. This is another shot of the same fumigation chamber taken in the opposite direction from the other side. We would be showing the clothes hangers that were rolled into these chambers.

Slide 54 is a slide of the map from Hefte von Auschwitz, a book showing the Sportsplatz not indicated.

Slide 55 shows the Sportplatz indicated with "SP" as a designation being pointed to by Dr. Faurisson at this moment.

Slide 56 is another plan. All of this comes from the Auschwitz Museum Archives. This is a plan showing the location of the two crematoria, II, III, IV and V.

This is 57, the plan of crematorias. No, excuse me. Plan showing crematorias II and III in more detail showing the road going in and out of the camp.

Slide 58 is the arrival view of the entrance door to Auschwitz-Birkenau.

This is taken from the Museum Archives in Auschwitz. This is Birkenau, {2681|2682} rather.

Slide 59 shows the arrival. The chimneys of Kremas II and III are shown on the photograph at the far end of where the train is going.

Slide 60 is taken from the crematoria with a woman with a scarf, and the crematoria in the background is Crematoria III.

THE WITNESS: And Crematorium II is there.

MR. CHRISTIE: This photograph is taken from the entrance of Crematoria II. Slide 61 is Crematorias II and III, nearly —

THE WITNESS: II or III.

MR. CHRISTIE: II or III, because the plan is the same taken from the Auschwitz Museum, nearly finished construction.

Photo 62 is in Pavillion No. 4. This, we have an enlarged photograph of this model from the crematoria from the Museum in Auschwitz that I hoped to introduce because it shows what Dr. Faurisson says is an impossibility in the story.

THE COURT: That is a picture of what — a model? {2682|2683}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that the model you had made?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. That is a model of the Auschwitz Museum of Birkenau.

THE WITNESS: Auschwitz I.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. And this is what the authorities say people went first to take their clothes off. And then there is Leichenkeller I where people were supposed to have been gassed. So if I can go back one, Leichenkeller No. 1 being shown there and Leichenkeller No. 2 at the other end of the building where the people are supposed to have taken their clothes off.

Now, this is slide 62, in Pavillion 4, the model of Crema II, same photograph by Faurisson.

63 is the same model from the same place, a photograph taken by Faurisson showing the alleged gassing procedure. Here the underground mortuary No. 2 is shown as an undressing room.

THE WITNESS: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry. This is the next slide over. So here underground mortuary No. 1 {2683|2684} is shown.

This is 64, as an alleged gas chamber, and it shows piles of corpses inside the Leichenkeller No. I of Crema II. And Dr. Faurisson is pointing out the lift. There's one lift on the plan. And then he is pointing out now the ovens on the next floor up. The plans indicate that the Leichenkellers I and II where the gas chamber is supposed to have been were underground.

Now, 65 is a plan of Crema II showing the furnaces, the center smoke channels. This is taken from the Museum Archives in Auschwitz I. These are the furnaces allegedly in the crematoria in Birkenau.

Slide 66 shows Crematorium II cross-section, which is just from the plans that we have. The door of the underground mortuary is indicated by Dr. Faurisson in his demonstration, and that's from the Museum Archives.

Slide 67 is from Birkenau, Crematorium II and I. Chimney, smoke channel. From the Archives. Showing that from the furnace to the chimney is a long — well, the dimensions are on it, and of the chimney.

Slide 68, Crema II or III, engineers and workmen. This is an exhibit from the trial of {2684|2685} Dejaco and Hirtl [Ertl] from the Museum Archives.

THE WITNESS: No. The architects were Dejaco and Hirtl. It comes from the files of the Auschwitz Museum.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Slide 69 shows Kremas II or III, the five furnaces now finished, from the Museum Archives.

Slide 70 shows Crema IV, people strolling around Crema IV, from the Museum Archives.

THE WITNESS: And the gas chambers are supposed to be there.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is supposed to be the gas chamber on the left of Crema IV.

Slide 71 is liberation in Auschwitz, a picture of old ladies, from the Museum Archives in Auschwitz.

Slide 72 is liberation of children from Auschwitz, from Klarsfeld's book, "Memorial".

Slide 73 is taken by Robert Faurisson. It shows Crema II, ruins of the underground mortuary No. 2, which was in the authoritative text, is referred to as the changing room, and it shows that the ceiling of {2685|2686} that building was supposed to be at ground level.

74 is taken by Robert Faurisson. Four photos of the Hartheim Castle with how many people were supposed to have been gassed in this room.

THE WITNESS: From one million to one million and a half. Franz Zereiss [Ziereis] in Mauthausen.

MR. CHRISTIE: Franz Zereiss is supposed to have said this being the commandant of Mauthausen. The gas chamber and the entrance itself.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, is Hartheim a subject brought up at all in Exhibit No. 1?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is, sir, indirectly, because it says that Mauthausen was not an extermination camp, whereas Zereiss, he swore that people were gassed, this is supposed to be where they were gassed.

THE COURT: At what page? You'll get that later.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think this is Slide 75 showing another four views taken by Dr. Faurisson in Hartheim Castle.

THE WITNESS: The gas chamber there, there, there, and this is the door seen from the {2686|2687} corridor with two little openings and a glassing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, two little openings and a glass. This is supposed to be the gas chamber at Hartheim Castle reported by Zereiss in his affidavit through Marcelek [Marsalek] at the International Military Tribunal where he was alleged to have been shot three times and died before morning.

This is a very obscure view. It is of Stutthoff-Danzig, the alleged homicidal gas chamber. Dr. Hilberg said he did not believe there were killings.

THE COURT: This is evidence[ ] in reply of that, saying there were gasings.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. It's to say that now there is dispute about, between Hilberg and other authorities about Stutthoff-Danzig having gas chambers. It is to show that allegations of gas chambers throughout history have changed, and now not everyone is in agreement. That is what it is showing.

I see there is one more photograph. This is the one that was shown to the jury, showing Commandant Hoess with his back to the brick wall in the top, and Colonel Draper, and the caption in the book of – excuse me, I don't know who, what books – {2687|2688}

THE WITNESS: "Blind to Murder" by Tom Bower.

MR. CHRISTIE: "Blind to Murder" by Tom Bower. This shows that Colonel Draper has just obtained, secured the confession of Commandant Hoess in this picture. And the one below is Commandant Kramer and a woman who was later hung, by the name of Dreis. All three of the people in the picture other than Colonel Draper were eventually hung. That is the slide projection.

I guess that is another close-up, trying to show Commandant Hoess, his expressions and his demeanour in captivity.

And those are the slides.

My request, for the record, is that Dr. Faurisson be permitted to show the slides that he actually took. The reasons why I wanted to show the ones about the American gas chamber, Your Honour has already heard. The listing I think will help Your Honour. I don't know if my friend now has one, but I can get one right away.

THE COURT: Please be seated for a moment, Dr. Faurisson. {2688|2689}

— The witness stands down.

MR. CHRISTIE: With the exception of the slide showing Commandant Hoess, all the slides are listed in the list of slides that I have provided.

In essence, Your Honour, the reason for these slides, especially the one that Dr. Faurisson took at Auschwitz, is to demonstrate his reasons for disbelieving that these items, places, were used for gassing, and they are taken by him in his ten-day visit in 1976.

The reason pertaining to Hartheim Castle is to show the implausibility of the story itself as it was accepted in 1945.

The argument of the defence will be that we have no more reason to believe the gas chambers in Auschwitz than we do the ones we used to believe in Hartheim and Dachau. That's the ultimate culmination of the argument of the defence in its essentials.

So I think I have said all I need to say about the reasons why we wish these exhibits to be introduced.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

—— {2689|2690}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Your Honour, I confess at the outset it's hard to look so quickly at seventy-seven photos and decide which ones, if any, should be admissible, or that I would be objecting to. I have a difficulty, Your Honour, with photographs taken from the Auschwitz Museum or of official sources of individuals, people, things going on in the camps.

THE COURT: Difficulty agreeing or disagreeing?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Difficulty [sic] agreeing, because I don't know when they were taken, or where they were taken, and the when is important, Your Honour, as we've heard other evidence. I don't think Dr. Faurisson would disagree from his studies the camps underwent changes; they were non-existent in 1940 and they were built in stages. At what particular stage the camp was at at any given time makes a considerable difference as to how the photograph, I would suggest, is being interpreted. And without the information as to at least the year the photo was taken, then that becomes problematical that it is not misunderstood by the jury. The photo, {2690|2691} in short, would not speak for itself. It may well speak to conditions at some time in the camp, but I am not sure how valuable that would be without putting it into context.

The photographs showing the various uses of Zyklon from a German text, I am not unaware of the role[ ] that plays in the defence and I would not object if they wish to indicate the different delousing procedures through those photographs. I am not objecting to those photographs.

I'm sorry, Your Honour, I believe that would be photographs 10 through 21. No objection. Photographs 22 through 25 are aerial photographs taken from several different days. We have in, evidence now, I don't know whether it's one and the same photograph or not, but we have in evidence now a photograph with an interpretation report attached to it which is from the National Archives in Washington, and I believe that some of the photographs where they are reproduced in 24 and 25, maybe Mr. Christie can help me, are from that exhibit.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, they are, Your Honour. And the only reason we hope to introduce them {2691|2692} is to explain the theory of the defence in relation to them so that the jury can see the one thing at the same time. It is not particularly new from our position.

It's quite obviously just an expansion for the purpose of the jury being able to see and have certain things pointed out to them.

It may be that in view of the lighting conditions, that may not be very helpful anyway, but that was our intention. We can still see what I think we wanted to point out.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie. I think the photographs and the sources of the photographs are sufficiently identified that they would come within the parameters of the best evidence rule and of earlier rulings of Your Honour, and I have no objections to those photos as long as they are the ones in the Archives, same photos. And I think Your Honour's ruling is that it should be the entire photo. The context is clear.

As I looked at those, I thought that that wasn't what was there, the entire photo.

Slides 26 and 27 – I'm sorry, 26 is a plan. I think we already have that in evidence. {2692|2693}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, we do.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Photographs 27 through to 31 are photographs said to be – I am not disputing that they are from the Auschwitz Museum, and I would object to those on the basis that I have already indicated for photographs.

The same, Your Honour, with 32 and 33. I'm sorry, 33, is that a photo or a map?

MR. CHRISTIE: That's a photograph.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Numbers 34 through 53 are Dr. Faurisson's photos at Auschwitz I, and as I understand the evidence, the area said to be a gas chamber in Auschwitz I has gone through a number of transformations since it was used as a gas chamber, and if Dr. Faurisson is able to indicate that to the jury, whether or not these are the same photographs he's taking, are the same building, space that would have been there in 1943, '44, then I am content that those photographs go in. I'm not sure whether or not that can be said if there have been substantial changes; then I think they are misleading and they should not go in.

54 through 57 are some plans, and as long as the plans are identified, as I know my friend is {2693|2694} able to do, then I have no objection to those matters.

THE COURT: As long as ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: As long as they are properly identified, whether they are draft plans, final plans, what-have-you – where they come from.

58 through 61 are again photographs, and I would object to those for the reasons indicated, and those are from the Museum, from the Archives.

62 through 64, I believe, are the models, and I have no objection to that being shown. 65 through —

MR. CHRISTIE: That was 62, 63, 64?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I believe so. That is what I have indicated, that that is a model from the Auschwitz Museum. I have no objection to that.

65 through – some of these are plans and some are photographs. Can you tell the difference, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. 65 is a plan of furnaces. 66 is a plan. 67 is a plan. 68 —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that's the photo, then.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's the photo. {2694|2695}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Right.,

MR. CHRISTIE: The difficulty I see with my friend's position on 62, 63 and 64 is that the model shows the theory of the gas chamber all right, but Dr. Faurisson would want to explain why he considers that an impossible problem.

THE COURT: I was under the understanding that Crown counsel takes no objection to 62, 63 and 64.

MR. CHRISTIE: Right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's what I said, Your Honour.

THE COURT: That's what he said.

MR. CHRISTIE: As long as it can be accompanied by Dr. Faurisson's explanation. I don't know it's sensitive because, you see, he wants to introduce it for that reason.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, if that's the reason it is being introduced, Your Honour has already ruled that Dr. Faurisson is not in a position to be able to comment, so I am content that they be kept out. I am in my friend's hands.

THE COURT: It is just as well that {2695|2696} that point was brought up now.

MR. CHRISTIE: Because otherwise it just portrays the theory of the Crown that — without the explanation that defence provides.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

62 through 64 would not be proved, then, in that case, and I would not have to state my position on them.

MR. CHRISTIE: Through this witness.

THE COURT: Yes. That's correct. 65 through 68 will be covering Mr. —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think, Your Honour, 65 through 67 are from plans, and I believe they are close-ups of the plans that we have here and I have no objection to that.

68, Your Honour, through 73 are photographs taken and I do object to those. They are said to be from the Archives, rather.

74, 75, Hartheim Castle, I have no objection to those going in through Dr. Faurisson, and again, my understanding is that somebody else will be interpreting those.

THE COURT: Is that correct? {2696|2697}

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't think so. I mean, I don't understand that he cannot say what Franz Zereiss says, which he did say and was introduced through the affidavit of Marcelik [Marsalek] at the IMT about that mass gassings at — I mean, there is not much point unless he says that he understands about it from his research from IMT and other sources.

I realize my friend wants to keep out the explanation, and I understand why, but there is a reason why the defence seeks these exhibits, to demonstrate his theory that the supporting evidence for this allegation is suspect, and it was a false allegation at a time when people believed it. That's why — I mean, that is why I want to introduce 74, 75 and 76, to show the inconsistencies of the story of extermination.

If Dr. Faurisson cannot say anything about these things, if we are going to run into that problem, then I can't see the point of introducing any of them, but surely he should be entitled to say what the theory of extermination is from what he photographed, from the literature publicly available from the International Military Tribunal and other publications. That is why I would like that explanation accompanying those {2697|2698} photos.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour, that is the field where Dr. Faurisson has been qualified and I don't dispute the Court's ruling. If the intent is to show a photograph of a room at Hartheim Castle and say, "This is where Zereiss said this happened and somebody else said this happened, and somebody else said the other thing happened", then that is perfectly within Dr. Faurisson's competence as found by the Court. And that is in a legal sense and the only way I mean that. But if he wishes to use them to demonstrate, well, because there are these many windows then it can't be a gas chamber, then that is not within his field of competence and I would object.

THE COURT: I have the point.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And Struthoff [sic] and Danzig I take no position on, Your Honour. I don't think that it's been an issue in this trial, but if my friend thinks it is, I take no position.

—— {2698|2699}

RULING

THE COURT: The ruling is that the photographs that Dr. Faurisson obtained from the camp in question, Auschwitz, do not speak for themselves. Crown counsel is correct. There is no accompanying evidence to indicate changes. There is plenty of evidence that these camps, including the one we are talking about, were in various stages of construction progress at various times.

Photograph numbers 1 to 9 are irrelevant. They are forty years out of date. They will not be admitted.

Photograph numbers 10 to 21 will be admitted. It seems to me superfluous to admit three more, there already being aerial photographs in evidence. I will hear more submissions on that. I am not ruling that out.

The plan of Auschwitz, number 26, will be admitted. Photograph numbers 27 to 31 will not be admitted. The same with 32 and 33. Numbers 34 to 53 I want to hear more argument on after lunch, provided that 54 through and including 57 are going to be identified by the witness in a proper way. That can be covered by {2699|2700} counsel between themselves and I can be informed at two o'clock. They will be admitted subject to that caveat.

Photograph numbers 58 through to 61 will not be admitted. Photograph numbers 62 through to and including 64 will not be admitted. Photograph numbers 65 through to 67 will be admitted. Photograph numbers 68 through to 73 will not be admitted. Photograph numbers 74 through to 78 will not be admitted.

In my view, 77 and 78 are totally irrelevant to the essential issues this jury must decide, and 74 through to 76 are so remote that they are irrelevant. I will hear submissions at two o'clock on what I have left outstanding.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have had the opportunity to consider your earlier remarks and the position of the defence in the matter. Unfortunately I have concluded that to introduce the evidence in the abridged order attenuated form that is suggested by Your {2700|2701} Honour or by the Crown would render it meaningless, and we do not desire to abridge the evidence of Dr. Faurisson in such a way that he cannot express the reasons for his conclusions from the evidence that he has accumulated.

Your Honour's indications regarding the relevance of some of the exhibits would tend to indicate that the theory of the defence is irrelevant on the points that we had hoped to prove through these exhibits. I'd like to put on record my position on that. Although time changes, by common sense and practical knowledge the jury could consider that the chemical properties of gasses and poisons do not change. This is not to say that I would be asking for Dr. Faurisson to testify about the chemical properties of those gasses which would be required of an expert, but I was hopeful that Your Honour would consider that he could describe the precautions taken in the ordinary and customary manner of use to protect against those chemical properties, such as might be the case if someone testified about the dangers of or the consequences of misuse of other items of poison, not necessarily describing the chemical constitution or professional knowledge of {2701|2702} those. And for these reasons I do not propose to put Dr. Faurisson in the position of communicating the slides in the abridged manner suggested by Your Honour. And I must ask, although I recognize Your Honour will probably feel disinclined to agree, I respectfully request that in view of my submission Dr. Faurisson be permitted to produce the benefits of his research in such a way that he is not prevented from giving the reasons for his opinion, and I would like to stress that this is regrettably or unfortunately necessary for me to request of you, although I recognize that what you have said earlier probably indicates your disposition towards the matter.

I am not saying this in any way to try to irritate Your Honour, but simply to put on record the position that I must take in the interests of the defence, recognizing as I do that Your Honour may already have expressed your views contrary to this position and I simply put it on the record, because I maintain that it is the right of the witness to express himself in an unrestricted manner on the basis of whatever his common sense from his experience and firsthand observation is, and it was for no other reason that I hoped that he {2702|2703} might testify than to assist the jury with what information he's gathered in a factual way as a supporting basis to the opinions that he has been allowed to express.

I regret that I cannot somehow accommodate the very courteous and generous views taken by the Crown of some of the slides and somehow produce some meaningful evidence from it, having considered that, do not think that possible.

So I will be asking for Your Honour's ruling on the presented evidence as it stands as a whole in view of what I've said.

Now, I understand that pertaining to the plans my friend expressed to me his position that, in view of the fact that I couldn't have made copies of the plans from the approximately forty-five minutes since the break at noon or thereabouts, that he would consent to me obtaining copies tomorrow and filing them.

THE COURT: Yes. That is no problem.

MR. CHRISTIE: Provided that he is given the opportunity which I quite agree to do, to examine both the copy and the originals received by Dr. Faurisson to ascertain that they are true copies. {2703|2704}

Whatever elements I may be able to accomplish from those exhibits would only be later possible, in any event, by the fact that this would be marked as a lettered [sic] exhibit for identification, and so I, in view of that, will be closing my examination of Dr. Faurisson and asking for Your Honour – well, I shouldn't say – excuse me. I would ask Your Honour's ruling pertaining to the proposed exhibits that I have showed in the voir dire.

THE COURT: I am a little confused. First of all, I must observe one thing, that full answer and defence does not necessarily include the unrestricted right for him to express himself or herself.

Now having said that, Mr. Christie, give me the request again. You want me to rule on what I thought I had, but I will be glad to listen to you. What do you want me to rule on?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have to take the position, Your Honour, in light of what I have discussed with Dr. Faurisson about his reasons and about his examination of evidence ...

THE COURT: I understand that. {2704|2705}

MR. CHRISTIE: ... I must take the position that either he is allowed to express his views in a logical manner as he says it, at least, upon all the slides that he has prepared from his own observations and research, as well as his own attendance on the scene, or he can make no meaningful sense out of the few or whatever number Your Honour has expressed a willingness to allow.

So I am asking you, then, to rule on the integrity of the exhibit as offered, and I cannot take the position that we are able to make meaningful sense out of the exhibits otherwise.

THE COURT: Ruling on what exhibit? I have a list here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I am asking that Your Honour permit me to allow Dr. Faurisson to testify upon the full extent of his research on those points.

THE COURT: I have it now.

MR. CHRISTIE: And in view of the fact that otherwise he cannot express himself in a manner that is rational and comprehensible. I must not and cannot edit what he considers necessary to make {2705|2706} sense out of his opinion.

Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, with respect to Crown's position, full answer and defence does not include inadmissible evidence. We are all bound by the rules of evidence, and there are certain matters that are inadmissible, it doesn't matter whether it is important to the Crown or important to the defence. It can't go into evidence. Those are the rules we live by.

I have made my submissions as to the admissibility and the relevance of certain of these slides, and the reasons why I would request that they be ruled inadmissible, and I would suggest that if the ruling that Mr. Christie is seeking is for all or nothing, I would ask you to rule nothing, because there are matters within those seventy-seven slides that, in the Crown's position, are inadmissible, and the fact that there are some that are admissible doesn't render the others admissible.

MR. CHRISTIE: Since I have the last word on the point; being my application, I would like to say that I maintain that they are part of the {2706|2707} Doctor's research that included not any expert observations on gas chambers, but firsthand, physical ones. And finally, that it being part of his research and part of the basis of his opinion should be admitted as part of the truth thereof, even though it doesn't involve hearsay, I suppose, in a sense, as other experts are able to express that.

Secondly, it is the basis, and Dr. Faurisson has said it was the basis of communications between him and Ernst Zundel directly upon the subjects depicted in the photographs, and whether it was to prove the truth of Dr. Faurisson's opinion or to prove the reasonable basis of Ernst Zundel's opinion, it was an opinion expressed, whether it was expert or otherwise. It would still be up to the jury to decide whether it was a reasonable opinion, and to hear that issue out, it should be open to them to hear what that opinion was and how it was derived, even though it wouldn't be considered an expert opinion.

I think this aspect of the case is also important because it will be the position of the defence that it's not just Ernst Zundel who forms these opinions and the source of his opinions and the method {2707|2708} by which he derives those opinions and others derive those opinions and it should be open to the jury to see, to assess whether they are, first of all, reasonable and therefore honestly held, or not, and that's why I submit that even though, as an expert, Your Honour might have decided and did decide that he is not qualified to speak about gas chambers, he nonetheless could give firsthand observations thereon for his own opinion; and secondly, even if he wasn't able to give those opinions as an expert, the fact that he did and he has sworn to conveying that information to Mr. Zundel should put it into another classification, so to speak, not of hearsay but to prove the truth of its contents, but of evidence that proves that the statement was made and, indeed, what the statement was. Not the proof of truth of its contents, but to prove that it was the honest belief of the accused that it was true.

I might argue, just briefly, by analogy, that if, for example, the charge – and I hope no one will snicker to this suggestion because it is only by analogy – but if, for example, the charge was possession of stolen property, the quality of having possessed it and knowing it to be stolen being the {2708|2709} issue it will be my submission that the accused can call the witness to say that he told the accused that it was not stolen. If the allegation is that the accused holds a belief and says that he has acquired it or that Dr. Faurisson provided it to others, it should be permitted to lead evidence from those other people that on given occasions they did provide such and such information to the accused. This would be relevant to the honesty and veracity of his belief.

It could also, indirectly, I concede, tend to give the jury reason to believe that it was the truth, but that is not the fault of the accused that the law, in my respectful submission, could have that effect. It, indeed, does, in my respectful submission, have that possible effect only because of the convoluted nature of the charge at bar, because it is not an act or the knowledge of an event or of history that is at issue but the honest belief of the accused as well.

And for those several reasons I submit that Dr. Faurisson should be entitled to give his unabridged opinion, however Your Honour may have held that he was unqualified in some aspects of that opinion in your earlier ruling. Thank you.

RULING

THE COURT: Before the luncheon recess counsel for the accused, examining in-chief his own witness, Dr. Faurisson, provided the Court with a three-page typed itemized list of proposed slides, photographs and the like which, subject to the order of the Court, he proposed to put to his witness.

Those slides, photographs, maps and plans are on a list and numbered chronologically from 1 to 78. I have seen the projection on a screen of all of this material. I heard submissions before lunch with respect to the admissibility or otherwise of all of it.

I ruled before lunch, after hearing submissions, on what may be put in front of the jury through this witness by counsel for the accused and what may not. I was specific in all of the items with the exception of one or two, upon which I had expected to hear submissions after lunch.

It is now after lunch. The jury is still absent. Mr. Christie, over the luncheon hour, has informed me that he takes the position that it is all or nothing. That simply means that he should have, in his submission, full answer and defence totally unabridged of all of the items. If he cannot have that, {2710|2711} his position is very simple; he has elected, as I understand it, not to lead any of these items.

He now invites my ruling on the matter. I am distinctly under the impression that I had already given a ruling before lunch. I have ruled, and I have no intention whatsoever of changing my mind one way or the other.

If Mr. Christie wishes to elect to not lead any of it, then that is up to Mr. Christie and not up to the Court. I have nothing further whatsoever to say in a more formal way other than what I have already stated on the record. Full answer and defence does not necessarily include the unrestricted, unbridled right of any witness to express his or her opinion.

The evidence is either, as a matter of law, admissible or it is not. I have made those rulings. That is the end of what I have to say.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have just one further question of Dr. Faurisson and I will be finished. {2711|2712}

THE COURT: Thank you. The list will be marked as a lettered exhibit for identification.

— EXHIBIT "S" (For Identification) List of Slides.

— The jury enters. 2:25 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Dr. Faurisson, have you been able to provide all the reasons that you know of for your disbelief in the gas chamber?

A. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Faurisson, will you give us your opinion as to how many Jews died as a result of the action of the Einsatzgruppen, the special action groups?

A. I have no answer about that. I {2712|2713} said the figures that I was supposing right for the concentration camps and specially Auschwitz. I didn't say anything about the Einsatzgruppen or about any slaughters or about any pogrom or about any Jews who died in prison.

Q. Is that an area that you've researched?

A. I've been interested, yes, in this, but I specialized myself in what I consider as the cornerstone of the Holocaust belief.

Q. Dr. Hilberg testified here that 1.4 million Jews were shot by groups such as the Einsatzgruppen, and that's the whole area that you, in your study of the Holocaust, haven't even considered; is that right?

A. No, I didn't say that. I considered that, but I didn't make a speciality of that. I know that —

Q. Have you read the documents on that?

A. Yes. Sure.

Q. All right. Have you read the Stoliker [Stahlecker] report?

A. Stoliker or Yager [Jäger], yes.

Q. Can you tell us what the Stoliker report says?

A. Yes. That is about the Einsatzgruppen in Russia, but that is not my competence.

Q. You have read the Stoliker report?

A. Yes.

Q. What does it say? {2713|2714}

A. It says so many Jews executed.

Q. How many Jews?

A. I don't remember.

Q. A lot, wasn't there?

A. It is a lot, yes.

Q. Yes. You don't consider that.

A. Oh, I didn't say that I do not consider. I say that I have not studied the question. I told you that I had been interested, this question, and that I found that Sir Reginald Paget had made some very simple remarks which seemed to me important. He has a practical way of studying the question. That is my practical way. As far as the gas chambers I know that books —

Q. We are not talking about the gas' chambers. We are talking about the Einsatzgruppen.

A. No, that is not my speciality. I don't want to go into that.

Q. This book of Paget's that you read, when was that written?

A. '51 or '52 or '53, beginning of the fifties, yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the daily reports filed by Einsatzgruppen?

A. I've seen that also, yes.

Q. Indicating the number of dead killed each day?

A. I've seen that also. I don't know how much those documents are genuine or not. People have studied that. They do not think that it is genuine, other things that they are genuine. {2714|2715}

Q. Who doesn't think they are genuine?

A. Arthur Butz and Mark Weber. There are doubts about those reports. I cannot pronounce them.

Q. Who is Mark Weber?

A. Mark Weber is a historian who is going to publish a book, and he will treat in this book the question of the Einsatzgruppen specially.

Q. All right. And is he a member of the Institute of Historical Review?

A. He works with, but I don't think he is a member. He is in relation with another specialist of this question with Mr. Timothy Milligan of the National Archives, working under Mr. Robert Wolfe. I think that he has also something about that. I am waiting.

Q. Can you tell us how many copies of the daily report were made out and how many survived?

A. I don't know.

Q. You have never seen anything on that?

A. I've seen. I don't know. I don't remember. I took this problem apart, like the question of, I could say, many other questions. The state of the Jews in France, for example. I am French. I should be able to answer about the situation of the Jews in France during occupation. It is an enormous work. I didn't go into it, not really.

Q. Why? I ask you these questions, Dr. Faurisson, because you have been qualified on the Holocaust as a whole, same as Dr. Hilberg. So I want {2715|2716} to ask you about that as a whole.

A. But I say that if you consider the Einsatzgruppen as being a part of this question, that's your opinion.

Q. Well, that's —

A. Myself, I am waiting for real studies about the question.

Q. You are waiting for ...

A. Real studies about that.

Q. Real studies.

A. I mean — yes. I mean something which is based on documents.

Q. Yes. Have you read the work of Helmut Krausnick and Hans Wilhelm?

A. No. I didn't read this book.

Q. So you don't know whether that is based on documents or not?

A. No.

Q. All right. That is a book – you are better at German than I am. Would you read that?

A. The troops of Weltanschauungskrieges [Weltanschauungskrieges]. When I shall have the two sides I will be interested.

Q. And that is published in 1981?

A. Yes.

Q. You will be interested when you have the two sides, but you haven't read this side yet.

A. No, I don't say that even the other side I have not read, really. Even the side of Butz and Weber.

Q. Do you — {2716|2717}

A. I have enough to do with my own problem, you see.

Q. Did you have an estimate as to how many Jews died in the ghettos from your research?

A. No. No. And about the figures, I repeat that I think it is quite possible to determine those figures, and I could tell you even how.

Q. But that's not work that you've done. That's not work that you've done.

A. I have not done this work. I intended to begin this year, but I saw that it was not possible for me to go to the Arolsen Archives because it is the only place, I think, where this work could be done.

Q. You told us in your evidence that various numbers attached to the dead from Dachau.

A. Yes.

Q. And the largest number by far was, as I recollect, 238,000, and then there were numbers that were roughly between twenty-five and thirty-two thousand. Is that fair, Dr. Faurisson?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. Where did the number 238,000 come from?

A. I have the source. I could give you the source. I think that I gave it. It is in a book of Monseigneur Johann [Johann] Neuhaeusler.

Q. And is he somebody that purports to have studied this?

A. Yes. He has been himself an inmate in Dachau. {2717|2718}

Q. Yes. All right. And you quoted to us a passage from the testimony of Konrad Morgen from the International Military Tribunal trial.

A. Yes.

Q. And that was a passage that talked about the conditions in the camps at the end of the war; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And Konrad Morgan is also referred to in the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", isn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's see how quickly we can find it here. On page 24 ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, there may be several references. If there are, I will pass the Exhibit No. 1 to the jury.

Q. It's page 24, column No. 2. And about a fifth of the way down there is a sentence that starts, "Occasionally there was brutality, but such cases were immediately investigated", sorry.: "Scrutinized by S.S. Judge Dr. Konrad Morgen of the Reich Criminal Police Office whose job was to investigate irregularities at the various camps."

Is that the same Konrad Morgen that testified at the International Military Tribunal?

A. Yes.

Q. "Morgen himself prosecuted commander Koch of Buchenwald in 1943 for excesses at his camp, a trial to which the German public were invited. It is {2718|2719} significant that Oswald Pohl, the administrator of the concentration camp system who was dealt with so harshly at Nuremberg, was in favour of the death penalty for Koch. In fact, the S.S. court did sentence Koch to death, but – he was given the option of serving on the Russian front: Before he could do this, however, Prince Waldeck, the leader of the S.S. in the district, carried out his execution. This case is ample proof of the seriousness with which the S.S. regarded unnecessary brutality. Several S.S. court actions of this kind were conducted in the camps during the war to prevent excesses, and more than 800 cases were investigated before 1945. Morgen testified at Nuremberg that he discussed confidentially with hundreds of inmates the prevailing conditions in the camps. He found few that were undernourished except in the hospitals, and noted that the pace and achievement in compulsory labour by inmates was far lower than among German civilian workers."

Have I read that correctly?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have read the testimony of {2719|2720} Konrad Morgen at the International Military Tribunal.

A. Yes.

Q. And wasn't one of the investigations that Konrad Morgen started on an investigation of mass murder and extermination at Auschwitz and Maidanek?

A. No. He made investigation about Koch, I think, and he talked about extermination and all that, sure. But the extermination camp, he put it in Monowitz, nine times.

Q. He talked about Monowitz as an extermination camp nine times.

A. Yes, nine times.

Q. And he talked about Majdanek as an extermination camp, too, didn't he?

A. Perhaps.

Q. All right. Let's just see, and I am going to suggest to you that he also discussed the means of extermination at Maidanek.

A. Konrad Morgen said also stories about the soap stories. You have that in the book of Hilberg. He said many things about that.

Q. We don't find that in the pamphlet here, do we, that he investigated —

A. No. But to see who is Konrad Morgen we need to know that.

Q. Page 492, 493, Volume 20, the International Military Tribunal.

A. That's the story of Wirth.

Q. That's the story of Wirth, Commissar Wirth, is that right? {2720|2721}

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And he was the man in charge of Maidanek, Wirth was.

A. No. He was the man in charge of Belzec.

Q. Belzec.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Near Lublin?

A. No.

Q. Where is Belzec?

A. Belzec is down, further down. You have Lublin, Maidanek, Belzec, Sobibor. Near the Russian frontier.

Q. What does Morgen say there in his testimony about what Wirth told him?

A. Do you want me to read? I prefer to read.

Q. I believe it starts where he discusses a Jewish wedding. He found that a very elaborate party was held for Jews.

A. "As I said before, 100 guests participated in this Jewish wedding. What followed was described as quite extraordinary owing to the glutinous consumption of food and alcoholic drinks. Among these Jews were members of this camp guard, that is to say, some S.S. men who joined in this revelry. This report only came into my hands in a roundabout way some months later due to the fact that the commander of the Security Police suspected that the circumstances indicated that some criminal acts had occurred. This was my impression as well and I thought that this report would give me a clue to one of the big cases of criminal {2721|2722} corruption. With this in mind I went to Lublin and called the Security Police there, but all they would tell me was that the event happened at the camp, at the — I will translate it in English — "German Armament Company", or Works, "but nothing was known there. I was told it might be possible rather ... This was the actual term used, camp in the vicinity of Lublin. I found out the camp and the commander who was Criminal Commissar Wirth. I asked Wirth whether this report was true, or what it meant. To my great astonishment Wirth admitted it. I asked him why he permitted members of his camp men to do so, and he revealed to me that on the Fuhrer's order he had to carry out the destruction of Jews."

The defence lawyer said, "Please go on, witness, to describe your investigation."

Morgen said: I asked Wirth what this had to do with the Jewish wedding. Then Wirth described the method by which he carried out the extermination of Jews, and he said something like this. Want us to fight the Jews with their own weapons, that is to say. Pardon me for using this expression. One has to cheat them. Wirth, in an almost deceptive manner, said that he first selected Jews that would serve as leaders, and then, if that is small or medium small or medium size detachment of Jews, he began to build up the extermination camps. This is an expression invented after the War. He extended this staff of Jews; and with this Jews Wirth himself carried out the extermination of the Jews. Wirth said that he had four extermination camps and that about five thousand Jews, were working at the extermination of Jews {2722|2723} and the seizure of Jewish property in order to induce for this business of extermination and plundering of their race and creed. Wirth gave them every freedom and so to speak gave them a financial interest, in the spoils of the dead victims. As a result of this attitude, this sumptuous Jewish wedding had come about. Then I asked Wirth how he killed the Jews with the Jewish agents of theirs. Wirth explained the procedure that it went off like a film every time. The extermination camps were the neatest of the Government General in forests or inhabited land. They were like a Potemkin village. They thought they were entering a city or township. There was a dummy railroad station. After the escort and trained personnel had left the area the cars were opened and the Jews got out. They were surrounded by this Jewish laboratory and Commissars or one of his representatives made a speech. He said, 'Jews, you were brought here to be re-settled, but before we organize the Jewish State, you must, of course, learn how to work. You must learn a new trade. You will be taught that here. Our routine here is first, everyone must take off his clothes so that your clothing can be disinfected and can have a bath so that no epidemic will be brought into the camp.' After he had found such camping work for his victims they started on the road to death. Men and women were separated. At one place they had to deliver the fur. At the next the coat, collar shirt down to the shoes and socks. These places were like cloak-rooms and a person was given a check at each one so that these people believe that they would get their things back. The other Jews had {2723|2724} to receive the things and hurry up the new arrivals so they should not have time to think. The whole thing was like an assembly line. After the last stop they reached the big room and were told that this was the bath. When the, last one was in, the doors were shut and the gas was let into the room. As soon as they had set in, the ventilators were started. When they could breathe again, the doors were opened and the Jewish were, with a special procedure which Wirth had invented, they were burned in an open air without the use of fuel.

Q. Now, did Konrad Morgen try to investigate that or bring charges?

A. I think that he did investigate that.

Q. He did investigate it.

A. I don't think he did.

Q. And does he explain in his testimony there what his problem was?

A. Yes.

Q. Does he say that it is hard to investigate a Head of State?

A. Something like that, yes.

Q. Meaning Hitler.

A. Meaning that it could not, or something of this kind, because this is very interesting. All the testimonies of Morgen, not only on the IMT but on the Frankfurt trial, are very interesting to study because it is typically the man who says, "I have heard this. This happened." And he says stories that cannot stand up.

For example, he talks about everything, {2724|2725} even about Auschwitz, situating the place of extermination nine times in Monowitz. So there were contradictions also when, in 1963, '65, he went to the Court of Frankfurt, but it doesn't seem by the book of Hermann Langbein that the judge said there is something which does not fit. And the habitual explanation is that I couldn't get into it because it was the big secret, or I would have lost my life, or things like that.

The question was asked to him.

Q. And would you say that this pamphlet, Exhibit 1, by not including the fact that Morgen tried to investigate those things, would you say that is pretty misleading?

A. Excuse me, I don't understand your question.

Q. Well, there's no reference in the pamphlet here to Morgen trying to investigate the extermination of Jews. Wouldn't you think that is misleading?

A. No, I don't think that is misleading. Myself I have the complete file about Morgen that I wanted to bring for Mr. Hilberg because very often he quotes Morgen. So I have a file on the question and I consider that this file is not interesting whatsoever because this man, Morgen, cannot be believed.

Q. I see. But you quoted us Morgen who cannot be believed.

A. Yes. Excuse me?

Q. You quoted us Morgen, sir, in your examination-in-chief.

A. Yes.

Q. And now you are telling us it is {2725|2726} somebody who cannot be believed. What are you telling us? You quoted us Morgen and Dachau from the end of the War. That was from Morgen's testimony, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now you are telling us he can't be believed.

A. I say that when Morgen says things like that about the situations of the camps of which we have an amount of proof of what happened at the end of the War, I have no reason to say that this man is lying. Even a liar is not lying at every moment, you see.

Q. Ah, so you used Morgen when you can corroborate him from other sources.

A. Oh, sure. If I have the possibility to see that what he says might be true, I am not going to say that it's not true.

Q. How is that any different from how Dr. Hilberg used the Gerstein affidavit?

A. The Gerstein affidavit, it's quite different.

Q. I'd like to hear about it.

A. We could not have an idea of what was Gerstein. If it was cut into pieces about the extermination story

Q. You cut Morgen into pieces.

A. I didn't cut Morgen into pieces.

Q. Well, some you like and some you don't like.

A. No. I say that when it is a thing like the situation of the German camps were at the end {2726|2727} of the War, I quoted Morgen. I could have quoted anybody.

Q. But you quoted Morgen.

A. I put in Morgen. Why not?

Q. I don't know. You told us before he couldn't be believed.

A. No, I don't say that this man cannot be believed on anything.

Q. You just said he cannot be believed on anything that disagrees with you.

A. No. When he says – it's material that – when he says that, for example, at Bergen-Belsen or so on the situation was dramatic, I cannot not believe that, but when he says that there were extermination camps in Monowitz, I cannot believe it at all.

Q. What about when he describes the extermination process you just read to us?

A. Do you call that a description of an extermination process?

Q. Yes, I do.

A. Stereotypic? He didn't say, he didn't say – he did not say that he has seen that.

Q. No. He heard that from

A. He is repeating something.

Q. But he was trying to investigate it, though, and he couldn't.

A. He said that he was trying to investigate it.

Q. And he couldn't.

A. He said that he couldn't. As we have people like Hoettl [Höttl], Wisliceny saying "Eichmann told me this or that." This case is very interesting. {2727|2728}

Q. Very. Can you tell us – you mentioned about the changing ideas of the death camps in the West that – you mentioned a number of different camps, Dachau being one of them, Treblinka, I believe – Dachau, Buchenwald, Ravensbrück were the three camps I think you mentioned where there were rumours of gas chambers after the War, and they were not founded, according to the experts.

A. According – yes.

Q. Can you tell me whether there have been any changing ideas about the death camps in the east – Chelmno, Belzec, Treblinka, Sobibor?

A. Yes. For instance, Martin Borchat [Broszat] does not mention, if I remember, Maidanek, Lublin.

Q. Okay. Anybody else?

A. Oh, I couldn't say. I should go through all that and see what says Reitlinger, what says Hilberg, because usually the number is six, but there are not always the six same camps.

Q. What were those camps for?

A. As I told already, we have nothing material about those camps.

Q. Well, did they exist?

A. I'm sure that they exist, and I found very curious that we have not even a plan. We have plans, theoretical [sic] plans, and it seems that they were quite little, those camps. I suppose that when those camps that Himmler called Deutschganslager (phonetic) [Durchgangslager]...

Q. What does that mean, help us.

A. Transit camps, as for the camps of Belzec itself. Hans Frank heard rumours about that and {2728|2729} about that and he went to the place. He said to the International Military Tribunal —

Q. Hans Frank, so that we all knew, was in charge of the German Government in Warsaw?

A. In Poland.

Q. Poland?

A. In Dachau.

Q. Thank you. I defer to you, sir, on that. He was in charge.

A. He was in charge of – and he went and he says, "I went to Belzec because there were rumours. What I saw, if I remember, I saw Jews from France and another country constructing a ditch. I talked to them and that's all what we had." And I suppose that in the forty-three volumes of Hans Frank that I have not read, I suppose that we don't have anything about any of these camps as extermination camps.

Q. Well, we'll come back to Hans Frank. He is not denying that there was extermination of the Jews, annihilation of the Jews?

A. We must take that into time. At the beginning when he was asked guilty or not guilty, he answered as the others. He said not guilty. Then, when Hoess testified the 15th of April, 1945, and when Hans Frank and the others read the Press, the newspapers, Hans Frank was absolutely transformed. He said, "That's awful what you have done."

Q. No. He admitted that he knew about it and he apologized. Is that right?

A. No. I can't recall exactly these words. He was asked, "Are you responsible of the extermination of the Jews?" {2729|2730} And his answer was, it was not yes, it was not no. It was, "I answer yes because I do not want those things to be on the shoulders of little people. I take this responsibility on me." So you have books, books of history, even in university, where it is said the proof that the extermination camps existed, that there was an extermination programme is that Dr. Frank – the title of the Doctor is given at that time, Dr. Frank said that there were exterminations. Germany dirty by that for one thousand years; but I must say also that, at the end of the trial when he had once more the right to talk, remember what he said about what we did to the Jews, and he meant by that extermination, and I believe it that Germany is dirty for one thousand years, but I know what has happened to the German minorities in the East of Europe and I say that that is also dirty.

Q. Well, he wasn't denying what Nazi policies had done to the Jews.

A. We must be quite clear. What do you mean when you say he did not deny what Nazi Germany did to the Jews? What does it mean?

Q. Well, annihilation, sir.

A. Annihilation. Well, I think that he believed, when he heard Hoess, when he heard others, he said, "It's impossible that it is a lie." That's what —

Q. What happened to Frank?

A. He was hanged.

Q. So his confession cost him dearly, didn't it?

A. Cost him?

Q. Dearly. He lost his life. {2730|2731}

A. No. Nothing to do. I think it has nothing to do. I think that Hans Frank would have been hanged if he had confessed or not confessed. I don't think so. But especially this confession of Hans Frank is so interesting because systematically, we are said, even the German did not deny. I know German people today, there were perhaps S.S. or whatsoever, and they say, "I believe that there was an extermination." If I ask them, "Why do you believe?" They say, "You are not going to say that everybody is lying?" So you have people, you have an example much more interesting, an example of Karl Wolfe. He was General S.S. He was attached to Himmler, and this man, you could see a film where he is recounting the extermination. But Karl Wolfe never heard about extermination before April 1945 when he was in Switzerland negotiating an armistice with the Allied for the German troops in Italy. He said, "That's the first time on the radio that I heard about that." And he believed, and he did a kind of profession about that. Like Speer, Albert Speer.

Q. How far apart were those camps in the east – and I will name the camps that I am talking about: Maidanek, which is close to Lublin, Belzec, Chelmno, Sobibor?

A. Yes.

Q. How big a circle could you draw around those?

A. I could put Warsaw there, Treblinka something like ninety kilometers, Lublin something like 120 kilometers, then there is Belzec. I couldn't get a view of the distance. And Sobibor there, and Chelmno {2731|2732} is something like eighty kilometers east from Poland.

Q. Can you tell me one industry in any one of those camps?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. One industry.

A. One industry.

Q. Yes.

A. I don't think that there was industry.

Q. I don't either.

A. I don't. I think they were transit camps.

Q. They were all transit camps.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. They were all transit camps.

A. We have so few documents about that. The most important one is given by the book of Gitta Sereny-Honeyman who interrogated Stangl.

Q. Thank you.

A. And we have the book of Rueckerl, German prosecutor. And there is no substance in those. We would like to have something concrete, not stories.

Q. If they were transit camps, I guess we could assume a large number of people went through there.

A. Yes, I suppose, but I have no proof of that, eh?

Q. Well, you've got S.S. General Stroop who talks about people going to Treblinka, and there were thousands.

A. Yes. For one camp. For Belzec I {2732|2733} don't know. For Sobibor, for Chelmno, what do we know about Chelmno? Mr. Hilberg himself says in Chelmno there were perhaps two or three vents gas vents.

Q. Gas vents.

A. Gas vents, yes.

Q. Now, you had occasion, in your research, to speak to the International Committee of survivors of Dachau.

A. Yes.

Q. And the International Committee of the survivors of, did you say Buchenwald?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever spoken to the International Committee of the survivors of Treblinka?

A. No, because —

Q. There isn't one, is there?

A. No, because —

Q. There isn't one, is there?

A. Excuse me, we have in France an association of former inmates of Auschwitz and Upper Silesia, and the contents of Camp of Treblinka, although it is not Upper Silesia.

Q. No. And there's no organization for the survivors of Chelmno or Sobibor or Belzec other than what you told us about.

A. I interrogated in France this association, and I was, as I told you already, I am more interested in what is written than in what the people could tell me. And we are told that there are one survivor or t, two or three for those camps. What do we have?

Q. So — {2733|2734}

A. Gitta Sereny-Honeyman, when she wrote the book tried to find survivors.

Q. And did she?

A. She found perhaps six of them. I don't know.

Q. Out of thousands of people that went through that transit camp.

A. No. People — she said that she found six people. Now, if you go and say to the people, "Were you in Treblinka?" And if these people, this person says, "I was in Treblinka but there was no gas chamber", I don't know, but if it says that, what do you think you will do with your book trying to demonstrate that there were gas chambers?

Q. Well, I am not sure that all scholars ignore all evidence that goes against them, if you are asking me a question.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't understand what is going on here. Is this an exchange of statements?

THE COURT: No. It is merely the same type of remark that you made during your cross-examinations.

Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Your source of figures, as I understand it, for the number of people who died in concentration camps during the War — have I got that right, was it all concentration camps, or German concentration camps?

A. All concentration camps.

Q. Your figure was two hundred or three hundred fifty thousand people? {2734|2735}

A. Two hundred thousand minimum. Three hundred fifty thousand maximum.

Q. That's what I understood.

A. But I didn't publish anything about that.

Q. No. You were asked by Mr. Christie and I am going to ask you about it.

A. For the camps. I don't say for the ghettos. I don't say for the ghettos.

Q. For the ghettos.

A. I don't say for.

Q. For the Einsatzgruppen?

A. For Russia, Poland, I don't know. I talk about the concentration camps.

Q. All right. And your estimate, based on, if I could use the phrase and I don't mean any disrespect, an educated guess, is that for Auschwitz it was fifty thousand?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that fair?

A. Yes.

Q. And as I understood you, you said that the source of your figures was the International Tracing Service at Arolsen.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever been to the international Tracing Service at Arolsen?

A. I have never been on this spot, but I have been in correspondence with them. I received their annual activity report.

Q. All right. And is it fair to say {2735|2736} that that is an organization that somebody who was looking for a relative can go and file an index card there?

A. Yes.

Q. And they have, in this day and age, a computer system and if you've lost your family during the War, Arolsen is one place you can find it.

A. That's right.

Q. And that is what a tracing service I means — you are tracing family, people you have lost.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. Okay. Do you know how many cards are on file there?

A. There are something like forty million cards.

Q. Yes. And do you know how many names, the computer projection of those forty million cards?

A. You mean how they are divided and all that?

Q. No. I will be more precise. There are some forty million cards there. Do you know how many missing people those forty million cards relate to?

A. No, I don't know that, but I am going to, because your question is how do you use those figures given by the International Tracing Service —

Q. Well, that may be my question eventually, Dr. Faurisson. It isn't right now.

A. Okay.

Q. With the report that the Inter-{2736|2737}national Tracing Service sends around is there any warning as to how their figures are to be used or not used?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they not indicate that there are many camps where they have no records at all, including those camps of Auschwitz, Sobibor, Treblinka, Belzec, Chelmno?

A. No. They say since few years, with insistence, that there are people to help families and all that, and they insist that the revisionist people — I am a revisionist — are falsifying what the International Tracing Service is publishing. And up till 1976 I could easily work with those people. I mean, exchange correspondence. They were quite polite and all that. And then, suddenly, their politic change. And now they say they try to say we are among those people who say that the gas chamber existed, that there were million people killed.

Q. Well, aren't they saying you are among those people who are falsifying and misusing their figures?

A. Yes, they said that.

Q. Yes, they do say that.

A. They said that. If somebody, for example, say the International Tracing Service gave this figure for this camp, if they do not had that the International Tracing Service said that it was a minimum, that it was not finished, so that's not right. That's dishonest.

Q. The only deaths that the Inter-{2737|2738}national Tracing Service could have listed with them could have been registered deaths, I suggest to you those prisoners who were registered in a camp whose death was the subject of a certificate or something of that nature.

A. No. You ask a different type of registration. You have a registration with those documents that the German left. That's right. And you have, since nearly forty years, a registration from people asking information about such and such person of their family, and you have a special registration service in the International Tracing Service itself, and you have another one in the Town of Arolsen, and all that is brought together. So it's not only the registered of the camp.

Q. All right.

A. It's a work in progress. May I explain to you why. I said three hundred fifty thousand?

Q. Go ahead, Doctor. I'm sure we would all like to hear.

A. Because I received those reports since, I cannot tell you, perhaps something like — I don't know, '68 perhaps, up till '83. And we see all the work that they did, those people. It's an extraordinary work. So in 1968, I am going to quote figures, like that. They say that for Auschwitz they had forty-eight thousand people. Then the next year you have fifty thousand. The next year you have fifty — no. I mix up.

Q. I'm sorry, I lost you. I don't know what those figures represent. Are those living or {2738|2739} dead?

A. The increasing, the increasing of the figures from year to year —

THE COURT: Of the number dead?

THE WITNESS: Of the number dead, yes. This figure is like this. It goes to expiration. It means that you feel that they are getting to the end of what is possible to find. They may find next year, perhaps, ten more peoples, but certainly not, we are certainly not going to six million, eh?

Q. Well, that's your reading of the figures and as I understand your evidence, the International Tracing Service use their figures wrong.

A. No, not wrong.

Q. I thought I asked you and you said they say you are falsifying and misusing their figures.

A. Not myself. Not myself. I have never been accused of that.

Q. Oh, I misunderstood you then, Doctor.

THE COURT: So did I.

THE WITNESS: I mean that the —

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this an opportunity for both Your Honour and my friend to express your opinion on the witness' evidence? I object to that.

THE COURT: I am not expressing an opinion. Your objection is not well taken at all. I have him written down as having said something. If he wants to correct it, he can feel perfectly free to correct it.

Go ahead. {2739|2740}

THE WITNESS: Yes. They said that those people called revisionists were dishonest at all because they were saying that those figures were definitive figures, for instance, a thing that I have never done and I don't feel that I am concerned at all by that.

THE COURT: So they never accused you.

THE WITNESS: No. Never. Never.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: But they won't let you have their figures. They won't let you do research there.

A. Not knowing the sense of my figures, I have been chased from the Centre of Documentation, the Jewish Centre of Documentation in Paris, I have been chased — I didn't do any scandal. I have been chased from the Historical Institute, German Historical Institute in Paris, I have been chased from the Centre of History of Resistance in Vienna, although I came with the recommendation of Mr. Simon Wiesenthal. At that time he didn't know who I was. He had my name, but he didn't think anything of it, but the people of the Resistance Centre in Vienna, after accepting me, chased me. And for Arolsen; I see that I wrote to them many times asking them, "Could you please send me your report, annual report, as you did it?" At the time! they send me this report, and I cannot get it any more so I try to get it by other ways.

Q. Do you know how many people the International Tracing Service, whether this information is in the report or not, say that are still missing, {2740|2741} not accounted for, can't be found?

A. You mean if I know how many cannot be found?

Q. Yes. You told us how many are dead.

A. I don't know. I don't know. I don't know how anybody could answer this question.

Q. Well, you've got forty million cards there, presumably, of people looking for people.

How many names does that relate to?

A. I don't know. I don't know how many names because you can have many cards, and they have cards for all the displaced persons.

Q. Is this a question you've asked, then?

A. I know that.

Q. No. Is that a question you have asked them in the course of your research?

A. No. I see that in the activity report.

Q. How many people are missing?

A. No. I see they have files about the displaced persons.

Q. I'm sorry if I am jumping, I want to go to another subject and sort of following the same path you went. And the next topic you cover, to my recollection, is Klarsfeld's report on the deportations, and in his book Klarsfeld is giving figures and listed names of deportations. Does Klarsfeld draw any conclusions or have anything to say in this book as to how many of those Jews died and never came back? {2741|2742}

A. Oh, yes, he said that.

Q. What does he say?

A. I thought that I explained already.

Q. Thank you. I will try to appreciate it.

A. I am ready to repeat. Klarsfeld said that there were, at least, 75,721 Jews deported from France all over the world, which means if we take the figures that he gives for the number of Jews in 1939, that three-quarters of the Jews in France were not deported, and one quarter was deported. And about the dead, I am interested in this question, he said — when he thinks that somebody died he put only a little mark, nearly invisible, about the name, right after the name. I think that he does that because I studied all his books. Two thousand five hundred times, I think. It would mean that only 2,500 people were alive.

Q. The mark was for people who survived.

A. Yes. But on page 10, 11 and 12 he explains how he has done his calculation, and he said, "I counted as dead everybody who came back to France and who went to the Ministry of Veterans to say, 'I am alive.' (sic) A thing which was not even asked by the Minister of Veterans. It was not an official list. And this before the 31st of December, 1945, which means that we can have all the doubts for all the people who came after this date.

Q. How many do you say died?

A. What?

Q. How many do you say died? {2742|2743}

A. I am not — I cannot say, but I can tell you how I could say, if I had the right to work in Arolsen, this is what I would do. I would take the list of Klarsfeld and I would take the name number one, number one hundred, number two hundred, three hundred and so on, and I would try to study seven hundred fifty cases to have an idea of what happened to the 75,721. It would be a beginning.

Q. And your research method would be that if a name wasn't in Arolsen, what would that mean to you?

A. I don't know what it could mean, but I would try to study this question. I would like to do this work. I told you even with Dr. Hilberg —

THE COURT: Did you say, Doctor, something about that Klarsfeld counted people who came back?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: What did you say? I am looking at what I've written here and I think what I have written is wrong, and I want to change it.

THE WITNESS: On page 10, 11, 12 ...

THE COURT: Yes. He counted —

THE WITNESS: He counted as alive.

THE COURT: I had the word dead, I'm sorry.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right, Your Honour, he did say that.

THE COURT: I wondered how somebody who was dead could come back, but I have that all straightened out now. Thank you. {2743|2744}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Doctor.

Q. Do you have any estimate as to how many prisoners were never registered in concentration camps?

A. No, I don't know. All this quite interesting question of the numbers and the figures, I think that we should study them. I said that. I repeated that. I would be very pleased to have something else that hypothesis or affirmations. This work should have been done since a very long time.

Q. Well, the work has been done for a very long time, I suggest to you, Doctor. There are quite a few people in the field that have done that work.

A. Oh, I know people that gave, among the revisionists or exterminators, gave the result of their work, but I am not convinced, either by the revisionists, like Walter Sanning, neither by other people. I am not convinced by those, neither by the figures of Rassinier.

Q. You told us, or told Mr. Christie, that there were three — I'm sorry, that[ ] there was no material proofs of the existence of the gas chamber. You felt that the gas chamber was built on three pillars. Have I got that?

A. Yes.

Q. And presumably if those three pillars are destroyed then these gas

chambers —

A. It could fall down, yes. Possible. Broken, I don't know, but it could fall down.

Q. So it's important to you, I guess, to study all aspects of those three pillars and to make {2744|2745} sure that what you say is false — or what you believe is false, is false.

A. Their text, yes.

Q. Their text.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And the first of those pillars was the Vrba-Wetzler report.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And we only have one page of that report.

A. No.

Q. I'm sorry, in evidence here.

A. Yes. But we used, when Dr. Vrba was there, I think that we were transmitting pages and pages of his report.

Q. There was some drawing shown to Dr. Vrba as well that he identified as being his.

A. Yes.

Q. But the body of his report we haven't put into evidence here, but you've read it.

A. Oh, yes. Yes. Yes, I read it.

Q. All right. That's fine.

A. And even the report of the two other Jews and the report of the Polish Measure.

Q. All right. And I am going to suggest to you that in the body of the report Dr. Vrba — Vrba-Wetzler, they give a list of transports arriving in Auschwitz-Birkenau, going back for two years, and they get the numbers of people that were — the registration numbers, tattooed numbers, for each one of those transports. {2745|2746}

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And they give information as to the country of origin that the transport came from.

A. Yes.

Q. And in some cases they even give the names of people who are on the transport.

A. Yes. I remember the brother of Leon Bloom or something like that.

Q. Yes. That's one of them. I recall that, too.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever check any of those transcripts?

A. Yes, but a very long time ago, because it was the first document that I ever studied, you see.

Q. Do you know if any work has been done checking those transports?

A. I don't know any work checking those transports. I know the calendarium of Auschwitz, yes, and I would begin by that, although the calendarium of Auschwitz is plenty of mistakes about those convoys. Klarsfeld himself said that.

Q. Well, I just want to see, this crucial pillar, you've mentioned some things that you've looked at very carefully, but most of the report dealt with these transports where they came from and a description of the camps.

A. What do you call most of the report? Do you mean the number of pages?

Q. Yes. The volume. {2746|2747}

A. The volume. The volume is one thing and the importance of the topic is another thing. I think that the most important part has been taken by the Nuremberg Tribunal which is the page, document L022. They took this page. They considered that, it was this page which was important.

Q. Have you ever looked at the original documents in the archives that were filed at Nuremberg?

A. Yes. I saw some of them in the Centre of Jewish Documentation in Paris.

Q. All right. Would you agree with me that not all the documents that were filed, and indeed not — not all the documents that were filed are in, reproduced in the forty-two volumes.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And that we had an example here of the Stroop Report; the entire Stroop report is not reproduced here.

A. Yes.

Q. But the entire Stroop report I am going to suggest to you was before the Tribunal.

A. Yes. Possibly. But we have many, many examples of documents which are in the Jacob Robinson bibliography and not in the Nuremberg trial.

Q. All right. So may I suggest to you there was a comment, I think you made yesterday, or maybe this morning, that documents were cut up and they should have had the whole document.

A. Yes.

Q. And my suggestion to you is that {2747|2748} they did have whole documents, that what's cut up are those parts of the document that is reported in this blue series.

A. No. No.

Q. Have you ever checked that?

A. No. For example, what I said is that the Gerstein report, PS 1553, was cut into pieces in the International Military Tribunal.

Q. Have you ever looked for the original Gerstein report? Not what is —

A. Oh, yes. Oh, yes. Really.

Q. All right. And where have you looked at, which archive?

A. National Archives in Washington. Israelean, the State of Israel. I have the stamp and all that. And then in the French Justice, Military Justice Archives.

Q. And were the complete documents available?

A. And excuse me, the fourth source, I cannot give you the address exact, but the Evangelic Church in Germany, in Bielefeld. I had many documents pertaining to the case of Gerstein.

Q. Doctor, my question was specifically, the Archives where the exhibits of the International Military Tribunal reside, either on microfilm or the actual exhibit, my question is whether you have ever looked in those archives to see whether the entire exhibit was before the International Military Tribunal.

A. Yes. Yes. Yes.

Q. Or only a part of the exhibit. {2748|2749}

A. No. No. I have seen an exhibit entirely.

Q. And the entire exhibit was before the Tribunal.

A. No. You take the case of Gerstein, you mean?

Q. Gerstein, Stroop, the Wetzler-Vrba report.

A. For Gerstein, for Gerstein you had this text. I am not going to repeat the reference. You had this text, and the tribunal didn't take anything of this text, but —

Q. They didn't use it all.

A. Wait a minute. The document PS 1553 is the Gerstein Report, the most well-known version, and twelve invoices of Zyklon. And they took only the twelve invoices of Zyklon and in the blue series you will find, I think, two examples of invoices. You see, you had three fragments.

Q. But doesn't the blue series in the actual archives have all twelve invoices and the affidavit.

A. In Washington.

Q. That is what I am getting at.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I see, Your Honour, it is three thirty.

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes. Doctor, you will please not discuss this with anyone until your cross-examination is complete.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

—— {2749|2750}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I draw your attention to a point during the time that this witness was testifying in cross-examination. The subject was the forty million cards in the files of the Tracing Service. There was an apparent misunderstanding between Crown counsel and the witness where the witness indicated that he did not say what both Crown counsel and I thought he said. You then, in the presence of the jury, made a remark the details of which I don't specifically recall, in which you stated that I and the Crown have been apparently misinterpreting, doing something of an improper nature with the witness' evidence.

I have asked our reporter to look up that particular reference. I propose to have her read it to you now in the absence of the jury and then ask for your reaction before I have her read it in the presence of the jury.

THE REPORTER: "Q. Do they not indicate that there are many camps where they have no records at all, including those camps of Auschwitz, Sobibor, Treblinka, Belzec, Chelmno? {2750|2751}

A. No. They say since few years, with insistence, that there are people to help families and all that, and they insist that the revisionist people – I am a revisionist – are falsifying what the International Tracing Service is publishing. And up till 1976 I could easily work with those people. I mean, exchange correspondence. They were quite polite and all that. And then, suddenly, their politic change, and now they say they try to say we are among those people who said that the gas chamber existed, that there were million people killed."

THE COURT: That is the end of the quotation. Now, what is your answer to that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't understand what Your Honour means. I was interested to know what Your Honour had said, and what I said is, because I understand it is something I said —

THE COURT: Do you want to hear what you said, because I will adjourn while she looks it up. {2751|2752}

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, before I comment on any exchange said between myself and my friend and Your Honour I would like to know specifically what it is that I am asked to comment upon, because I don't recall the exact words, and I think it must be important.

THE COURT: (To the Reporter) Can you find it now?

THE REPORTER: Yes, Your Honour:

"Q. Well, that's your reading of the figures, and as I understand your evidence, the International Tracing Service use their figures wrong.

A. No, not wrong.

Q. I thought I asked you and you said they say you are falsifying and misusing their figures.

A. Not myself. Not myself. I have never been accused of that.

Q. Oh, I misunderstood you, then, doctor.

THE COURT: So did I.

THE WITNESS: I mean that the —

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this an opportunity {2752|2753} for both Your Honour and my friend to express your opinion on the witness' evidence? I object to that."

THE COURT: "Is this an opportunity for both my friend and Your Honour to express your opinion on the witness' evidence." Exactly.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, that was a question, Your Honour.

THE COURT: It was a most improper question, and I wanted to read it to you for your reaction. Now, do you want me to read the whole thing back to the jury, or do you want to make the correction? It is going to be one or the other. You have indicated —

MR. CHRISTIE: I objected —

THE COURT: Just let me talk. You have indicated quite clearly to me, by implication, that I am siding with one side of this litigation, which is totally wrong and quite improper. Now, what do you want done about it?

MR. CHRISTIE: I objected to what I understood to be an expression of Your Honour's opinion and my friend's opinion on the witness' evidence.

THE COURT: Can you now see the falsity {2753|2754} of it?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think I understand it as a falsehood on my part at all. I raised an objection because I thought an opinion is being expressed by Your Honour and my friend on the witness' evidence.

THE COURT: Unless you can make any further comment, I intend to have the jury, at some stage, hear that total evidence back, unless you want to say that you were wrong, which in my view you were entirely wrong.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't —

THE COURT: You don't. All right. Then that's the end of it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Just a moment. Let me finish, please, Your Honour. I don't intend to form a judgment at this point on the words spoken. They are not as simple as they might appear, and I'd like to know exactly what was said in relation to the question that Your Honour and my friend said you misunderstood, and I am afraid haven't been able to find that precisely.

THE COURT: Then I will order the transcript and you will have time to look at it.

(To the Reporter): The transcript at {2754|2755} your convenience, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Of what portion, Your Honour?

THE COURT: The whole portion. Right from the beginning, from the questions ahead right down to our answers. That will be reserved for another time, but you are now on notice, Mr. Christie.

Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 4:05 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: In a roundabout way, Dr. Faurisson, before the break, we sidetracked a little but, but I started off talking about the Vrba-Wetzler report and what work you had done to authenticate that report, and you have not, as I understand, checked the transports that are indicated, the long list of transports indicated, and registration numbers that are indicated in that record.

A. I have not checked, no.

Q. Okay. That's my question. Have you checked them?

A. I have not checked that.

Q. But there are many other aspects —

A. And many other things, yes. {2755|2756}

Q. And my understanding is, from a question Mr. Christie asked you, that your primary concern in checking the accuracy of that report, was in the maps contained in that report and in the drawing of the crematorium.

A. Yes.

Q. Have I got that right?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Were you in court when Dr. Vrba testified? You were present in court when Dr. Vrba testified?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And did you hear Dr. Vrba say that when he drew those maps they weren't meant to be architectural drawings but to give an idea of what was there?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Does that change your opinion at all?

A. It doesn't change my opinion because it is like when he said that it was he used a Latin expression — licence as a [licensia] poetarium.

Q. Poetic licence.

A. Poetic licence.

Q. For those of us who are not classic scholars.

A. So he used this expression, and I don't think that it explains me anything of what he said in "I Cannot Forgive". The same thing when he says, you see, it's not the work of an architect. It doesn't change anything in substance, because when he says there were {2756|2757} four — nine ovens with four openings, they were around the chimney, all was on the same ground, there is a series of fantastic errors.

Q. All right. So your answer is that that doesn't change your opinion at all about the verbal exchange.

A. It doesn't change because on the plan and in reality you have not nine, you have five. You have not four, you have three. It was —

Q. We'll come to that. The next pillar that you spoke of was the Hoess affidavit. And again you indicated, I believe, that your principle concern about that were in areas that you are not an expert on, but there were things that concerned you. Is that fair — but there are other things as well about Hoess and his affidavit?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Okay. And some of those things were that there was no budget, no trace of consultation. There was nothing to indicate from any documentation that any of these things were going on.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that —

A. That's exact, yes.

Q. All right. Would you expect a mass murderer to advertise what he was doing?

A. I am going to answer this question.

Q. Good.

A. I am going to take a comparison, if you permit. If I had to suppress something like the population of Quebec, the Province of Quebec, I don't {2757|2758} think that I could hide it, how a secret would be possible. And I think that it would be quite naive to say I am going to kill six million people, but if I don't put it on the paper so everything will be okay, if I don't put my signature, so later nobody will say, "Oh, that was your signature."

Q. Isn't that what you are saying — because there was no signature it never happened?

A. No. I say that the fact that we don't have budget and things like that. Dr. Hilberg agrees completely on this point. Now, if I understand you, you mean that the fact that there is no budget, that there is no order and so on, doesn't mean that the thing did not happen. Am I right?

Q. Well, that would have been one of my questions down the way, but you have me, Doctor. Yes.

A. So I say that it's completely incompatible. You cannot make such an enormous enterprise. Those terrible slaughter houses, thousands of people, specialists studying this matter to prepare the plan, to prepare the buildings. To pay all that you would have traces. You cannot, you cannot do otherwise.

Q. Okay. Do you know what personnel dossiers look like, German personnel dossiers?

A. I have seen some.

Q. And have you seen any in Auschwitz?

A. In Auschwitz itself, no. Personal dossier, perhaps reproduction, yes.

Q. Would you expect that people working around the gas chambers would take an oath in secrecy as to what was going on there — and by people I {2758|2759} mean German soldiers?

A. I think that the oath of secrecy was taken by everybody, not only those people, I think. Everybody have to take the oath of secrecy.

Q. Well, you think the Jews working in that area had to take the oath of secrecy, too?

A. I think you even have Jews liberated from Auschwitz in 1943 who came back to ... We have that.

Q. What's that got to do with the oath of secrecy?

A. Well, I think there were inmates to be in a camp and not indefinitely.

Q. Were these Jewish inmates?

A. I don't know. There was one that I speak to you, yes. Yes, they were Jewish.

Q. Have you ever seen that document or a document like that before?

A. Oh, I've seen many documents of this kind, yes, that the master closed their mouth. If they don't do it, they might be shot or condemned or whatsoever, yes.

Q. I am going to suggest to you that that is an oath of secrecy.

A. Yes.

Q. And it's for — it's got a stamp on it, Auschwitz. It's dated.

A. 22 of May, 1944, yes.

Q. Yes. And it deals with an S.S. man by the name of — the signature is a little hard, but it's Schulz. {2759|2760}

A. Schulz, yes.

Q. And the document I have shown you is in German, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to suggest to you this is a translation, and if I am wrong you will help me.

There are three listings there, three points — one, two and three.

A. That is the title.

Q. And the first one, I suggest, in English, would be, it is known to me.

A. The title, please.

Q. I'm sorry, the title is "Serve Obligation".

A. Yes. Something like that.

Q. "Serve Obligation". One: It is known to me and I have been instructed today about the fact that I will be punished with death if I appropriate Jewish property of any sort; Two: I must preserve absolute secrecy concerning all measures carried out during the Jewish evacuation."

A. Yes.

Q. Have I got that right?

A. Yes.

Q. "Even with my colleagues".

A. Yes. "With my comrades", yes.

Q. "Three: I commit myself to use my entire person and energy for the quick and smooth execution of these measures".

A. Yes. That's it.

Q. Is that right? {2760|2761}

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Have you seen that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Never. I have now. Thank you. Is this my copy?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'll get one, Mr. Christie.

Q. Konrad Morgen also talks about the secrecy of this whole operation.

A. For everything you had secrecy, as I am supposing to all the armies.

Q. Even Albert Speer talks about all the secrecy.

A. Yes. Secrecy everywhere. You had most of the time, you had Geheim — secret, or secret affair of the Reich. So — and you had it for everybody, even the civilians, even in Berlin.

Q. Can you see the difference between keeping records for how many dogs there are in Auschwitz and keeping records of mass murder at Auschwitz?

A. I don't understand this question, excuse me.

Q. The question is, can you see a difference — you told us that you have records right down to how many dogs there were, how much they paid for the keep of the dogs.

A. Yes.

Q. And my question is whether you can see a difference between the record for the dogs at Auschwitz and records of mass murder.

A. I don't understand this question. {2761|2762} You mean I am going to tell you what I meant if I was not clear? I mean that the German kept recall, it seems, of everything, even things like dogs or nails or trees or whatsoever. It's impossible to make disappear from a dossier, and specially from the dossier of the locksmith in Auschwitz, to make disappear something which would mean that something special has been built for killing of people, or even if the word "killing" is not there.

Q. All right. So —

A. I think —

Q. I guess your answer is that you don't see any difference between records of the dogs and records of mass murder.

A. No. I don't like this way of formulating that, because it seems that I put dog and Jews equivalent.

Q. Well, it's your example.

A. But the meaning, I think that you understood there, the meaning is that even for the dog, even for the last detail you had tracing register, for the last thing.

Q. You would also expect to find the last detail of records of mass murder.

A. If we had had a mass murder, we would have a terrible amount of witnesses. You cannot suppress the witnesses like that. You cannot suppress the documentation for that. How is it possible, during the War? You know very well that the Red Cross, after the War, said, "We did not know at that time." The Pope said, "I did not know." Even Churchill, Roosevelt and {2762|2763} Stalin, who said that there was an extermination of the Jews 17th of December 1942.

Q. It was in the London Agreement, was it?

A. Yes. It was a general phrase about that.

Q. They warned the Germans that they would prosecute them if it kept up.

A. Yes. Etcetera. But about those gas chambers no measure has been taken in consequence.

Q. I'm sorry, I don't follow.

A. No measure if they believed in those gas chambers in Auschwitz. It would have been very easy for them to propagate around the world that there were those slaughter houses, because they had once more those extraordinary aerial photo reconnaissance. They had a tremendous amount of information about Auschwitz by the OSS, etcetera. You cannot kill thousands and thousands of people like that in places so well delineated, and nobody would see that. You cannot keep this secret.

Q. Sorry, haven't there been thousands and thousands of witnesses since the War testifying to these things and writing about these things?

A. No, no, no. I see when I try to find the witness and when I tried to find the first and most important Vrba, Gerstein, Hoess — do you call that witness? I am ready to say that they call themselves, perhaps, witness. I'm ready to say that. But it does not mean that there were accurate witnesses, real witnesses. You had witness of soap factory; you had {2763|2764} witness —

Q. Well, no, wait a minute. Now, Hoess doesn't witness a soap factory.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can the witness answer that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, he is talking about something that Hoess never said.

THE WITNESS: Now, first you don't want me to talk about any other information —

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Go ahead.

A. We have thousands of information. For example, in I think November 1944 the New York Times, you could find that in the book of Professor Butz, it was said in the New York Times that the Hungarians were preparing false big shower rooms to gas Jews systematically in Hungary. You heard everything about every camp, every rumour. For Belzec —

Q. So —

A. May I say for Belzec?

Q. Please.

A. For Belzec, for instance, the first one talk really about Belzec published something about that Kauski. He is living in Washington, Jan Kauski. I wonder if he is not professor. He published a book at the end of '44 in the U.S.A. and he said that Belzec was a death camp. He was witness. He presented himself as a witness. And he said, "This is the way that things were done. The people were put into trains. Those trains were plenty of — do you say quick lime?"

Q. Quick lime, yes.

A. And this is how the people in {2764|2765} Belzec were killed. Another one said by electricity.

Q. Now, just a minute. Pravda said by electricity. Are you taking Pravda as a source?

A. Other one, I said. It was not newspaper. The first was Jan Kauski, and in the notebooks of Auschwitz you have a testimony of Leib Langfuss, presented first as an unknown whoever, and last year it was published in the French translation, and this unknown author became Langfuss, and he said in his testimony that people were el[ec]trocuted. And we have plenty of stories of this kind.

Q. How did they die in Belzec?

A. I do not know. I think that those transit camps were those camps used in the big operation that the Germans decided to take the Jews of Poland which were, who were in one thousand places, to put them in fifty-five.

Q. Fifty-five.

A. In fifty-five places, some of them ghettos, some other not ghettos. It is said in the IMT, I can give you the reference, and I think that it is really a sad thing that people were transplanted like that, and I am sure brutally and with the War and all that, and it was also very sad when, just at the end of the War, after the War, the German minorities were transported like that also. You had transfer of this kind.

Q. Doctor, would you expect a transit camp, Belzec, you said, Treblinka, Sobibor, Maidanek, Chelmno —

A. No. Maidanek no. They don't call it a — {2765|2766}

Q. Except for Maidanek. Treblinka, Sobibor, Chelmno, Belzec, those four, would you expect the trains to run both ways? Would you expect the trains carrying people to go both to and from the camp?

A. No, no. I think that a transit camp, you can bring the people by foot or by train, or by any means. And then that they could go, as so many people went, by foot to such or such place, because when Dr. Hilberg says those trains came, brought those people, and they went away without anybody, but a train is not supposed to bring those people and to bring them back. Certainly not.

Q. Well, have you studied the train records?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. So you can't say whether the trains ever took anybody away from those camps.

A. No. No.

Q. Yet you say that.

A. No, I don't say that. It was quite possible that train took them. It is quite possible they were sent by foot, by lorries. I don't know. But Dr. Hilberg said that they were taken from Warsaw by train.

Q. And the trains came back empty.

A. And he says that, yes.

Q. And we don't have more than a handful of survivors from all those camps?

A. I don't know. I don't know about that. {2766|2767}

Q. Well —

A. A handful, I don't know.

Q. Well, if you studied the literature, then I —

A. No, no, no. All those questions of figures, because I see that you insist on that, may I explain you?

THE COURT: One at a time, gentlemen.

THE WITNESS: I understand that very well. The first day I said I think that I was very interested by that, although I had no time yet to study this question. I said that I would be so pleased to work with Dr. Hilberg on this question, because we have many words. Now, I am going to give you another inquiry that I could do for statistics.

Q. No. I don't want to hear about an inquiry that you could do. I want to hear about inquiries that you have done. You have presented yourself here as an expert.

A. Not an expert of everything, no. Remember, I am not even an expert of gas chamber, an expert of architecture. No, really not.

Q. In all your reviews of the literature, do I understand that you are unable to give us any idea of how many survivors there are from those four camps?

A. I said that. I repeated that. I cannot say, and I think that nobody has the right to say, because I don't know what they become, they were gassed. I don't understand that.

Q. Hoess, we've heard a great deal. {2767|2768} We had sections from his book read to us a number of times. From memory, he alleged that he was tortured by the people he was arrested, beaten by his own riding crop and a statement was taken and he signed it and he didn't know when he signed it. And he later gave and signed two more confessions.

A. Much more than that.

Q. Much more than that. And he wrote a book.

A. He is supposed to have written a book freely, yes.

Q. All right, Do the subsequent confessions and the book bear any relation to the first confession that he didn't know what he was signing?

A. In the book? You mean if in the book he said?

Q. You've read the book.

A. Yes.

Q. You read all the confessions of Hoess.

A. Yes.

Q. You read the testimony of Hoess, the International Military Tribunal.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. All right. Is there any difference between all those different statements that he made?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. All right. And is there a difference between the first statement that he made where he said he didn't know what he was signing and subsequent statements? {2768|2769}

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What is the major difference?

A. Oh, I could give an example, which is extraordinary. The story of Wolzek. In his first statement he repeated that[ ]there was a camp called Wolzek. He never said that any more in his memoirs.

Q. All right. Anything else?

A. I would have to go through all those documents once more to make the difference. I did this job, yes, already.

Q. Is there any difference in terms of his description of the extermination process?

A. He is very vague about that. He is constantly vague – vague in the testimonies, vague in his book. We really don't know.

Q. And is the same vagueness in the first affidavit as in subsequent affidavits?

A. I found, yes. I found.

Q. I suggest, Doctor, that whether or not Hoess was tortured

A. Hoess?

Q. I'm sorry. I apologize for my total lack of any other language. Hoess was tortured, that notwithstanding whether he was tortured or not, the affidavit that he gave on that occasion was true and in substantial accord with other affidavits that he gave.

A. You can ask the question to Dr. Hilberg as you are asking the question to me. If you consider that three million people killed during the time Hoess was Commandant, which means only from June 1940 to November 1943, if you believe that this is a {2769|2770} true statement —

Q. No. My question was not that, Doctor. My question was whether there was a significant change in his story of the events of Auschwitz between the affidavit that he didn't know what he was signing, and later after. You've told me there was one difference, there – Wolzek.

A. Yes.

Q. Wolzek was mentioned in the first one and not in the later ones.

A. And you want some more example?

Q. I'm asking whether at this time it's substantially the same.

A. No. I would say it is the same vague story.

Q. All right.

A. The same vague story, because as he does not go, really, into details, you cannot even know where he placed those gas chambers, and you don't understand if there is one gas chamber or two or three or four or five or six. It's impossible. When he says, the first time, the gassing was done on this way, you cannot really see where it happened. For the first time, yes, he says in the block eleven. Yes. That's right. For the second time he says, in Krema I, and then after we don't know absolutely where were those gassings.

Q. Okay.

A. There is no detail about that. Like the witnesses, you see.

Q. Your next pillar was the Gerstein {2770|2771} statement. You gave us Gerstein's figures for the different camps and compared those to Dr. Hilberg's figures, which Dr. Hilberg, I think, indicated about one half million, approximately. Is that right, to your recollection, the Documents of Destruction?

A. I don't remember the total.

Q. Okay. Is it your understanding, from your review of the literature and the documents, that the camps of Belzec, Sobibor, Treblinka and Chelmno were all destroyed long before the Russian advance?

A. They were closed much before, yes. No. I think that Chelmno – perhaps not Chelmno.

Q. So the Russian advance wasn't the reason for the closing of those camps.

A. Perhaps it could be. I don't know.

Q. I am going to suggest to you that they were closed up to a year before the Russian advance.

A. No. You had the camp of Belzec in, they say end of '43.

Q. And when did the Russians hit this area?

A. I think that they were there – they were in Maidanek, which is further, in July '44.

Q. Six months later.

A. Yes.

Q. And what condition did the Germans leave those camps?

A. Leave?

Q. In what condition did they leave those camps? {2771|2772}

A. I don't know.

Q. Pardon?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, have you seen reference to that in literature?

A. Yes. I have seen the books that I told you about Gitta Sereny-Honeyman.

Q. They don't refer to the total destruction of those camps – you go there and it is a grassy field?

A. Yes. What it is is that the Germans, if we have nothing —

Q. You can answer my question first and then you can give your explanation.

A. What?

Q. Were the camps totally destroyed by the Germans before they left so that all that is left, in essence, is an empty field?

A. I cannot answer to this question. I think that they said that, Gitta Sereny-Honeyman. I didn't check it. When I was in Poland I was told there was nothing to see in Treblinka, Belzec and Sobibor. There was no monuments. I had no time to visit monuments. I had work to do elsewhere, and in fact —

Q. Doctor, on a number of occasions you indicated to us that your expertise was not to listen to survivor stories but documents and literature; and from the documents and literature, what condition were those camps in?

A. We have no documents about them. We have not even the plans, or plans showing a little {2772|2773} drawing with gas chamber. And not even a gas chamber of disinfection in those camps.

Q. And how many people do you estimate went through those camps?

A. I don't know. You see, there is an accusation. I am obliged to listen to the accusator when he says people were killed on such and such way. I am looking for that. I see that Mr. So and So said electricity. Another one says steam chambers. Another one says electricity. Another one says quick lime, etcetera. So do you consider that this is information? I say it is a kind of lack of information. And for Auschwitz, when they arrive in Auschwitz, the Russians found the place called gas chamber, when they are called by the new revisionist people called gas chamber. They found the same thing in Maidanek. They found places that the tourist today visit, which are called gas chamber. I would say only to the tourists, try to open your eyes and open your minds.

Q. You testified that, I believe, from, in the Gerstein affidavit, there is a reference to a transport of some 6,700 persons, forty-five cars arriving from Linburg. Have you checked that?

A. No, I have not checked that, if a convoy of this kind came in Auschwitz, in Belzec at that time. No.

Q. You haven't checked that. All right.

A. No. No.

Q. And have you checked whether, in fact, Mr. Gerstein did speak to Baron von Otter, the {2773|2774} Swedish diplomat on the way back from Belzec?

A. Yes, he did, I am sure.

Q. And he testified at one of your trials, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

A. Baron von Otter came. I can tell you why.

Q. No.

A. I think it is important.

Q. I am asking the questions.

A. It is a pity.

Q. Mr. Christie can ask you that question.

Dr. Hilberg has suggested that he only used the parts of the Gerstein affidavit that were corroborated from other sources. What do you say to that, is this appropriate?

A. I don't see what was corroborated.

Q. Have there been trials related to those camps, Belzec in particular?

A. Oh, yes. There were trials.

Q. And testimony at trials concerning Belzec?

A. Yes.

Q. And testimony as to the mass extermination process there?

A. Yes. We have all sorts, for the Auschwitz trial, vague confessions; the people are not going to say there was no gas chamber.

Q. And on the basis of those vague {2774|2775} confessions you indicated, were there convictions?

A. Oh, yes. There were convictions. For Ravensbrück where there were no gas chambers, people were hanged. That's the same thing.

Q. Yes. You mentioned that before. We will come back to that. You mentioned the Red Cross.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Christie put to you a report that was written during the War by a Red Cross representative. Do you know who the head of the German Red Cross was?

A. Yes. His name was Gravitz [Grawitz].

Q. Dr. Gravitz, yes. And do you know what position he held in the S.S.?

A. Oh, yes. He had a high position.

Q. He was in charge, was he not, of all the doctors and all the concentration camps?

A. I couldn't say that because the concentration camps had their own administration, you see.

Q. Well, he was in S.S. administration though, was he not?

A. Yes.

Q. And for example, Dr. Mengele, he was an S.S. Doctor?

A. I don't know anything. I see that we talk very much about Dr. Mengele. I don't know anything about him, eh?

Q. All right. You have never looked at his dossier.

A. Oh, I've read things. I have {2775|2776} seen films about that, but —

Q. No. No. Have you looked at his dossier, the official document?

A. No. No. No.

Q. All right.

A. I am looking for the material itself of those gas chambers.

Q. All right. Now, the head of the German Red Cross was Dr. Gravitz.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And I would suggest to you that he was Himmler's personal physician and that he was in charge of all medical personnel for the S.S.

A. Possible.

Q. Including Mengele or any other doctors working in the camps.

A. Possible.

Q. Do you see any conflict of interest there that Dr. Gravitz might have in the Red Cross and in the concentration camps?

A. It depends what he has as a responsibility and ideas of his responsibility. If there were extermination camps, I say that it is impossible, absolutely impossible, but if there were concentration camps, not only Germany had concentration camps. Allied Russia had that.

Q. Do you know about medical experiments carried on in camps by S.S. personnel?

A. No. I don't know very well, but have something to say about that.

Q. Well, if you don't know about it, {2776|2777} I can't ask you.

A. No, I don't know very well, but I studied the story of Dr. Derring [Derring].

Q. You told us the story of Dr. Derring.

A. Yes. And very important, the two doctors who were in Struthoff [Struthof], in Alsace, I studied their trials in Metz and in Lyons, and I can tell you it was Dr. Bickenbach, and the other one, a name beginning by "H", I don't remember. They were judged by the French Military Justice. I have no transcript because, as you know perhaps, there are no transcripts in France. So I had books on that. I had tapings, etcetera. At the beginning of the trial there were inmates in the room, in the courtroom, with manifestation, etcetera, and the people were very tense and were very against Bickenbach and the other one, but when Dr. Simonen came to testify, the question was, was it something inhuman or not what they did, those people? At the beginning the idea was that it was absolutely inhuman.

Q. Excuse me, Doctor. I don't know what was absolutely inhuman and I don't know what you are talking about these people did.

A. It was experience about gas, phosgene. At the end of 1942 the German learned that in North Africa the American were concentrating big quantity [sic] of gas phosgene which could be employed by bombers. So Dr. Bickenbach decided to make experiences for protecting the people against this gas phosgene. And the first experiment he did, it was on him. And then {2777|2778} he did it on — now, don't take it like that — on volunteers, so-called volunteers. I don't approve of that, you see. And finally, two gypsies died after the experience, but in the hospital, and then Dr. Bickenbach decided to suppress his experiments about, gas phosgene. And to come back to what I said, Dr. Simonen more and more, day after day, was finally explaining that what they did, what he was interested about.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. You told Mr. Christie yesterday, Dr. Faurisson, that the pamphlet, Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", is basically true on three points. You said it is basically true about Anne Frank's Diary, the first point. The second was that there was no genocide, and the third was that there was no gas chambers. And are there points in the pamphlet that are not basically true?

A. For instance, it is completely wrong when he says that the Anne Frank Diary is a fake, because a tribunal in New York decided I don't know what about Mr. Frank, and the man called something like Melvin. I don't know.

Q. On page 21 of Exhibit 1 there is a subheading, "Best-Seller a Hoax", and there is a picture of Anne Frank there. {2779|2780}

A. Meyer Levin is the name.

Q. Meyer Levin, yes. And it indicates, I believe it's been found to be a hoax and an action in the New York Supreme Court, that Meyer Levin wrote significant part of the dialogue. It was the allegation here. That's not true, is it?

A. That's mistake, no.

Q. A mistake. Do you know what that action was about?

A. I think that it was because Mr. Otto Frank asked this man to write a play.

Q. A screen play?

A. A screen play, yes.

Q. And they are arguing about his fee for the screen play.

A. Yes.

Q. And nothing to do with the Diary itself?

A. With the Diary nothing to do, but Richard Harwood was basically quite right, and I can see why.

Q. You have other reasons why you think that Anne Frank's Diary is a hoax.

A. I am not only — I am not alone to think that, since the Forensic statement of investigation, Baden, in 1982, when they studied the paper of the manuscript —

Q. Since that is not in this pamphlet, I am not going to ask you about that.

A. That is a mistake. I make mistakes. I know only Dr. Vrba for not making a mistake and knowing everything. {2780|2781}

Q. Is there anything else in the pamphlet that you say is a mistake or not true?

A. Maybe. Maybe. I don't know. Basically he is right.

Q. Basically it's right. There may be other mistakes.

A. Yes. Surely. There are mistakes in Dr. Hilberg's works, Reitlinger and everybody.

Q. And you are putting Richard Harwood with them, are you?

A. Yes. And myself and Dr. Butz and Dr. — everybody makes mistakes.

Q. You talk about Anne Frank's Diary. Now, the second point at which you said the pamphlet was basically true, you said there was no genocide.

A. I must explain what it means, genocide. We must be careful.

Q. What do you mean when you say no genocide?

A. No planned extermination of a race.

Q. Right.

A. Planned extermination means that you need to have a plan.

Q. All right. Now, are you making a distinction between a plan and an order?

A. Oh, an order like Mr. Hilberg says when he says an order from Hitler. That's the meaning, Yes.

Q. So you're saying that without a written order from Hitler, there would be no genocide. {2781|2782}

A. I wouldn't say that only, because there are many things that make me think that a genocide was impossible, for instance practical things. The German people occupied France during four years. They deported one quarter of the Jews. Deported, I say, not kill. If they had the plan to kill the Jews, I think that they wouldn't have act like that.

Q. What's the policy of putting, deliberate policy of having Jews confined in the early stages of War to ghettos and then later on to concentration camps?

A. What I think about that?

Q. I am just asking you. Was that a policy?

A. A policy?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, he had a policy against the Jews. I say that the Jews were persecuted, that there were ghettos, that there were even slaughters, pogroms, what you find in any war. I don't see any difference between the way the Germans acted in Europe from 1939 to 1945 or any difference with what the French did in what they call their colonies.

Q. All right. Now, was there a deliberate policy of starvation in those ghettos? Was food restricted in getting into the ghettos?

A. I don't have anything which, for me, proves that. I can see that if the Germans had shortage of food, they would think that first their soldiers would have food. Then the civilian German population, then the French, and so on and so on. {2782|2783}

Q. Who's, at the bottom of the line?

A. The bottom I think anybody that Hitler would consider as an enemy — a Russian or a Jew or an American or whatsoever.

Q. So that rations, you would agree with me, would be wholly inadequate in the ghettos, and hundreds of thousands of people starved?

A. And in France also, I can tell you.

Q. Hundreds of people starved in the ghettos?

A. I don't know how many, because once more I need figures. And we have no figures, really.

Q. And for twenty-five years you've been working in this field.

A. No, not in this field. I told you already that there are many fields in which I have not really worked, or I have worked sometimes, I know many things about it, but I prefer to say I do not know.

Q. All right. So in saying that genocide does not exist, is it fair to say you haven't considered the German policies towards the Jews and the ghettos in making that statement?

A. I don't see anything which proves a decision to starve people systematically.

Q. All right. Do you see anything that would indicate that people were worked to death?

A. I don't understand what you mean, worked to death.

Q. Well, I mean worked until they die. {2783|2784}

A. Until they die.

Q. Yes.

A. You mean that they wanted the people to work until they die.

Q. Yes.

A. I think that we must be very careful with the words, because all the politicians, they use big words, and after they are very surprised when you recall them, you said that. They say, "I don't mean that." So I think that during the War Hitler said, "We are going to kill all those people" — all of our enemies, etcetera. We have phrase, words like that. I suppose that, Churchill, Roosevelt, Stalin were saying the same about their enemy. What is an enemy? An enemy is somebody to exterminate. You don't say to your soldiers, "You are going to fight, but don't exterminate."

Q. So this pamphlet talks a great deal — by "this pamphlet" I mean Exhibit 1 — about the policy of the Germans to transport Jews from concentration camps for the sole purpose of utilizing their labour. That's a major theme of this pamphlet.

A. For the labour, yes.

Q. And I am suggesting to you —

A. But not only — I remember, I cannot tell you where, I think I remember that he said that it was also for consideration of security or something like that.

Q. Yes, I agree with you. My question —

A. May I say something about that?

Q. About what? {2784|2785}

A. About this concentration of security?

Q. Well, we are talking right now about labour, and we will come back to security. All right? The question is whether you would agree that it was a policy that they would deliberately starve prisoners in those camps and work them until they die.

A. No, no. I don't see a decision of this kind saying, "You must proceed so and so to make the people die by labour." Maybe they said, make them work and don't bother about anything. That's possible. I don't know.

Q. You've heard from Dr. Vrba; you've heard from Chester Tomaszewski; you've heard from Mr. Ignatz Fulop; you've heard from a number of people, both Christian and Jews, who worked in those camps, who said that people were worked to death.

A. Yes, people were alive told me that.

Q. Pardon?

A. People who were alive told me that.

Q. Yes.

A. So —

Q. So you say because they are alive you can't accept — is that what you are saying, Dr. Faurisson?

A. No. I say it is not systematic. You have survivors.

Q. So you say there is no policy to work people to death. {2785|2786}

A. I don't really understand what means work to death.

Q. It means work until you die, Doctor.

A. I don't see what it could represent exactly.

Q. So you don't know, is that what you are saying?

A. It doesn't mean that I don't know. I don't understand very well the question.

Q. Can you tell us what medications were available to prisoners in the concentration camps and what treatment they received for typhus and typhoid?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Please.

A. We have many, many documents about that, specially, I should say, dozens of article in a Polish medical journal about that published either in the blue anthology of Auschwitz that you have in English, in French, in German or in those notebooks of Auschwitz. You have many, many articles about that, about the hospital in Auschwitz or in Birkenau.

Q. We've heard about hospitals. My question is about medicines available in those hospitals.

A. I think that in those hospitals they had, yes; certainly there was shortage like for everything in Europe.

Q. Now —

A. I have not been calculating how many serum they received and so on. I cannot tell you.

Q. You cannot tell me how many {2786|2787} medicines were in that hospital?

A. Oh, you have to remember I am not a specialist, eh, but I could quote articles from Dr. Fejkiel about that, and a French doctor from Strassburg, his name is Mark Klein, and he published something special about that already in 1945 or 46. I could bring you, I think, the book.

Q. And Dr. Klein and Dr. Fejkiel, were they prisoners in these camps?

A. Yes. Dr. Klein was a Jew and I think Dr. Fejkiel was a Jew also. Many doctors in those camps were Jews. And you have Dr. George Villers.

Q. And prisoners. Jews and prisoners.

A. Yes. And Dr. Villers, that is interesting, because at the same time they say there was extermination and so on, and at the same time they say, "Oh, we perform fantastic things in surgery, in dentistry, and all that, because we Jews, or we prisoners, we did so and so. And it is extraordinary what we did." They say that.

Q. In the testimony of Mr. Henry Leader, who —

A. Excuse me, Mr. ...

Q. Mr. Henry Leader who was the gentleman who was in Maidanek.

A. Oh, Maidanek. Yes.

Q. And he testified as to the treatment — that he received when he had typhus and the whole camp was put in quarantine and left there — no medicine.

A. He said so.

Q. Yes. {2787|2788}

A. Okay. He said so.

Q. And can you tell us what medicines were made available to the prisoners — medicines?

A. You mean what kind of medical products?

Q. Were they given medicines?

A. They were given medicines, yes.

Q. Do you have documents that indicate that?

A. I have documents about that.

Q. What documents?

A. There are the notebooks of Auschwitz. You have plenty of articles about that, about the typhus, about the typhoid fever, about malaria, about noma.

Q. You are talking about diseases. My question is about the treatment of diseases.

A. I don't know about that. I am not a doctor.

Q. So you don't know about that?

A. I don't say that I don't know. I am saying that I read many articles that, "I took care of people in this way and this way." I am going to tell you the story of Mrs. Louise Alcan. She is, if she is alive today, I knew her some years ago, she is leading the association of the former inmates of. Auschwitz. She wrote, she published, after the War, a little book in English. It would mean, "We fought weapon and we fought baggage". And this is what she says. She says, "Those dirty Germans. When I was in Auschwitz I could play bridge, and during this time {2788|2789} they were exterminating my people. I could go and take care of my teeth because you had sanitary installations for that specially, and I did promenades, and there were flowers and all that, and you see, during this time, they were exterminating my people."

The Germans have no chance, you see. Many people said that they have been cured for typhus and all that. I think it's the case of Dr. Vrba. He was in hospital.

Q. You're quite right. And where did he get his medicine from?

A. From the hospital. I don't know where it was coming from.

Q. Well, I'd suggest to you that if you read the book, he got it by bribing another prisoner and not from the hospital.

A. Oh, by bribery.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, he said that, bribery. You could have, for instance, radio — how do you call that? X-ray installation by bribery.

Q. Without bribery you don't get it.

A. And you could have operation performed by Dr. Derring by bribery. Okay. Like the gas chamber in Dachau. If this gas chamber has not been achieved, it is because the inmates boycott.

Q. That's interesting.

A. Yes. On Dachau —

Q. Why do you think that gas chamber is in Dachau?

A. Because we have said that the {2789|2790} Germans kill people in this gas chamber. It is said by official documents.

Q. Well, you have seen the gas chamber. You have seen that it was there while the War was still on. Why did the Germans have that gas chamber?

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend is putting to the witness something he did not say.

THE COURT: Stand up, please. Now say it again.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend is putting to the witness something he did not say in cross examination. He says, "You said you knew that the gas chamber was there during the War." I suggest that to put a question that is not an accurate representation of what the witness has said is rather unfair, especially in this situation.

THE COURT: Thank you. What do you say?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will rephrase the question, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Dr. Faurisson, from your studies of Dachau can you tell us that the gas chamber was there during the War?

A. I say that the Germans are accused of having used, built and [used] a gas chamber in Dachau.

Q. My question is whether they built it. We will leave whether they used it for another time. My question is, did they build it?

A. And when I go to Dachau I see a {2790|2791} room and I don't see anything which could be a gas chamber, because I have studied the question, but even somebody who would not have studied the question have no answer to the question, "Why do you call that a gas chamber?" During eighteen months I corresponded with those people of the Dachau Museum, Miss Barbara Distel [Distel], Miss Jakash, with Dr. Greviss in Brussels, International Committee of Dachau, and I asked them, "Why do you say that this place is a gas chamber not achieved?"

Q. Not

A. Not achieved.

Q. Not used, you mean?

A. No, no, they say, even. They say now never used; because never achieved. So my question was —

THE COURT: I don't understand the last word. I wonder if we can have an explanation.

THE WITNESS: Achieved means finished. Excuse me. They say never used because never finished. So my question is, "What do you need to achieve to finish this place and to call that a gas chamber? What is lacking? And as I suppose that you have never seen a gas chamber in your life, how could you say that this place is a thing not yet finished but that you have never seen in your life?"

Q. What do you think the room was, Doctor — the ventilation system, the showerheads not hooked up to the plumbing?

A. What we see today, yes. When we see the place today. I would be pleased to show my {2791|2792} slides about Dachau and tell you that.

Q. My question is what you think the room was.

A. My answer is, if you see Braus[e]bad, it would have been a shower room.

Q. With a ventilation system?

A. Pardon?

Q. With a ventilation system?

A. I don't know about ventilation system. Now, about this, please, Mr. Griffiths, may I ask you if you know this?

Q. Oh, yes.

A. You know about this because it is you're become against the Richard Harwood pamphlet. You took your arguments from there. I can tell you the question that you are going to ask me. Not all, but most of them. I know the order. Since twenty-five years I know them. Now, in this book, I see page 1 to 2 —

MR. GRIFFITHS: For the record, Your Honour, the book is called, "Six Million Did Die". It's published in South Africa, Johannesburg, 1978.

THE WITNESS: By two people of a Jewish organization. I see a photo with this caption, "Victims of the Dachau Gas Chamber lie piled to the ceiling in the crematorium." But now it is said never used. Nobody was gassed. And it's the same for many camps. And my question, since years and years, what are your proof for Auschwitz? How are they different for Auschwitz? They are the same for Dachau. And they quote even there, I think I remember, I may ask you that. I think that they quote even the official report of the {2792|2793} Americans about this gas chamber. Am I right?

Q. I think they do.

A. Yes. So they say, you see, those American people are serious people. They are not liars. They visit. They made a report, and you see there was a gas chamber, and this gas chamber was used. In this book. So is it spreading false news? I don't know.

Q. My question, Doctor, is what that chamber is, if it's not a gas chamber, and as I understand it, it may be a shower.

A. It would have been a shower. I don't know. When you visit the place, I didn't do any technical study of this place. I asked to the people of Dachau, "Do you have any expert's report saying that it is a gas chamber?"

Q. Yes.

A. I never found them. The same thing in Mauthausen. When I went to Mauthausen I saw a place, quite a little place, called a gas chamber. And if I may say that, excuse me —

Q. No. go ahead.

A. No, but we have not to do any joke, but when you see the place, it is a kind of service gassing. You have the tap inside. So I wrote to those people, I study the question. I said, "Why do you call that a gas chamber? What proof do you have? Because there is no airtightness, nothing."

A book has been written by Pierre Choumoff, "The Gas Chambers of Mauthausen". And I asked, "Is there an expert report?" And I can tell you my visit of Mauthausen, I saw the director, he is a {2793|2794} Spanish, and I told him, "Do you have an expert report saying that this is a gas chamber?" He said, "Yes. You have it, in the gas chamber itself. It's placed on the gas chamber." I said, "I visited it. I didn't see that. Could you show me that?" He told me, "I have something else to do, but at five o'clock." And I waited one hour in the sun in July. We were outside, himself and I, and I waited and I waited. I told him, "Now, sir, it's five o'clock. Could you show me this report which is supposed to be in the gas chamber?" He told me, "It's in Linz. If you go to Hartheim where one million to one million and a half people are supposed to have been gassed — ["]

Q. Is Kurt Gerstein's sister one of those people?

A. Oh, no. Kurt Gerstein has nothing to do with that.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, please. Listen to the question.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: It says here, page 9, "Gerstein's sister was congenitally insane and died by euthenasia." [sic] I thought it was an unusual disease. It is euthenasia. [sic]

A. I thought you were talking about the Gerstein Report.

Q. No. It is in the pamphlet.

A. Or it is Hartheim, go visit the place of Hartheim. I want to see by my eyes. I want to visit and touch. I went to Hartheim and I can tell you what is in Hartheim.

Q. You are a document examiner. You {2794|2795} are a document man. You don't want to rely on survivors or other things. You want to rely on documents.

A. But what do I call a document? I told you even a stone is a document.

Q. Ah, anything but a survivor is a document.

A. Document, I don't know if you know the Latin, it means something that teach you something. So, please, about Hartheim can I say?

Q. No. Thank you. We are still talking about genocide, so there is no evidence about genocide. I must apologize for looking through Exhibit 1 as you were speaking. There is a reference here, if you will pardon me I think I will find it. Page 11. Do you have it there, please?

A. Yes.

Q. Page 11, column 2, and it's under the heading, "Twisted Words and Groundless Assumptions". Perhaps column 1 in the heavy type. It says:

"A review of the documentary situation is important, because it reveals the edifice of guesswork and baseless assumptions upon which the extermination legend is built. The Germans had an extraordinary propensity for recording everything on paper in the most careful detail, yet among the thousands of captured documents of the S.D. and Gestapo, the records of the Reich Security Head Office, the files of Himmler's {2795|2796} headquarters and Hitler's own war directives there is not a single order for the extermination of Jews or anyone else. It will be seen later that this has, in fact, been admitted by the World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation at Tel-Aviv. Attempts to find 'veiled allusions' to genocide in speeches like that of Himmler's to his S.S. Obergruppenführers at Posen in 1943 are likewise quite hopeless. Nuremberg statements extracted after the war, invariably under duress, are examined in the following chapter.

You are familiar with Himmler's speech at Posen?

A. Yes.

Q. In fact, it is quoted at some length in Mr. Butz' book that you gave us. I have it at page 193 and I thought we'd use Mr. Butz' translation — that is Butz' "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", published, Second Edition 1977, by Historical Review Press.

I suggest to you first of all that Posen was a speech that is reported in the International Military Tribunal documents. It covers some sixty-three pages. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And I understand that everybody from a standard knowledge of the time — it was an {2796|2797} interminable speech. It went forever. Have you read that speech?

A. I read the speech in the German text, and — but I have not, myself, heard the discs.

Q. The records.

A. The records, yes.

Q. You went to the Archives but you haven't listened to it.

A. I have listened to part of them. Somebody who told me that they consider that as a suspect document.

Q. Who told you that?

A. Mr. Fritz Berg.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is a man who lives in New York interested in this topic also, working on this topic, and is an engineer.

Q. Fine. Now —

A. So we will listen to that, but I am going to proceed like I proceed with texts and documents, which means that I am going to consider that this text is true. We are going to consider that this text is true.

Q. All right. And this is —

A. So that means that it is true.

Q. This is the translation of Mr. Butz, and tell me if I am reading this right. Page 193:

"I also want to talk to you, quite frankly, on a very grave matter. Among ourselves it should be mentioned quite frankly, and yet we will never speak {2797|2798} of it publicly. Just as we did not hesitate on 30 June 1934 to do the duty we were bidden and stand comrades who had lapsed against the wall and shoot them, so we have never spoken about it and will never speak of it ... I mean the evacuation of the Jews,

the extermination of the Jewish race. Its one of those things that it is easy to talk about. "The Jewish race is being exterminated," says one Party Member, "that's quite clear, it's in our program – elimination of the Jews and we're doing it, extermination is what we're doing." And then they come, eighty million worthy Germans, and each one has his decent Jew. Of course the others are vermin, but this one is an A-1 Jew. Not one of all those who talk this way has watched it, not one of them has gone through it. Most of you must know what it means when a hundred corpses are lying side by side, or five hundred or a thousand. To have stuck it out and at the same time apart from exceptions caused by human weakness – to have remained decent fellows, that is what has made us hard. This is a page of glory in our {2798|2799} history which has never been written and is never to be written, for we know how difficult we should have made it for ourselves, if with the bombing raids, the burdens and the deprivations of war we still had Jews today in every town as secret saboteurs, agitators, and trouble-mongers. We would now probably have reached the 1916 – 1917 stage when the Jews were still in the German national body. We have taken from them what wealth they had. I have issued a strict order, which S.S. Obergruppenführer Pohl has carried out, that this wealth should, as a matter of course, be handed over to the Reich without reserve. We have taken none of it for ourselves. ... We had the moral right, we had the duty to our people to destroy this people which wanted to destroy us. But we have not the right to enrich ourselves with so much as a fur, a watch, a mark, or a cigarette, or anything else. Because we exterminated a germ, we do not want in the end to be infected by the germ and die of it. ... Wherever it may form, we will cauterize it."

A. Yes.

Q. That's Himmler's speech? {2799|2800}

A. Yes. Very well known. Always quoted in all the books.

Q. Do you say it forms some evidence of genocide?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Thank you, Doctor.

A. No, I am going to explain why. I have the right to do so, I suppose.

Q. Explain why.

A. First, when he says, "Most of us must know what it means when one hundred corpses are lying side by side, or five hundred or one thousand", he is speaking to German soldiers, and they know what is War. Okay?

THE COURT: And they know, Doctor ...

THE WITNESS: What is war.

THE COURT: What is war. Yes. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: It means thousands of bodies. Even in the German cities.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You are saying that that doesn't refer to Jewish corpses.

A. I'm sorry?

Q. You are saying that doesn't refer to Jewish corpses.

A. I don't think so. I don't think so. Now, about this, because this is the first thing which was opposed to me and to other than me about that, we must see this entire text of Himmler. We have even more than that. We could have quoted something like:

["The following question has been {2800|2801} posed to us. What do we do with the women and children? I have made up my mind. And there, too, I have found an obvious solution. I do not feel that, in fact, that I have the right to route out the main. Say if you wish to kill them or to have them killed, and to allow their children to grow up to take revenge on our children and our descendants. It is necessary to take the grave decision to make this people disappear from the earth."]

So is it not genocide that?

Q. That's the question.

A. Now, if we stop the quotation here, Himmler look like a famous French General in 1792 who said, "We are going to exterminate all the Royalists". Okay? However, the continuation is curious and gives to understand that Himmler has had a word himself to —

Q. Excuse me, where are you reading from, sir?

A. I am reading my answer to this book that I wrote about that.

Q. I see. I'd rather you told us.

A. It's difficult for me to say it in English, you see. I need the words themselves of Himmler, the words themselves. Excuse me.

Q. You could do the best you can.

A. I am going to try. I am going to {2801|2802} try. He says in fact in this carrying out the policy he was able to avoid from the German officer and soldiers a double danger, that of — I am obliged to quote there, "that of becoming too hardened or becoming heartless and of no longer expecting human life or even of becoming too weak and of losing one's head to the point of having a nervous breakdown."

Two months after he said, I quote Himmler:

["When I was obliged to give in one village the order to march against the partisans, and the Jewish Commissars, I say before — this audience, and my words are exclusively to it, I have in principle given the order to likewise kill the women and the children of the Commissars. I would be a coward and a criminal if I had the hateful children of these subhumans killed in the trial of subhumans and against sub-humans grow up. Believe me that an order is not easy to give or carry out. It is harder to understand and express it in this hall, but we must always be aware of the fact that we found ourselves in a primitive racial struggle, natural and primitive."]

Now, another quotation of Himmler, and we are going to see that Himmler says, talks about the partisan war in Russia. Himmler declare — {2802|2803}

Q. Excuse me. What's the date and the source of this next quotation?

A. It is the Posen discourse two days after, I think.

Q. Two days after what?

A. This might be 4th October, and perhaps it is something like 6th October. We have two Posen speeches.

["I thought that I did not have the right, as regards women and children, to allow children to grow up who would later seek to take revenge and to kill our fathers and our children. I think that would have been cowardly. As a consequence the problem has been resolved without compromise."]

And if we stop there, we have extermination, genocide, etcetera. "We are consequently" — the "consequently" is my word:

["We are presently exporting, it is exceptional in this War, 100,000 Jews from Hungary into the concentration camps. We will later transport them to construction underground factories, but none will be seen by the German people."]

And that's what Himmler called Ausrottung, extirpation.

Q. What is that word?

A. It means extirpation, and can mean also — {2803|2804}

Q. Extermination.

A. It can mean the two, extirpation or extermination, and I think what Himmler said he meant extermination, and it is quite the style of Himmler and of all those people saying, as I told you already, "We are going to exterminate." For instance, "We are going to take those men and women. Some are going to be killed. Some are going to be —"

Q. Worked to death.

A. I don't say worked to death. Put into — no, because if you need the people to work, they must not die, eh? And this is quite the phraseology of Himmler that you find everywhere. "We are going to be without pity. We are going to exterminate." And in fact, the fact is interesting. There is no order, "You exterminate so and so".

Q. No. He is talking about it as a fact here. "This is what we have done and this is what we will continue to do." He is not saying, "Go do it."

A. No. The same thing, what are the facts about that? This is a military — how do you say that — phraseology that you find everywhere?

Q. Exterminate.

A. Yes. We are going to exterminate the enemy.

Q. "Because we exterminated — Ausrottung"

A. Which means extermination.

MR. CHRISTIE: May the witness finish, please, Your Honour? My friend is interrupting the witness. {2804|2805}

THE COURT: Yes. Let him finish, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: The question was, what was Ausrottung.

THE WITNESS: Ausrottung, yes. Extirpate, exterminate. It is difficult if you have no fact to say it is exactly this or that. And Ribbentrop said that in the International Military Tribunal. He said many things about that, about Ausrottung.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: So it could mean either eliminate by moving somebody, or exterminate by destroying them.

A. It could be exterminate. It could be extirpate. It could be – in the German it could be, but none will be seen by the German people, and the problem is finished.

Q. All right.

A. As, for instance, when he did those deportations, he said, you see, things are going very well because we are keeping on deporting the people east.

Q. Well, I am going to suggest to you that in the passage that I read to you, that he was talking about exterminating meaning death, but when he said, "Because we exterminated a germ, we do not [want in the end to be infected by the germ and die, of it", he is not talking about moving the germ; he is talking about killing it, like killing the lice.

A. Yes. If you take the term, if it is a lice, you are not going to say to the lice, "Now, go this place." Sure if it is a lice, but when we have comparison of this kind, it is quite common. And take {2805|2806} the example, once more, of Hans Frank. He said things like that. And in Nuremberg trial he was quoted, "You said, Mr. Frank, we are going to get rid of all the Jews; we are going to exterminate." And Hans Frank said that it was a period of passion, a period of terrible war and all that, and that he was ashamed of the word that he used, because it didn't mean that.

Q. Well —

A. If you take any political man and if you say, "See, you have said those enormous words", he will say, "Yes. After all, I didn't mean so much."

Q. But I am going to suggest to you that what convicted Hans Frank was not his public words but his private diary.

A. No. It was in his private diary that you have those phrases, and he said about those phrases in his diary, "I didn't mean that."

Q. All right. You know Raul Hilberg's book, "The Destruction of the European Jews". I am looking at page 308, and he's got a long quotation here, and there are some words at the bottom of the page and over the next page, 309, said to be from around December of 1941. Have you ever seen any of that before?

A. Oh, yes. Yes. That is precisely what I meant.

Q. All right.

A. It is precisely that.

Q. That is from his diary. Those are his private words to himself.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Let's see what Hans Frank says, {2806|2807} then.

A. No. His diary is not a private diary at all.

Q. It is not now. It was then.

A. There are thirty-three volumes, and Hans Frank used to put in his so-called diary everything that he did, in his speeches, in his trips, in his actions and all that.

Q. So it was like a scrapbook.

A. Eh?

Q. Sorry. That is an English term.

A. Yes, I think I understand.

Q. Scrapbook, where you put newspaper clippings and —

A. Everything.

Q. And was he submitting this for publication?

A. He handed it to the —

Q. To the Allies.

A. Yes.

Q. Did he hand it to the Germans before publication, or was it his private diary?

A. It was a diary. I cannot call that a private diary. It was an official and private diary. Everything was in it.

Q. Everything was in it of a personal nature to him.

A. Things personal and things not personal.

Q. And who had access to that diary in the German Reich? {2807|2808}

A. In the German Reich at the end of the War?

Q. No. Before the end of the War.

A. I don't know. If somebody was Minister of Interior or Governor General of Poland, if he has his diary, I don't know to whom he might hand it. I don't know.

Q. Well, that's my point.

A. I don't think that if he had been asked by somebody superior to him, "Show me what you have written", I don't think that he would have said, "This is my diary. I cannot give it to you."

Q. But you don't know whether he was ever asked that.

A. No, I don't know.

Q. All right. So in the diary that he kept during the War he talks extensively about the extermination of the Jews.

A. No. I don't think extensively. I am going to tell you why, because this diary is something like twelve thousand pages.

Q. Yes.

A. And in the International Military Tribunal took section 269 pages, I think. So I think that if there was something quite specific about the act of exterminating, not speeches, like Himmler and the others, I think that we would have the trace of it.

Q. Well —

A. We have speeches, yes, all kinds of speeches.

Q. I am suggesting to you we do have {2808|2809} a trace of the outcome of those speeches.

A. I don't say the trace of the speeches; of the actions.

Q. I am suggesting to you we have the trace of the actions, too, Doctor.

A. What kind of actions?

Q. Genocidal actions, starvation, gassing people to death, shooting them to death.

A. Gassing?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. There?

Q. When you say "traces of the actions", I am saying to you we do have traces of the actions.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is my friend obliged to prove these statements as I was obliged to? I wonder if the rules are going to be applied to my friend's statement. If he is going to prove gassing, I would be very interested.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Crown has called evidence, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Of Gassing? [sic]

MR. GRIFFITHS: Eye witnesses, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Of gassing, I see.

THE WITNESS: Gassings in the forty-three volumes of Hans Frank?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: No, not of Hans Frank.

A. I thought you said that.

Q. No —

A. I thought — I was not right? {2809|2810}

Q. Maybe I am not right. Like you, I make mistakes.

A. Yes. Sure.

Q. Let's see what Hans Frank says in his diary. Let's continue with this description in Dr. Hilberg's book.

A. Yes. Surely. I am sure that he quotes correctly there:

"The Jews are for us also very parasitical eaters. We have in the Generalgouvernement an estimated 2,500,000 ..."

and Mr. Hilberg says, "a gross over-estimate," and all is over estimate about Frank, I think maybe, together with Mischlinge, and all that hangs on, 3,500,000 Jews." —

Q. What's Mischlinge?

A. Half Jew.

"We can't shoot these 3,500,000 Jews, we can't poison them, but will be able to take some kind of action which will lead to an annihilation success, ..."

Q. "To annihilation success."

A. "To an annihilation success, and I am referring to the measures to be discussed in the Reich. The General gouvernement will have to become just as judenfrei as the Reich”.

Q. Jewish free.

A. Jewish free.

Q. Go ahead. {2810|2811}

A. “Where and how this is going to happen is a task for the agencies which will have to create and establish here, and I am going to tell you how they will work when the time comes.”

Q. All right. And Hans Frank, when he was —

A. I want to have, please ...

Q. All right. And Hans Frank, at Nuremberg, indicated to the Tribunal that he was convicted out of his own diary, not out of his own mouth.

A. Exactly. He said, “I employed words that are a kind of charge against me.”

Q. Yeah.

A. But he explained also that he didn’t mean that at all. And he says, “I am ashamed to have used those words.”

Q. He said —

A. He said, “There are plenty of Christian repentants saying what happened is terrible.” He didn’t know in fact, he thought that what Hoess said was right.

Q. What your source was saying was that Hans Frank didn’t know, in fact, what he was saying?

A. In the IMT. In the IMT when you read all concerning Frank, you will see that all from the beginning to the end, he says, “Hitler” — how do you say that, trompé — “fooled us”.

Q. “Fooled all of us”.

A. Yes. What is trompé?

Q. Fooled us. {2811|2812}

A. Yes. Fooled us. “I was Governor General of Poland, and in my territory those things happened?” And he said that and many others said, “Hitler fooled us.”

Q. Maybe.

A. That is said also by Gilbert in his Nuremberg Diary. So excuse me, we need facts, you see. When people say, “We are going to exterminate — our enemies; we are going to be without pity”, I say this is a kind of speech that you very often, during the War, everywhere, in all the newspapers you see that, but in fact, when you have a fact you have, for instance, Himmler saying, “We are going to exterminate them; we are going to send 100,000 people in factories”, and you say it means that you want them to work to death —

Q. Well, he said, “We are going to send 100,000 people to factories” two days later, but this speech that you and I read from Dr. Butz’ book, the computer scientist, he says that they are going to exterminate them like germs.

A. He said, “We are going to exterminate them like germs.”

Q. Yes.

A. That’s what you call an image to make the people understand. “We are going to be without pity.” But in fact, what happened in fact, in the war against the partisans, I am sure that they were without pity, like the Russians.

Q. Well, also against the group — but you haven’t read the material about the Einsatzgruppen so you can’t tell us about it. {2812|2813}

A. I have read. I told you I have read and I read the Yager [Jäger] report in 1977 with Dr. Butz and I can tell you that it was in Paris in the Centre of Jewish Documentation, but I don’t want to talk about something that I have not really studied. I studied for some months, not for twenty years, like the other questions. I told you that already yesterday.

Q. Yeah, but you — excuse me just a minute.

So you would call, as I understand it, then, would you agree or disagree — I will phrase the question that way — on page 11 of our Exhibit 1 here, where the Posen speech is referred to in the column two here”[.]

“Attempts to find ‘veiled allusions’ to genocide in speeches like that of Himmler’s to his S.S. Obergruppenführers at Posen in 1943 are likewise quite hopeless.”

Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, I agree.

Q. You say that at best we have veiled illusions in that speech.

A. I don’t know if the word “allusions”, if I would use those exact words, but I mean very clearly that’s a warrior’s phraseology.

THE COURT: A warrior’s phraseology.

THE WITNESS: Quite common. You could find that everywhere. Mr. Morgenthau I think might have said the same thing about the Germans.

Q. Mr. Morgenthau? {2813|2814}

A. Mr. Morgenthau, I think. And when Hitler had to give an order, he signed it. He did not hesitate. It has no sense to say that Hitler would have said, “I am not going to sign”, for instance, when he decided what is called the euthenasia [sic] programme.

Q. Euthenasia, [sic] mercy killing.

A. Yes, mercy killing. He signed the order. He gave the date. It was done in October, and he gave the date of 1st September, 1939.

Q. Have you seen the orders for the running and the maintenance of the camps for Sobibor, Treblinka, Chelmno, Belzec?

A. Have I seen what?

Q. Have you seen any documents relating to those camps?

A. Documents?

Q. Yes.

A. About those camps?

Q. Yes.

A. We have nearly nothing. We have not even the plans.

Q. Doesn’t it strike you as odd?

A. What?

Q. Does that strike you as odd?

A. Yes, because when they publish in their books plans of Sobibor or Belzec, for instance the German book that you have, you see that it is done by the memory of an inmate, and you have not even the measurement. And how is it we had Franz Stangl [Stangl], he was interrogated in many weeks in prison, in Dusseldorf by Gitta Sereny-Honeyman, he had been responsible of {2814|2815} Treblinka, Sobibor and so on. You must read into that darkness, and you have absolutely nothing, in fact, about the gassings. And when I said to myself —

Q. I am not asking you about the gassing. I am asking you about any documents about those camps.

A. Oh, I am interested by the question of gas chamber or not.

Q. All right. But have you looked for documents relating to those camps?

A. I have looked in anything, any book we had something about the gas chamber in Sobibor, Belzec and Treblinka. And what we have I can show you. I have a dossier about that.

Q. And in twenty-five years, though, did it ever occur to you to look not for just the gas chamber but for the camps themselves and a document trail indicating the camps themselves? You said Treblinka, you said, I think, was a square mile or square kilometer.

A. No. I quoted Dr. Hilberg.

Q. Ah, I see.

A. The square mile compound. But we don’t have even the measure. So I want to finish what I was saying about Gitta Sereny-Honeyman.

Q. Is it an answer to my question?

A. Yes. And about Treblinka, Sobibor and so on. I said, but how is it that there is, in fact, nothing about the gassings? You say always gassings, gassings, and that you have interrogated Stangl.

Q. This is a conversation you have {2815|2816} with somebody?

A. Yes. I had a conversation with Miss Gitta Sereny, yes.

THE COURT: Who?

THE WITNESS: She is the author of, “Into the Darkness”, a book about Stangl, Sobibor, Treblinka and so on. I had a conversation with her and I said, “How is it that you didn’t ask Frank Stangl about the gas chamber?” And she said, “I didn’t think of asking that.” And you have, in fact, nothing.

Q. Have you looked for the documents showing what they fed the dogs or if there were dogs, or where they ordered the materials for the camps, or the pay sheets for the guards, or who the guards were that were there, or any of that document trail that you told us that the Germans loved to leave?

A. Oh, I have documents stated in some judgment about the people who were judged in Germany for that, yes. They mention things like that, how many people there were and so on.

Q. This is from the documents of eye witnesses, of the guards who were there.

A. It means documents quoted by the German Tribunals themselves. But if it does not interest the question of the gas chamber, it doesn't interest me. I am looking for this weapon of the crime.

Q. Well, you were very interested in aspects of secrecy of the gas chamber at Auschwitz, and in particular saying, "Well, the Germans left records for everything."

A. Mm-hmmm. {2816|2817}

Q. Why wouldn't there be records for gas chambers if they were at Auschwitz? And my question to you really is, there's no records for those four major camps because they never existed.

A. I don't think you can say that, because when Ober Hauser was interrogated in Munich in the sixties, the judge, the prosecutor, they had documents to say that Ober Hauser was in this camp and many others were sued for that.

Q. You had never seen them.

A. I have never seen them, because I see that there is nothing about the question of the gas chamber.

Q. Well, there's nothing about anything is what I am saying, because those camps never existed.

A. No, you cannot say that. Those camps have existed. Even Himmler calls that, at least I think for Treblinka, transit camps.

Q. What is a transit camp?

A. It is a camp where you bring people, for example, from Warsaw and you put them in camps, and then, how do you say that, they take a register, or I don't know what, and then they are sent to, I told you, fifty-five places in Poland instead of one thousand, instead of being disseminating in one thousand places; they are sent to fifty-five places.

Now, don't ask me if they went by foot or in whatsoever. I don't know.

Q. No. I asked you what a transit camp is, and as I understand it, it is just a temporary {2817|2818} holding facility.

A. Yes. Like Birkenau was more or less. It was more or less a transit camp, Birkenau, because after Birkenau many people were sent in one of the thirty-three, thirty-eight sub camps. In Mauthausen it was also you had a kind of a part that you could call transit camp. People were sent into forty-seven, I think – or Maidanek, perhaps – forty-seven places, because when we say Auschwitz or Mauthausen, we must realize that it is quite a complex. You have the camp itself, and sometimes you have a kind of a camp two hundred kilometers further.

Q. Okay.

A. In Warsaw itself you had a place depending from Maidanek Lublin.

Q. So your answer is, a transit camp —

A. A transit camp like others, yes. People are transitting. [sic]

Q. You quoted us Eichmann yesterday.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with this book, "Eichmann Interrogation"?

A. I have it in German.

Q. Unfortunately I only have it here in English. Does that pose a problem?

A. Perhaps not, no.

Q. Well, if it does, then I will do something about that. Published by Ferrar, Strauss and Geroux, 1983, First Edition, and that is edited by Jochen von Lang.

A. I have it in German because I know {2818|2819} your questions.

Q. Good. Things will go a lot easier.

MR. CHRISTIE: What was that? I didn't hear.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He said he knows my questions. I said, "Good".

Q. On page 77 – I will come back to it. Just so the jury understands, can you explain what this is, this book?

A. Yes, I can explain you that the interrogator [sic] of Eichmann was a man called Avner Less in Israel. He was Captain, and he interrogated Eichmann during 270 hours.

Q. Mm-hmmm

A. Over a number of days and weeks.

Q. Yes.

A. And the result is something like 3,564 pages, I think. And then you have this, those excerpts presented by the accuser himself.

Q. By the accuser. Who is that?

A. Avner Less.

Q. Do I understand from what you are saying that that is not a fair representation of that interrogation?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You haven't read the whole —

A. Oh, yes. I have read the whole, but don't know if it is German or not. When you have three thousand five hundred and how many pages, if you give this, I don't know how the choice has been made. {2819|2820} Same for Hans Frank, thirty-three volumes and you have 269 pages.

Q. Well, I will refer to the trial transcript, then, rather than to that book.

A. 3,564 pages.

Q. Now, let's go back to our Exhibit 1. Do you still have it there, Doctor, the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. On page 11 in the pamphlet, column 2, it says, "Legal Principles Ignored". It says, the second sentence under "Legal Principles Ignored":

"The accusers acted as prosecutors, judges and executioners; 'guilt' was assumed from the outset."

Dr. Faurisson, there were twenty-one, I believe, accused – twenty-one or twenty-two, at the International Military Tribunal?

A. It depends if you count Bormann, if you count —

Q. Bormann was not there, but was tried in absentia.

A. In absence, yes, etcetera.

Q. So of those people were they all convicted?

A. Three of them were —

Q. ... acquitted.

A. — acquitted.

Q. Were they all sentenced to death, those that were convicted?

A. No. I believe twelve were sentenced {2820|2821} to death.

Q. Will you agree with me, then, that it is not fair to say that guilt was assumed from the outset?

A. This phrase is so general that I don't understand what he means if I have only this. Now, if you ask me if I consider this trial as fair, I can answer you. Is that the question?

Q. No. My question was whether guilt was assumed from the outset when people were acquitted?

A. I can see that three of them have been acquitted and they have been taken by the German and condemned by the Germans.

Q. Page 12, column 2 —

A. Excuse me, Mr. Griffiths. Why don't you read the words which are just after? There is an explanation very interesting about that.

THE COURT: Doctor, listen to me for a moment.

THE WITNESS: Oh, yes. I don't have a right to ask questions.

THE COURT: You don't, but apart from that you have a capable lawyer. When Crown counsel is finished asking the questions he wants to ask you, you can rest assured that Mr. Christie will ask you any questions that he wants to ask you. Does that clear matters up for you so you won't be hard done by?

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 12, column 2, "Confessions Under Torture", the first sentence there {2821|2822} on that column is:

"Altogether more disturbing, however, were the methods employed to extract statements and 'confessions' at Nuremberg, particularly those from S.S. officers which were used to support the extermination charge."

Now, you are a text and document examiner, Dr. Faurisson. Would you agree with me that one would expect, after that sentence, to hear about tortures involving Nuremberg trials and extermination charges?

A. "Which were used to support the ..." – "Altogether more disturbing, however, were the methods employed to extract statements and 'confessions' at Nuremberg, particularly those from S.S. officers which were used to support the extermination charge."

Yes, you would have something, for instance about Ohlendorf, something like that, perhaps.

Q. Now, would you agree with me that what follows, then, is a description of Malmedy Trials which have nothing to do with extermination or Nuremberg?

A. Yes. But you have Ohlendorf just after.

Q. Just after. I suggest to you the trials at Dachau in the same column, "Confessions Under Torture" had nothing to do with extermination charges or with Nuremberg.

A. You mean that Ohlendorf had nothing to do with extermination?

Q. Where is Ohlendorf? {2822|2823}

Q. Well, I am still on page 12, Doctor, under the heading, "Confessions Under Torture". First, the Malmedy Trial, nothing to do with extermination. Next, Dachau Trial, same column.

A. Yes.

Q. And I'd suggest to you that has nothing to do with extermination or Nuremberg, the Dachau trial.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Is that a Nuremberg trial?

A. In the trials you had the Oswald Pohl case, for instance. He was the responsible of the concentration camps.

Q. Is Oswald Pohl involved in the case that's set out here?

A. What, excuse me?

Q. There is an allegation here of brutality in Judge van Roden's investigation with the Simpson Army Commission. That didn't involve Oswald Pohl or Ohlendorf.

A. No.

Q. It didn't involve charges connected to extermination charges, annihilation charges.

A. No, because they were accused of having tortured American prisoners.

Q. All right. Thank you. That is my point. Would you agree with me, then, that that's misleading to start off that paragraph —

A. Yes, I would say it's misleading for a moment, and then, after, we see that when he talks {2823|2824} about this Malmedy Trial and the story of those, "All but two of the Germans, in the 139 cases we investigated, had been kicked in the testicles beyond repair. This was standard operating procedure with our American investigators", yes, it says that. But then he goes on saying the American people who are able to torture as everybody, and then he says that other people were tortured. But I, yes, if you take word for word, it is not about an extermination programme. Sure.

Q. Sure. Okay.

A. But it is not really misleading because I am waiting, when I read something like that, I am waiting for tortures concerning people accused of extermination. And I found them after. And I don't know if what he says after is true or not. I don't know. I have not studied this question of torture.

Q. All right. Now, on page 14 under the heading, "Action Group Executions Distorted", it is in column one, the first sentence there, or the first two sentences are:

"The Soviet charge that the Action Groups had wantonly exterminated a million Jews during their operations has been shown subsequently to be a massive falsification. In fact, there had never been the slightest statistical basis for the figures."

Now, you know that is false don't you, Doctor?

A. Do I know that is false?

Q. Yes. {2824|2825}

A. No. The question, you have the book of —

Q. Krausner [Krausnik]?

A. No. The book of Dr. Butz. See about that, about page 200, you will see things about the executions, about the Einsatzgruppen.

Q. You told me yesterday that although this wasn't an area of your expertise, you have seen the daily reports of the Einsatzgruppen, you have seen the documents, the daily reports of killings each day, you have seen the Kohrerr [Korherr] report, statistics coming out of the East.

A. I have not studied this question.

Q. But you know there is a statistical basis for those facts.

A. I know there are documents and I know that many of them are not even signed. That's what I know. And if you want any reference about that, see Dr. Butz, about page 200.

Q. I think you have my copy. Now, page 21, we dealt with Anne Frank — sorry, page 26, Chapter 9. The Red Cross. Do you have any comment on what the author here, Harwood, does with the Red Cross report?

A. You mean page ...

Q. Pages 26 and 27, Dr. Faurisson, Chapter 9.

A. Yes, I see. Yes, I see.

Q. Do you have any comment with the way in which —

A. Yes. {2825|2826}

Q. — the report is used by Harwood here?

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Do 'you agree with me that —

A. Page 9?

Q. Pages 26 and 27. That he takes quotations out of context, that he chops them off, thereby distorts the meaning of the quotation?

A. No, I would not agree.

Q. You do not agree with that?

A. No, I do not agree. I said, I think I said something about those reports of the Red Cross. I said that Richard Harwood claimed that never the Red Cross books talked about extermination. And I said that is not true. He should have said, during the War. He needed three words, "During the War no Red Cross report said anything about extermination or about gas chamber."

Q. Well, that's like saying, instead of no evidence, he should have said evidence. It changes the meaning totally, doesn't it?

MR. CHRISTIE: This is a matter of opinion. Unless the witness is being examined on what the meaning of the words is, and my friend's opinion is valid, think that is for the jury to decide.

THE COURT: You can proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Would you agree with me? Adding the three words, "During the War" totally distorts the meaning of all of the rest — {2826|2827}

A. I agreed he didn't say that. He should have said, "During the War".

Q. And by saying that, it is false.

A. Because the report the Red Cross brought after the War, the Red Cross tried to say, yes, extermination existed, as everybody. The Pope himself did nothing about that. He never said extermination or —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, who was that?

THE WITNESS: The Pope. Even when Rome was liberated from the German people, and I may suggest, I may suggest that if the Pope never attacked about extermination and gas chambers, it is because he was very well informed about what was going on in Poland, where you have so many Catholics and priests. And he knew that about Treblinka, Sobibor and Belzec, especially. You had all kinds of rumours. We have a book about that.

Q. So you tell me the Pope knew about Treblinka, Belzec, Sobibor?

A. I think that he knew perfectly well what was going everywhere in Poland.

Q. Do you have correspondence, documents that you've seen?

A. I have seen acts and documents of the Holy See. There are nine volumes, I think.

Q. And is the correspondence in there? Are people writing to the Pope about Belzec, Treblinka, Sobibor?

A. No. But I say that the Pope never said that in the acts and documents of the Holy See. {2827|2828} We have nothing about extermination or gas chamber. But please, let me tell you something about Belzec, Treblinka and Sobibor, because I see, that this is important.

THE COURT: Has this got something to do with —

THE WITNESS: Yes, with information.

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor. You haven't heard the question yet, Doctor.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Does it have to do with the Red Cross?

A. Yes, but I wish to go back to that, if possible, because the people around Treblinka and around —

Q. Doctor, I am talking about the Red Cross, pages 26 and 27 of this pamphlet. Okay? Is that the only mistake that you can find in here, and the only misuse of a quotation that you can find on pages 26 and 27?

A. Oh, I see what you mean. "Again the Report makes nonsense of this allegation. 'Not only' in quotation — excuse me. "Incidentally, it is frequently claimed that mass executions were carried out in gas chambers cunningly disguised as shower facilities. Again the Report makes nonsense of this allegation."

Quote of the Red Cross:

"Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates. They had often to take action to have fixtures made less primitive, and to get {2828|2829} them repaired or enlarged".

If I remember, there is a mistake in the reference. It's not volume 3, it's Volume 1. No?

Q. Yes. Is there anything else other than a mistake in the reference you want to say about that?

A. I would need the context to see what it is. I need the volume himself.

THE COURT: We will do that in twenty minutes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— The jury retires. 11:15 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 11:50 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. We were, just before the break, discussing the Red Cross report, and particularly on page 27 the quotation about baths and showers being inspected by the International Committee of the Red Cross and found {2829|2830} inadequate. And your comment, I believe, was — and correct me if I am wrong — that the page reference was incorrect, but other than that that was a fair representation.

A. Yes.

Q. Volume 1 rather than Volume 3, page. 594, you look at that.

A. Yes. We have that.

Q. And the quotation is there that is in the booklet, is that right?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And the chapter that that is on, and I want you to check and make sure because the pages stick together sometimes.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. What is the chapter called?

A. "Civilian Internees". "Application in principle to civilian internees of the 1929 Convention relative to the treatment of Prisoners of War".

Q. And do you know how the Red Cross Report you have there defines "civilian internees" and whether or not that includes Jews? I suggest to you it doesn't.

A. It doesn't include Jews.

Q. No. So that couldn't possibly refer to Jews, Jewish camps or shower facilities.

A. In this place, no.

Q. No.

A. But ...

Q. So that's false. {2830|2831}

A. I don't think it's false.

Q. Not false.

A. I don't think.

Q. Well, why don't you think it's false?

A. Okay. So we found, I repeat:

"Incidentally, it is frequently claimed that mass executions were carried out in gas chambers cunningly disguised as shower facilities. Again the Report makes nonsense of this allegation."

Then comes a quotation:

"Not only the washing places, but installations for baths, showers and laundry were inspected by the delegates. They had often to take action to have fixtures made less primitive and to get them repaired or enlarged."

And we found this quotation in Volume 1, page 594.

Q. In a chapter dealing with civilian internees and Jews who were not civilian internees.

A. So they say that when the people of the Red Cross went into those camps, they used to inspect washing places, installation for baths, showers and laundry. The delegates, when they are described, but those delegates, we know that they had the right in, I think, in 1943, in 1944 and in 19 — especially in, perhaps, February, March, April 1945, those delegates had the right to go into the concentration camps, or some of them, at least. So I suppose — {2831|2832}

Q. We've heard that from the report.

MR. CHRISTIE: Please let the witness finish his answer. I would object to my friend stopping that.

THE WITNESS: So I suppose that the delegates did the same routine job.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And that is your answer as a text and document examiner that you would take this text to civilian detainees, which is just dealing with civilian internees, which are not Jews, as a text and document examiner you take that leap.

A. No. I say if it is a routine, shown as a routine of the Red Cross, I think they did the same thing when they visited the concentration camps but it is true that it is said in a chapter about civilian internees. I don't think that they suddenly don't do their routine work.

Q. For civilian internees. My suggestion to you is that that quotation is misleading, is out of context, and is totally false in the way it is used in the Harwood booklet.

A. Why is it totally false?

Q. Because it doesn't apply to camps where the extermination process was carried on.

A. But I don't know if there were camps where extermination process existed.

Q. What's the lead-in sentence again, just before the quotation?

A. "Incidentally, it is frequently claimed that mass executions were carried out in gas chambers cunningly {2832|2833} disguised as shower facilities." Yes, it is claimed.

Q. Go ahead.

A. Okay.

"Again the Report makes nonsense of this allegation."

Q. Was it claimed anywhere that mass gassings went on with civilian internees?

A. No. No. Certainly not.

Q. Is that out of context, yes or no?

A. That's not out of context, because if you have this routine of the Red Cross, this routine was used also when they had — I suppose —

Q. You suppose.

A. When they had the right to go into the concentration camps.

Q. Do you think that is a little biased of you to take that point of view without any documentation to back it up?

A. I know that they had the right to visit those concentration camps.

Q. In March or April of 1945.

THE COURT: One at a time. Go ahead, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: And I don't think, suddenly, because it was a concentration camp and not extermination camp, as I say, I don't think that they had no right to go and see the showers, suddenly. Why? It was a routine for the Red Cross.

Q. But this section did not deal, that quotation you read and it's in this book, does not deal {2833|2834} with Jewish camps.

A. It's about civilian internees camps.

Q. And that's not Jews.

A. That's not Jews. And then, after, you have the camps where Jews were put, and it is said that they visited those camps.

Q. Does it say anything about the shower facilities in those camps? Does it say that they had access to all camps?

A. No, certainly not. But see, see the text. They have the right to go into those camps. They went twice in Theresienstadt because there was a rumour about what was going in Theresienstadt. There were stories of, like we see about Belsen and in regard Sobibor. So the Germans decided, the German said, "Come and visit." If, during the War, the story of Theresienstadt, of the atrocities of Theresienstadt was known, Belzec, Sobibor, Treblinka, at that time, you had few things in the newspaper, you had, but absolutely contradictory.

So the Germans said, "Oh, we are accused for Theresienstadt. The Red Cross must come."

Q. That was their model.

A. In September '44.

Q. That was their show camp, was it, their model camp, Theresienstadt?

A. Is Auschwitz a show camp?

Q. I don't know. Is it?

A. I don't think.

Q. And you visited Birkenau?

A. Oh, I visited Auschwitz, and {2834|2835} Auschwitz I don't know whether it comprise or not Birkenau, but the same in Auschwitz you are supposed to have a gas chamber.

Q. You read us a portion put to you by Mr. Christie of the Red Cross Report where a Red Cross representative was visiting one of the satellite camps, I would suggest to you, of Auschwitz. That was fifty kilometers from Birkenau and involved prisoners of war. What do you say to that?

A. No, that is a mistake. Excuse me, Mr. Griffiths. If so people from Te[s]chen, fifty kilometers south of Auschwitz, those people talk about rumours, about Auschwitz, and he visited Auschwitz and the detainees didn't say anything about that by themselves. The detainees themselves didn't talk about that. He even charged the man, it was a British. He told him, "Try to make an inquiry about that."

Q. We will come back to that. Mr. Christie is just looking for the report.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am looking for the Red Cross Report where the September '44 visit is reported. Do you have it with you?

THE WITNESS: No, I have not this report today.

THE COURT: It will be found, gentlemen. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

THE WITNESS: The report was —

THE COURT: All right, Doctor. Next question.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You don't like it when [sic] they cut reports, do you? {2835|2836}

A. If it change the sense of the text, no.

Q. No. All right. Well, we are still on pages 26 and 27, and particularly on page 27, the paragraph above the heading, "Red Cross Recipients were Jews". So, that's the paragraph, page 27, column one, that starts: "The Report admits that the Germans were at first reluctant to permit supervision by the Red Cross of people detained on grounds relating to security, but by the latter part of 1942, the ICRC obtained important concessions from Germany. They were permitted to distribute food parcels to major concentration camps in Germany from August 1942 ..."

And if we can pause there for a moment, the Report indicated that was two camps they were permitted to send them to, neither one of which were Jewish camps.

A. I don't remember that.

Q. And the sentence goes on:

"... and 'from February 1943 onwards this concession was extended to all other camps and prisons'."

What do you take that meaning to mean, "extended to all other camps and prisons"?

A. It would mean that the same thing was done in the other camps and prisons.

Q. Would you think that was taken out of context if the words at the end of the sentence were {2836|2837} "in Germany"?

A. Well, I don't know. I don't have the text.

Q. I'll get you the text.

A. Volume 3.

Q. Yes. Page 78.

A. I believe we are just in the middle paragraph. Sorry, it's up here. So must I read?

Q. No. Just read it to yourself. You said you wanted to compare the text. My question is, doesn't that chop off an essential piece of information and, thereby, mislead and distort the meaning?

A. You mean the extension?

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I ask for clarification for myself so that I might understand the question? Does he mean chopping off of the words "in Germany"?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The words "in Germany".

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, the words are in the text preceding it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, "camps in Germany".

THE COURT: Mr. Christie —

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. I don't mean to interrupt, but I suggest that if my friend suggests the text chops off the words "in Germany", he is making an erroneous supposition.

THE COURT: Until the question is answered, if you want to object, but not now.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: I don't understand if {2837|2838} it is in Germany or not in Germany.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: The sentence, says, "They were permitted to distribute" — listen for just a minute, Doctor, and [ ] then we will go into the source.

The sentence, I suggest, says:

"They were permitted to distribute food parcels to major concentration camps in Germany from August 1942, and 'from February 1943 onwards this concession was extended to all other camps and prisons'."

A. Yes. And the text says, "other camps and prisons in Germany".

Q. "In Germany". Doesn't it make it nonsense to say in the first half of the sentence, to say it was extended to major concentration camps in Germany and the second sentence, all other camps in Germany?

A. That's not correct, yes. I agree with you.

Q. Don't you agree with me that it is misleading? Doesn't it mean that all other camps are included there, and it does not —

A. Yes. And he meant by this, Germany and elsewhere. And there you have only in Germany.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. So that's pretty misleading.

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Christie, is {2838|2839} there anything you want to add?

MR. CHRISTIE: I wanted to add and suggest that my friend is misleading when he interpreted the first part of the sentence to mean that they were permitted to distribute food parcels to all concentration camps in Germany, and then implying, in his submission to the witness, that it includes all concentration camps again, beyond Germany.

It is my submission that it is misleading to suggest that "major concentration camps" constitutes all concentration camps in Germany. In fact, I suggest my friend is putting to the witness a meaning that, although the witness has accepted it, I object to it because it's not contextual. That's my objection.

THE COURT: The objection is not well-founded. It is a question to be put to the jury at the proper time.

Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. You had your hand up, Dr. Faurisson. Do you have a further comment to make?

A. No, no. I am on the text.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. No, I have nothing to ask. I am waiting a question.

Q. Okay. Thank you. Under the heading, "No Evidence of Genocide" in the Exhibit 1 pamphlet – we will come back to the text if we need to.

A. Yes. {2839|2840}

Q. Would you agree with me that in that heavy-typed paragraph immediately underneath, “No Evidence of Genocide”, that the deletions are misleading and leave out important information to the understanding of what Kaltenbrunner and the German Government did?

A. You mean that I must read the first paragraph of “No Evidence of Genocide”?

Q. I will read it if that will help, and then we will get to the text.

A. You'll read it?

Q. Sure.

THE COURT: Page number, please.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 27, Your Honour, column two, top of the column.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: “One of the most important aspects of the Red Cross Report is that it clarifies the true cause of those deaths that undoubtedly occurred in the camps towards the end of the war. Says the Report: ‘In the chaotic condition of Germany after the invasion during the final months of the war, the camps received no food supplies at all and starvation claimed an increasing number of victims. Itself alarmed by this situation, the German Government at last informed the ICRC on February 1st, 1945 ... In March 1945, discussions between the President of {2840|2841} the ICRC, and General of the S.S. Kaltenbrunner gave even more decisive results. Relief could henceforth be distributed by the ICRC, and one delegate was authorised to stay in each camp...”

I am going to suggest to you, Doctor, that what was left out after the date February 1st, 1945, was that the German Government was responding, not initiating, but responding to a request of the International Committee of the Red Cross that was made in October of 1944.

A. Maybe, yes.

Q. Okay. And if that is, in fact, the case, would you agree with me that that's misleading?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Okay. And that —

A. Could you show me —

Q. Yes, I would. I am just trying to get the reference here.

A. Volume 3, page 83.

Q. Volume 3, page 83.

A. Yes, sir. I don't see where is the cutting, please.

Q. You are reading:

“Itself alarmed by this situation, the German Government ...”

— this is from the text, page 83 —

“... at last informed the ICRC on February 1st, 1945 ...”

Then comes the phrase that is not {2841|2842} included in the pamphlet:

“... in reply to a request of October 2nd, 1944, that individual and collective relief parcels can be despatched to French and Belgian detainees.”

A. Yes.

Q. Without that qualifying phrase, doesn't that significantly alter the meaning of that?

A. He says that the German Government accepted the principle of visits. He says that it was decided on February 1945. He does not go into details, saying in reply to a request of October 2, 1944, that relief parcels can be despatched to French and Belgian detainees.

Q. And I suggest to you that without that phrase, it is the German Government that initiated this request and not the International Committee of the Red Cross.

A. Oh, I see. Yes. In reply to a request.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. But you have that. The German Government has been alarmed, and detail, why has he been alarmed, because he knew the situation. And also he received the request, so would you say that it is not an initiative of the German Government? I wouldn't say that. The German Government, I think — so what everybody was able to see at that time, catastrophic condition in Germany, and he said to the Red Cross, “Okay. Call him.” {2842|2843}

Q. Okay. Four months after the Red Cross had made the offer.

A. Yes. Yes. In October. But we must understand that the German didn't want foreign people to be into those camps. I think I told you why. For reason of secret that you have everywhere. Even today, in Poland, tried to visit the Auschwitz factories, today in Poland, they don't want the people, the foreigners, to go into those camps where people are I working on synthetic rubber, on armament, on everything. They don't want those people to get in. But at the I end —

Q. Well, with mass murder, especially, they don't want them to get in.

A. Oh, I agree with you that if there were gas murder as you say ...

Q. Mass murder.

A. Mass murder, yes, it would be a reason, but that's a speculation, you see. I understand very well that the German Government was overwhelmed by that. I suppose that in October 2, 1944, so they received that some days after. And then they took a decision. Perhaps at that time they thought, “We are going to wait to see if it is possible to make the situation better”. And finally, it was the catastrophe. So they said to the Red Cross, “Come.” At one condition, which is very important. The man of the Red Cross had to stay into the concentration camp and until the end of the War so that he cannot give any information outside.

Q. Is that very important condition contained in the pamphlet, Exhibit 1? {2843|2844}

A. Oh, no.

Q. I am suggesting your word, suppressed.

A. What?

Q. Suppressed. It's your word, Doctor.

A. I don't understand. What I am saying about the necessity of suppression?

Q. Where does it say, on page 27, column one, that it says:

“In March 1945, discussions between the President of the ICRC and General of the S.S. Kaltenbrunner gave even more decisive results. Relief could henceforth be distributed by the ICRC and one delegate was authorised to stay in each camp ...”

Where does it say in the Harwood booklet that the delegate could not be released until the end of the War?

A. It is not said.

Q. And do you agree that by chopping that out, it gives a distorted meaning?

A. I don't know. It says he was authorized to stay in the camp. I don't know what the words are after.

THE COURT: That is volume ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Volume 3, Your Honour, page 83.

THE WITNESS: On condition that he undertook not to leave it before the end of the War. {2844|2845} For the first time there was the concentration camps were open to the Committee. If I had to quote myself, I agree with you that I would not cut this, that it is for a, how do you say that, something dishonest; but when I quote, I try to give entire phrases, even if a part of the phrase is really not important. I try to do it. The most of the time I do that because I'm always afraid that somebody comes and say, “Oh, you have been cutting the text”.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: That's right. And that's not good.

A. And that's not good.

Q. You can give a false impression of a meaning.

A. Yes. And Mr. Reitlinger says that later of Goering, of the 17th of July, 1941, means that the decision has been taken to exterminate the Jews. Mr. Reitlinger, in this short letter, cuts all the beginning. He puts three periods, and he cuts everything which says few words that it is not the policy of emigration and expulsion. So if you have not those two words, it's very grave, because the letter of Goering means those two words.

Q. All right. On page 4 of Exhibit No. 1 there is an introductory section to the material, again with the name Richard Harwood at the end of that introduction. And he indicates that, he concludes that the extermination — the policy of extermination is utterly unfounded, that the conclusion is unpopular. He says:

"A great deal of careful research into {2845|2846} this question, however, has now convinced me beyond any doubt that the allegation is not merely an exaggeration but an invention of postwar propaganda."

First paragraph, last [last] sentence.

A. In the following chapters?

Q. Column one, page 4. Have you got that?

A. Yes. "In the following chapters".

Q. That's right. And I have paraphrased those first couple of sentences. And do you think that's out of context?

A. No. No.

Q. All right. It's the last sentence there. It says:

"A great deal of careful research into this question, however, has now convinced me beyond any doubt that the allegation ..."

and he is referring to the policy of extermination,

"... is not merely an exaggeration but an invention of postwar propaganda."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you say to that, Doctor?

A. Oh, I don't agree at all, because it was an invention during the War.

Q. Okay.

A. It was an invention of the War propaganda. We have a book about that. We have the book {2846|2847} of Walter Laqueur. All those things had been concocted during the War, during First World War. You had a fantastic propaganda about the Germans killing the babies, crucifying the Canadian aviators.

MR. CHRISTIE: Soldiers.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Pilots.

A. Yes. Canadian pilots crucified, and many things like that, during First World War. But when World War II begun, and even before, we had the same lies coming back. And during all the War we had fantastic rumours of all sorts, and they are studied there, and —

Q. The rumours during World War I were all dispelled almost immediately after World War I, weren't they?

A. Quite right. And the difference is that since 1945 this propaganda, this War propaganda is persisting. That's interesting.

Q. It is interesting.

A. How is it that this propaganda ceased, more or less, in 1923, '24? I think I have not checked that that even the British Government presented excuses to the Republic. I am not sure of that. I have not checked.

Q. I am not giving evidence, but I will not disagree with you.

A. You see, we can collaborate. And during World War II you have the same thing, but with much more modern responsibilities, with radio and all that. And all this is studied by Walter Laqueur, who is professor in George Washington University, who wrote {2847|2848} a book called, "The Terrible Secret". The thesis of his book is that —

Q. "The Terrible Secret", does that deal with World War I propaganda, or World War II propaganda?

A. No. World War II. And this man believes absolutely in gas chambers steam chambers, quick lime, electricity, everything. He believes in that. And he said, "How is it that the people did not react, did not believe?" You quoted, remember, the three pillars, the first one Dr. Vrba, page 19, when John Pehle, Director of War Refugee Board, wanted to publish the Auschwitz Report of the two escaped prisoners in 1944, Albert Davis, head of the Office of War Information, protested publishing these reports would be counter-productive. The American public would not believe them, considering them First World War style atrocity stories. And there are exact — I have I studied the rumours of the First World War, and the rumours of the Second World War, they are identical. It means no real imagination. Very simple thing that you can put in the brain of the soldier of the civilians.

Q. It is curious, isn't it, that the World War I propaganda was gone several years and there were public apologies made, and this what you have, called a fantasy or a fiction has gone on for forty years and nobody has apologized for it except West Germany who spent money—

A. It cannot apologize because West Germany wants to be guilty. They are there doing that. {2848|2849} They say, "We send money but that's not enough. We are going to send much more money." That is a political problem. It is a psychological problem. How is it that six million, six million is repeated? How is it that in the Toronto Star they still say four million Jews were killed in Auschwitz? Although since a very long time, no historian claimed that.

Q. So the West German —

A. No. please. How about, in Treblinka, we have a phenomenon of rumour which is interesting, Sobibor and Treblinka? We see page 133, the name of this man is Zukerman, one of the leaders of the-Zionist socialist underground, wrote in 1945 that the Jewish underground press had carried extensive reports about the mass murders?

Now, quotation by Laqueur of Zukerman, but Warsaw did not believe. Simple common sense refused to accept the possibility of mass destruction of tens and hundreds of thousands of Jews. The press was decried for panic mongering even though the descriptions of deportation action were strictly true. The destruction of deportation were strictly true, not the others, perhaps. The Jews about the German crimes was received with incredulity and mistrust.

Q. Because of the First World War.

A. Not only abroad. Even here in the immediate neighbourhood of Punary and Chelmno, Belzec and Treblinka. These reports found no credence.

Q. So people were very careful during World War II?

A. What? {2849|2850}

Q. So people were very careful during World War II about these stories.

A. Some people.

Q. And then after World War II the stories were confirmed, weren't they, by the —

A. I didn't understand the end of your phrase.

Q. The stories were confirmed after world War II.

A. Confirmed what? I don't find one confirmation. And for this rumour you have exactly what is current in the phenomenon of rumour. The rumour does not come from a space which is closed, but comes from the exterior. For instance, from far away. For instance, Struthoff camp was fifty-five kilometers from Strassburg. People who were — French people who were working there in Struthoff, in front of the so-called gas chamber, never knew about the existence of a gas chamber to kill people, but in Strassburg they heard, "Oh, you are coming from Struthoff. There is a gas chamber. A gas chamber."

Q. A lot of people from Auschwitz who were right there who said there was a gas chamber in Auschwitz, not far away but right there.

A. Yes. And you could have also people inside. And you have people like Benedict Kotsky who never heard about that. And you have other people. I could give you a letter of an Israelean who has been for three years in Auschwitz and Buchenwald. And she says it was in 1979; I could found the quotation. It has been published in a German teacher publication with {2850|2851} the address of this woman in Israel. She says, "I've been there. I am there in Germany in 1979. I see that there are discussions about the gas chamber. I must confess that myself I have never heard of that, and that it is a problem and that we should discuss freely about it."

Now, about the rumours, please, and the competition, because you must see that for the journalists, I understand very well that, you have a competition of atrocity, even in what is called Israel now. So this, the news about the massacres

Q. Doctor, Doctor, I am asking the questions. Okay? You are giving the answers. I will appreciate it if you answer the questions that I ask. All right?

A. Yes. Okay.

Q. Thank you. I'd like to ask you about Auschwitz. What, do you say, is the capacity of the four crematoria at Birkenau?

A. Oh, I would be quite ready to answer your question with the plans and the photos, and I could give you that.

Q. Well, you have given us a great deal of information without direct reference to documents. Obviously, you have an answer to that from your studies, from your reading.

A. When I said no documents about Treblinka and Sobibor, I said there were no documents used by the tribunals.

THE COURT: Doctor, would you please let counsel ask the question and we will go from there. {2851|2852}

Go ahead, ask the question again.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. What do you say is the capacity for cremating of the four crematoria at Auschwitz?

A. It seems I have no competence to answer your question.

THE COURT: Doctor, I have made the ruling. I do not intend to change it. The jury and all of us have heard you complaining about my ruling indirectly. Now, please answer the question.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: This is about the crematoria, not the gas chambers.

A. You had, in Birkenau, five ovens, each one with three openings. That is fifteen. Krema II, same thing, fifteen. Then Krema IV and V, but I don't know if they were used for cremation of corpse or for burning garbage. I don't know. So if we can't keep, for example, Krema II, if we need one hour and a half to burn one body, it means – I am not very clever in calculation.

Q. Me neither.

A. It means how many people in one day, one hour and a half? Sixteen perhaps.

Q. Well, I thought, maybe, you have done so much work on Gerstein and other things that you would have that worked out.

A. Oh, I have that in my dossier not my memory.

Q. So there were a hundred bodies at a time, if I understand you, in Krema I and Krema II? {2852|2853}

A. What?

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me. No.

THE COURT: Ask him again, Mr. Griffiths.

THE WITNESS: If it is sixteen by day ...

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Sixteen a day?

A. Sixteen a day, if it is that. I don't know if it is twelve or sixteen.

THE COURT: Sixteen what?

THE WITNESS: Sixteen bodies by day. If you multiply by thirty, that's it. If you could do that for me.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What's the thirty?

A. Thirty openings of furnaces.

Q. All right. So we've got thirty openings of the furnaces each of which will take how many bodies?

A. I think one.

Q. One body. And what's the sixteen? That is sixteen hours a day?

A. No. I mean sixteen bodies in twenty-four hours.

Q. So with thirty openings, why wouldn't they put thirty bodies in twenty-four hours?

A. No. I mean for one opening.

Q. I see. One opening.

A. For one opening we should have sixteen bodies.

Q. That's all I want. So that would be 480 – sixteen times thirty? {2853|2854}

A. Sixteen times thirty, it gives ...

Q. And that would be for each crematorium, or for the two?

A. For the two.

Q. For the two. All right. And was there a lot of garbage at Birkenau? Did you have a record of that?

A. I cannot tell you how many tons there were, but I think that [there were many people in the Sonderkommando working on that.

Q. Working on ...

A. On collecting garbage and burning garbage. I cannot tell you for the garbage that you could have for forty-five thousand people.

Q. Okay. Were there any bodies that were burned in pits before the crematoria were built?

A. It's possible that in 1942, '43, bodies had been burned on pits, because at the beginning the German inundated their dead.

Q. The German ...

A. The dead inmates and dead German, but they had problem, because the land is very – plenty of water, you see, and you had danger of typhoid. So they extracted those bodies. If the crematorium were not already built, I think they burned them on pits, but surely not in the ground. I would add something about this number. We must consider that it is a hypothetical maximum, because we must know that, for instance, in the crematorium of Ruheleben [Ruhleben], in Charlottenburg, Berlin, I don't know how many ovens you have, but I know that in mall you have place for five hundred {2854|2855} people at the same time, because always a crematorium must be previewed for the case of a catastrophe.

Q. All right. Two hundred or four hundred people a day, deaths a day in Birkenau, were not unusual, is it?

A. In 1942?

Q. Yeah.

A. Even I think that one day during the typhus epidemic, one day more than six hundred people died. One day. But the same man who in the anthology of Auschwitz was taking the list of the dead told us that the Chancellery, as he said, had a terrible work to do in 1942, but sometime in 1943 they had two dead by day.

Q. Do you have any sense of what the average would be, Doctor?

A. I've read –

Q. Okay. Then based on what you've read.

A. The average I cannot give you because I have asked for many years directly, through the channel of other people, to the Auschwitz Museum, "Please, could I see what they call the book death."

Q. Death book.

A. Death book, yes. And it is impossible to know even if they had them. But what I know is that when one body was cremated, they had to sign a paper, and it is true that the golden teeth were taken out, that is not a legend, and in this case they had to indicate the name of the inmate, his number, the place of the tooth, etcetera. That I have seen for one {2855|2856} or two documents of this kind published.

Q. That's what Fred Wetzler would do, isn't it, the recorder, the Scribe of the mortuary? That was his job.

A. I don't know if he did that, because I don't believe very much those witnesses. Maybe he was talking about something done by others.

Q. All right.

A. But that is true.

Q. So when were Crematorium II and III built, at Auschwitz? What does the Calendarium or other studies tell you about that?

A. Yes, they were all built. The first one was in, I think, the 23rd March, 1943. We had another one the 31st March, another one –

THE COURT: '43?

THE WITNESS: '43. Another one maybe in April, I don't remember. And the last one on the 25th of June, 1944. I have an exchange of correspondence about the Auschwitz Museum which is quite technical. I could bring you this letter of four pages giving the date of the construction and all that, but even in the Auschwitz Calendarium we have the date, and I calculated that those crematorium function from seventeen months minimum to twenty months maximum. And it is said that they do not give precision about that that often, those crematories were not functioning for technical reason, that they had many worries with them. So when I asked at Auschwitz Museum, "Could you tell me how many days each crematorium has worked?", they said, "We cannot answer this question. We know that {2856|2857} there were interruptions, rebuildings and all that, but we cannot answer."

Q. All right. So if the two crematorium, only two crematorium were ever used for burning bodies, and if they operated at their maximum – take that.

A. Maximum, yes.

Q. I know what you said; we will take that first.

A. Yes.

Q. For seventeen months, which is the lesser figure that you gave.

A. You can go till twenty months.

Q. Then you have 245,000, approximately, bodies burned there.

A. 245,000, yes.

Q. Is that about right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Okay.

A. Now excuse me —

Q. And you have given us fifty thousand as the figure for Auschwitz, the number of dead.

A. Fifty thousand, yes.

Q. So clearly, they weren't working at their maximum.

A. Oh, yes. That's right. Because you have even you told us about Dr. Konrad Morgen. When Dr. Konrad Morgen is supposed to have visited those crematories, he said that not in the IMT but in the Frankfurt trial, he said, "I was surprised to find that all was the, to translate in English, it means white {2857|2858} like the mirror and all that. And when we think that the previous day, perhaps thousands of people had been burned, how is it that it was like that?"

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Why do you think the Germans would have built these four large facilities with that capacity that clearly they didn't need, our figures?

A. Oh, no. I didn't say they didn't need. They had those typhus epidemic, those fantastic typhus epidemic in 1942, and they make provision, I don't know how. They said, "We are going to do those crematorium." But how many hours a crematorium is able to function by day? Perhaps twelve only.

Q. Have you found the people that worked in the crematorium to ask them about all that?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Who have you found?

A. A witness?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. I am trying to find his name. Oh, yes, I have it. Jankowski. His other name is Fajnzylberg.

Q. Was he a prisoner?

A. He was a so-called Sonderkommando.

Q. And where did he testify?

A. He testified first in 1945, '46. He was interrogated by Jan Sehn.

THE COURT: Where did he testify you were asked. {2858|2859}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Where did he testify?

A. In Krakow, I'm sorry.

Q. And in what trial?

A. It was Jan Sehn in preparing the trial of 640 S.S., I think. He was the examining magistrate.

Q. All right. And did Jankowski testify?

A. He testified. We have the reproduction of his testimony in the notebook of Auschwitz, 1972.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

A. Then he testified in my legal suit.

Q. Which one?

A. For falsification of history, said the people, but he didn't come.

Q. Well, you asked him to come but he didn't come.

A. No, I didn't ask him to come, but those people, the nine organizations, the last day, gave us a paper for signed by Jankowski telling his story. I would have been very interested in seeing this man.

THE COURT: Excuse me. Do I gather he didn't testify in your matter?

THE WITNESS: He testified by a written report.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Was that filed with the Court?

A. Yes. Yes. And I am going to tell {2859|2860} you what he says.

Q. Well, if he wasn't subjected to cross-examination I don't want to know what he says.

A. Yes, but —

THE COURT: Doctor, let me remind you again. Mr. Christie, if he wants to ask you all that, he can ask you that. This counsel is now asking you questions. It is up to you to answer the questions, not to say what you want to say. You will answer the question. Do you understand that?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: The plan that you brought the other day and obtained from the Auschwitz Museum ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Christie, do you still have that, or —

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, it is being reproduced, as we agreed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you think we could have that this afternoon?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. We heard from a number of survivors here that although it is not, that you didn't feel very comfortable then, you reviewed some of the survivors' literature.

A. Have I read survivors' literature?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. {2860|2861}

Q. And I am going to suggest to you that certainly what we've heard here about Birkenau, in particular, that the witnesses were all quite consistent as to the odour of the camp, the conditions in the camp, where the trucks went in the camp, what they could see from the outside of the crematoria, the horrible rations, food, and the high number of deaths each day from brutality. I suggest to you that they were very consistent. What do you say to that?

A. It was quite repetitive.

Q. All right. And I suggest to you that that consistency has been very effective.

A. Oh, do you mean — excuse me, consistency?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't think so, no. I don't think so.

Q. You didn't find that consistent?

A. No. No. And especially not consistent at all with the place, when you know the place, the plans and all that.

Q. Okay.

A. I can give an example.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Can I see the map of Auschwitz-Birkenau?

THE COURT: That is No. 21?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is 21, yes, Your Honour. It is a large map. There are a number of notations made on it by various witnesses who testified already, and Mr. Christie produced that map.

Q. Can you tell us, Doctor, when that {2861|2862} was made, what period of time in the camp that represents?

A. I think it's something like 1943.

Q. You think it was like that in 1943?

A. Yes.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Because Kanada is finished.

Q. What about this area over here, Bill?

A. Yes. And this part, I don't think they put anything else. They stopped their construction here.

Q. What about the railroad ramp, wasn't that built in the spring of 1944?

A. I don't remember.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

MR. GRIFFITHS: "I don't remember" was [sic] was the answer.

Q. And you said '43, but you say one of this crematoria was built in '44?

A. No. '43.

Q. All four were built in '43?

A. All of them, from the 22 of March to the 25 June.

Q. All right. Now, on what do you base your information about — the railroad you don't know about. Your estimate of the time of that is strictly because of where Kanada is. Right? Barracks indicated there.

A. No. I saw that the barracks were {2862|2863} finished, so I think that something like December 1943, but I cannot ...

Q. When was Bill finished?

A. Bill was not finished, I think, it could be also 1944.

Q. Do you know?

A. No, I don't know.

Q. And you don't know when the railroad was finished.

A. When it was finished, it was certainly finished in March or May 1944.

Q. March or May '44.

A. Yes. Certainly.

Q. It was finished in time for the Hungarians to come in on.

A. Exact.

Q. Are there any earlier maps showing any of the growth of the camp?

A. I don't know any – I know different maps, but I cannot tell you the dates of those maps.

Q. Okay.

A. I can give an example.

Q. Well, as I understand you, Exhibit 21 was some time after what date?

A. I should say after December '43.

Q. Okay. And some time before what date?

A. I don't know because when I have another plan, like the Herman Langbein plan that you have, I cannot date it.

Q. I am asking you if you can date {2863|2864} this one.

A. I cannot date it, no. I have the book, and the book does not give the precision.

MR. GRIFFITHS: We are not going to be able to finish this morning, Your Honour. Is this a convenient time?

THE COURT: Yes. Two thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have, through the co-operation of my friend, the opportunity, if I may, to file – I think by consent ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Absolutely.

MR. CHRISTIE: The plans of Crematoriums II and III. These are not photocopies so the originals need not be filed. My friend has had an opportunity to compare them with the originals and I am under the understanding that he concedes that they are true copies.

I would like, then, if I may, to file them as exhibits upon which the witness may be cross-examined.

THE COURT: If that's agreeable, Mr. {2864|2865} Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. Thank you.

THE COURT: Done. What is the number?

MR. CHRISTIE: There are three plans, perhaps, under one number, 38 A, B and C, I assume, in any order. No particular order, Your Honour. They are the same building.

— EXHIBIT NOS. 38A, B & C. Three plans of Crematoriums.

MR. GRIFFITHS: While we are talking about exhibits, Your Honour, I propose, subject to Your Honour, to file as an exhibit the page of Arthur Butz' book that I read with the Himmler speech in it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I think that's fair. I wonder if it would permissible also to include the commentary upon it, as it appears to be.

THE COURT: The commentary of the author?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I haven't been relying on the commentary of the author, and neither has Dr. Faurisson. He has no analysis of the {2865|2866} speech which, frankly, as I read Butz, is quite different from what Dr. Butz – I am not in a position to cross-examine Mr. Butz. My concern was a translation of a speech that everybody could agree upon, and I thought that was the best source.

THE COURT: Is the commentary in English or in German?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is in English, Your Honour. The Butz book is in English, and I haven't counted the pages.

The difficulty that I have with that, Your Honour, is, I am not able to cross-examine Dr. Butz about his commentary.

MR. CHRISTIE: I suspect I will be endeavouring to put the whole book later on the basis of my client's belief, so ...

THE COURT: You are not suggesting the jury is going to read the whole book, are you?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, no. But thereafter, they may reason or argue from the book.

THE COURT: Well, I propose again, subject to your comments – and when I say "your" I mean both counsel – that it could be put in as Exhibit 39. {2866|2867} I will reserve on the commentary until such time as it becomes proper to admit it or not to admit it, which I don't propose to decide now because the proceeding isn't finished.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO. 39: Photocopy of Himmler's speech.

THE COURT: Nothing else? The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:40 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: yes. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You mentioned this morning, Dr. Faurisson, a document that you have read from Krakow and a statement that you saw in relation to your own trial in France from Jankowski. Is that a man who is known by two names, one Otto Feinsilbert, or Janoslov Jankowski?

A. His first name, the first name I know is Alert Jankowski. Then he had the name of {2867|2868} Fajnzylberg, as I spell it this morning, but sometimes you find it also Feinsilberg [Feinsilber].

Q. I just want to make sure we have the same person here.

A. He was in Spain first, International Brigade.

Q. Before the War.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Jankowski was one of the men that worked in the crematoria.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know the name of some other men who worked in the crematoria?

A. Supposed to work in the crematorium, yes. We have, for instance, Filip Muller.

Q. Filip Muller, and we have talked about his book, "Eye Witness Auschwitz", and Dr. Nyiszli.

A. Nyiszli, yes.

Q. And you have mentioned him as well, "A Doctor in Auschwitz".

A. Yes. What Raul Hilberg quotes of Nyiszli is an affidavit. He doesn't quote his book. I think he was quite right not to quote his book.

Q. All right. Do you know how many – have you conducted any search for the number of people that survived who worked in the crematoria?

A. No. I think that it is said that on the 17th of January, 1943, I am not sure of the figure, I think that at least one hundred of those people left Auschwitz.

Q. Who said that? {2868|2869}

A. I think it is in the notebooks of Auschwitz.

Q. Do you think you could find it?

A. If I could find it? I have not all my notebooks of Auschwitz there. Perhaps it is in the volume about the manuscripts, perhaps, the manuscripts miraculously discovered in Auschwitz. So it would be 1972, I think, a special edition. But I am not sure of that.

Q. It would be in the manuscripts that were found in 1946 or '47, Birkenau, you think?

A. It was a book consecrated specially to those manuscripts, because —

Q. Is that information from those manuscripts?

A. No, no, no. The book, who has a title, the manuscripts of the Sonderkommando, I think that it is in this book that you have this information that I gave you.

Q. All right. And you were going to tell us —

A. Or perhaps it is in "Fighting Auschwitz", of Galinski.

Q. You were going to tell us something about Mr. Jankowski.

A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead.

A. Mr. Jankowski said that he was in Auschwitz politician [sic] inmate because he had been a communist, and he worked in Krema I of Auschwitz I, and then he worked in Krema V, in Birkenau. In 1946, {2869|2870} in his affidavit, in Krakow, this is the story that he recounted. He said that the German used to bring victims. The victims would undress themselves, and then, at this very moment, the members of the Kommando, with Alter Fajnsylberg himself, would be locked into the cold room storage. Then, he said, the Germans would gas those people and the Sonderkommando would get out of the storage room and would have to take care of the bodies. So this man said that he did that in Krema I, Auschwitz I, and in Krema V, same scenario. They were put into the storage room so they didn't see anything by their eyes. But in 1980 he added one detail that he didn't give in 1945, '46. He said that once – it's always once – once he saw, on the top of Krema V, an S.S. throwing something by an opening into what he called a gas chamber. And that is, I think, a good sum-up of what he said. So this man was, I suppose, a very long time of his life, if we have to believe, in the storage. Filip Muller wrote a book. The title was, "Three years in the Gas Chamber". That's the French title. This man could have written, "Two years and a half in a cold room storage", more or less.

Q. And do any of the surviving men who worked in the crematoria describe the situation such as you've described it?

A. No. You have variation, yes, but I quoted this man because, in my trial, those nine associations were looking for a good witness, because I asked one witness, I suppose that it was their best witness, but it didn't come.

Q. But nobody came at your trial {2870|2871} because it was a trial based on documents that were filed with the Court.

A. They could have come, all the same.

Q. But nobody was testifying at your trial; it was based on documents.

A. Oh, but they could have come all the same. It is a written procedure.

Q. It was a written procedure. I am showing to you, sir, what I believe is a photocopy, and I will get the originals of page 192 and 193 of Arthur Butz' book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" that we looked at earlier that has the Himmler speech, and would you look at that and tell me if that is a good photocopy of this?

A. Yes. Certainly.

Q. And there is one addition that wasn't in the book, and that is a little mark next to the beginning of the speech. I'm sorry, a little mark that I have put.

A. Oh, yes. Yes.

Q. Other than that it is the same as was in the book?

A. Yes. About this speech I would like to say something, if it is possible.

Q. Well, let's make it an exhibit.

THE COURT: Exhibit No. 39.

— EXHIBIT NO. 39: Photocopy of Himmler's speech.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What is it you {2871|2872} want to say about the speech?

A. Among the people in the accused of Nuremberg, von Schirach was the Chief of the Hitler Youth, and in the Nuremberg cell he was like most of the others, he was completely disgusted by Hitler, meaning by that, what he had learned about Hitler once he was in a cell. And this man, in 1960 or 1961, wrote a book called, in French, translated in English, "I believed in Hitler", and in this book he talks about the Posen speech of Hitler – of Himmler. And what he says, I think, is important. He said, "I realize now, 1960, '61, the meaning of what Himmler told at this moment. There was an extermination, because he said that at that time. Now I realize", which means that at that time when he heard those words he heard those words like many German people heard all those speeches, when so many [many] of them had their own wives, children, family crushed under the bombings, people like Himmler, Hitler and Goebbels – Goebbels also was doing that kind of speech, saying, "We are going to destroy entirely our enemy. You cannot suppose, if somebody is in War, that he is going to say, "The people that you have to fight are human beings. They are like you. They have a job, perhaps the same as you." If you say that, they are going to put the gun down. You must make, from them, fanatics. I suppose that the Russian talk on the same way, eh?

Q. And what I believe you described this morning as warrior talk, that would apply to women and children as well, and civilians.

A. Sure. Women and children in Germany were treated the same, eh, by the bombings. {2872|2873}

Q. Yes, but Jewish women and children were treated the same way.

A. Oh, yes. But I don't say extermination, eh?

Q. No. I know you don't.

A. I know what is War, but I do not understand what is a crime of war. I don't understand that.

Q. You don't understand what a war crime is, Doctor?

A. No. Because I consider that war is a crime.

Q. So whatever happens in war is all right.

A. Is not all right. It's ugly. It's never different.

Q. During the recess Mr. Christie brought in a photocopy of the plans that he showed to you, I don't know whether it was yesterday or the day before, and this one in particular I am looking at is 38A, and that's the plan that you received from the Auschwitz Museum.

A. Yes. I was the first to publish this plan.

Q. And on the lefthand side is a German phrase. It's right near a compass there. And as you know by now, my German is terrible. Can you read that for me? Can you translate it?

A. You cannot translate it for me, really?

Q. Really. {2873|2874}

A. Project for crematorium. Project for the crematorium.

Q. The word here, the first word here.

A. Project, yes.

Q. Can it also be translated as draft?

A. Oh, I don't think we should say draft.

Q. You don't think we should say draft?

A. Architect project.

Q. I see. All right. Thank you.

A. Sometimes, yes.

Q. Or first draft of the plans?

A. A draft of a letter, but I don't think for an architectural design, I don't think.

Q. I wonder if it is a first draft of the plan.

A. First, I don't know. I know that I have many documents about those Krema, but I know also that the Poles have many others that are not shown to us, and I wish we could have them.

Q. All right. So my question was that the word that you translated as "project" can also mean "draft". And you said —

A. Draft —

Q. In the sense of a first draft, second draft, third draft.

A. I don't see if it is in English a proper term. In French would say prulion [brouillon]. That would be for a letter, for a text, but not for something like that, We call that project. {2874|2875}

Q. Okay. Thank you. Do you know anything about — you made it a matter of study — the system of indemnification for those people that suffered losses during the War? You are nodding your head.

A. Pardon?

Q. I'm sorry. For the Reporter, you are nodding your head. Does that mean yes, you have studied that?

A. A little, yes. I am not very competent about that.

Q. Then I won't ask you.

A. Yes, yes. I am interested by that.

Q. I have to ask you, you see, Doctor, your expert opinion. If it is not something you are expert in, I can't ask you your opinion.

A. But all the same I have studied this question.

Q. I see. All right. Well —

THE COURT: Just a minute. Ask him again if he considers himself to be competent, an expert in that field. If he is you may ask. If he isn't, he is repeating hearsay.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Are you an expert in that field?

A. It is difficult for me to answer that, if I am an expert. I have worked on the topic.

THE COURT: Then the ruling is, unless I have heard from from [sic] the doctor, the ruling is, please don't ask him. {2875|2876}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Faurisson, you can't tell us about, from what I understand, about the number of people who died, Jewish people who died outside of the concentration camps.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And your figures that you gave us relate to concentration camps, and most of your studies have been about gas chambers. Have I got that all right so far?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. All right. And I am wondering if you can tell us, or answer the question that I guess it was Dr. Vrba who asked: Where did all those people who were being trucked to Crematoria II and III, where are they today?

A. To answer your question, I need to know what it means exactly. You mean, I suppose, that millions of people came in this place. I think it means that, your question.

Q. Say one million.

A. If only 400,000, 405,222 people were in Auschwitz, we could certainly trace every one of them. I told you one method yesterday with the International Tracing Service. But there is another method to trace, and you nearly gave me this method one minute ago.

Q. I'm always glad to assist, Doctor. Tell me what I did.

A. If we study what Raul Hilberg calls {2876|2877} very well restitution, indemnification and reparation, in this case we could do a kind of cross-examination, taking the people who have a file in International Tracing Service, because we must – you know that the inmates were at least eight times registered, leaving their concentration camps, it was despatch to Oranienburg, etcetera. We have those documents, I suppose, many, many of them. And on the other side you could have the people receiving money from Germany today. And if you have the name of those people who might be former inmates, or parents of former inmates, you could have a possibility to double check. I am going to read you something, if you permit, about that.

Q. I don't know. What is it you are going to read? You cannot talk about reparations.

A. It is something coming from the Canadian Jewish News.

Q. What is it?

A. December 11, 1981.

THE COURT: Without reading it.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Before you read further, can I see it, please?

A. For the figures. I cannot get them I want to be precise.

Q. I understand. No, Doctor, that deals with reparations or indemnification or compensation, and that's an area that I can't ask you about. I'm sorry.

We've heard a number of witnesses here testify as to large numbers of their own personal families that never survived, went back to their villages {2877|2878} and found that the village at the end of the War had maybe ten per cent of the population at the beginning of the War. And my question to you is, where are all those people?

A. Yes, I was interested by this question. I remember that I even studied a little bit of this question, perhaps already in '67. I meet people who told me, "I've lost all my family." Some would say twenty-three, fifty-seven, one hundred and twenty-seven, and I've always said to those people, "I must take notice of what you say there. You say that you have lost 127 people of your family. My name is Robert Faurisson. My address is ... And I give you a stamp." At that time I remember the stamp was 0.60. Now it's 2.10.

Q. It's the same with our Post Office, Doctor. Go ahead.

A. But to show you how old it was. And I told them, "Please, send me the list of those people." I can assure that very often, even to people who wrote, the people who wrote, "I have lost 127 people of my family", I never received any answer. So it is a work rather difficult to do when somebody tells you, "I've lost so many people." You must check. But to check you need some data. If those data are not given, it's difficult to work.

Q. Well, Mr. Leader, as an example, he is a Jew who testified here that he is the only member of his family who survived, that all his brothers and sisters, his mother and father, all his relatives on both sides —

{2878|2879}

A. I would be very recognisant to this witness.

Q. You would be ...

A. Recognisant, grateful, to this witness if he could give me the list, because it is his family, could give first name. Name, the place in Poland or whatsoever, the camp, perhaps. All what he could give me on one or two lines, not more, for every member of his family. And I can perhaps check. It was quite possible for me, a few years ago. It will be rather difficult now, but perhaps could also check the International Tracing Service by the channel of somebody else.

Q. Mr. Harwood has an explanation for where all those people are.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. He says they are all alive and gouging West Germany for reparations.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I might object, and I do, to an interpretation of my friend of the booklet. If he has a quote, I am glad to hear it, but when he makes his judgment on the contents, I think he errs in that regard.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Would you agree with that, Dr. Faurisson?

A. Yes, I would like to, for you to show me the place.

Q. All right. On page 30 of the booklet, quoting from Rassinier at the top of the page, the heading, the big heading, the big words are, "Enormous Fraud". And Rassinier has been called editorially, in {2879|2880} this pamphlet, as the most important contributor to a truthful study of the extermination question. His chapter is, "The Truth at Last: The Work of Paul Rassinier". So we take this as the truth, Mr. Harwood, and he talks about "Enormous Fraud".

A. Oh, I spoke about enormous fraud myself, in my phrase, I said that the alleged gas chamber of Hitler and the alleged genocide of the Jews were one and the same historical lie.

Q. Yes, you told us that. My question —

A. Which opened the way to an English, to a gigantic —

THE COURT: To a what?

THE WITNESS: To a gigantic political financial fraud.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Now, who is committing this fraud?

A. Nahum Goldman, 1976, the man who told us how he open from Adenauer Treaty of Luxembourg.

THE COURT: I just missed that. Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Naul Goldberg. Is that right.

A. Nahum Goldman.

THE COURT: Goldman is the last man?

THE WITNESS: Goldman, yes. He has been successively President of the War Jewish Congress of the World, Zionist organization.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And he says what?

A. And he explains — this is the {2880|2881} reference.

Q. What are you reading from?

A. From my own book, the reference.

Q. Thank you.

A. Excuse me, I have not the reference there.

Q. No. I just want to know what you are reading from.

A. No. 624 of the magazine, "Nouvelle Observateur", 25 to 29 October, 1976, the title is "Nahum Goldman", in this interview Mr. Goldman says that those colossal reparations —

Q. Colossal ...

A. Colossal reparation constituted an extraordinary innovation in matters of international law. He said they were contrary to the German constitution. And we see by his, what he says, that he dictated his condition to Adenauer in 1950, and he explained how he obtained eight billions of Deutschmarks, and he says that is to say, ten to fourteen times more than the sum first hoped, and he says, without the German reparation the State of Israel would not have the half of its actual infrastructure

Q. Infrastructure, roads and —

A. He said all the trains in Israel are German. The ships are German, the electricity, a great part of the industry, and also there are those individual rents given to the survivors. Sometimes, some years, the money that Israel received from Germany was more important than the total of the collect of the international Jewish world. The multiplication was by {2881|2882} two or three. And today I say the young German taxpayer, it was in 1979, who has no responsibility for the War of 1939, 1945, pays his part of that, and the way —

Q. Where does he say in there that it was an enormous fraud played on the German people?

A. He didn't say it was an enormous fraud. It was my judgment, and if we had the text there you could see, which cynicism Nahum Goldman explained this story.

Q. Was there anybody else who committed enormous fraud or just Nahum Goldman?

A. And Ben Gurion.

Q. And Ben Gurion. And those are the only two people involved?

A. It was the State of Israel and International Zionism.

Q. Who committed the enormous fraud?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the nature of that fraud?

A. The fraud is to say six million, and after that to say, so we need a reparation which is relative to six million. It doesn't mean that they said how Rassinier said that. He said five thousand by people, and you had the reason for it.

Q. It is totally false.

A. That is an invention.

Q. All right.

A. But the sums are considerable, because today we have four million and something like 300,000 of people receiving money from Germany. It would {2882|2883} be interesting — forty percent of them, forty years after the War are in Israel. It would be interesting to have the name of those people.

Q. They are not all Jewish people that are receiving — I can't ask you that, I'm sorry. I don't want to go against His Honour's ruling.

What do you have to say, Doctor, about the phrase here — and I am on page 30 still, under "Imaginary Slaughter", what do you have to say about that?

A. He means genocide, extermination, a planned extermination. He doesn't mean that there were no slaughters at all. He talks about the big imaginary slaughter.

Q. I see.

A. The one called Holocaust.

Q. What role, if any, do you think the individual survivors played in all this?

A. I don't know. I don't know because I believe rather easily, perhaps I am naive, in the good faith of the people. They are convinced of what they say, of what they do, most of the time. So when I have somebody like Nahum Goldman and Ben Gurion, I don't hesitate, and I say, "No, that's impossible."

Q. So the survivors, like Mr. Urstein and Mr. Leader who are receiving a pension from West Germany, you have nothing to say about them?

A. Nothing against. Nothing. I wish that all the people who have suffered during their last War could receive reparations, yes. I think it would be fair. {2883|2884}

Q. Without telling us anything about the details of the reparations, and perhaps before you answer this, let His Honour indicate whether or not you can answer it, do you know whether the discussion about compensation was initiated by Germany, or by Israel?

Just a moment, Doctor.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no objection.

THE WITNESS: If it was —

THE COURT: Just a moment. No, he can't answer that. He is not an expert.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. It occurred to me that I have lapsed into the habit of not standing when I have been asked a question. I should have stood and I should have said then I have no objection.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Still under that paragraph of "Imaginary Slaughter", the last two sentences, I'd ask you to comment on, again, as a text and document examiner —

THE COURT: The last two sentences of the passage?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Of the pamphlet, the passage headed, "Imaginary Slaughter".

THE COURT: Yes, I have it.

Q. "Surely this is enough grief for {2884|2885} the Jewish people? Who has the right to compound it with vast imaginary slaughter, marking with eternal shame a great European nation, as well as wringing fraudulent monetary compensation from them?"

The question, Doctor, is, would you agree with me that the last question there about imaginary slaughter and fraudulent monetary compensation refers to the Jewish people in the question before?

A. Yes.

Q. I think it does.

A. Could you recall me what means "compound"?

Q. "Who has the right to compound"? Make it worse is what it means.

MR. CHRISTIE: I agree.

THE WITNESS: To make it worse. Who has the right to make it worse?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: To make the grief worse.

A. It is a resounding confirmation of the fact that Jewish during Second World War can be estimated into a figure in thousands. I don't agree with that. I don't agree when he says that the Jewish casualty during the Second World War can be estimated at a figure in thousands. That is certainly impossible. I wouldn't say that. It's much more important. Surely this is enough grief for the Jewish people — "grief" means again?...

Q. Sadness.

A. Oh, yes. Who has the right to {2885|2886} compound it with imaginary slaughter. I would agree with who has the right to compound it with vast imaginary slaughter, but for the comment marking with eternal shame a great European nation as well as a wringing fraudulent monetary compensation from them, that is poetic, and I won't comment that that's a political consideration. Is Germany a great European nation? Do we have to care about white race or things like that? That's not my — I am not interested in that.

Q. Mr. Harwood is, though, isn't he?

A. Yes, he is interested. Myself, I am not interested. But I could say all the same ...

Q. Go ahead.

A. I think that it is a shame that a nation, no matter if it is Germany, China or whatsoever, could be at this point — slandered do you say?

Q. It's a good word. Defamed, slandered.

A. Defamed. I agree totally. Defamation of Germany, defamation of people who were on the side of Germany, defamation of the Red Cross accused of not having said or done anything, against the Pope Pius XII, defamation even now, since the years, of American Jewish community who is supposed not to have done enough during the War. And you know that in New York or Washington, perhaps, they constituted a kind of Commission of Inquiry, why did the American Jewry didn't believe in those things, those slaughters? How is it that they didn't do that? I think that there are many people who are accused. If you visit the Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Los Angeles, you see something which is very {2886|2887} interesting. So it is about the Holocaust. And you see photographs of German people, like Hitler, Himmler, Kaltenbrunner and so on, they are there in a corner. You waited for them. You are not surprised. And they do not occupy a big place. But suddenly you have, I think you call that a makeshift, a kind of construction or building in paper, you see, showing an inmate in his uniform of inmate, seven times like that, and his fingers is pointing to the real responsible of the genocide. Who are they? They are Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt.

Q. Is that what it says on the caption of that picture, Doctor? Is that an interpretation of it?

A. There is no caption. There are accused, and then you have the Pope Pius XII. It's quite clear. You don't need any caption.

Q. Now, Doctor —

A. So I am not a defender of Germany, eh?

Q. I am a little puzzled. I hope you can help me. Individuals who claim compensation from the German Government, as I understand it, you are saying that you can't say that they are alive; you don't say that.

A. I would do exactly like they do if I was a Japanese, put in a Canadian concentration camps during the War. I would ask for compensation.

Q. Right and the only – the only fraud that you see is in the payment of monies to Israel; is that right?

A. It's all what Goldman and Ben {2887|2888} Gurion did to Adenauer. Recounted. You must read that line by line. Something more. Nahum Goldman, on the French radio, I have the reference – I don't know if this reference there, but I have the text of what he said. He qualified the reparation by Germany. He said, astronomical. But few people –

THE COURT: Just so the jury should know, was Konrad Adenauer the Chancellor of Germany at the time?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And would you call this the biggest money-making racket of all time?

A. No. I am not able. I must see if, in the past, there have been things like that. I cannot say it is a lie. I think it is a fantastic lie, all the same, yes.

Q. What's a fantastic lie?

A. When you see the lies of the First World War and you compare that with the lie of the Holocaust, you must admit that, with more modern means, we did a much more bigger lie, historical lie.

Q. We did a much more bigger lie. Well, there are much more people involved in this lie, aren't there – all the people who saw the gassings and all the people who were from the camps and saw the shootings in the East?

A. You have people who have seen, people who think they have seen; people who have smelled, thinks that they have smelled, etcetera. I am not able to judge an individual [sic]. I say only about our three men, Vrba, Gerstein, Hoess, the three pillars, I am going to {2888|2889} qualify everyone of the three men.

Q. I'm sorry, you are going to what?

A. To qualify, to give my opinion.

Q. I think you already have, Doctor. Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:35 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:54 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. My learned friend asked you if all the inmates are alive and gouging West Germany, and he asked you who are the liars, and you gave the answer about that, and he asked you who the liars were and you mentioned Nahum Goldman and Ben Gurion. I would like to ask you, who are the victims of this lie?

A. I would say that I do not agree with Richard Harwood when he says that it is only Germany. It would be, I should say, everybody. Those {2889|2890} who believe in that and those who do not believe. I could say that I am the victim of that. And what I wish, that the people could understand that in a historical lie there are so few liars, and so many people who are victims of a lie, brainwashed by first five years of war propaganda, then forty years of war propaganda during a time of peace. I think it would be good if we could go back to what I call the truth. The truth, for me, is not something that I write with a big "T". I don't know where the truth, in general, I talk generally speaking, I talk about the truth with a little "t", and about specific questions. Truth is what can be checked very favourable. We have other words for other things, belief, etcetera, and sometime lie. I think we should need this truth. It would be easier to live. It will be better for peace, also.

When I consider the evolution of the mentality in France about this problem of the Holocaust, I see that there is, perhaps, a difference between France and Canada. I have many among my acquaintance Jewish friends.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. I don't mean to interrupt Dr. Faurisson, but we are a long way away from who the victims are.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, but we are close to the social effects of this publication, and that is why I asked the question. I would like him to go on about the social implication of the subject.

THE COURT: Yes. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: So I noticed in France that this belief in the Holocaust was, perhaps, not very {2890|2891} strong just after the War, but very strong in the fifty and in the sixties. I say among the intellectual: I don't say in the medias, because the medias, they are not going with the intellectuals at this point. And the intellectual Jewish people, in the seventies, began to quit a little bit this belief of the Holocaust, and now, in France, in the eighties, I see that those intellectual Jews, most of them got rid of the religion of communism, and I think that they try to get rid also of this religion of Holocaust. And I think that it is a good thing.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your opinion.

A. I don't say the media. The media repeat and they will repeat for years and years that there were for million killed in Auschwitz and so on.

Q. What is the solution to the problem of victims of lies, in your —

MR. GRIFFITHS: How is this – I'm sorry, finish the question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your opinion as a layman interested in study, that's my question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Two objections, Your Honour. One, this witness is not qualified as a layman, he is qualified as an expert, and that's the basis upon which he can give his opinion in a particular field. Secondly, I don't see how that arose out of cross-examination.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm satisfied. Thank you.

— The witness retires.

— {2891|2892}

MR. CHRISTIE: I am prepared to call my next witness.

THE COURT: Please do.

MR. CHRISTIE: My next witness is Dr. Russell William Barton. I would like to file, now, a curriculum vitae for the purpose of qualifying the witness as an expert in psychiatry.

THE COURT: Expert in what?

MR. CHRISTIE: Psychiatry. He is also the same Russell William Barton mentioned in the booklet, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, my friend, just before Court opened, gave me the curriculum vitae, which is certainly impressive, and there are degrees of honours given to Dr. Barton, and I am content that he is an expert in psychiatry.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. The portion of the text of "Did Six Million Really Die?" referable [sic] to this witness commences on page 25, in the paragraph. immediately above the photograph, and proceeds to the portion that says, "Fake photographs".

THE COURT: Down to and including the whole page? {2892|2893}

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. Just to the "Fake photograph".

RUSSELL WILLIAM BARTON, sworn

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you are calling this witness in his capacity as an expert according to the curriculum vitae that has been presented; is that right?

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right.

THE COURT: That will be a lettered exhibit. Proceed. I am prepared to accept this witness as an expert within the confines as mentioned in the expertise.

— EXHIBIT "T": Curriculum vitae of Dr. Russell William Barton.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to go through it for the benefit of the jury.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Barton, I am going to lead you, unless my friend objects ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: No objection. {2893|2894}

Q. ... on a number of points, and I would just like to ask confirmation if this is correct, sir. You, sir, I am informed, are a psychiatrist. You have, "Present Occupation – Consultant Psychiatrist – Private Practice" from April 1978 to the present. Is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Edgeware General Hospital, Outpatient Clinic one day per week, April 1956 to March 1957; and Central Middlesex Hospital, London, Outpatient Clinic psychiatrist one day per week, April 1957 to December 1959; and various hospitals in the United Kingdom until 1977. It's my understanding, sir – is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are an international consultant with the World Health Organization and have been in 1964?

A. Yes.

Q. And with the Department of public Welfare Mental Health in St. Paul, Minnesota, Consultant psychiatrist in 1965 for several months?

A. Yes.

Q. And the Director of Education at Pilgrim State Hospital, West Brentwood, New York, from March 1969 to September 1969, and May 1970 to October 1970: is that right, sir?

A. Yes. {2895|2896}

Q. You are a member, or a Fellow of the Royal Society of Medicine, London, a Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association, and you have, in that capacity, served throughout the world, is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. You are, I understand, a member of several committees in Rochester and in New York as well as in England pertaining to psychiatry, as is indicated in the second page, is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have been a medical practitioner since 1974.

A. Yes.

Q. And a psychiatrist since, I believe – when, I'm sorry?

A. I would like to say since 1955, when I got the postgraduate with the Diploma in Psychiatric Medicine.

Q. It is my understanding, sir, that in addition you are a graduate of Eltham College in Kent, King's College in London, and Westminster University, and the Institute of Psychiatry in London, and you graduated with Honours from the competition exam in New York, I believe, {2896|2897} with the highest mark ever awarded. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And going on to "Clinical Training", I understand you have been trained in several hospitals in England, the Institute of Psychiatry in London, the Institute of Neurology in Queen Square, London, Maudsley Hospital, London, and you have been researching in hypothalamic disorders, postpartum mental disorders, schizophrenia and other mental disorders.

A. Yes.

Q. And you have published a book called, "Institutional Neurosis" in 1963 which is published in Dutch, Italian, Japanese, as well as Spanish, French, German and Greek. Is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have published, I believe, "A Short Practice of Clinical Psychiatry[]" in the United States, and contributed chapters to several medical journals in various related psychiatric concerns and interests. Is that right, sir?

A. Well, "A Short Practice of Clinical Psychiatry" was published in England, but it was distributed here, in America, by Year Book Publishers. {2897|2898}

Q. I see, sir. In terms of articles and research, you have contributed, as is set out in your curriculum vitae, two pages of publications, works and articles throughout the world: is that right – rather than go through them all?

A. Say a page, a page and a half.

Q. And I understand you were born in London, England, on April 21st, 1923?

A. Yes.

Q. You are married and have two children?

A. Yes.

Q. And the important part, I believe you served in the International Red Cross in Belsen, Germany.

A. Yes.

Q. How did you get to go to Belsen Concentration Camp?

A. They called for volunteers, when I was a medical student, to help the starving people in Holland.

Q. I see.

A. And I think most of us volunteered, and they selected those of us who were about twenty-two, twenty-one or twenty-two, because it was known that typhus was raging, and typhus is far less lethal if you are under {2898|2899} twenty-five than if you are over thirty.

Q. I would like, sir, if I may, to produce and show to you a book, Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and turning to page 25, I would like to go through with you, sir, a portion of this book commencing at the words, "A surprisingly honest appraisal", and. I'd like to read it to you, and then I'd like to ask you some questions about it, sir. It says:

"A surprisingly honest appraisal of the situation at Belsen in 1945 appeared in Purnell's 'History of the Second World War' (Vol. 7, No. 15) by Dr. Russell Barton, now superintendent and consultant psychiatrist at Severalls Hospital, Essex ..."

Are you that person?

A. Yes, I am that person. I am no longer at Severalls Hospital, Essex.

Q. Were you in the seventies?

A. I left in 1970.

Q. Yes. It says:

"... who spent one month at the camp as a medical student after the war. His {2899|2900} account vividly illustrates the true causes of the mortality that occurred in such camps towards the war's end, and how such extreme conditions came to prevail there. Dr. Barton explains that Brigadier Glyn Hughes, the British Medical Officer who took command of Belsen in 1945, 'did not think there had been any atrocities in the camp' despite discipline and hard work. 'Most people,' writes Dr. Barton, 'attributed the conditions of the inmates to deliberate intention on the part of the Germans ... Inmates were eager to cite examples of brutality and neglect, and visiting journalists from different countries interpreted the situation according to the needs of propaganda at home.'

However, Dr. Barton makes it quite clear that the conditions of starvation and disease were unavoidable in the circumstances, and that they occurred only {2900|2901} during the months of 1945. 'From discussions with prisoners it seemed that conditions in the camp were not too bad until late 1944. The huts were set among pine trees and each was provided with lavatories, wash basins, showers and stoves for heating.'

The cause of food shortage is also explained. 'German medical officers told me that it had been increasingly difficult to transport food to the camp for some months. Anything that moved on the autobahns was likely to be bombed ... I was surprised to find records, going back for two or three years, of large quantities of food cooked daily for distribution. At that time I became convinced, contrary to popular opinion, that there had never been a policy of deliberate starvation. This was confirmed by the large numbers of well-fed inmates. Why then were so many people suffering from malnutrition? ... {2901|2902} ... The major reasons for the state of Belsen were disease, gross overcrowding by central authority, lack of law and order within the huts, and inadequate supplies of food, water and drugs. The lack of order, which led to riots over food distribution, was quelled by British machine-gun fire and a display of force when British tanks and armoured cars toured the camp. Apart from the unavoidable deaths in these circumstances, Glyn Hughes estimated that about 1,000 were killed through the kindness of English soldiers giving them their own rations and chocolates.' As a man who was at Belsen, Dr. Barton is obviously very much alive to the falsehoods of concentration camp mythology, and he concludes: 'In trying to assess the causes of the conditions found in Belsen one must be alerted to the tremendous visual display, ripe for purposes of propaganda, {2902|2903} that masses of starved corpses presented.' To discuss such conditions naively in terms of 'goodness' and 'badness' is to ignore the constituent factors ..."

Have I read that correctly, sir?

A. You have. It's not quite accurate, because I was there from May 2nd, and the War finished, officially, on May 8th. I was there before the war had ended.

Q. Is that passage that I read, however, a fair and accurate representation of what you saw and have published on occasion?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, Dr. Barton, tell us what was the scene you saw ...

A. Well, we arrived, I think it was a Friday, May 2nd, and we had a briefing. And the following morning we were driven to the horror camp – there were roughly three camps – and long before we got to the camp there was an awful smell which I later learned was decaying faeces, burning leather and rags; and in the camp itself there were still a large number of bodies, although the British had been in charge for two weeks; they were unburied and they were {2903|2904} naked.

When we went in our first hut, which was Hut No. 1, there were mainly men there who seemed to be able to cope. We went back to the Red Cross and said, "You've assigned us a hut that doesn't really need two students. Is there something more we should do?" And then we were assigned to another hut. I think it was 214. We went there, and I went inside the hut and my foot – my boot stuck in something sticky, and it was a mixture of feces and goo, and I went outside of the hut and I threw up, and then I had to go back in.

We worked our way down. There must have been three hundred people in an area about forty yards by eight lying on the floor, some of them dead in their own feces, because some of them are too weak to move. The smell was appalling. And they were calling out for help. And I was absolutely stunned. It was dreadful. When we got to the end of the hut we found two medical students who had pre-empted us, who got there first, so we had again been re-assigned a hut, and we went to another, and I got the hut I was to work in – I think it was hut 213 – and that, too, was in a frightful state. I think we had about four hundred people in there – women. Again, so many, many, many bodies {2904|2905} were there, and there was that mixture of feces and vomit, helplessness, and the people were dirty. There was nowhere for them to wash, and there were feces between their fingers and smeared on their faces, and they, too, called out and asked for help. "Herr Doktor. Herr Doktor", they would say. And so we really didn't know what to do immediately, and I said, "Does anybody speak English?" And we found a few inmates who spoke English; and I was fortunate to find one young lady who told me she had been to Britain in happier days, and she translated.

We had been given glucose, and there was no running water in the camp, and we mixed that up and made a glucose drink which we handed around. A little while later we found that the inmates were vomiting. Subsequently – this was a very important observation, because when people vomit, when they are very malnourished they tend to die by inhalation or by losing electrolytes. So we then changed tack and started using – forty tons of powdered milk was delivered to the army kitchens, and I was asked to help out with the diet, and we made up a gruel of cane sugar, which has bigger molecular weight and is less likely to cause vomiting, or flour if it was available, and oatmeal and powdered milk, and this went round and was mucked up, and again some of the {2905|2906} inmates said it was too sweet, so we tried to get a sort of double menu; some people would have porridge, and some could have this gruel that we made. It was difficult to do more because there was so many to feed and so many could not feed themselves, and though no one recruited those who were able, you sort of had to stand over the situation.

And we went in on May 2nd, and I think it was by the 6th or 7th, certainly before the War ended, the death rate in the camp had dropped from about five hundred to about sixty.

THE COURT: Dropped from five hundred to about sixty.

THE WITNESS: To about sixty a day. We would be trucked over to the camp. We were living in the Wehrmacht headquarters, the old Panzer school, and we were trucked there in the morning and it was awful to see some of the patients, the inmates, just hurled outside the hut – it looked like they were hurled. They died. And we left about six or seven at night. But one didn't know what more one could have done at the time. We were medical students. We didn't have the skills or medical ability or medical knowledge. But I think the main contribution was to ensure that everybody got something to eat that wasn't going to kill them. {2906|2907}

You see, when people are malnourished and have typhus, their stomachs are as thin, not as tissue paper, but extremely thin, and if you give a meal, at best, that is the end of it; if you give them something that makes them vomit, then they are likely to die.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What was your initial reaction to the conditions in the camp?

A. Well, I was more horrified, of course, and I accepted that it was a deliberate and vicious inhumanity that had been perpetrated on mainly Jews. I mean, there were other people there, but the great majority were of the Jewish religion.

Q. Why did you come to that conclusion at that time?

A. Well, that's what everybody said. I mean, it was – you know, those first few days we put in ten or twelve hours a day. We didn't have much time to think. If you hand out something to four hundred people and you take a minute a time, that's four hundred minutes, and that's the best part of a day gone. And we didn't have much time to think those first few days.

Q. Did you later?

A. Well, then, yes, then questions began {2907|2908} to rise in my somewhat pedestrian brain. For example, there were showers in the hut that we had; there was a bank of about eight showers. They were all blocked and there was no running water, and I couldn't understand why they should be there. In the kitchens which I now had access to, because I was a sort of unofficial dietician, there were four hundred fifty kilo-vats steam-heated for cooking, and if what I had been told was the fact of the matter, I couldn't understand why it should be so well-equipped with stainless steel lining and all scrupulously clean. Although all the records were said to have been destroyed – and certainly records had been pulled up and gone over and stuffed back in a sort of block of pigeonholes, big pigeonholes – I fished out and looked through them as we had a little more time, and I found books, sort of standard printed books of food which had been cooked and distributed; and they went back, I think, to 1942 or '43.

It just made me think, well, food had been available. It had been cooked and it had been distributed. It increased my skepticism. And of course, we talked to medical students. It wasn't a very popular view.

Q. What view was that?

A. Well, that it was all very well to say that this had all been deliberately done and worked out {2908|2909} and was intentional, but as I saw it, the outbreak of typhus on the one hand, the transfer, as I understood, of some fifty or sixty thousand people from the eastern camps as the Russians moved in, the transfer of some fifty or sixty thousand people into Belsen-Bergen, which only had room for three thousand, was a monstrous thing to do because there was no room for them to sleep and all the facilities that there were were [sic] grossly overcrowded and, furthermore, there weren't the supplies of food.

Q. Did you make an inquiry of the inmates to determine why they had come to the —

A. Oh, yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me doctor. Pardon me. I think, Your Honour, as I understand, the doctor is testifying now as to his personal knowledge, and the inquiry might be hearsay. I am happy to hear about his personal observations, but they are hearsay.

THE COURT: Will you qualify that, Mr. Christie, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: I can only say that I understood the witness was qualified as an expert. He conducted an inquiry as a medical officer of the conditions in the camp, and I heard other experts give hearsay as to base {2909|2910} their opinion. I thought we went through that in the case of Dr. Hilberg to start with.

THE COURT: I think what you should do is, ask the doctor whether or not — what capacity he is here, and in what capacity he purports to testify. If he purports to testify as to what he saw, that is fine, or heard or smelled. If he purports to say what he heard from others, then I would want to hear that before I hear what others said, so that Crown can have an opportunity, along with yourself, to discuss the matter, before the doctor is permitted to give hearsay.

Opinions on books are one thing; opinions on history are one thing; opinions on what one saw, heard, smelled or felt, of course, are entirely another thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am seeking to qualify the witness as an expert in the medical conditions in the camp and in the psychiatric questions which I propose to ask him at a later stage pertaining to a number of things; and it hasn't been my custom to specify the questions I intend to ask the witness to get permission from either the Court or my friend in advance, but it's my intention to ask the witness questions about the results of his inquiries into why the people were dying in the camp. That's why — {2910|2911}

THE COURT: There is a way of doing that without drawing hearsay.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I don't think so.

THE COURT: I do. What I think is more important than what you think.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, you asked me. I said what I thought. I won't answer questions unless I am asked. I won't give opinions unless I am asked. I won't say anything unless I am asked.

THE COURT: Perhaps you can go through with the witness that aspect, and when you get the psychiatric portion of it, Mr. Griffiths can object or not, as he wishes.

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness, Your Honour, is both an eye witness, a medical person qualified to give opinion evidence in the realm of medicine, he is a thoroughly qualified medical practitioner, he is a highly qualified psychiatrist — the Crown does not dispute his qualifications — and they then, I gather, and not Your Honour, but my friend objects that I may not lead hearsay. I am really quite surprised.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I don't wish to surprise you, Mr. Christie. Dr. Barton is an eminently qualified psychiatrist, and I have no objection, and I would {2911|2912} welcome his opinion on psychiatric matters, and I have no objection to that at all; but he is also an eye witness, and there are two different roles that the doctor is hear to fulfil [sic], I'd suggest. And in one role he is entitled to give an opinion, would be my submission, Your Honour, and in the other role he is an eye witness and he is not entitled to give hearsay unless it relates to his psychiatric opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: The realm of his medical expertise, as a qualified medical practitioner, is to express opinions on what he saw at the time.

THE COURT: He can do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: And to give the basis of his opinion from the sources he derived it, from.

THE COURT: You might ask him as to with whom, if anyone, he spoke, and as a result, what he heard, what are his opinions. You may not repeat hearsay. He may not repeat hearsay.

MR. CHRISTIE: You mean he may not repeat hearsay as —

THE COURT: Excuse us, members of the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: I won't pursue the question. The jury don't have to — {2912|2913}

THE COURT: Excuse us, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 4:30 p.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you will do precisely what I say. I have ruled, and you will not question it. That's the end of it. You will not draw hearsay from this witness, and that is the end of it.

Bring back the jury, please.

— The jury returns. 4:31 p.m.

THE COURT: Proceed, please.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What inquiries did you conduct to determine the cause of the conditions in the camp, other than you've described?

A. Well, I made, of course, clinical examinations of patients, and we had British medical officers and consultants; we roughly worked out, say in a hundred people, in my particular hut, twenty had typhus, about twenty had pulmonary tuberculosis from coughing, and another twenty had a mixture of things — I mean, they all had the same thing, but some had erysipelas, and there was scurvy, and malnutrition and, of course, dysentery, gastroenteritis, but there was no {2913|2914} typhoid.

Q. Did you form any opinion as to why the conditions in the camp had existed?

A. Well, I asked. I spoke to people who had been in the camp before 1945, and those who had come after 1945, and I asked them what had been going on.

THE COURT: And you formed an opinion.

THE WITNESS: And I formed an opinion, Your Honour, that, I think until the gross overcrowding, the camp had been run as a camp with reasonable administrative skill; but after the influx of some fifty or sixty thousand, the camp administration, particularly the director, Kramer, and his henchman, Dr. Klein, had sort of resented the extra fifty or sixty thousand people, and he had a sort of feeling that he had an obligation to look after the three thousand that were there, that he wasn't going to have much to do, or do more than was bureaucratically necessary for the rest.

Q. Do you know if there was a possibility of providing food for the fifty or sixty thousand?

A. There wasn't much food getting into the camp.

Q. Why is that?

A. I don't know if this is hearsay, but {2914|2915} I was told constantly that everything that moved on the road was strafed by the British or the Americans, or bombed, and that supplies simply couldn't be brought, that water —

Q. Did you conduct inquiry into the water supply?

A. Yes — why the water was not flowing, because we had already been there two weeks, and one would have thought it would have been chlorinated and fixed, but I was told that the sewage and the water had become polluted because some canal somewhere had been bombed, and the sewage and the water had mixed, and they were afraid of typhoid.

Q. Did you have medical, or reasons to inquire into the conduct of Dr. Klein that you've mentioned?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did you find?

A. Well, it would be hearsay, I suppose, if I told you what people told me, but there were mixed views about him. Some said that he was —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. I agree with the doctor that it would be hearsay. I would like to hear what he found from his observations, but not what he found from other people.

THE COURT: I agree. {2915|2916}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you form an opinion. from his conduct as a doctor?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your opinion?

A. Well, that he was a man of limited intelligence and so forth. He did what he could. Apparently he went to a hospital where Dr. Bruns was in charge, and he would take medicine back to the camp. I formed the opinion that he was conscientious [sic] within the limits that he felt applied to him because of a resentment, I think, they all had about the influx of this huge number of people.

Q. Did you, as a result of your inquiries, find out when that influx had arrived?

A. Yes.

Q. When?

A. It was as the Russian armies moved west. So the inmates of some of the camps there, Buchenwald, for example, were moved over to Belsen and to other camps.

Q. Do you know, why?

A. Well, at their choice. They told me, you know, that they were asked whether they wanted to stay or whether they wanted to move back to Germany, and somebody told me that the lesser of the evils was to go west. I think, {2916|2917} too, my opinion about the reason they were in Belsen and why it had been reasonably well-run was that there was, I understood, many of the people in Belsen had relatives over in America who had undertaken to give them a home or to send the money to pay the fare and so forth. And there were other rumours – I don't know if I should say this – that they could be traded —

THE COURT: Well —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie, ask the questions.

THE WITNESS: There were rumours that they could be traded for trucks and things like that, which again was very horrifying for a man of twenty-two.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That obviously upset you very much at the time; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you, at first, have any opinion about the Germans and the people who administered the camp as a result?

A. Yes. I thought that they were a sort of typical, rather dull, uninspired group. I don't think that they kept adequate control of the junior members. The seniors {2917|2918} would leave the running of a hut, in my opinion, to the block leaders, who was one of the inmates, and they wouldn't scrutinize too carefully what happened. And I formed the opinion that the reason some of the inmates were relatively well-fed and others were almost starved, apart from typhus and illness, is that if there were a majority in a hut, or one more powerful group, they would take what they wanted from the rations as soon as they were delivered, and when they were finished, they would leave whatever was left to the remainder. There was a kind of terrible internal tyranny, and I think it was an obligation of the administration of the camp to ensure that food was adequately distributed to everybody. I think they had a responsibility which they neglected, quite frankly.

Q. Did your opinion of the administration become something – well, let me ask you, why are you here to testify?

A. You asked me would I be prepared to do so? I wrote this article, not particularly wishing to, but I was solicited. I was told that I was the only person that had the administrative, etcetera, to do so, never dreaming that it would create the response that it did. And I think once one has written an article, one's got to stand by one's {2918|2919} word. And that is why I agreed to come along today.

Q. What tremendous response did it get? First of all, what was the reaction to your article?

A. Well, I thought there was a very irresponsible heading. In the article I had written, from questioning inmates of the camp and the German doctors, I understood – and also some of the inmates, by the way, were doctors and they were wonderful, they helped – but by questioning them I understood that Belsen was not too bad until the end of 1944 and early 1945. This was a quote in my article. And the London Times headlined an article, "Belsen not too bad says psychiatrist", which of course, was inflammatory and, I think, irresponsible. And then there were letters to The Times, which I have copies here.

Q. You could, perhaps, relate those and describe them, if you would, please.

A. Well, there was one from a man named Scrivener, who said, "It is", the article, "It is a triumph of scientific detachment. Dr. Barton is so detached he becomes almost adrift over elementary observations. For example, Dr. Barton mentions the masses of corpses whose ghastly appearance was ripe for the purposes of propaganda. However, he is far too detached to inquire how these unfor-{2919|2920}tunates came to be corpses."

Q. Had you inquired how those unfortunates came to be corpses?

A. Extensively, yes.

Q. And was it your opinion that these corpses were used for propaganda purposes?

A. Yes. That was a very unfortunate phrase I used. I mean "ripe" in the sense of mentally ripe in the time when irresponsible journalists again were going in and taking photographs and purporting that this was all deliberately intended, that it was calculated and worked out. I mean, it's true, I don't think anyone would deny, they had no business – the German party had no business to disenfranchise Jewish people and herd them into camps on arbitrary grounds without adequate hearings; it was a monstrous lack of law and decency. Having done so, I would have said they had a responsibility to feed them and so forth.

Q. From what you conceded, they made an effort to carry out that responsibility.

A. Well, yes. At first.

Q. In the chaos of the end of the War could you see some method by which they could have carried out that responsibility with the equipment available? {2920|2921}

A. Well, a letter from – no, I couldn't, to answer your question straightly, directly; but there is a letter from Dr. Glyn Hughes also very critical of me, and I knew Glyn Hughes in Belsen, and some of my article was given from a lecture that he gave us.

Q. Was he an officer there?

A. He was a medical officer-in-charge, and he says, "I am reluctant to write this letter, but hope I it will end the correspondence about Belsen. It is unfortunate but in the article in Purnell's History of the Second World War Dr. Barton's facts, figures, assumptions, dates are correct. He says for example Belsen was not handed over to the British on April 13th at twelve hours. The 11th Armament Division bypassed the camp on the morning of April 15th when the first British troops entered at seven minutes past three o'clock. Well, in fact, the camp was ceded on Himmler's orders, and Himmler didn't cede it because he was a nice guy, but because he was terrified that typhus was going to spread all over Germany. Typhus is carried by lice and it causes death. In that time... to over thirty or forty per cent of the people, especially if you are well-nourished. So the camp was ceded. First of all, the British wanted a large area to be neutralized. The German negotiators {2921|2922} refused and then finally they agreed that five by eight kilometers would be neutralized, and then that ceded at twelve o'clock." And I think the Brigadier is wrong in saying it wasn't ceded then, but the British didn't get in until three o'clock on April 15th, two days later. And then he goes on to say, "The medical students of whom Dr. Barton was one came sixteen days later and so saw none of the early scenes. I would like to pay tribute to the work they did. It was valuable and saved thousands of lives. At the time of their arrival there must have been fourteen thousand fewer inmates than on the day of liberation. Nine thousand had already been hospitalized, and at least five thousand must have died." He is meaning five thousand between April 15th and May 2nd. Then he goes on to say, "The almost well-nourished inmates mentioned must, in the main, have been those who arrived within a day or so of liberation. The fact remains that during the last five days the great majority of the prisoners had had neither food nor water." Then he goes on to say, "No one has accused the Germans of deliberate starvation. Nothing can excuse the bestiality, brutality and deliberate neglect. The bombing of the roads did not really affect the situation. There were ample supplies in the immediate neighbourhood in bakeries and dairies. The British {2922|2923} Army used them straight away to feed the inmates. I could wish that these frightful incidents would cease, but let no one ever forget the example —

THE COURT: The last part again, Doctor, please?

THE WITNESS: "I could wish that", referring in print, "these frightful incidents would cease, but let no one ever forget this example and extent of man's inhumanity to man."

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: From your observations, was that your observation of food and the availability of supplies in the immediate area?

A. Well, I think — he made a concession when he said, "No one has accused the Germans of deliberate starvation" That is not accurate. Everyone had accused them, and when I went there I had thought that this was deliberate starvation and the proximal cause of death was intentional — withholding of food — but after I had got over my shock and after I had looked around, I had second thoughts and said, "Why are these cooking vats here? Why are these showers here? And why is there food distributed?" Then I began to think again and say, "Well, it's ghastly and it's horrible, but is that what really happened?" And Glyn Hughes {2923|2924} talks of "[n]othing can excuse the bestiality, brutality and deliberate neglect". I think there were incidents of the bestiality, as in any large institution thugs and bullies, if not adequately supervised will take out their sadistic impulses on inmates and patients. In fact, when we tried to give patients intravenous hydrolysate, which was a digested protein, we tried to give it to the inmates intravenously — nowadays it is called hyperalimentation and it is quite safe — in those days it was experimental, and when we gave it to them they would shriek and say, "No, no", and we were told this was because they had been injected with benzol and stuff; but I used to spend a lot of time talking to patients, and they would say, "We die from this, doctor. Every patient that have been given the injection have died. We don't want it." And it became quite clear to me that there were acute allergic reactions, and you couldn't just pour in a digested protein into somebody's body and not get an acute allergic response. So they developed asthma, some had heart attacks, and so forth, and they died. And that is really why they were refusing to have any more of the intravenous feeding. Again, this was very unpopular when I discussed it with my colleagues, my fellow students. I said, "I really think we should give up on this. It is not proven and it is {2924|2925} not helping."

Q. What wasn't?

A. The intravenous use of the protein hydrolysate. But that was considered, you know, what shall I say, non-supportive or, you know, not playing in the team, to criticize a treatment which they had presumed was going to help, and of course, it may have helped some. As I say, today there is no problem; you just shove a needle in and the hyperalimentation, without the body reaction, you can keep people alive intravenously; but forty years ago it was a very different picture.

Q. Was there this atmosphere of playing on the team at the time, so to speak, vis-a-vis the Germans in 1945?

A. I think — yes. There always is an overall feeling, a sort of primitive mass response, like animals running in a herd.

Q. And the German animals were retreating and the Allied animals were advancing, I suppose.

A. Yes. But you make me sound as though I am stereotyping. There were many Germans who were kind and sympathetic and who were very helpful in the camp.

Q. I am not stereotyping anybody. We are all animals, so to speak, in a sense. {2925|2926}

A. But there were some guys who are pretty vicious, given the chance; but on the whole there is an overall attitude, a sort of fashionable belief which prevails, and if one challenges it, I find one finds oneself in hot water.

Q. And so was there public reaction attacking you about this statement that the Germans had not systematically starved the inmates?

A. Yes. There was a very nice letter from a J.P. Taylor, who was a well-known historian who I went and talked to, who said that in the last three months of the War, when the concentration camps in the east were evacuated, the Centre in Berlin directed all the prisoners to Belsen. Fifty-five thousand starving and diseased persons were thrust into a camp designed for three thousand. Food supplies, medical attention and sanitation broke down. The camp commander made some effort to look after the original inmates. He left the others to die. Thus the favourable accounts of Belsen are true and the unfavourable accounts are also true.

Q. Who was the commandant of Auschwitz?

A. Kramer.

Q. Did he leave the inmates to die? {2926|2927}

A. I don't know. I think he felt that his responsibility was to three thousand who were there. And I think he felt, like so many administrators do, that bureaucracy had messed things up and he couldn't help what happened to the rest. He hadn't been consulted; they had just been pushed on.

Q. Did he leave or run away and hide?

A. No. He stayed in the camp. This was amazing. I never actually met him, because he was ill, but my colleagues would say, "The nerve of him to stay." My opinion is that he thought he had been doing a job to the best of his ability, and that his administrative skills would be utilized by the occupying British and so forth. So that I don't think he thought for one moment that he was responsible for all the deaths.

Q. Could you see, from your own eyes, the condition of the roads and the canals and the water facilities around the camp?

A. Well, you could, but I mean, you could see into the camp through the barbed wire and through the huts where the guards were, but I don't think many people would go around there. There were no cars or anything. And you certainly wouldn't see what was going on in the huts. {2927|2928}

Q. So after your first impression of horror and looking around and seeing what was the real cause, what did you do about your observations? Anything?

A. Well, I made them known to the people in charge, to Captain Michael John, who is in the Royal Army Medical Corps, and I told them to, in our discussions, as to what more we should do. And then I shut up about them.

Q. Why?

A. Well, the whole business was determined at Nuremberg. I think both Kramer and Klein were hanged, and —

Q. They were hanged for —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. Don't lead the witness.

THE COURT: Proceed, Mr. Christie.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Barton, yesterday we were discussing the article that was written in the History of the Second World War, which was authored by you, and I now produce and show to you what I believe is a copy made of the original article. Is that right, sir?

A. Yes. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that, please, Your Honour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I am content that it be filed as a lettered exhibit, but not as a numbered exhibit.

THE COURT: Rather than hold it up now, gentlemen, why don't we file it as a lettered exhibit, and I can hear submissions on it later?

MR. CHRISTIE: I do want it as a numbered {2929|2930} exhibit.

THE COURT: I know you do. We will hear it later.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. And does that article represent the truth to the best of your knowledge, sir?

A. Yes.

— EXHIBIT "U" Photocopy of article in "History of The Second World War" (Vol. 7, No. 15).

Q. Now, you were in the process of describing the response to and reaction from your publication of this observation about Belsen. Could you describe the general tenor of the response in the publications in the Times of London reacting to the article?

A. Yes. There was an exchange of letters over the following, I suppose, week or ten days, some of which were extremely derogatory, and saying that I got the whole thing mixed up and I was wrong and —

Q. Were there some favourable supporting views as well?

A. There were three letters that were favourable. Well, when I say "favourable" — but one was {2930|2931} favourable. The other was dispassionate. There was one from a man who was, I think, the President of the Jewish Institute, Dr. Arnsfeld (ph), who had written in The Times a critical letter to which I wrote to him personally and explained that I hadn't said that Belsen was not too bad. I thought it was a dreadful place, but that people had told me that, and had written it into the article, and irresponsibly it had been headlined.

Q. By whom had the headlines been attributed?

A. Well, "Belsen not too bad says psychiatrist" was the headline.

Q. And who authored the headline?

A. I don't know who the author was. He was a journalist.

Q. Did you learn, as a result of this, of other consequences of publishing this article?

A. Well, yes. At that time I was having a difference with the Scientology cult group, a religion, and they issued a news letter called, "Freedom", and in it they began to call me, "Belsen not so bad Barton".

Q. It became a nickname, did it?

A. Well, they attempted to smear it on {2931|2932} to me, yes. And then I thought it had all died down, and I was asked to discuss Scientology on Tom Snider's Tomorrow Show from Burbank, California. It was a national show in America. And I appeared with two ministers of the Church of Scientology who had the first six sessions. And then, when I appeared and said that I thought the church was wrong because it preyed on and profited from the emotionally unstable element and so forth, there was a tremendous explosion, and one of the ministers, name Whitmore, alleged that I had killed fifteen thousand Jews in Belsen.

Q. And did you consider taking some action as a result?

A. Yes. I saw the libel lawyer in Nixon, Hargraves — one of the leading firms in Rochester. I agreed that it was a gross libel, and that it would be a responsible action, and I thought it over, and I thought I would be spending the next three to five years, having some knowledge of the techniques and so forth, hopping from State to State, and there is only so much time in one's life, and I didn't want to spend five years of my time just defending that. So I didn't take action. I thought it was so absurd and so outrageous and so far from the truth.

Q. Could you evaluate the thousands of {2932|2933} deaths in Bergen-Belsen as to whether you, in your opinion, considered that it was related to a plan, deliberate extermination process?

A. Well, in my opinion it wasn't. As I've said before, typhus had broken out, and perhaps twenty per cent of the people there had typhus, and over fifty per cent of the people die with the disease. We had no chlorinephenocol or tetracycline to treat them, and there was no treatment, and secondly, a lot of people had tuberculosis, and the pneumonia that derived from typhus, and there were many other diseases, and the death rate continued over five hundred a day.

Q. Even after your arrival?

A. No. The inmates told me that the food we were giving them they were vomiting, and when they vomited, they died. In short, we were giving them glucose, which is like taking salt, because it so so hypertonic, and we changed it and made a gruel of powdered milk and cane sugar, and this stopped the vomiting. Mind you, not everybody needed this tremendous care, but the ones that were emaciated through starvation and malnutrition and so forth couldn't take it without dying, and secondly, if they had a good meal, it was considered a kindness, and the British "tommies" {2933|2934} gave them their rations, and their stomach sac burst because it had atrophied over the previous three or four months.

Q. Having taken what was then, and perhaps later, was a stand that put you into some difficulties, have you considered the effect on persons — and I mean by this, in terms of your qualifications and expertise as a psychiatrist — do you think it's healthy for persons to be able to question widely held views of their time?

A. Did you say — the gist of the question, is it healthy for them?

Q. Yes. Mentally, for the mental health of the people to question the widely-held views of their time.

A. Yes. I think it's essential that views should be challenged. Whether it is healthy or not, it doesn't matter.

Q. Now, I'd like to ask you, in view of your experience as a psychiatrist and having studied in the area of psychiatry for so many years, in your experience and in your opinion is there such a thing as what we commonly call brainwashing?

A. Yes.

Q. I'd like to put to you a hypothetical {2934|2935} question. In your experience as a psychiatrist, when a person is subjected to an accusation, a horrible accusation such as a planned, deliberate mass murder accusation, supported by massive public repetition, coupled with fears for one's physical safety, imprisonment, the hanging or death of one's friend and/or superiors, one's family being in the hands of one's captors, the destruction of one's home and property, the destruction of the value system one has been previously used to, the desolation of one's country, would an innocent person with average intelligence be able to respond independently of his captors if they asked him for an admission of his guilt?

A. I can't really answer that yes or no without misleading you, but it would depend on the individual. There are many people who could stand out — we've heard of them in the Soviet Union — who in spite of most of the desolation of the country, have stood out with remarkable courage and suffering. We know there were such people in fascist Germany who stood out in spite of most of their situations, and — but on the whole, the average person would be brainwashed and would be making confessions, as did the people who were brainwashed in their career in North Korea, South Korea, and later in, Vietnam, the prisoners of war.

When there is sufficient influence and {2935|2936} threat, the situation will overcome the majority of people, but there are some who won't yield what they consider to be the truth under any circumstances.

Q. Would they be in the majority?

A. No. The minority.

Q. Could you give us an indication, from your knowledge of the subject, what percentage of society is able to withstand those types of pressures?

THE COURT: Why don't you ask him, first, whether or not he has knowledge of those numbers? Then you can ask him —

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Do you have knowledge from your studies and experience of the percentage of the population?

A. I don't have numbers. I have impressions, that's it's small.

Q. Being both an eminent psychiatrist and a person who was present in Europe in 1945, how would you describe the mental condition of the men in the victorious armies in 1945 as to their capacity to impartially and objectively assess their enemies?

THE COURT: First of all, do you have that knowledge, Doctor? {2936|2937}

THE WITNESS: I don't have the knowledge of all, Your Honour.

THE COURT: i didn't think you would.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, could I put a hypothetical question to the witness, then? Well, all right, I will withdraw the question.

Q. Have you studied the mental process known as brainwashing?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is brainwashing?

A. It's a process or a system which aims at suspending or repressing the normal critical faculty which we obtain through the experience of a lifetime, and accepting views or truths which normally we would challenge, and our judgment would say were untrue. And it's brought about in a fairly systematic way. Usually brainwashing is carried out on a group of people, and they depend on their captors for their sustenance, for their food, for their sleep and so forth. Anyone in a group who is a natural leader or who challenges it, who has that quality of independence of thought, or anybody who has a sense of humour, tends to be removed from the group. And then rumours are deliberately sown as to the fate of that person. It's whispered from the guards that he's been {2937|2938} castrated or that he's been killed, or something like that. And there is a repetition again and again and again of the views which are required to be accepted. There is a reward for those people who seem to accept the views superficially, inasmuch as they may be given extra rations, or extra freedom, and there are certain deterrents for those who seem to be slow to accept the views, or who challenge them, or whose facial expression, which may be very misleading – because a good actor stands a better chance than an honest man – those who seem to be resisting them tend to be punished, their restrictions are reduced, they are made to wait, and so forth. And the process may continue with bright lights and lack of sleep. And then the individual's mental apparatus of resistance is so weakened that they will make confessions, or they will accept beliefs that normally they would reject; but I must emphasize, there are people who, in spite of these horrors, maintain that wonderful independence of thought.

Q. What part does repetition play in brainwashing?

A. It's extremely important. If you say the same thing often enough, it's said that some of it will persist in the mind; but in moments of psychological free-wheeling, when one just wants, to take a rest or a pause, {2938|2939} what one has heard again and again subliminally asserts itself as the truth. By "subliminal" I mean that one isn't fully conscious of the process. But if, as we'll say in the Nazi regime, one is told perpetually that there is some mystical super race and people are encouraged to make an implicit assumption of a person's superiority and this is repeated and repeated and repeated, a certain number will believe it to be so. It's the repetition. And truth, then, is no longer truth which can be challenged and debated and discussed and modified according to the facts. The truth becomes something which will be believed, which is very different.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Could you describe the mental state of a brainwashed victim?

A. Usually there is a loyalty to the group who is supporting them – that is, the people who give them their food and are responsible for their continued existence. There is a strange loyalty, and sometimes sort of pseudo-[friendship towards them. They accept the views, and they tend to be impatient and irritable with views to the contrary. Sometimes they may look a little dazed, and sometimes they, of course, become very depressed because they are puzzled that they are doing and saying things which they know {2939|2940} are alien to their fundamental beliefs. But these are general descriptions and wouldn't necessarily apply to anyone person who has been brainwashed.

Q. Can you give us some examples of brainwashing of which you are aware through your studies and knowledge?

A. Well, I mentioned Scientology, which is a process, really, a very subtle form of brainwashing in which the individual is taken into isolation with a person who is called an auditor and is asked questions again and again, and automatic obedience is required.

THE COURT: Automatic ...

THE WITNESS: Obedience.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: For an example, the auditor takes the individual into a room and repeatedly might ask, "Can pigs fly?" And the individual is required to say, "No". If he doesn't or if he doesn't do the right facial expression, then the question is asked again and again, and the instructions that are issued by the organization say that you must keep the individual there until you get a satisfactory response. And then there are various other requirements in Scientology. You ask all sorts of personal {2940|2941} questions, and in the thrall of the belief that your personality will improve and that your hangups, your emotional problems, which all of us have to some extent, will be cured, in the thrall of this belief the individual continues and eventually accepts the really absurd final conclusions of Ron Hubbard, who was the founder of Scientology – namely, that there is a thetan in the body which can be released, and this thetan can be released from the body and travel around freed from its physical form. And according to the gospel of Mr. Hubbard, many years ago volcanoes in the world were hydrogen bombed and thetans took over and inserted themselves in the bodies of human beings.

Q. So that is the example of current practices that you would call brainwashing?

A. It is an example of the absurd beliefs that could be inflicted on someone by this process of repetition of threat – because you didn't let me finish; having been asked these questions of, "Have you ever cheated on your income tax, and had a sexual alliance or cheated on your wife; give name of partners and telephone numbers", this is sent to Headquarters in East Grenstead [Grinstead], and then, if the individual steps out of line, the individual receives a threatening letter saying, "Be sure that anything you have {2941|2942} done wrong, or your crimes will be published and punished with the utmost rigors of the law". And this terrifies people, and I have seen people who have been through the process, and I've got into Scientology when I was a member of the National Association of Mental Health in England, and a doctor was going to meet the relatives of people who had been caught up in Scientology, and he was ill and I was asked to step in and to meet with these about two hundred people. And I discussed with them what could be done and what the process was and why it was the family was so divided and that they shouldn't be too hasty in cutting off the relationship. And from then on I was sort of attacked by Scientology.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So if you cross the types of people who do brainwashing, it gets a little dangerous, I suppose.

A. Well, the people who do brainwashing usually have an ulterior motive. I mean, the ulterior motive is a profit motive, because a tremendous amount of money changes hands. Brainwashing goes on in the Soviet Union. It seems to me the purpose is to obtain absolute, tyrannical control of the individual who must conform to the State rather than the State conform to him. This is very broad terms.

Q. Can you give us the description of {2942|2943} the faculties of the mind which are neutralized by brainwashing?

A. I would prefer "impaired" than "neutralized", because neutralized implies that there are two poles. There is a dimension of belief which varies from the absolute belief of hypnotism and schizophrenia through brainwashing, through normal credulity through openmindedness, which most of us believe we are, and we are most of the time in most topics, through the scientific skepticism and judicious distrust which are necessary to challenge science.

Thus, Galileo, through the bigoted and prejudiced views which discounts the other side and won't, entertain argument, "I know the answer; I don't want to hear anything about it", finally to the delusion which the psychotic person has and which rejects all contrary beliefs – this is a continuum. It doesn't apply to anyone person all the time.

For example, a physicist may be skeptical in his work, openminded with his family, bigoted in "his religious views or his political views, and yet, when he gets a pain in his back, he purchases the first part of rubbish he sees advertised on television, or goes to some quack therapist. So that our ability to withstand the onslaught of suggestion, {2943|2944} our ability to make independent belief varies according to the topic along the kind of scale I've indicated.

Now, brainwashing interferes and slides the scale towards credulity and belief. And this is what I mean by the critical faculty – the ability to say, “Hey, hang on a minute. That is not necessarily so.”

Q. Mm-hmmm. Would you describe, in relation to your first reaction to Belsen and your subsequent reaction to Belsen the change that occurs in people when they move from brainwashing away from it?

A. Well, I'd say I was mildly brainwashed when I went to Belsen. I assumed that all I'd heard was correct. We were led to think of ourselves as white knights in shining armour on white horses, implicitly superior to the people who had perpetrated these horrendous crimes. And as I say, that was the first view. And the English newspapers and the broadcasts and everything had confirmed this. But it was only seeing cooking facilities when I was told there had been deliberate starvations, finding books and records of food cooked and distributed, of seeing that there were showers in the huts that made me challenge it. I never – that changed from being very emotional, accepting too easily what I was being told. It was an example of coming out {2944|2945} of a brainwashed situation. And when people come out of a brainwash situation they become very depressed about what they may have done or how they may have misjudged situations.

Q. What, if any, is the antidote to a brainwashed state?

A. I wish I knew the answer, Mr. Christie. I think the old things such as vigilance, free speech, the social ideals of justice which is, perhaps, extremely the most important, and the second very close to it is compassion – without compassion and benignity justice can be very harsh, justice can always be misused as it was, for example, in Germany, as probably in Russia at the moment – but they are the jewels of our civilization – justice, benignity, fair dealing, fair play.

Q. You mentioned that the two types of people that are most difficult to brainwash would be those with a sense of humour and those with individualistic outlooks? Is that —

A. Yes. There are some people who seem to have an extremely independent approach to everything. They don't believe anything, really. I don't mean the pathologically iconoclastic who automatically, like the schizophrenic, will believe nothing, but there are people who challenge everything. {2945|2946} disputation is their sort of turn-on, their joy of living. This independence of spirit doesn't seem to be closely related to intelligence, because highly intelligent people can be brainwashed – I pointed that out with a physicist who may have extreme political views – and stupid, apparently peasant-like people with limited vocabulary can remain extremely independent, and although they are told this and that, they just won't believe it.

Q. What part, if any, does debate play in the process of an antidote to brainwashing?

A. Well, if debate is permitted, brainwashing isn't being practised, really and truly. Spurious debates are arranged sometimes in a brainwashing session, and the individuals who are acting the part of the adversary are made to look foolish, or are laughed at. This is the kind of little Courts that used to spring up in China, when an individual would be laughed at and jeered at and so forth because he perhaps kept a chicken back on the collective commune, or ate food on the side, and then there was an immediate tribunal – not quite a lynch, law, but an attempt to overcome the individual's challenging of the regulation of society that the State had imposed upon him.

As I see it, my personal view is, debate {2946|2947} and free speech is essential.

Q. Is there such a mental condition as mass hysteria?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe it for me?

A. Yes. It's a primitive mass sympathy in which a lot of people brought together under certain circumstances will behave in the same manner, best exemplified, perhaps, by the dancing manias which would go across Europe in the mediaval [sic] times. One person would start dancing, and perhaps a whole village would start dancing, or jumping about. The Tarantella, the musical piece is named after the bite of the tarantula, which doesn't really cause these convulsive, jerky movements.

THE COURT: The bite of the spider?

THE WITNESS: The bite of the spider, yes. But the group would be told, “The Tarantella is here”, and they would start dancing. Or if you take modern evangelism where everybody is told, “He wants you. He loves you. We need another hundred thousand dollars to do this or that.” You get the same kind of repetition and primitive mass sympathy in joining with another group of people who believe what they are told, that there is some immediate permanent {2947|2948} solution. This is the trick – immediate solution to the permanent problem of loneliness, whereas in fact the solution is promised in the next world and not this, but money is taken in this world. This is a form of repetition and primitive mass sympathy.

Q. In mass hysteria, does the media have a part?

A. Yes. The best example of primitive mass hysteria, I think, were the torchlight parades in Nazi Germany. In the evening one's defences are lowered and people were equipped with their insignia, they were given an identity, because there was a mass inferiority complex, there were torchlights, there was singing, and all the parts of the old German religion, the sort of services in Ravensbrück and places like that where there were torchlight parades used by Hitler to work up this primitive mass sympathy to the beliefs and support which were required of him.

Q. In view of your studies, knowledge and experience in psychiatry, do you think it is likely that the average person can maintain independent judgment of right and wrong if the media constantly press one view as right?

A. It is extremely difficult. Some would. Many wouldn't. {2948|2949}

Q. From your knowledge and experience, were any of the elements of mass hysteria evident in the attitude of the Allies after the War?

A. Well, I wouldn't call it mass hysteria. There was a tremendous elan. There was a feeling of personal superiority which was fostered, but I don't think it went to the extremes of mass hysteria. There may have been individual groups, but on the whole it was the feeling, I think, that any victorious army has, that it has succeeded, that its task was over.

Q. You, yourself, took an unpopular view on the issue of Belsen at the time. Were you under any pressure to recant?

A. Well, I mean, there were the letters in The Times which painted me as somebody who was a bit stupid, whose observations were incorrect, or was lying and I trying to whitewash the Nazi horrors. That was pressure, because it was so unfair. It made one appear to be biased, to have an ulterior motive. I wouldn't, for example, knowing what I know now, I wouldn't have published the article. I would have turned it down; but having written it, I have no option than to stand by it, as I said.

Q. Why would you stand by it? {2949|2950}

A. Well, I think if you write something, you have the responsibility of either explaining why you said what you have said and how it's correct, or else withdrawing it. I think that's the essence of science. We have to prove ourselves wrong as much as we prove ourselves right. And I wasn't anxious to prove myself right or wrong. I was anxious, having agreed to do the article, which I thought was a rather obscure publication, if I may say, and I was pressed to do it, I put down what I believed to be the facts from my observations, discussions, and I drew the conclusions which I thought were inevitable.

Q. Yes. Is there such a thing as a persecution complex?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe it, please?

A. Well, that's a condition in which an individual becomes abnormally suspicious – that is, they suspect that harm is going to occur to them on inadequate grounds. They believe that conspiracies may exist to damage them or to belittle them. They often become extremely self-conscious. They see harm and threat and geers [jeers] and sneers in ordinary, every-day trivial occurrences which, in the normal frame of mind, without the persecution complex, they may not {2950|2951} like it, they would dismiss it and say, “That's just too bad.” So it's a heightened awareness of possible harm which begins to erode the belief system until, eventually, the persecution complex may develop into the frank delusion in which the individual is convinced that there is harm plotted against him, and he has to take evasive action or protective action.

Q. Can these persecution complexes have a collective or group form?

A. Yes. Yes, they can.

Q. Could you give us examples?

A. I suppose one example would be the example of the attitude that so many German people I've talked to have had. They are apologetic for their role in the War. One would say, is that a persecution complex, or is it a realistic appraisal of the horrors that were perpetrated? One would reply, if the individual had executive authority and assisted in the perpetration of these horrors, then they have every right to feel ashamed.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. If, on the other hand, they were born after the War was over and if they had no executive authority, it's not logical that they can then be held responsible for what happened. {2951|2952}

Q. In the historical development of Nazism, was there the exploitation of this persecution complex?

A. Yes. I think that was one of Hitler's main – if I am allowed to give the opinion – the Versailles Treaty, which most people thought unfair because of the tremendous reparations that were demanded of the defeated German armies, the country could never hope to rebuild itself, and it was used as a fulcrum in order to get these bullies into power.

THE COURT: You say the Versailles Treaty. Do you refer to the Treaty that ended the First World War about 1919?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could the use of a persecution complex enforce or reinforce a group identity and create cohesion?

A. It could do, but I would say that adversity was a much more socially cohesive influence. If you have a common enemy or a common problem, it's more likely to draw people together, and thus, the identification of common enemies, or common problems in people who want to get people together for a certain course of action. {2952|2953}

Q. Mm-hmmm. Do you, having seen what you saw at Belsen, do you believe that those deaths were the result of a planned, deliberate extermination process?

A. No. But Your Honour, I can't account for all the deaths. I went there on May 2nd, and I don't know what happened before May 2nd. I know Red Cross parcels went in from March in '43, and Red Cross visitors were permitted from March '45, before the camp was ceded to the Allies, but I can't say whether or not people were clubbed to death or whether they were shot; but I suspect that this was the case. And the grounds for my suspicion are my experience as being —

THE COURT: You suspect what?

THE WITNESS: That there were incidents of brutality and murder. And the reason I suspect is, in running mental hospitals, one in England and one over here, I came across incidents of brutality which one wouldn't think would occur in a civilized country; but in both countries and it is usually some bully or sadist who wasn't adequately supervised who took their — exaggerated their own personal problem into a crusade, saying, "I did this for therapy", in striking an old person of eighty. It is vicious and most untherapeutic, but people can rationalize their rottenness {2953|2954} in this way.

MR. CHRISTIE: Were the deaths in Belsen, as you described, a deliberate extermination process in excess of fifty thousand casualties?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Can you give us an approximation?

A. A guesstimate would be between twenty and thirty thousand.

THE COURT: What is a guesstimate?

THE WITNESS: Well, Your Honour, I know that by April seventeen thousand bodies had been buried. I know that we lost about five thousand, which would make twenty-two thousand. I suspect that there were other deaths which were not recorded, so I would have said that it was about fifty thousand but I don't think anybody has the figures. We know that between fifty and sixty thousand people were transferred from the east, but we don't know exactly how many. Those that started out, many died on the way side but I would have said that that is the area — the approximate number, I mean, by "area".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yeah. Are you anti-semitic?

A. No. I think that — I think that was {2954|2955} one of the terrible things about the German episode. And people still make this mistake. They talk about Germans persecuting Jews, but they should talk about Germans persecuting Germans, because they were all German people who had been born there. And the Jewish people carried the traditions and the values and made, perhaps, very good contribution to society in literature, arts, science and so forth. Or you should talk about the non-Jewish versus the Jewish, but I can't really mix apples and oranges and say Germans and Jews. Again, anti-semitism is fearing, presumably, from one's point of view, enemies in oneself which one projects. And Hitler was very anti-semitic from writings and things he did, and he projected this to the people and he found it very helpful, because there had been anti-semitic programmes in Germany for thousands of years, but ultimately, if one allows anti-semitism and its difference, to know what a semite is, and one is never sure, but I know the concept, but ultimately, if one admits or permits such a situation to exist, it is going to rebound against any group — lawyers, doctors, blacks, whites and so forth. And therefore, if people have antisemitic feelings, and many do, it is essential that they should be aired and the true source of those feelings should be revealed to them. I never have been anti-semitic. Of {2955|2956} course, one has to examine oneself, and there are scales which measure degrees of anti-semitism.

Q. Yes. Have you been asked the question, or had you considered whether six million Jews were gassed to death?

A. I have never been asked, were six million gassed to death, no, I don't think so.

Q. And do you, have you — in your opinion are any of us immune from brainwashing?

A. Yes. Some are.

Q. Some are. Did you have personal knowledge of any other camp but Belsen?

A. No. Only hearsay. I mean, I believed and still do what is generally held. I believed that six million people died, six million Jewish people, and I think the concentration of the fury and the viciousness was on the people of Jewish religion; but I don't know that it was all deliberate. I think there was criminal negligence. I think there was bureaucratic bungling. I think there was dreadful disregard for a human being's needs and rights, but as I said earlier, just to ascribe it to gothic badness is to slip over the real causal chain of events, and when one does that, it is a very slippery slope, meaning that decency {2956|2957} normal decency of average people gets lulled into a sense of false security and gets mixed up where the bad is with the black hats. It could never happen again.

Q. Is there any historical event that is more frequently repeated to people than the six million figure?

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw the question. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Dr. Barton, when you were in Belsen I gather that from what people said to you and from the condition of the camp and what you found in the kitchen records you understood that there was a great influx of people towards the end of the War the last four, five, six months.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know from your own knowledge what the camp was used for, what Belsen was established for?

A. I understood that it was a camp {2957|2958} where people who could be transferred to another country, or come over to America, could be concentrated.

Q. In exchange for Germans being repatriated back to Germany?

A. I didn't think that, no. I think it was just mercenary. It, was for money, that if somebody guaranteed the money and the fare —

Q. And did you form any opinion as to whether or not it would be in the Germans' benefit to have people in better shape when they were shipped out to other countries?

A. Oh, yes. I think that, as you say it, it was said that the idea was to feed them up so that it would give a better impression, yes.

Q. And as the trainloads of people came in at the end of the War, would you agree with me that it would be possible that people got in to get food in, too?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were you at Belsen for, Doctor?

A. From May 2nd to June 1st.

Q. About a month?

A. Yes. Until we had emptied the horror {2958|2959} camp and it had been burned down.

Q. The whole camp was burned to the ground?

A. Well, there were three camps, and the horror camp was the original Belsen with the wooden huts that I described, and the cemetery at the far end, and that was burned down May 21st.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to personally see Kramer —

A. No.

Q. — the Kommandant? Do you have any personal knowledge of any other camps that Kramer was a Kommandant of?

A. No.

Q. Or worked in?

A. No.

Q. Have you had occasion to read, guess out of curiosity, having been there, about the Belsen trial?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. You mean the Nuremberg trial, the military trial at Nuremberg, I presume. {2959|2960}

Q. Yeah. I have a volume here. It's called the Belsen trial, edited by R. Phillips.

A. Yes. I haven't read this, no, not this one.

Q. Then I won't show you that. Thank you.

A. I've read the military trial at Nuremberg, which applies to Belsen.

Q. All right. But this trial I am showing you applies to Kommandant Kramer in particular.

A. Oh, I haven't read that.

Q. So that is it — on what did you base your opinion that Kommandant Kramer thought he was doing the job to the best of his ability?

A. Well, when I was in the camp, I talked to various people, including doctors who were interned. There was no love for Kramer; there was no praise for him; whereas Klein, the medical director, there were mixed views. Kramer was thought to be —

Q. I am going to stop you. Your opinion of Kramer is based on information that you got from other people.

A. Yes. {2960|2961}

Q. I was very interested in your comments about brainwashing this morning. Is that a process that continues over a long period of time, or is it a short term process?

A. Well, it —

Q. Or does it vary?

A. It varies. It can be an acute, intensive process. Usually it is over weeks, if it is politically instituted.

Q. How long do the effects of the brainwashing last?

A. It depends on the individual, and the reinforcement that the individual believes is given.

Q. Have you done studies on, yourself, or read the literature on the outcome of the Nuremberg trials — many, many books, articles that are written, not just about Nuremberg but about the annihilation of European Jewry during World War II?

A. Yes.

Q. And although the question wasn't asked you directly by Mr. Christie, the implication was there that we were all brainwashed about the annihilation of European Jewry from World War II. I can't ask you about the facts {2961|2962} because you are not a historian, but as a psychiatrist what would your response be to that?

A. I think there was a deliberate attempt on the part of certain groups of the S.S. — that is the Schutzstaffel or Gestapo under Himmler — I think there was an attempt to dispose of Jews who had property or land that they wanted. At one time I understand the plan was to ship them all to Madagascar. This fell through and that fell through.

Q. I'm sorry, I am going to have to stop you. Perhaps if I can make it clear, I can't ask you questions about history, although you probably know more than I do, but my question really is whether all those books and trials that we all heard of, whether those were all the product of brainwashing, or whether you had ever formed any opinion on it.

A. No, I don't think they were all the product of brainwashing. No. I don't think they were justice in the sense that we know it, however.

Q. I'm sorry. The phenomena you described of mass hysteria — and you gave two examples of the dancing mania and mass evangelism, and both of those appear to me to have immediacy to them, same as the torch-{2962|2963}light parade, a temporary giving up of your facilities but it may only be for an hour or two hours, it is not for an extended time — is that fair to say?

A. That is fair to say. Those are examples. But I did add that there was reinforcement, which is important to understand why people could be whipped up into a fervour. If people who would normally have achieved very little in life were suddenly handed the house and property belonging, say, to a Jewish merchant and told, "This really belongs to you", if they were given offices that neither their ability, their integrity or education entitled them to, then they would begin to develop a loyalty to the source of their bread.

It was a kind of dispossession of Jewish people and handing it over to enlist support and to keep up this concept of Germany and race and all that stuff.

Q. What happens when you dehumanize people, when you refer to them as lice, germs, something subhuman, and over an extended period of time? What happens to the view of those people within that society, their being denigrated in that fashion?

A. There is a very characteristic reaction that affects most, but not all. They become cowed {2963|2964} and timid, sometimes mute. They tend to develop a characteristic gait — that is, they walk with their hands across their body, and their eyes lowered. Eye contact is poor. There tends to develop a sort of pathological, prolonged procrastination; everything is put off. The individual tends to rely on hopes for the future which, of course, without effort, may never come. And sometimes they even resist changes to the dreadful state, mental state that they've got into. You call it the institutionalization; I call it institutional neurosis.

Q. And that is one of your specialties.

A. That is one of my specialties, and that interest arose from my experience in Belsen.

Q. And is that how the Jewish people looked at Belsen?

A. Some of them did, yes, but I think that all you need me to give an answer, there were people that had tremendous courage that remained brave, and in spite of all the pressures and all the horrors, they still had the independence of thought and action.

Q. You have been very fair, Dr. Barton, and I think I understand what we are talking about as a group experience, and as with any group experience, there are {2964|2965} extreme ends that can apply. Is that true?

A. That's so, but if we take the mean, the sixty-six per cent of deviation that can apply to either side, if you can apply such terms, that is what we are talking about. Then there are exceptions.

Q. The persecution complex my friend spoke of next, have you done any studies or any work of whether, over the last forty years, people were subjected to a persecution complex to make them believe that large numbers of their faith were slaughtered in World War II?

A. No. There have not been any studies, but I would have thought that went without challenge. vast numbers died. And of those vast numbers there's no question in my mind, some were slaughtereded. How many, I have no idea.

Q. The principal features of brainwashing I think you mentioned were repetition and threats.

A. Yes. Repetition, threats. Could I add rewards and punishment, implied or explicit.

Q. What if the repetition and the threats are designed to get you to say something that you know, both in your regular state and in your brainwashed state, will bring about your death? Wouldn't that be very difficult to do? {2965|2966}

A. Difficult, but I think the fanaticism of the man who drives a truck full of explosives into an embassy is an example of brainwashing, where the individual will die for what he believes to be a cause. So I agree, it's difficult. The kamikaze pilots in Japan, it is a dreadful thing that they did, but it was an example of brainwashing, plus courage, although they were on the other side.

Q. Well, I think that part of the suggestion may be that people who testified were accused of various trials, war crime trials ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... were brainwashed, saying whatever they said in their confessions, or in their testimony before the Court. And my question, first of all, is whether you have read the material or the background, or done any studies on that yourself to form an opinion.

A. I've read, and as I said earlier, I don't think it is the kind of justice we expect and take for granted. Witnesses were not available, or access to the witnesses wasn't given. Admissible evidence in the sense that it mustn't be hearsay, that the credibility of the person giving the evidence can be established by challenging him and seeing if he tells lies and so forth, well, I think these {2966|2967} processes, these refinements which enable whoever has to judge to make the judgment were not used to the extent that they should have been. And I think that the executions, quite frankly, should have been carried out without the trials.

Q. Okay. You are British by birth and American by persuasion?

A. Well, I am still an alien resident in America. I haven't quite made up my mind.

Q. Are you familiar with the judicial systems of France and Russia, the other two members of the tribunal other than Britain [sic] and the United States?

A. I don't know much about them.

Q. And do you know what went into the production of the rules of evidence for the International Military Tribunal as an amalgamation of those justice systems?

A. Well, what was considered a brilliant stroke, the guilt by belonging to a criminal organization, was one of those rules. My problem there is that this wasn't formulated prior to the trials, and I think retroactive legislation, although it's very attractive to the victor, isn't necessarily fair play.

Q. Are you familiar with the London Agreement of 1942? {2967|2968}

A. I don't know that.

Q. And going off the topic, you weren't happy with the rules, as I understand it, of evidence and courtroom procedure. My question was whether all of those people who testified at their own trial and provided statements were brainwashed.

A. I don't think all of them were. I don't think Goering was ever brainwashed; he was an evil example of a person who remained immune. But I think whoever had the responsibility of defending people in those trials came up against insurmountable barriers – some of the witnesses were in the Russian section; others had disappeared; and I think they had a nightmare in trying to collect together a case, that they had been able to present a case with the facility that any civilized group has. I don't know that the outcome would have been that different, but I think one is then slipping over to the sort of Nazi-appointed judges who tend to make their own rules and tended to disregard what didn't suit them, and maybe it was infectious, but I agree with your Senator Governor Taft who, in Kennedy's "Profiles of Courage", expresses the opinion so beautifully.

Q. Are you aware that the prosecution – I'm sorry, that the defence as well as the prosecution were {2968|2969} entitled to file affidavits and witness statements without having the witnesses there to testify?

A. No. No, I wasn't aware.

Q. And there have been quite a number of trials since, after 1950 ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... in West Germany and in other countries; and are you aware of the basis on which they are held, for example in West Germany?

A. Not the full basis, but I believe that it is a very different situation now, that evidence is sought and permitted by both sides, and both sides are facilitated to present their point so that you get a true adversarial action.

Q. So that in your opinion, was brainwashing the least likely to be ineffective for people, say, being tried in the 1950s and sixties and seventies for war crimes?

A. You see, in some people the threat of dispossession, of loss of pensions which were part of the penalties that were to be exacted, whilst not constituting brainwashing, would play a very important role in their state of mind. {2969|2970}

Q. I guess we can say that about anybody who comes before any court – the threat of losing their job or if somebody is charged with sexual assault, their wife or community finding out would be very traumatic for them.

A. Oh, yes. Yes.

Q. That is the same in any trial.

A. Yes.

Q. But not everybody, surely, is brainwashed.

A. No. I was saying, it wasn't exactly brainwashing, but there were pressures, persuasion.

Q. Excuse me just a minute.

THE COURT: Sorry to interject, but just while counsel is looking for something, Doctor, do I gather that what you say on the subject of brainwashing is that there is a difference between being under pressure and being brainwashed?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Doctor. I have no further questions – oh, excuse me just a minute.

Q. Is it – just going back for a moment to Belsen and your experiences at Belsen, were you able to {2970|2971} observe the physical condition of the S.S. and the various groups that were running the camp?

A. No. Most of them had gone –

Q. Of course. You were –

A. – as of May 2nd.

Q. So you have no way of comparing their physical condition with the inmates.

A. No.

Q. And is there anything – your article on Belsen was written in 1965?

A. Sixty-eight.

Q. Sixty-eight. Sorry. And is there anything that day, in retrospect – and I am not talking about the pressure, just the letters from The Times and what-have-you, but from your own research and thoughts on the matter, is there anything today that you would change in that article?

A. Nothing material, no. I mean, I think the important things are the facts that I witnessed directly. The conclusions, oddly enough – I mean, Glyn Hughes, the medical officer who took over, was very aggressive in a television interchange that we had about that time, but he admitted, frankly, in his letter to The Times that nobody said there was any deliberate policy of starvation. Of course, {2971|2972} people did say that, but he was saying nobody had made that statement.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much, Doctor.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Doctor, my friend brought up the question of the S.S. guards. Do you know how some of those guards disappeared?

A. Not for certain. Some, presumably, found their way back –

MR. GRIFFITHS: My understanding is they weren't there when Dr. Barton got there, so I don't see how he can say that through hearsay.

MR. CHRISTIE: He could have seen the bodies.

THE COURT: Did you see any S.S. bodies?

THE WITNESS: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I ask him his medical opinion on the matter? {2972|2973}

THE COURT: On what?

MR. CHRISTIE: On the matter of how the guards disappeared.

THE COURT: If they disappeared, how could he give a medical opinion?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, he conducted a medical inquiry of certain things. He might be able to give that. I don't know. I don't want to have the jury go out if I can avoid it. Can Your Honour tell me your feeling on the matter?

THE COURT: Well you ask the question and then I will decide whether it is the proper one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have knowledge of an incident in which S.S. guards were murdered?

A. Only hearsay evidence, but there were rumours that —

THE COURT: That answers that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you, Doctor.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could we take the morning break, please, Your Honour? {2973|2974}

THE COURT: Yes, certainly.

— The jury retires. 11:00 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have a difficulty which I could explain in the presence of the jury, but I thought I should mention first, Your Honour, I have a witness coming from out of the country to follow Dr. Barton, but I have a short witness and he won't be here — the first person I mentioned won't be here until Monday. I have a short witness to fill in in the event of this type of contingency, but I found out just a few moments ago, a half an hour ago now that he, for some reason, has wandered off from where expected him to be.

THE COURT: I've had that problem many times.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I suggest, if possible, we could adjourn perhaps for two hours till one thirty, take an early lunch and I will be happy to {2974|2975} start then than later and get our short witness through today, if possible, as soon as possible.

Would that be convenient, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sounds like the only reasonable approach to the whole matter. Do you want me to explain that to the jury or do you want to do it? I am in your hands for a change.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would be glad to say that, sir, because it is my fault, and perhaps I should acknowledge that.

THE COURT: Thank you. Bring in the jury.

— The jury enters. 11:32 a.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I anticipated that I would call another witness from out of the country on Monday. I have a short witness that I can call in the meantime, but at the present moment he is unavailable. I wonder if I might ask to take an early lunch adjournment from this moment of eleven thirty until, perhaps, one thirty, when I believe I can have my witness available.

I'm sorry for the inconvenience, Your {2975|2976} Honour, but I didn't know how long the matter this morning would take.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, what you have just heard is a problem that's been happening for decades. It has happened to me. It happens to everybody who practises in our Courts.

The only reasonable approach to take is to ask your stomachs to accept an early lunch and please be back here at one thirty;

— The jury retires. 11:33 a.m.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have, first of all, to swear the witness to qualify him as an interpreter from the English language to the German language and vice versa. I also have something to — should I do that in front of the jury?

THE COURT: Yes. Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 1:35 p.m. {2976|2977}

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to qualify him, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is this the person who is going to translate?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir, but I thought I should have to qualify him first so I can —

THE COURT: No. He can take the oath as a translator and then qualify him.

HANS VON DER HEIDE, sworn as interpreter

MR. CHRISTIE: I propose to lead the witness a bit, sir.

Q. You are Hans von der Heide, born on the 3rd of December, 1944, and you reside in West Germany and employed by the Canadian National Armed Forces from 16th of April, 1956, until the 30th of September, 1965, and you worked as a translator and clerk administrator for the Fourth Platoon of the Canadian Armed Forces as an interpreter; is that correct, sir?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you progressed to a court interpreter and senior interpreter at the —

A. Yes.

Q. And it was said by Captain Lucier in his letter of 30th of September, 1965, that — well, never mind. You were a translator from English to German and German to English, and you worked for the Military Police and local and regional police authorities of the Allied administration; is that right, sir? {2977|2978}

A. That is correct.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am content, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Do you want to call the witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness is Mr. Thies Christopherson [Christophersen].

THIES CHRISTOPHERSON [Christophersen], affirmed through interpreter

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

THE COURT: (To the Interpreter): Would you please say to the witness that, even if he understands the English language, if he proposes to speak in the German language, he will speak only that language. Please tell him that.

Mr. Interpreter, I say to you, sir, that you will please repeat each and every word the witness employs in the German language, and you will repeat it as you heard it in that language into the English language. Do you understand?

THE INTERPRETER: I understand.

THE COURT: Proceed.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Christopherson, have you read the Harwood book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" in the German language?

A. Yes, in the German language.

Q. Please turn to page 17.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could the jury have a copy? {2978|2979}

— Exhibit 1 handed out to the jury.

Q. Where do you live, sir?

A. In Germany.

Q. Where?

A. In the Province of Angeln, Schleswig-Holstein [Schleswig-...].

Q. How old are you?

A. Sixty-seven.

Q. Were you in the German Army during the War?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: What War?

THE WITNESS: In the Second World War.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Were you injured in the Second World War?

- A. Yes.
- Q. In what part of the world did that injury occur?
- A. South of Sabruken [Saarbrücken], when the Maginot line was over-run.
- Q. When was that?
- A. In 1940.
- Q. And how were you injured?
- A. I got a shrapnel in my forehead.
- Q. What happened to you as a result of that injury?
- A. He was no longer considered fit for frontline services and spent a lot of time in military hospitals. {2979|2980}
- Q. Did you take any military training after that?
- A. He was —
- THE COURT: No. What was the answer?
- A. He was given —
- THE COURT: That's not the answer.
- A. I was given a holiday for studies to do studies in.
- MR. CHRISTIE: What studies?
- A. Agriculture.
- Q. Where?
- A. In Lan[d]sberg unde Varthe [an der Warthe].
- Q. After studying there where did you go.
- A. I was sent to the Ukraine as an expert for the planting for the plantation of Kok-Sagis?
- Q. Is there an English word for Kok-Sagis?
- A. The internationally known Latin expression.
- THE INTERPRETER: He doesn't know of an English expression for this.
- Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What was the purpose of this plant?
- A. This plant contained a white latex which contains India rubber.
- Q. Where did you go to develop this plant?
- A. At first into the Ukraine.
- Q. And then?
- A. And then we were expelled from {2980|2981} the Ukraine and I was posted to the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute in Berlin. It was in Berlin, but also had a branch in Auschwitz, because Kaiser Wilhelm had a branch in Auschwitz.
- Q. Did you write the book, "Die Auschwitz-Luge ..." (German title)
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Was it an account of your own experiences?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Was it published in 1973?
- A. The first edition, yes.
- Q. Was it published by the German lawyer Dr. Manfred Roeder?
- A. The first edition, yes.
- Q. And the periodical Deutsche Berger Initiativ (phonetic) [Bürgerinitiativ]?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Is it an eye witness account?
- ANSWER BY THE WITNESS: Yes.
- Q. Of Auschwitz?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Did you work in laboratories at Auschwitz?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Were you researching into the production of synthetic rubber for the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute?
- A. Yes. We checked the India rubber content of these plants.
- Q. Why?
- A. Because we had to select the best {2981|2982} plants out for further development.
- Q. Were you in the Auschwitz area in 1944?
- A. Yes. From January to December.
- Q. During that time did you visit the camps, the separate camps comprising the large Auschwitz complex?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Did you visit on occasion Auschwitz-Birkenau?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Was it alleged, after the War, that massacres of Jews took place there, to your knowledge?
- A. Yes. I only heard it myself after the War.
- THE COURT: "I only heard" what? I missed part of that.
- Would you ask him again, Mr. Christie, please? He only heard something. I missed what he heard.
- MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry.
- Q. Was it alleged, after the War, that there were wholesale massacres of Jews in Auschwitz Birkenau to your knowledge?
- A. Yes. This was contended.
- Q. From your experiences there do you believe those stories?
- A. Absolutely impossible.
- Q. When you heard those stories after the War, what did you think?
- A. Propaganda. {2982|2983}
- Q. How many times did you speak to inmates from Birkenau in the year you were working there?
- A. Almost every day.
- Q. Have you read all the newspaper stories and radio broadcasts in Birkenau?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Do you believe them today?
- A. No.
- Q. Have you said that in many times and places?
- A. Yes.
- Q. To what purpose?
- A. I wished to rehabilitate myself and my generation.
- Q. Have you ever been, believed?
- THE INTERPRETER: I beg your pardon? Would you say that again?
- Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Were you ever believed?
- A. Yes and no. Many people believed me and many people didn't.
- Q. During your whole time at Auschwitz did you ever observe the slightest evidence of mass gassings?
- A. No.
- Q. Have you ever smelled the smell of burning flesh in the area?
- A. No the air in Auschwitz was very clear, very clean.
- Q. Did you ever see flames shooting {2983|2984} from any chimneys?
- A. No. But people told me something to that effect, and I checked into this.
- Q. What was it people told you?
- A. My housemaid told me that people are being burned in this area.
- Q. What did you do when you heard these rumours?
- A. At first I questioned the maid, and she told me there was a —
- THE COURT: Just a moment. We want to hear what the maid told him?
- MR. CHRISTIE: Well —
- THE COURT: As a result of what the maid told him you might ask him what he did. It's hearsay.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. It is hearsay.
- THE COURT: Well, then, please conduct it the way that you know it should be conducted.
- MR. CHRISTIE: There are exceptions to the hearsay rule.
- THE COURT: This is not one of them, Mr. Christie. If I am wrong, you can correct me elsewhere.
- Q. MR. CHRISTIE: As a result of the conversation with your maid what investigations did you make?
- A. I take my bicycle and moved around all the camp and looked for fireplaces.
- Q. Did you find any?
- A. Yes, there were fireplaces, but {2984|2985} certainly not burning of human beings.
- Q. In the vicinity of the main camp of Auschwitz was there a large farrier's works?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Was there a smell of molten iron there?
- MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. If Mr. Christie wants to get up and give the evidence, we don't need Mr. Christopherson. It is his witness. He is leading him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suggest that there are occasions when the text of a book is in issue that that is inevitable and unavoidable.

THE COURT: The text of the book is not in issue.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: No, it is not.

MR. CHRISTIE: The case is about the text of the book.

THE COURT: It may be, but that is not one of the issues. Please lead the evidence in the same way as you object when the Crown does that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, there are exceptional cases.

THE COURT: This is not one of them. Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sir.

Q. How many people lived in the area of Auschwitz, both prisoners and civilians?

A. My estimation is 140,000 to 200,000. {2985|2986}

THE COURT: Is the word for "thousand" the same in English as it is in German, Mr. Interpreter?

THE INTERPRETER: It is the same in English as it is in German.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you ever find out if there was a crematorium in Auschwitz?

A. Yes. I was told there was one.

Q. Did you know anyone who died and was cremated there?

A. The wife of my superior officer, Obersturmführer [sic] Stier (phonetic) died in Auschwitz of typhus and was cremated there.

Q. Were there any restrictions on your travelling in the area of Auschwitz I or Birkenau?

A. No. I was completely at liberty, and I was even allowed to receive visitors from my relatives.

Q. Were you in the S.S.?

A. No.

Q. Were you in the Army?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you have a rank?

A. Yeah.

Q. What was it?

A. It is a special officer, special officer and the letter "Z".

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge of the Red Cross in the area of the camp?

A. I saw they were there.

Q. When were they there? {2986|2987}

A. In the summer of 1944.

Q. How many of your relatives visited you while you were there?

A. My wife visited me every month, and my mother visited me once in the summer, once during the summer.

Q. How often did you meet inmates from Birkenau while you worked in that area?

A. There was a group of female inmates from Birkenau that arrived every morning at arise call and I had to detail these women for field work.

Q. Were you friends with any of these women?

A. I listened to their complaints, if there were, and I did my best to help these people. I behaved myself correctly.

Q. I didn't mean personal friendships. I meant did you have friendships such as conversations?

A. Yes, we had conversations.

Q. Did the inmates appear happy?

THE INTERPRETER: Say that again, please.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did the inmates appear happy?

A. Yes, they did. Which camp are you referring to now?

Q. From Birkenau.

A. Yes, I can say so.

Q. Were there, from those inmates, {2987|2988} any complaints or stories of mass gassings?

A. No.

Q. If you had heard such complaints, what would you have done?

A. I heard these stories about a fire and I immediately informed my superior officer of it.

Q. Did you work with a Russian agronomist?

A. There was quite a number of Russian specialists there.

Q. Do you recall anything happening to one of them?

A. He had a close relationship with a female inmate which did not remain without results or consequences.

Q. What were the consequences?

A. He married – the inmate became pregnant

Q. And what happened after that?

A. The female prisoner was released from the camp and the Russian agronomist married her and I met both of them later in Halle in Germany.

Q. From what camp was the inmate?

A. From Raisko

Q. How far from Auschwitz?

A. About two kilometers.

Q. Was Raisko a satellite of Auschwitz?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of {2988|2989} religious services held in the camps?

A. Yes.

Q. Were there any held for Jews?

A. There was one special room reserved in Raisko in which every religious denomination, including the Jews, could hold their ceremonies.

Q. Was there a cinema for prisoners?

A. Sometimes every week, sometimes every two weeks cinema van arrived at Raisko camp.

Q. What was Kommando "F" from Birkenau?

A. It was the working group that arrived every day in Raisko to help us at various tasks which we had to perform there.

Q. How many were in that group?

A. About two hundred persons.

Q. Were they men or women?

A. Only women.

Q. Where did they go at night?

A. Back to the camp in Birkenau.

Q. Did you get to know them by face?

A. Very many of them.

Q. Did you get to know them by name?

A. We called them generally by their first names, but we called them Mrs. or Miss, whatever was the case.

Q. To your knowledge did prisoners unofficially leave Birkenau at any time?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. How did they do this?

A. So they did not go into the camp. {2989|2990} They were hiding someplace, but in order that a number of the roll call was correct, a different person sleeping in their place. And because the other person had opportunity to slip into the camp during the night.

Q. Was the camp of Birkenau guarded at night?

A. Yeah.

Q. Was it guarded by day?

A. Okay. During the day a very large area was surrounded by picket guards, and within this area the people were allowed, could move about freely.

Q. From whence did the people come who took their places?

A. I suppose that they were from the nearest vicinity or the environment of the camp.

Q. In your book did you express views about the Frankfurt trial?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you express views about Richard Baer?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What did you say in your book about —

A. I quoted Paul Rassinier —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a minute, sir.

I don't believe there is any reference to the Frankfurt trial or Richard Baer in the pamphlet. If Mr. Christopherson was there, or if this is something he saw himself, I would be happy to hear it. If it is {2990|2991} something he heard from somebody else, it is hearsay and I don't think it is admissible.

THE COURT: There is mention on page 18.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I am following through on the article. I am on the last paragraph before the Warsaw Ghetto issue, and it's there said:

"Finally, the account of Mr. Christopherson draws attention to a very curious circumstance. The only defendant who did not appear at the Frankfurt Auschwitz Trial in 1963 was Richard Baer, the successor of Rudolf Hoess as commandant of Auschwitz."

Now, I want to ask the witness whether he made reference [sic] in his book to Richard Baer, not for the truth of what he said, but —

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I beg your pardon, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you, in your book, discuss Richard Baer?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you say about the manner in which he died? Do you have a copy of your book? You'll have to translate. (To the Interpreter): You have to translate everything the witness says.

Maybe I can put the question another way and obviate the necessity of searching the book.

A. I did say in my book that he has {2991|2992} been questioned and that he denied any knowledge of gassings and that he died in prison.

Q. Was there any reference in your book to how he had died?

A. I think I expressed a kind of a suspicion that he died at Auschwitz in the "Deutsche Bürger-Ini[t]iative." (phonetic)

THE INTERPRETER: May I quote what he said in the book?

THE COURT: Not unless counsel asks you.

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of the fact that the portion is found, may the Interpreter read from the book? I would like the witness to say in the book —

THE COURT: About how somebody called Baer died?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir, because, "Did Six Million Really Die?" said that the book that is in the witness' hand, his book, says something. I would like to know —

THE COURT: What does page 18 say?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, whether the book that is quoted on page 18, I believe, says that page 18 says what it says. That is what I want to know.

THE COURT: Well, why don't you ask the witness what page 18 says? Then you can ask the witness whether the book concerns it, and that's the end of it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was, Your Honour, but I thought that was leading. {2992|2993}

THE COURT: No, it isn't leading.

MR. CHRISTIE: Very well.

Q. Now, did you say, in your book, that Richard Baer died, "in a highly mysterious way"?

A. Although only fourteen days before he was very, very healthy, Richard Baer died very, very suddenly on the 17th of June, 1963, in prison where the preliminary hearing took place.

Q. Do you say, in your book, that, "During the whole time in which he governed Auschwitz ..."

CHRISTIE: Translate that, please?

INTERPRETER: Will you say that again, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: Do you say in your book that, "During the whole time in which he governed Auschwitz ..."

MR. CHRISTIE: Translate, please.

A. Yes, he quoted —

MR. CHRISTIE: Just translate what he said, please.

A. Yes. In quotation that during the whole time in which he was running Auschwitz, that he has never seen gas chamber nor even known that such gas chambers existed.

Q. And does your book say that, from this statement, nothing would dissuade him?

A. Yes.

Q. How many satellite camps were there to the Auschwitz complex?

A. That is a question which I cannot {2993|2994} precisely answer.

Q. Were they divided by the main — well, were there more than Auschwitz I and Birkenau?

A. Yes. I already spoke about Raisko.

Q. What other? Name others.

A. And Monowitz was another one.

Q. Name others if you can.

A. I do not know other names, but I know there were several more camps.

Q. Were they divided by the main Krakow-Vienna railway line? camps?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the purpose of these camps?

A. It was an internment camp.

Q. Was anything produced there?

A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. For instance, Buna, artificial.

Q. Was the labour of the inmates compulsory?

A. I only can say how it was with us in Raisko, and there it was not compulsory work.

Q. From your observations of the camp of Birkenau and your experience as an agronomist, did you have any personal ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Translate that.

Q. ... first hand knowledge of the ground water level?

A. Yes. {2994|2995}

Q. How far down was the ground water level?

A. In many places it was already at one meter depth.

Q. How was the lay of the land around Birkenau camp?

A. Behind the camp of Birkenau there was a swamp and some bushes with trees in between.

THE COURT: With what?

A. Trees. And a very high ground water level. And there were also a number of fish ponds, and they were a little bit further to the south.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: If you dug a hole into the ground around Birkenau camp six meters wide, six meters long and six meters deep, what, from your experience, would happen?

THE COURT: Just a moment. Let's hear if he's had any experience in doing that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have experience digging in the ground around Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. From your experience if you dug a hole six meters long, six meters deep, what would happen?

A. This was not possible because of the subsoil water.

Q. What would happen?

A. The embankment would slide down.

Q. And what would happen to the hole?

A. It would immediately run full of water. {2995|2996}

Q. Were there any hills in the immediate vicinity of Birkenau?

A. Yes, there was, but that was some distance away.

Q. How far?

A. About one kilometer away from that area.

Q. Could there have been a million people go into Birkenau without your being aware from your own experience?

A. It's impossible. One million people?

Q. Could a hundred thousand people have gone into Birkenau? Please listen to my question, witness, till I finish my question. Could a hundred thousand people go into Birkenau without your being aware, from your daily observations?

THE INTERPRETER: He doesn't quite understand the question. In what time, daily or in what time?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: During the time that you were in the area, over the year that you were there, did a hundred thousand people —

A. I cannot answer this question.

Q. The inmates that you saw daily from Birkenau, when they arrived to work each day, what were they doing?

A. They were detailed for work.

Q. Did any of the women with you appear too sick to work?

A. I saw in the beginning that some {2996|2997} people appear to be a little weak, but once they had worked for us, after they had worked for a couple of weeks, they had regained their strength.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Christopherson [Christophersen], do you have a criminal record?

A. Yes.

Q. You've been convicted in Denmark?

A. No.

Q. Were you convicted in 1981 in West Germany of inciting hatred against Jews?

A. No.

Q. Of disseminating Nazi propaganda?

A. No.

Q. Were you convicted of anything in 1981?

A. Yes.

Q. What were you convicted of?

A. Defamation of the State.

Q. Defamation of what State?

A. The State of Germany.

Q. That had to do with these matters {2997|2998} you were telling us about?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think there is something I should discuss in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: Excuse us, please, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 2:40 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I want to put on some the record the usual procedure of putting criminal records to the witness. First of all, I think my friend has an obligation to check to see that his alleged record is correct. It has now been put to the witness in the presence of the jury that he was charged with or convicted of, in fact, allegedly something which he has denied.

I am of the opinion that that is an improper method of putting that issue to a witness in front of the jury, and the witness has admitted the only conviction, defamation of the State. Two others were alluded to and I just want to put on record my belief and opinion that that's improper.

THE COURT: I could be wrong, Mr. Christie, but my view of it is that counsel for either the defence or for the Crown can put to a witness and ask {2998|2999} the witness whether or not the witness was convicted of a certain offence. If the witness accepts and agrees that that is so, then it becomes evidence of conviction for the offence. If the witness denies it, however, then it's incumbent upon the Crown, if he chooses to do so, or the defence, as the case may be, to prove the conviction that was suggested. Now, do you disagree with that?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I felt that putting — I don't think it's proper to put a conviction to someone for which there is no evidence, present proof. I mean, if I was to say to a Crown witness, haven't you been convicted of child molesting, or something of that nature, in front of the jury and not have the proof for it, I think I would be in serious trouble. I may be wrong.

THE COURT: I think you probably would. It all depends on whether or not you had reasonable and probable grounds to believe that that was the case.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to see the Crown's reasonable and probable grounds for a conviction to exist. I have no indication. {2999|3000}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I had indication of this witness one hour before he testified. I have newspaper articles to indicate that. Now, if this witness wasn't convicted, I'm sorry. That is the indication that I have. If I have a list of the names of witnesses, then I can be more thorough on the research.

THE COURT: I don't know whether you are entitled to that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't know either. I am saying that I don't think the criticism is fair; that I had reasonable and probable ground from newspaper articles that this witness had these convictions, or I would not have put them to him. To have the proof when I have one hour's notice of testifying, that is not fair criticism, either.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suggest it is improper to put something to a witness on the basis of newspaper articles. I happen to have no reason to believe that they are regarded as some kind of judicial authority. And if my friend had asked me these questions in a confidential manner, I would have given him the opportunity to ask the witness and given him an answer. {3000|3001}

I just think that — I am not trying to criticize my friend. I think that we all have difficulties and I realize that he didn't have a great deal of time. I am not trying to imply some kind of, any kind of dishonesty on my friend's part. I just think it is an unfortunate thing that should not have happened, that it would have been better to confirm or check these newspaper clippings before putting them to him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If Mr. Christie wants to provide me with the record of convictions of his witnesses, I will be —

THE COURT: Are you prepared to do that?

MR. CHRISTIE: At his request, yes. If I have any knowledge of a criminal record, I will.

THE COURT: Then there is no further trouble.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't think it was obligatory of the defence either to advise the Crown in advance of witnesses, as Your Honour intimated, or, furthermore, to advise of criminal records. I think, really, that is putting a fairly large obligation on {3001|3002} the defence.

THE COURT: Oh, nobody is putting that allegation.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not suggesting Your Honour was.

THE COURT: Nobody is. If you want to, you may; if you don't chose to do so, please don't, let me make that clear.

MR. CHRISTIE: In the interest of fairness, I would be glad to have this matter checked before the jury is confronted with what I think is quite clearly a mistaken belief on my friend's part.

I just felt that it was appropriate to point out that, before such things are put to a witness, I suggest it is customary to have a reason to believe that they are true.

I recall myself in earlier days getting into serious problems by putting to the witnesses under cross-examination in the presence of the jury facts for which I was not prepared or able to prove, and I think this is unfortunately the same situation.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please. {3002|3003}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, before the jury comes back in, maybe in the absence of the jury I can clarify exactly what it is that Mr. Christopherson has in the way of a record, if anything — get some other information with regard to that. I haven't been able to test it. If it is not true, I will not put it to the jury; if it is [I] will.

THE COURT: In my view, the Crown had reasonable and probable grounds for the information he had in the time he had to get it to ask the questions he did. I see nothing wrong from a legal point of view. The jury will be reminded of all this when defence addresses the jury, so I do not foresee any unfairness at all.

Do you agree with what the Crown proposes to do now, Mr. Christie, to ask this witness what defamation against the State of Germany means, or do you want to ask him in front of the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I didn't hear him to say that, but I am glad that he do that in the absence of the jury.

— {3003|3004}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Christopherson, what is defamation against the German Democratic State mean?

A. I have the judgment of the Federal Court here in front of me, and I don't understand it myself.

Q. Is it in German that you have it here?

A. It is in German.

Q. How long is it?

A. It's about ten pages, but he would like to have his original retain his original.

Q. Thank you. And 1976, were you fined 400 pounds in Denmark?
 A. No.
 Q. As a result of your conviction in West Germany were you sentenced to nine months in jail?
 A. It was eleven months, not quite a year, not quite twelve. A little more than eleven months.
 Q. Did you flee West Germany before serving that sentence?
 THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again?
 Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did you flee West Germany before serving that sentence?
 A. I lived for two years in exile in Belgium.
 Q. After the sentence was made by the Court and before serving the sentence you left. {3004|3005}
 A. It was before. It was prior to the sentence.
 Q. Prior to the sentence. When was it in relation to your conviction?
 A. Until the 26th of August in '83.
 Q. That's when you returned.
 A. I was kidnapped.
 Q. By Israeli Police?
 A. I still had a permit to stay which allowed me to stay in Belgium but I was picked up by the Belgium Police and taken to the border.
 Q. Deported.
 A. And they took me down in handcuffs to the border.
 THE COURT: To what border?
 A. In the City of Aachen.
 MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, before I am able to cross-examine further Mr. Christopherson into the presence of the jury, I need to know what it was that he is convicted of in West Germany. We have a ten page German judgment which may or may not contain the things that I indicated in my questions, and I would like to have the opportunity to have that translated so that I could properly cross-examine Mr. Christopherson on Monday.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, first of all, I never heard it said before that a witness is obliged to produce for the Crown the evidence that he needs to cross-examine him. That, to me, is novel. I am always subject to correction, but I think, with respect to this {3005|3006} particular judgment it's the property of Mr. Christopherson. I don't know that he is obliged to hand it over to my friend. I don't know that he's obliged to translate it to help my friend to prove his point.
 THE COURT: Even though he just offered to do that?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he is a generous man. I don't know that he is obliged to do that. And I am suggesting that it does not seem to me proper to ask the witness to wait for cross-examination until the Crown can find, from his hands, something more to cross-examine with. It just strikes me as a rather unusual procedure, and I object to it because I think the accused's right to proceed with all due diligence is the issue.
 THE COURT: Perhaps I should have obliged you to proceed two hours ago, this morning, when you asked for an adjournment.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think, perhaps, that was a slightly different situation.
 COURT: What's different about it? You didn't have a witness and you were indulged.
 CHRISTIE: The difference is {3006|3007} that I think my friend is asking the witness to help him from himself.
 THE COURT: You don't want that to happen?
 MR. CHRISTIE: If that's Your Honour's ruling.
 THE COURT: I am not making a ruling. I am not ruling that way. I am just interested in your views.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am endeavouring to express them, sir. And I just find it unusual that my friend goes on a sort of fishing expedition in the absence of the jury —
 THE COURT: I thought you just agreed to that.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think my friend should have his case in order before it comes here, and he has the available resources.
 THE COURT: Did you tell Crown counsel the name of this witness at all before the witness arrived here?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: When? {3007|3008}
 MR. CHRISTIE: Just as we broke for lunch.
 THE COURT: As we broke for lunch. Do you feel that that is reasonable time to prepare one's cross-examination?
 MR. CHRISTIE: I've had to do it myself.
 THE COURT: So have I. It isn't, as you know it and I know it. What do you propose, that he just proceed on now?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think that this is the situation, that if my friend is cross-examining a witness, he has to have his material at the time he undertakes the cross-examination. He should not expect the witness to provide him with available resources for the cross-examination. I have never heard that done before. If Your Honour feels that it's appropriate, then I am sure it will be done.
 THE COURT: I say nothing. What is your proposal, Mr. Griffiths?
 MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I can certainly carry on cross-examining Mr. Christopherson {3008|3009} this afternoon. There is an abundance of material that he's provided in his testimony for me to cross-examine him on.
 One of the matters that was raised by my friend, quite properly, I would have raised it as well, I am sure, is that I unfairly put to the witness certain matters that I was alleging he had been convicted of, and in questioning Mr. Christopherson about what the matter is that he was convicted of, he says he doesn't understand it but he has a judgment here. I asked him if he is prepared to share that with me and he said yes.
 Now, I don't see anything improper in that at all. If he is prepared to share it with me, then we can all find out what defaming the National Democratic State means.
 THE COURT: Otherwise I will issue an order that you call somebody from the West German embassy here with legal knowledge, or somebody else with legal knowledge to impart that to the jury. So you have your choice.
 Gentlemen, if you can't work it out so that justice appears to be done in the next fifteen {3009|3010} minutes, you can indicate that, and if you want an adjournment, you can get it.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, maybe I can expedite matters. I have instructions that if it is available to the witness, which it appears to be, and if it is convenient to the Crown, then the witness can provide the translation to him.
 THE COURT: When?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, perhaps tomorrow, and my friend can carry on. I have been instructed to take a position.
 THE COURT: I would have to think that that would be the only civilized way of proceeding. However, your objections are noted. I take no part in this. I always thought that when someone asked for an adjournment or needs some time, if it is reasonable one should get it. You got it this morning. He will get it this afternoon if he wants it. As simple as that. It is a question of simple, civilized decency.
 Twenty minutes.
 — Short adjournment.
 — The witness stands down.
 — {3010|3011}
 — Upon resuming.
 MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, during the recess — at the outset, I apologize for losing my temper earlier — but during the recess Mr. Christie and I have discussed this matter and he has very kindly provided me with the German copy of the judgment, and I will make use of the weekend to translate that, and before returning to that with the jury I am indicating to Mr. Christie I would speak with him again and see what we have. My preference — but I am in Your Honour's hands — would be to reconvene on Monday to do that. I am prepared to commence cross-examination this afternoon. My preference is to recommence on Monday, though, because the last thing that the jury heard from me and from the witness was reference to a criminal record, and I would rather have that cleared up the next time that they come back into court, and if my information is wrong, then I would like to be able to say something to that effect so that the wrong impression is not left with the jury. And that's the reason why I would rather wait until Monday when this can be sorted out, but I am in Your Honour's hands. {3011|3012}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I can certainly understand my friend's frustration. I have consulted with the translator that we have available and he would have translated it, but he said it is more than a language problem. It is a legal problem. He can't put it into logical sense because he is not a lawyer, and I, with the greatest respect, think that the proper procedure probably should be to get some body who is qualified in these subjects.

Now, I think my friend and I are both groping in the dark. I don't know German law, I don't know French law, and the difficulty that arises is that they don't appear to function in the way we do, guilty or not guilty. It appears, somehow, they seem to, well, with judges alone we get reasons for judgment, but I can't even get a clear answer out of this from my translator. So I am suggesting, and only suggesting this, but perhaps if my friend wishes to prove this conviction in some way to contradict the witness or to clarify it, I shouldn't necessarily contradict, I would request, and I, suggest, perhaps, that the proper way to do it is to call somebody who is really {3012|3013} qualified in this, and I suggest that perhaps the Legal Secretary of the German Consulate would be able – I think Your Honour mentioned that.

THE COURT: It is either that or there are one or two lawyers who are known to me in town who are lawyers as well as having German as their mother tongue who have a knowledge of German law. If those names are requested, I will consider providing either or both. If they are not, then I won't. It is as simple as that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that, Your Honour. I think it takes someone to understand German law today to understand this.

I can say that Dr. Faurisson – and it is not in the presence of the jury so it doesn't ...

Dr. Faurisson was deeply hurt by the suggestion that he had falsified history that proliferated throughout Toronto. In France no one has said that he is convicted of falsifying history, and I don't know whether that is right or wrong, but to be fair to these people, that someone who really does know the law, not myself, in respect to France, not my friend, in respect to France or Germany, that someone who is qualified {3013|3014} should be called.

If these types of things are to be put to foreign witnesses, and I don't blame my friend for this, but I think we are struggling in an area that we don't do every day, that the proper procedure really should be to get a qualified person, and that hasn't been done in the case of Dr. Faurisson.

I'd like, if it is to be proceeded with, I'd like it to be done here, certainly to my client who will pay the price of a misunderstanding, perhaps.

That's my position, Your Honour. Thank you.

THE COURT: What do you have to say with respect to Crown's request for adjournment till Monday?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am quite content with that. It throws my scheduling into a bit of a disarray, but I told my friend I can understand he wants time, and that's quite all [right].

Would it be possible to proceed with my friend's cross-examination with the exception of that, and then we don't waste the afternoon? I don't {3014|3015} know if that's – you know, I just feel that we could carry on with what we are doing without getting into this legal matter. I think that maybe my friend's point is well taken. I leave it to Your Honour with respect to that, but I would like to see if we could proceed. That's my only concern.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury.

— The jury enters. 3:40 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, a matter has arisen in a rather unexpected way that requires certain research to be done. A number of matters have been worked out in your absence. This one is going to require some time until Monday morning. Rather than have you wait in that nice jury room of yours until four thirty or whatever it is, I thought it an act of mercy would be to let you go now till nine thirty Monday morning.

Have a good weekend and please don't come to any conclusions. Keep an open mind and keep resisting the temptation to follow this case in the Press. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 3:41 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 11, 1985.

(VOLUME XIV FOLLOWS) {3015|3016}

VOLUME XIV

FEBRUARY 11, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Good morning, Your Honour. If I may, sir, just before the jury comes back in, I have had an opportunity to have the judgment of Mr. Christopherson [Christophersen] translated, and it would appear from the judgment, which is written in a very formal style of German, that Mr. Christopherson was originally convicted of three different counts, and when he ultimately returned to Germany he appealed those convictions and his sentence on those convictions. Part of the basis of his appeal was the manner of his return to Germany, that he felt he had been improperly returned by Belgian authorities, and although it's not very clear, I think there were also substantial grounds of appeal that he would bring as well, the outcome of which was that two out of the three convictions were overturned and the third one in relation to the West German Government remains.

So in the event I will go through some of this, certainly not all the prior convictions will be indicated to the jury, and my apologies to Mr. Christopherson for incorrectly setting out his record. {3016|3017}

THE COURT: What is defamation of the State? What does that all mean? And has Mr. Christie seen the translation?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Mr. Christie has done his own work on the judgment as well. As near as I can tell, Your Honour, there is an area in which the individual was not permitted to speak in West Germany by constitutional authority, and Mr. Christopherson stepped over that line in some comments that he made. I don't think that it goes so far as the equivalent of sedition in our Code, but he was speaking against the West German authority.

Is that fair enough, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I can't speak with any authority at all on the West German law. I can say that my best efforts in the translation from Mr. van der Heide is that it was clear as mud to him, and he couldn't actually translate many parts of it because he said that he couldn't translate it.

I think my friend's explanation would probably be a good one that it is in the very high German. My translator simply said that you have to understand the thing in order to be able to translate it into {3017|3018} another language, and he couldn't understand it.

I don't feel any more competent than anybody else to understand this judgment. I think the clearest that I can understand from it is that it was defamation of the State. What that means or why that is, I don't know. Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Is there anything further before I call the jury in? Call in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 9:41 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

HANS VON DER HEIDE, previously sworn as interpreter

THIES CHRISTOPHERSON [Christophersen], previously affirmed

Q. Sir, on Friday I asked you about criminal convictions that you had.

A. Yes.

Q. And in forming my question to you I asked you about things that you have not been convicted of.

A. Yes. {3018|3019}

Q. Before I go further, I wish to apologize for doing that. You have one conviction for defamation of the West German State.

A. I would like to add that in earlier years I was also convicted for defamation of the Third Reich, and I was put in close custody for three days at that time.

Q. When was that?

A. During the War.

Q. Okay. Did you receive some medals or declarations for your wounds?

A. I was wounded very early in the War, and I did not participate in any further combat.

Q. My question was whether you received any decorations or medals.

A. No.

Q. And what was your rank?

A. I was a lance corporal in the Army, and later a special officer of the Wehrmacht.

Q. As a special officer did you have a rank – Captain, or —

A. It was a rank of a Lieutenant.

Q. And was that your rank when you were at Raisko?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that your rank the entire time you were at Raisko?

A. Yes.

Q. While you were at Raisko, it's unclear from your testimony where you were living.

Where were you living? {3019|3020}

A. Later on – first of all in Raisko I lived in an empty building, empty dwelling house, and later on in the greenhouse of Raisko.

Q. All right. So you did not live in the main camp of Auschwitz.

A. No.

Q. And was Raisko being used for anything else besides Kok-Sagis, this plant you were growing?

A. There was also a garden.

Q. A food garden or flowers, or what kind of garden?

A. It was everything. Vegetables and flowers.

Q. All right. And were the guards at Raisko from the S.S.?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were the guards at Raisko from the S.S.?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And were they part of the – forgive my German – totenkopf?

A. I cannot say this any more with any amount of certainty.

Q. What camps did you visit when you were at Raisko?

A. I visited the main camp and Birkenau, and a number of smaller satellite camps who were also working on agriculture.

Q. All right. How many times did you {3020|3021} go to Birkenau?

A. I don't know exactly. I will say five, six or seven times.

Q. And what would take you to Birkenau? Why would you be going there?

A. In most of these cases it was to fetch something out of Birkenau, either from Kanada, or from these airplane dismantling factory.

Q. Either from Kanada or the air plane ...

A. The airplane dismantling. There was an airplane dismantling factory.

Q. In Birkenau there was?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were there for a year. Were those visits spread out all during the year or at any particular time?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were those five, six, seven times in Birkenau spread out all during the year that you were there?

A. That's right.

Q. Okay. Did you ever see a crematorium at Birkenau?

A. No, but I knew that there was one.

Q. But you did go to Kanada to get some material or goods.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you think you could show us where the airplane dismantling factory is on a map of {3021|3022} Birkenau?

A. Yes, I believe I can.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Exhibit 21, please.

Q. I am showing to you Exhibit No. 21.

A. Yes. There was a railway line here, and it was close to the railroad line.

Q. Was it in the camp?

A. It was just outside of the camp.

Q. And can you show us where Kanada stores are on this map?

A. This here in my opinion was Kanada.

THE COURT: Would you get him to mark his initials "TC", please, wherever he says, "These places are in there"?

THE WITNESS: I believe that this was Kanada.

Q. All right. Would you put your initials over here, please?

Now, I thought I heard you say, although I did not hear the translation, that this was the crematoria, and you are pointing to KIII.

A. These two here, these were the crematoria, but I was not inside. I was never inside the crematoria.

Q. What about these buildings over here marked KIV, KV?

A. I never was there

Q. Well, do you have your book here, Mr. Christopherson? All right. Now, you've got a German and {3022|3023} I have an English, so we have a problem. On page 37 —

THE INTERPRETER: Of the English version?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you have a page 37?

A. In this German version, yes, I have page 37.

Q. I tell you what, I show you page 18 of Exhibit No. 1 where your book is quoted, and I will read you this and you tell me if this is accurately from your book. Okay? And Mr. van der Heide will translate. Okay, sir? I guess, before I do that, page 18, column one, the last paragraph starting with the words, "After the War".

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

"After the war, Christopherson came to hear of the alleged existence of a camp.

A. Yes. Does he say "hear", or "saw"?

Q. "Came to hear".

A. Yes.

Q. Quote: "This was supposed to be the crematorium. However, I must record the fact that when I left the camp at Auschwitz in December 1944, I had not seen this building there (p.37)".

Do you remember the crematorium now? {3023|3024}

A. It says, "In the vicinity of the main camp".

Q. Well, you are just talking about the main camp here, not about Birkenau.

A. Here, in this quotation, I am talking about the main camp and not of Birkenau.

Q. All right. Do you talk in another quotation in your book about Birkenau, or is that all you say in your pamphlet about the crematorium?

A. No. I mentioned in my book somebody has told me that it was a crematorium.

Q. But you saw it yourself.

A. I never was inside the crematorium.

Q. You saw it from the outside, though?

A. Yes, I have certainly seen it, but I can no longer remember what it was.

Q. I see. And was the crematorium working while you were there?

A. I don't know.

Q. May I see your book, please? Thank you.

You've told us that you never heard gunfire. Do you remember saying that on Friday?

A. Gunfire?

Q. Gunfire.

A. He did not say gunfire.

THE COURT: No, Mr. Interpreter. The answer as you heard, please, not what you say he said.

A. Rifle fire not gun fire.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did he ever hear rifle fire? {3024|3025}

A. I did hear rifle fire in the same way as you normally used to hear when you find yourself in a military establishment. It was, to me, nothing suspicious about this.

Q. Did prisoners ever try to escape from Birkenau by way of Raisko?

THE INTERPRETER: Did you say prisoners ever tried to escape from Raisko?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did they ever try to escape from Birkenau?

A. As a witness I can only say here what I heard and saw myself, and I did not see anything of that nature myself.

Q. What kind of soil does Kok-Sagis grow well in?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What kind of soil does the plant Kok-Sagis grow well in?

A. We planted Kok-Sagis outside of the camp, and there was a ground with plenty of humus soil.

Q. Is that the ground that it grows best in?

THE INTERPRETER: I didn't understand, I'm sorry.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Is that the ground that it grows best in, plenty of humus? Does Kok-Sagis grow best in land with plenty of humus? {3025|3026}

A. That is where it grows best, yes.

Q. Tell us what the prisoners would have for a midday meal.

A. The command No. 11 from Birkenau, they had one hot meal, a dinner, with a soup, a kind of soup with meat in it, meat condensed in it.

Q. Would that be at the noon hour?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there anything else for lunch?

A. They occasionally took some sandwiches along with them from Birkenau for lunch. I only wished that it was also handed out these care parcels.

Q. Now, when did the Red Cross come to Raisko?

A. Late in the summer.

Q. And how many people came?

THE INTERPRETER: I beg your pardon?

MR. GRIFFITHS: How many people came?

A. All I saw was the vehicles, a white vehicle with a red cross on it.

Q. Did they stop at Raisko?

A. They did not appear to be very interested in Raisko. They wanted to see Birkenau mainly, but we always liked to show them Raisko as well.

Q. Did they stop in Raisko?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to them?

A. No.

Q. How many were there? {3026|3027}

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know their names?

A. No.

Q. Did you go with the Red Cross to Birkenau?

A. No.

Q. So you don't know where they left after they left Raisko?

A. No.

Q. Is that the only time that you saw the Red Cross in the time you were at Raisko?

A. Yes. I, myself, saw only once, but I heard that there were several times.

Q. No. Don't tell us what you heard. Do you know of any report of that visit to Raisko?

A. I only know the report which was also published in one of the later editions of my book.

Q. Is this a report from your own research, or somebody else's research?

A. I can no longer say with certainty where I obtained this report.

Q. Go ahead.

A. It is printed here in one of these issues.

Q. Is this an edition written in English here in this German book? There is a facsimile of a Red Cross report on that page.

THE INTERPRETER: This passage is in French.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: In French. Do you speak French, Mr. Christopherson? {3027|3028}

A. No.

Q. And you speak no English?

A. Not very well.

Q. You'd have a hard time saying what is said there, then, wouldn't you?

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. If it is of any assistance to my friend, Mr. van der Heide also translates in French, if you wish.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I am not concerned about Mr. van der Heide's knowledge. I am concerned about Mr. Christopherson's knowledge.

Q. Your publisher is referred to in this pamphlet on page 17, and I believe the top of page 18, Dr. Manfred Roeder. Do you still have contact with Dr. Manfred Roeder?

A. Manfred Roeder was the one who issued the first edition of my book, and this is edition number six.

Q. All right. My question was, do you still have contact with Manfred Roeder?

A. No. He is, at the moment, he is in prison right now.

Q. How long is he in prison for, do you know?

A. How long?

Q. How long is the sentence?

A. He was sentenced to thirteen years of imprisonment.

Q. And do you know what he was convicted of?

A. Co-knowledge in a fire incident. {3028|3029}

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I didn't hear that.

A. He had co-knowledge of a fire incident.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Of a fire?

A. It was a fire incident on a home of the people that took refuge there, of people, of refugees, the home of refugees was a fire attack on it.

Q. And did anybody die in that fire attack?

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this relevant?

THE COURT: I have it, Mr. Christie. Just a moment. We will wait for the next question.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: The weekly movies, where would you see them, in Birkenau or in Raisko?

A. In Raisko we had a room of our own where films were shown.

Q. And would the prisoners and the guards all get together once a week to watch the movies?

A. If there was a film, ever a film shown, then the guards had to come along because it was outside of the camp.

Q. I'm sorry, were there prisoners watching these movies?

A. The camp was guarded only during the nighttime.

Q. What camp?

A. The women's camp of Raisko.

Q. Well, you told us on Friday that the {3029|3030} women came in from Birkenau each day; they weren't staying at Raisko; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. So who were they guarding at nighttime, you?

A. There was also a women's camp in Raisko.

Q. So not everybody came in from Birkenau.

A. Nein.

Q. And how big was the women's camp in Raisko?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. How many women in the women's camp?

A. Over a hundred. Over a hundred persons.

Q. And were those women, would they have come and watched the movies with you once a week?

A. Yes.

Q. And all the same room together?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you speak Polish, Mr. Christopherson?

A. No.

Q. Do you speak any language other than German?

A. No, not actually, no. Not correctly.

Q. So when you told us on Friday that prisoners would speak with you, the language would always {3030|3031} be German.

A. In German.

Q. All right. Was there an electric fence around the women's camp in Raisko?

A. I only saw an electrically-charged fence in the main camp.

Q. That's Auschwitz I.

A. The number I don't know. I am talking about the main camp.

Q. All right. And did you see an electrically-charged fence around Birkenau?

A. I must apologize, sir. I can no longer remember exactly what condition, how these fences around these different camps were.

Q. So you don't know what the fence around the camp at Raisko was, electric or not.

A. I know exactly that there was a barbed[-]wire fence around the women's camp in Raisko, and that sunflowers were planted in front of this fence, and that on the outside there was a sentry at each corner.

Q. And in the daytime – that would be at nighttime, a sentry at each corner?

A. It was only during the nighttime.

Q. All right. And then, in the daytime, were the sentries pulled back to a picket[ ]line around a larger area?

A. Yes. That is correct.

Q. So the camp would still be surrounded by guards, although they might not be seen?

A. Oh, yes, they could be seen because they were on the tower, on the watchtower. {3031|3032}

Q. How far apart would these watch towers be?

A. I think it was less than one hundred meters.

Q. Did you ever see anybody try to walk by those watch towers at any time?

A. No, I did not see that myself, but I often walked by there myself and to have some prisoners with me.

Q. You walked through the line with some prisoners.

A. Yes.

Q. And you had guards with you as well?

A. No.

Q. Were you armed?

A. I had a pistol, yes.

Q. And where would you be going with prisoners alone?

A. It was different. It differed. For instance, to pick up blackberries near the fish ponds.

Q. Anything else you'd go out for?

A. Yes. For instance, I used to go to the field where the command No. 11 from Birkenau were working.

Q. Well, that would still be inside the picket line, would it not?

A. No. The fields for the Kok-Sagis were outside of this picket line.

Q. I see. And were there guards over {3032|3033} these women, or did they come in voluntarily every night?

A. They were guarded. No, they were guarded.

THE INTERPRETER: Excuse me, he just pointed out a picture where one of the guards can be seen on the picture.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, do you have pictures in this book?

A. These are the India rubber fields there, and this is a prisoner. You can see him wearing striped pants, and the guard is here.

Q. You have a number of pictures in here.

A. This is command No. 11 when they are doing the hoeing work. And this was taken in the Ukraine. This is myself and my colleague Schattenberg. That's myself and my wife.

Q. Is that in Raisko?

A. Nein. That was after our wedding in Berlin on the 20th of April, 1943.

Q. I see. So when it says here 1944, under the picture, that's not right?

A. That's not correct no. That's an error, printing error. This was in '43.

Q. The uniform that you indicated 1943, I don't see any campaign ribbons.

THE INTERPRETER: . Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't see any campaign ribbons. If you fought in France, why don't you {3033|3034} have campaign ribbons?

A. At that time they were not issued yet in France.

Q. Three years later they still had not been issued?

A. No. It's the first time I hear about it.

Q. And you never received any wound medal?

A. Nein.

Q. Or the Iron Cross Second Class?

A. No. No. I have no decorations whatsoever.

Q. Okay. Thank you. The little room that everybody would go to for their worship, the prisoners would go to, was that in Birkenau or in Raisko?

A. In Birkenau. No, excuse me. I made a mistake. In Raisko.

Q. Well, did you ever see a room like that in Birkenau?

THE INTERPRETER: I beg your pardon?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did you ever see a room like that —

A. No, I did not see such a room in Birkenau, but in the vicinity of the main camp.

Q. You saw such a room in the main camp as well, in the area of the main camp?

A. In the vicinity of the main camp, yes.

Q. I show you Exhibit 24. {3034|3035}

A. This is the administration building. It must have been in this area right there.

THE COURT: Mark it with the same initials, please.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Would you mark it, please?

A. I think it was here.

Q. And did you ever attend that room for your own spiritual enlightenment?

A. Yes. We celebrated our thanksgiving day, and this performance was carried out by the prisoners.

Q. I see. And this is in Raisko you are talking about, or ...

A. No. This was also in the vicinity of the main camp.

Q. It must have been a very large service.

A. Yes, it was a very large performance.

Q. And the prisoners presided over this service? Is that what I understand?

A. They, for instance, would provide the decorations and also the orchestra.

Q. And then were the prisoners entitled to attend as well?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were the prisoners able to attend the service?

A. I saw prisoners who were doing {3035|3036} some ordinance work, like for example waiter service.

Q. At this thanksgiving service.

A. Yes.

Q. They weren't sitting down being waited on, though?

A. No. They did carry out these services themselves, waiters services. They acted as waiters, and what is called ordinance duty. It is a military term. I also had a prisoner as a maid.

Q. And did you notice anything unusual about the smell of Birkenau?

A. No.

Q. How often would the prisoners at Raisko have roll call?

A. Every morning and every evening the number of prisoners was established by roll call.

Q. And were the prisoners at Raisko tattooed on their left arm?

THE INTERPRETER: Would you say that again, please?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were the prisoners at Raisko tattooed on their left arms?

A. I did not pay any attention to the tattoo, but they had a number sewed on their sleeve, a number sewed on their sleeves.

Q. All right. And the number on their sleeves or on their clothes would be the same as the number on their arm.

A. This is a question to which I cannot answer because I did not observe this myself.

Q. What did you not observe yourself? {3036|3037}

A. That they had the number on their sleeves, but I did not look at their tattoos [sic].

Q. I see. But they did have tattoos [sic]?

A. Other people would be more predestined to answer this question. I did not carry out the physical checks on the prisoners. I did not see them. I did not see the tattoos [sic].

Q. I see. And did you see how a roll call took place first of all in the morning? What time in the morning and what happened?

A. Yes, I did see these occasionally. Occasionally we also detailed people for work from the roll call.

Q. And what time in the morning would the roll call be?

A. I think it was around seven o'clock.

Q. And would breakfast be over by seven o'clock?

A. Yes, because the work started after roll call.

Q. All right. And was there somebody at the women's camp in Raisko, a prisoner who would be the block[ä]ltester, the block senior?

A. Yes. We had a Kapo.

Q. And was there also somebody who was a block scribe, block recorder?

A. I can no longer say this.

Q. You can't remember that.

A. No.

Q. What would happen if at roll call {3037|3038} at Raisko someone was missing?

A. In that case the picket chain, another of the pickets were not withdrawn unless the number of prisoners was found to be correct.

Q. And did you ever see prisoners exchanging with somebody from the local village or town so that the prisoner could have a day off?

A. I did not see it myself, but I was aware that something like this was taking place.

Q. Do you think it would be difficult for somebody to come in through the pickets, get through roll call, and not have a tattoo on their arm; do you think that will be difficult?

A. It was a bit of an effort, but it was done all the same.

Q. And after a couple of days the prisoner would have enough of life outside and would come back.

A. Yes. It was a kind of bail.

Q. Can you tell us whether the barbed wire fence around your camp was to keep people out or to keep people in?

A. There was only a barbed wire fence around the camp which was guarded at night, otherwise there was no barbed wire fence.

THE COURT: What's the answer to the question?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Was the fence to keep people out or to keep people in?

A. It served both purposes, most likely. I did not construct the camp so I don't know.

Q. Thank you.

—— {3038|3039}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. What did you do or what did you say to cause yourself to be charged with the crime of defaming the German State?

A. I insulted the symbol of the Afwart —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed that. Would you say that again, please? "I insulted the symbol ..."

A. I insulted the symbol of the after War period in Germany, which is Mr. Staufenberg (phonetic).

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What did you say?

A. I said that he was a traitor.

Q. Anything else?

A. No. Nothing more. This was sufficient.

Q. Thank you.

——

THE COURT: I have a question, if I may. Did everyone of the equivalent rank of Lieutenant in the German forces, military forces, have a maid.

A. Every officer was entitled to have a batmen.

THE COURT: I didn't ask about batmen. I asked about maids. {3039|3040}

A. We had maids, yes.

THE COURT: Did you have the same maid for the whole year?

A. No.

THE COURT: How many?

A. This girl by the name of Olga whom I mentioned in my book, she was with me for approximately four months.

THE COURT: Is Olga the one that told you about the rumours about chimneys and flames from the chimneys that caused you to take your bicycle?

A. She said this to my mother, and my mother accordingly told me.

THE COURT: Was it then that you took your bicycle and —

A. At first I questioned Olga herself.

THE COURT: Yes. Did you then take your bicycle?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: And did I get you down correctly when you said you looked for fireplaces but you couldn't find anything regarding cremation, crematoriums?

A. That's correct.

THE COURT: The maids that you had were prisoners, were they?

A. Yes. They were inmates, but one of them was a Bible researcher, and these Bible researchers were not guarded.

THE COURT: What were the duties of the maid? {3040|3041}

A. They did normally the ordinary call of a maid like similar to a hotel.

THE COURT: What does that mean?

A. They clean the room and brush the clothes and also wash the windows, and Stefa also fixed some decorations in the room, hang up pictures and things like that.

THE COURT: Is it your experience as a soldier in the German armed forces that officers had batmen, males, not maids?

A. Invariably the officers would have a batman working for them.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Mr. Christie, any questions arising from mine?

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Nothing arising out of that, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have had a witness waiting all morning, but in another place, and it will take me twenty-five minutes to have that person here.

THE COURT: How far away?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not that far, Your {3041|3042} Honour. I think he can be here in fifteen minutes. May we have a short break to do that?

THE COURT: Fifteen minutes, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 10:45 a.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. Could I provide you with the curriculum vitae of the next witness? I have given my friend a copy.

—— {3042|3043}

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have Dr. William Lindsey here, and I'd like to call him, if I may, and proceed to qualify him in the area he claims in his curriculum vitae.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am content, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury.

— The jury returns. 11:20 a.m.

WILLIAM B. LINDSEY, affirmed

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Lindsey, where are you from, sir?

A. I am presently from Clinton, Iowa, in the United States.

Q. And could you give us a little indication of your background?

A. Well, I was born in Texas, first of all. I stayed there until I had finished my study in the {3043|3044} University of Texas. After that, I went to Bloomington, Indiana, where I had my Masters and Doctors degrees in chemistry. After that I accepted employment in one of the large chemical firms in the United States, and I've been there for thirty-three years.

Q. And what progressive titles have you held in the employment in which you are?

A. I started out as a research chemist. I was then promoted to a senior research chemist, and then I was made a research associate.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And have you worked in the development of a number of industrial processes?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Could you describe your research work in those fields, sir?

A. Well, generally they are related to the field of polymers.

THE COURT: Polymers?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. And in general, industrial chemists have to make decisions in just about all the parts of chemistry – organic, analytical and that sort of thing.

Q. Have you, at some stage, been involved {3044|3045} in the development of chemicals for the rocket programme in the United States?

A. Yes. I worked on a programme that involved the development of wire wrappings for cables that would be used in the rocket programme.

Q. And could you give us some indication of other types of research work that you have done?

A. Well, I worked on new methods for preparing viscose. This is used in the manufacture of rayon, things of that sort. I also worked on coatings, lacquer coatings for various polymers film and things like that. They have utility in commerce, packaging food, that sort of thing.

Q. Are you listed in "American Men of Science"?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What is that journal, sir?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. What is "American Men of Science"?

A. "American Men of Science" is published, I believe, every ten years and is basically a survey of all the men in the United States, perhaps also Canada, I'm just not certain, that have anything to do in the physical or {3045|3046} social sciences and medical sciences, too, I believe, are included.

Q. And you've been married for thirty-seven years and you have two sons; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you, in the course of time, developed an interest in a particular subject, relating chemistry to history?

A. Yes. I have always been interested in history. Much of what I've heard since World War II, in particular, seems to me could be helped a great deal by applying some sort of a technical approach to this thing, testing, for example, just how reasonable some of the thesis that have been advanced would be if they were looked at more or less from the standpoint of a chemist.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And in the course of such studies, what have you done to prepare yourself to understand the thesis that is put forward?

A. Well —

Q. And specifically, what thesis?

A. Well, the basic problem here, of course, is the vast number of charges made under the generalized heading of the Holocaust. In order to understand this {3046|3047} properly, it seems to me that one would have to know, first of all, what the basic accusations are. If you ask various authorities, you very often get various answers. They have apparently arisen from different places at different times from different people.

So in an attempt to, — perhaps, get rid of [of] some of my ignorance, at least, I proceeded to review first of all the volumes that were published at Nuremberg, basically, under the — not the authorship, but certainly the supervision of Robert H. Jackson, who was the American prosecutor at Nuremberg.

Subsequent to reading and looking over these forty-two volumes, I proceeded to the volumes that were supervised by Telford Taylor, who was the man who took Jackson's place after Nuremberg. Then I proceeded to read a number of popular books. One was, of course, Mr. Vrba's, "I Cannot Forgive". There were many others. I think there's "Four Chimneys in Auschwitz". I also read the book by Dr. Raul Hilberg and Mr. Reitlinger's book. These are really a small number. I read these many years ago and there really must have been dozens of books that went through my hands.

Q. Did you study the book of Philip Friedman? {3047|3048}

A. Yes. Professor Friedman originally originated in Poland. There is apparently no record of his ever having been incarcerated by the Germans, but after the War he became a member of the Polish Central Committee for the investigation of war crimes in Poland. At that time he spelled his name P-H-I-L-I-P, as I remember. He then, after publishing, "This was Auschwitz" — I believe that was published in Argentina, in Yiddish, it was then translated into the English, which version I read; and after that he came to the United States and was at Columbia University, closely attached to YIVO.

Q. What is YIVO?

A. That is a Jewish organization in New York which is basically concerned with studies of the Holocaust and that sort of thing.

Q. Are you familiar with the author Jan Sehn?

A. Yes. A Judge Jan Sehn, I believe was from Cracow, and it is to him that some people, at least, are indebted for the original documentation of the charges at Auschwitz-Birkenau. For example, he is the one who put forward the idea that Auschwitz was the swampiest place in Poland. I believe he is also the one that speaks of this {3048|3049} German S.S. orderly who was supposed to have dumped this, Zyklon-B on top of the inmates.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of Charles Sigismund Bendel?

A. Charles Sigismund Bendel testified at the Luenenberg [Lüneburg] trials, and he also testified at the trial in Hamburg.

Q. How are those two trials, the Luenenberg trial and the Hamburg trial, related to Auschwitz?

A. First of all, the Luenenberg trial was the trial of the Auschwitz-Birkenau staff, S.S. staff that had walked from Auschwitz to Bergen-Belsen where they were captured by the British. They were then put before a tribunal at Luenenberg and most of them were tried and condemned to death. Dr. Bendel and Dr. Aidenbenko [Ada Bimko] (ph) — well, those two in particular testified at that trial. Later on, Dr. Tesch and Karl Weinbacher, who were accused of having supplied the Zyklon-B which was used to kill the people, allegedly, at Auschwitz, were tried by a second tribunal. I think, as I remember, it was the same judge advocate in charge of both trials. Dr. Tesch was found guilty along with Karl Weinbacher, and they were both hanged by the British occupation force. {3049|3050}

Q. Are you also familiar with — and I am going to lead here because I have provided this information to the Crown — the published works of Perry Broad, Alexander Donat, Hermann Langbein, Kurt Gerstein — you mentioned Reitlinger and Hilberg — the Jewish Black Book Committee, the New York Times, and the works of Shirer, Garlinski, Gray, Hoggan, Austin, Harwood, which is the book in question, and Professor Arthur Butz? Are you familiar with all those works?

A. Yes, I read those books, and I figured that if I were planning to have an opinion in this area, I owed it to myself to look into them.

Q. And how many years have you spent studying this information?

A. I have been studying this, I'd say, more or less intensively for the last ten to twelve years, and my interest, of course; goes back even beyond that.

Q. Have you, in the course of your studies, pursued the observation of some original documents?

A. Yes. It seemed to me that the best way to get at this entire series of accusations was to go back to the original accusations and see where most of these stories arose. As a result of that, I was particularly {3050|3051} interested, of course, in first of all a report by Judge Sehn, who gave the basic information from the Polish investigation in Poland;

after that, of course, I was interested in the accusations that were made at Nuremberg by the trial there; but the thing, it seemed to me, to be a very, very important part was the trial of Dr. Tesch and Herr Weinbacher, because the entire series, the entire set of charges of the Holocaust seemed to me to be somewhat of a chain.

You had to have, first of all, the people there. You had to have killed these people with a certain agent, and this agent was supplied by Dr. Tesch, allegedly.

Q. What was the agent alleged?

A. This agent was Zyklon-B, or basically, hydrogen cyanide. Zyklon-B, I would like to explain, is really a commercial product. It consists of about one part liquid hydrogen cyanide —

THE COURT: Just a moment, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will carry on, if I may, with the ...

THE COURT: Please do.

MR. CHRISTIE: ... with the questions in regard to qualification.

Q. Now, to explain, witness, before we {3051|3052} can get into any opinion, we want to deal with your qualifications in relation to your research. So this is the questions that I will be asking. So you described having looked for original documents, you discussed the report of Judge Sehn. Did you do any other research into primary sources?

A. Yes. As I said, I was interested in the trial of Dr. Tesch & Herr Weinbacher. I got the transcript of that from the public records office in London. It took me some years to actually locate this. When I did locate it, I found out it had been sequestered or sealed for some thirty years during which time, of course, a great deal of history had been written; but by the time I located them, the time had expired and I was allowed to buy a transcript of the entire proceedings of the Tesch and Weinbacher trial.

Incidentally, [sic] the trial was against Dr. Tesch, Weinbacher, and a third man by the name of Runstedt [Drohsin], who was completely exonerated [sic]. Dr. Tesch and Herr Weinbacher were hanged. After looking at that, it was obvious to me, at least —

Q. Excuse me, you can't give an opinion until after you have been examined by the Crown.

A. Well, what I did was to proceed to {3052|3053} the Luenenberg [Lünenburg] trial, because it was obvious that much of the testimony that had been given in Dr. Tesch's trial had originally been given in the Luenenberg [sic] trial. As a matter of fact, Dr. Ada Benko (ph) was not able to testify in person at Dr. Tesch's trial, and her affidavits had been taken from the Luenenberg [sic] trial and used for a second time at Dr. Tesch's tribunal. So I wanted to get the transcript of that.

I immediately found that that was much too voluminous to buy as one piece. I am rather limited in how much I can expend in this. So I arranged to go to England and was allowed once more to look at these documents. And they also had been sealed. And fortunately for me, the time had run out, although there were certain volumes where the time had not run out and I was not allowed to see them; but I did go over and I got copies of what I considered pertinent parts of the trial.

Q. Right. Are there any other original documents that you've obtained in the course of your research?

A. Well, I have spent some time in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. I got a number of the original documents there. I have written to Nuremberg and I got documents from Nuremberg. I also got documents from the Institute fuer Zeitgeschichte — {3053|3054}

Q. Where is that?

A. In Munich. As a matter of fact, every time I went on vacation, I looked for documents wherever I might be able to find them.

Q. Have you had an opportunity to look over the curriculum vitae that you have signed?

A. Yes.

Q. And although it's in two different type faces, have you determined that the statements contained therein are true?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. What other original documents have you perused in the formation of your research on this topic?

A. Well, there are certain properties of compounds, chemical properties of compounds and building materials and things like that, so I found it was necessary to acquaint myself, at least, with the basic knowledge of these things.

Q. And so what did you do?

A. Well, after looking these over —

Q. Looking what over, sir?

A. Well, there are certain basic {3054|3055} properties of compounds such as building materials, hydrogen cyanide, for example, after acquainting myself with these, I then attempted to look at the accusations that had been made and see just how reasonable some of these accusations were.

Q. And did you go to the camps to conduct the search?

A. Oh, yes. I have visited all of the camps that were alleged to have been murder camps. I've been to Maidanek, which is in Lublin, Poland, on three different occasions.

Q. Can you tell us when you first went to the camps and what camps you first went to?

A. Well, the first camp I visited was in 1978, as I remember, and that was in Lublin, Poland, and Maidanek, and from there, in the same year, I went down and visited the three camps at Auschwitz I, II and III.

Q. What is Auschwitz II?

A. Auschwitz II is Birkenau.

Q. And how long did you visit Birkenau in 1978?

A. I was there for the better part of an afternoon. {3055|3056}

Q. And have you visited Birkenau since then?

A. Yes. After visiting Birkenau in '78, I came back, thought on what I had seen, and of course, read a great deal more, and decided that there were things that should be there that, if the stories were true, that I should have seen and, apparently, had missed. So I went back again in 1980. I think I had a lot more knowledge than I had when I was there originally in '78. I looked for some of these things. Some of these I found. I came away in '80 thinking I had seen just about everything, and I suppose —

Q. How long did you spend in 1980 visiting Birkenau?

A. I was in Auschwitz in '80. I was there for one day and a fraction of a second.

Q. And did you consider your investigation of the site complete at that time?

A. At the time I thought perhaps I had seen everything. I came back believing that I wouldn't go again, but then, after reading some more, I decided that a third trip would be necessary.

Q. And did you do so?

A. Yes. I took the last trip last {3056|3057} spring, in June.

Q. And what time did you spend in research at the site, then?

A. I spent well over two days there. At least, well over one. I have forgotten the exact dates, now, that I was there. I arrived one afternoon and I left. I must have spent a day and a half there, anyway.

Q. What did you do on these occasions in the course of your research?

A. Well, on the very first occasion, of course, the tendency is to take the more or less prescribed path through camps that they have for the normal visitors, and there is quite a large group of visitors going through them all the time. The second time you tend, or I tended, at least, to branch out and look for things other than what is shown to every visitor there, and this was true also of the third time.

Q. What were you looking for particularly on the second and third visits?

A. Well, I was, in the second time in particular, I decided to get a little bit north of the crematories, Crematories II and III, using the German designation, and at this particular time I discovered that what {3057|3058} is known as the sauna, which is right across the street from the waterworks and water disposal, this was, apparently, their major disinfection, or delousing station for new arrivals.

Of course, I also saw the pond there that's been mentioned in a lot of the literature, and I saw the buildings that are referred to at Crematories IV and V.

Q. So did you conduct any other inquiries at those occasions?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. Did you conduct any other inquiries on those occasions?

A. Well, do you mean as the personnel at Auschwitz?

Q. No. The site itself.

A. Well, after I came back, I read some more, and I decided I'd go back again.

Q. Did you conduct inquiries from the personnel at Auschwitz?

A. I was the only English speaking person on the site on two occasions, and as a result, they didn't show me their film and I didn't really get a chance to talk to too many of the people there. {3058|3059}

Q. How many sites have you visited of what are known as extermination camps? Have you visited Belzec?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you visited Chelmno?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you visited Dachau?

A. That's right.

Q. When?

A. Well, Dachau, technically speaking, is not considered an extermination camp any more. The extermination camps that are recognized, the camps that are recognized as extermination camps are, first of all, Chelmno, and then you go to Treblinka and Sobibor, and then Belzec and Maidanek.

THE COURT: Could I have those again a little more slowly, please?

THE WITNESS: First of all there's Chelmno, and then, secondly is Treblinka, which is north and east of Warsaw, and then Sobibor, which is located near the Bug River, and then Belzec is down in the south-eastern corner of, presently, Poland, and Maidanek is at Lublin. And then, the final one is the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp, although there {3059|3060} have been allegations that people were killed also at Auschwitz-Stammlager, or Auschwitz I.

Q. You, you visited – in 1978 did you visit Auschwitz-Birkenau?

A. 1978?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Monowitz in 1978?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit the main camp, Auschwitz I, which you've called Auschwitz-Stammlager, in 1978?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you visit Dachau in 1978?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Maidanek, Lublin in 1978?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Mathausen in 1978?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Auschwitz I in 1980?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Belsen in 1980?

A. Yes. {3060|3061}

Q. Did you visit Chelmno ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... Maidanek, Lublin ...

A. Yes.

Q. Sobibor ...

A. Yes.

Q. Treblinka ...

A. Yes.

Q. In 1980 did you visit Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit the Auschwitz I or the Stammlager?

A. Yes.

Q. Maidanek, Lublin?

A. That's right.

Q. In 1984 did you visit any other camps?

A. No.

Q. Have you done reading in respect to the authorities on both sides of this question of the Holocaust?

A. Well, of course, when you start reading about this, the people that support the Holocaust far outnumber the people that are arriving, saying that {3061|3062} something can still be questioned or outright doubt this. So I would say most of my reading has been – I've read, of course, Hilberg and Reitlinger and Vrba, and almost any number – well, of course, the entire Nuremberg volumes are in support of this thing.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So that your reading would be more heavily represented in that area.

A. I would say that well over three-quarters has been reading that involve the people that were supporting these charges.

Q. Yes. After having read that much literature and made those observations, what position do you feel you're in?

A. You mean as far as conclusions are concerned?

Q. Yes. Do you feel – why do you feel you are qualified to express an opinion?

A. Well, I think first of all I have put myself in the position of knowing what these accusations are, for the most part, why they were brought. Then I think I am technically qualified from the standpoint of a chemist with the knowledge that I obtained from all of this reading to more or less decide how reasonable these things are, how {3062|3063} reasonable the charges are.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Are you familiar with the chemical properties of the substance known as Zyklon-B, or HCN?

A. Yes. Well, now, properly speaking, Zyklon-B is a commercial product. Hydrogen cyanide is a part of this commercial product.

Q. And are you familiar with the effects of intense heat on mortar and cement?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are familiar with the factual framework of the allegation of mass deaths from your research?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And have you endeavoured to assess the chemical consequences of the use of Zyklon-B, or HCN, for the execution of persons?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you studied what might be known as side effects of the use of this substance in relation to those who handle it or be around it at the time?

A. Hydrogen cyanide is a very, very useful industrial chemical, but it is, at the same time, a very deadly poison. Though I am acquainted with the safety {3063|3064} measures that are necessary to utilize this material in order to make a vast array of chemicals that we use, basically, every day in the country.

Q. Have you studied the chemical use of hydrogen cyanide gas in exterminations in other situations?

A. Yes. It's used – it is actually an excellent agent for exterminating both warm-blooded animals and insects, and they have been wishing or wanting to use this material for, I suppose, well over eighty or ninety years. The big problem is that it was so very, very deadly, and they had to develop practical safety measures in order to be able to use this.

Q. Are you familiar with those safety measures?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you conducted research into the use of hydrogen cyanide in the execution processes of United States?

A. I have.

Q. Do you consider those relevant to your research in regard to the mass gassings allegations?

A. I believe so.

Q. Why? {3064|3065}

A. The thing is, the safety measures have to be the same, regardless of whatever use you are using. The primary concern, of course, is the safety of the people who are using this material. It is very unforgiving poison. You need something like fifty to seventy milligrams to kill a person, and it is very, very fast-acting. Consequently, there is no chance for a second try. You have to do it right the first time.

Q. Have you studied the safety measures exercised in the United States in the execution of prisoners there?

A. I have.

Q. And are the chemical properties of Zyklon-B different from the chemical properties of the HCN used in that process?

A. No. Hydrogen cyanide is hydrogen cyanide. Zyklon-B is basically a means of conveying hydrogen cyanide to a certain site for a particular use.

Q. So, sir, I must permit your cross-examination by the Crown on your qualifications.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

—— {3065|3066}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Dr. Lindsey, in addition to your reading in the properties of Zyklon-B and hydrogen cyanide, have you ever had any direct personal research with the chemical itself?

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, I used some liquid hydrogen cyanide myself. As I said, it is a very useful chemical. It not only is useful in making plastics as such, but at one time it was necessary for me to synthesize what we refer to as an initiator for polymerisation, and that is a group of materials that utilizes hydrogen cyanide with ketones.

Q. I take it your answer is yes, Doctor.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. It is beyond my high school chemistry. And have you had occasion, when you are at these various sites that you've told us of, to take samples of those sites? Is that what I understood you?

A. Well, I have taken souvenirs. I have taken samples. The Poles, I suppose, were somewhat like everyone else. They hate very much for people to go around mishandling their national monuments, and these things are {3066|3067} certainly in every sense national monuments to the Poles.

Q. So the answer to that would be no?

A. No, I have not taken samples and analyzed them

Q. Okay. And have you ever had occasion to use Zyklon-B?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. Have you ever had occasion, yourself, to analyze it as part of your hobby, to get a hold of some Zyklon-B and analyze it?

A. No. I have never analyzed Zyklon-B.

Q. So is it fair, then, that your knowledge of that would come from your reading?

A. That's true.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further questions, and I am content, Your Honour, that the Doctor has handled hydrogen cyanide in the past.

THE COURT: I thought you would. Thank you. Proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just so that I am clear, Your Honour, I am content with Dr. Lindsey being qualified as an expert in chemistry. I am not content to proceed further if he is being presented as an expert in {3067|3068} history.

THE COURT: Are you presenting him as an expert in history?

MR. CHRISTIE: Only to the extent that he used historical sources to examine the chemical data to be the basis of his opinion of the accusations and charges made —

THE COURT: You will be putting questions to him about the opinions of all these authors he's read?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not historic opinions, no. They do express some chemical opinions, I am sure, that the doctor will be —

THE COURT: So that you propose this witness to be qualified in the field of chemistry.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I tried to articulate as concisely as possible on page 7 of the curriculum vitae —

THE COURT: I've read it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. That's the area in which I hope my friend if he wishes to cross-examine on those particular areas I tried to deal with those, but those are the areas I seek his opinion on. {3068|3069}

THE COURT: Anything further, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I think, if my friend expresses, as is the usual case, questions in the hypotheticals, then that resolves any difficulty I would have with Dr. Lindsey as a historian. I am content with him as a chemist.

THE COURT: On the basis that both counsel have agreed that this witness may testify, and namely as a chemist with respect to the chemical properties of various substances and the processes connected therewith, he may testify and give his opinion as an expert within the confines of that field.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Lindsey, I would now like you to tell us what are the chemical properties of Zyklon-B, or hydrogen cyanide. First of all, Zyklon-B.

A. Well, Zyklon-B, as I said, is a commercial product. It is composed of one-third hydrogen {3069|3070} cyanide that contains a stabilizer, a chemical stabilizer that keeps it from polymerizing ...

THE COURT: Just a moment. It is one-third hydrogen cyanide

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Stabilizer.

THE WITNESS: Stabilizer. And then you also have a small amount of a warning agent. This is normally a lacrimeter [lacrimator] which makes your eyes burn, or your nose burn.

THE COURT: A warning agent.

THE WITNESS: Yes. This was usually included, but not always.

THE COURT: To alert someone to the danger.

THE WITNESS: Yes, to the fact that hydrogen cyanide is present. Now, the remaining two-thirds was basically an inert filler which made the liquid hydrogen cyanide soak into the filler so that you dealt with a solid rather than a liquid. Liquids are notoriously bad to use for chemists, and anyone else for that matter.

THE COURT: An inert filler. What does an inert filler mean? {3070|3071}

THE WITNESS: Well, the inert filler varied quite a bit. You could have such things as diatomaceous earth. This is basically the same as fuller's earth, I believe. You can use pellets of anything that has any mass or is porous. Things got so desperate in Germany that they were using such things as waste cellulose, shredded paper, and that sort of thing, towards the end. As a matter of fact, American Cyanamid had a patent where they used nothing but paper discs, white paper discs to absorb the hydrogen cyanide. This material was then put into a large can and soldered shut, and it stayed soldered shut until you decided to use it. When you decided to use it, you then had to use a special opener which cut the entire top out of the can, and then you used every bit of the contents without trying to save any of it. You could not close the can up again for later use. You could, maybe, delay it for a minute or so by putting in a rubber top on there, but that was basically to go from, say, one part of the room to the other part of the room in the de-lousing procedure.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you tell us whether Zyklon-B would be lighter than air, or heavier than air?

A. Hydrogen cyanide has a molecular {3071|3072} weight that would make it lighter than air.

Q. So if hydrogen cyanide was in crystal form dropped into a room, where would the best air be?

A. Well, first of all, hydrogen cyanide under no circumstances can ever be crystalline unless it is below its freezing point, which is — it's down somewhere within ten degrees or so of zero centigrade; but when hydrogen cyanide vaporizes off the surface, its normal tendency would be for it to rise, consequently, if you were at the top of the room, you would get the greatest amount of hydrogen cyanide. The purest air would be — unless you had your nose in the hydrogen cyanide on the floor — it would be on the floor as far away from the hydrogen cyanide as you could possibly be.

Q. So if we have a statement from someone to the effect that persons gassed with hydrogen cyanide or Zyklon-B crystals appear to have climbed over top of each other to get to the highest point, would that sound logical with your knowledge?

A. I would say that that should be extremely unlikely, because there is no fresh air. The air at the top is the air that is contaminated. The air at the {3072|3073} bottom is the air that is pure.

I want to state again, apparently there is some confusion in the mind of many people that Zyklon-B was crystalline. The only thing that was conceivably crystalline was the filler that contained the liquid hydrogen cyanide.

Q. In your studies of the use of hydrogen cyanide to kill people you indicated earlier that you had studied the uses made of it in the American gas chambers in the States.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what safety precautions are necessary to protect against the dangers to, say, for example, physicians, guards or others handling an executed prisoner?

A. Well, it's a very extensive procedure. I think there's something like forty or more steps that have to be made in making the preparations and carrying out the execution afterwards. After the felon has been executed, they attempt, as best they can, to ventilate the gas chamber, after which time it is still considered much too toxic for anyone to enter. They then can wash the thing down, the gas chamber, and they have to take special precautions about {3073|3074} getting rid of the water, because they don't want polluters or poison in the water supply to which this would be running. After they have done that, they normally admit gaseous ammonia.

Q. Why is that?

A. And the gaseous ammonia has an effect that is really very, very necessary here because, as I said earlier, Zyklon-B has a stabilizer in it which is acidic. Well, ammonia is basic, and the reason you want your Zyklon-B or hydrogen cyanide to be slightly acidic is that when it is basic, it can polymerize. This means several molecules will get together and form a larger molecule which is basically not volatile, and in this case, fortunately, not toxic.

Q. So the ammonia changes the toxicity to non-toxicity.

A. It does a great deal, but they normally are not even satisfied with this, because first of all they have an indicator in there to be certain that the entire area is toxic, and after that they do this. They then aerate [sic] again to get rid of the ammonia, and they usually check it with copper benzodine acetate test paper and, depending on the colour change on this test paper, they then decide it is safe to enter or not, or they may have to continue on {3074|3075} beyond this.

Q. If simply water was sprayed into a room where hydrogen cyanide had been used in fatal what would happen to the hydrogen cyanide?

A. Well, of course, hydrogen and water is mixable [miscible]. That is, each is completely soluble in the other. That is, if you had water spraying into a chamber that had hydrogen cyanide in it, the water would immediately dissolve, form a solution of hydrocyanic [acid] in the water, and this material would be devastatingly toxic and lethal to anyone who would get this on their skin since hydrogen cyanide is easily absorbed on the skin. As a matter of fact, if I may add, the protective clothing is, under the circumstances, the best they can do.

Q. What protective clothing, sir?

A. You normally have to wear rubber boots and rubber gloves and rubber coats and rubber pants to be sure that this material doesn't get on you; but even there you have spaces between the various garments and the gas can get through the spaces into your skin; and as I say, you need only about fifty to seventy milligrams, and unless you get help in a hurry, you're gonna die in about ten minutes or less. {3075|3076}

Q. So in respect to the evidence of a witness who said that he handled some number of corpses that were recently gassed and wet, what would you say would be the consequences of doing that?

A. It seems to me that this would be highly unlikely. I would be much more prone to believe this if you would let this man stick his hand into a solution of hydrogen cyanide in water, say a one per cent solution, and he were alive ten minutes later, I might be more prone to believe it. He might be just lucky. You can absorb hydrogen cyanide through your hands very, very easily, and I would say that if you got something like that on your hands, unless you washed it off in very short order you would certainly join the alleged pile of victims that you were carrying out.

Q. We have been told that Zyklon-B was used in the gas chambers in such quantities that it killed hundreds of people at a time. Can you comment on what venting system would be necessary for those quantities?

A. Well, as I say, you would need for each person you would need something like fifty to seventy milligrams, but what you would need over and above that is, you would need enough to saturate the air up to a level, {3076|3077} probably, of three hundred parts per million, which increases the amount of hydrogen cyanide you'd need. That means it's got to be three hundred parts per million, and over and above that you must have sufficient, above this amount, to carry out the killing procedure. This means that you would need, in a very, very poorly ventilated room, you would need a rather large exhausting system. I am not aware that there was such a thing at Auschwitz-Birkenau.

Q. Have you had an opportunity, in your observations of the crematoria at Auschwitz-Birkenau, to determine how it was located in relation to the ground in your own personal examination?

A. Yes. I've seen the crematorium and the so-called Leichenkellers, as I said, three times. Today, perhaps, it is not as obvious as it was back in those days. I have also examined the aerial [sic] photographs which the CIA put out some years ago ...

Q. Which are in evidence here somewhere.

A. ... and I have come to the conclusion that, well, first of all, in order to function as a mortuary [sic], as the German plans called them, it was located purposely underground so that the entire volume under there would be cooled for the preservation of bodies before they {3077|3078} would be cremated. So normally you would expect this to be as far underground as possible. And if you look at the remains of the foundations today, they were, of course – maybe dirt or something is filled in since then, but as I remember, they weren't more than maybe two or certainly no more than three feet above the surrounding landscape.

Q. What were the relationship of heat to the evaporation of hydrogen cyanide from the crystals? Would you need heat, or would you want it cool?

A. Well, I have – I don't like the word "crystals", perhaps because this is, this, in chemistry, we don't use the word "crystal" unless it is a crystallite salt, like —

Q. Pardon me, but I think you described it as the agent in which the HCN is absorbed.

A. Yes. The inert matter. But so far as heat is concerned, every substance, when you have a change of phase, that is, from solid to liquid or liquid to gas, that sort of thing, you have what you call a latent heat of phase change. Now, when you change from liquid to gas, this is called a latent heat of vaporization and you need a certain amount of heat to be put into the substance to make it turn into vapours, like boiling water. You have to boil {3078|3079} water on the fire, or you don't get steam. Well, this is true also of hydrogen cyanide. Hydrogen cyanide is a rather unique substance. It is, perhaps, not as unique as water because water needs a very large – has a very large latent heat of vaporization. Hydrogen cyanide is not as high as water. It is, nevertheless, higher than a lot of other organic material. So when you go to vaporize hydrogen cyanide you have to provide sufficient heat to change it from the liquid to the gaseous phase, and if you do not have this heat available it will either lie there as a kind of puddle – of course, in the case of Zyklon-B it will remain in the inert filler and will not vaporize any more than the amount that would be necessary to saturate the air, but that heat would still have to be taken out of the air, out of the floor or something else, and basically, it would cool the surrounding area.

Q. We have been told also, Mr. Lindsey, about chimneys burning with flames shooting out of them, or flame shooting out of them forty or so feet, in some cases fifteen feet, sometimes day and night. Do you have any chemical knowledge of the effect of intense heat on interlocking crystals of calcium magnesium silicates usually found in water? {3079|3080}

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us when mortar holds and when it doesn't?

A. Mortar is made from a mixture of calcium oxide, cement and sand, and the cement is rather a complex mixture of calcium magnesium silicates, sometimes perhaps a little aluminum in addition. Now, to make cement, which is basically the major binding element of mortar, we have to heat this to a very high temperature, and what we do in this case is to drive off what we call water crystallization and we have to heat it to a high temperature to get this water to come out, and this is – well, it depends. You can do it at a higher temperature for a much shorter time, or you can do it at a lower temperature for a longer time. Now, when you mix mortar, you mix cement that has been heated, and what you do, basically, is to add this water back to the material from which you've driven the water initially, and when you do this, you mix it with lime, cement and sand and then, as I say, this cement reabsorbs the water, kind of like plaster of paris, and you form interlocking crystals of this calcium magnesium silicate hydrates, and this gives you the binding force.

It isn't a real good binding force, but {3080|3081} it's sufficient for mortar. Most of your problem with mortar is compression rather than tension, anyway.

Now, if you go ahead and build your chimney with bricks which have been fired, the bricks fare all right at almost any temperature, but the mortar material there —

Q. If, for example, the deposits provide a hypothetical in which there is a fire in a chimney that shoots flames twelve feet high day and night, what do you – what happens

A. Well, what you do basically is, you force the cement to go to its original dehydrated state, and this would be, basically, like you would have – well, you would have basically the same strength as a result of that, for your mortar, as you would have if you mix the cement and lime and sand without any water, and your chimney would fall apart. I understand that if you have a fire in a chimney in Canada, we don't – I don't have a chimney, like a masonry chimney in Iowa, but I understand that if you have a fire in a chimney, the chimney will be condemned until you rebuild it.

Q. Now, you've read the literature pertaining to mass gassings, and I put to you a couple of {3081|3082} hypothetical questions about the handling of those who were allegedly gassed. I would like to ask you if a person handled the corpse of a person in an American gas chamber without rubber gloves, without the ammonia process of neutralizing the Zyklon or, rather, HCN, what would happen if a person touched such a corpse?

A. The normal procedure is to not find out what would happen. The fact is it seems like such a dangerous thing that they make every precaution that you can think of to be certain that nobody does touch this. You might say they bend over backwards in order to be certain that every last bit of hydrogen cyanide is purged from the system before anyone goes in there.

If I may add, some of the safety procedures, are on the basis of work that was done by Dr. Tesch and Dr. Gerhard Peters of the DEGESCH in Germany, and these procedures were absolutely necessary before they could use hydrogen cyanide for fumigating purposes.

Q. Is hydrogen cyanide used for fumigating purposes today?

A. It is used in some places. Apparently, its use in the United States has become less popular. I understand it is citrus fruit that is imported {3082|3083} into Japan, it is still used. I understand there is one small company in Virginia, it is representative of the DEGESCH in the United States, but I believe it has stopped selling the Zyklon discolorant because they have other material now that they use for this purpose.

Q. Have you done a study of all the literature pertaining to Zyklon and its use during the times of the German Government in the Third Reich?

A. Well, I have made a survey of the literature that goes back as far as seventy or eighty years ago, and everything in between that. That material was first suggested as a fumigating material by a man by the name of Bell in the United States, but its toxicity —

THE COURT: Stop there. Doctor, if you have studied the material, or if you have surveyed it, is there a difference between surveyed and studied? There may not be. I don't know.

THE WITNESS: Well, in chemistry, what we do is survey the literature.

THE COURT: Does that mean studied it?

THE WITNESS: Yes. We go through the chemistry books about abstracts and we find all the articles that have been written on that subject at a certain time. {3083|3084} This is basically, a survey.

THE COURT: All right. Sorry to interrupt. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you come to any conclusions about the alleged mass gassings in the concentration camps from all the literature you've read, from all the Holocaust literature you've read and from the literature on other sources of the chemical agent?

A. Well, after I have looked basically everything I can get my hands on to read subject, I have been forced to the conclusion that it certainly is just as impossible for it to have happened the way it's described.

Q. And why do you say that, sir?

A. Well, there are too many inconsistencies, I think. First of all, the people had to be brought in. The number of people who were brought into Birkenau, for example, and registered, they kept a very good record of all that – these records were captured by the Russians when the Auschwitz complex was captured.

Q. But let me put to you the hypothetical situation alleged by, here in this Court, by Dr. Vrba, Dr. Hilberg and those who had testified, that 2.5 million, or {3084|3085} one million people were gassed in crematoria II, III, IV and V. What do you say about that?

A. I find it, from my point of view, I find it is absolutely impossible to believe that. The method as described, the rate at which they can burn these bodies and carry out the gassing procedure, I find it's impossible. Even the fact that they could cram, as I remember, two thousand people into a room that size – this was challenged at, I believe it was Dr. Tesch's trial in Hamburg, and Dr. Bendel said, well, the Germans could do it – but the fact is that the volume considerations were just all out of order there.

Q. And Dr. Bendel was whom?

A. Dr. Sigismund Bendel was the man who gave testimony at both the Luenen trial, and also – this was where they tried the S.S. staff from Birkenau – and he also gave testimony at Dr. Tesch's trial against Dr. Tesch and Karl Weinbacher. He was a physician who, apparently, worked at the camp there, I believe at two of the camps in the Auschwitz complex, and seemed to at least claim knowledge of some of the goings on in so-called Stammlager, or Auschwitz I.

Q. In your examinations, for example, of the so-called Stammlager, or Auschwitz I, were you directed {3085|3086} to what was an alleged gas chamber?

A. Originally, they, in the Auschwitz I, they – well, first of all I might explain that the entire crematorium in Auschwitz I is apparently the remnant of the old Austrian munitions magazine which was converted into a crematorium that had two positions in it. Later it was converted into a crematorium with four positions, but it had a large underground room just to the north, I believe, of the cremation sites, and this was given as a gas chamber. In fact, to this very day, you go in there and the Poles maintain steadfastly that this is a gas chamber, and they have a hole in about the centre of the room where the Zyklon-B allegedly dropped down from up above, and if you go up above, as I did, you will find that that is an old ventilator that apparently has been removed. So that was considered to be a gas chamber. They have also claimed that the one block there – I can't think of the number right now but I can certainly supply it if it is necessary – this was basically the political block where prisoners were interrogated – they claimed that people were gassed in the cellar down there.

Q. Can people be gassed with Zyklon-B in an unsealed room? {3086|3087}

A. Well, it would be very, very – I think it would be rather hazardous for the people doing the gassing. It's kind of like the so-called S.S. men's room at Maydanek [sic] where they had a hole that big cut between the S.S. men's cabin, where he supposedly was observing the gassing of prisoners in the gas chamber, and there was nothing in that hole but about four pieces of quarter-inch steel, and I don't suppose the S.S.

man would have fared too well if he had looked through that hole too long.

Now, you take no chances with hydrogen cyanide. You must be absolutely certain that it doesn't get out and get you.

Q. When you have been shown the places that now are allegedly gas chambers in Auschwitz I called the Stammlager, and the remnants of Auschwitz II called Birkenau, what volumes of gas would have been necessary to kill people in those areas, and what would have become of that gas if it escaped without a chimney at great height? All right. What volumes of gas would be necessary to kill people in those areas?

A. Well, you normally need something like three hundred parts per million to kill within a half an hour. What volume of gas they — {3087|3088}

Q. How large are these areas is what I am getting at, so the jury can understand.

A. You see, I've — I have to admit that the volumes have escaped me. It was — these things were about two — a little over two meters high, and one is about fifty meters long, and the other is seventy meters long, and I think it's about eight meters wide.

Q. How big is the gas chamber in the U.S. execution process?

A. Well, that was a hexagon, and I have calculated that volume out, but I don't have it on my tongue right now. I can get it out of my briefcase if you ...

Q. Can you give us an approximate estimate of the gas chamber, the size of the gas chamber used to execute, and the gas chamber in Birkenau and Auschwitz I?

A. I'm sorry, would you ask that again?

Q. I said, would you give us a description of the difference in size between what purports to be the gas chamber in Auschwitz I, or Birkenau, and the size of what is known to be the gas chamber in the United States?

A. Well, the gas chamber in the United States is big enough for three men to enter, basically. They are big enough for two people to go in with a prisoner. {3088|3089} Consequently it is eight, nine, ten feet high and it must have a diameter of around eight feet.

Q. What's the size of — well, you described the size of what is alleged to be the gas chamber in Birkenau and Krema II and III. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Just give those figures again so the jury can compare.

A. Well, there's one about 1.2 meters high. No. About 2.2 meters high. And it's about — the one, or the room that is called the gas chamber is about fifty meters long, and as I remember, about eight meters wide.

Q. Okay. Now, to have a room that large filled with sufficient quantities of gas to kill people in it, allegedly in the number of two thousand at a time, what would be the effect of the escape of a volume of gas that large into the air around it and with people around it?

A. Well, you would probably have, since this is lighter than air — you see, hydrogen cyanide was at one time considered for a war gas, but it was not considered to be a persistent gas like mustard or phosgene. Consequently its use was banned very, very early. The reason {3089|3090} is, it rises and the wind sweeps it away.

My feeling here is that it would be dissipated by the air once it got outside of the room, but once you look at that room you find that it would be exceedingly difficult to get any sort of ventilating in a room, built as that was, all underground, with only one small door.

Q. In relation to your research and as a result of your research and knowledge of chemistry have you concluded an opinion in relation to the accuracy of the six million figure and the mass gassing allegation?

A. Well, I have come to the conclusion that, as I said, that no one was wilfully [sic] and purposefully killed with Zyklon-B in this manner. Now, the six million figure, it seems to me, from considerations that I've made of population figures in Poland from the —

MR. CHRISTIE: There will be an objection to that, so we can't go analyzing population figures, sir; but can you, from your chemical knowledge and your knowledge of the sites where these things were supposed to have happened, express your opinion as to the likelihood of gassing six million people, or four million, or 2.5 million, or one million, or seven hundred thousand in the complex at Auschwitz-Birkenau? {3090|3091}

A. I consider it completely impossible there again.

Q. Having considered the same question, not the numbers, at Auschwitz I, having seen what you were told there was the gas chamber, do you consider it feasible that any numbers of people could have been gassed in that?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Why?

A. Well, one of the problems is, as I said, what I have tried to do is go back to the original accusations and get information from the people who contributed, certainly in my opinion, to the establishment of these principles, or these ideas. One of the men who gave testimony that gassing was going on at the Stammlager, or Auschwitz I, was a man by the name of Percy Broad.

Q. Who is he?

A. Percy Broad was a member of the S.S. He was a Brazilian citizen, and as most people in the S.S. were, he was a volunteer. Consequently he was in a rather bad position at the end of the War, since Brazil had declared War against Germany. He therefore gave testimony at Dr. Tesch's trial. He also wrote an article which was called The Percy Broad Report in which he described the executions at {3091|3092} Auschwitz I, or the Stammlager. He alternates from time to time. One time they are executed by a special gun that makes very little noise. He also mentioned that one day he was looking out of his office building there, which is only a few hundred yards away, and he saw an S.S. man standing on top of the crematorium, dumping the material in, which he assumed to be hydrogen cyanide, and killing people inside the gas chamber.

Well, he did not know definitely that there were people in there. He said that he heard screams which then died down, but he had really no firsthand evidence that the S.S. men had dumped anything in there. He said he dumped something in there, and he assumed it to be hydrogen cyanide.

Q. Having examined the site, what would you say the likelihood of that being successful?

A. It seems to me very, very unlikely.

Q. Is there any hermetic seal to the room in Auschwitz I alleged to be a gas chamber?

A. No. If you look at the room in Auschwitz I you will find that there's no — not even a door between the so-called gas chamber and the place where they are cremating the bodies. It's a completely open space. It {3092|3093} must be four, five feet wide and tall enough for a man to walk through.

Q. Is hydrogen cyanide flammable?

A. Yes. Hydrogen cyanide is flammable, but it is flammable at much higher concentrations than you would need to kill somebody. As I said, three hundred parts per million are deadly in a very few minutes. To get a mixture that would be explosive, you'd need, up around six per cent minimum number, and this would put you up in the range of six thousand parts per million. So it would be an entirely different order of magnitude.

Q. So are there any other reasons why you consider the Perry Brod [Percy Broad] account to be unlikely?

A. Well, the Auschwitz trial was held — I don't know when it was held, I think in 1980, but it was held in Frankfurt, and at this time Percy Broad denounced a great deal of his earlier testimony on the basis that it was based — his earlier testimony had been based to a great degree on hearsay, and this was pretty obvious in his testimony in Dr. Tesch's trial, and he also claimed that there was a certain amount of duress involved here.

Q. From looking at the vent of the roof of what purports to be the gas chamber in Auschwitz, {3093|3094} can you see any other problems for the allegation there of gassing?

A. Well, the entrance doors on the back and in the front are very, very small. There's also, as a matter of fact, they describe these gas chambers as having been built very substantially. If you look at the back door, it is a simple wooden door. It is much flimsier than the doors here. I think I could break the door down without much difficulty; and on top of that, on the northeast corner they have a door that they claim has always been there, and it's got a glass pane in there that you can look into the next room. They presently have still another crematoria furnace in there. So obviously, anyone who was in there, first of all there's no door between this alleged gas chamber and the furnaces, no door at all. So anyone that would be in there tending the furnaces would probably be killed as fast as in the gas chamber. The other two doors are basically flimsy affairs that can be broken down without much trouble at all.

Q. Is there any evidence in your observation of those places of the ability to introduce ammonia to neutralize the hydrogen cyanide?

A. No. I saw no case of that whatsoever.

Q. In all the literature you've read in {3094|3095} which allegations of mass gassings are raised, is there a suggestion that ammonia is used?

A. No.

Q. Is there any other possible neutralizing agent?

A. Well, you could use, possibly, any basic material, say calcium hydroxide and lime, lime water. You could use lime water. You could use sodium hydroxide. The nice thing about ammonia is that it is gaseous. You would have to spray the others.

Q. Is there any indication that hydrogen cyanide would be absorbed into porous material such as bricks and mortar?

A. You see, the whole idea behind Zyklon-B is that you have a mass that would absorb quantities of liquid hydrogen cyanide. Now, the minute you go to mortar, a rough surface like that, you have increased the surface; consequently, the amount of hydrogen cyanide that can be absorbed on to the surface, especially if it's masonry, it's going to be wet or it is going to be wetter, it is not going to be bone dry, and since hydrogen cyanide dissolves so readily in water, you are going to saturate those walls with hydrogen cyanide, and that is going to stay there, basically, until you evaporate the water, too. {3095|3096}

Q. So what effect would that have on anyone —

A. That makes it much more persistent, or much more dangerous for anyone entering the room after the alleged procedure has been carried out.

Q. What are the walls in the United States made out of?

A. They are made out of steel.

Q. And if, over a period of months, or even years, hundreds of thousands of people were supplied with lethal quantities of gas within such chambers as are shown at Auschwitz-Birkenau, would the effect in the walls be any greater, or less?

A. Now, would you repeat that question?

Q. What happens if you continue to introduce Zyklon-B to porous, wet-walled material?

A. Well, what you would do is, you would continue to build up the level of hydrogen cyanide. You would have to dry these walls out thoroughly or you would basically have a sink for hydrogen cyanide there, and the concentration would continually build up in these walls until it reached a certain level, or it became saturated, basically. And since they are missible [miscible], I suppose there is no end to what {3096|3097} amount of hydrogen cyanide could be soaked into the walls.

Q. You say "missible" [sic]. What does that mean — mutually dissoluble?

A. Well, "missible" [sic] means mutually soluble. It is like alcohol, if I can use, perhaps, a better example. You can mix one drop of alcohol in a quarter of water, or you can mix a quarter of water in a drop of alcohol and anything in between.

Q. So I think in conclusion I will just ask you if you have communicated your knowledge and opinions to Mr. Zundel.

A. Yes, I have.

Q. When did you begin to communicate with Mr. Zundel?

A. I first communicated with Mr. Zundel when I found out from another source that he had pictures of the inside of the sauna at Auschwitz, and when I found that someone had some information that I didn't possess, I was always anxious to get hold of it. So I wrote to Mr. Zundel and he kindly provided me with some photographs, and we have corresponded since then on our interest in this particular subject and have exchanged information that I had.

One of the difficulties, of course, is {3097|3098} that we have people that are interested in this subject all over the world, and all of these people have this information and another one will have this information. Information is not always that easy to come by, and it usually entails a fair amount of work to get hold of it. So it's nice to be able to exchange documentary evidence that we've accumulated over a period of, basically, years.

Q. Why have you undertaken this research into this subject?

A. Well, history had always been of great interest to me. I suppose at one time there was some question as to whether I should be a chemist or go into history. And the fact is, I think chemists normally eat better than historians; but when I was a boy in Texas, the first revelations of the fraudulent nature of the Bryce Committee allegations of World War I were being made public for the first time, and many of you don't realize that any more, but we had come to a great number of conclusions about the authenticity of these charges, and when first heard these Holocaust charges, basically towards the end of World War II, my first impression was that these were nothing more than the Bryce allegations that had been directed towards another people. Instead of the Belgians, this time, or the {3098|3099} Serbians, it was basically the Jews. As a matter of fact, there was a point brought out by William Shirer in his book in —

THE COURT: Are we not getting into history?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was just getting into an inquiry —

THE WITNESS: So I —

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor. Next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So if I may understand you correctly, it's a matter of interpreting and understanding history.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And have you communicated with others who have inquired into this area of history ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... that shared your views of the plausibility of the Holocaust?

A. That's right.

Q. And have the group of people who have the view that this is an implausible story got a collective name? {3099|3100}

A. Well, they have been called a number of things, actually. I have been active in this Institute of Historical Review, which is in California, published in their journal. I published a study of Dr. Tesch and Weinbacher. There is a great deal of activity going on in that general area, I think.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Excuse me just a moment, sir.

Q. It is also alleged here that it is possible to enter the gas chambers with gas masks with special filters. Would that be enough to protect a person?

A. No. Hydrogen cyanide is so deadly, and it is absorbed through the skin so easily, that a gas mask would be of little use in giving you ultimate protection. Now, if you walked in and walked right back out, you might get away with it, but if you were to walk in there for any length of time with a high enough concentration — and as said, the concentration normally is, well, to be fatal, is almost three hundred parts per million, but for fumigating you normally need something like twenty grams per square, per cubic meter, which is higher — but you would, without having the adequate rubber protective clothing, you would, certainly in a rather short time, depending of course on the level of {3100|3101} the concentration, you would absorb enough hydrogen cyanide to kill you.

Q. So that a gas mask wouldn't protect you.

A. No, that would not be the ultimate in protection. As a matter of fact, there is no such thing as ultimate protection where you could go in and work for, say, eight hours and not be in danger.

Q. Even with rubber clothing?

A. I would — yes. Even with rubber clothing. They prefer that — well, the safety requirements are such that two men must be present at all times. So that if one of them is affected by hydrogen cyanide, the other one can get him out and start resuscitation measures.

Q. Are you aware of the chemical effects of hydrogen cyanide in the blood system?

A. Yes. Hydrogen cyanide has a peculiar effect on the warm-blooded animal. It is cytochrome C poison. Now, cytochrome C is referred to as a repository enzyme in the cells of the organic system, and the hydrogen cyanide poisons this system so that the cell is incapable of absorbing oxygen from the hemoglobin in the blood. Consequently, when a person is poisoned, normally, by hydrogen cyanide, the cells {3101|3102} or the cytochrome system in the cells is poisoned, and since the blood cannot give up its oxygen to the cell, the venous blood becomes just as red as the arterial blood. As a result, the victims of cyanide poisoning are usually brick red, cherry, rosy red, and even their eyes, the eyeballs get red because you get the colour of the eyes from your blood, basically; and if the venous blood is the same colour as the arterial blood, you end up with red eyes. This is really one of the symptoms that is almost certain to indicate that you suffered cyanide poisoning.

Q. Have you knowledge of the degree of carbon monoxide poisoning, or carbon monoxide provided by diesel engines?

A. Diesel engines are peculiar. We receive reports from day to day from people dying of engine exhaust. It is a popular method of committing suicide. But these are gasoline engines which operate differently from a diesel engine. In diesel engines, the fuel is burned up in an air-rich environment, which means that you end up with carbon dioxide. In a gasoline engine, the one that we are familiar with, you burn your fuel in a fuel-rich environment, and this means that you get an awful lot of carbon monoxide.

Q. We have the Gerstein statement which {3102|3103} you've indicated in your curriculum vitae you studied, and in it it said that people were gassed with carbon monoxide from diesel engines. What do you say to that?

A. Of course, the amount of carbon monoxide that would be released would be such a low level that being poisoned with carbon monoxide from a diesel engine, you would probably get a headache. The amount — this has been covered by others who have been interested in it and have taken it to much greater length than I; but if you will remember, in the United States they were having a great discussion about pollution some time ago, and they were thinking of going to diesel engines purely because there is so little carbon monoxide that would be given off by the diesel engines. It was with respect to the gasoline engine.

Q. You have studied the use of fumigation process with Zyklon-B. Can you tell us how long a room would have to be naturally aereated [sic] before one could enter with the fumigation process?

A. Well, this depends, of course, on the amount of wind blowing and the amount of the area of the windows that are open. This is rather difficult to say absolutely, and that's the reason it's so very, very necessary to carry out the safety procedures that are prescribed when {3103|3104} you use this material. What you do is, you go in and you open all the windows and you get back out as fast as you can. As a matter of fact, it's prescribed that if one window is jammed a little bit, you leave that window alone, open all the other windows and you go back only after it's been aired out for an hour or so.

After the room has been aired, then they have these copper acetate benzadine test papers, these are exposed to the atmosphere inside the room, and if they get to a certain colour in a specified time, then you have to resume deaeration, [sic] and you continue doing this until the paper exposed in the room does not change colour in the time specified by the safety measures.

Even after this, though, the American Cyanamid Company, in its published brochure, in the fumigation of barracks specifies that you should leave the windows in the room open a few inches for another eight hours.

Q. Can you tell me, having studied the Gerstein statement and knowing what you do about combustion, what do you consider the Gerstein statement of gassing thousands of people with diesel engines?

A. Well, the Gerstein statement is obviously incapable of being true

technically. {3104|3105}

Q. In the Hoess memoirs published by Commandant Hoess, he talks about eating and drinking in connection with removing bodies from the gas chamber. What do you say about the chemical possibilities of those phenomena?

A. Well, I think eating in a place that just had a dosing with hydrogen cyanide would be suicidal. You certainly don't want to sit down and eat your meal, and as a matter of fact, with anything moist at all you would absorb hydrogen cyanide immediately and ingest that, and that would be almost certain to kill you.

Now, so far as smoking is concerned, there was a very famous German scientist by the name of Guttermann —

Q. Well, I won't ask you about smoking. I will just ask about eating. Anything in regard to the Hoess memoirs that you are familiar with that you consider in that regard to be feasible?

A. Well, the Hoess memoirs are written under a very peculiar set of circumstances. Apparently, the only manuscript, or parts of the manuscript —

MR. CHRISTIE: I think there will be an objection. You can't go into the history of this thing. That is to be dealt with not by yourself, but by somebody else. {3105|3106}

Your Honour, I think that those are the questions that I propose, but I may have another one.

I wonder if it is possible to take the noon adjournment, and if I have any more questions, I might then have that opportunity, and if not, then cross-examination could start at that time.

THE COURT: We will adjourn till 2:15.

— The witness stands down.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, Your Honour, there may be at a later stage, but I don't expect anything that will require the absence of the jury now. Perhaps — my friend thinks it is convenient, we might discuss one thing in the absence of the jury.

I told my friend that I will propose to try to introduce two large photographs of what purports to be the gas chamber in Auschwitz I and ask the witness if he's been there, if he's seen it, if this is accurately {3106|3107} depicting the scene. And he has taken photographs of his own. These are enlargements of other photographs. He can identify whether it accurately represents the scene of what purports to be the gas chamber in Auschwitz I.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand that these photographs are from Dr. Faurisson. My position is not that they don't accurately depict the scene today, but whether they depict the scene forty years ago based on Dr. Faurisson's evidence that this was a building and an area of the building that underwent several changes during the time that the concentration camp was in operation. So that I wouldn't want Dr. Lindsey to be comparing apples and oranges, and I don't know whether that is what it was like when it was being used as a gas chamber.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think the answer is that the explanation provided today is that this is what the gas chamber was. I am dealing with, as best I can, the allegation as it exists today. If the Crown was wanting to prove that this is not the way it was, then their experts could do so that had that opportunity, really, to produce some kind of representation of the way it was.

We are doing the best we can with what's {3107|3108} now represented by the authorities, both in Auschwitz and in the literature, as the gas chamber.

Now, the position of the defence has always been that this isn't and wasn't a gas chamber but, because that's the position of the defence, I don't understand how we, therefore, must not be allowed to deal with the allegation as it stands. We are not saying that this picture doesn't depict the way the authorities represent the gas chamber. That's exactly the way the authorities represent the gas chamber today. If you go there today, the evidence from Lindsey can be and will be that this is what we are told is the gas chamber; this is the way we are told it's done – these are the vents through which the Zyklon is dropped and this is the room into which, supposedly, they are dropped. I don't know how much more firsthand one's knowledge can be than that.

I think that that, therefore, would give us the right to say, well, this is the way that story is told and we deal with it on that basis. That's why we want to introduce these pictures.

THE COURT: When were they taken?

MR. CHRISTIE: These pictures, believe, were taken in 1980. These are actually {3108|3109} taken, I believe, by Dr. Faurisson, but Dr. Lindsey has taken his own, which are identical.

THE COURT: The same arguments would apply pro and con, I gather.

MR. CHRISTIE: I agree. The pictures are identical. They depict the same thing. You see, Dr. Lindsey could say what the authorities now tell us, what all the literature tells us about this place; he can also tell us what, after seeing the place, examining it, is his opinion as to the feasibility of it. That's about the purpose of this photograph and this evidence.

The other thing – well, I don't think we have any other dispute on the other matter, which is another photograph.

THE COURT: If you don't have any dispute, then I don't want to hear from you at the moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I guess that's the dispute; we are sort of at odds there. That is all I can say.

—— {3109|3110}

RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, during the course of evidence going in on behalf of the defence, proposes to put a question to the witness who is presently being examined by Mr. Christie concerning some photographs.

The witness in question is testifying, essentially, in his capacity as a chemist. His evidence has been of concern to the issue of a gas known by its apparent trade name as Zyklon-B.

The witness, incidentally, through the thrust of his evidence, is what may be described as an amateur historian. His interest in history has taken him to many concentration camps of Europe of 1939 to 1945 vintage, and perhaps some years before that, in some cases.

He has sworn that, in connection with the feasibility of the use of Zyklon-B to gas people, he has taken himself to a number of concentration camps to inspect gas chambers, or alleged gas chambers.

It is now proposed that he be asked whether or not he can identify two very large enlargements of what purports to be gas chambers at the concentration camps in question. The two photographs emanate from a book which was authored by Dr. Faurisson.

Dr. Faurisson was a previous witness who {3110|3111} testified on behalf of the defence. The photographs, I am informed by counsel for the accused, were taken in the year 1980. The purpose of the introduction of either or both of the photographs into evidence is to let the jury see what they depict. They depict the interior of what is said to be a gas chamber.

The Crown takes the position that the photographs should not be admitted on the ground that what each depicts at the present time cannot be said to form an evidentiary nexus or connection to a gas chamber that may have existed some forty or more years ago.

Crown counsel points out that changes have been made, obviously, to the camp in question in the interim. Therefore, what the jury will be seeing is what an alleged gas chamber looked like in 1980 and not in 1942, 1943, 1944 or 1945. The exhibit, if it is to be admitted, must be relevant to one or more of the issues that must be tried by the jury.

In my view, it would be misleading to permit those photographs to come in at this point. The photographer has not been called. The type of camera employed has not been given in evidence. The lens opening and the angle of the lens has not been given. Those are merely a {3111|3112} few of the reasons I have declined to permit the photographs to be put in as exhibits.

In addition, Crown counsel is absolutely correct in his submission that what a picture shows in 1940, unless there is an evidentiary basis connected between what it now depicts and what would have been depicted forty years before is something that militates against the admission of the photograph.

That nexus does not exist on the record of this trial at this time. Questions cannot be put, nor will the photographs be put in at this time through this witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. Those are all the questions I have.

THE COURT: Thank you. If the Doctor can please resume the stand. The jury, please.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury enters. 2:34 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Lindsey, in earlier evidence the Crown introduced a film called "Nazi Concentration Camps" in which the narrator said in respect to the camp of Dachau some things which I am going to read to you in a moment. Have you been to Dachau?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you investigated that camp?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you investigated the allegation of a gas chamber there?

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to read you a portion of the narrative of the film, and then I am going to ask you your opinion of this situation:

"Hanging in orderly rows were the clothes of prisoners who had been suffocated in the lethal gas chamber. They had been persuaded to remove their clothing under the pretext of taking a shower for which towels and soap were provided. This is the Brausebad, the shower-bath. Inside the shower-bath, the gas vents." {3113|3114}

[missing page]

that I made last spring.

Q. Now, this obviously represents the exterminationists' view of Crematorium II. Is that right?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And it reveals the usual daily quota alleged in the literature of two thousand bodies. Is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. That accurately depicts the scene of those models?

A. This is an accurate reproduction of the models.

Q. All right. Later we will ask those to be exhibited, then. Could you tell us what problems you see in the representation that it depicted?

A. Well, should I hold this up?

Q. Yes, please.

THE COURT: Yes. Certainly.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, if you could describe – we should have an easel. Maybe I can hold them and you could come over. Dr. Lindsey, maybe I can hold them for you and you can point out the things. And if you can come down off the stand, and I can be of some assistance, and {3114|3115} if I can show it to the jury well enough back that I can see.

THE WITNESS: Well, the accepted mode of operation was —

THE COURT: Can the jury see? I cannot see, perhaps, Mr. Christie, if you moved right over beside Crown counsel and faced the witness you could both face the jury.

THE WITNESS: Now, the method that was given in the literature is that the inmates that are supposed to be gassed came in the western entrance – this is Auschwitz II – and they walk in through here and went here to undress and leave their clothing, and from there they progressed into the gas chamber. This is Leichenkeller I, a mortuary.

Leichenkeller is the German word for mortuary.

This, if you will notice, is a kind of an enclosed area here. There is only one door leading into it, and that is a small door over here which holds, according to the German plans, holds the bodies. It doesn't swing out. It would get in the way of the small elevator which was used to bring the bodies up here for cremation into the fifteen furnaces out here.

Q. Can you tell us, Doctor, [sic] if this depicts – is this the portion that is cut away, is this {3115|3116} under ground [sic] or above ground?

A. Yes. This is underground with the exception of a foot or so above the ground. And even that is, I understand, is covered with dirt.

Q. All right. Could you tell us what problem, if any, this represents in chemical terms for the operation as it is described?

A. Well, the allegation is made that two thousand people were in this room. They were then gassed by hydrogen cyanide, or Zyklon-B that was dropped onto them. This would require the hydrogen cyanide to be used for this mass of humanity fairly equally if they are going to get the killing action stipulated here.

Hydrogen cyanide would basically rise, so it would take an hour or so for these people to expire. In the meantime, you have these people over here waiting for the next charge, and when these people were dead, supposedly, then they have to be removed by some crew through a relatively small door. It's nothing like the double doors you have back here. And then they would be taken upstairs on a small elevator which would hold, I suppose – I am guessing – maybe four, five bodies at a time, taken up to these furnaces where you have fifteen positions, and if you assume it takes an {3116|3117} hour and a half to completely cremate these bodies up here, you've got rid of basically fifteen bodies out of two thousand. Then you have these people over here waiting to go in here.

Q. What about the chemical conditions inside the chamber where the people are gassed?

A. Well, these walls would be masonry walls. They would be very porous and probably moist, and they would have a tremendous quantity of hydrogen cyanide. Where the lethal agents are concerned, they would endanger the lives of people coming in here to take the bodies and cremate them. They would take a prohibitively long time to take the people out and cremate them, especially when these people are here and watching the proceedings.

Q. What would be the quantity of the air inside the alleged gas chamber in view of the number of bodies, or could you describe that?

A. Well, the quantity of air – as a matter of fact, Dr. Tesch stated in his trial that if you put two thousand people in a room this size, they would expire from suffocation, and you wouldn't even need hydrogen cyanide. So the quantity of air would get worse and worse in here. There is a small amount of ventilation in here, {3117|3118} but as I said, it was designed as a mortuary to take care of bodies who had died.

Q. Have you been able to make any calculations as to the length of time it would take to aerate [sic] two thousand bodies in such a chamber?

A. I haven't made any calculations, but with the amount of equipment that was necessary for lethal chambers in the United States for the execution of criminals, it would be massive for one man in one relatively small chamber, and there is no provision made here whatsoever for anything like the ventilation facilities you would need for a chamber of this size.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Those are my questions. I would like to file these as exhibits.

THE COURT: Yes.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Exhibit 40.

— Exhibit No. 40: Photographs.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What did you do during the War?

A. Well, I was taken into the Army as a private. I then became a —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Is this {3118|3119} relevant?

MR. CHRISTIE: Basically to display lack of involvement in the War in a partisan sense, that's all.

THE COURT: Does the Crown allege partisan involvement during the War?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not aware that Dr. Lindsey fought for the Nazis. His curriculum vitae says he fought for the Allies. I take it as given.

THE COURT: You served in America during the War, did you?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Do you want anything more than that?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I suppose – no. I don't think so.

Q. When you were in Auschwitz did you see fumigation chambers?

A. I saw no fumigation chambers as such, although there are remarks made that fumigation chambers were there. I did look inside the sauna, and I presume that those chambers in there were fumigation chambers, but they do not look like any of the HCN in the gas chambers {3119|3120} that I saw at Dachau.

MR. CHRISTIE: I see. Thank you very much, Doctor. Would you answer the questions of my learned friend, please?

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Have you ever had an opportunity to analyze a canister of wartime Zyklon-B?

A. No, I never have.

Q. Would I be right in saying that that is something that would degenerate very quickly, have a very short shelf life?

A. Zyklon-B properly stabilized would not have a short shelf life. Naturally, anyone selling a chemical product has to guarantee that it would last for a certain specified length of time. Zyklon-B, I think, was guaranteed for four or five months, but when you guarantee something like that for four or five months, you have to have a stability that will probably be equal in, well, I would say a year or more.

We sell, for example, hydrogen cyanide {3120|3121} in this country, or it was sold by American Cyanamid in cylinder form, and those things would last for a year; but since it was very toxic and very dangerous, they kept scrupulous care of these things and saw to it that they could either reclaim them or send a team out and detoxify them.

Q. So your knowledge of the Zyklon-B comes from the documents that you've read of what was contained in Zyklon-B during the War.

A. Documents, basically, and the fact that any chemical is, basically, you learn about any chemical by reading up on it in chemical literature.

Q. Can you tell us what, if any, characteristic odour hydrogen cyanide would have? And I don't mean the warning indicator that you mentioned, but just —

A. Hydrogen cyanide is one of those chemicals that affects different people in different ways. Some people can smell it, in which case it has an odour of — it's quite common knowledge, you can find this in any statement about hydrogen cyanide and its properties — it has an odour of bitter almonds to some people. Some people, apparently, have great difficulty in smelling it or even knowing of its presence.

Q. You mean great difficulty in the {3121|3122} sense that they don't detect it?

A. That's right. Some people would get a toxic or lethal dose before they know it is present.

Q. And the — I think you called it a warning agent ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... that was put in during the War, would that have an odour to it?

A. Well, the idea of a warning agent is that a warning agent normally is a lacrimator — something that makes your eyes tear and irritates your nose — burns. And as a matter of fact, the material that was used most commonly was bromo acetate ester, which was an effective tear gas in itself, and that was used in such an amount that when you could smell that, you would know that hydrogen cyanide was present.

Q. So Zyklon-B used bromo acetate ester as —

A. Usually bromo acetate. The Germans were so short sometimes that they used the ethyl bromo acetate. Another form is chloropicrin, which is another agent in its own, but it also has the lacrimatory agent.

Q. And besides making your eyes water, {3122|3123} does it have any other odours?

A. Yes. It has a burning, biting, unpleasant odour. Well, the best thing to say is that it is a tear gas. It has a kind of suffocating odour to it. It is designed purely so that when you smell that, you know you are in a concentration of hydrogen cyanide. It's dangerous.

Q. And hydrogen cyanide during the War was being produced, you said, by the company DEGESCH. Is that right? That is —

A. Yes.

Q. That is a part of I.G. Farben?

A. Well, DEGESCH was a company that was especially organized by the Germans to utilize hydrogen cyanide because of the unique property hydrogen cyanide possessed, and the fact that it was very, very toxic. And they decided, by giving this more or less to DEGESCH to supervise — you see, the company, before it was allowed to sell this material to anybody, the company had to satisfy itself that the customer, prospective customer, whether it was a government or not, had satisfied all the safety regulations that were necessary to use this material.

Dr. Tesch, who had his own firm of {3123|3124} Tesch und Stabenow, and DEGESCH were in dispute over a patent problem.

Q. The patent had to do over the warning indicator, the warning agent?

A. It had to do over who had the patent, as I recall.

Q. The patent to what?

A. The patents were to use the solid material with the hydrogen cyanide plus the warning agent and a proper stabilizer.

Q. And at some point did the German Government ask that the warning agent be taken out of the Zyklon-B?

A. Well, what they were doing is that they had such — first of all, shortages were such that in many instances it was impossible for them to add — the shortages in Germany were so acute that it was possible that they did not have sufficient of this material to add routinely to every can that they made.

Secondly, they were shipping this material to fumigation chambers where the entire can was handled inside the chamber — they put it in and sealed it up, and from that time on the can was opened from the outside {3124|3125} and the gas was operated on heaters so that the warning agent was not absolutely necessary. And the shortages were so great that they decided to save only a warning agent in these instances; but for every can that they put out like that, they put a large notice that the warning agent had been omitted in this material.

Q. So your answer is yes, they did take the warning agent out during the War?

A. They took it out in some instances.

Q. All right. Now, you told us that hydrogen cyanide needs heat to become a gas.

A. That's true.

Q. And at what temperature does it become a gas?

A. Hydrogen cyanide boils around twenty-six degrees. That's in the middle or upper seventies fahrenheit.

Q. So it becomes a gas at that boiling temperature?

A. That's the temperature at which it boils. Now, like water, if you have some of the material out on the ground, it can evaporate in time without boiling.

Q. My question was the boiling tem-{3125|3126}perature, and you said ...

A. It boils at twenty-six ...

Q. ... when it changes into a gas, and that would be about seventy-five or seventy-six degrees?

A. Yes.

Q. So it doesn't take very much heat.

A. Well, that doesn't have anything to do with the amount of heat. This is the temperature at which it changes into gas. Now, it can have — you see, water boils at a hundred degrees, and it has one of the highest light and heat evaporation of any common substance. Hydrogen cyanide, as a chemical, is a little bit higher than its heat demands than some of the other materials —

Q. Well, we all know how hot seventy-five degrees is, and that is where it becomes gas. Now, if you were to arbitrarily assign a weight of 1 to air, what would be the weight of hydrocyanic gas?

A. The density of hydrocyanic gas relative to air is about .9, and I don't know the second place. I'd say maybe .94, .93

Q. I'd suggest about .941. Is that about right?

A. That is pretty close. {3126|3127}

Q. All right. So it's just slightly lighter than air.

A. Yes.

Q. It's not very much lighter than air.

A. Well, you know, on percentage basis it's almost ten per cent.

Q. .94?

A. Well, six per cent.

Q. So I'd suggest to you that if it is introduced into a room and the gas is forming on the floor of the room, it would rise, but it would rise slowly.

A. Well, it would rise. How slowly would depend on the air currents and how much was saturated into the air or evaporated into the air.

Q. And I would suggest to you that because it rises slowly, that if there were people in that room, that the people near the bottom would be killed first.

A. If they are all in the same room standing, basically, with their heads together, they probably are all pretty nearly going to be affected at the same time.

Q. And if you had children whose heads would be a little lower, they would be affected first, wouldn't {3127|3128} they?

A. That would be possible, yes.

Q. Yes. So that if a pile of bodies were described as coming out of the gas chamber with children at the bottom, that would be consistent.

A. Perhaps, yes.

Q. Yes. Now, you've told us that a lethal dose of hydrogen cyanide in the air — let me change the way I phrase this question. At three hundred parts per million of hydrogen — hydrocyanic gas in the air, hydrogen cyanide death ensues in three minutes?

A. Round about three minutes.

Q. About three minutes. And if it was something less than that — a hundred and fifty parts per million, death would ensue maybe in a half an hour.

A. That is about right.

Q. All right. So as it becomes more dispersed within the air, within the atmosphere, death comes in a much longer period of time. I'm sorry if I am not phrasing that very well. Three hundred parts per million causes death in three minutes, half of that, a hundred and fifty parts per million, causes death in a half an hour — right? So as you disperse it, it becomes much less lethal. {3128|3129} Is that right?

A. Well, it takes, certainly, a longer time.

Q. All right. Now, how much hydrocyanic acid in the air, or gas in the air, what level of concentration in the air do you need before there is a possibility of a lethal dose through your skin?

A. You are calling on me to speculate here, I think, a bit.

Q. Well, I am going to suggest to you it's two per cent would cause death in three minutes — twenty thousand parts per million.

A. That will take twenty minutes. That is quite possible.

Q. All right. And I am suggesting to you that as with the dispersal at the lower levels that we heard about, three hundred versus a hundred and fifty, that as the concentration in the air gets less, you can stay and your skin can be exposed to hydrogen cyanide for a significantly longer period of time without health hazard.

A. This is true, although for safety considerations I think it's around fifty parts per million where you can operate for any length of time without some sort {3129|3130} of protection.

Q. So that is assuming that you were concerned about the safety of the people that are operating in that atmosphere.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Do you know what thiocyanate is?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what that is?

A. Well, thiocyanate is where you react sulphur with HCN.

Q. All right.

THE COURT: Just before we leave, we get into formulas — what is HCN?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: Well, HCN is a compound in which you have one hydrogen bound to a carbon atom, and then you have one carbon atom bound to a nitrogen atom, and there are three bonds between those.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: HCN is the chemical designation for hydrocyanic acid?

A. Well, hydrogen cyanide.

Q. Hydrogen cyanide. Never mind the acid. {3130|3131}

A. Well, it is given a number of names, actually.

Q. I am going to suggest to you that hydrogen cyanide does not have a cumulative effect on the human body.

A. That's true.

Q. That in effect, there is a mechanism whereby hydrogen cyanide would be passed from the body in urine.

A. But this is only on very, very low quantities. As I say, the lethal dose is fifty to seventy milligrams, and as long as you don't get a lethal dose and die from it, your recovery is practically complete. I don't know that anyone has ever found symptoms that shows a chronic poisoning from hydrogen cyanide.

Q. So short of a lethal dose you make a complete recovery.

A. If you recover.

Q. Short of a lethal dose. All right.

THE COURT: The witness nods his head in the affirmative, which I understand, Doctor, means yes, to the last question.

THE WITNESS: I didn't understand you. {3131|3132}

THE COURT: Ask the question again, please.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Provided that the dosage you receive [sic] is not lethal, you make a complete recovery.

A. Generally, that is the case.

Q. Is it ever not the case[?]

A. I will have to say I haven't found a record of it being normally, I understand that once you give the antidote to someone that has been poisoned with hydrogen cyanide, and this is normally by injecting the antidote, I have heard of instances where the patient recovers before you get the needle out of his arm.

Q. If somebody were to come in contact with a concentrated solution of hydrogen cyanide, would it be good practice, from a chemical point of view, to rinse off, say, if his hands came in contact with the solution, to rinse it off in water?

A. Immediately. The sooner the better.

Q. Immediately, and in as much water as you can?

A. That's true.

Q. So is it fair to say that because the {3132|3133} hydrogen cyanide is highly miscible [miscible], can be dissolved easily in water, that one of the treatments, then, for contact with it is to spray the contacted area with water?

A. Well, you don't just spray it. You douse it in water. You flood it with water.

Q. You want to dilute it as much as possible.

A. Well, it is more than dilution. You want to get it off your skin.

Q. Yes. But in fact, chemically what you are doing is diluting it, because your hands are in water.

A. Well, you are hoping – diluting is what's happening to it after you get it off your hands. You want to get it off your skin.

Q. Now, at what concentration is hydrogen cyanide lethal in water?

A. I don't understand your question. To what –

Q. Well, we talked about where the concentration in which it's lethal in the air, if you inhale it, is highly lethal at three hundred parts per million. It can kill you within three minutes.

A. Mm-hmmm. {3133|3134}

Q. And we've talked about the lethal concentration, again in the air, to your skin, to expose it in your skin, as being something in the neighbourhood of twenty thousand parts per million. And my question is, what about what would be a lethal concentration in water?

A. Well –

Q. Of hydrogen cyanide.

A. Well, let's look at it this way before, if I may just, for a minute. What you need to do to get a lethal dose inside one is to somehow get fifty to seventy milligrams into the body. Now, if you stick your hand in a one per cent solution of hydrogen cyanide, it will take half [twice] as long to get this into your body, as it would if you put your hand into a two per cent solution of hydrogen cyanide; but the minute you get the full amount into your body, whether it's absorbed through your skin from the air or whether it's absorbed as a result of water being on your skin, you will expire. The whole idea of poisoning is to get the poison into the body, and this is a very, very difficult thing.

Q. I am curious now. You said something there that a one per cent solution would take half as long as a two per cent solution, but we found that three hundred {3134|3135} parts per million in the air killed you in three minutes, whereas a hundred and fifty parts per million in the air would kill you in a half an hour. There is a big difference in the time. It wasn't six minutes; it was a half an hour. Wouldn't that be the same if you had a solution in water?

A. I think you will probably realize the difficulty of getting absolute figures on this. We are not in a position, nor have we ever been, nor, for that matter, intend to be, of determining exactly what the lethal dosages here are. This is why we say between fifty and seventy milligrams. Some people have estimated that as being as high as ninety. What we have to do here is look at people who have been victims of cyanide poisoning and then, on the basis of what we figure their exposure was, come up with a concentration that we figure is lethal, and in what time.

Q. Have you done that?

A. No, I haven't, but I have read about it.

Q. So that if somebody was handling corpses, say, that had been hosed down and lived, we can say that he hadn't had a lethal dose.

A. That would be possible, yes.

Q. True. How does a chimney outlast – {3135|3136} blast furnaces last from one year to the next?

A. Well, blast furnaces don't live eternally. They have to be continually rebuilt. Also, a blast furnace, inasmuch as it has to withstand the tremendous heat that they have, they are not built in an ordinary way that chimneys are built. Many of these things are lined with a special clay that is made for that specific purpose, and even with these special measures, these furnaces have to be rebuilt from time to time.

THE COURT: What's the average time, Doctor, if you know – the average time?

THE WITNESS: I don't know. I haven't looked into the blast furnaces.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: If a furnace is fired by coke, is it not –

A. Well, coke is nothing more than coal that has been heated.

Q. And that is what is used to fire a blast furnace.

A. Yes.

Q. And what about a chimney in a factory? You are from Iowa, you may not have seen our Sudbury stacks, or some of our refineries here. I am sure you have the equivalent {3136|3137} down in the States that are working constantly – garbage disposal plants for a large municipality – why don't they fall down?

A. Well, an awful lot of these are built with special liners, and these liners can be anything from a special ceramic liner of – well, a number of the chimneys that you have here may have, in a way, that type of liner, but you can get in trouble with those. You see, as long as your heat is down in the fire box, then that is one thing. And then, as you draw the draft up through the chimney, you are mixing it with air all the way, so it is actually being cooled, and the air is expanding as it rises, and as it expands it also gets cooler.

Q. So your answer was that some of them had a special liner built in the ceramic liner.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And are there kinds of mortar that can be used that are more heat-resistant than other kinds?

MR. CHRISTIE: I must object to this question. My friend has already, on many occasions, pointed out the difficulty of trying to compare our present circumstances with something forty years ago, and now he seems to {3137|3138} do so himself.

THE COURT: Go ahead. There is nothing to prevent defence counsel from re-examining on the subject.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Sir, perhaps I misunderstood you testified about mortar and chimneys falling out of the ...

THE COURT: Of the brick.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Of the bricks. Thank you, Your Honour ...

Q. ... because of constant high temperatures.

A. Yes.

Q. And are we talking about present-day or about forty years ago?

A. Well, mortar, in general, is mortar. Now, when you get into the realm of these specific refractory [refractory] cements, these things are normally used where you continually get very, very high temperatures.

Now, as I understand it, Auschwitz-Birkenau was built by the inmates and put together by them themselves. So I would be surprised if they had resorted to a special refractory [sic] type cement. Those things are much more expensive and much more difficult to come by. {3138|3139}

Q. Okay. That was a kind of cement that was available forty years ago.

A. Cement has basically been around since the time of the Romans.

Q. Thank you, Doctor. Do you speak German, or read German?

A. Yes, I speak German.

Q. Thank you.

A. I, as a chemist, I was required to take two years of German and two years of French, and I have to admit that my French is gone somewhat, by the way.

Q. Does a gas mask afford protection – did a gas mask at that time afford protection against hydrogen cyanide?

A. Yes. Gas masks are used against hydrogen cyanide. It is absolutely a must when you go in there, but it is equally important, despite your two per cent figure, is something that I have to admit I was not aware of previously, but even with the levels that they use in fumigation, they absolutely require that you put on the rubber protective clothing, or you can be killed even if you are not up to that level.

Q. Up to what level? {3139|3140}

A. Up to the two per cent level, you see.

Q. You can be killed, but it would take longer.

A. Well, hydrogen cyanide is one of those materials that you think everything is perhaps rosy unless you get a slow dosage over a lengthy period, say a hundred and fifty parts per million, and you get the seemingly progressive symptom. If a hundred parts per million – you might very well be standing there and think that the world is a rosy place in which to live and you keel over and you never wake up. So hydrogen cyanide is not something that you play around with. You assume it will kill you. You don't operate by yourself, but with someone so that if you should, in spite of all the precautions, be affected by it, somebody is there to rescue you.

Q. Now, just by opening windows in the room, it is possible to get ventilation to make the room habitable again, and I understand – I am talking vaguely, I am not giving you a size of a room – but at some point it would be possible to get back into that room and not have any problem.

A. If you would go back into the room only after the fumigation team had certified that it was a {3140|3141} place in which you could live again. I might add that they were so wedded to these rules and regulations, that in places like Germany and England where they carried out fumigations of this sort fairly regularly, they demanded that when a dwelling was fumigated, that the dwellings on either side be evacuated until the dwelling that was being fumigated was again declared clear for habitation.

Q. I suppose in those circumstances they would be concerned about the people's lives.

A. Yes.

Q. And if somebody wasn't so concerned about that, they could stay there.

A. Well, I think this is your assumption, sir, not mine.

Q. I understand. Are you able to tell us how many cans of Zyklon-B would put three hundred parts per million of hydrogen cyanide in the gas chamber?

A. I could certainly calculate that, but really, when you think about that, we have two witnesses who testified that it was three, three thousand[!] kilogram samples.

THE COURT: What witnesses were they, Doctor? {3141|3142}

THE WITNESS: This was a Dr. Charles Sigismund Bendel who testified both at Lueneberg [Lüneburg], and also at Hamburg at each trial. And then there was also, I think, Percy [sic] Broad who testified that this was the operation.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. So three tins.

A. Yes. I believe three kilograms. And on the basis of these three tins which contained a total of about three kilograms of hydrogen cyanide —

Q. I'm sorry, they would contain three kilograms of hydrogen cyanide, or three kilograms of inert material which contained hydrogen cyanide?

A. No. When they sold Zyklon-B, it contained hydrogen cyanide. So a tin weighed pretty close to three or four kilograms, but it had a content of one kilogram of hydrogen cyanide.

Q. Go ahead, then.

A. And on the basis of these three kilograms, they took what they considered to be the lethal dosage, which is the fifty to seventy kilograms, and they said, well, this would be the number of people that would be killed. And on this basis they estimated a number that were killed from the amount of hydrogen cyanide that was bought by {3142|3143} Auschwitz

Q. Have you done a calculation, Doctor, of how many parts per million three kilograms of —

A. No, I have not. I might add, though, that with three kilograms, if you divide fifty into three kilograms, you get something around twelve – I'd do much better with pencil and paper. You can figure that out, but it's really a great overkill in the gas chamber, but you would need a bit more than what you calculate there.

Q. Okay. Hydrogen cyanide dissolves on a wet surface and mortar is what you were talking about with Mr. Christie.

A. Yes.

Q. What would be the effect of hosing down the wall, the floor and the ceiling extensively after each use? Did that dilute what is in the mortar?

A. It would certainly tend to dilute it on the surface. On the other hand, it might saturate the mortar more, so that the next time around you could dissolve more and more hydrogen cyanide in there, and eventually, depending on how much hydrogen cyanide you added, you would end up with the walls basically saturated with the hydrogen cyanide solution. It depends on how readily the masonry {3143|3144} absorbed the water.

Q. Yes. Sure it would. And it would depend on how many parts per million were introduced into the chamber.

A. Yes.

Q. And how much was pumped out before it was hosed down. Okay. You gave a figure in your testimony in-chief that for fumigating, one uses twenty grams per cubic meter for fumigating.

A. Yes. That is, that would be for the standard DEGESCH gas chamber. It had a capacity or volume of ten cubic meters, and they used a standard two hundred gram hydrogen cyanide can for that.

Q. Now, I am going to suggest to you that it takes higher concentrations of hydrogen cyanide to kill vermin than it does to kill humans, or warm-bodied animals.

A. No. As a matter of fact, the three hundred – we are speaking, here, of warm-bodied animals and vermin, rats, mice.

Q. I'm sorry. I meant for lice.

A. Oh, you're speaking for lice, which are insects. Insects have a slightly different metabolism {3144|3145} nature. It does take more, and depending on the level of infestation, I sometimes find it necessary to increase this twenty grams per cubic meter as high as thirty-nine grams per cubic meter. And of course, the thing about the DEGESCH chamber is that you could also increase the heat and evaporate the material faster, and it was also more active up around thirty degrees than it was, say, at around twenty or twenty-five degrees.

Q. You mean it would dissolve quicker and act faster?

A. It wouldn't dissolve.

Q. I'm sorry. It would turn into a gas quicker.

A. Yes, it would gassify much faster, circulate and penetrate all the clothing that were in the fumigation chamber.

Q. Are you able to – and if this is outside your area of expertise, please tell me, or Mr. Christie may object. Are you able to give us any idea of how air can be heated by a large mass of bodies – how hot the air can get?

A. Well, of course, the air would never get hotter than the bodies. It's possible to warm a volume {3145|3146} of air with spectators. They did regularly in Europe after the War. They didn't have coal, so they figured if you had so many spectators in an auditorium, after a certain period of time the air in the auditorium, provided you didn't let too much fresh air in, would reach a certain temperature.

Q. Is carbon dioxide poisonous?

A. Carbon dioxide is not, of itself, a poisonous material. It will quite easily suffocate you if you get so much of it that you are deprived of oxygen. In small quantities it is a stimulation to breathing. If you try to hold your breath to the point of unconsciousness, you will find that your body will be stimulated by carbon dioxide that has built in your blood, and even though you are unconscious, you will begin breathing again, but if it is a high concentration, you will suffocate.

Q. Because the carbon dioxide is telling your body to breathe if there isn't enough oxygen in the air.

A. Yes.

Q. So is it fair to say that it would take longer to die with carbon dioxide as with carbon monoxide?

A. It is difficult to say how long it will take. About a year ago we had a very tragic situation in which, I believe, two men went into a silo which was loaded {3146|3147} with carbon dioxide, and I believe two sons went in first, one to save the first, and the father went in to save the first and the second, and all three of them perished. So with poisons you just cannot take chances. You have to be safe.

Q. You mentioned a DEGESCH chamber. Is that a little prefab unit that you would use for fumigation?

A. Yes. They sold literally hundreds of these, and they had them in hundreds of different sites, and the whole idea here was that the clothing of people who were in the process of being deloused would be put on hangers and they would be put into these fumigation chambers, and while these people were being showered, they were then – their clothes were being deloused out there with – they could use Zyklon-B. They are so pressed for facilities for killing lice that they went back to some of the methods they used in World War I where they used hot air and steam. but the people complained mightily of the steam, because it made their clothes wet, and if you will notice, a great deal of literature that was published after the War, people complained mightily about having received their clothes back wet. So they used – the gas chamber was considered, really, {3147|3148} the method of choice to treat the clothes because it left them, essentially, unharmed.

Q. Did you see any of the gas chambers in Birkenau or Auschwitz?

A. No, I did not, but one was referred to by Dr. Bendel in his testimony. Q. Where?

A. He claimed that it was Auschwitz Stammlager.

Q. The main camp.

A. Yes. And I have a map that shows that it was – that it crosses the railroad lines. It separates a plant from the part that we normally think of as a camp. Actually, the camp itself where it is enclosed with barbed wire is about ten per cent of the original camp.

Q. That is just a barracks, isn't it?

A. Yes. That is where they slept.

Q. And on your visits to Auschwitz I, the main camp, you've told us that you went and looked at crematoria. And in particular you noticed that there was no door between the crematoria and the gas chamber.

A. That's true. The room was called a gas chamber. {3148|3149}

Q. Okay. And do you have any knowledge as to changes in that room, in that door in particular?

A. I saw that room three different times and there was no change in it between 1978 and 1984.

Q. Okay. 1978 was the first time you saw it.

A. Yes. Now, on the other hand, at Maydanek [sic] I did notice some changes.

Q. All right. You told us that on a couple of occasions that you went to, I think it was Birkenau, You were the only English-speaking person there so you didn't have the benefit of the guide. Am I correct?

A. Well, it wasn't so much the guide as it was the film that they showed. You see, they have a film. They did show it to me at Maidanek, but they did not show me the film that they show tourists at Auschwitz.

Q. And was the film in Polish at that time? It wasn't in German?

A. Well, they had a lot of German films. They had a lot of – the largest number seemed to be Polish visitors, and those were the ones, certainly, that predominated at Maydanek. [sic] At Auschwitz you had German and Polish, and I'm sure there were others. They had all the – basically, {3149|3150} the united languages were represented there.

Q. When you went to Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Chelmno, was there anything there to indicate that there had been a concentration camp?

A. No. No. These were – the only thing there, really, was basically a bunch of Polish monuments.

Q. If it wasn't for the monuments you wouldn't know there had been a camp there.

A. That's quite true.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a minute.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, I think we will take an adjournment.

— The witness stands down.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, you were trying to get my attention.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one thing. The last exhibit, No. 40, I have indicated to Your Honour I had no objection and have no objection to the photographs, but there is, in the margin of each of the two photographs, some {3150|3151} handwritten notes.

THE COURT: Could I see them, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: And I do object to those, and I mentioned that to Mr. Christie. I was a little slow on the uptake of reading the notes in detail. I think that the matter can be resolved by simply cutting it off; it doesn't affect the part of the exhibit that the witness was referring to – namely, the photographs.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't realize handed my friend a Trojan Horse, but it appears that he is right. And I am not objecting to cutting off the notes. I believe the notes are Dr. Faurisson's calculations from his photographs.

THE COURT: Why don't you gentlemen liaise with one another?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have agreed that they may be cut off, if Your Honour thinks it is appropriate.

THE COURT: Certainly they should be cut off. I want to make sure that lawyers do it, and not the judge and the clerk. If you gentlemen don't agree, then will see to it. {3151|3152}

— The jury enters. 4:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Lindsey, my friend raised for the first time blast furnaces. In your observation of the plans or literature, or in your observation of the sites, did you see any blast furnaces in the crematoria system?

A. No. No.

Q. My friend raised the subject of fumigation chambers in his questions. In any of the literature or from your observations, have you formed the opinion in relation to that that there is any relationship between fumigation chambers and gas chambers?

A. There is no connection between the two. Unfortunately, apparently in some of the early investigations – I am referring to the Senate Investigation led by {3152|3153} Senator Albert Barkley from the United States – he did confuse fumigation chambers with what is called extermination chambers.

Q. But today is that generally held by any —

A. That, today, has apparently been rectified to a degree, at least.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Were fumigation chambers of this type rare in relation to other organizations other than the German side?

A. Fumigation chambers have been used in both sides to decontaminate clothing.

THE COURT: Albert Barkley was a politician in the United States both before and after the War, and I believe he was vice-president. Is that right?

A. That's true, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In relation to the questions that you were asked in relation to relative temperatures of vaporization, I think, of the Zyklon, is it the air temperature that's relevant, or the temperature of the substance itself to vaporize?

A. Well, they both play a role. {3153|3154}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Doctor, excuse me. I don't see how that is something that was new in cross-examination, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed the question. I was writing. What was it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think I can repeat it.

THE COURT: Would you like it read back?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE REPORTER: "In relation to the questions that you were asked in relation to relative temperatures of vaporization, I think, of the Zyklon, is it the air temperature that's relevant, or the temperature of the substance itself to vaporize?"

THE COURT: Now, what is the matter with that question, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: My objection, Your Honour, is that in-chief Dr. Lindsey gave some evidence about needing heat to make liquid change into a gas and vaporize, and it is not new in cross-examination and not proper reply. {3154|3155}

THE COURT: Maybe it is not new, but you can ask it. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Can you answer that question?

A. Both of them would play a role, certainly. What you have to do is heat the liquid up to a certain temperature, and at that temperature this liquid would have a certain vapour pressure and, depending on the vapour pressure, a certain amount will vaporize and go into the air, and in doing so it extracts heat from its surroundings and becomes cooler. So the more heat you have, say a hotter temperature of the liquid or hotter-temperature of the air, the easier this process will take place.

Q. In any of the cross-examination that my friend raised did the suggestions that he made to you have any effect, or change your opinion in regard to the feasibility of the gas chamber story you expressed earlier?

A. What was that again, please?

Q. In relation to the questions and the suggestions put to you by my learned friend in cross-examination, did any of those things cause you to change your opinion as to the feasibility of the gas chamber stories ...

A. No. {3155|3156}

Q. ... that you had previously expressed?

A. Not at all.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Thank you, Doctor.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: The next witness will be Dittlieb Felderer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could I address you in the absence of the jury, Your Honour?

THE COURT: You are excused, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 4:05 p.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, Mr. Felderer was in the courtroom after there was an order excluding witnesses, in the first four or five days of this trial.

THE COURT: What's his name?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Felderer.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And so I am objecting {3156|3157} to his testifying at this stage. It affected Your Honour's order and he was in breach of that order.

THE COURT: Is that true, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have just checked with the witness and I think that he was in court on and off for about two days at the very beginning. I would think that that would be something to do with weight. I don't know that it is really a preclusion of a witness for the purpose of admissibility.

THE COURT: But did you know he was in here?

MR. CHRISTIE: I knew he was in here.

THE COURT: Why didn't you ask him to leave?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, at that time, Your Honour, I wasn't aware that I would need him as a witness. And that is the only answer I have.

THE COURT: That is a good enough answer. What is the purport of his evidence?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, basically, Your Honour, he has given a great deal of material to Mr. Zundel. He has acted as agent for Mr. Zundel in going to {3157|3158} Auschwitz, taking photographs. He has gone there twenty-seven times, looked for specific things that Mr. Zundel has asked him, some things that he has on his own. He has been a publisher.

My friend will probably enjoy some aspects of the cross-examination in that I think my friend will be able to cross-examine him on – well, I will leave it to my friend on that point, but in any event, that's the reason why he is called. His evidence will be, I believe, that he provided a great deal of research that my client undertook. He was there. He made photographs. He produced them and gave them to my client. He has actually be[en] involved also in preparing films on the subject of his investigations there.

He is not an expert, but he has done certain things at the request of my client to learn certain things.

Now, it would be my intent to first of all introduce his evidence on what he has done and how he has related it to my client. Also, I would like – this, of course, subject to what Your Honour would say, but I would like to try to introduce the photographs that {3158|3159} he took as the basis for my client's opinion, because he did it at my client's request.

THE COURT: When did he take the photographs?

MR. CHRISTIE: Over many years, Your Honour, starting in 1976 he has been investigating certain specific points. He has been to almost every camp in Poland.

THE COURT: You mean between 1976 and now?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: That wouldn't even cause a ripple on the pool of time. What is the relevance of the photographs he took?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, they do reveal the level of the land, the location of items. He has been inside well, I suppose I am now given the opportunity to preview what he is going to say.

THE COURT: No. You are giving it to me. That makes a difference.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that, but he has been inside Crematorium No. II. He has been inside the Leichenkeller of Crematorium No. II which {3159|3160} most people have not undertaken because it is difficult to do that. He can show that the alleged holes made in the cement cover to Leichenkeller No. II are nothing more than recent introductions, bending back the reinforcing bars, and that is physically visible in photographs.

He can show that the roof of the Leichenkeller through which Zyklon is supposed to have been introduced and allegedly seen by Dr. Vrba has apparently just been recently drilled, and there are no other holes. He has looked at the roof, and there are no other holes other than the ones that are there, and the ones that are there have bars of reinforcing metal.

THE COURT: Assuming that to be the fact, I am certainly not suggesting it isn't, how is that relevant to what, if anything, existed there forty years ago?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, where holes existed forty years ago there will be some evidence. That is my argument on the point. And where we see a roofing that purports to have holes in it forty years ago and the only ones there are obviously {3160|3161} made recently and very clumsily, and lids are made for them as well, it does tend to cast doubt.

Now all I have to prove is reason for doubt on the part of my client.

THE COURT: You don't have to prove anything.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I am trying to do that because it is alleged that he has spread false news, and in support of his honest belief I am endeavouring to show that he has reasons for that belief based on firsthand observations, not necessarily his own, but of people who are prepared to come forward and say, "I was there. I took this photograph. This is what it depicts." And my client having seen that photograph can say, "Certainly I drew this inference", and the jury can decide whether that is the inference of a reasonable man and, indeed, of an honest man.

So that is why I am hoping that I might show what degree of research, what time and effort my client put into finding out if this story is true.

THE COURT: All right. Are you finished? {3161|3162}

MR. CHRISTIE: I was going to say one more thing. If he had never undertaken any kind of serious inquiry and made statements such as are attributed to him, or more correctly, indicated that in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" which he published, then the jury would have reason to take more lightly anything he has of a serious belief.

So we may show that what he thinks of his opinion he may have taken time to conduct an extensive inquiry through people like Mr. Felderer and others, even Dr. Lindsey, to enable him to conclude that it wasn't false, but true, which he is prepared to testify to.

THE COURT: To what time period does it apply?

MR. CHRISTIE: To the time of the publication the indictment alleges that the publication of the false news occurred.

MR. GRIFFITHS: In 1983.

MR. CHRISTIE: So this is knowledge that he acquired from '76, '77, '78, '79 through to '83, and over that period of years was inquiring into the matter and trying to ascertain what the truth was, {3162|3163} and his conclusions are that the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is the truth.

The jury, I guess, will assess whether they consider it either the truth or a reasonably founded opinion, and I agree the burden is on the Crown to prove that he knew it was false, but in trying to discharge whatever onus exists because of the Crown's case, I think it would be proper for me to introduce evidence which I am trying to do now to show the degree of – inquiry, the degree of investigation that he, with other people, undertook, however much the jury may not agree with their [sic] views. I think it would be relevant for them to assess the extent of their investigation to determine if they were trying to be mischievous, trying to deceive or were trying to make some kind of honest inquiry.

THE COURT: What in the world was he doing in the courtroom when he was ordered not to be here?

MR. CHRISTIE: At the time —

THE COURT: You didn't call him, you didn't tell him he was going to be a witness? {3163|3164}

MR. CHRISTIE: No, at the time, Your Honour, I didn't think that — I didn't realize how much information he had conveyed to the accused at that time. I mean, that was almost five weeks ago. He was here for two days at the most, as far as I am aware, just at the very outset. I think it covered, in that time, the Masons, and maybe Dr. Hilberg a little bit, I don't think very much, but that was a long time ago and he hasn't been here since.

I suppose it is up to the Crown to suggest if there is some reason to think that that would affect his evidence. They certainly have the right, they know that, they are entitled to cross-examine on that. I think when it applies to the defence it is quite obviously true that there are times when, because of the Crown's case taking a move, a direction in one direction as opposed to another, that what we didn't realize at the time was relevant, may become relevant.

THE COURT: Are there any other witnesses that you might call who have also been present in court in defiance of a court order?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. Not that I am aware of. {3164|3165}

THE COURT: This was the only one.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't realize it was in defiance of the court order. I don't think the witness did, either, because I didn't think he or I thought he was going to be a witness?

THE COURT: I wondered if there were going to be any more. Dr. Faurisson and now this witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: If I may say in retrospect, I announced at the outset, I told the Court very candidly that that is what I proposed to do, because I wanted to qualify him.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, what do you say?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am concerned, Your Honour. As I have indicated, he was in the courtroom. I also can appreciate, if my friend didn't decide to call him until very recently, that that is something — that happens. It has happened to me. It is something that I think the jury, I should be entitled to bring out — it is something that I should be entitled to bring out to the jury, and the jury, ultimately, will be instructed that it goes to the weight of his evidence. {3165|3166}

THE COURT: Yes. I am going to allow the evidence, Mr. Griffiths. To do otherwise would give the appearance of unfairness.

Call the jury back, please.

— The jury returns. 4:15 p.m.

DITLIEB FELDERER, affirmed

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How old are you, Mr. Felderer?

A. I am forty-two.

Q. And where do you live?

A. In Tabi, in Sweden.

Q. And how long have you known the accused?

A. I first knew him well around 1978.

Q. And before you knew him well, had you been to the site of the concentration camps?

A. Yes, I had been. I have been a former Jehovah Witness, and I was engaged in historical research of the Jehovah's Witnesses' treatment during the Second World War, and that led me into a study of the gas chambers and of the treatments of the witnesses in various camps as they were in virtually every camp during Nazi Germany.

Q. And did you communicate with Mr. {3166|3167} Zundel the inquiries you made?

A. Yes, I did. I attempted to communicate my information to as many people as I could, and Zundel was one of the others that I got hold of. There were [were] thousands we actually sent out the material to. Zundel was one of them who, in turn, reciprocated by showing interest in the material which we published.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And would it be fair to say that you coined certain phrases in respect to your work that helped you to describe your activities and those of others in relation to those subjects such as the words "extermination"?

A. Yes. I realized that the Zionists were using the word "Holocaust" for their own propagandistic purposes of the Palestinian people, and then I realized that what they were doing is using this argument of the extermination action against them, and they used the term exterminationism for this theory, and I am glad to say that even my opponents have started to use it now.

Q. And what is the term used to describe those who do not believe in the extermination theory?

A. Revisionist, the revised history, or they do not hold on to the, well, the business-like writing of history, perhaps one should say.

Q. And have you made inquiries and research into this area yourself?

A. Yes. I was keenly interested. I must say here I was worried when I was twelve years old, I was keenly interested in this subject and I was a firm {3167|3168} believer in the extermination theory. It was at the end of the nineteen sixties, 1968 when a lot of things didn't make sense to me. I tried to harmonize the various points, and I started to realize that there was something wrong, but I couldn't put my finger on it. That is how it worked.

Q. So what did you do, then?

A. Well, I got hold of all the documents I could get hold of. Of course, I continued my investigation with my fellow Jehova[h]'s Witnesses who had been at the camp. For instance, they were in Auschwitz, very close to the alleged gas chamber. They had been working. They were in Sobibor, Treblinka – well virtually every camp, and these witnesses I had constant talks with and we went together and got together to try and find out about it, as true history as we could about the Jehovah's Witnesses time during West Germany.

I must say here that the official figure of the Jehovah's Witnesses that about sixty thousand had been killed during Nazi Germany's time. —

Q. As a result of your research did anything change as a result?

A. Yes. Through various documents which the East German Government had confiscated from the Jehovah Witnesses Headquarters, they had namely stolen their entire factory where they had produced their material, and at the same time they also confiscated their documents which they later published. And through these documents I realized that the figure of sixty thousand was too large. And then my estimation {3168|3169} was about two hundred had been either hung or shot, or perhaps died through natural means during the Nazi Germany time. And when I published that, I got, unfortunately, in conflict with the leadership of the Jehovah's Witnesses who, at that time, were in favour of my research, but when I started to give out this information, well, they became very angry and then I was excommunicated in 1974.

Q. And is there a figure now purported for that number, or —

A. Well, the peculiar thing is, I was excommunicated for that, and then, in 1974, they came out with their year book and then they, themselves, gave the figure of two hundred and three hundred. So the figure from sixty thousand had dwindled to two hundred and three hundred, and in fact confirmed my statement —

Q. How many times have you visited Auschwitz-Birkenau for the purposes of conducting research?

A. About twenty-seven, thirty times.

Q. Over what period of time?

A. 1978 to 1981.

Q. And I am not saying what your conclusions were. Have you reached any conclusions about that camp?

A. Yes, quite a lot of conclusions.

Q. What buildings have you gone into to conduct research?

A. Practically every building I could, either lawfully or, well, through my means getting to — {3169|3170}

Q. Well, what buildings? Can you name the buildings?

A. Yes. The kitchen at Auschwitz, which is very little known. Almost every building. The theatre at Auschwitz, which I believe very few people have ever been inside. My opponents certainly were not. I believe I was the first one also who showed the swimming pool, twenty-six-meter long swimming pool, three meters deep.

Q. Did you take photographs of the kitchen?

A. Yes.

Q. The theatre?

A. Yes.

Q. Other buildings?

A. The sauna, the laundry. Of course, my interest was to focus on the gas chamber, alleged gas chamber buildings. So that meant then crematoria I at Auschwitz. I even crept inside the chimney, or the smoke channel there. It was a very exciting time. And I had been inside the sauna at Birkenau. I had been inside [sic] two secret buildings which the exterminationists continued to hide in Auschwitz. And that's in section BIA, and BIB. I have taken photographs inside those buildings. I have been inside Krema II, inside the alleged gas chamber. I was able to get into it and have taken many pictures from there.

Q. Did you examine the entrance to the alleged gas chamber?

A. Yes, I did. Yes.

Q. What did you find? {3170|3171}

A. Well, I found that the doors in gas chamber I, or Krema I which the exterminationists called gas chamber I in Auschwitz had been faked, the outside door. I also discovered that the crematory ovens were fakes. By fakes I mean that the Auschwitz officials, the exterminationists claimed that these places were found exactly in the way as when they were liberated. And I found that, for instance, the chimney at Auschwitz had no smoke channel, it had no smoke channel at all leading into the crematoria oven, so obviously this was a very peculiar [sic] crematory.

Q. In regard to Birkenau have you tried to investigate the alleged gas chamber in the Crematory II?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do to investigate that?

A. I must say here at the outset that I have attempted to do my research in as good possible way I could, and I must also say here that one is not allowed into many of these buildings, and one is — one is risking, actually, if not one's life, a very stiff jail sentence. So I had to take my ingenious methods of getting into this, but I was able to get into Krema II Leichenkeller.

Q. Leichenkeller means what?

A. That means a morgue where they kept store people in a cool place before they were cremated.

Q. Are you familiar with the literature that describes the extermination process used in {3171|3172} Leichenkeller No. 1?

A. Yes. I am totally familiar. I probably have one of the great largest libraries of exterminationist literature.

Q. And can you describe how that literature explains the use of life in Leichenkeller No. 1?

A. You mean in Birkenau.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is an expert opinion that is being asked.

MR. CHRISTIE: I withdraw the question.

Q. Can you tell us what you did to investigate life in Leichenkeller No. 1, specifically the roof of the Leichenkeller?

A. Yes. My oriental wife was with me at the time and I asked her to keep an eye on the watchman so that while I was creeping into the Leichenkeller I would not be observed. And this she did and I crept into the Leichenkeller, took — she assisted, me, handing me the cameras and flash and everything, and while I was down there I, for the first time, saw this which I think no one, at least very few people, had seen. And I took virtually hundreds of pictures while I was inside there, in different stages.

Q. Can you describe the opening in the crematory roof, Leichenkeller roof?

A. Yes. I am going to let out a secret here now. The opening that I went through has a very heavy lid close to it, a cement arm lid, and it has — it's very, very rugged opening, and through this {3172|3173} opening I was able to squeeze myself, and then, getting down into the Leichenkeller.

Q. Can you describe that opening in terms of what it looked like and why it was rugged?

A. Yes. It, to me, as I saw it, it was obvious to me that somebody [sic] had used some sort of a sledge hammer to open this up. The roof is an ordinary reinforced concrete roof with reinforcement bars going alongside, and then crossing them. And these bars had been bent. It is even more visible in another opening which is there.

Q. How many openings were there in the roof of Leichenkeller No. 1?

A. There are two openings there today.

Q. Were there any other possible openings?

A. Yes. There's another opening, but this opening is caused by the breakage of the roof, namely, one has attempted to destroy this roof, and by the roof bending, one sees the bars crossing each other. It's very obvious that that opening is just caused by a crack, whereas the other two openings, they are deliberately made by somebody, and I happen to know even that it was made after the War through the people at Auschwitz, the officials there.

Q. Have you examined the roof to determine if there were any other possible openings other than those you've described?

A. No, except that you could go into – if you have enough nerves and are not afraid that you get a thirty kilo cement [sic] block on your head, {3173|3174} you can get into the roof through sides of the building.

In other words, the roof is sort of caved in and then you can squeeze yourself through there, but I certainly wouldn't recommend it unless one has a lot of nerves.

Q. Did you take photographs of all this?

A. Yeah.

Q. How many photographs? [sic]

A. Hundreds. Of Leichenkeller I in black and white, and I also saw there, by the way, the floor and so forth, discovered very interesting things.

Q. Did you look for drainage there?

A. Yes, I did, because one had claimed there was no drainage in there.

Q. And did you look for other items in that area?

A. Yes. I was very interested in a blue colour, it's a blue colour which is caused by a chemical reaction with the Zyklon-B which is evidence in the other gas so-called, or buildings where real gassings took place, and which are now kept secret by the communist Soviet officials.

Q. Were you able to determine where these so-called [sic] real gassings took place, what types of chambers that were there?

A. Yes. I was – the real buildings of the gas chambers in Birkenau are in BIA and BIB.

Q. And what types of chambers were they?

A. There's primarily two types of {3174|3175} chambers. There's the chambers which uses the hot air fumigation, and then there is the other type where Zyklon-B was utilized.

Q. To do what?

A. To disinfect, delouse mattresses, clothing of the prisoners and so forth.

Q. Did you see any of the characteristic blue stains inside Leichenkeller No. I?

A. No, there was not a trace of it.

Q. Did you communicate this knowledge in some way to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I did. I was very much interested. I was a former Jehovah's Witness, and our mission is of our good use to others, and I was very happy to discover about this matter, and I gave it to Zundel with an open heart and he accepted it.

Q. Has Zundel financed some of your research?

A. He has helped me by helping me with literature and otherwise; he's been very good in that way, because a lot of the literature I didn't have. So what he was exchanging the literature, documents and so forth, but I do that with everybody. I have been in contact with Yad Vashem in Israel.

Q. And I believe you've made video tape presentations dealing with the subject with Mr. Zundel; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you do that?

A. We had done it in 1981 was the first time. {3175|3176}

Q. And what was the purpose of that, or what did you do, rather, in those video tape presentations?

A. In the individual presentations I showed the hoaxes of the doors, the fake doors, for instance, in Auschwitz, the camp, the outside doors, the fake peepholes, the fake chimney, the fake crematoria ovens. I showed the swimming pool. I showed the inside of the theatre, which one alleges today to be a garbage disposal place. We did many such things.

Q. And in the course of this were there models prepared to analyze the literature to determine if it was practical?

A. Yes.

Q. Were the video tapes made in relation – how did you use those models in those video tapes?

A. Well, we used them in order to explain the impossibility of the exterminationists' argument, to show the inconsistencies and, well, the ridiculous suppositions which are made constantly, and constantly contradicted by each other, by them. They often can say one thing and then the next minute say something quite opposite.

Q. Have you had an opportunity to view these video tapes?

A. Yes, I have seen them. I also show them to friends and distributed them in Europe.

Q. In Europe? Why do you show them to people?

A. I think it's vital that people are {3176|3177} informed about hoaxes of any kind.

Q. Why?

A. Any historical hoax, I think, should be exposed for what it is. It doesn't matter who it is, it should be told.

Q. What effect do you see from that?

A. Well, if we value truth, and if truth is of any value, well, we should strive at that and we should not be afraid to go wherever it leads. You have to remember I was a believer of extermination theory. I started to disbelieve not because of what I have read, but mostly what I saw, and I could see the inconsistency. It didn't work together, and I became more and more suspicious about it.

Q. Over what period of time did these suspicions develop?

A. From 1968 and onwards. And then in 1978 I finally was sure that there had been no gassings of human beings taking place in Auschwitz and Birkenau, and Maidanek, I should add here, because Sobibor, Treblinka, Chelmno, many of these others I have also been on.

Q. What investigations did you make at Maidanek?

A. Practically the same investigations which we made at Birkenau and Auschwitz. We were able to become very friendly towards the guards. They invited us to their home and they assisted us, to some extent, to get into the secret buildings. Sometimes we gave them vodka and made them very happy, and sometimes we were able to get a lot of information from the director, {3177|3178} Dr. Edward Siados (phonetic) from Maidanek, and many other ways.

In other words, we tried to make our research as complete as we possibly could, not only the camp itself, but also the surrounding of the area.

Q. Did you take photographs at Maidanek?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. How many?

A. Oh, I haven't counted. There must be thousands and thousands at Maidanek alone. All in all, I have about thirty thousand pictures.

Q. And in the course of investigating did you inquire, at Mr. Zundel's request, into the question of chimneys?

A. Yes. We made a special attempt to make a search into this mystery.

Q. What did you do to investigate the subject of chimneys?

A. Well, it started off that I saw these crematory IV at Auschwitz, and I could – I was wondering – I had some knowledge about chimneys before. So I was looking for a way to get into the smoke channel, because this is usually, they are cleaned out, and as a rule they have some opening where one can get into them. And I couldn't find one, which I felt was very strange because the chimneys were really huge in Auschwitz, and the four crematory ovens are just beside us, so the smoke channels should lead out toward that chimney. And when I didn't see it, I became extremely confused, because I thought it was a true chimney in {3178|3179} the beginning, and Mr. Chimanski (phonetic) had on his honour told me that everything which was in the camp was exactly as we –

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. My friend knows it.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So what did you physically do to examine how the smoke could have proceeded to that chimney?

A. Well, I made measurements to see where the chimney should be, and finally, after a lot of research, I was able to find a smoke channel, and –

Q. Where did it go?

A. I crept into the smoke channel. I was able to get all the way into it, and again I must say here this is a very nervous situation because the guards are all the time running around there, but I was creeping in and then I found the end of the smoke channel and the curb of it. I checked the surrounding of the smoke channel and then, at the very end, they had palced [sic] a whole heap of bricks. That was the original smoke channel. In other words, there was the smoke channel in that building. Q. Did it go to the chimney?

A. No, it did not. Not the new chimney, but evidently it went to a chimney there which was there before, but not the new one.

Q. So what effect did this have on your inquiries?

A. Well, I got disgusted because of the information I had received that it was authentic. {3179|3180} So of course, I got very suspicious about the whole thing. I can't let —

Q. Have you gone up on to the roof to examine other —

A. Yes. I went on to the roof and they tried to chase me away, and I told them they should leave me alone and I had a lot of arguments with the people there, and I stood my ground and I said the only way they could get me off that roof is to throw me down. So I took measurements of the roof and measurements of the opening, checked all the various material which were of the openings, on the roof there, and again took numerous photographs of it.

Q. Have you given those photographs to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes. I have published a special set of twenty slides which are called, "The Hoax of Auschwitz".

Q. And do they include Birkenau?

A. These twenty slides, it's just one picture there which includes Birkenau.

Q. And in relation to this type of information, you've published how long now, sir?

A. Well, it started in 1977 up to now. Continuous basis.

Q. And has there been pressure on you in view of these publications?

A. Oh, yes. The Zionists have been after me and after my wife, and have terrorized her, and my Oriental wife, she went through hell, practically, with these people doing all kinds of persecutions. You {3180|3181} have to remember I was once one of their own. And then, when I sort of renegated [sic], of course, I was no longer a person to be accepted. And they, a person in their viewpoint who renegates [sic] is equal to death. We had stones thrown through our windows. My wife was —

THE COURT: Where is all this leading us, all this persecution?

MR. CHRISTIE: It demonstrates some things that I would be ready to argue.

THE COURT: What does it demonstrate?

MR. CHRISTIE: Persecution.

THE COURT: Well, he's already said it. Now, do we have to proceed with it, or do we have to excuse the jury? How is it relevant to the issues that must be decided here?

MR. CHRISTIE: Because persecution is one of the reasons why people haven't told the same kind of events.

THE COURT: That is one argument you can make to the jury. There will be no more questions on that subject.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I not put that relevance to Your Honour and have a ruling on that?

THE COURT: I have just ruled on it. It's too late.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I'm sorry, I am familiar with issue-making arguments before the ruling.

Q. So over the years have you been in communication with Mr. Zundel as to the types of persecutions you have suffered? {3181|3182}

A. Yes. I published a lot about it, too.

Q. And these publications have been sent to Mr. Zundel?

A. To Mr. Zundel and thousands of addresses around the world.

Q. And what did you indicate to Mr. Zundel as a result of your research was your view?

A. Well, I never wanted —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that is a question for an expert witness, Your Honour, "as a result of your research point of view".

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wanted to be able to indicate what this witness told Mr. Zundel was the conclusion of his research, so that Mr. Zundel's opinion being based to some extent upon it, it's not that it's an expert opinion, but it is certainly an opinion on which my client relied.

THE COURT: I think, members of the jury, it is almost ten to five. You are excused till nine thirty tomorrow morning.

— The jury retires. 4:50 p.m.

MR. CHRISTIE, the witness has already sworn that he supplied both kinds of information, both verbal and written, to your client. He supplied pictures. He supplied information. Now, what do you {3182|3183} want him to do in addition to that?

A. Basically, Your Honour, I wanted him to indicate what he presented to Mr. Zundel as the results of his inquiry, his views of the situation, to show where my client acquired his views. I guess that's the reason of the issue.

THE COURT: What you say is, "Did you present your views that you've expressed here to Mr. Zundel?" Wouldn't that be —

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. That is probably the best.

THE COURT: It is the best way of doing that instead of getting what this witness' views are, because nobody — and I say this kindly — is all that fascinated with his views. The jury may well be interested in your client's honest belief or the lack thereof, but your object, I gather, is to say this witness communicated his views to your client that had the result of formulating your client's views, in part.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Well, then, surely one simple question would accomplish that without the record having to receive this man's views as to an {3183|3184} event of history when he hasn't been qualified with anything more than he was once a Jehovah Witness who has been expelled from that persuasion.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I appreciate that. It was my intention to suggest that, in regard to the opinions, they need not constitute hearsay if they are in the form of original evidence.

THE COURT: Say that one again, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: If they are in the form of original evidence in that they are tendered not to prove the truth of the opinion, but to prove the truth that the statement was made.

THE COURT: Just the way I suggested, wouldn't that accomplish it? Because otherwise his views are totally irrelevant to the issues this jury must decide.

MR. CHRISTIE: Except that those opinions are the subject of my client's reception. In other words, he receives these opinions. I would like to identify what opinions he received, because it is relevant — I mean, if the witness says his opinions were X, and Mr. Zundel's opinions are Y, then there is {3184|3185} no correspondence.

THE COURT: Well, isn't that, in reality —

MR. CHRISTIE: Reality is something for the jury to decide. I would like to show to the jury what was communicated, not what occurred.

THE COURT: Right or wrong, the ruling is, you will ask the question that I suggested, or you will not ask one at all, because I don't want to have to disabuse the jury's mind of what his views are.

Nine thirty tomorrow morning.

FEBRUARY 12, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I wonder if Dr. Faurisson can continue sitting to my left and assisting me from time to time?

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

— {3185|3186}

DITLIEB FELDERER previously affirmed

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Federer, when you were investigating the situation at Auschwitz I did you find anything in the nature of a swimming pool?

A. Yes. I must admit to you that the first time I saw it, I didn't believe it was the swimming pool because it didn't fit my theory of what, at that time, I thought was an extermination, that it was a fictitious extermination, and then I saw to my astonishment that that was a swimming pool.

Q. And we have a map of Auschwitz I and I'd like to show it to you and Madam Registrar can provide it and you can see what it is.

I now produce and show to you Exhibit No. 24. Would you open it, please, and tell me if you recognize what it describes?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a map of a plan of Auschwitz I, the mother camp.

Q. How many times have you been there?

A. Well, twenty-seven times as a whole, but I have been countless times going back and forth in between because I used to come out between Krakow and the surrounding, but twenty-seven times as a {3186|3187} whole for the length of time.

Q. Where is this thing that you described as a swimming pool?

A. It's marked on here behind Block 6.

Q. Is it inside the fence?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: I wonder if you could mark that, Mr. Christie, with his initials, please?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I have a red pen. Would you circle it, circle the area where the swimming pool is and initial it? Can you describe what it is that is situated there?

A. It's what one would call an olympic-size swimming pool, and that means it's twenty-six meters long, six meters wide and about three meters deep. On one end there is two starting blocks which are used for competition, swimming and jumping off. There is a spring board.

Q. Is the board still there?

A. The board is away, but the blocks, the supporting blocks for the spring board is still there and clearly visible.

Q. Can you describe the water inlets?

A. Yes. There are, on the other end, we have a jumping tower, about three meters high, and it has the faucet of a grotesque figure where the water is sprouting out. It has also showers, real showers where, I suppose, where the prisoners would evidently clean themselves before they went into the water.

Q. And is this pool the same depth {3187|3188} over the entire length?

A. No. It elevates gradually, and at the place where the high jumping tower is, that's where it's deepest. So there is a slight inclination towards that. Not very much, but there is.

Q. Did you take pictures of this pool?

A. Yes. I have hundreds of pictures of it.

Q. Pictures of the water intake where you call the grotesque – what do you mean by grotesque?

A. Well, it is what architects call, it's a figure of sort of a man, part man and animal, and he has an opening where the water would come forth and get into the pool.

Q. Where is that opening? What is it, a head, or —

A. Yes.

Q. And where does the water come from out of the head?

A. Through the mouth.

Q. And you have photographs of that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there something special about Block 25 in Auschwitz?

A. Yes. Block 25, there's two largest building in the camp.

Q. Would you circle that with a red pen and mark it "25" and initial it, please?

A. It's beside the largest building, which is the kitchen, and in this block there is what one {3188|3189} could call a secret museum.

Q. Why do you call it a secret museum?

A. Well, only the very elite or those who have received some respect or some who are in trust of the Auschwitz officials are allowed in there. The public are never allowed in there. It's a closed place. Have you been in there?

A. Yes. Several times.

Q. What have you seen there?

A. Inside they have exhibits of various things put on —

Q. What thing?

A. Well, for instance there is one mound, in other words, it's placed inside glass.

MR. CHRISTIE: Mounted I think he means, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I still don't know what he means, but you can explain it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, you had better explain what you mean, because you are not using the right English words.

A. Well, it is inside an enclosure of glass. You can look through it and there they have exhibited various items.

Q. What items? Please tell us.

A. Well, there is one there which shows the various musical compositions which were played by the orchestra. There was two orchestra in the camp, one made out of women in Birkenau, and the other one of the male. And they even composed their own {3189|3190} pieces of music while they were in the camp. So for instance there is the Auschwitz Waltz in there.

Q. Have you seen this?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen the music?

A. Yes.

Q. Has it got a title on it?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read the title?

A. Yes. And I have it on picture.

Q. You have pictures of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen other exhibits there?

A. Yes. There is another exhibit which shows the letters which were written from Auschwitz to the outside. These were done in such a way that paintings were drawn by the prisoners, and I was astounded to see how beautiful and peaceable these paintings were, they were so human.

Q. Have you pictures of that?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen anything in the nature of works produced by the prisoners?

A. Yes, because this camp here was hospitals, and most of them were hospital blocks, and people were brought here for recovery. There was a rehab blocks or rehab work going on in there.

Q. What kind of things were there?

A. Those capable of metal work, they would work in metal, and those capable of woodwork, they {3190|3191} would do woodwork

Q. Have you seen those works?

A. Yes.

Q. Where are they?

A. They are also in there.

Q. In where?

A. At the secret museum.

Q. In what block?

A. Twenty-five.

Q. Did you take photographs of that?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Are there other things displayed there that surprised you in relation to the extermination stories?

A. Yes. There are paintings which prisoners were made, and I was surprised over the beauty that some of these paintings had. There's also items such as warning signs for the prisoners, that if they do not keep them clean, they risk their own death, and then a big louse was there.

Q. Why a louse?

A. Well, because the clothes lice were the carrying agent of this disease, typhus, which struck in the camps frequently.

Q. You said that you saw kitchens in Auschwitz I?

A. Yes. It's the largest. It may be debatable. The theatre may be the largest building, but I take it that the kitchen perhaps beats it. It has a dietary department and a slaughter place for the meat on the other side. It has two chimneys. It's actually {3191|3192} the building which has most chimneys.

Q. Have you been inside it?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you describe the inside?

A. Yes. It's divided into sections, and we have a dietary section with its part. We had the meat part where the meat would be hung up and cut. We have, of course, the kitchen with the soup where the chimneys go down, they have big bowls or big canister where the soup would be made.

Q. Have you seen those canisters?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you photograph them?

A. I have photographs of the canisters.

Q. And how large were they?

A. They were the size that we used when I, at school, used to go in the camp in the summertime. They are about this large up and about this wide.

Q. How many did you see?

A. About three. The others, I understand, are in use today in the surrounding.

Q. And there were twelve chimneys in that area?

A. Yes. If I remember right, there's twelve chimneys.

Q. Any room for eating places?

A. In the kitchen?

Q. Yeah.

A. Eating? No. The prisoners didn't eat inside the kitchen. I think it was very hygienical [sic]. {3192|3193} Only the working prisoners were allowed in there.

Q. And what was block eleven?

A. The Block 11 is purported to be the block of death, and it has a courtyard where it's alleged that twenty thousand people were shot against a wall.

Q. Did you see the wall?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any bullet holes in the wall?

A. No, not a trace of it.

Q. What kind of bricks were they?

A. Ordinary bricks which you find in any, I suppose, Canadian home. I see them in the buildings here. Red bricks. I may say in Block 11, as you brought it out, there is a special room in the basement which they want the tourists to see. The tourists are regimented through certain roles, and if they depart from that role, they may get into trouble, and one of the roads one is led into is to see the standing cells in there.

Q. Standing cells?

A. Yeah. And as one watches, as the tourist is led through this place, he sees smaller and smaller windows until he finally sees, comes into the standing cell. If one goes from the outside, one can clearly see how they have patched up the work from the back, but then one has to go around and look at the back.

Q. Yes. What do you mean, patched up the work?

A. Well, everything is done very {3193|3194} dramatically and almost religiously in there. And so each window, as the person, the tourist would look through each window, it becomes more and more dramatically smaller and smaller to indicate, I suppose, the unpleasantness of being in such a place.

Q. Have you visited Birkenau from time to time?

A. Yes.

Q. As often as Auschwitz I?

A. Oh, yeah. I have slept there, parked inside there, parked my van numerous times and slept.

Q. Inside the camp.

A. Inside the camp.

Q. On this what I am now showing you, Exhibit 21, is an area drawn in original pencil with the word "Flames" attached to it where one of the witnesses indicated there were supposed to be pits and flames. Have you been in that area?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you describe that area?

A. This whole area is extremely marshy, and if one wants to walk around Birkenau here, especially you have to have some very good boots to jump or you get stuck in the muck. Even in the middle of the summertime when I was there it was actually, sometimes the water reaches up to your boots, water above your knees and my boots have often got stuck in there.

Q. Is this in the area of Crematory V?

A. Yes. I would say here that most {3194|3195} exterminationists claim that the pits were actually beside Krema V. So this is just another of the hoaxes. They have so many fantasies going and this is one of them.

Q. If you dug a hole in the ground there a foot or two deep, what would happen?

A. Well, it fills with water, just as if you go with your boots in many of these places you get stuck. You lose your boot if you are not careful.

Q. In the area where that circle is made with flames alleged?

A. Yes, in this entire area, even in Krema V there.

Q. You have photographs of this area?

A. Yes.

Q. How many photographs of that area do you have?

A. Well, thousands, this area.

Q. In your inquiries did you go inside what's known as the sauna in Birkenau?

A. This is another building which one is prohibited to go in, but I'm sort of unconventional. I like to do things which maybe are not so useable. So I was able to get in, yes.

Q. And what did you find therein?

A. It's a tremendously huge building and I saw it was very well-built. It was definitely built both for the sake of beauty and for the sake of use. I must tell here that the first time I was in there I was quite nervy, because the guards were running {3195|3196} around, and of course they didn't know I was in there. However, I did find several delousing compartments.

Q. Did you take pictures of them?

A. Yes. I have them.

Q. Can you describe them, please, the doors and that type of thing?

A. Well, it was very evident as one came into the building that one — there was a form of delouse for delousing. In other words, the prisoners would come from the dirty side and eventually, as they got cleaner and cleaner, they came to a cleaner place. And inside the building they have several rooms. You have an extremely huge basement.

Q. What was in the basement?

A. It was filled with water. I almost fell into it. Perhaps I would still be down there if I hadn't watched. There were openings when I went down there the first time. It was very dark. I had a flashlight with me and I didn't see this opening. It was just in the last moment I saw it. Literally, the basement is covered with water today.

Q. And what was the condition of these chambers that you saw that you recorded as delousing chambers? Describe them, please.

A. There's a large room there which was used as a banquet rooms for the inmates where, if it was raining outside and they had a special celebration going, the orchestra would play music and it was also used as a dance hall.

Q. Do you have photographs of that?

A. Yes. {3196|3197}

Q. Do you have any idea how large it is?

A. I never took measurement of it. I asked the Auschwitz officials to get me the original plans, but until now I have refused.

Q. Did you pace it off, walk off the distance?

A. Yeah. Yeah.

Q. How many yards did you estimate?

A. Oh, I couldn't say for sure. I didn't want to get into certainties and that. I only was struck the first time that it would have such a huge room in there.

Q. And did you see the kind of doors and facilities they had there?

A. Yes. As one proceeds, one then sees furnaces with containers, with water containers, boilers I suppose one would call them in English. They were heating water in there.

Q. You mean boilers?

A. Yes. But they had containers for the water. And then I saw, there are also several various types of delousing chambers, some built —

Q. What are they? Describe those.

A. There are several of them which are built, which are made in metal, which are sealed. They are locked by a wheel. One turns the wheel around and as one turns the wheel around there are several forks sticking out and it would get into certain slots in the chamber. The chamber is like this.

Q. How big is it? {3197|3198}

A. It's about mid-size, a little shorter in height.

Q. Is there anything inside that chamber?

A. Yes. There are wagons inside the chambers were, evidently, were used for hanging clothes.

Q. Have you got photographs of those?

A. Yes. There's also another type of chambers which are like this. In other words, they are not the rounded ones. And they have just hinges for ordinary doors, they are not specially built metal chambers.

Q. You have provided all these photographs that you took to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes. He has, well, not all of them. You have to remember there's thirty thousand pictures. But a number of them, yes.

Q. Now, how large overall would you estimate the sauna area was?

A. The sauna is the largest building in the entire camp. There's no building which is as large as that one.

Q. And where is that in the area of the camp? You have the map in front of you. I'd like you to point out, and perhaps you could circle that in red pen.

A. It's here.

Q. With your red pen, and mark it with your initials, please. Now, in the course of your {3198|3199} investigations of the camp, Auschwitz I and Birkenau, did you make an inquiry into Krema I in Auschwitz I?

A. Yes. There is a building I consecrated my time, a lot of time in that building because at that time I still believed that perhaps people were gassed inside this building, so that is what I wanted to find out, the possibilities for such attempt.

Q. Did you take measurements of that building?

A. Yes. And I have published the measurements in my book, "Auschwitz Exit", and there are my measurements which were made. At that time I did not yet have several of the plans for which the Auschwitz officials have in their files.

Q. Just as an example, how many measurements would you have taken of that building?

A. Well, I couldn't add them. I went there and I measured for days, on the roof, inside the building, around the building.

Q. Did you take notes of all these measurements?

A. Yes. I have them and they are published here in this book.

Q. You had help in the measurement of these buildings?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Did you have someone helping you when you —

A. My Fillipino [sic] wife helped me many times with this, yes. {3199|3200}

Q. And why were you making all these measurements?

A. I had read so many contradictions in exterminationist literature, one thing was contradicting the other. This constant shift of contradiction. And I realized a building can't have a hundred different measurements and hundred thousand different ways of getting into it. And I wanted to find out about the chimneys, how it worked. I had always been technically interested. At that time I still believed that the chimneys was not a fake. I thought it was genuine.

Q. And you had read the accounts of the people?

A. Yes. The peoples I read and even the Auschwitz movie. At Auschwitz the tourists are, as I said —

Q. Never mind. Did you make an effort to find out if you can see into what is the gas chamber from the —

A. Peephole, yes.

Q. Can you?

A. Well, no, you can't, but you actually see the wall on the other side.

Q. Well, how far away from the door?

A. About one and a half meters.

Q. And why is that, what kind of wall is that?

A. It's a cement wall. It's a supporting wall before you go into the so-called gas chamber, so one has put people in the wrong door.

Q. Did you take infrared photography? {3200|3201}

A. Yes.

Q. Inside what is alleged to be a gas chamber?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you do that?

A. I did that especially — I have done it several times, but especially concentrated in 1981.

Q. And what were you looking for?

A. I was looking for any traces that this building may have looked different, to see whether one had tampered with the building, to see whether walls had been torn down, and to find out if I could, in that way, trace what was becoming more and more evident to me, a Hollywood stage place. It's not authentic. It's a fake.

Q. And did you show that infrared photography to Ernst Zundel?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he, throughout the time of your inquiries, interested in it and communicating with you?

A. Yes. He was very interested then. Here I must say I communicated with anybody who is interested in it. So Ernst was one of them who shows this interest.

Q. Did you visit also Monowitz in the course of your studies?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you spend many days there searching through that camp?

A. Yes. Or the area, I should say, {3201|3202} the surrounding area. It's a very huge area. It lays outside of Auschwitz, and it was to form a Buna factory work which the Germans had built outside there, and today it is the largest chemical factory in Poland, and the factory looks, if one studies pictures of it from that type, one can identify many of these buildings that are there today.

Q. Is there smoke in that area?

A. I would say it's a gas chamber. It's terrible.

Q. What is a gas chamber?

A. The entire area.

Q. Why?

A. Well, they have — Poland has very few rules about environmental protection, and I constantly got in contact with people who were sick in Auschwitz today because this factory —

THE COURT: Sick where? You said they are sick today.

THE WITNESS: In Auschwitz.

THE COURT: In Auschwitz. I see. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: From the smoke in that area. Well, from the poison which unfortunately nothing is done [is done] about it, and unfortunately it spreads inside the entire area and unfortunately the people in the city have all kinds of problem and doctors that have reported about it have been fired.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, in the evidence in this trial there have been some aerial photographs in evidence. Have you visited the camp and {3202|3203} examined the roads in and out of the camp?

A. Yes. I have travelled on them. We have slept on them. We have walked for weeks, all these roads. And especially when I found about the CIA photographs. I was very much concerned to find whether I could follow the roads from those pictures.

Q. I am now showing you what is Exhibit 27 in these proceedings. And photograph No. 1, I'd ask you if you can identify where the gate to Birkenau is in that photograph.

A. The main gate?

Q. Yes.

A. The main gate is two gates, one for the trains and one for the prisoners here.

Q. Can you hold that up and point it out to the jury and to His Honour? If you could turn around and point it to His Honour?

THE COURT: No, that's all right. It is the jury that is important.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Then you had better hold it still for a second so the jury can see what you are pointing to. Now, can you point to the entrance to the camp?

A. Now I am looking at it upside down, but here is the entrance going here.

Q. Is there a road out of the back of that entrance?

A. The road continues here, out here, and I travelled on it many times.

Q. Does it appear any different than {3203|3204} the other roads of the camp in terms of age?

A. No. If one looks at this map, one is really astounded. When one looks at the place today, it is very identical.

THE COURT: It is what?

THE WITNESS: It's identical.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Were there any other roads in and out of the camp?

A. Yes. There is another road leading out this way here – in other words, leading to the sauna which I was mentioning about.

Q. Which is ...

A. The delousing here. The prisoner would walk up here. This is after they had built a new sauna here, because they were using these two buildings previous to that time.

Q. What two buildings?

A. The secret buildings which the Auschwitz officials are still unwilling to tell about.

Q. And where are they in the camp?

A. There is this one building here which was at a particular time the male camp, and there is another building here which is the female, which was the female camp. Later on this section also became a female, for the females.

Q. Can you identify that on the map? You have showed it on the photograph. If you could point those buildings out on the map for me, please.

A. You mean on this map here?

Q. The map of Birkenau.

A. Oh, yes. Here it is. Pardon me. {3204|3205} Let me see here. You want the delousing, the original delousing buildings?

Q. Yes. Just hold out the map.

A. Okay. This building here. And this building here.

Q. Why were there two?

A. It was one for the males and one for the females.

Q. Which was the female camp?

A. This was the female camp. This was the male.

Q. And where is the new delousing building, or the one that you looked into?

A. That was up there. I looked into these two, so —

Q. You have photographs in the original delousing buildings?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Do you have photographs in the new delousing buildings?

A. Yes. They are not published, still kept secret by the officials, but I have them, yes.

Q. And where is the place where you found the water in the basement?

A. That is this building here.

Q. And that is the biggest building in the camp.

A. That is the biggest building in the entire camp.

Q. What was that building made out of?

A. That is made out of beautiful {3205|3206} red bricks on the outside with tiles on the roof. Inside is beautifully plastered and it's made out of cement, part of it, bricks on the outside and tiles on the roof and cement on the floor.

Q. Was there a water treatment plant?

A. You mean inside this building?

Q. No. Inside the camp.

A. Yes. There are two water purification plants inside this camp. There's the old one and there's a new one.

Q. Where are they on the map if you can point them out?

A. The old one is beside Krema II. That's this contraptions of these buildings here. They are, if anybody has seen a sewage building, he cannot immediately identify this.

Q. Where are the new ones?

A. The new ones are over here.

Q. Do you have pictures of those?

A. Yes, and including this building, I should say. And the sewage would go into what is called Königsgraben [Königsgraben]. After it is filtrated it would go in this place here. This is actually not a road here at all. This is a ditch, very deep ditch where, after the sewage has been filtrated, it would flow into here. It goes underneath this road here. There is a culvert here. It goes underneath this road which leads further out, and then it continues out and up into the vistula.

Q. Is there a roadway from the ramp {3206|3207} to the new sauna?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Could you point out where that roadway would go?

A. You have, in going that road, you have to pass Krema II and III, where they —

Q. Just outline with your pen where a person would go to do sauna.

A. Here we are. And then here. And then here and here.

Q. Thank you. Have you seen the plans of the crematorias II and III in the Museum?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen the models there?

A. Yes

Q. Have you seen models made from those plans by Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they identical?

A. You mean the models — there are quite a few models. The models which are displayed inside at Auschwitz Museum and the models which were made by Zundel?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, no. They are not identical

Q. How are they different?

A. The models which are produced at Auschwitz Museum, they are not — it's what they call instructive models. They are not authentic in a sense that they show what it was that was supposed to be educational. {3207|3208}

Q. And what have you seen of the models made by Mr. Zundel?

A. The models Mr. Zundel made, they are following the plans, original German plans, and the way it looks today by making, as well, a survey one can make under the circumstances. We have to remember we are still prohibited by the Polish officials to make an archeological survey of the area.

Q. Was your family persecuted by the Third Reich and the National Socialist Government of the Third Reich?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did your father die during that time?

A. He died shortly after the War because of sickness and other things.

Q. And was your mother persecuted by the National Socialists?

A. Yes, in the sense that she was constantly forcibly evacuated from various areas.

Q. Do you recall some of those times?

A. Well, I was just — I was born in; 42, so — but in around '45, at the end of '44 we fled into Italy. My mother fled into Italy.

Q. Did she have difficulties because of her ethnic background?

A. Yes. She was called to Berlin for interrogation.

Q. Why?

A. Because of her alleged ethnic background. {3208|3209}

Q. What was that?

A. Jewish.

Q. Are you sympathetic to the National Socialists?

A. No, I don't think I would say so. I am not a politician, So I am not sympathetic to any group.

Q. Are you anti-semitic?

A. No. I am pro semitic. I think that they have the right, they are the true semites and they have a right to also voice the opinion. It should not be a one-sided opinion, which is presently so prevalent in our media. It's terrible.

Q. You've published a number of times in circumstances about your inquiries; is that right?

A. Oh, yes. And I must say here, too, that I have distributed millions of information pieces around the world.

Q. What technique do you use to portray your understanding of the Holocaust as it is represented?

A. I use any – I use Voltaire's method.

Q. What is that?

A. That is the method of being very serious when it's necessary, and being very opposite, to the extreme, using satire when it is necessary. And a hoax of this nature must be shown what it is, and that is many times can be used only through satire.

Q. And has this got you into trouble? {3209|3210}

A. Yes. I have been in trouble all my life, so it's not – I don't mind.

Q. Why do you continue to make inquiries into this matter when it's got you into trouble?

A. Well, look, I was preaching this extermination theory for fifteen years. I wrote about it. I helped people making research about it, and I don't like to be lied to. I don't like to be fooled. That's all. That's my own opinion. What other people believe it's up to them, but I, personally, I don't want to be fooled, and I would say I would do it with anything – the Indian issue or the alleged scalplings by the Indians, or anything. I don't like people lying about other groups. That's all.

THE COURT: Did you say the alleged scalplings by the Indians?

THE WITNESS: Yes. They claim that the Indians were the ones who did the scalplings of the white man. I very much doubt whether that's true.

Q. Who do you mean whether the people were scaoped, [sic] or where the idea originated?

A. Yes.

Q. Which?

A. These scalplings, it's alleged that the Indians introduced scalping by scalping the white man, but I think I have reason to believe that it was the white man who scalped the Indians.

Q. How do you mean that?

A. Well, there was a very good reason {3210|3211} for that. There was a bounty on every Indian. A dead Indian is a good Indian. And they were cutting their heads off, and that would be too heavy. These heads would be flopping all around. So they decided that the better way was to get the scalp, and then they would deliver the scalp to the place and they would get paid for it.

Q. So you've considered that an analogous story.

A. Yes. It's an additional hoax which we are encountered with daily.

Q. What do you think of the reason for these stories?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, I don't see how his thoughts on the reasons for these stories have any relevance for this jury or this matter before us.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I withdraw the question.

Q. Are there ponds in the region of Birkenau?

A. Yes. As I said, it is a very marshy area especially around these alleged places where they were having huge pits and the flames were reaching, oh, high, high up in the sky with all kinds of different colours, depending on what people would burn. It's exactly the place where it's so marshy.

Q. Have you got photographs of those ponds?

A. Yes. There's one pond, very close {3211|3212} Krema IV and V, and I have beautiful frog music from these ponds, if you are interested.

MR. CHRISTIE: There are some photographs from which I should conduct a voir dire. I have nothing further in particular to lead.

THE COURT: Do you have anything further to lead other than the photographs?

MR. CHRISTIE: I can't swear that I have.

THE COURT: I am asking you to state it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think there is anything more. I could be wrong, subject to – but I don't think so. Would it be, then, convenient, Your Honour, to show these slides, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Members of the jury, will you excuse us, please?

— The jury retires. 10:25.

THE COURT: Now, I would like you to tell me what it is you want to show me, and why you want to show me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, the slides taken by this witness, he can tell you the camera, the aperture of the camera, he can describe where they are, he can depict the camp as accurately as anyone has, and the issue is whether this is an extermination camp.

THE COURT: This is what, Birkenau?

MR. CHRISTIE: Both. Both Auschwitz I and Birkenau. Now, I have seen these slides. They {3212|3213} depict many extensive and elaborate buildings for both delousing, they also show pictures of what are obviously signs by the Germans, done by the Germans to indicate certain things about the camp.

There are numerous photographs of the lay of the land relevant to the issue of the six-meter deep burning pits of Dr. Vrba. There are slides showing the interior of the Leichenkeller, where Dr. Vrba alleged he saw an S.S. gaurd [sic] trying to climb to pour Zyklon-B, the entrance that, or the holes alleged in the roof to Leichenkeller I where Dr. Vrba said he saw poured Zyklon-B from cans by the S.S. man climbing on the roof. There is photographic evidence of the sauna, and the chambers for the delousing of clothes.

It is, of course, the theory of the defence that Zyklon-B was used for delousing, and these were apparatus that are not alleged to be gas chambers but are evidently there for a purpose. They are not reconstructions. They are not fabrications. The pillars of Urstein – you will recall Mr. Urstein testified there were no pillars in the Leichenkeller where he took out with others seven hundred bodies of gas victims. There are seven large concrete pillars. Mr. Urstein {3213|3214} said that the alleged gas chamber was on ground level. It's quite obvious, from the photographs, that the Leichenkeller where the gassings were alleged to have taken place that Mr. Urstein said he took the bodies out of those places are well underground.

It would be my argument that although one can forget things in forty years, it is very seldom that one can forget that one is dragging bodies up from 23.1 [2.31] meters underground, ground level. It would make a difference to the matter of carriage, and it would be hard to forget, as the witness claimed he remembered. It gives a description by the most vivid depiction of the interior of what Dr. Vrba said was a gas chamber. He circled it on the map. The witness can identify that very place, and he has taken photographs of it, the same building.

He also has photographs of the general lay of the large size of the buildings, and it would be my argument to the jury that if you look at all this evidence, in addition to the theatre – now, I know that sounds shocking that there was a theatre, but the photographs –

THE COURT: The dance halls where the {3214|3215} prisoners danced, and as the witness says, where they had banquets.

MR. CHRISTIE: That may not be easy to believe unless you see the photographs. And they are there. And I want to be able to show them to the jury to display what is an answer to this horrendous evidence to Mr. Vrba, Mr. Leader. They do not depict an extermination camp, but an elaborate system for keeping people alive – a water treatment plan, shower facilities and not for killing people, it is not alleged in these buildings at all. It is only alleged in Krema II, III and IV. This is where in this case that gassings are supposed to have taken place. And so one would be able to ask the jury, well, why are all these elaborate health care facilities, all these facilities for cleaning clothes that there are?

Now, it's open to, I hope, open to the defence to show a little more about the circumstances than we have so far received. Nobody has shown us anything. The maps were introduced by the defence. Every attempt to show slides has been introduced by the defence. We are simply trying to show that there is a very good reason to disbelieve that this is an exter- {3215|3216}mination –

THE COURT: Didn't Dr. Vrba show slides?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. He made drawings and he showed pictures as to how this and that happened, but I didn't see any slides. No pictures are in evidence, in my submission, because if one looks at this camp and the photographs of it, one sees elaborate cooking facilities, there are photographs of that, such as Dr. Barton described in Bergen-Belsen that convinced him that it wasn't a deliberate attempt to exterminate people.

Now, the witness is present for the photograph. He is ready to testify on the photographs.

THE COURT: When were they taken?

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't ask that, I'm sorry.

They were taken between 1978 and 1981. And the time when these photographs were taken can be tested by cross-examination. It can be alleged that there is some alteration; but there are substantial things that are impossible to alter.

It's also true that one can see on the {3216|3217} aerial photographs that, as the witness has said, things are identical. Things haven't really changed. I am sure it could be said that some superficial things have changed as the witness said himself, especially in respect to Crematoria I in Auschwitz I, but all these things are quite visible as to what has been unaltered. The bricks, the buildings are still there. They do show us what existed in this camp, and I would very much like to be able to show the jury these pictures to enable them to see the lay of the land, the geography, the conditions in the camp that are quite obvious from the photographs. I would like to be able to show them to Your Honour, and then Your Honour might be able to understand my position a little more clearly. These are very clear, coloured slides, and the witness can describe them as he goes along, and then Your Honour can be able more to see the point.

I would very much like to show them to Your Honour, and then ask if I might show them to the jury. I think it would only be fair, at least, to allow us to show them to you and then, if you feel that there is a reason why they shouldn't be shown – Your Honour, I have been involved in many, many cases in my {3217|3218} career in which photographs have been introduced. It is very seldom that I have seen challenged the photographs, primarily because they are usually quite obviously, they can demonstrate what they purport to demonstrate, and I purport to prove the person who took the photographs.

THE COURT: Well, I have that one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, could I show them to Your Honour, then?

THE COURT: I will hear from the Crown.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, my objection to the photographs is the same as the objections that I have made all along to the photographs. These are photographs that are taken over thirty years after the events. They are being interpreted by somebody who is incompetent to interpret them, I would suggest. They do not depict what was there in 1942, '43, '44. And for those reasons, Your Honour, I would object to the introduction of the photographs. I would certainly object to the introduction of the photographs as going to the truth of anything.

If the jury, having heard the descrip-{3218|3219}tion of these matters from Mr. Felderer and that he passed information along to Mr. Zundel have a basis on which they can be invited by Mr. Christie to find that that forms part of Mr. Zundel's belief, but I would object to the photos themselves being introduced as being irrelevant to the issues, certainly as to the truth of the matters which is part of what they are being introduced for. To me it is a substantial part of what they are being introduced for by Mr. Christie.

I don't think I can say anything further, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think it is speculative to say that[ ]things have changed. Is my friend seriously contending that buildings have been moved or new buildings have been built, or the camp isn't as it was?

Surely if that was his contention, he could have called evidence on that point, but to say that we have reason to think otherwise when this is the way it is is as much to say, if I were to say in a murder case, well, I don't have any evidence that the {3219|3220} body has been moved, but I don't want pictures in because it could have been, I just don't see that that has any credibility at all, Your Honour.

I suggest that what we have is massive physical structures made out of brick. They are not moved. The land hasn't moved. There is no evidence that the level of the land has changed or that the level of anything else has changed. I have even called a witness to describe the conditions there at the time.

THE COURT: At what time?

MR. CHRISTIE: In the 1943, '44 period. Thies Christopherson described the land as very low and marshy, and it is relevant because certainly Dr. Vrba's evidence of a six-meter deep pit would have some doubts about it if we produce evidence, and I recall that one of the witnesses, I am not sure which now, described the flames as coming from a particular area, and fortunately I was astute enough to ask him to write it inside a circle, and now the witness describes that area as very marshy and low.

Surely if the Crown wishes to allege that there has been some fundamental change, or that the photographs do not depict the scene, they've got the {3220|3221} witness to describe what he took, and if they wish to produce evidence to the effect that something has moved the crematory buildings or the kitchens are changed or something to that effect, why is that not open to them? Surely if it was my position to try and keep out photographs in any kind of a case I would have to show some evidence to show that the evidence did not depict the scene if the photographer is right there. It seems to me to throw the onus on the wrong party to show that there isn't alteration, especially when you are talking about great, huge buildings that are obviously there for many, many years.

You can see when you see the photographs that these are not buildings people could move, and they do, they depict exactly what they purport to depict. And it's not that anyone here is testifying that this is exactly what it was in 1942 or 1943, but we have reasons to draw inference from provable facts, and I suggest that it's open to any reasonable person I to say, "Well, I really doubt that that brick building was moved or that it wasn't there in 1942 when the whole camp, on the map that the Crown accepts, shows a building there. {3221|3222}

Why can't we show a picture of the building? We can show the map. Nobody disputes that map. Now we can't show the photographs.

Well, I don't understand how it can be taken that a map which we accept depicting a building suddenly has less credibility, or cannot be proven when we wish to show a photographic building today.

The plans, for instance, the plans are accepted for Krema II and III. Now, we could show a photograph of what Krema II and III looks like today. I think if the plans are admissible, surely the photograph isn't in a different realm. Nobody is going to suggest it is in a different building in a different place. It escapes me to understand how my friend can contend that because time has elapsed we must presume that things have changed. There are many things in the world that do not change unless people change them, and I don't think there is any evidence to suggest that these buildings that are set out, identified on the map of Auschwitz I and Birkenau, have suddenly been reconstructed and re-established, fundamentally altered. {3222|3223}

There are many things in this photograph that displays the inference of an extermination camp, and if we are not allowed to at least show them to Your Honour, and then if there may be some reason to dispute, we could dispute it, but we are arguing in the abstract right now, not having been able to show these things to Your Honour. If on them something appears to be displaced, well, my friend then would be able to put before you some reason to say, "This doesn't appear to be the same", but at the moment I don't think we've got that far.

I would like to, at least, get that chance to show Your Honour this picture. Thank you.

THE COURT: Do you wish to call any other evidence on this voir dire?

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I have a moment?

THE COURT: Certainly.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think one point could be made that the Museum and exhibits are still being shown and represented as unaltered and authentic and that certainly entitles us to analyze what is before the world and represented to be these buildings, this of camp. {3223|3224}

Your Honour, it seems to me, to lay a foundation, I'd like to call my client on the issue that he made on these photographs.

THE COURT: Do you want to say something now, Mr. Griffiths?
You can step down for a moment, sir.

— The witness stands down.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I was just going to say that there is evidence; it is not a presumption that I am making – there is evidence before us that the crematoria were destroyed, that new crematoria, gas chamber was built. Mr. Felderer himself has testified that he believes changes have been made in the camps. It is not a presumption.

MR. CHRISTIE: Certainly that's valid in respect to some of the alterations to what is alleged to be Crematorium I, but as far as Crematoriums II and III are concerned, all that is depicted in the photographs are what is there today, not altered. They were obviously blown up at some stage, If I may, then, Your Honour, I'd like to call my client. {3224|3225}

THE COURT: Certainly.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn on voir dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, when did you receive the photographs that Mr. Felderer took?

A. I think I'll have to expand on that. I did not receive these photographs initially. I received a book, and this book is lying right in front of me here. It's called, "Auschwitz Exit". And after I had read the book I then requested additional information from him, and as additional information he sent to me colour slides and colour prints.

Q. Did you receive these before 1983?

A. Yes, I certainly did.

Q. And were they part of the formation of your understanding of the issue of gas chambers at Auschwitz?

A. They certainly were. He was a great influence on my thinking.

Q. And have you viewed those slides and recently?

A. I have not only viewed them, I have used them in video films which I have produced, and I have gone to Sweden to meet with Mr. Felderer to check many of the thousands of slides that he says {3225|3226} he has in addition to the ones that he sent to me.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And you viewed the slides that he has arranged to prepare for his evidence today.

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And were they the ones that you saw before 1983?

A. Yes.

Q. And were they part of the formation of your opinion?

A. They most definitely were.

Q. Why did they influence your opinion?

A. I have never been to Auschwitz myself, and to any of the other camps in Eastern Europe because I am known to be a very strong anti-communist. I didn't think it wise to go there myself. And they were in colour, and I believe that colour photographs reveal far more than black and white photographs, and I have never seen as many detailed close-up photographs of many of the points that I knew only from reading, researching, papers, documents and so on. The photographs gave meaning and plastic to these arguments.

Q. Meaning and what?

A. Plastic. Shape. Dimension.

Q. What did this have to do with any plans that you'd had? Have you obtained plans of the crematoria?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Who did you obtain them from?

A. Dr. Faurisson and Mr. Leader.

Q. And how did these affect the plans? {3226|3227}

A. Made it much easier to understand the uni-dimensional architecture of the plans, because we have light, colour, texture.

Q. And what was your opinion after seeing these plans in relation – these plans and these slides, rather, in relation to the Harwood booklet?

A. I considered it the ultimate proof that Harwood was right.

Q. What particularly about the slides convinced you that Harwood was right about this not being an extermination camp?

A. If you see elaborate kitchen facilities, hospital facilities, hygienic facilities, delousing chambers for clothing for people, saunas, bath-houses, then there comes a point when one rightly asks, what kind of an extermination camps were the Germans running with all these facilities.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions. Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Anything further, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. That's all the evidence I propose to call on the voir dire. I would like to show the slides and then that would be my, I suppose, exhibit on the voir dire. I would like to show them to Your Honour and —

THE COURT: It will not be necessary that you show them.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury, during the course of the examination-in-chief of the defence witness by the name of Felderer, Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused, proposes to show to me, if I permit it, and ultimately to the jury, if I permit that, a number of slides and films essentially of the Auschwitz-Birkenau complex which, I understand, is located at the present time in Eastern Europe. The films and the slides, in colour, it is said, depict the buildings and the locations within buildings of crematoria, alleged gas chambers, and the architecture of the buildings and various points of construction of the buildings, as well as the surrounding area of the complex itself.

The witness, Felderer, took the photographs between 1978 and 1981. He then sent those photographs and slides to the accused at the request of the accused. This witness is a person who has devoted what appears to me to be a major portion, if not all, of his time, effort and energy in the examination of alleged extermination camps and other camps which, it is said, were run by the Nazis during the Second World War.

Mr. Felderer himself was born in 1942. At the end of the War he would have been three years of age. {3228|3229} He has testified, among other things, that he has changed from being a believer in what is referred to as the Holocaust and the alleged Nazi mistreatment of prisoners during the Second World War by reason of a policy decision of extermination. He now calls himself a revisionist. He takes the position that the stories concerning brutality on a policy basis by the Nazi regime to run extermination camps and others by the Germans is a hoax. Counsel for the accused proposes to lead from this witness this type of evidence and to have it go to the jury in order, as he says, to rebut the evidence called by the Crown, which takes the opposite position with respect to the Holocaust and all that that entails.

Mr. Christie submits that he should be permitted to show the slides to the jury and to me because they, in colour, show the locations of the alleged gas chamber, and the hole in the roof where it is said that Zyklon-B was poured by an S.S. Corporal according to the Crown evidence. These slides, however, depict, according to the evidence of Mr. Felderer, delousing chambers, kitchens, a dance hall where Mr. Felderer says the prisoners had banquets and danced, and other things that the defence submits rebut or tend to rebut the Crown evidence. {3229|3230}

I point out that this witness has, in a very graphic and detailed manner, responded to questions put to him by defence counsel pointing out the very items the photographs themselves are said to depict.

The defence submits that the photographs show the buildings where they still stand, that they do not depict an extermination camp, and that it is open to the defence, for that reason, to show this.

Crown counsel takes objection to the introduction into evidence of those photographs for the same reasons that he has given before in other, similar motions. Mr. Griffiths takes the position that these are photographs taken of objects thirty to forty years after the event that this trial is all about. They are interpreted by someone, in the submission of the Crown, who is not competent to interpret the contents of the photographs.

This witness has testified as to what he saw at the present time in Auschwitz-Birkenau and other places. That evidence does not go to the truth of what occurred, if anything, in those camps when this witness was conceived and within the ages of between one and thirty-six months old. The viva voce evidence has been permitted for the valid reason that what he has had to say goes to the issue {3230|3231} of the honesty (if there was honesty) in the belief of the accused as to what he said he published was not false.

One must never forget, in a trial such as this, that the essential issues that the jury must decide is whether or not the accused published two documents. The first is, "Did Six Million Really Die?". The second is, "The West, War, and Islam". If it is found that he did so publish, the jury must then decide whether or not the contents of each are essentially false. Thirdly, the jury must decide whether or not, if falsity has been proved, that they were wilfully published by the accused at the time that they were published knowing that the contents were false, and with the intent of mischief to the public interest.

The evidence that is permissible in this trial must be relevant to those issues. Photographs taken of places in Eastern Europe of buildings and the interior of buildings, especially when there is evidence that changes have been made, and evidence of what, if any, has been changed and what, if any, buildings have been built and what, if any, grades have been altered in the interval is not evidence which is permissible to go to the jury, in a large substantial sense, with the exception of the admissibility of the evidence pertaining to the accused's belief. {3231|3232}

What Mr. Christie now proposes is, in my view, irrelevant. It will not be admitted, and the photographs will not be shown for that reason.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 11:00 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How many slides have you provided to Mr. Zundel over the years after you took them and before 1938?

A. Well, I would say at least several hundreds of slides I provided.

Q. Did he ask you to take slides of particular areas?

A. Well, he didn't have to really do that. I knew extermination arguments so well that I was looking these places up myself. I was pioneering in this work. There is nobody else who has done it. I was the first one.

Q. You mentioned the atmosphere of people who go to Auschwitz, tourists, and you described it as being almost really just attitude. What is your attitude towards Auschwitz?

A. Well, my attitude is that if one wants to see Auschwitz, one should go, first take a guided tour by the guides, and then go on one's own and try, and if any of the guides says that you are not allowed to go there, simply try and ignore him and go there anyhow, if one wants to see anything, because otherwise one just goes according to the communist, Zionist propaganda and they will outline how they want you to believe. If one wants to make one's mind up for oneself, one has to go on one's own. {3233|3234}

Q. Did you make a study of the age of the trees in Treblinka and Sobibor?

A. Yes. We made chronological investigations in several camps. In almost all camps we made the tests to find out about exterminationists' allegations and to find out if these were true.

Q. What did you do, not what the results were, but what did you do to take the tests?

A. I bored into the tree with a special tool and then extracted a core test and then counted the rings in order to determine the age of the trees, and also other things can be detected through this core sample.

Q. In all of the literature that you have read, have there been such tests performed?

A. Never. But it is stated that the Germans have planted these trees.

Q. Did you publish, in your publications the results of your inquiries?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And did those go to Ernst Zundel as well?

A. Yes. And also photographs of when the bore is there in places such as Belzec.

Q. And did this apply also to Treblinka?

A. Yes. Sobibor, Auschwitz, Birkenau, Maidanek.

Q. How many times did you visit Sobibor, Treblinka and Belzec?

A. Well, I can't even count it. I {3234|3235} was constantly around that area, numerous times. Exactly how many times I can't even remember any more.

Q. Did you do other tests or endeavour to conduct other tests?

A. Yes. I had other plans which exterminationists had produced in various books, and I was amazed that one plan contradicted the other plan, and quite obviously, this confused me to such an extent that it was bewildering, and I had to spend a tremendous amount of time in these camps to determine what could be found, what could be seen, and then take these core tests, because amazingly enough the trees are there, and obviously, if they had been planted by the Nazis or the Germans, as is alleged, that would be easily seen by these core tests.

I must say here, too, I was in communication with the neighbourhood of Treblinka, the farmers, who helped me tremendously amount, who had big meetings in the evenings sometimes and we would discuss various points such as the stench, the allegation of smell, fires, where the buildings may have stood, what they were doing during the Wartime, because many of them lived around there. And we had a great time.

Q. In the course of these investigations did your opinion in revisionism change?

A. Yes. It has changed to the point where I realize now there's mostly lies and very little truth in it. The spectacles of truth are so surrounded by lies that I think an ordinary person requires quite a mental gymnastic to determine all these different allegations, and unfortunately, if one hasn't seen the {3235|3236} place and been there, it must be very confusing for anybody reading exterminationist literature, because they are constantly contradicting each other.

Q. Having been to all these places and having conducted the tests that you did, have you communicated the test results and findings to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I have. And many of these samples are in my home. I have taken samples of Zyklon-B from the walls, for instance, at the sauna, the original two secret delousing building in Birkenau. I have crept inside the smoke channels in Auschwitz. I have taken samples of the pond where it's alleged, the certain pond where it is alleged that human ashes are thrown into. I have samples of ashes of Auschwitz where it was at first told me that these were human ashes, [sic] because as one walks in Auschwitz, one sees ashes on the road, and of course, I took these with me home. And tree samples – everything I tried to take with me home, back home to Sweden, I mean that I could take, I wouldn't get too much into trouble.

Q. And in the course of publishing your inquiry and the results of your inquiries, have you expressed your opinions and provided these to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I have. I sent it to Mr. Zundel. I sent them to many, many libraries, Jad Vachim [Yad Vashem], all over the world. And Zundel was one of them who responded favourable to the issue.

I must say at that time I knew very little about Zundel. I did not know what he was engaged {3236|3237} with. I only knew that he was interested in what I was interested, and that is to try and come as close to the truth as possible. And that's a gigantic work with the theory of exterminationism, because they are constantly lying.

Q. In relation to the exterminationist view, does the revisionist view get expressed in the media at all?

A. It is a concerted effort to persecute and terrorize anybody, and I have experienced it myself. Anybody who differs from what I would call these terrorists claims, you get persecuted. It is just as simple as that.

M. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you've been in and out of that box once or twice. It is about seven minutes away from coffee time. Rather than start the cross-examination now, I think we will have coffee.

Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:07 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 11:40 a.m. {3237|3238}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Felderer, where did you study archeology?

A. I have always been an amateur interested in biblical archeology since I have been a Jehovah's Witness.

Q. Where did you study?

A. I never said at any time that I had any academic trial in archeology. I can tell you, however, that the best archeologies have been amateurs.

Q. Where have you studied forestry?

A. Forestry?

Q. Yes.

A. I studied forestry through a friend who was a specialist in dendrochronology (sic) [dendrochronology] and he instructed me.

A. Endocronology?

A. Dandrocronology. It is not the same as "en".

!!!Q. So you didn't study at a place of learning?

A. No.

Q. Where did you study chemistry?

A. I never said I studied chemistry.

Q. Have you ever been a building contractor?

A. I helped building a lot of Kingdom Halls, yes.

Q. A lot of Kingdom Halls. The two maps that Mr. Christie showed you, I believe they were {3238|3239} Exhibits 21 and 24, one map of Birkenau and the other of Auschwitz, the main camp. Do you know the source of those maps?

A. You mean these ones here?

Q. Yes.

A. Yeah. They had been presented by the — they are found in the Auschwitz Album. They have also been presented by the Auschwitz Museum. They have a special staff there who work daily on producing various pieces of literature about the extermination theory. So these maps have been produced by the, well, the communists.

Q. All right. They are produced by the communists. And you said they were producing materials to support the exterminationist theory. Do you put those maps in that same category?

A. What they have done with them, they are fairly accurate. They have just deleted some things, otherwise, I — for instance, to say here that "FF" here, in the description that they are pits, burning pits, but they are not burning pits.

Q. Burning pits.

A. Yes. Pits. That is correct. I have the original here, in my "Auschwitz Exit".

Q. Other than that, you say that they are fairly accurate?

A. Yes, but you have to, I would say that one has to elaborate on them. For instance here, here was a football place where this prisoner, the prisoner I reported to happily played football, they played football at a crematory place. This is not marked. {3239|3240} It is an empty place here. Very obvious unless it looks very strange that people played football close to a place where one is exterminated.

These buildings here which you see here and a lot of these buildings were burned down after the War. So today, if you go to Birkenau, you wouldn't see these buildings here. These were hospital buildings. It is very strange that very close to an alleged extermination place you have some of best and most modern hospitals at that time. So one simply did what exterminationists would do. One simply burned them down.

Q. So exterminationists burned them down. They were some of the best hospitals.

A. They were according even to those statements.

Q. According to who?

A. Tanya Tachek [Danuta Czech], in her description about these hospitals, she wrote, together with Peiper [Piper], and Evascu [Iwaszko], written a volume about the medical facilities in Birkenau and Auschwitz. You can buy today, I suppose, if you go to Auschwitz.

Q. Is that the Museum staff?

A. Yes.

Q. Peiper and the other people you mentioned are the Museum staff?

A. Yes. Peiper is the head of the staff who has taken over.

Q. The dance hall and the shower and the sauna area, what makes you say this is a dance hall?

A. This testimony you can, from other {3240|3241} places, read from Fanya [Fania] Fenelon when she writes about the orchestra at Birkenau. And she mentions there about how they went and played in the orchestra. She was one of those playing in orchestra.

Q. My question isn't about the orchestra. It is about the dance hall.

Q. Well, have you ever heard a dance hall without an orchestra? So obviously they were dancing with an orchestra. They had music, you see. These people were human beings who had music in their dance, so Fanya Fenelon went there together with her troop and played music, and the prisoners and others were dancing in this hall.

Q. Well, Fanya Fenelon never said she played music for dance

A. She said she was present at that place, and if you read it, she said so. Very obviously, these people were playing. That is not the only place. There were other places where they were dancing if you would be interested to know about them.

Q. I would be interested to know. Where were they dancing?

A. The theatre.

Q. Where is the theatre?

A. You don't know where the theatre is?

Q. No, I don't. I am asking you.

A. Okay. That's the picture you refused me to show. I could show you the inside of it. Here is the Auschwitz, the mother camp, and I was mentioning to you if you were listening to my comments —

Q. I listened very carefully. {3241|3242}

A. — that the two largest buildings were the kitchen and the second largest building was the theatre, and the theatre is here.

Q. Would you mark that? Would you mark "theatre" on there?

A. It has a stage, theatre for the prisoners.

THE COURT: That's a theatre for the prisoners.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: How do you support yourself, Mr. Felderer?

A. Well, through hard work.

Q. Well, all these trips that you take and all the pictures that you take, they all cost money. My question is how you support yourself.

A. Well, the Zionists have asked that for years. I think it is none of their business.

Q. Well, I am asking you. You are under oath on the stand. How do you support yourself?

A. I said through hard work.

Q. And what are you working hard at that brings you money?

A. Through publications which I have and other things. For instance, I publish leaflets. I published the twenty slides of Auschwitz, cassette [sic] tapes.

Q. So exposing this hoax as you call it is the way you make your living.

A. No. Not primarily, no.

Q. Well, primarily how do you make your living? {3242|3243}

A. What do you mean, when?

Q. I mean now.

A. Now?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I make my living through a pension which I have from the Swedish Government.

Q. A pension from the Swedish Government.

A. Yes.

Q. Any other source of income? Your books, your pension ...

A. Well, as soon as I get any money from that, it goes into producing more books, more literature, more pictures, more tapes, more videos and so forth.

Q. You came over from Sweden expressly for the purpose of being at this trial?

A. Yeah.

Q. And testifying here, I guess, would be good for sales, wouldn't it?

A. I don't think so. It's unfortunately it's a very bad way of making business. I recommend to you to try it and you find out.

Q. Well, I don't know. All the trips that you get sounds pretty good. I guess it's also a good opportunity to tell people about your pioneering efforts in this field.

A. Well, I can tell you my Filipino [sic] wife has been of tremendous assistance to me. She never believed in this theory because she had known a lot about how the Japanese were incarcerated. The Japanese {3243|3244} were incarcerated here in Canada. Jehovah Witnesses were incarcerated in camps. You see, they are not as brainwashed as in the Western world, fortunately.

Q. So you came over here expressly to testify and to tell people about this, this truth?

A. You see, this is a continuous search for truth. If we have all plans from Auschwitz, if the communists deliver us the documents which they have in their files, we can come closer and closer to the truth, but as long as they withhold them and as long as they try to terrorize us, to put us into interrogation, you have to remember when I was in Poland — you maybe think that this was a holiday trip. I have been even put in prison in Poland, so —

Q. For destroying some of the things?

A. No. Not for destroying anything but for being a little too nosy. It's a habit of mine.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. You heard the judge's order at the beginning of this trial excluding witnesses, but you spent all the first week being nosy sitting in the courtroom in defiance of the judge's order?

A. I don't know anything about the defiance. I only know what I am used to in Sweden because I am fighting also for the European human rights and I did what was common practice at home. I didn't, for instance, know that —

Q. You speak English.

A. I did not know that you were not allowed to bring, for instance, a tape recorder into the {3244|3245} courtroom. There's no sign. There's nothing that says so. I never did. I left it downstairs because I was asked. They asked me if I have anything, and I said a tape recorder, and they said, "You are not allowed." Well, in Sweden you are allowed to have a tape recorder in the courtroom.

THE COURT: Are you allowed, in Sweden, to go against a judge's order?

THE WITNESS: It is not against a judge's order.

THE COURT: I didn't ask you that. I asked you if you are allowed to go against a judge's order in Sweden.

THE WITNESS: If you don't know about it, they overlook it.

THE COURT: Like we are now. Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You never heard about the judge's order in the week you were sitting around in the courtroom?

A. No. I am still trying to find out the procedure. Eventually I hope I will be able to know how it's done.

Q. At the end of the week you were thrown out of the courtroom, weren't you?

A. Well, do you think that is an honourable thing?

Q. I don't know. Were you thrown out of the courtroom?

A. One of the men did suggest that I was not any more welcome here. I was thrown out, if you {3245|3246} want to know, because I was asking for a debate with Dr. Hilberg.

Q. You were thrown out because you were passing this out in the courtroom.

A. No. What do you mean in the courtroom?

Q. In the courtroom.

A. I gave that to Mrs. Citron. If anybody should appreciate this material, it should be her.

Q. In the courtroom you gave it to her.

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. May I see it again, please?

Have you seen this, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: That will be the next exhibit.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 41.

— EXHIBIT NO. 41: Literature distributed in courtroom.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this a sample of your work?

A. What do you say?

Q. Is this a sample of your work?

A. Is this a sample of our work? {3246|3247} Yeah. And I was attempting to get a debate with Hilberg for many years. I thought this was a good chance.

Q. With Hilberg.

A. Hilberg.

Q. Have you ever been convicted of anything in Sweden?

A. I have been convicted — I have been under arrest.

THE COURT: No. Convicted.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Have you ever been convicted of anything?

A. And convicted, and my case is not over. The latest time when I was convicted is under appeal.

Q. What were you convicted of?

A. At the European Human Rights —

MR. CHRISTIE: If it is under appeal I don't think it is proper to raise the matter.

THE COURT: Yes, it is. Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What were you convicted of?

A. I was convicted of because I was spreading —

Q. What was the charge you were convicted of?

A. Well, why don't you read it, and then —

Q. I am asking you.

A. Well, I am telling you and you interrupt me. I am saying I was convicted for spreading material which, according to the Zionists, were lies. {3247|3248} So I was convicted at that time and the case is under appeal and —

Q. You were convicted in Sweden?

A. Yeah. And I am not actually [sic] allowed to speak about the case.

Q. And can you tell us what the charge was that you were convicted of? Not your explanation, but what the charge was.

A. Well, like my Filipino [sic] wife said, this is ridiculous. It is race hate.

Q. And did you receive a sentence?

A. I was in custody for about five and a half months.

Q. Was that before you were sentenced or after you were sentenced?

A. That is during, before and after the sentence. I was promptly dismissed, and virtually I was thrown out of prison, if you want to know about it.

Q. And the time before you were sentenced, was that spent in a mental hospital in Sweden?

A. No.

Q. Where was it spent?

A. It was spent, most of the time was spent in custody, and then, part of that time was spent out of what you call not a mental hospital, but where a person is under investigation to see what his mental condition is, very typical to solve your trials. Soviet trials are following the same procedure.

Q. In Sweden.

A. In this case, yes, they are, but {3248|3249} there are other cases. I have written about them.

Q. Is this a sample of your work?

A. This is not a sample. It is not a sample of our work, but it is distributed by us, yes.

Q. Well, who, "by us"? It is distributed by you, Mr. Felderer?

A. By us.

Q. Cartoon, "I was gassed 6 times! No! Ten times. No!" And the comment underneath, "... and there are 5,999,999 others like me in New York." Right?

A. Yes. I hope that's right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is that an exhibit, or is my friend going to show it to the jury before it is an exhibit?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I ask that it be made an exhibit.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suggest that the witness did not originate that, that it is similar to what he had known of, and I suggest unless it is attributed to the witness, it is a rather collateral issue. I recall other witnesses declining to testify about matters that might have embarrassed them, and I might point out the case of the Masons who declined to give evidence about oaths, and I suggest it is much the same.

THE COURT: I wonder, Madam Reporter, if you would mind reading back, starting from the words, "sample"

THE REPORTER: "Q. Is this a sample of your work? {3249|3250}"

A. This is not a sample. It is not a sample of our work, but it is distributed by us, yes.

Q. Well, who, 'by us'? It is distributed by you, Mr. Felderer?

A. By us."

THE COURT: Thank you. You can stop there.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have made my submission, Your Honour.

THE COURT: That will be the next exhibit.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit No. 42:

— EXHIBIT NO. 42: Clipping of cartoon.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did you produce this, Mr. Felderer?

A. I was accused of having produced this, and this is a case of where it is under appeal at the Court of Strassburg.

Q. Did you produce that?

A. So I will not make any comments about it.

Q. Did you distribute it?

A. I was accused of having done it, yeah.

Q. And you have been convicted of having done it?

A. I was convicted for having done it, yeah, under a show trial. {3250|3251}

Q. Under a show trial.

A. Yeah.

Q. I see. Before I show this to the jury —

A. Oh, wait. Where did you get this?

THE COURT: Mr. Felderer, in this jurisdiction, in this court, witnesses answer questions. Counsel ask them.

THE WITNESS: No, because I suddenly don't recognize it. It is what I was accused — I just said that I have been accused for this flyer here, but that is not the way it was the one I was accused under.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, good. Can you tell us if you distributed this one, then?

A. No.

Q. You never distributed that?

A. No. No.

Q. Is there an address on that?

A. That's right.

Q. Whose address is on there?

A. That is "Jewish Information". And then it's marked, "Across the Street". And then the address, and the phone number. And that's to our office.

Q. All right. Jewish Information, that is an office that you run; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you deny that that came out of your office.

A. Yeah.

MR. CHRISTIE: I assume, from my {3251|3252} understanding of the law and the position of the obligations that those who put things to witnesses in cross-examination, that my friend would somehow undertake to prove what he has alleged, as he found out once before that he is not supposed to allege things unless he is prepared to prove them in respect to criminal matters.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Christie. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like my friend's undertaking if he is going to put any more things of this kind to the witness that he is either going to prove it or not put it to the witness.

THE COURT: Your point has been made, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: My name is Christie, Your Honour, I'm sorry.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Are you familiar with this?

A. I am familiar with the flyer. That is one of the fliers which we distribute, that's correct. Wait, let me just — well, I haven't read it in detail, but it probably is, I hope.

THE COURT: Take all the time you want.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Make sure it's yours.

A. The flyer is ours, but the rest is not ours.

Q. All right. When you say "the rest", what are you referring to? {3252|3253}

A. Well, it has a piece of hair on top of the head, or some type of hair. And then it says, "Hair of a gassed victim", then there's a piece of material underneath. And then, what is attended to it, it seems to be some sort of a prophylactic, if my imagination is correct. And then it says a text below it here, "Pure Jewish fat".

Q. And are you denying that the hair and prophylactic was attached when you sent it out, from what I understand?

A. Yes. Correct.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a moment, sir.

Q. Can you identify that?

A. Well, it seems fairly similar to the previous one you gave me.

Q. And is that something that was sent out by you in the condition —

A. Not in a condition, but we published this flyer, yes. That's correct. We, like Voltaire, we believe that satire makes the point. It should be used.

Q. And what part of that do you deny was sent out by you, if any, of that pamphlet?

A. Well, the addition up there where it says, the person who mails this away, they should mail it with a hair because this hair is more authentic than the false hair which is displayed at the Auschwitz Museum and is being exhibited there as the hair from gas victims and this flyer simply says that today the entire world is a form of a gas chamber. So if you really want to prove {3253|3254} that we are being gassed to death, it is because of the environmental destruction that we have today. People are virtually dying because of all the poison that we get in the water and the air.

Q. Is that pamphlet written by you, Mr. Felderer?

A. This one here?

Q. Yes.

A. This was written by me. And of the hair attached, I just said that is not the part that we mailed out, but we know that people do mail it out, yes.

Q. People do mail it out.

A. Yeah. We hope so.

Q. I'm sorry, I am not sure I understand you. Probably people mail out your flyer with hair on it?

A. They mail it out — I have here, for instance, that they mail out our flyers with anything that strikes home a point. We don't mail any letter bombs which the Zionists do specialize in. So we think that if people want to mail it, it's a free country, you see, Sweden. We hope so, anyway. We try to make it that way.

Q. But do you send large numbers of your flyers to individual organizations for them to distribute further, or do you send them all that?

A. Our flyers are smuggled into the communist countries. Some are published there. And then — or printed there. And then, from there, often being distributed into Europe, or into other places of {3254|3255} communist countries.

Q. Could you read us that pamphlet?

A. This one here?

Q. Yes, please.

A. Yes. It says, "Please accept this hair of a gassed victim".

Q. Why would it say that if there was no hair on it?

A. Why would it say this?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, because sometimes the people don't mail, I suppose, any hair. I don't know. You have to ask those people who mail it.

Q. Are they supposed to put hair on it?

A. Yes. If they wish. There are other things that are mentioned in the back.

Q. Read it from the start, Mr. Felderer.

A. "Hair of a gassed victim. Next time you cut your hair do not discard it! No, mail it instead to Mr. Smolen ..."

Now, Mr. Smolen is the director of Auschwitz, I will just bring that in.

"... at the Auschwitz Museum or to any of the addresses found on the next page – to be exhibited in the display of hair of gassed victims. Your hair has a much better claim to be exhibited there than the phony samples of commercial wigs and hair hitherto exhibited. Also collect together the hair of all your friends, dogs, and other animals. Send it all in a {3255|3256} plastic bag to Mr. Smolen. He will remember you for it. It can be mailed as "Printed Matter" by placing the term "Sample" on the special delivery."

Typical Voltaire satire, I would say. And then it continues on. It says:

"To: Mr. K. Smolen and Staff, Auschwitz Museum, Oswiecim," – Auschwitz – "Poland." "Dear Mr. Smolen: In appreciation of your deep concern for gas victims, I am hereby forwarding my personal trophy for your permanent museum exhibits. I understand that you are intensely involved with the subject of gassing. Personally I feel rather miserable. Not even Zyklon B would cure me: This is much on account of the fact that I am getting gassed to death by a slow poison procedure. Our air is full of filth, poison, gasses, harmful chemicals and other disgusting elements. Matters are no better in your city. Your city is virtually saturated with deadly gasses emanating from your Monowitz chemical factory. In fact the place is not fit even for crows. I urge you to pay it a visit. Surely the Nazis never had a factory in such deplorable condition. But it is not necessary for you to go there as the factory's poison gasses reaches your very own office at Auschwitz which is situated close to the former Nazi brothel."

And I must say here that this is in fact Block 24.

Q. I am not asking you to say. Please read that.

A. Which the inmates used.

Q. Just read that, Mr. Felderer. {3256|3257}

A. "In case of urgency I suggest you to put on a gas mask immediately. You may collect one at the private Museum displays in Block 24. Please be sure that it has the special 'J' filter. The poison at Auschwitz is deadly. You need to take the upmost precautions. My package of hair to you is a very personal proof of the fact that I am being gassed to death. Should you doubt it, I beg your experts to analyze it. I am therefore donating this private gift to you with the hope of that countless of your Museum's avid onlookers may gaze at it in wonder and give a solemn prayer in memory of a victim doomed to extinction due to environmental poison gassing."

Q. All right. May I stop you there for a minute?

A. Well, may I continue?

Q. After I ask my question.

A. This is a very important part. We should not try to delete anything.

Q. Oh, we are not going to delete anything, I can assure you. This package of hair, I wonder if you'd say that if you didn't intend that hair be attached to it.

A. That is not what you said, my dear friend. You said whether I had mailed this. And obviously, if you read it, and I read it, very obviously we want people to mail things in.

Q. You want the hair attached to it.

A. Attached to it. They can perhaps put it in, in the envelope. I don't know. You have to ask. Each one uses his own imagination. I think we are people with imagination. {3257|3258}

Q. We certainly are.

A. Now, can I read on?

THE COURT: Yes. By all means.

A. "With much respect for your stupendous task and your deep concern for gassed victims, I hereby solemnly, and prayerfully, deliver my hair to your loving and tender care. May it inspire you and all your visitors to a multitude of silent moments and intense meditations."

And then it is signed, "A victim whose days are numbered". And then, at the bottom, it says —

Q. It is anonymous, is it?

A. You mean the signature?

Q. Yeah.

A. Yes. And then, below it says, "Always include this list when mailing your sample. Get our special bulletins by sending us US $20. Also order more of this special flier."

Q. Also which, I'm sorry?

A. "Order more of this special flyer" Then it says, "For further details about the phony hair exhibited at Auschwitz and elsewhere, [sic] and for a general discussion, see: RH301..." some bulletins which we and others have published. And then it goes on and says, "About the fake soap purporting to be pure Jewish fat see ..." these documents.

Q. Why would you make reference in there about fake soap? Is there any other reference in there to fake soap?

A. Yes. It says on here, "Pure Jewish fat", it says here. And that comes from allega-{3258|3259}tions which were made by —

Q. What else does it say?

A. — by the Zionists that the Nazis had produced soap from corpses of human beings.

Q. What else does it say?

A. And Auschwitz Museum was one of the places where this was exhibited at the beginning, but is no longer today because they admit that it is a fake.

Q. It says, "Pure Jewish Fat Scent: Hungarian Jews Auschwitz gas chambers 1940"?

A. Well, whoever wrote that probably doesn't know that there were no — the buildings which allegedly somebody was gassed in them, 1940.

Q. So you say that wasn't written by you?

A. No. Whoever did that probably got wrong information from the exterminationists. From '42 and '43. Now, I read from the second page. This is, by the way, our most liked flyer, one of them:

"International Fraternity of Garbage Collectors For A Poison Free World". "The below given, highly acclaimed museums and addresses are in permanent need of documentary evidence and museum exhibits. They would highly appreciate if you could send them any documentary garbage that you may possess so that they can complete and extend their princely exhibits. May we suggest the following items to be considered to be sent to the distinguished gentlemen at your speediest convenience:

Pulled teeth (exhibited as authentic samples from gassed victims), dust, dust from vacuum cleaners, scrap paper, broken spectacles (exhibited as proof of gassed and clobbered victims), cut nails {3259|3260} (Nazi examples of pulling nails), used toothbrushes and toothpicks, dirty socks, cigarette butts, used chewing gum, used snuff (snuff cans are exhibited at Auschwitz), fish bones, meat bones, chicken bones and other bones, tin cans (exhibited as containing Zyklon B), old cloth (exhibited as being the cloths of former inmates), old shoes, soap rests (will be exhibited as 'Pure Jewish Fat'), dead lice (in memory of former friends or enemies — depending on which side you were on), potato, orange, and apple peelings (as evidence for starved victims), worn out bedpans (in memory of when Mr. Smolen used to chase around with them in the Hospital just by 'gas chamber' No. 3 at Birkenau), additional bedpans (in memory of when Dr. Szymanski used to administer his loving and tender care to the patients in the 'death camp'), bundles of swastikas (in appreciation .of the fact that Czech, Smolen Szymanski, Pilichewski, Filip Muller, S. Wiesenthal, J. Wiczerek, Kania and legions of others collaborated with the Nazis) — and countless of other precious items: You name them — They take them![""]

And then it says on the top here:

"Please send us all your junks. We need them for our authentic exhibits and documentation!" And then below it says, "The extermination outlets are in constant need of your precious gifts. Do not disappoint them. Send your garbage to them at once! They will thank you for it." That completes the top portion of this flyer. Now, the lower part says this:

"Dear Gentlemen And Distinguished Members Of The International Fraternity Of Garbage Collectors: My personal free gift to your museum and {3260|3261} documentary depot. As one of the millions of gassed victims on this earth due to environmental poisoning, I want to donate this sample to be displayed at your permanent exhibits. I also feel that they should fulfill your most stringent requirements as documentary evidence. In fact, I know of nothing as authentic as this amidst all your present exhibits and documents.

I understand that you are in the humanitarian work of collecting priceless memories of unfortunate and destitute victims. May this small token on my part spur you to renewed efforts in this honourable and timeless task. It is my sincere hope that I in the future will be able to make additional contributions by means of my authentic and priceless samples so that you can use them in your world acclaimed exhibits."

And then it's signed, "A Person Who Does Not Regret To Share His Troubles And Precious Possessions With Those In Need". And then you find various addresses below. One goes to Leon Poliakov of the Jewish Documentation Centre in France, Paris. Then one goes to the exterminationist outlet, Mr. Wiczorek, who works for an outfit in Poland with monuments, preserving monuments. I do not know whether he has preserved that or this. Then we have Czeslaw Pilichowski, who works for the Commission of investigating Nazi crimes, and he has a tremendous museum there, and I have been told he has taken great care of the various samples which has been mailed, and he specializes in making fantasy stories about the terribleness of certain things and how much Katyn was in the process of the Germans and not by the Soviets. And also he tells stories about how good {3261|3262} the communists are. In other words, it's a communist KGB outfit. Then we have Martin Broszat, Institute fuer Zeitgeschichte. He later admitted that there were no gassings in Dachau and other places inside German territory. Then we have our very dear friend, Gideon Hausner, who had a show trial against many people at Yad Vashem, and that's the place whom we communicated with.

THE COURT: Is this all part of the document?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, it is, Your Honour.

Q. That's a list of people who you are suggesting samples be sent to, is that right?

A. These are some of the very important addresses, yes. And they do collect everything.

Q. Hausner is the prosecutor of Eichmann?

A. You don't let me read the rest.

Q. I'm sorry. I thought you were through. You read all you want. Read the whole thing.

A. Then we have Edward Dziadosz, who was the director of Maidanek Museum and still is. He took the job from a fellow called Grun (ph) [Gryn] who was unfortunately too much drunk. Then we have the famous Simon Wiesenthal who chases all over the world to convict according to his choosing. Then we have the Anne Frank Museum who has exhibits with respect to a girl who allegedly wrote a diary. I published a book about it.

Q. How much is it? {3262|3263}

A. Well, you can get it free.

Q. Don't count on it.

A. Then we have the specialist commission on the Holocaust who specialize in their own kind. Then we have a fellow here, a clown, hope you realize that. And I say, "I am an exterminationist specialist. Kindly send your documents to all of our addresses. You will be remembered for it."

Beautiful Voltair[e] satire, according to my own taste, you see. I hope you permit me having my own taste.

Q. Oh, certainly, Mr. Felderer. You can have your own taste. Why would you print that under the title, "Jewish Information"?

A. Well, I was evicted from a synagogue in Stockholm, accused for spreading false propaganda, and I felt that that was a very nasty thing, because I behaved decently. I have always been kind to people. I never was discourteous to anybody. I let everybody have their peace of mind, but I want to have the right of my peace of mind, and they were not – they didn't agree with it. So I was virtually kicked out. And then I decided, well, we have to help them. We have to help them understand this is not the right way to treat people, so we started with Jewish information and produced various pamphlets about the religious part. You have to remember I was a former Jehovah's Witness specializing in converting so-called Zionists to become Jehovah's Witnesses.

Q. Are Zionists and Jews the same thing? {3263|3264}

A. No. Here again it is a total confusion and semantics. Everybody is throwing words at each other.

Q. You seem to be equating the two.

A. No. There are Christian Zionists. Encyclopaedias have classification. You have communist Zionists who support the Zionist theory, and we believe the Zionists were wrong, so we published many booklets, translated many booklets and distributed them world-wide to show that they have stolen Palestine from the Palestinians. It is a stolen country.

Q. Well, you didn't print this under the heading, "Zionist Information". You printed it under the heading, "Jewish Information".

A. We had printed it under many headings. You probably don't know how variable we are. So we probably have Zionist inform[ati]on. As I was a former Jehovah's Witness, I also published material under "Jehovah's Witnesses Information". Very interesting articles. And about the Catholics. We also published articles in reference to the alleged bones and hair which they say belongs to saints. And then we ask Jehovah's Witnesses, used to mock our opponents and said, "Our hair is as authentic as that hair which you have." In other words, we are trying to be versatile. And Bible Researchers is another title we have.

Q. Do you versatily attack everyone?

A. Attack everybody?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, we are friends with everybody. {3264|3265}

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: "We try to be friends with everybody."

THE WITNESS: We are friends with everybody. And that includes you, too.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I have a photocopy. Can you tell me whether you identify that or not?

A. It is a very poor photocopy. I must say that you should try to get a better photocopier. It says, "Media Alert".

Q. Before you read it, can you identify that as something emanating from your office in Sweden?

A. This, what I can see from it now, this was one of the flyers which I was charged under, and I was charged of having written, but the case is now under appeal at the Court of Strassburg and it is one of the items I am not actually allowed to speak about.

THE COURT: We will allow you to speak about it here.

THE WITNESS: Oh, yes. Oh, well, it's very nice. So I am denying the fact that – and am still denying the fact of having produced it.

Q. You're under oath.

A. Yes.

Q. And you deny you produced that.

A. Yes.

Q. Or distributed it.

A. Yes. {3265|3266}

Q. You can tell us that you are not lying about that. Not that you are refusing to answer; you are denying that you produced it.

A. Well, I think I happen to know who wrote that, so that is why. But I am not saying the person's name.

Q. All right. And was that distributed by you?

A. This was distributed by, I suppose, by people who wanted to make a point.

Q. Were you one of those people, Mr. Felderer?

A. I am not one of those people, unfortunately for your sake.

Q. The address on this pamphlet, though, is the address on —

A. That is to say, when I was gazing on your papers there, I think you have the explanation for that right there.

Q. Well, perhaps you can give it to me.

A. Anybody we believe in a free speech. And we fight for everyone's right to say whatever they want. It is like Voltaire who said, "I may hate what you say, but I will fight to death to fight for your right to say what you want to say." We keep this premise and we, on the basis of European Human Rights, we think that is the most cherishable thing is the freedom of speech, the right for people to say and feel what they want, and accusations that can be met with counter statements.

Q. It's a moving speech, Mr. Felderer. {3266|3267} My question is whether that was from your office.

A. Well, I answered you.

MR. CHRISTIE: He answered about three times.

THE WITNESS: I answered you and you keep on repeat your question.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What's your answer?

A. Well, I told you.

Q. What's the answer?

A. I told you again, no.

Q. Well, why does it have your address on it?

A. This is what I said, that everybody should use our address. Another very good reason, is —

Q. Everyone should use your address.

A. Now, wait. Don't interrupt me I when I speak. Another very important thing is this, that a lot of this material is published in communist countries. If they were to publish their address or their name, they get a conviction of twenty years' imprisonment, and[ ]perhaps even a death sentence. Do you understand that?

Q. Well, I'm listening. Go ahead.

A. So our suggestion has been that instead of these people being imprisoned or even lose their head or being thrown into mental institutions, which is a very common thing, Solzhenitsyn, Kataroo, we can list them all, they can use other addresses and other means so communication can be maintained, and in {3267|3268} this way we have a sort of a worldwide communication reaching from Africa, we have in Japan, the Orient, and our fliers are distributed — somebody might have a point I use, I have a point somebody else use, and so forth.

Q. All right. Did you publish a series of pamphlets entitled, "Children"?

A. We have also a very nice section of fliers which are predominantly goes to children, because we believe that it's very important to get children involved before they get too brainwashed by the Zionists, so we try to grab them before they get that much brainwashed, and so we publish fliers to children, yes. And we distribute it to children. And we found they like them. As a matter of fact, I can tell you that in Poland alone I have seen lines from here to the end of this building, all interested in these fliers, because we have and our friends have pasted them on the walls in Poland, and there was a great excitement and enjoyment over it and everybody was happy about it.

Q. Is this. one of the fliers you send to children under the heading —

A. This is one of them, yes. Well, no. Let me just look at it now. It appears. to be, yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he says it appears to be. I am satisfied.

THE COURT: Yes. That is the next {3268|3269} exhibit.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 43.

— EXHIBIT NO. 43: Flyer "Children".

THE WITNESS: That's the flyer there which mentions that anybody can use our address, the first one which is in that bundle.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, you mentioned before, Mr. Felderer — I showed you a flyer and you said, no, that wasn't part of your office so it wasn't right on the two sides — I am showing you now a photocopy of one side. Did that represent a photocopy of something that came out of your office?

A. A photocopy. You mean if this is photocopy, or if it represents a photocopy?

Q. Is it a photocopy of something coming out of your office?

A. It's neither.

Q. All right. Have you ever seen anything like that before?

A. This was one of the fliers which was produced at the show trial against me at the latest trial and produced in evidence against me and which I have appeal to the International Court, and which I have good reasons to believe I am going to be acquitted and win.

Q. All right. Is that distributed by you?

A. No.

Q. It's not distributed by you. {3269|3270}

A. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: How many times does he have to answer the same question?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am asking him about the flyer.

MR. CHRISTIE: He said "No" once. My friend asks it again.

THE WITNESS: Well, I can say no forever.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, was it written by you?

A. No. I said that also. And as I said, this is not Swedish paper.

Q. I am not saying it is. I am saying it is a photocopy, Mr. Felderer.

Can you identify that flyer?

A. Yes. This seems to be one of our more popular fliers which people are frequently asking, and which I understand is repeatedly reproduced by others.

Q. All right. And was that written by you?

A. This one was written by me, yes.

Q. And distributed?

A. This one was distributed not by me, but by certain people who we give the material to, and it was distributed.

Q. That is also under the heading, "Jewish Information"?

A. Yes. This one is under the {3270|3271} heading "Jewish Information". It's a very interesting flyer. I recommend you to read it thoroughly.

Q. Oh, I have.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Next exhibit, please?

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 44.

— EXHIBIT NO. 44: Flyer, "Jewish Information".

MR. GRIFFITHS: This is entitled, "Jewish Information[ ]". There is a number on it, "Our reference RH360".

Q. Is Mr. Zundel on your mailing list?

A. No. In the sense of a permanent mailing list, we don't have it. We have a mailing list spontaneously we mail out material. I'm sure that many — well, if you want to know the facts, we give, mail out addresses. We have address lists which we publish, and people whom we believe should be happy in receiving this information which we feel is good news. We mail these address lists out to them, and then, often, this material is distributed. You see, much of this has to be done the underground way, as I said in communist countries they have all kinds of show trials reminiscent of a particular trial at this moment.

Q. I beg your pardon, sir?

A. Well, I said they have all kinds of show trials.

Q. You said reminiscent of a particular trial at this moment. What are you talking about?

A. I am talking about the fact that {3271|3272} everybody should have the right of freedom of speech, and they should not be put in front of a court of this nature.

Q. What particular trial are you talking about?

A. Well, my own trial, which is certainly a show trial.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. You said you felt you were spreading good news. Why is that?

A. Well, as Jehovah's Witness, we were spreading good news. We refer to Matthew twenty-four fourteen and we say the good news of the Kingdom will inhabit the nations and then the end will come. That is the text. And when I was to learn that six million people had not been gassed, I assumed out of my naivete that people should be very happy about knowing that this was not the case. And so we distributed this good news, and we hope that people will, accordingly, feel the same way. I would feel very happy if somebody had told me that my father was alive if I had thought he was dead. That's good news to me. {3272|3273}

Q. You mentioned Katyn and you said that some people had said that the Germans had done it. Where did you get that information from?

A. The present Polish government alleges that it is the Germans who did it, but the Poles themselves, as in everything else of the government, they believe the exact opposite. But it's alleged by the Polish Government that it was the Germans who committed the massacre at Katyn, and I tell you, that this is one of the reasons why I was imprisoned in Poland, because I had distributed a pamphlet which said that it was the Soviets who had massacred the Polish officers. And for this I was put into the dungeon and interrogated for two weeks.

Q. It was brought out by the Crown that you sought a debate with Dr. Hilberg. Why did you have a desire to debate with Dr. Hilberg?

A. Well, this so-called Holocaust expert, they never dare facing an opponent. They elaborate with their beautiful titles and try to impress people with their titles.

Now, Dr. Hilberg, I made a lot of investigations about him inside Poland. Now, why would a man, I wondered, who has written such a book, he must have really done a lot of research inside Poland. So that I ask the Auschwitz official, Mr. Smolen, to check whether Mr. Hilberg had ever been. And they done studies. After all, I have been tracking these places for days and weeks and I would say most —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not that it matters, Your Honour, but it is going to be hearsay whatever his {3273|3274} answer will be.

THE COURT: Yes. He can give his answer.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So why did you want to debate with Mr. Hilberg?

A. Because I knew it was evident that the man was a hoax, and the only way to bring that out was a confrontation where the public themselves could decide, without any editing, but decide on a live debate whether Dr. Hilberg could substantiate his claims. And a man who has only been in this camp except one time, he is a fake. He is a hoax from the very beginning to end.

Q. My friend asked you about the theatre for the prisoners. And I think His Honour asked you whether it was for the prisoners. How do you know the prisoners had access to that theatre?

A. The theatre is mentioned in certain exterminationist books as being a theatre. It is also mentioned that they played such plays as Faust, the German play Faust. That's one way. Then the other way is to try to get into the building and see what one finds there. And that is a job in itself, but I was able to get inside the building and also speak to the caretaker of the building, who allowed me inside the building. And then I could, with my own eyes, see the instruments. There are instruments in there today. And the stage where the performers performed their plays, they sung songs and other things. And also the room where they had their costumes for this various place. The prisoners wore costumes in order to identify them-{3274|3275}selves with the different personalities in this place. And they had a special room for saving these costumes in this building. It's the second — perhaps it is the largest building, but I say it is more likely the second largest building in the camp after the kitchen. And of course, I was very much surprised why the two largest buildings should be the kitchen — after all, people were supposed to be exterminated — and the second largest building was the theatre. I mean, I got all screwed up in my head. I simply tried to figure out, I mean, how can this, you know — it was difficult. I just couldn't get hold of it, before I realized, eventually, that this probably is not true, the extermination theory.

Q. You were asked about your religious background, and in the course of it you mentioned that you had been evicted from the synagogue. Had you attempted to be accepted in the synagogue?

A. Yes. I made a special attempt to go there at the Yum Kippur. That's the day when they give you allowance to tell any lie you want for a whole year ahead. And that's the prayer which is given inside at that day. And that allows you for one year's freedom of saying any lie you want. And I just always wanted to be assured that this [sic] lies were still being perpetrated in the synagogue, and they are still done. The Kolmedy (ph) prayer is still said although I realize some are against that it should it be said, but in most synagogues it is still said.

Q. And you were there?

A. Yes. I was present. {3275|3276}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: You can step down.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of the fact that it is quarter to one, Your Honour ...

THE COURT: Yes. Two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 12:45 p.m.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, over the lunch hour I would just like to say before we break that I propose to make Exhibit "P", "Nazi Concentration Camps", the words to go with the movie, which is another exhibit, I propose to make it an exhibit. It was referred to by counsel for the accused to one of his witnesses.

In the event that there is going to be argument over that, I will hear it at two fifteen.

— Luncheon adjournment.

(VOLUME XV FOLLOWS) {3276|3277}

VOLUME XV

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I would like to proceed to call my next witness.

THE COURT: Yes. Is there anything about that lettered exhibit that you wish to say?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. As I said earlier, it may be that I might want to take issue with it as to its content at a later date, but I don't think that has anything to do with its admissibility.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content, Your Honour.

THE COURT: The next exhibit, please.

— EXHIBIT NO. 45: Copy of various affidavits and narrative of "Nazi Concentration Camps" film.

— The jury enters. 2:25 p.m.

ERNEST NIELSEN, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

{3277|3278}

Q. Are you Ernest Nielsen born on the 8th of August, 1918?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you a pilot licensed by the General of the Luftwaffe on the 22nd of May, 1949?

A. That's correct.

Q. And is this you military pilot's licence issued on that occasion?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And you've read the contents and it depicts your own particulars?

A. Yes, I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Have you seen it, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you describe how it was that you came to be a prisoner of war?

A. I was a pilot in the German Air Force. I was assigned to an air and sea rescue unit which also served medical purposes. I started from Amsterdam to look for a downed description of a Heinkel [Heinkel] 111, four people. We were given a square. We took off from Amsterdam.

Q. What date?

A. The 1st of July, 1940.

Q. Yes.

A. We arrived early in the morning. We started to search. {3278|3279}

Q. What were you flying in?

A. It was a Heinkel 59.

Q. How was it decorated?

A. It was painted white. It showed Red Cross on the wings.

Q. Was it armed?

A. It was not armed, no. Of course not.

Q. Who was the pilot?

A. I was the pilot.

Q. What happened?

A. We were, shortly after the beginning of the search —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Mr. Nielsen. Your Honour, I don't know what it is that Mr. Nielsen is going to say, but I have some question as to the relevance of this, whatever it may be, to the pamphlet.

THE COURT: So far he is flying a Heinkel aircraft, and it's 1940 and he is looking for a downed Heinkel bomber, I think.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is what I have, Your Honour.

THE COURT: A little premature, aren't you?

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right, sir.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So you were flying a Red Cross decorated aircraft.

A. We had started a search. We were flying at low altitude. There were three. All of a sudden, more or less, three fighters with British {3279|3280} markings were circling us, and they turned in to shoot. And of course, we being a very slow old plane, went down immediately. We were not out of control. I put the plane down — it was a float plane — on the sea, and the plane started to sink because as the book says, they shot twenty-five hundred rounds at us. We were picked up hours later by a British warship, the Black Swan, and we were landed in Middlesbrough.

Q. This incident was referred to in a book, I understand?

A. Yes. I took some information out of that book. That's right.

Q. And that book is called, "The Battle of Britain"; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you were taken prisoner after being shot down in an unmarked [marked] Red Cross aircraft?

A. Yes.

Q. You were a prisoner of war, then, after the War; is that right?

A. Until '47, yes.

Q. Were you ever forced to work after you were captured?

A. I was forced to work —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Same objection.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, would you excuse us until I find out a few things here.

— The jury retires. 2:30 p.m. {3280|3281}

THE COURT: Go ahead. You were forced to work, yes.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I was forced to work after I returned to England in 1946.

THE COURT: You were forced to work after you returned to England in 1946, is that what you said?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Were you still a prisoner?

A. I was a prisoner of war. I was detained there. I worked on roads and rail. I worked in April and May on vegetable farms.

Q. You were not paid?

A. We were not paid for it, no.

THE COURT: Is this after the War?

THE WITNESS: After 1946, yes.

THE COURT: All right. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And how long did that last?

A. I was then assigned the job as a medical orderly in one of the camps, near Neaton, so I just had the job of taking sick reports, presenting them to the doctor, distributing —

Q. How long were you obliged to work without being paid?

A. From early '46, which would be March. Yes. We were transferred in March to middle of summer, so this was, would be about four, five months.

Q. And were you ever transported as a prisoner in cattle cars? {3281|3282}

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Where and for how long?

A. On return to Germany, in Kugshaven [Cuxhaven] (phonetic) we were on board, we were put on cattle cars and on the trip to Munsenlager [Munsterlager] it is normally a three-hour trip, but it took us from early afternoon till midmorning the next day. This was in February '47.

Q. Were they heated cattle cars?

A. Oh, no. It was minus twenty-three centigrades outside.

Q. Minus twenty-three centigrades.

A. Yes. Which is ten or so Fahrenheit, minus.

Q. While you were a prisoner of war were people shot?

A. There was a break in Angler on the 19th of April, 1941. Angler is just north of Lake Superior, close to the CPR line.

THE COURT: What was the name of the place?

THE WITNESS: Angler. There was a break. Twenty-eight got out through a tunnel. Most of these were back the next morning. There was a snowstorm during the night and it was just necessary for the guards to follow the footsteps. Two of them were shot dead. There was one group of five, they had stayed together, and they were shot up. Two of them were dead.

THE COURT: Were you there? —

THE WITNESS: I was again medical orderly in the hospital and I was there when they were {3282|3283} brought in the next morning.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, where is all this leading?

MR. CHRISTIE: It shows, first of all, the use of cattle cars for the transportation of people other than Jews. It shows the use of cattle cars for transportation by the Allies. It shows the conditions that were applied in terms of slave labour after the War to those who were previously prisoners of war. It puts in perspective all the evidence of the survivors. I intended to introduce other evidence to show the conditions of the railroad that would put an alternative explanation for some of the delays involved in transporting prisoners to various parts of Germany, especially towards the end of the War.

That's the relevance of the evidence. It shows that in this particular War there were no particular rules pertaining to good behaviour. The rules of War were frequently more in the breach than the observance — shooting down a marked Red Cross aircraft is contrary to the rules of war. It just puts in perspective the position of the survivors who have testified earlier.

THE COURT: Is there anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, that is all the evidence I am dealing with at the moment. Did you wish me to reveal everything I intend to lead from the witness and then Your Honour can tell me what I can lead?

THE COURT: Yes, please. {3283|3284}

MR. CHRISTIE: You wish me to tell you everything that I wish to lead from the witness?

THE COURT: Well, it is no secret. The jury isn't here. If you don't want to do that, you don't have to.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I also intend to lead evidence of his taking a Holocaust course at the University of Toronto in which the questions were raised as to the existence of a Hitler order, in 1979, and his efforts to find out if there was one, and the consequences of asking questions in that course as to the existence of and the production of a Hitler or Himmler or other order in support of the allegation that six million did die, and further remarks to the effect that it was well documented. When the question was asked by the witness in the course of the course, he was kicked out. And that, I will be trying to lead before the jury to demonstrate that what happens to people even in an academic sense when they wish to have evidence or documents to support the allegation in respect of the six million Jews being gassed. And that's the purpose of that evidence.

And then I intend also to lead evidence {3284|3285} that this witness did research that, he communicated with certain people in respect to the Holocaust. He communicated with Albert Speer and he provided information to Ernst Zundel from these sources, that he consulted with Ernst Zundel how to solve his problem with respect to his course at the University of Toronto, where he had been employed for eighteen years at the University of Toronto. He took this course late in life. He provided information in the form of books and other material from Reitlinger and Hilberg to Ernst Zundel. And that I intended to lead from him.

THE COURT: Yes. All right. I've got the drift of it. Why do you say that a prisoner of war in World War II who witnessed only part of an escape from a prisoner of war camp in northern Ontario is permitted to give evidence about how the British had him work for three months from 1946 onwards, how is that possibly relevant to whether or not six million Jews were exterminated by the Nazis in World War II?

MR. CHRISTIE: One of the theories that the Crown has already begun to advance is that it's not a matter of gas chambers, but it's slave labour, the working conditions, working people to death. {3285|3286} The transportation of cattle cars, it has all been brought out for a purpose. I didn't object to it because I am sure the Crown has some reason for bringing it out. It is part of their argument.

My argument in response to that is that many people were transported by cattle cars, German people were transported by the German Government in cattle cars. This is not what this witness has to say. This witness is saying that they were transported by the Allies in cattle cars.

THE COURT: By the Allies.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. That is what this witness says.

THE COURT: Thank you. I may call on you. What do you have to say, Mr. Griffiths? I don't know that I need to hear you about the being shot down and things like that. What about the other subjects that Mr. Christie intends to lead with respect to the Holocaust?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, concerning a course that Mr. Nielsen took in 1979, and I understand the outcome of his asking questions at that course – Your Honour, I am trying, we are trying, {3286|3287} all of us in the courtroom, one thing at a time. I don't know the circumstances behind Mr. Nielsen's classroom events, and even if Mr. Nielsen were to tell me his side of the story of those things, does that mean that I will have to call the professor and the other people [sic] to give the other side of the story and we are off onto a collateral issue?

Maybe I am just missing something, Your Honour. It wouldn't be the first time, but I don't see how evidence of what happened to Mr. Nielsen in a course has anything to do with the truth or falsehood of the two exhibits before the court, and whether or not Mr. Zundel published those exhibits, or whether or not those exhibits would cause mischief, which are the issues before the court on the charges.

I don't see how that is in any way relevant to any of those issues, even peripherally. If Mr. Nielsen provided some information to Mr. Zundel of a research nature which Mr. Zundel used in forming his belief, then that type of evidence we discussed before and is admissible is going to be a basis for Mr. Zundel's belief, but the other matters, Your Honour, don't see any ground for it in that they are irrelevant. {3287|3288}

RULING

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I think what I am going to do in this situation is this.

The ruling insofar as his evidence is concerned about being shot down and then, after the War was completed, riding in a cattle car from one place to another, and working without pay for two or three months, is now ruled by me to be totally irrelevant to the issues this jury must try. With respect to the balance, including his version of the break-out where the people were shot undoubtedly they probably would be shot if they were trying to break out as prisoners of war; everybody knows that – that is not the issue this jury is trying.

Insofar as the Holocaust is concerned, I think what I want you to do, if you will, is to lead this witness through it and let me carefully see what he has to say. Then I will make my ruling on that.

There are one or two elements that I have heard already that are relevant, and may go to the jury. There may be others. I would not want to miss those.

———{3288|3289}

MR. CHRISTIE: By the Holocaust matter I suppose you mean the Holocaust course?

THE COURT: The course he took in 1979.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I lead the witness?

THE COURT: Certainly.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Nielsen, I understand – you were an employee at the University of Toronto for many years?

A. On the staff of the University of Toronto.

Q. What did you do?

A. I was in the department of chemistry in the electronic shop. So maintenance, building, designing of laser systems and so on.

Q. And you took a course at the University of Toronto in the Holocaust?

A. There is provision for the staff to enroll in the course with the permission of the supervisor.

Q. So you got permission and enrolled?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the course of this class you {3289|3290} asked a question to someone, is that right?

A. A statement was made by the lecturer. Do you want to know what happened?

Q. Yes. In view of the fact the jury is absent, you can tell us.

A. There was a main lecture attended by a hundred students, so the professor has to go through the course without any questions, but during the tutorial which takes place at some later time, with a small group, questions should be asked. So I asked them during the tutorial, Professor Kohnberg (phonetic) [Kornberg] about the statement he made after saying several times that everything is well documented. And he said this. In 1942 the order for the extermination of all Jews came, in 1942. This was a statement. During the tutorial I asked Professor Kohnberg, "Do you have a source for this? Are there documents?" And he looked at me. So I asked him, "Did the order come from Hitler, from Eichmann, [Eichmann] from Goering, from Himmler? Who was it?" There was another exchange of question and answer there. And then he said, "If you do not accept the premise of this course that six million Jews were murdered by the Germans, I don't want you on this course." So I was out of the course.

Q. And did you consult with Ernst Zundel about that problem?

A. Not at this time, no.

Q. Later?

A. I became aware of it later. At first I wrote a report to the President of the University {3290|3291} and he just – with the full description of the proceedings.

Q. That was a letter of November 9th, '79, is that right?

A. Yes. He just acknowledged my letter and did not indicate that he was going to take any steps, investigation or what. So I asked him again, "Will you please advise me whether you are going to take any steps?" And he then delegated the vice-president to investigate. And he then gave it to the Dean of Science. He then investigated for three months and the finding was, since I was auditing the course, Professor Kohnberg was well authorized or entitled to expel me. I pointed out, in between, that my request was to have my question answered, and I was told, even when only auditing the course, that I could take part in the conversation and ask questions.

So my question whether he had a source for a statement, that a certain order came from 1942, was never answered. I know now that there wasn't such an order.

Q. Did you attempt to take this course again?

A. The next year I enrolled, and this time, since I had my papers there, I was properly registered instead of just auditing. Something similar happened there. The lecturer was Professor Mar[r]us. I had the feeling now that he provoked an argument. I was quite determined to go through the course, go along and see what the description is of the actually exter- {3291|3292}mination in Germany. So before he came to the extermination phase, there was an argument and I was expelled again.

Q. Did you go to see Ernst Zundel about this?

A. At that time I informed him about it.

Q. How did you know about him?

A. I knew about him for probably a couple of years before that. He was in the news at the time.

Q. And he was in the news for what reason?

A. I guess it was because of distributing pamphlets. I had been active before that. I talked to Albert Speer in 1979 in Heidelberg, Germany, so I am not sure now what the occasion was that I got in touch with Ernst Zundel.

Q. And did he try to help you to solve this problem?

A. Yes, he did. He offered help, and we talked – that is Zundel, another gentleman and I saw Professor Spelt. (phonetic)

Q. Did he go to see the Dean with you?

A. No. We never talked to the Dean.

Q. He went to see a professor with you, is that right?

A. I think he was – maybe he was officially in charge of this. Maybe it was his job to handle this situation. {3292|3293}

Q. Who?

A. Professor Spelt.

Q. No. I asked about Ernst Zundel. What did he do?

A. Well, he was spokesman in a way for my case. I am not a speaker. I am not good at presenting a case. So maybe I ask for his help.

THE COURT: With whom, sir?

THE WITNESS: With professor Spelt at the University of Toronto in the Department of Arts and Science, U of T.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So Ernst Zundel acted as your spokesman in that matter.

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Isn't there something about this witness having supplied your client with information?

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, yes. That did come out.

Q. You provided information to Mr. Zundel about Speer and Letenzer? (phonetic) [Latenser]

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Letters from Speer?

A. I may have shown them to him, yes. I still have them in my possession. They are not here now.

Q. Who is Letenzer?

A. Letenzer was a defence attorney {3293|3294} during the Auschwitz Trial, 1964, '65, in Frankfurt, Germany.

Q. You communicated with him for the purpose of the inquiry?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Where did you get information about Letenzer?

A. I bought his book.

Q. And you gave that to. Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And in respect to books by Reitlinger and Hilberg, did you provide these to Mr. Zundel?

A. I think I gave him the Hilberg book. The Reitlinger book I don't have. I didn't get. It's out of print.

MR. CHRISTIE Those are my questions. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS: (Voir Dire)

Q. You provided Mr. Zundel with letters from – I'm sorry, with Letenzer's book?

A. Hilberg's book.

Q. Hilberg's book. What did you give him that had anything to do with Letenzer? Did you give him anything?

A. No. Well, I have the book at {3294|3295} home, and I think Mr. Zundel has his own book there.

Q. All right. And you said you gave him something that had to do with Speer?

A. I informed him about my exchange of letters, and I also visited Speer before his death in Heidelberg, Germany, and he is informed about that.

Q. Okay. What was your argument with Professor Mar[r]jus?

A. I can only recall what led to him saying that he didn't want me on the course. Again, it was the tutorial. The whole Holocaust course is a course on the history of Jewish people, so it starts twenty-five hundred years ago, and it's interesting. I have a lot of notes on it. I learned a lot. When it came down to the War, the Second World War, during the tutorial his question was, "Why would Hitler declare War on the United States?" And he solicited answers and there was no answer. I said then, "Well, I could imagine two reasons, one of them being that he could then sink American shipping without warning, otherwise it would be neutral shipping and rules would have to be observed. And the other reason was that maybe he felt like declaring War on the States, which is a very weak argument. I don't know.["]

Q. And as a result of that Professor Mar[r]jus said, "Maybe you would be interested in another course"?

A. Well, this is now four years ago, and there was an exchange of question and answers there. And it was between him and me, and looking back, to me {3295|3296} it looked very much like he wanted me out. He wanted to provoke me into an argument until he finally said, "Mr. Nielsen, this is your undoing. I don't want you in this course."

Q. I see.

A. So I had the definite impression that anybody who is critical of the whole thing – by that time I was critical. I started going to the courses to find out what is the evidence for the deliberate murder of six million Jewish men, women and children. By that time I had been, become aware that documentation and so forth had been lacking there. I had been looking for documentation of the origin of the six million figure. I couldn't find it. So by that time I was critical.

Q. The argument between you and Professor Mar[r]jus was about the United States declaring War – I'm sorry, Germany declaring War on the United States.

A. Yes.

Q. And the correspondence with Albert Speer, what was that about?

A. He had only about twenty minutes or half an hour, and the crucial question that I remember was this, if I may fill you in. Maybe you know.

Q. Please, sir.

A. He was charged in Nuremberg with using slave labour. He pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to twenty years. He served these twenty years. He was about at about sixty-five. I read his book. I found out his address. I wrote to him. He {3296|3297} said if I could come to Germany, to give him a phone call and look him up. So this happened in '79. My question then was, were there gas chambers in Auschwitz, a very direct question. And his answer was in these words, "I did not know about them until Nuremberg."

Q. Okay. Same thing he says in his book.

A. Well, he repeated the same thing and said it on television also.

Q. Many times.

A. I think he spoke the truth.

Q. Is there anything else for Mr. Speer, correspondence with him?

A. No.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a couple of other points I have been advised of that I should cover.

FURTHER EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE: (Voir Dire)

Q. Did you provide Gitta Sereny's article about the Holocaust and revisionism to Mr. Zundel?

A. There was an article in ["The Statesman"] and about the Holocaust. If this is the article, then I showed it to him.

Q. Did you pre-read all kinds of books and information and make them in precis form available to Mr. Zundel? {3297|3298}

A. I have shared the books that I found were of interest, of help, or help to him, I have shared them with him. I have sometimes given them to him, yes.

Q. And is it the case that your own in-laws and relatives were Jewish and you had personal experience of their return after the War?

A. My wife has a Jewish grandfather. My wife was born in Hamburg, Germany, and my father has lived there all his life. He was a taylor. [sic] He was seventy years old during the War, just about, and he was asked – in '73 to report. He was taken to Theresienstadt and he returned after the War. So my wife is a quarter Jewish and my children are, well, I am not Jewish myself, but my wife has a Jewish grandfather and I have a Jewish son-in-law. I have two daughters, and at least one of them is a full Jew.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Any cross-examination arising out of that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think I have any more submissions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Any more from Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I'd suggest that the information regarding the courses, again, is irrelevant. The communication with Albert {3298|3299} Speer would be hearsay. I'd suggest that the only evidence that Mr. Nielsen could give relevant to this trial is that he discussed these matters with Mr. Zundel, shared books and articles with him, and that his wife's grandfather survived the War.

RULING

THE COURT: The jury still being absent at my request, I have heard from Mr. Ernest Nielsen about his participation with the accused and others in certain matters which the defence submits are relevant to the issues this jury must try.

I have already ruled that Mr. Nielsen's experience as a Nazi Luftwaffe pilot in World War II and his story about his aircraft with Red Cross on it being downed and his experiences concerning his being in a prison camp in northern Ontario, Canada where after a break-out certain prisoners may have been shot is irrelevant to the issues this jury must try.

I have already ruled that his recounting of how he was transported in 1946 from one place to {3299|3300} another, I gather on a single occasion, in what he refers to as a cattle car after having worked for the Allies without pay for a few months is also irrelevant to the issues this jury must try.

I specifically asked to hear further evidence that is proposed to be asked of this witness in the presence of the jury so that I could hear it in some particular clarity, and to rule upon it at the end of the cross-examination.

The witness, in essence, has stated to counsel that in 1979, after a time in the Department of Chemistry at the University of Toronto, he took a course on the Holocaust. He has sworn that that course is one which includes a history of Jewish people going back over many centuries.

He recounted how, when he took a tutorial lecture, after the main lecture to all of those in the course Mr. Nielsen took the tutorials. In the tutorial, the subject of the Jewish people as it pertained to World War II came up. He found himself in an intellectual exchange of opinion with one Dr. Kohnberg, the tutorial leader.

From what I gather from Mr. Nielsen, {3300|3301} he was making inquiries as to whether six million Jews were deliberately killed by the Germans in the Second World War, and whether or not a specific order emanated from the Nazi hierarchy, including either Hitler or Himmler, or somebody else at that level of command, to exterminate Jews. That is what the witness said at the beginning of his evidence.

He then swore he was asked to leave the course. I gather he had not really enrolled in the course that year; he was merely, as he said, auditing the course. He reported that his expulsion from the course by the professor, according to Mr. Nielsen, was because the professor said that if Mr. Nielsen did not accept the premise of the death of the six million Jews, he was not wanted in the course.

When Mr. Nielsen then joined the course again, he fared no better. The second time around, the subject matter, one of the main issues, was why Nazi Germany declared War on the United States of America. That was the subject that was discussed. More argument concerning World War II with the professor occurred.

Mr. Nielsen became somewhat vague when he was asked, in cross-examination, for the {3301|3302} precise details of the exchange that occurred between him and the professor on either occasion. He did say that the argument between himself and the professor was on the subject of Hitler declaring War on the United States. My own recollection of the event was the other way around, but that is only my recollection.

It is proposed by defence counsel that Mr. Nielsen be asked these questions. It is proposed that he also be asked about his conversation with one Albert Speer who was tried as a Nazi war criminal, convicted and sentenced to twenty years.

The evidence that this witness, through counsel, proposes to give to the jury is that Mr. Nielsen, apparently, saw Albert Speer before Speer's death in Germany. The witness put a direct question to Mr. Speer about whether or not gas chambers existed at Auschwitz. Speer is said to have replied that he did not know anything about the gas chambers until Nuremberg.

Further, there is evidence that after his difficulties with the University of Toronto in the Holocaust course, Mr. Nielsen got in touch with the accused and asked that Mr. Zundel be his spokesman {3302|3303} in a series of complaints at hearings to be heard in an intra mura [muros] basis at the University of Toronto.

The witness testified that the accused did accompany Mr. Nielsen to see a professor. Further, this witness has testified that he did not give a document on revisionism to the accused, but he showed Mr. Zundel that document. I believe he supplied the accused with Dr. Hilberg's book.

It seems to me that any conversation this witness had with Albert Speer in Germany is total hearsay and will not be admitted. For that reason [sic] it also is not particularly relevant as to Speer's knowledge regarding the existence or non-existence of gas chambers. It is not relevant to the issue the jury must try.

The witness may, if he is asked, state that he supplied Dr. Hilberg's book to Mr. Zundel. The difficulties and troubles this accused had with the Holocaust course in 1979 and the questions he put to various professors are irrelevant to the issues this jury must try. They will not be allowed into evidence.

—— {3303|3304}

THE COURT: Do you want to ask him, Mr. Christie, whether or not he supplied Dr. Hilberg's book to Mr. Zundel? If so, you may do so, otherwise, none of what I heard is relevant at all and it will not be asked.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 3:10 p.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no further questions of the witness.

THE COURT: Cross-examination?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir. You can step down.

Do you need time, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. I will try one other witness. This is a witness who has acted as translator, Your Honour, so —

THE COURT: This is the witness ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Who acted as translator.

THE COURT: Yes. For Mr. Christopherson. You are calling him as a witness. Yes.

—— {3304|3305}

HANS VON DER HEIDE, sworn.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Von der Heide, did you have occasion to be transported on German railroad facilities during the latter months of the Second World War?

A. That is correct. I was in an anti-aircraft battalion [sic] in France and we were moved from northern France into the Ukraine, and that took us about two weeks. We were moved in goat trains or cattle trucks.

Q. And what were the conditions you experienced along the German railroads at that time?

A. As far as crossing through Germany, it was all right, but as soon as we entered the territory of Poland, it became very difficult, and in front of the engine we had to push about four railroad cars loaded with some heavy material, with gravel or material of that nature. And that was a protection for the train, for the engine, because the partisans would blow up the lines; in order to protect the engine, mainly.

Q. Did it normally take you two weeks to travel that distance prior to that time?

A. No, I don't think so. It was on account of these terrible conditions in Poland that the trains had to be shunted from one place to another. So we couldn't go through this one.

THE COURT: Do we have a year for this? {3305|3306}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, could you tell us when this was?

A. This was in 1943, in the summer of 1943.

Q. And did conditions in Germany improve after that time as far as the railroads are concerned?

A. I can't say much about that, because I didn't return home except for a very short leave, until I was taken prisoner of War, which was at the end of 1944.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. von der Heide, how many men would be in one of these cattle cars?

A. I couldn't remember the exact number, but I will say about thirty of us.

Q. I see. How many died during this trip?

A. Nobody.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. No further questions.

——— {3306|3307}

THE COURT: Did you take your guns with you?

THE WITNESS: Oh, sure. It was a military transport.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Excuse me, were you transported in cattle cars where your men did die?

A. That was later on in, when I was in American captivity.

Q. Well, tell us about that when you were transported in cattle cars and men did die.

A. It was a long journey. Actually, not so long in distance but in time. From Versailles, near Paris, to Cherbourg, which is normally would be a trip of about [sic] a couple of hours, and it took us four days to get there.

Q. Did you have anything to eat at that time?

A. No. Not during the time on the road. Before the train took off in Versailles, the Americans threw out some of the what I call tea rations and can rations. They just threw them in the air for somebody to pick up, and because the road, the trip wasn't expected to last that long, we were – in other words we were fed when the train departed and not during the trip to Sherbourne, at all.

Q. Were there many men died on that {3307|3308} trip?

A. I don't know how many people died, but in the truck I was in, two of my comrades were dead before we could get out.

Q. Were you locked in the car?

A. We were completely locked up. We couldn't get out at all.

Q. Did you have water in the car?

A. We have water in jerry cans.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: A jerry can is about two and a half gallons that high with a handle on it. Isn't that about right?

THE WITNESS: Yeah. It would be a little, I think, if I remember correctly, about ten litres, something like that.

THE COURT: Any questions, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I think your coffee would be here about now.

— The jury retires. 3:15 p.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder if I can speak to you in the absence of the jury?

THE COURT: Certainly. Yes, Mr. Christie. {3308|3309}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have a witness coming from out of the country and there has been a little bit of hold-ups in the flights. I don't know if he has arrived yet, but —

THE COURT: Why don't we all have a coffee? When I come back you can tell me more. If you are in difficulty there is no problem. Common sense dictates we will adjourn until the morning.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir..

— Short adjournment.

———
— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Any luck, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. The plane apparently doesn't arrive till four fifteen. I don't think that he will be here before five.

THE COURT: I don't know that I would want to count on that neither.

Nine thirty tomorrow morning.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 13, 1985.

——— {3309|3310}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything before we start, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought I should advise Your Honour that the witness I have anticipated being able to produce from the United States arrived at seven o'clock this morning when he was expected to arrive yesterday afternoon. The flights were held up overnight and the conditions were somewhat disadvantaged by the time he had spent away, thirty hours. So I have four witnesses this morning, rather short ones. I don't expect they will be long, and I advised that witness to get some rest before this afternoon, and then I would be able to produce him.

So those are the circumstances of my position this morning, Your Honour. I advised my friend of that.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

———
— The jury enters. 9:50 a.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I'd like {3310|3311} to begin by calling Hans Schroeder, please.

HANS SCHROEDER, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Schroeder, how old are you, sir?

A. I am fifty-three years old now.

Q. And you are married and have children?

A. I am married. I am married to my second wife now. I had three children with my first wife. It's my second wife had three children before I married her.

Q. You are of German descent, sir; is that right?

A. I am of German descent.

Q. And have you known the accused, Ernst Zundel, and if so, for how long?

A. I have known Ernst Zundel since 1974.

Q. And how often do you see him?

A. I would say over the ten years that I know Mr. Zundel, fifteen to twenty times a year.

Q. And are you aware of his reputation in the community that you are familiar with?

A. Yes. I know Mr. Zundel to be law abiding, hard-working member of the community, very diligent in his research, kind and helpful to those that come and ask for help from him. {3311|3312}

Q. Do you have any knowledge of his reputation for honesty in the community?

A. Yes. I would say that he is a very honest man, but nobody can accuse him of any wrongdoings.

Q. What about his reputation for sincerity?

A. He is very sincere. Everything he writes is based on thorough research.

Q. Have you seen his library?

A. Yes. I've been in his house quite a number of times. I have been in his library. I have occasionally borrowed some of his books to read myself.

Q. How would you describe his library, sir?

A. Very thorough on the subject of political historical happenings over the last fifty years, if not longer.

Q. Could you describe what kind of books there are there in terms of any historical issues for example in relation to the Holocaust?

A. Yes. There is the full set of the Nuremberg war crimes reports, reports from the Swiss Red Cross, from writers from any part of the world that have written about the Holocaust and about the part of history in question here.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Could you tell me if he has ever helped you in respect to your children in regard to the Holocaust?

A. We had over the years and with {3312|3313} children, we had periodic problems that they were looked upon as Nazi. We had for one instance where neighbours called, "Go home you little Hitlers." We moved to a rural community about two years ago, and within the first two days one of the local children told my boy, "I'm sorry, I can't play with you because you're German."

Q. And how has Mr. Zundel helped you in respect to those types of problems?

A. Not so much personally, but by letters to the members of Parliament, to the newspapers, radio stations, TV stations. He was trying to change the thinking of the public towards the discontinuation of, in my opinion, discontinuing anti-German hate propaganda that goes on today.

Q. Are you a Nazi?

A. No. I am a German.

Q. Have your children ever displayed in your presence any symptoms of Nazism, if they can be described as that? For example, outward appearances that would lead people to accuse them of being Nazi?

A. I don't know what special appearances there are. What is a Nazi, in that sense?

Q. Have they done anything in your presence to associate you or them with any kind of Nazism at all?

A. No.

Q. Has this type of attack upon your children hurt them in any way?

A. It would be somewhat of a feeling that you get through experience when teachers give your {3313|3314} children secondhand treatment, but you cannot prove it to the school or to anybody else. For example, one example, one of my children, when he was in grade five, the teacher told us that he was beyond grade six in his reading capability. When he went to grade six, which was the middle school, the reading teacher told us, "He is so poor in reading I have to put him into the lower category." We couldn't believe it, but we couldn't argue against the teacher. But the book that this lower category had to read and study was about the German troops in Holland during the War which, in my opinion, and my wife's opinion —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. No further questions. Thank you.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I have one or two questions, Mr. Schroeder.

A. Right.

Q. Mr. Schroeder, do you know what the largest community, ethnic community is in Toronto?

A. The largest ethnic community in Toronto, I would say, is British descent.

Q. You are probably right. Do you know what the second largest is?

A. Most likely German descent.

Q. And is it Mr. Zundel's reputation {3314|3315} in the German community that you are aware of, or in the community at large? Or is it your circle of acquaintances?

A. Basically my circle of acquaintances. I do not associate with too many people. I am a bit of a loner, living in the country.

Q. And you said you were German. Would you agree with me that you are Canadian?

A. I took Canadian citizenship about 1959, yes.

Q. Then you certainly are a Canadian. Is one of the things that Mr. Zundel has researched, to your knowledge, flying saucers?

A. He has written a book about flying saucers. I have seen letters from a scientist from Munich that stated that he had worked on the project. I have read a letter from a nurse from England who nursed one former German soldier who claims that he was on a flying saucer. I am not a mechanical engineer, but I am an engineer in the engineering profession, and I see it quite feasible that a machine like that could be built or could have been built.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no re-examination.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

— The witness retires.

—— {3315|3316}

TIUDAL RUDOLF [TIUDAR RUDOLPH], sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Rudolf [sic], do you have firsthand knowledge of the Red Cross visiting the camp of Auschwitz-Birkenau in 1941?

A. I have.

Q. What was your position at that time?

A. I was a general interpreter with the section 3. It means anti-espionage, attached to the German Intelligence Service known as Security Service in Krakow. And my chief was a Major Liska.

Q. Did he conduct a tour of the camps together with representatives of the Red Cross from Geneva in 1941?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you come to be involved in that, sir?

A. It was my task at that time to be interpreter and to keep in the office of Major Liska, and so I had to file all correspondence, all orders and all statements. I remember that in autumn '41 it might be October or November, we had the first snow. An order came in a form of a letter signed by Frank, the General Governor of the Polish General-Gouvernement, saying, announcing the visit of the International Red Cross from Switzerland. They had made an application announcing that they will visit all concentration camps in the Central Gouvernement [sic]. And my chief, a Major Liska, {3316|3317} was the man assigned to guide this Swiss delegates around the concentration camps. It was autumn '41.

Q. And how long was that trip, sir, in which those concentration camps were visited by the Red Cross from Geneva?

A. My chief said it will last approximately a fortnight. And if he went off, he said, he will be back in approximately fourteen days.

Q. Did he come back in fourteen days?

A. He did.

Q. Did you prepare the reports for his signature at that time to the authorities in the Security Department?

A. Pardon?

Q. Did you prepare the reports at his request of those visits?

A. I did.

Q. And did you read them?

A. I did.

Q. Did they indicate those visits had occurred?

A. Pardon?

Q. Did they indicate those visits had occurred?

A. Yes.

Q. How long was that report?

A. Well, three or four pages.

Q. And to whom was it directed?

A. It was a report of a Major Liska to a General Frank himself.

Q. How many languages do you speak, {3317|3318} sir?

A. Pardon?

Q. How many languages do you speak?

A. Polish, German. I am German. French and English.

Q. In your capacity as office manager in the Security Police office in Krakow, did you prepare the minutes of meetings and that sort of thing?

A. No. This was not my task. It was a task of the secretary, Major Liska – we had three offices. One beneath the other. Mine was one of these three offices. I had only the task to keep the dossiers up to date, to analyze all statements made by those suspicious men, and to keep the files in order.

THE COURT: And to analyze suspicious statements of who?

THE WITNESS: Of those suspicious elements caught in the black market, for instance.

THE COURT: Yes, I see.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was the Red Cross regarded at that time as a security concern?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would ask Mr. Christie not to lead the witness any more.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Thank you.

Q. Why was the office – it is called the "SD"; is that correct?

A. That's correct. The security {3318|3319} service.

Q. Why is the office of the security service concerned with the Red Cross?

A. I don't know why, but it was his duty, because he, as an anti-espionage officer, it was his duty to look after all things which may be connected with espionage, and he was a very able man of an outstanding figure of knowledge. And therefore, I think he was a man endowed to conduct, to prepare all the routes for the Swiss delegates.

Q. Can you recall if there was any information from that report as to the contents of the inquiry in those camps?

A. I remember that Auschwitz was mentioned. Birkenau, Monowitz, and a couple of more, but I don't remember the names. And in the report made by Major Liska, he said that, according to the Geneva Convention of 1929, the Swiss delegates were entitled to control them, the postal system applied by the Germans who was in the camps, especially whether or not the parcels which came from Switzerland had been orderly delivered to the detainees. And they had the right to ask anybody in the camp, freely, according to their wishes. And number three they have been entitled to visit the camps to go around everywhere unhampered.

Q. You were, I believe, also the secretary to another person in the Third Reich of some significance; is that right, sir?

A. That's correct.

Q. Who is that?

A. It was General Liska. {3319|3320}

Q. And in your capacity on those occasions did you ever hear of any indication of any extermination programme?

A. I never heard.

Q. And in your experience later in life have you come to know Ernst Zundel?

A. I first got notice of this man in 1969, when I was first in Canada. I met him in the German Club. I found him a very amazing man.

Q. Why?

A. Because according to what I heard from him in the discussion with him, I got first that he was an excellent artist painter, anything I love, and then I got hold of him as the best German I ever did met.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. It was August '76, in Toronto.

Q. Have you known him since then?

A. Pardon?

Q. Have you known him since then?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you kept in touch with him? You lived in Germany, is that right?

A. I live in Germany, but we were in touch all the time. I got his correspondence.

Q. Are you aware of his inquiries to find out eye witnesses to the events in Poland?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of what efforts he has made to find out about the situation in Poland?

A. No. I find it amazing that there {3320|3321} is a man in this world who tries and who says, "Even if I will be killed, I have to keep to the truth." I find this amazing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions. Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Rudolf [sic], have you been in the courtroom since this trial started?

A. In the first days, but I have been guided to the witness box.

Q. The witness room?

A. The witness room, excuse me.

Q. Were you sitting in the forepart of the testimony, though, at the beginning of the trial?

A. At the beginning?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I have been here.

Q. Okay. Did you hear the judge say that people who are going to be witnesses shouldn't be in the courtroom?

A. No, but I have been said by Mr. Christie not to attend any of this sessions here.

Q. And was that before or after you attended some sessions here that Mr. Christie told {3321|3322} you that?

A. I only guided Mr. Zundel up to the stairs, and then we had to go back to the downstairs.

Q. Okay. I don't mean to confuse you, Mr. Rudolf [sic]. My question is, have you been in the courtroom and listened to, in here, and listened to testimony of other people?

A. Only in the first day, I think.

Q. Okay. Now, can you tell me what rank you had in the German Army, or if it was the German Army you were in?

A. I have been a Polish subject until October '39, and I had no rank in the army at that time. I have been a civilian businessman, but I have been interpreter, and so I. have been chosen by the security service to do some job, to do the best as an interpreter, in Poland, first in Lutz where I have been born, and I had my family, my wife and my children, and then I was transferred to Krakow, where General Frank had his headquarters.

Q. Were you in the armed services, Mr. Rudolf [sic], after 1939?

A. Later, in '42, I have been a volunteer, because I thought it better to go to the fighting army. So I have been a soldier starting from middle of '42.

Q. And what service were you in, sir?

A. I have been trained as a machine gunner. I have been selected as an interpreter, pool, trained as an interpreter, advisor, and I joined the forces of Kislér and of Rommel. {3322|3323}

THE COURT: Is that Rommel in the west?

THE WITNESS: No. Rommel in the south. North Africa.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: So that your involvement in this matter that you told us of took place in 1941 with Major Liska, and later, when Major Liska was promoted to a general, you went back to work for him again?

A. Oh, he wasn't a general. He was a major.

Q. I thought you said the second man that you were a secretary for was General Liska.

A. No. Sorry. I was misunderstood.

Q. You worked for Major Liska.

A. Major Liska.

Q. Did you work as a secretary for any other officer?

A. No.

THE COURT: So that my note that you were a secretary to General Liska is not right?

THE WITNESS: Is correct.

THE COURT: It is correct?

THE WITNESS: Is correct.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Was he a general or a major?

A. A major, not a general.

Q. How long were you with Major Liska?

A. Two years.

Q. Which two years? {3323|3324}

A. Starting from November '39 up to the first month, January, February, '42.

Q. And after that you joined the Army.

A. I joined the Army.

Q. Okay. Were you somebody of German descent living outside of what we've heard described as old Germany?

A. Well, my family came to Poland. We have been invited, my ancestors have been invited, after Napoleon's retreat, approximately one thousand eight hundred, to come from Silesia, Germany, to Poland, and to establish there a textile industry because the Poles were in urgent need of any kind of textiles. They had the raw materials, but not the tools and the machines, and Upper Silesia was known for their textiles industry. So my ancestors came to Poland established the Town of Lutz. It's called the Polish Manchester. A huge city of 650,000 people now.

Q. Mr. Rudolf [sic], I don't mean to cut you off if your answer is responsive to my question. I want to know if you were what is known as a folk Deutsche.

A. That is correct.

THE COURT: Maybe the jury would like to know what that is.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Can you tell us what that is?

A. Yes. We have been German, of German descent, but we have been in Poland, of Polish subjects. {3324|3325}

Q. Which section of the security police was Major Liska in?

A. The anti-espionage section, which is a section within the security services.

Q. That is within the armed forces.

A. Yes, within the armed forces.

Q. Not in the S.S.

A. No.

Q. And were Jews part of the suspicious men whose statements your job and his was to analyze?

A. We had to analyze any statement from any men caught under black market or special occasions.

Q. Somebody living outside the ghetto, for example, who should be in the ghetto?

A. Loge had a very famous ghetto, and we had no excess because it was fenced by barbed wire, but we had occasion to use a tramway which goes amid this ghetto, and as far as I know, I have the chronicle now written by just them in the period of '41 and '42 in Polish, and I know that this ghetto was transformed by the Germans into a huge industrial area, working in three shifts. And the ghetto had approximately 100,000 Jews, and seventy per cent of this Jews did work for the German Army, made uniforms, boots and any things that the Army need. Also, a steel helmets in a very huge plant.

Q. So was part of the Major Liska's job and your job who worked for him to enforce the rules and regulations of the ghetto?

A. No. We had to do anything with {3325|3326} ghetto at all. This was a special division.

Q. Why would an anti-espionage major have to plan a route for the International Committee of the Red Cross to follow?

A. I can't just answer why, but we did.

Q. Okay. And to the best of your recollection, this was in the fall of 1941?

A. It's correct.

Q. Were you ever in, you yourself, at that time, go to Auschwitz-Birkenau?

A. No, I never.

Q. Do you know how big it was at that time?

A. Pardon?

Q. Do you know how big it was at that time?

A. It was my task to sit in the office to keep the dossiers and to keep the office up-to-date, and this was —

Q. Would you like some water, Mr. Rudolf [sic]?

A. I had no outdoor task. I had to sit in the office.

Q. All right. In preparing a report for Major Liska was there any description as to the size of the camp or camps that he visited?

A. Not about the size of the camps, but he reported what he has done with his delegation, how he did route them through the camps. He said —

Q. How he routed them through the {3326|3327} camps.

A. I, myself?

Q. No. You said the report was how he routed them through the camps?

A. Yes. By car. And he said they did not swallow through the camps.

THE COURT: I beg your pardon?

THE WITNESS: Did not go fast through the camps with his delegates, but they stood two or even three days according to they wish in every camp.

Q. In every camp that —

A. They visited.

Q. That they took them to.

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know how many satellite camps there were to Auschwitz-Birkenau? Do you know how many satellite camps there were for Auschwitz?

A. Several.

Q. Were they war camps, Mr. Rudolf [sic]?

A. Well, I can't answer this question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. In the course of your cross-examination it was raised that you joined the German Army. Where did you see service, sir, in the German {3327|3328} Army?

A. I was an infantryman in Meiser itself. It is in the middle of Germany. And then I have been transferred to Maisa to join the interpreter school. And then we moved up to Holland, and from Holland, France, Italy, Sicily, North Africa. This was my way.

Q. Where were you captured?

A. We have been captured by the American forces.

THE COURT: That is assuming he was captured. I haven't heard that he was captured.

MR. CHRISTIE: I suspect there's still few German officers still at large after the capitulation. That is what I meant, Your Honour. I suspect that one could say that the whole German Army was captured, but I didn't mean it in any other sense than that.

THE COURT: I didn't say it was. It just wasn't a matter brought up in cross-examination.

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, very well. Thank you very much, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I have instructed the court officers to bring another witness. Armin {3328|3329} Auerswald.

ARMIN AUERSWALD, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Auerswald, you are a Canadian citizen?

A. I am.

Q. And what is your occupation, sir?

A. I am an electrician.

Q. What?

A. Electrician.

Q. Are you married?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you have any children?

A. Yes.

Q. How many children?

A. Six.

Q. And are you of German descent?

A. I am.

Q. Have your children experienced difficulty in school because of Holocaust matters and their German descent?

A. I remember that in 1972, '73, '74, in that area, one of my daughters has been, well, you would call it mistreated now.

Q. Having to do with the Holocaust and her German descent?

A. It had to do with what they were taught in school, the materials they had to study, and {3329|3330} the reaction of some of her fellow students towards the fact that she was of German descent.

Q. As a result of those difficulties did you come to meet Ernst Zundel?

A. Not as a result of these difficulties. I made contact with Mr. Zundel back in 1970, as a result of some harassment I had experienced myself at work.

Q. And why did you contact him?

A. There was an incident at work where, on the anniversary, the thirtieth anniversary at the beginning of the War, the Toronto Star had published a statement, published a weekend statement with the German martial flag occupying the entire front page and some interviews inside. This was a substance of discussion among my fellow electricians at work, and two of them approached me in a rather crude and rude fashion, accusing me of being one of them that had just killed all these innocent people. And when I replied that I have never killed anybody, I was threatened to have the crap beat out of me, and I would have an accident if I don't shut up. The type of, or the level of conversation that is fairly common in construction circles. And I had nothing to come back with because I spent my effort at learning anything on technical information. It was unsatisfactory experience to me, to say the least: So I approached a friend as to what information he had on the War that would give me a better ability, you know, to respond with facts to people like that, and he put me in contact with Mr. Zundel. {3330|3331}

Q. That was in nineteen what?

A. This was 1969 in September. It took me a little while until I got reading into it. In 1970 I made contact with Mr. Zundel.

Q. Have you, as a result of that contact, kept in touch with him over several years?

A. I have.

Q. How many times have you seen him?

A. Several times a year. Every couple of months I would go and have a chat with him and ask him for some other factors that have come to my attention, that I would like clarification. He's got an extensive library, and he's helped me considerably in that respect.

Q. What can you say about that library in respect to primary sources?

A. Well, as far as the sources are concerned, the books to me are books, and I am quite sure that much of the material is, well, authored by people who have firsthand knowledge in it, or have done extensive research on the matter.

Q. Are you familiar with the research that Mr. Zundel has done himself?

A. Yes.

Q. And how would you describe that research?

A. Well, he has thoroughly gone into all angles of the question of recent history, especially the history as it pertains to Germany in the last War and the previous War and the post-War period.

Q. Can you tell us what you know of {3331|3332} his reputation in the community for honesty?

A. He is an honest man, like as far as I know he has never been in trouble with the law in his conversation or to the extent that one can know anyone or — he is completely sincere and honest individual.

Q. Has he ever expressed any hateful attitudes towards any other groups of people? A. Definitely not.

Q. I didn't hear you.

A. Definitely not. I wouldn't be keeping contact with him if he did. It is not my own style.

Q. Did any of the information you derived from Mr. Zundel help your daughter or your children in respect to the difficulties they experienced at school?

A. Yes. It helped in assisting me to present our side of the picture, if you like, present the truth as we found it out, as I found it out in the, meantime myself. As far as making them popular in school, naturally that would be counter productive and it has been, unfortunately.

Q. What's your attitude towards the Holocaust generally?

THE COURT: What is the question again?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What's your attitude towards the Holocaust generally, the presentation in the media?

THE COURT: How is that relevant? {3332|3333} Is this witness' attitude towards the Holocaust relevant?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, we are dealing with an indictment that the accused has caused damage to social and racial tolerance, and we should lead evidence on what effects this evidence has on some other people, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You can ask the question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What effect has the media representation of the Holocaust had upon yourself and your family?

THE COURT: No, that wasn't the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: I agree, but I tried to keep it closer.

THE COURT: You can ask the very same question, if you want.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have to actually have it read back. I'm sorry, but I haven't the perfect memory.

THE COURT: Read it back, please, Madam Reporter.

THE COURT: REPORTER: "Q. What's your attitude towards the Holocaust generally, the presentation in the media?"

THE WITNESS: My attitude towards the presentation of the Holocaust in the media has changed, of course. I suffered from the end of the War under the heavy load of guilt that we were inculcated with in school. I finished school shortly after the War. I have accepted the entire spectrum of that, {3333|3334} because our elders were not prepared to even discuss the matter with us children. They were, as I see it now, intimidated with what would happen to their careers, their safety, their helath, [sic] because any communication towards us would be construed by the system, by the occupation forces and their representatives as Nazi propaganda, and nobody would want to get himself into that kind of hot water after the country had lost all semblance of self respect.

I've had no choice but to accept the version in its entirety, and because I then received my training as electrician and electronics technician, I sort of pushed the whole thing out of my mind. I concentrated on my job and keeping up with the technological changes.

When I was confronted at work in 1969 I had an easier way of saving money and getting a little off and buying some books, and I educated myself through the sources that I was not previously, that were previously not open to me because I did not know them.

Q. Where did you get those sources?

A. Some from Mr. Zundel and a large amount of it I obtained on my own through publishers direct in the States, and I would, from Europe, France, I got Rassinier's book and various others. I ended up with quite a library myself. My attitude towards the Holocaust, of course, changed as I got more and more information on it that contradicted the newspaper and TV versions. And I've come to the conclusion that it ain't what it seems to be. It is not what is presented to us daily hidden in entertainment and news, and that {3334|3335} our fathers did, indeed, not conduct themselves like animals or the way that it has been presented.

Q. What would you say is the effect of the research that you have done upon your attitudes towards others in society, other groups in society?

A. Other groups in society have no connection with it. It has no bearing on all the groups in society. It's individuals who promote the image of the German as it has been promoted for a long time. It goes back further than even the last War. It is War propaganda as far as I am concerned, and it has nothing to do with other people presently living.

Q. Yes. Are you familiar with the term stereotyping?

A. Yes, of course.

Q. What's your attitude towards that phenomena?

A. Stereotyping is not what I would call intelligent exercise of one's facilities.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Who is hiding things in our entertainment news? {3335|3336}

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Who is hiding things in our entertainment and news?

A. Who said anything about hiding?

Q. Well, you said that material was presented to us hidden in entertainment and news shows.

A. Well, the attitudes are portrayed by television actors or movie actors.

Q. And my question is, who is hiding things in our entertainment and news?

A. Who made the movie?

Q. I am asking you. Do you have an answer to that? If you don't know, that is an answer.

A. Well, very simply, the person or persons involved in writing the script and producing the piece of entertainment concerned.

Q. All right. And is that widespread, is that the import of your statement?

A. Well, widespread is a relative measure. How wide spread it is, I have not concerned myself with it. I have seen it. I have noticed it.

Q. It must have felt very good to you to have your load of guilt relieved by Mr. Zundel.

A. No.

Q. No? It didn't feel good?

A. Seeing, to an extent, to the degree that I know more about it, or at least I imagine I know more about it more than I did before.

Q. Let me show you Exhibit 2. It is talking about "The West, War and Islam". Have you ever seen that before? {3336|3337}

A. Yes.

Q. And does that represent —

A. I picked up a copy last night. I haven't read it yet.

Q. Oh. What about Exhibit Mr. Auerswald, which is the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" Have you read that?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. You have.

A. Yes.

Q. This one here.

A. Yes. This is the second one.

THE COURT: This is what?

THE WITNESS: The second.

THE COURT: The second what, sir?

THE WITNESS: Edition of it.

THE COURT: Oh.

THE WITNESS: . The first one is published by Mr. Harwood in England.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I see. You have seen the first one as well, have you?

A. Yes.

Q. And does reading that make your guilt feel better?

A. I read that after I had already informed myself from other sources.

Q. So when would you have read that?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. When would you have read that?

A. This?

Q. Yes. The exhibit, "Did Six Million {3337|3338} Really Die?" Exhibit I.

A. Four, five years ago.

Q. And did that affect your opinion at all about Jews?

A. About Jews?

Q. Yes.

A. Why about Jews?

Q. No, I am asking the question. If the answer is no, then the answer is no. Did it affect your opinion at all about Jews?

A. Definitely not.

Q. All right. And you are telling me that your parents were afraid to discuss matters within the confines of their own family?

A. I didn't say my parents. I said my elders.

Q. Your elders. Okay. Well, did you discuss these matters with your parents?

A. My father died in the last War, and my mother, of course, had no knowledge because she was not interested in these matters.

Q. I see. So you didn't discuss it with your mother.

A. No. When you are fourteen or fifteen years old these are not things you discuss with your mother.

Q. How old was your daughter in 1972 or '74 when she ran into problems?

A. Eight or nine years.

Q. Eight or nine years. And it was her classmates that were bothering her? {3338|3339}

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. It was her classmates that were bothering her?

A. Well, bothering is one way of putting it, yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. No further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no re-examination.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: The next witness is Jurgen Neumann.

JURGEN NEUMANN, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How old are you, Mr. Neumann?

A. I am thirty-four years old.

Q. And what is your occupation?

A. I am a plumber by trade.

Q. And how long have you known Ernst Zundel?

A. I first came to know Mr. Zundel in 1975. {3339|3340}

Q. And are you married?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And do you have children?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Are you a Canadian citizen?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where were you born?

A. I was born in Germany.

Q. And how long have you lived in Canada?

A. I was one year old when I came over here. That was in 1951.

Q. How did you come to meet Ernst Zundel?

A. Well, I came to meet him at a lecture that he was present at, and at that lecture I came to purchase a book which he had at that time.

Q. Do you remember what that book was?

A. Yes. It was a book called, "UFOs Nazi Secret Weapons?"

Q. And have you kept in touch with Mr. Zundel since that time?

A. Yes, I have. I began at that same lecture. I also, a number of other people were lecturing at which time they expressed a doubt about the Holocaust, which certainly was new to me, and I started purchasing books from the United States on that question, and shortly thereafter I seemed to recall this book that I had purchased from Mr. Zundel and I would rather spend my money in Canada than the {3340|3341}U.S., so I got in touch with him, perhaps, about books that he had on the subject.

Q. Did you find out perhaps if he had a library?

A. Yes, I did. Once I got in touch with him, I came to Toronto and met him, and due to my interest on the subject he made known to me that he did have a library and I was welcome to use it for any research purposes that I wished.

Q. And did you do so?

A. Yes, I have done so in the past and I still do today.

Q. Can you describe that library?

A. Yes. It is very large, I would say, although I never counted them, thousands of books anyway, and out of those he has many, many original manuscripts and books from, I guess what is known as the Third Reich era, and they amounted into the hundreds, at least.

Q. And is there any other place where you can find this material?

A. Not to my knowledge. I tried general libraries and things like that, but I couldn't find that kind of material anywhere else.

Q. Why were you interested?

A. Well, because of my German background. As a younger person I suffered a little bit at the hands of – well, maybe I shouldn't say it that way. When I was in school, because when I first started school I still had a German accent and therefore I was kind of bothered by other children in the school, so {3341|3342} that's how I came to know of German background, and I was treated differently from other people. So that made me interested in it.

Q. Well, what were you interested in specifically that was the reason for any different treatment?

A. Pardon me? I don't understand.

Q. Well, you said you were treated differently. Why were you treated differently as far as you were aware?

A. As far as I was aware because of my accent. The other children in school – not all of them, of course, just a few – were under the understanding that I was German, which I was. I never denied it And they therefore harassed me because they called me – you know, they made —

Q. What did they call you?

A. They called me a Nazi and things like that. In a negative sense.

Q. Were you then or are you now a Nazi?

A. No. I certainly wasn't then and I am certainly not now. Nazi has become to mean just a propaganda catchphrase used to stereotype Germans.

Q. Why do you have an interest in the time of the Third Reich, then?

A. Well, because that seems to be where all this stems from. And my father himself, he was a soldier in the German army back in those days, and he also, it was through him that I learned the other side of the story, and it was so different from the side {3342|3343} of the story that I had come to know from, say, the general media that I was very intrigued and I figured I should know more about this.

Q. Do you like to hear both sides of the story?

A. Always, if possible.

Q. And so have you conducted further research?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you come to know Ernst Zundel better?

A. Yes. Through my research and things, I have, and the use of his facility, I have certainly come to know him very well.

Q. And you are now working with him and helping him, is that right?

A. Yes. The longer I got to know him, the more I was impressed by his drive and his sincerity and his questions, well, for both sides of the story, the truth of what was going on, and because of that I have, well, since I am interested in the same thing, I have come to assist him in many things.

Q. And you run video equipment for him, do you?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And you conduct interviews for people around the world?

A. Yes. I run the camera for which Mr. Zundel conducts interviews.

Q. Are you aware of him seeking eye witnesses of people around the world of the Holocaust? {3343|3344}

A. Yes. I know that on many occasions, not only do I run the video but I type letters for him in a secretarial capacity, and these letters have been directed to many people who have been familiar at that time all around the world.

Q. You are aware that Mr. Zundel has been referred to in the media a number of times in a negative way, I suppose?

A. Yes, I am aware of that.

Q. What do you think about those media representations of Mr Zundel as a Nazi and all those things?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will rephrase the question.

Q. From your knowledge of his character and reputation in the community do you consider that he is at times misunderstood and misrepresented?

THE COURT: There is a way of going about it. You had better rephrase that again.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What is your knowledge of his reputation in the community as to honesty and sincerity?

A. Well, the people I talked to and my own knowledge of Mr. Zundel, for those who do know him personally, his reputation for sincerity is very high, much higher, I think, than people I know personally.

Q. Why do you work with Mr. Zundel? Why do you help him? {3344|3345}

A. Well, one of the reasons, I guess, is because of my two children that I have. I don't want them to grow up with this, what I consider to be an unjust, negative stereotype of Germans, and so that they would think badly of their grandfather and their father as being, you know, less than normal people. And I think this is what the image of the Germans in North American media is today, and I think that since it doesn't seem to me to be the truth, I think it is time that both sides were heard by everyone.

Q. What effect, if any, has the effect of Ernst Zundel had upon your attitude of racial and social tolerance?

A. Being with Mr. Zundel I have understood – it made me more tolerant, if anything, of other people's point of view, more tolerant than I was before I met him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. How many days after His Honour ordered all witness out of the courtroom were you sitting in the courtroom?

A. I don't know what day that was, sir.

Q. The first day? {3345|3346}

A. It was the first day?

Q. Yes.

A. Okay. I think I have been here as a notetaker a couple of times, and perhaps sitting in the courtroom – maybe three days. I, myself, was not aware of the order. Like I didn't hear it personally.

Q. Nobody communicated it to you?

A. No, not really. I have been so busy.

Q. So busy taking notes in the courtroom for Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I would say so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thanks. I have no further questions.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Have you been busy in other respects in respect to the trial as well, co-ordinating —

THE COURT: No. It didn't arise in cross-examination.

MR. CHRISTIE: He was asked whether he was busy taking notes.

THE COURT: No, he wasn't. He was asked whether or not he's been in the court since I made the order that witnesses be excluded.

MR. CHRISTIE: The last question was very clear as to whether he was busy taking notes. {3346|3347}

THE COURT: Right or wrong, you cannot ask the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to indicate, as I did earlier, that I had planned yesterday, at 1:10, to have a witness who was held up, his plane. He arrived, actually. His plane arrived earlier, but he arrived at about seven o'clock and suggested in view of the fact that he had been on the road for several hours, that he might take a break this morning to get some rest before he testified. And I wonder if I might, then, ask to adjourn till probably two fifteen, when I could call the next witness.

THE COURT: Do you not have any other witnesses at all?

MR. CHRISTIE: At the moment, no, sir. I have witnesses coming from the West Coast and from Germany, but I didn't realize we were going to go quite so quickly, and consequently I am in a difficult position to produce a witness at the moment.

THE COURT: You can reasonably assure the court that, now that things are going quickly, that you will have witnesses ready to proceed when time is ready for them?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Subject only to the weather conditions in terms of flights. {3347|3348} That has been a problem yesterday.

THE COURT: When do you expect your other witnesses to arrive other than the one that is now resting?

MR. CHRISTIE: The ones that I have planned, Your Honour, will be arriving tomorrow morning, and I have another one arriving on Friday, but I believe in the afternoon, from West Germany. That witness had been here and went back, but now has to return. That was the witness Udo Walendy, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Members of the jury, you have heard the problem. Not very much that can be done. You are free till two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 11:00 a.m.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything before I call the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. If I might just, Your Honour, I have a short curriculum vitae of the next witness, and one thing I suggested to my friend, if he is agreeable, and subject to Your Honour's view on the matter, I suggested in the event that anything that has {3348|3349} happened happens again whereby I run out of witnesses because of transportation problems, that I might — because I had certain formal things to prove, I might put the accused on the stand, because I have to go through those things eventually, such as a page by page documentary analysis of the text in support — that he I might proceed to do that.

My friend could defer his cross-examination to the end of my client's evidence, which would be the last witness, presumably.

THE COURT: I have no objection to the procedure. Insofar as the deferring of cross-examination is concerned, you will have to take that up with Mr. Griffiths. That is quite satisfactory as far as the procedure goes.

MR. CHRISTIE: So other than that, sir, I have nothing particularly other than to call the witness.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Would this be an expert witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am endeavouring to call the witness in the areas in which he has published his book. {3349|3350}

THE COURT: What areas are those?

MR. CHRISTIE: He published a book called, "The Holocaust 120

Questions and Answers", and he did research in support of that publication, and I want to call him on that basis, just on that topic.

I have given my friend a copy of the book, and if it is of any assistance, I could provide Your Honour with a copy.

THE COURT: No, I don't want to see it. Does anyone wish me not to call in the jury?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. The qualification will be contested, of Dr. Weber, but —

MR. CHRISTIE: I intend to call some other firsthand evidence of an observational nature previous to that, so, whatever may be the situation with regard to qualifications, I will be calling some direct evidence, too.

THE COURT: All right. Call in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:25 p.m. {3350|3351}

CHARLES EDWARD WEBER, sworn*EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Dr. Weber, were you born on the 22nd of October, 1922, in Cincinnati, Ohio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your father was Charles Weber, a professor of law at the University of Cincinnati?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was a judge, and I gather —

A. In his latter years. Yes, sir.

Q. And you, yourself, have studied at the University of Cincinnati in 1950 to 1953?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did you study there, sir?

A. I studied Germanic philosophy, the study of languages and literature.

Q. And in the University of Missouri in 1953 to 1956 you studied as well, I believe; is that correct?

A. No, sir. I was assistant professor at the University of Missouri during those years.

Q. Oh, pardon me. And what did you teach. there, sir?

A. I taught mostly German.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And at the University of Tulsa from 1956 to 1962 were you a professor there?

A. Yes.

Q. What were you teaching there, sir?

A. I was also teaching German courses {3351|3352} there.

Q. And what was your status there, sir?

A. I was an assistant professor.

Q. Yes. And at the Louisiana State University from 1962 to 1966 were you also a teacher?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your status there at that time?

A. I was teaching largely graduate students for a while. I was teaching such courses as preparations for language qualification. I also taught courses in cultural history, for example. My primary field is diachronic linguistics, a study of languages from a historical point of view.

Q. I see. And at the University of Tulsa from 1966 to 1982, what was your status there, sir?

A. For some time I was head of the Department of Modern Languages there. I was a full professor at the University of Tulsa for the most part in those years, from 1966 to 1982.

Q. And in the course of those studies, is there any relationship between what you described as — could you tell me those words again, sir?

A. Diachronic linguistics.

Q. And is there any relationship between that and history?

A. Yes. It's essentially a historical study, as the term diachronic would indicate. {3352|3353}

Q. Yeah. And have you, in the course of the year since the War and in the course of your own research conducted inquiries into the subject known as the Holocaust?

A. Yes, sir. I have. In fact, I have published several articles, and a propodudic [propaedeutic] book on the subject.

Q. What's propodudic, sir?

A. A propodudic book is one that leads one into a subject matter.

Q. And can you tell us about the extent of your research into the subject of the Holocaust?

A. Yes, sir. To be specific, I have published the book, which I mentioned already, "The Holocaust 120 Questions and Answers". This first appeared in 1983.

Q. And had you been working with Mr. Zundel prior to that time in regard to its preparation?

A. Mr. Zundel told me that he became acquainted with my studies along these lines by way of a book review which I published in the Journal of Historical Review, which appeared in 1980, as I recall.

Q. And that was a book review of what book, sir?

A. That was a review of a book which has become quite controversial. It was a general history of Germany, and there were several pages in this book, page 163 to 165, if I recall, that dealt with the question of what is frequently called the Holocaust, or to be more specific, the extermination thesis, the thesis that Jews were deliberately murdered en masse during {3353|3354} World War II, mostly by lethal gas.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Is this the book of which you did a review of which you speak?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It's called "Propylaen" – and how do you pronounce that?

A. "Geschichte der Deutschen". The book has a rather interesting history, by the way.

Q. We won't get into that, but it is by Hellmut Diwald?

A. Yes, sir. It appeared in 1978, as I recall.

Q. So you wrote a book for the Journal of Historical Review?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What has been your background in the study in the area of the Holocaust? For instance, can you tell us what the word means in your understanding?

A. Yes. The etymology of the word is as follows. It comes from the word holocauston.

Q. It's normally spelt in the Greek alphabet, is that right?

A. Well, it was originally a Greek work. The etymology of the word is a rather interesting one. The "holo" part means complete, and the "kauston" part means burned. It referred to a completely burned offering in the Greek religion of the time.

Q. Now, have you studied into the subject in view of the literature on the subject since the Second World War?

A. Yes. I've had a general interest {3354|3355} in the history of the Second World War. I was involved in it. I was a member of the United States Armed Forces, and obviously, I couldn't escape an interest. I served in intelligence capacities, and I had access, I suppose, to a lot of historical material that most people didn't come across.

Q. Let me, then, deal specifically with your exact experience in this field, and later, perhaps, relate it to your qualifications. I would like to deal in the specific area of your individual knowledge, and I'd like to ask you, were you an employee of the American Military Intelligence during the War?

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, specifically my military occupation specialty number was 631 Intelligence. That was for intelligence personnel.

Q. Where did you carry out these duties?

A. I carried them out in various parts. I was given training in Camp Ritchie, which was the Army Military Intelligence School, in the spring of 1945. After I completed my courses there I was sent to Europe and specifically to a place called Bad[ ]schwalbach, and I —

Q. When did you arrive there, and how long were you there?

A. I arrived in Bad[ ]schwalbach in July 1945, I believe.

Q. And is that near a major city in Germany? {3355|3356}

A. No. Bad[ ]schwalbach is a small community in the mountains. It's a spa.

Q. Did you carry out some duties in a place called Fechenheim?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What duties were they?

A. This was about September or October of 1945. I was in a document centre, and the document centre contained files of the German Supreme Military Command which is abbreviated in German, OKW.

Q. Which means?

A. Oberkommando der Wehrmacht, the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces.

Q. And what duties did you do in relation to the Armed Forces of the High Command?

A. I was in a team of ten or twelve men, mostly enlisted men, one officer. It was our duty to go through these files looking for evidence against the defendants in the Nuremberg Military Tribunal.

Q. And what did you do in order to deal with these documents?

A. There were men sitting around the table in this group, and they were going through these various documents looking for the evidence. These men, of course, had to know German as a language. In fact, in most cases that was the native language of these men.

Q. Could you tell us what the religious background of most of these people were? {3356|3357}

A. Preponderously Jewish. And let me explain the circumstances there. These men were refugees from Germany, probably most of them came to the United States in the course of the thirties, and so they knew German, and they were put to such duties because they did know German.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And what were you instructed to look for in the documents of the German High Command?

A. We were instructed to go through these records, and there were a great many of them, looking for evidence against defendants, particularly the defendants during the post-war years in Nuremberg.

Q. And how were the documents held by your team?

A. Physically, they were in rather large boxes that are commonly used in office record keeping in Europe.

Q. And were they held in any form of arrangement vis-a-vis the public? Was the public allowed access?

A. These were not public proceedings, obviously.

Q. Could you describe them further as to their relationship with anybody other than yourselves?

A. Well, I certainly think that it should be pointed out that the defence attorneys didn't come in and visit us looking for evidence on behalf of their clients.

Q. Was this public knowledge that these documents were in their hands at that time? {3357|3358}

A. No, except, perhaps, in a very general way.

Q. The specific locations and whatnot, was this made public?

A. It was known, for example, at the time that we captured German Generals. They were writing accounts of their military unit, some of which I translated.

Q. What was the level of confidentiality pertaining to these documents?

A. Strict.

THE COURT: Is that the classification, or is that just the way —

THE WITNESS: That is not a formal military classification. I believe that our operations could have been designated as confidential, at least.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. To your knowledge were defence counsel at Nuremberg ever invited to look at these documents?

A. Not to my knowledge. Not while we were working with them.

Q. As a result of your experiences did you develop an interest in the Holocaust at that time?

A. Yes, I did. As a matter of fact I recall talking to a number of Germans in general on this topic, and a number of them pointed out that they had —

Q. Well, you can't go into what they said because so far you are not qualified to say what they said. So you did conduct interviews with people {3358|3359} at the time; is that right?

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, I was involved in some de-Nazification proceedings at the time, specifically during the years 1945 to 1946.

Q. And as a result of that you had firsthand communications with whom?

A. I was working for some time, approximately December 1945 to April 1946, in a community called Kornwestheim, and I was part of the personnel of an internment camp, Internment Camp No. 75, in this community. The internees were mostly men who fell into the so-called automatic arrest category.

Q. That would be the categories I am going to lead you here, and I don't know if there will be an objection, but these are people in the S.S. the S.D., and the criminal organizations; is that right?

A. Or a military organization. You see, when we occupied Germany we had a de-Nazification procedure, and there were, of course, army units and various paramilitary units, and if a person occupied a certain rank in various organizations, that person was subject to automatic arrest.

Q. Were they the higher ranks, or the lower ranks?

A. Well, obviously the higher rank.

Q. Thank you. I just want to make that clear. Now, you were engaged in that process for how long?

A. I was in this group, in the group attached to this internment camp, near Stuttgart, for {3359|3360} approximately five months – December to April, approximately.

Q. And in that capacity how many of the higher ranking personnel would you have interviewed?

A. I was concerned for the most part with the keeping of the files, the dossiers, on the people interned there. And towards the end of my service there I interviewed a number of these people.

Q. Was the relationship of Jewish personnel to the overall number of personnel in that operation the same as it had been in the document centre?

A. No. I think that the percentage, the fraction of Jewish members was smaller. I recall that there was a Lieutenant who, I believe, was half Jewish. His father had been a dentist in Germany, as I recall.

Q. Subsequent to that time did you ever have any firsthand experience with those persons who were then held to be criminals?

A. I was discharged from the Army on the 13th of April, 1946, and I took a position in several censorship in Frankfurt, and subsequently I had a position translating accounts of various military units that had been written by the German generals. I would have to say essentially no, to your specific question.

Q. Not firsthand contact, but you had contact by virtue of translating the documents of German generals?

A. Well, these were military units. They were interned as prisoners of war, of course, and {3360|3361} the American forces put them to writing accounts of their units, particularly the units fighting on the western front in the last eight or ten months of the War. We did not translate many accounts that had much bearing on the fighting in the eastern front.

Q. Have you, yourself, inquired into the subject of the Holocaust?

A. Yes, sir. As aforementioned, wrote this book. Then here is the way —

Q. In preparation of that what did you read and what did you study?

A. I don't think that anyone living in the United States can escape this, because a person living in the United States can turn on his radio very frequently – I mean television set very frequently, and get some material relating to the Holocaust.

Now, of course, there's the quite famous film called "The Holocaust" that was shown over American television around 1979. In fact, I think that that particular film was instrumental in popularizing the word "Holocaust" in the United States, although that term had been used some time previously, particularly in Jewish circles.

Q. Have you read the established literature in the field of the Holocaust such as Dr. Hilberg's book?

A. I read parts of that. It's a rather large book.

Q. Dawidowitz [Dawidowicz]?

A. Yes. I gave special attention to the Dawidowitz book. {3361|3362}

Q. Have you studied the works of other authors in the field, and if so, please name some.

A. I have studied a number of authors in the field such as a book published by Dr. Butz of Northwestern University about 1969. That is a rather large and important book on the whole complex of the Holocaust question.

Q. Have you, in the course of your studies, also studied the forty-two volumes of the IMT trials?

A. Not completely, sir. They are very thick volumes. I have seen, of course, quite a number of quotations from those volumes, but – one book that I must mention very strongly, a book that was published in 1979 by a judge in Germany by the name of Wilhelm Stäglich. This is, perhaps, certainly from the standpoint of revisionist historiography, certainly one of the most important books that has been published on the Holocaust. But the German title is "Der Auschwitz Mythos", and it's quite regrettable that that book has not appeared in an English translation.

Q. Do you read German?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you read other languages as well?

A. I have some reading knowledge of French. In fact, French was a language in which I had to pass a reading examination for my doctorate degree. I had a year of Spanish in college, and I had a couple of years of Latin in high school, and just a very small amount of Russian. I've been in Russia for some time. {3362|3363}

Q. And does that explain the extent of your research into the subject of the Holocaust?

A. I don't believe it could, because one can hardly avoid opening a magazine, a news magazine, without some sort of reference to the Holocaust, and I would like to point out just one example of that.

The 4th of February issue of U.S. News and World Report, an extremely influential weekly news magazine contained an article on the Holocaust. I wrote a commentary on it, and there were some quite absurd errors in that, by the way.

Q. Can you name one?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me.

THE COURT: Just a moment. Don't do that for a moment, please.

MR. GRIFFITHS: After he's been qualified as an expert, Your Honour, I would be pleased to hear his opinions on things.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you read the book that you did the review of by Hellmut Diwald?

A. I read very large portions of it. It is a very large book, about 700 pages long, heavily illustrated.

Q. What's its title in English?

A. "History of the Germans". It's a rather interesting historical approach. It's retrospective, that is, it takes the most recent history first, and then it goes back into the middle ages.

Q. Have you published in the field {3363|3364} of the Holocaust?

A. Yes, sir. As mentioned, this propodudic [sic] book. I published three notable items in the Journal of Historical Review.

Q. What were the topics of those publications?

A. The first one was a review of the book by Professor Hellmut Diwald. The book appeared about 1977 or '78.

Q. Any other articles you've published on this subject?

A. Those three. I've published a number of items in newspapers about particularly the Cincinnati Enquirer, published two or three fairly long letters there pertaining to the Holocaust, and also the Tulsa Tribuna [Tribune]. I published two or three letters there, too.

THE COURT: Letters, were they letters to the editor?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you describe the other two articles that you published in the Journal of Historical Review?

A. Yes, sir. There are three items of some length altogether. The first item was about eight pages long, and it was a review and discussion of Professor Diwald's book. That appeared in the very first issue of the Journal of Historical Review in 1980. That's the date that sticks in my mind. About 1981 I published an article about fifteen pages long on {3364|3365} psychological attitudes, primarily, towards the Holocaust.

Q. What was the title of that?

A. On the part of non-Jews. I happen to have —

Q. Just the title.

A. The title started out with the Latin term "Qui bono". This is a famous latin question that was posed by a distinguished Roman statesman in ancient times. And the object of the question was this: In criminal proceedings the question should always be asked, "Qui bono" to who is good, in order to determine guilt and involvement in crimes and transgressions against the law.

Q. Was there another part to the title?

A. Yes, sir, there is. And I can give that to you exactly. It is a rather long title. "Qui bono? An American Veteran's Views on non-Jewish Toleration and Propagation of the Extermination Thesis". This appeared in the summer issue, 1982, of the Journal of Historical Review.

Q. Okay. That's fine. Have you published a third article?

A. I published a translation of Wilhelm Sta[ä]gliche, "Auschwitz-Mythos", and its fate in western Germany. It was an article about twenty-two typewritten pages which I translated for Dr. Sta[ä]gliche. And that was published in the Journal of Historical Review approximately one year ago. Those are the three major items which I published in the Journal of Historical Review. {3365|3366}

Q. And have your publications included the sources and the research data behind them?

A. I can answer that question quite specifically. If you will look at my propodudic [sic] book you will find at the bottom of almost all of the answers specific references to the literature pertaining to what I said, often specific page references and so forth.

Q. And those sources you have researched and analyzed in the preparation of your research.

A. Yes. Some of those books I've read in toto, or very nearly so. I read, for example, Professor Butz' book, and my propodudic [sic] book is very strongly dependant [sic] on Wilhelm Sta[ä]gliche's book, "Der Auschwitz-Mythos". I am certainly indebted to Wilhelm Sta[ä]gliche for lots of ideas pertaining to this historical question.

Q. And when you published this book and prepared it, did you provide this, in its present form, to Ernst Zundel?

A. Ernst Zundel, I believe, acquired several copies of it. A number of copies.

Q. Have you checked all the sources in your book in support of its truth?

A. Yes. This book is the truth as I know it, as I have gleaned from various resources, resources including Jewish and Zionist resources.

Q. Are you familiar with the writing of Walter Sammy? (phonetic) [San-ning]

A. Yes, sir. Approximately a year or so ago he wrote a book on the demographic movements, {3366|3367} demographic developments of European Jewry during the Second World War and thereafter. And he tried to analyze the demographic aspects of the Holocaust question. It's a rather thick book. It's about 250 pages, as I recall. The title of the book is, "The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry", if I remember the title correctly.

Q. As a result of all that study and reading, when you prepared the book, "The Holocaust 120 Questions and Answers", did you believe that six million Jews were systematically exterminated by the Nazis?

THE COURT: Don't answer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. We haven't qualified him as somebody who can express his opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't ask him to express his opinion. I asked him about the statement, that's all.

THE COURT: It is the same as an opinion. He may not answer the question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you communicate your opinions to Mr. Zundel?

A. Mr. Zundel had access to my opinions because he read the Journal of Historical Review for one thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Those are my questions on your qualifications. Would you answer any questions for my friend, please.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

—— {3367|3368}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Any degrees in history, Dr. Weber?

A. No, sir. Strictly speaking in philology.

Q. It is a study of the evolution of words?

A. That is one aspect of it. As a matter of fact, my doctorate dissertation was in canabula. (phonetics) I wrote that dissertation at the University of Cincinnati in the early nineteen fifties. It was a study of the printed works in the German language that had been produced by moveable type prior to the sixteenth century.

Q. You brought a sample of the Journal of Historical Review with you?

A. Yes.

Q. You are on the editorial advisory committee of the —

A. At that time I was. I am no longer on the committee.

Q. Was Mr. Felderer on the committee at the same time you were?

A. I believe so. I believe he was on the committee at different times.

Q. What about Dr. Lindsey, was he on the committee at the same time you were?

A. Dr. ...

Q. Lindsey.

A. Dr. Lindsey?

Q. Yes. {3368|3369}

A. That name is familiar to me. I think you check on this. At this particular time, this is summer of 1982, he is not listed here.

Q. All right. And Dr. Faurisson?

A. Dr. Faurisson's name is here.

Q. All right. And Dr. Butz, who you've mentioned?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he a computer scientist?

A. Yes. And historian.

Q. He teaches history, does he?

A. He doesn't teach history, but he is a historian.

Q. I see. Like you are.

A. I have studied in historical disciplines.

Q. I see. But you have a hard time getting through a book, even if you are going to review it for a publication.

A. In the review which I mentioned in the first issue of the Journal of Historical Review —

Q. That's the one.

A. — I was particularly interested in what Wilhelm Sta[ä]gliche had to write about the Holocaust question. As I recall, that was particularly on pages 163 to 165, but I was also interested in what he had to say about the origins of the Second World War and so forth.

Q. Did you read pages 166, 167 and following, or just three pages —

A. I must have.

Q. You must have. A little hard to {3369|3370} remember now?

A. I read a great deal of the book. I purchased the book. In fact, I used some of the text from the books for students, vocabulary.

Q. I see. Are you a psychologist?

A. No, sir. I've had courses in psychology, but I am not a psychologist by profession.

Q. Okay.

A. I had a course in educational psychology, general psychology, and I have taught pedagogical courses.

Q. Have you studied any of the primary sources, documents?

A. Not physically, except to the extent that the records I saw in Fachenheim might have had a peripheral bearing. As a matter of fact, if I may add something, it's one of the complaints of German historians such as Professor Diwald, that the records and documents which we confiscated are not readily accessible to them.

Q. Do you know how many records have been sent to West Germany out of the American archives, microfilm?

A. I understand that some of them have been returned at least in copy form to the German archives.

Q. You don't know how many?

A. No. I have no specific data on that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Doctor. On the issue of qualifications, Your Honour, I have no further questions. {3370|3371}

THE COURT: Yes. Any re-examination on that issue, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What rank did you hold, Doctor, in the American Army?

THE WITNESS: For the most part I was a private first class [sic], and towards the end of my military service I was a technician fifth grade.

THE COURT: What does that mean?

THE WITNESS: A technician rating in the American Army at the time referred to qualifications along a specific line. For example, an automobile mechanic might have had a technician's rating rather than a regular military rating. And a technician fifth grade, I believe, was on the same level as corporal.

THE COURT: I was just going to ask you that. Were you ever elevated to the rank of Lance Corporal, or Corporal?

THE WITNESS: No sir. As a matter of fact, I have my discharge papers here.

THE COURT: No, that won't be necessary. What ranks did the others in the room have when you were going over the German documents?

A. Non-commissioned officers. There was a commissioned officer in charge who was a Lieutenant, if I remember correctly.

THE COURT: And I presume when you were discharged from the services, it is an honourable one.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. I have my {3371|3372} papers, sir, if you wish to see them.

THE COURT: No, I don't wish to see them. I have no other questions. Any other questions, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no questions. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I would —

THE COURT: Do you have any questions?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, not arising out of that. No, sir.

THE COURT: Any more evidence to be called, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Thank you.

THE COURT: You can step down for a moment, sir.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I was going to make my submissions now, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would respectfully {3372|3373} submit that in no way is Dr. Weber qualified as an expert in the Holocaust or anything related to the Holocaust.

He has read no primary sources. He has trouble getting through secondary sources. He has read a couple of books by colleagues of his from the Institute of Historical Review, but he simply would have no background whatsoever to analyze. Indeed, on his own evidence, he is in no better position than anyone of us lay people who turn on the TV and radio and hear things. And as such, he lacks the requisite skill in this field, Your Honour. And I don't mean to criticize in any way his skill in his own field where I am sure he is eminent, but in this field I would suggest he is not.

He is in no better position than the average person, and as such, he should not be permitted to express an expert opinion.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: For one thing, expertise in history is not necessarily required by being a teacher in history. I suggest there is no previous criterion by which a person is qualified as a historian, and the {3373|3374} degree to which one studies history, the degree to which one publishes views in history, and there are many historians who never were trained in history, and I point out that Dr. Hilberg was not a historian, not trained in history. His training was in law.

There are people who didn't have expertise, because that is what happens when people take interest in specific subjects. Dr. Hilberg may have been someone better qualified than this witness. He may be someone whose opinions are more heavily credible than this witness, but that is a matter for the jury. And for one thing, I haven't asked him any opinions and I am not necessarily going to ask him all the things that Dr. Hilberg testified to, but it seems to me there are certain specific areas where his opinion might be qualified better than ours, especially in regard to the manner that records were kept, specifically from those who were trying to prepare the defence of the accused at Nuremberg, since that is part of the book in question, "Did Six Million Really Die?" That is why I intend to qualify him. Not on the broad scope of Dr. Hilberg's extensive qualifications, but even in respect to Dr. Hilberg I might point out that, for example, his {3374|3375} qualifications came in such a manner that he only went to the places he wrote about after the fact.

It may be that people acquire somewhat more expertise by being there and seeing what is done. And that, in fact, is what this professor had the experience of when he was much younger. And no one asked Dr. Hilberg what his rank was either, and I don't think that that really is too important. It comes to what a person sees.

I mean, if they see something and they later acquire a certain interest in the subject, it doesn't matter whether they were a corporal or a general, provided that their opinions are based on what they saw and the knowledge acquired from what they saw. So much as one may take a degree of, I don't know what one might say, disregard for him because he wasn't of a high rank or anything, it is true he acquired a high degree of skill and knowledge in the realm of analyzing material in the course of his studies. He has written on the subject. He has studied in the area certainly more than most people, and to that extent and to that limited extent I ask that he be qualified to express his opinion specifically as it relates to the performance {3375|3376} and development of his book, specifically, which includes 120 questions and answers.

I want to ask him those, and also to ask him if the process of providing documents to the defendant at Nuremberg were such that the defendants were aware of the existence of the documents, where they were situated, and that sort of thing — the conditions in the time of 1945, '46, when the trials and the evidence for the trials against the accused were being prepared.

That is relevant to the issue, as far as I know, because that is one of the major areas of the criticism of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and I suggest that that, therefore, would be a legitimate subject upon which he might be fit to express a view, because he was there and participated in the formation of that evidence.

Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, as I understood it, Your Honour, again Dr. Weber was going to be serving a dual function. He was going to be testifying, as indeed he did, as to his role of what he saw, and the {3376|3377} review of those documents, and as something he has direct knowledge of to testify to — that is relevant — and the second role is as an expert witness, I thought, on the Holocaust because that was the name of his book, "The 'Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers", and I say he is not an expert on the Holocaust.

THE COURT: Your position is that as far as the Crown is concerned, subject to my order, you take no objection to the questions being put to the witness on what he saw, anything with respect to the documents that he was examining in general ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly not, Your Honour. I can't object to that.

THE COURT: You do take a position concerning the question of his skill at large on the issue and on the subject, rather, of the Holocaust and his opinions thereon if he is allowed to give them. Is that it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. And my submission is that he should not be allowed to give them, that he is not somebody who is read widely enough. That his experience is in reviewing documents, I think, is appropriate, but I think that would be as somebody {3377|3378} giving direct evidence of what he actually saw and did, and not somebody who is speculating on what others did in that field.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. Mr. Christie, you have the last word.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, sir, I have said pretty well everything I have wanted to say.

THE COURT: Thank you. I will need about ten or fifteen minutes in order to review what I have written down in my bench book.

Members of the jury, I think we can get coffee for you a little early. Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:10 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 3:40 p.m.

RULING

THE COURT: This application concerns the qualification or otherwise as an expert of one Charles D. Weber.

Mr. Weber was born in 1922. He has studied at many universities in the United States of America, including Cincinnati and others. He has taught mostly German and languages, being the subject of his choice generally speaking, at the University of Tulsa in the western United States, and at Louisiana where he taught graduate students. He also taught at other locations of learning.

I do not recall any evidence as to what he is doing precisely at this moment in the way of teaching or otherwise. His principal field, he has sworn, is linguistics from a historical point of view.

Between 1966 and 1982 he was a professor at the University of Tulsa. The subject was diachronic linguistics. He served in World War II in the American Armed Forces. He has published a book on the Holocaust [sic]. It is entitled, "The Holocaust" 120 Questions and Answers".

He became interested in the Holocaust {3379|3380} as a subject of study as a result of having been involved with a book review that he did of a very controversial book. He mentioned when he testified in-chief that he was particularly interested in connection with the review on pages 163 to 165 of the book which dealt with the question of the Holocaust and the issue of whether extermination of Jews occurred by the use of lethal gas.

He then proceeded, on request, to define the word "holocaust" from the Greek. He said that the prefix "holo" means "complete"; "kaustos" means "burnt". It is a complete burnt offering in the Greek meaning of ancient times.

He testified that in World War II he was attached to the Intelligence Corps or Division of the American Armed Forces, and as such he had some access to documents of a historical nature. He took training in Camp Ritchie in 1945. Camp Ritchie, I infer, is in the United States.

No questions were put to the witness either in the form of questions in-chief or in cross-examination which in any way spelled out or identified the specific areas of training that the witness said {3380|3381} he took at Camp Ritchie. In any event, it appears to have equipped him to be sent to Europe and to Germany in the field of his training, in intelligence.

He arrived about mid-1945 as an American soldier. He was discharged some nine months later or thereabouts on the 3rd of April, 1946. He took up a position in the censorship area of Frankfurt as a civilian. He obtained a job translating documents in that particular section in his civilian capacity.

While he was a serving soldier in the American Forces he was ordered into a document centre in a small town in Germany. That centre contained a number of files which had been captured from German Armed Forces. Those files contained documents pertaining to the High Military German Forces during the course of World War II and its immediate aftermath.

His duty, he said, was to search out evidence relative to certain Germans who were of high rank and who were charged with certain offences which were to be, in turn, dealt with at the well-known Nuremberg trials. His colleagues, if I may use that term, who were also involved in the same endeavour, the witness said were mainly Jewish Americans who were there {3381|3382} performing the same function as Dr. Weber. All who did it, of necessity, required as a primary requisite a knowledge of German.

This witness has sworn that he could speak and write German. He has been familiar with German for most of his adult life. About that there can be no doubt. He said the documents were in large boxes in a room and they sat around examining the contents of the boxes. They undoubtedly were culling the contents of each in order to provide the prosecution at Nuremberg with the necessary ammunition that all prosecutions require in order to conduct their duties as prosecutors. It was then, he said, he developed an interest in the Holocaust.

He then, after that, became involved in a de-Nazification process where he became familiar with recent internees from the German Armed Forces, S.S., S.D. and paramilitary people who were arrested and were placed in detention camps. I think it can be inferred they then underwent a de-Nazification process.

I have mentioned his discharge in 1946. He was then asked how he prepared for the book, "120 Questions and Answers" of the Holocaust [sic] that he {3382|3383} wrote. The question, as I have written it down, was, "In preparation for the book what material did you read?" The witness' answer then came back, as I have recorded it, to the effect that the television in the United States, about 1979, began depicting a number of films on the Holocaust. That was his answer.

He read part of Dr. Hilberg's book. He read all about the book by Dawidowitz [sic], and he read a book by Butz in 1979 on the subject. He studied parts of a number of other books, but he did not read any other book that I can see, perhaps with an exception, from cover to cover.

He then made the observation that one can hardly open a news magazine these days without seeing a reference to the Holocaust.

In addition to his knowledge of the Holocaust he did a review of some writing on the Holocaust. He has written letters to the editors of various newspapers. He wrote the book, "120 Questions and Answers". He wrote some articles in 1980 on the psychological attitude to the Holocaust on the part of non-Jews. He translated something on the Holocaust done by one Stäglich, and a book by Professor Butz. {3383|3384} Stäglich's book impressed him greatly.

It is not clear to me whether or not those books impressed him greatly or not, before he wrote his own or after.

He is familiar with the writing of another writer who wrote on the demographic development of European Jewry. Its title is, "The Dissolution of European Jews."

He has no qualifications in history. His doctorate includes languages and examination of words and phrases. He is on the Committee of Historical Review apparently with one Felderer who testified here yesterday, one Faurisson who testified at some length in this trial for the defence. Dr. Butz is apparently on the same board.

When asked whether or not he read only pages 163 to 165 of the book that I earlier mentioned; the witness said that he must have read more, but it appears to me that his memory was particularly faulty in that regard. He said he did see German records that may have a peripheral bearing on the subject at hand.

Crown counsel submits that the witness is {3384|3385} not qualified as an expert. He does not have the degree of expertise within the confines of the field in which he is permitted to testify to give his opinion.

Counsel for the accused submits that he does possess such knowledge. In any event, what knowledge he does possess is a matter of weight for the jury to decide and not for the judge. He does not need a degree in history to become an expert. With that I do not disagree.

He is to be asked, if permitted to do so, about the conditions that existed in Nuremberg at the time. In the course of his evidence he was asked, I believe by counsel for the accused, whether or not any of the documents that he was examining for the prosecution [sic] were given to the defence. In reply he gave what I consider to be a rather equivocal answer which was neither yes or no. Be that as it may.

My decision is now whether or not, at the threshold, [sic] this witness is permitted to give his opinion evidence as an expert. I have already defined that in other rulings of this subject. I do not intend to do so again except to say this: {3385|3386}

In coming to the decision in which I have arrived, I have borne in mind the principles set out in Fisher v. The Queen, 130 C.C.C. decided by the Supreme Court or Canada on appeal from the Ontario Court of Appeal.

It is indeed true that the weight, if any, to be accorded to the evidence given by any witness during the course of the trial held with a jury present is for the jury, and not for the judge and not for counsel. However, the decision as to whether or not at the threshold [sic], experience and expertise within the confines of the field in which it is proposed the witness is to be qualified must be and is, as a matter of law, with the judge and with no one else.

It is perfectly obvious to me that this witness does not possess, on what I have heard, the necessary qualifications to qualify him, as an expert is entitled, to give his opinion to the jury. It is proposed that he be asked to give it on the issue of the Holocaust and all that entails.

It is with some reservation that I agree that if asked, he can give his evidence as to what documents he looked at, and what he found in them {3386|3387} while he was searching for the ammunition for the prosecution at Nuremberg.

Provided that proper groundwork is laid by counsel for the accused with regard to conditions that existed at Nuremberg, and provided that groundwork is laid first before the question is put, he may be asked if he knows what the conditions were at Nuremberg after the War.

The jury will decide what weight, if any, to accord his evidence.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, are there any questions?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. I don't think so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one, Your Honour, with respect to the last part of your ruling.

Is that his personal knowledge at Nuremberg?

THE COURT: Personal knowledge. Yes, Mr. Christie.

— {3387|3388}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Dr. Weber, please.

— The witness returns to the stand.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. I am going to have to phrase these questions carefully, Doctor, and before you answer, please wait. If there is any objection, don't answer. Okay?

When you were preparing the case for the prosecution at Nuremberg were you staying with the other people who were looking over the documents?

A. Yes. We were there together as a unit, sort of special team.

Q. And did you concern yourself with whether or not the defence should be made aware of the location of these documents?

A. I think it's obvious that the defence attorneys at Nuremberg, for the chief defendants such as Goering and Rosenberg and so on, should have had access to these documents quite freely.

THE COURT: That's an opinion.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. That's an opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I understand now that he is not entitled to express an opinion?

THE COURT: That is correct. He is entitled to cite what documents he located and what they said, if he knows. {3388|3389}

MR. CHRISTIE: I see.

Q. Do you remember any documents that you found there at the time?

A. We discussed a number of documents. Some of the things I remember are of minimal importance, some of them were of more importance. These records, by the way, were mostly military records. I recall seeing quite a few maps and economic studies pertaining to the War on various fronts. I think mostly in the eastern front, in the case of the eastern front. I remember one little document that caused some amusement among us. The War was nearly over on the 30th of January, 1945, and the National Socialist Party put out some little pamphlet that late in the War extolling the virtues of National Socialism and what it had done for Germany and why the fight should continue to preserve National Socialism. And we were somewhat amused by that pamphlet because by that time, by the end of January 1945, the military outlook for Germany was pretty dim. I must have looked, at least in a cursory way, at hundreds of items there.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to file the book, "The Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers", for identification.

THE COURT: You can file it for identification, yes. It will be Exhibit ...

THE REGISTRAR: "V".

THE COURT: Exhibit "V". Thank you.

— EXHIBIT. "V" (For Identification): Book, "The Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers" by Dr. Weber. {3389|3390}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: When you first published your views on the Holocaust did you run into any difficulties?

A. Indeed I did. I published a rather long letter, I would say, twelve, fourteen inches long, in the Cincinnati Enquirer. This appeared on the 10th of January, 1977. I mention that date specifically because it has some importance. I was temporarily living in Cincinnati at the time, in my mother's house. This letter was signed with a Cincinnati address. That's a very important detail. There was no hint whatsoever that I was employed by the University of Tulsa or even that I lived in Tulsa.

Now, something quite amazing happened after that. On the 16th of March, 1977, my Dean had me come into his office and he started to read this letter from the Cincinnati Enquirer, and he asked me, "Did you write this?" I said that I did write it, and while I was there he requested my resignation from the University of Tulsa. As the days passed on I simply refused to do this. He wanted to give me two years' salary.

Q. You can't tell about what he said or anything. Just what happened. That's all.

A. I was made the offer of two years' salary to resign my tenured position at the University of Tulsa. I refused. However, after that, some rather unpleasant things were happening to me. For example, I wasn't allowed to teach advanced courses any longer on a regular basis. Courses that I actually taught were left out of the schedule book, and that {3390|3391} sort of thing. And by 1981 I had simply had enough, and a new Dean requested my resignation and I finally agreed to a termination settlement that included approximately one and three quarter years' salary.

There were also a couple of other little benefits, and the stipulation that I was to teach one more year, namely, 1981 to 1982. I signed the contract, the termination contract on the 2nd of July, 1981, as I say with the understanding that I teach the next academic year, and that was the end of my formal academic career.

Q. Which had been how many years?

A. I've taught on the university level for a total of forty-two years. I taught three years at the University of Cincinnati. I taught for three years at the University of Missouri and Columbia, Missouri, and I taught for a total of twenty-two years at the University of Tulsa, although for four years that was interrupted by teaching at the Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge from the fall of 1962 to the spring of 1966, after which I returned with a quite propitious offer to the University of Tulsa in the fall of 1966 with a fine salary income. And then, in the following year, as arranged, I became the Head of the Department of Modern Languages at the University of Tulsa, which position I held for two years.

Q. Had you, prior to the 10th of January, when you published this letter, had any difficulty in your teaching and academic career?

A. I considered myself a fair-haired boy at the University of Tulsa, and I felt that I was {3391|3392} getting along very well.

I might mention another detail. On the 18th of January, that is, some six months after I had signed the termination agreement, an acquaintance of mine telephoned me and said that he had —

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, excuse me. That's hearsay, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Oh, I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was further pressure applied by certain groups?

A. I had evidence that there were, but I couldn't get documentation of that. I wanted —

MR. CHRISTIE: That's fine. Those are my questions.

THE WITNESS: From the Dean.

MR. CHRISTIE: Never mind. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. The men you were working with in the Documents Centre in Germany, were they all American soldiers?

A. Yes. They were members of the American Armed Forces.

Q. And there was a Lieutenant that was in charge of your unit?

A. Yes. That was his rank, as {3392|3393} recall it. I believe he was a First Lieutenant. I don't recall his name, however.

Q. Did you send anything out to the prosecution at Nuremberg?

A. No, sir. I had no such function. That is, I wasn't in charge of what specific items were sent there. I don't know what disposal, immediate disposal of those items were. I presume that the Lieutenant in charge was responsible for picking out the more important items and passing them on to the prosecution lawyers.

Q. All right. So he was one of these people who was Jewish that you referred to?

A. As I recall, he was of Jewish origin, yes, sir.

Q. And what was his name?

A. I don't recall. If I may make an explanation here, the American Army was rather strongly in need of people who understood German. It was not just everyone who had a fairly good knowledge of German for the examination of these documents. And under the circumstances, many of the people in the intelligence units were people who were refugees from Germany. Of course, mostly in their twenties or thirties, as was typical of people in the military service.

Q. You were twenty-one or twenty-two?

A. I was born in 1922, and during 1945 I became twenty-three years old.

Q. On your curriculum vitae it indicates you were in the U.S. Army from 1943 to 1946. {3393|3394} Is that a mistake?

A. I was on active service beginning with the 20th of January, 1943, to the 13th of April, 1946.

Q. And where were you stationed?

A. I was stationed in various places during those three and a quarter years.

Q. All right. I am not going to take you all through that. Were you always in intelligence?

A. No, sir. I was trained in Camp Ritchie, Maryland, which was west of Washington, D.C., west of Baltimore, very mountainous area. This was the intelligence camp of the army.

Q. All right. You don't know whether any documents you saw were passed on to the prosecution at Nuremberg?

A. It was not my function to dispose of such documents.

Q. All right. And it wasn't your function to pass documents along to the defence, either. You don't know what happened to them.

A. No, sir. Our immediate task was to pick out things that looked like important items in the litigations.

Q. All right. When was the last time you published an article in your field?

A. In what field, sir?

Q. Well, in your field, the field that you taught and studied in for thirty years.

A. Oh, approximately 1980 I gave a paper comparing German and English from a diachronic {3394|3395} linguistic point of view, and the summary of that was published. I gave that before a section of the South Central Modern Languages Association.

Q. Did your publishing habits, leaving aside the Holocaust for a moment, and your publishing in your field, did your publishing in your field have anything to do with the request for your dismissal, resignation?

A. That is difficult for me to determine.

Q. Okay. And you said that you were the Head of the Modern Language Department at the University of Tulsa for two years?

A. Yes.

Q. And I took that to be from '66 to '68. Have I got that right?

A. In the fall of '67 to the spring of 1969. That was just after my father died. And I had a lot of family business at the time.

Q. And did you retire from that position, or were you asked —

A. Well, I simply continued as a full professor. You see, for those two years I was full professor and head of the department.

Q. I understand.

A. And thereafter I just simply continued as a full professor.

Q. My question was whether you stepped down voluntarily as the head of the modern languages department or whether you were asked to step down.

A. I was replaced by someone else. {3395|3396}

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no questions in re-examination.

THE COURT: Thank you, Doctor.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: As I indicated, Your Honour, I am prepared to proceed with formal matters with the evidence of the accused, as we discussed. So I call the accused.

For the benefit of the jury, Your Honour, what I propose to do now is to go through the booklet page by page, and where there are references citing other works, to provide the copies of those references starting with page 4. And I'd like, for the purposes of this operation, to show the jury the copies of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I understand that there may be some other witnesses coming out of town for Mr. Christie who may be interspersed with Mr. Zundel's evidence, and I certainly have no objection to the procedure.

— {3396|3397}

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, we have already confirmed, by admission of fact, that the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" was published by you; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Together with the introduction and the following words, or what I call postscript at the end.

A. Yes.

Q. I am now going to ask you to turn to page 4, and I'd just like to trace the portion that says, on the paragraph second from the top under the words, "Discouragement of Nationalism", it says:

"A classic example of the use of the 'Six Million' as an anti-national weapon appears in Manvell and Frankl's [Fraenkel's] book, The Incomparable Crime (London 1967), which deals with 'Genocide in the — Twentieth Century'."

And then it goes on to say:

"Anyone with a pride in being British will be somewhat surprised by the vicious attack made on the British Empire in this book. The authors quote Pandit Nehru, who wrote the following while in a British prison {3397|3398} in India: 'Since Hitler emerged from obscurity and became the Fuhrer of Germany, we have heard a great deal about racialism and the Nazi theory of the 'Herrenvolk'... But we in India have known racialism in all its forms ever since the commencement of British rule. The whole ideology of this rule was that of the 'Herrenvolk' and the master race India as a nation and Indians as individuals were subjected to insult, humiliation and contemptuous treatment. The English were an imperial race, we were told, with the God-given right to govern us and keep us in subjection; if we protested we were reminded of the 'tiger qualities of an imperial 'race'.'"

And this attributes the words in quotes to the book, "The Incomparable Crime", London, 1967, and it doesn't — it gives page 14 as the source, and it goes on to quote:

"'The white races of Europe and America' they write, 'have become used during centuries to regarding themselves as a 'Herrenvolk'. The twentieth century, the century of Auschwitz, has also achieved the first stage in the recognition of multi-{3398|3399}racial partnership'."

I now produce and show to you a copy of the cover page of the book called, "The Incomparable Crime" by Manvell and Heinrich Frankl, and I ask you to turn to page 14 and read the portion that is highlighted there, and compare it with the portion that's attributed to it in the book. Could you read that portion out loud, please?

A. "Since Hitler emerged from obscurity and became the Führer of Germany, we have heard a great deal about racialism and the Nazi theory of the 'Herrenvolk'. But we in India have known racialism in all its forms ever since the commencement of British rule. The whole ideology of this rule was that of the 'Herrenvolk' and the master race. There was no subterfuge about it. It was proclaimed in unambiguous language by those in authority. More powerful than words was the practice that accompanied them in generation after generation and year after year. India as a nation and Indians as individuals were subjected to insult, humiliation and contemptuous treatment. The English were an imperial race, we were told, with the God-given right to govern us and keep us in subjection; if we {3399|3400} protested we were reminded of the 'tiger qualities of an imperial race'. The white races of Europe and America have become used during centuries to regarding themselves as a 'Herrenvolk'. The twentieth century, the century of Auschwitz, has also achieved the first stage in the recognition of multi-racial partnership."

A. And to who were the words attributed by that book as you have read?

A. Roger Manvell and Heinrich Frankl.

Q. Are they attributed to Nehru in the quote? You will notice the portion you read is a quote.

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. And who is the author to whom that quote is attributed in the book itself?

A. To Nehru, who allegedly wrote this in the book, "The Discovery of India".

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is that "The Incomparable Crime", or "Intolerable Crime"?

MR. CHRISTIE: "The Incomparable Crime".

— EXHIBIT NO. 46: Photocopy of excerpt from book, "The Incomparable Crime". {3400|3401}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Turn to page 5. I think you will notice, at the top of the lefthand side, it says, the second paragraph, and I am quoting "[.]

"The aim in the following pages is quite simply to tell the Truth. The distinguished American historian Harry Elmer Barnes once wrote that 'An attempt to make a competent, objective and truthful investigation of the extermination question ... is surely the most precarious venture that an historian or demographer could undertake today.'"

I now produce and show to you an article from "Rampart Journal of Individualistic Thought" published by Pine Tree Publications, Larkspur, Colorado, an article by the late Harry Elmer Barnes entitled, "The Public Stake in Revisionism". I'd like you to read the paragraph page 36 highlighted, please.

A. "An attempt to make a competent, objective, and truthful investigation of the extermination question ..."

and then it goes on:

"... is now regarded as far more objectionable and deplorable than Professor Bemis viewed charging Roosevelt with war responsibility."

He continues:

"It is surely the most precarious venture that an historian or demographer could undertake today."

Q. I now produce and show to you a {3401|3402} list of titles of publications attributed to the late Harry Elmer Barnes in support of the contention that he was eminent. Have you undertaken to obtain this yourself, sir, from someone in Washington, D.C.?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Thank you. And is it a listing of all the titles published by that author?

A. It is. It is a list from the Library of Congress, a computerized card.

Q. A computerized card. Thank you.

THE COURT: Exhibit No. 47.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO. 47: Computerized card of book titles re Mr. Barnes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you undertake a search of the American Nation and an Encyclopaedia Biography, Volume 44 by Elmer Barnes, historian and educator, and is this a copy of what is revealed there in that publication?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And it gives the biography of that person.

A. Quite a complete one, yes.

Q. Yes. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that? Is there an objection?

May I have Your Honour's indulgence and, perhaps, the jury for just a moment? My friend asks the question — {3402|3403}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will express it out loud. My question was, Your Honour, whether these are matters or investigations that Mr. Zundel undertook before the charge was laid, or after the charge was laid that would go to his belief. And I think that that should be clarified as things are put to him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I take the position that Mr. Zundel is entitled to prove that these are investigations made predominantly after, some before, but mostly after the charge was laid.

This investigation and search for verification of the quotes is; in my submission, the right of Mr. Zundel to prove the accuracy and the truth of the quotes as attributed. If there is a desire to argue about context, then that is for my friend to question. I suggest that my client should be entitled to prove the sources of each of the quotes attributed, and to check those even after he is charged, to show that what the book says about the authors quoted in the book is true.

That is not to say any more than that, but that, I suggest, is the right of the accused.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't argue, Your Honour, with Mr. Zundel and Mr. Christie. He can lead as much as he wants going through authors and quotations in the book to show that they are, in fact, in the books.

The particular objection I had at this time was introducing an article from some source indicating that Harry Elmer Barnes is a distinguished historian. That, surely, is hearsay. It's not the {3403|3404} proper manner of proof for that particular item, and that would be a matter that I think would go to knowledge before the publication rather than after.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if I may —

THE COURT: It is an interesting question, gentlemen. I rule in favour of the defence for this reason, that what is being proposed is essentially something that goes to not really admissibility; it goes far more — although it may go to some admissibility. I have to exercise some judicial discretion. I exercise it in favour of the defence, because the main aspect of it is weight and not admissibility and it can be the subject of cross-examination and/or other evidence at the appropriate time.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You can join it with Exhibit 47, if you want to.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. What I propose is also to file a copy of Who's Who, 1961 – 70, dealing with the late Harry Elmer Barnes, his obituary in the New York Times, and the National Encyclopaedia of American Biography published by Drifton White, New Jersey, 1953, simply identified as obtained by the accused in support of that point.

THE COURT: All right. That can also be Exhibit 47, so that we don't get into large numbers too soon.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

EXHIBIT NO. 47: Photocopy of "Who's Who, 1961 – 70, re Harry Elmer Barnes, added to previous documents in exhibit 47. {3404|3405}

THE COURT: I see, gentlemen, it is four thirty. There is a matter I want to discuss with counsel which is a matter of housekeeping, but it is something that I think I should mention in the absence of the jury because it is housekeeping, and that is necessarily part of the trial.

Members of the jury, you have been very patient today. Thank you for your patience. Hopefully, what I suggest may bear some fruit, but we won't know that until I suggest it.

You are free to go until tomorrow morning at nine thirty. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 4:30 p.m.
 THE COURT: Mr. Zundel, you can step down.
 — The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, what I was going to suggest to you is this. Albeit the defence may, because of their planned schedules, the weather and the like, want a filler, and if that is the case, please be frank; I have passed this way more than once myself – on the other hand, if that is not the case, then surely, so the jury doesn't become totally bored {3405|3406} with what is really a mechanical process that I can see that the defence is about to go through, surely you gentlemen can liaise with one another and only select the issues that are in contest as to what you have been doing for the last two exhibits. That will keep the jury, I think, perhaps the old judge, from not going completely around the bend, if I can use that informal phraseology. In the event that you can't, then I will be happy to sit here as long as it takes, and I am sure the jury will too, at great expense to the public, but I don't know that that's necessary.

Does that sound reasonable to you both?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, that is very instructive to me. I hope it won't be offensive to my friend to suggest that I might introduce this type of evidence perhaps by consent. It really is rather formal, and I realize it seems ridiculous to go through the formality of asking the accused in each instance – in fact, I don't know what it accomplishes, frankly, but I have a page by page analysis of every quote, and some kind of evidence – not every quote; I think there are {3406|3407 (a)} Certified correct to the best of my skill and ability.

C.S.R

CARMEN OAKE

OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER {3406|3407}
 some I couldn't find, but most of them.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, how does that all sound to you?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, we have been starting early and going late on this every day. I wonder if we could have your indulgence to start at ten o'clock rather than at nine thirty tomorrow, and Mr. Christie and I can get together in the morning before that, and if there is any disagreement, those matters about which we disagree we can bring before the jury.

THE COURT: Yes. That brings up another subject. I will be quite happy to be flexible about the hours if I can see progress. If I can't see progress, gentlemen, if I don't discern it on a reasonable basis, I have been thinking in serious terms of sitting on Saturdays, because for obvious reasons that seems to me to be the way I intend to run the court if I must.

Bear that in mind when you confer with one another.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 14, 1985.

——— {3407|3408}

— Proceedings resumed at 10:06 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. My friend and I had a meeting this morning, and I think we are prepared to proceed, and I have nothing further in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: All right. Bring in the jury, please.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I have indicated –my friend did wish to go through the quotations, but I've indicated he can lead as much as he needs to to go through that process and do it quickly.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think we can go very quickly through this, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE REGISTRAR: The jury, please.

— The jury returned at 10:08 a.m.

THE REGISTRAR: Are counsel content the jury is all present?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I'm sorry to have held you up. Counsel were conferring, and that is the reason.

Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I first of all wanted to indicate, Your Honour, in the presence of the jury, that last night I received a transcript of a certain portion of the evidence. I reviewed that transcript and I came to the conclusion that I had made a mistake, and it was in the situation where my friend and {3408|3409}

Your Honour pointed out that a witness, Dr. Faurisson, had said something, and I said – the words I believe were, "Is this an opportunity for Your Honour and my friend to comment on the witness's evidence? I object." I've reviewed the transcript. I have come to the conclusion that I was quite wrong, and Your Honour and my learned friend were quite right, and I would like to apologize for raising the objection as I did at that time. That's all I can say, Your Honour, on that point.

THE COURT: It's accepted

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, sir. The other thing is, Your Honour, I've reviewed my situation as regards the defence, and I would like to just indicate on the record for all concerned that I anticipate concluding calling – I think a safe estimate of the conclusion of the defence's case would be probably Wednesday noon of next week, from what I can say at the moment, and I hope, therefore, that a reasonable estimate might be made on the basis of that.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Other than that, sir, I only have to call my next witness.

THE COURT: Please do.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. I'd like to call Frank Walus.

FRANK WALUS, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Walus, were you accused as a war criminal?

A. Yes, Your Honour. {3409|3410}

Q. What were you accused of, Mr. Walus?

A. To be – from 1939 till 1944, to be a Three-Star General. That's mean a Gruppenfuehrer, S.S. Gruppenfuehrer, and that I – that I, during the wartime, I killed dozens of Jews and dozens of Poles. That what was false, was not true.

Q. When were you accused of it?

A. I was accused – it was January 26, 1977.

Q. And where were the crimes alleged to have been committed?

A. In Poland, Kielce. That's a city, Kielce. And another city approximately fifty miles from Kielce; the name of the city is Czeszochowa.

Q. And where was the charge first made against you?

A. That was made against me on January 26, 1977.

Q. And in what city?

A. At Chicago, in Chicago.

Q. Were you ever in Poland during the war or between the years 1939 and 1945?

A. No, sir.

Q. What were you doing during those years?

A. I was taken as a forced labour by the Germans, and I was working for couple of farmers. Why did I work for couple of farmers, that was, I was very weak.

Q. "Weak"?

A. Weak, that's me, I was very small and I couldn't handle any heavy job on a farm.

Q. How old were you in 1939?

A. Seventeen years old.

Q. How many witnesses identified you as {3410|3411} committing war crimes in your trial?

A. Eleven witnesses, seven from Israel and four from United States.

Q. How did they identify you?

A. Well, they identify me that during – that they know me exactly, that they saw me, how did I kill Jews, you know, that I – how the Jews – I killed Jewish kids, that – how did I kill the Jewish kids, also Poles, in one of the Polish cemetery [sic].

Q. Who first raised the charges against you that you heard about?

A. Simon Wiesenthal.

Q. What did the eleven witnesses say when they identified you? – I withdraw the question.

Did they – what did they do when they identified you?

A. Judge Hoffman told the Jewish witnesses —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: This is nobody's fault. I'm not blaming the witness or counsel or anything.

MR. CHRISTIE: He doesn't understand the law.

THE COURT: That's right. You might try again.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. Don't tell us what anybody said to you, Mr. Walus. Please don't say what somebody said, just tell us what they did when they were identifying you.

A. Well, there was – they was [sic] pointing me out, "We know that he's – that Mr. Walus is the same guy which we saw him during wartime, making crimes."

Q. How did you prove that you were in Germany during the war?

A. I had documents from the German Income Tax – {3411|3412} German Internal Revenue, I had documents, or I had documents from the German – like, here we call them, over here, insurance company.

Q. Yes.

A. Insurance company, and —

Q. In other words, when you worked on the German farms, you were admitted to the health scheme of Germany?

A. Yeah, and I also had documents from the International Red Cross.

Q. Were any of the people whoever pointed you out charged with any offences, to your knowledge?

A. I don't know, Your Honour.

Q. What did this do to your life?

A. Well, it hurt me very badly.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. Objection, Your Honour. I don't see the relevance of what it did with his life.

THE COURT: How is that relevant, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: The same processes would be involved in the present case, Your Honour. The specific reference is to "The West, War and Islam", the connection of the media to the Zionist cause, the political influence Zionism plays in the West. The article says, "Political and religious Zionism play a disproportionately large role in the West because of Zionist dominance of the mass media, information, education and entertainment." I'm trying to demonstrate how what happened in Mr. Walus' case is also the same situation in Mr. Zundel's case. There's also a reference to certain people who call themselves Jews who have shown themselves to be vicious, greedy and militant. I intend to demonstrate how some people who call themselves {3412|3413} Jews have done types of things that fit within that category, in common-sense parlance, and this is one example. The man was charged as a war criminal. I'm trying to demonstrate how unfair some of these processes have been, how false testimony has been introduced. That's the reason, because, of course, the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", disputes the validity of the war crimes trials, and I will argue the same mass hysteria seems to infect our society when allegations against individuals are made involving the word "Nazis", even now, as they did then. I will argue that it's not that much different today. That's my reason.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I certainly see a major difference, Your Honour. I'd suggest what puts it beyond the realm of relevance in this trial, to a charge laid in the United States, presumably by the United States authorities thirty years after the events, where there were identification problems, it seems to me there is no indication of identification problems at Nuremberg. We haven't heard whether Mr. Walus was acquitted or not, which I think is certainly relevant to the —

MR. CHRISTIE: I'll lead that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And there is no indication that – because he was charged, that this was as a result of some. Zionist conspiracy or control of the media he was charged.

MR. GRIFFITHS [CHRISTIE]: I intend to prove that, too, because —

THE COURT: Through this witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The same process of Simon Wiesenthal that applied here has also been applied against my client in the past. {3413|3414}

THE COURT: Who is Simon Wiesenthal?

MR. CHRISTIE: Simon Wiesenthal, I can tell Your Honour, is a world-famous, quote, "Nazi-hunter", and he's the man who went after Frank Walus. He's also been involved in making allegations against my client, writing to members of – well, the government, influencing people throughout the world, and I just want to introduce this evidence to show that influence; because the pamphlet, "The West, War and Islam" alleges that there is a very large influence called Zionism, and political and religious Zionism, and my client has reason to – has also helped this man; I will be leading evidence from this man that my client has helped him in his defence. I will lead evidence that this man was ultimately acquitted, and I will also lead evidence how close it came. That's what I intend to show. It shows —

THE COURT: You might lay some more groundwork and I will reserve on it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

Q. Did you have communication from Ernst Zundel about helping your defence?

A. During – that's 1978, during my process, that mean during my trial, —

Q. Yes.

A. — I get a – I receive a letter from Mr. Zundel, and he ask me if I need any financial help. So I answered him, I answer him in German language, that – that I need a help, financial help. So he sent me during the during the trial, a couple of thousand dollars, approximately; I don't remember, four or five thousand dollar.

Q. Did the media —

THE COURT: Well, perhaps you might just change {3414|3415} that question a little bit so it's not leading.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry.

Q. What happened when it became public knowledge that Simon Wiesenthal had said there was a Nazi in Chicago and identified you?

THE COURT: We haven't heard that from him.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, Your Honour. The witness does have some difficulty with English. I'm sorry if I'm leading, but ...

THE WITNESS: Yeah. Well, Your Honour, I was —

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Tell us what happened.

A. During the whole of four year while I was living in Chicago, I still live at the same place under the same address; I was beaten from all kind, different people, especially the most of the time from Poles. They beat me on the street, in the stores. I was about approximately ten, fifteen times beaten [sic]. I was also beaten [sic] by – by some Jewish – Jews leader, I don't know how they call them, Jewish organization, I cannot remember. But the Jew, after my case was thrown out, he came – he came next day to my – he visited me at my house and he asked me that – he asked me for forgiveness, and I said, "Don't forget about all – don't worry about, you know," so – he owns two stores, that "Any time you need something, step in, see me, visit me, and you can take whatever you want." But I never visited him. I forgave him.

I was – excuse me – I was hospital – at that time I was beaten [sic] by the Jew, it was in downtown in Chicago; I was in a hospital eight days that time.

Q. Did this accusation of being a war criminal have an effect on your ability to defend yourself?

A. I can't understand exactly this question. {3415|3416} Could you – Your Honour, this question, get me clearly – could you ask me, give me that clearly this question?

Q. I understand. Were there stories in the papers about you?

A. Oh, yeah, oh, yeah, there was lots of story. Well, from beginning, that means from 1977, January, till the end, there was lots, lots, I mean, about that, this accusation, was in the newspaper, and also on the television, but during the time where I was accused, on January 26, there was in every fifteen minutes in the television, on the television program, "On the southwest side Chicago lives a man with the name Frank Walus who – he's a war criminal who kills lots – dozens of Jews and dozens of Poles." That was every fifteen minutes on the television, on any station.

Q. Can you tell us whether there was [sic] any similar stories about other crimes at that time?

A. That time exactly not, but little bit later, that was about —

THE COURT: You mean other crimes generally speaking?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, that's just a relevant comparison.

THE COURT: I think he's going to launch into something that he would probably be stopped saying.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. I'm sorry, I withdraw that question, Mr. Walus. What was the prosecution endeavouring to do with you?

THE COURT: Prosecution where?

MR. CHRISTIE: In Chicago, I guess.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. What were they – where were {3416|3417} you supposed to go?

A. Well, after Judge Hoffman, that was 1980, Judge Hoffman find me guilty, so – but fourteen days later Israel ask United States government for extradition. Well, if I would defend myself, if I wouldn't had [sic] any evidence proof that I never was a war criminal, probably they would deport me to Israel and they would hang me up, you know, that's all.

Q. Were you ever in the S.S.?

A. Never.

Q. Were you ever in the German army?

A. Never.

Q. Do you know how you came to be suspected and charged?

A. I can't understand this question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, please, for a second, Your Honour. I beg your pardon.

Q. What did this do, this situation from '77 to '80, what did it do to your friends, your family, and yourself?

A. Well, all people – I mean, all friends, I lose complete contact with any friends, you know. I still have no any contact with those friends, so I have new friends now, and wherever I step in during that time, that's mean during that accusation, in the store, wherever I – wherever I was, even on the street, everybody look, look at me, when – I really was pure devil, and excuse me, sir, that I am tell you like that, but it really was like that, when I was be a devil, they look at me, you know, people. And also I had – during that time I had two heart attacks, and I was in the hospital twice during that time.

Q. Did you have a lawyer?

A. Yes, I have a lawyer. I had two lawyers. {3417|3418} The first lawyer name was —

Q. Never mind.

THE COURT: That's all right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Did it cost you money?

A. Yes, about approximately hundred twenty thousand dollar, and I still owe lots of money to people, I mean, which I borrowed from the people I still owe the people lots of money.

Q. What did you do for a living?

A. I was before I am – because of my – I had together all together six heart attacks; I am retired since 1975, I get retire.

Q. What did you do before then?

A. I was working at Electromotives (phonetic), that's General Motor[s] Corporation, as a locomotive fitter.

Q. Locomotive ...

A. Locomotive fitter.

Q. Fitter?

A. Yeah.

Q. What effect did it have on your children and your wife?

THE COURT: We haven't heard he had a wife and children.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. You have a family?

A. Yes, a wife and four children. Well, they get – they get hurt the same way like me, and many time[s], while we was [sic] at home together, we was crying like – like little kids, like little kids we was crying. We were praying and ask Our Lord for help. That was our ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Do you have any questions, Mr. Griffiths? {3418|3419}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just a few brief questions, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Just take a minute, Mr. Walus.

Okay? Mr. Walus, was the proceeding in Chicago a denaturalization proceeding, something to take away your citizenship?

A. Yes, yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. And they took away from me the citizenship.

Q. And then to deport you to Germany?

A. No, there was trying to deport me to Israel.

Q. I see. And you were acquitted?

A. Pardon me?

Q. You were acquitted?

A. I can't understand.

THE COURT: You got off? Did you get off?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Q. Nobody deported you?

A. No, no, no.

Q. In Chicago, do people sometimes get charged with murder or rape, very serious charges, and are acquitted?

A. Yeah, I hear that many time in the newspaper, in the news and newspaper.

Q. And some of those people are acquitted afterwards?

A. No ...

Q. Do you know what the word "acquitted" means?

A. No. {3419|3420}

Q. Okay. Do some of those people get off who are charged with very serious offences?

A. Well, I don't know, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Walus. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Any re-examination, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Walus.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have another witness this afternoon, but I am prepared to call the accused to carry on the process as quickly as possible of going through the book.

THE COURT: Yes. He is already under oath.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, resumed stand.

THE REGISTRAR: Just to remind you, Mr. Zundel, you are still under oath.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I understand.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I ask if the jury could have the copies to follow of the book, Exhibit 1? Thank you. Thank you very much.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE (Continued):

Q. Do you have Exhibit 1 in front of you, witness?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And yesterday when we were dealing with page five and we came to the – we were dealing with the article by Harry Elmer Barnes, and I think I overlooked, {3420|3421} after having you read it, which was page 36 of the Harry Elmer Barnes, the publication in "Revisionism". Is that the article you checked, the highlighted portion?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And does it accurately reflect what is indicated at the portion attributed to Harry Elmer Barnes?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm content that it does, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Are you satisfied?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And did you undertake and instruct a search to be made to ascertain that fact?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And in that regard did you hire the assistance or, rather, obtain the assistance of someone in Washington, District of Columbia, —

A. Yes, I did.

Q. — to obtain this information?

A. Yes, I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit?

THE REGISTRAR: Forty-eight.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT 48: Photocopy of 17 pages of article, "The Public Stake in Revisionism".

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, going down to the bottom underneath the words "Jews Called Emigration 'Extermination'", referring to the portion that says,

"A 1936 anti-German propaganda book by Leon Feuchtwanger and others entitled {3421|3422} Der Gelbe Fleck: Die Ausrottung von 500,000 Deutschen Juden (The Yellow Spot: The Extermination of 500,000 German Jews, Paris, 1936)" —

I now produce and show to you the book Der Gelbe Fleck: Die Ausrottung von 500,000 Deutschen Juden. Could you check and see if there's a highlighted portion there that is quoted in the book, and if so, please read it.

A. The book is, Der Gelbe Fleck, subtitled Die Ausrottung von 500,000 Deutschen Juden. The author is Leon Feuchtwanger. The subtitle translated is, The Extermination of 500,000 German Jews. The title of the book is, The Yellow Spot, and the German text reads, on page 7, —

Q. There's a translation attached to that. We will file it with that, so just read the translation portion if you would, the relevant portion.

MR. CHRISTIE: I've advised my friend of this, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: The paragraph in the book, The Yellow Spot, is headed, "Viele Etappen – aber ein Ziel", translated "Many stages but one goal", begins as follows:

"Ever since National Socialism has come to power in Germany it has never ceased to take steps sponsoring the annihilation (Ausrottung) of the Jewish population. Carefully, like a spider, it has spun a web in which half a million people, regardless of their age and sex, had to become hopelessly entangled. This campaign of extermination was waged not only against the 500,000 men and {3422|3423} women, children and old people belonging to the Jewish community but it was directed also against further hundreds of thousands who were considered 'Non-Aryans' due to one of their grand-parents and were therefore outlawed and ostracised."

End of translation.

MR. CHRISTIE: End of translation. Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Forty-nine.

THE REGISTRAR: Forty-nine.

— EXHIBIT 49: Photocopy of Five Pages of German Book "Der Gelbe Fleck: Die Ausrottung von 500,000 Deutschen Juden", and one page of English translation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Moving on to the next quote, it refers to

"A further example was the sensational book by the German-Jewish Communist, Hans Beimler, called Four Weeks in the Hands of Hitler's Hell-Hounds: The Nazi Murder Camp of Dachau," which was published in New York in 1933. Incidentally, did you notice the publication date on Der Gelbe Fleck?

A. I did not look for it.

Q. Sorry?

A. I did not look for it.

Q. All right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm content with 1936, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. I now produce and show to you the book – front page of the book, Four Weeks in the Hands of Hitler's {3423|3424} Hell Hounds: The Nazi Murder Camp of Dachau, by Hans Beimler. Would you check and see if there is a highlighted portion there that refers to the quoted portion in the book?

A. The book title is stated correctly. The publication date is 1933, and the highlighted portion reads it refers to Dachau as a "murder-camp", the "fact of the year 1933", then the whole paragraph quoted is:

"It is capable of proof that fifty human beings have already been murdered in Dachau by the ..."

Q. How many?

A. Fifty.

Q. Yes.

A. That's what it says here.

"... human beings have already been murdered in Dachau by the perverted fiends of fascism, for the satisfaction of their depraved passions". Heads hacked in pieces, bodies torn to shreds, cry for vengeance!" – end of quote.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Fifty.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT 50: Five Pages from Book, "Four Weeks in the Hands of Hitler's Hell-Hounds: The Nazi Murder Camp of Dachau".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Excuse me. There are other highlighted portions. Would you please read them and the page number as well then? We're going to have to put it back together.

A. On page 6, the highlighted portion reads that. it was "Beimler's experiences in Dachau", and on page 7 {3424|3425} it reads:

"Anyone horrified on reading this description of the murder camp of Dachau must not ease his heart with the words of Pontius Pilate: 'I wash my hands of guilt.'"

And then another highlighted portion:

"Whatever may befall the German proletarians in Dachau and in other blood-soaked prison camps ..."

And then the final highlighted portion:

"Thus Beimler's book upon the Dachau murder camp becomes a barred sword for the battle against murderous fascism and all that supports it."

Q. Okay. I think that's come undone. I'll have to see if we can't —

THE COURT: . The Clerk will.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. The next quote in the book is on the next column. It refers to — it says, and I quote, it's in the paragraph:

"The encouragement of Jewish immigration should not be confused with the purpose of concentration camps in pre-war Germany."

Going on, omitting some words, it says:

"Reitlinger admits that between 1934 and 1938 it seldom exceeded..."

that is, the concentration camp population,

"...throughout the whole of Germany, and the number of Jews was never more than 3,000." {3425|3426}

I now produce and show to you the — it refers to The S.S.: Alibi of a Nation, London, 1956, page 253.

I now produce and show to you the book titled The S.S.: Alibi of a Nation, by Reitlinger, page 254. Could you read the highlighted portion there and check and see if it compares to the text?

A. "Between June 1934 and the Austrian Anschluss of March 1938, there was not the shadow of any resistance to Hitler's authority. Nevertheless in these four years the population of the concentration camps seldom fell below twenty thousand."

Q. Does it say anything there about the number of Jews being never more than three thousand?

A. Not on the page 254 and 255.

Q. All right, thank you. Did you instruct someone to obtain that information and search to check that reference?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And who did you instruct to do that?

A. Researcher in Washington, D.C., who went to the Library of Congress for me.

Q. Why did you not get the books more locally?

A. Because the man is a very capable researcher, and he has access to every book on the face of the earth, virtually, in Washington.

Q. In the Library of Congress?

A. The Library of Congress.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Who is the author?

MR. CHRISTIE: Gerald Reitlinger, Your Honour. {3426|3427}

THE COURT: All right. Yes, 51.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-one.

— EXHIBIT 51: Photocopy of Five Pages from Book “The S.S.: Alibi of a Nation, 1922-1945”.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Moving underneath the picture, quoting, “The Nazi view ...”

THE COURT: Excuse me just a minute.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry, sir.

THE COURT: There is a —

MR. CHRISTIE: I’m sorry if I made a mistake, Your Honour. I see what you’re referring [sic] to.

THE COURT: I don’t know if you want that slip —

MR. CHRISTIE: I don’t know what it is, sir, I’m sorry. Thank you. No, I don’t.

THE COURT: I didn’t think you did.

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. The quote is attributed to — or the words are as follows:

“The Nazi view of Jewish emigration was not limited to a negative policy of simple expulsion, but was formulated along the lines of modern Zionism. The founder of political Zionism in the 19th century, Theodor Herzl, in his work The Jewish State, had originally conceived of Madagascar as a national homeland for the Jews ...”

I now produce and show to you the title page of The Jewish State {3427|3428} State, (Der Judenstaat), by Theodor Herzl, new translation by Harry Zohn. Could you check and see if there is a highlighted portion, and if so, if it compares to the book, and if you would, please read it out.

A. The title of the book is called The Jewish State, translation from the German Der Judenstaat by Theodor Herzl, a new translation by Harry Zohn, with an introduction by Joseph Adler, Herzl Press, New York. On page 52 is says:

“But the very creation of the Jewish State will be beneficial to the neighboring countries, because the cultivation of an area enhances the value of its surroundings, on a large as on a small scale.”

Q. Are there any other highlighted portions there referable to that quote?

A. Yes. It says,

“Palestine or Argentina? Is Palestine or Argentina preferable? The Society will take whatever it is given and whatever is favored by the public opinion of the Jewish people. The Society will determine both points.”

Q. And in that reference, there’s no reference to Madagascar; is that right?

A. Not on this page, but in the book there is.

Q. You’ve read the book and —

A. In the original German years ago, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Okay. Could I introduce that as the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. 52.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE REGISTRAR: 52. {3428|3429}

— EXHIBIT 52: Photocopy of Two Pages from Book, “The Jewish State (Der Judenstaat)”.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. The next quote is from The Final Solution by Gerald Reitlinger. It says — I quote from page 5, the last paragraph:

“The first Nazi proposals for a Madagascar solution were made in association with the Schacht Plan of 1938. On the advice of Goering, Hitler agreed to send the President of the Reichsbank, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, to London for discussions with Jewish representatives Lord Bearsted and Mr. Rublee of New York.”

And then it gives a quotation of Reitlinger, The Final Solution, London, 1953, page 20.

I now produce and show to you an extract of the book The Final Solution by Gerald Reitlinger, The Attempt to Exterminate the Jews of Europe 1939-1945. I’d ask you to read the portion highlighted and compare it with the book and read it out loud, if you would, please.

A. The book title is The Final Solution.

Q. Please don’t read the title because I don’t think it’s in dispute.

A. Okay.

Q. Just read the portion highlighted and tell me whether it compares to the —

A. On page 20 of this book it says,

“The proposal which Schacht discussed in London during December with Lord Bearsted, Lord Winterton, and Mr. Rublee was roughly as follows: The German Government were to freeze the assets of the Jewish community {3429|3430} which were to become the ...”

Excuse me a minute ...

“... become the security for an international loan, repayable in twenty to twenty-five years. On the assumption that the Jewish assets were worth 1,500 million marks, there would be enough foreign currency to finance an orderly emigration of the Jews of the Greater Reich in three to five years. Schacht then returned to Germany and at Berchtesgaden on January 2nd, 1939, he had a long personal discussion with Hitler concerning the reception of his proposals in London. Hitler was apparently impressed, for three days later he appointed Schacht Special Delegate for the promotion of Jewish emigration.”

And one final quote on page 21:

“At the conference of November 12th Goering had mentioned casually that Hitler was considering a Jewish settlement in Madagascar and now significantly the word ‘evacuation’ was coupled with ‘emigration.’ [”] End of quote.

Q. Reading on in the book, “Did six Million Really Die?”, from what — from which the last quote was, I read the words:

“The plan was that German Jewish assets would be frozen as security for an international loan to finance Jewish emigration to Palestine, and Schacht reported on these negotiations to Hitler at Berchtesgaden on January 2, 1939. The plan, which failed due to British refusal to accept the financial terms, was first put {3430|3431} forward on November 12, 1938 at a conference convened by Goering, who revealed that Hitler was already considering the emigration of Jews to a settlement in Madagascar (ibid. ...”

Do you know what “ibid.” means?

A. Like in the previous page.

Q. Like from the previous reference?

A. From previous book, yeah.”

Q. “Page 21”. Have you read that part?

A. Yes, I did just now.

Q. Does it confirm the facts set out there, to your mind?

A. Absolutely.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Did you —

THE COURT: That is Exhibit number ...

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-three.

— EXHIBIT 53: Photocopy of Five Pages from Book, “The Final Solution: The Attempt to Exterminate the Jews of Europe 1939-1945”.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Did you instruct someone to find that out?

A. I knew about those things from my reading in German sources, and by interviewing some German officials during my investigations years ago, but I did have this checked out again.

Q. By the same person?

A. No, by a different person, different library.

Q. I see. Thank you. We're now on page 6, and the next quote says, in the paragraph: {3431|3432}

"By 1939, the consistent efforts of the German Government to secure the departure of Jews from the Reich had resulted in the emigration of 400,000, and an additional 480,000 emigrants from Austria and Czechoslovakia, which constituted almost their entire Jewish populations."

And then we come to a portion,

"This was accomplished through Offices of Jewish Emigration in Berlin, Vienna and Prague established by Adolf Eichmann, the head of the Jewish Investigation Office of the Gestapo."

Now, the next part is what I would like to draw your attention to. It refers to Manvell and Frankl (sic), S.S. and Gestapo, page 60.

I now produce and show to you a title page and an extract from the book S.S. and Gestapo: Rule by Terror, Roger Manvell, advised by Heinrich Fraenkel, and I'd ask you to open that and find the highlighted portion and see if it confirms the facts, and if so, read it out loud, page 60.

A. Yes, I have found it.

Q. Is there a portion there that supports that quote?

A. Yes.

Q. Please read it, please.

A. "The great tragedy of German Jewry was enhanced by the very restricted legal entry into Palestine decreed by the British, who held the mandate, as a result of Arab pressure – 15,000 only were permitted legal entry during 1939, the year following the November pogrom. {3432|3433}

German policy at this stage was to rid herself of her Jews at the expense of any nation willing to adopt them: their property was confiscated by the State, and for the most part they emerged as penniless refugees. The SS and the Gestapo used their 'influence' to hasten the lucrative emigration of people Hitler no longer wanted. The Gestapo became the central authority which, at a price, gave exit permits to anxious and fearful Jews. An extraordinary situation arose when members of the Zionist underground formed to sponsor and organize illegal immigration into Palestine found themselves working in association with the SS and Gestapo officers in Germany and Austria for the express purpose of making the countries 'Jew-free'. A common policy united these deadliest of enemies. SS Captain Adolph Eichmann readily agreed to establish a training camp for young Jews in Austria where they could learn farming in anticipation of being smuggled illegally into Palestine."

Q. So that's the portion there that's referable to the quote; is that right?

A. No, there are other sections which are highlighted because it has a bearing on it.

Q. Yes. Okay, go ahead.

A. "The anti-Jewish policy which phased its way through Himmler's tidy mind found its first expression in the encouragement of mass emigration, ..." {3433|3434}

That's one of them. And then there's another one which says that

"By 1938 he was an SS Captain in charge of the office for Jewish emigration in Austria ..."

which has a direct bearing on that quote.

Another quote is,

"Mass-emigration, therefore, represented Nazi policy for the Jews throughout the prewar period."

And another quote is that

"By September 1939 only some 280,000 Jews were left in Germany and Austria."

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much. Could that be the next exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Fifty-four.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-four.

— EXHIBIT 54: Photocopy of Five Pages from Book, "S.S. and Gestapo: Rule by Terror".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Moving down to the paragraph which says,

"German Policy Towards the Jews after the Outbreak of War",

I'd like to draw your attention to the portion that begins with the words, "On September 5, 1939 Chaim Weizmann, the principle Zionist leader, had declared war against Germany on behalf of the world's Jews, stating that 'the Jews stand by Great Britain and will fight on the side of the democracies ... The Jewish Agency is ready to enter into immediate arrangements for {3434|3435} utilizing Jewish manpower, technical ability, resources etc. ... (Jewish Chronicle, September 8, 1939."

I now produce and show to you what purports to be the Jewish Chronicle of the 9th – or the 8th of September, 1939, and I'd ask you to read the highlighted portion, compare it with the text in the book and read it out loud.

A. The article in the Jewish Chronicle of 9/8/39 is headed "Notes of the Week". Headline: "All Zionist Support for Britain", and the quote by Dr. Weizmann reads:

"Dr. Weizmann, writing in that capacity to the Prime Minister, declared: 'I wish to confirm, in the most explicit manner, the declarations which I and my colleagues have made during the last month, and especially in the last week, that the Jews stand by Great Britain and will fight on the side of the democracies.'" End of quote.

Q. Is there another quote in that article highlighted as well?

A. Yes, there is on page 8 the same thing.

It says:

"Our Partner in Zion", headlined.

Q. Read that quote.

A. "The quarrel between the N.Z.O. and the Zionist Organization has been long and bitter. But on the war issue they stand exactly ..."

"They stand exactly ..." What is the word missing?

"... (in) exactly the same position, loyally and enthusiastically supporting the cause {3435|3436} of Britain and her allies. The N.Z.O., in its statement, used a particularly apt phrase when it describes Britain as 'our partner in Zion.'" End of quote.

Q. Are there any other quotes in that article referable to the —

A. Yes, on page 29.

Q. "Utilization of Jewish manpower, technical ability and resources"?

A. Yes.

Q. What – read those, please, quickly.

A. There are the same quotes represented by Dr. Weizmann:

"Letter to the Prime Minister." "The Jewish Agency is ready to enter into immediate arrangements for supplying Jewish manpower, technical ability, resources, etc."

And under the headline, "N.Z.O. Stands by Democracy", we have

"The New Zionist Organization on Sunday called on the Jews of the world to aid Britain, France, and Poland in their fight against Hitler."

And the final quote:

"The Jewish nation's place is therefore on all the fronts where these countries fight for those very foundations of society whose Magna Charta is our Bible."

Q. Did it say "the Jewish nation"?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Pardon?

A. "The Jewish nation's place". {3436|3437}

Q. Thank you.

A. And the final quote, on page 30 says, quote:

"The war that has been thrust upon Great Britain by Nazi Germany is also our battle. All assistance we can render to the British Army and the British people we will give willingly." End of quote.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be the next exhibit?

THE COURT: Fifty-five.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

— EXHIBIT 55: Photocopy of Four Pages from Article in "The Jewish Chronicle".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. The next quote alleged in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" deals with Reitlinger, and I'd like to read the sentence previous then show you the article and ask you if it conforms to the text. Quote, at the bottom of page six on the right[-]hand side:

"The protocol of a conversation between Hitler and the Hungarian regent Horthy on April 17th, 1943, reveals that the German leader personally requested Horthy to release 100,000 Hungarian Jews for work in the 'pursuit-plane programme' of the Luftwaffe at a time when the aerial bombardment of Germany was increasing."

Then it says, "Reitlinger, Die Endlo[su]ng, Berlin, 1956, page 478.

I now produce and show to you the book by Gerald Reitlinger, Die Endlo[su]ng. It's in German, and I'd {3437|3438} ask you to check that text, compare it with the book, and read it out loud, hitting the highlighted portion.

A. It's Gerald Reitlinger's book, Die Endlo[su]ng.

Q. Is this in German?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do you speak German?

A. I sure do.

Q. Do you read German?

A. I sure do.

Q. Do you speak English?

A. Reasonably well.

Q. Do you speak other languages?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What?

A. French, some local dialects. I understand other languages.

Q. Would you read the part that's highlighted in the book?

A. It's in German.

Q. Is there a translation attached to the book?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. It is?

A. It is a copy of his English book, so we assume that the translation is the same as in the German book.

Q. Have you checked the translation?

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm content that it is, Your Honour. {3438|3439}

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. All right. please read the English version, specifically, that part that's highlighted.

A. "It must be considered probable that Hitler had ordered Himmler to make these arrangements soon after the successful browbeating of Admiral Horthy at Klessheim on March 16th, 1944. It is certain, at least, that as early as April 9th, Hitler told Field-Marshal Milch, Commander-in-Chief of the Luftwaffe, that Himmler was to find 100,000 Hungarian Jews for the construction of underground aircraft factories. There was nothing unguanine about this project, which sprang from the intense Allied bombing of the German aircraft factories from February 19th onwards. But, as we shall see, the Jager plan was destined to be used, just as the 'Buna' project had been used in 1943, to camouflage the massacre of Jews. To find 100,000 so-called 'Jager workers' 400,000 Hungarian Jews had to be sorted at the Birkenau siding."

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit?

THE COURT: Fifty-six.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-six.

— EXHIBIT 56: Photocopy of Eight Pages from Book "Die Endlo[su]ng" in German with English Translation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Turning to page number 7, the next quote alleged in the booklet is to page 77 of The Final Solution by Gerald Reitlinger. It exists on – under the paragraph "Emigration Still Favoured", and I'm {3439|3440} going to read the sentence previous to that. Have you found that part?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. All right. It reads:

"Eichmann had in fact been commissioned in August to draw up a detailed Madagascar Plan, and Dannecker was employed in research on Madagascar at the French Colonial Office (Reitlinger, The Final Solution, p. 77)."

I now produce and show to you a copy of the book The Final Solution by Gerald Reitlinger. I'd ask you if you could expeditiously read page 77, the highlighted portion, check the text and read it out loud.

A. Page 77:

"The two circulars, sent out from Luther's department, were dated July 2nd and August 15th, and signed by Rademacher, but the second circular shows that the details had been worked out by Eichmann, since the enclosures are signed by his assistant Dannecker and bear the letterhead of Kurfu[r]stenstrasse 116. This fits in with the assertion made by Dieter Wisliceny, a close friend and associate, that Eichmann was commissioned to draw up a Madagascar plan in August and that Dannecker, the future organiser of the Jewish deportation trains to Auschwitz, was employed in research on Madagascar at the French Ministry for Colonies, and that the matter occupied Eichmann for the next year." {3440|3441}

On page 79:

"The war with the Soviet Union has in the meantime created the possibility of disposing of other territories for the Final Solution. In consequence the Fuehrer has decided that the Jews should be evacuated not to Madagascar but to the East. Madagascar need no longer therefore be considered in connection with the Final Solution." End of quote.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT 57: Photocopy of Four Pages from Book "The Final Solution"

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Did you instruct the preparation of that research and have you checked it yourself?

A. Yes, I did, yeah.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-seven.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Are you familiar with the Madagascar Plan?

A. Yes, I have been for quite some time.

Q. Are you familiar with the Luther memorandum?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Moving on to the next quotation, I'd like to read – that is just underneath that, it says "Schmidt, Hitler's Interpreter". I'd like to read the preceding sentence and then ask you to check the text.

"It certainly met with Hitler's approval, for as early as June 17th his interpreter, Schmidt, recalls Hitler observing to Mussolini that 'One could found a State of {3441|3442} Israel in Madagascar' (Schmidt, Hitler's Interpreter ...)" etc.

I now produce and show to you an extract of the book entitled Hitler's Interpreter by Dr. Paul Schmidt, S-c-h-m-i-d-t. I'd ask you to check the text for any highlighted portion and then read it out loud.

A. On page 177 it says:

"I noted with some surprise that Hitler's attitude to England seemed to have changed. He suddenly wondered whether it really would be a good thing to destroy the British Empire. 'It is, after all, a force for order in the world,' he said to the rather nonplussed Mussolini. Even his fanatical rage against the Jews seemed to have abated. 'One could found a State of Israel in Madagascar,' he observed to Mussolini when they were discussing the future of the French colonial empire." End of quote.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Fifty-eight.

MR. CHRISTIE: Fifty-eight, thank you, sir.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-eight.

— EXHIBIT 58: Photocopy of Four Pages of Book "Hitler's Interpreter".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. The next quote in the book is regarding the book Dr. Goebbels: His Life and Death, and I believe that – I've got it out of order; my mistake.

Going further down, it deals with Reitlinger's book, The Final Solution again, and it says, and I quote:

"The directive reads: 'The war with the Soviet {3442|3443} Union has in the meantime created the possibility of disposing of other territories for the Final Solution. In consequence the Fuehrer has decided that the Jews should be evacuated not to Madagascar but to the East. Madagascar need no longer therefore be considered in connection with the Final Solution.'"

Have you read that portion out of Reitlinger's text?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Does it compare?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Is it accurate?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Thank you. Did you instruct people to research into that matter and check it?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. All right. And going on, it quotes the book, Dr. Goebbels, I mentioned. Reading the sentence previously:

"Only a month later, however, on March 7th, 1942, Goebbels wrote a memorandum in favour of the Madagascar Plan as a 'final solution' of the Jewish question (Manvell & Frankl, ...) etc.

I now produce and show to you the extract of the book called Dr. Goebbels: His Life and Death by Roger Manvell and Heinrich Fraenkel.

I ask you to check the text for the highlighted portion and read it. Could you give us the page of the highlighted portion, sir?

A. Yes, it does. {3443|3444}

Q. Could you give us the page number, please?

A. It's a little in disarray. Page 7 ...

Q. Is it page 165?

A. It's page 185.

Q. All right. Could you read us the quote, please?

A. "On March 7, 1952:

'The Jewish question must be solved within a pan-European frame. These are 11,000,000 Jews still in Europe. To begin with, they will have to be concentrated in the East; possibly an island, such as Madagascar, can be assigned to them after the war. In any case there can be no peace in Europe until every Jew has been eliminated from the continent.'

Q. What would be the word for 'eliminated', in German?

A. To eliminate —

THE COURT: Just a moment. I thought that —

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw the question.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be the next exhibit, please?

THE WITNESS: There's one more quote on page 207.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. All right, if you have another quote referable to that on that page, please read it.

A. "The Jewish question must be solved within a ..."

Q. Excuse me. Before you do that, I'd like to identify where it's referable. {3444|3445}

A. It's page 207 in the Manvell book. It just —

Q. Go ahead and read that portion then, please.

A. "The Jewish question must be solved within a pan-European frame. There are 11,000,000 Jews still in Europe. To begin with, they will have to be concentrated in the East; possibly an island, such as Madagascar, can be assigned to them after the war. In any case there can be no peace in Europe until every Jew has been eliminated from the continent."

It is from Dr. Goebbels: His Life and Death. They are two different books and it's twice quoted the same, two different versions.

Q. Two different versions of the book?

A. Right.

Q. And you've checked that point?

A. Yeah.

Q. I see what you mean.

A. One is an English edition and the other is an American edition.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Can that be the next exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Sixty.

THE REGISTRAR: Fifty-nine.

THE COURT: Sorry, fifty-nine.

— EXHIBIT 59: Photocopy of Six Pages from Book, "Dr. Goebbels: His Life and Death".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. The next quote is on page 7 in the paragraph "Even as late as May 1944 ...", at the top of the page on the right hand said, "... the Germans were prepared to allow {3445|3446} the emigration of one million European Jews from Europe. An account of this proposal is given by Alexander Weissberg, a prominent Soviet Jewish scientist deported during the Stalin purges, in his book Die Geschichte ..."

What's that?

A. Die Geschichte von Joel Brand.

Q. What does that mean in English?

A. "The History of Joel Brand".

Q. It says "Cologne, 1956". It says:

"Weissberg, who spent the war in Cracow though he expected the Germans to intern him in a concentration camp, explains that on the personal authorisation of Himmler, Eichmann had sent the Budapest Jewish leader Joel Brand to Istanbul with an offer to the Allies to permit the transfer of one million European Jews in the midst of the war."

Then it goes on:

"If the 'extermination' writers are to be believed, ..." etc.

I'd like to now produce and show to you what purports to be an extract from the book you mentioned. If you could just read the title — now, this apparently has not been translated. If you could translate the portion, please, as quickly as you could, and I'll file it, and if the Crown wishes they can dispute the translation.

A. Alex Weissberg, Die Geschichte von Joel Brand, which is "The History of Joel Brand".

Q. If you could give us the page number and —

A. On page 200. {3446|3447}

Q. Yes.

A. Do you want me to read it in German or just to try to —

Q. Just in English, if you could, please.

A. It is a quote, and it says, "You are convinced, Mr. Brand, that the Germans will liberate or set free the Jews if we accept your offer. If one can believe Eichmann, then not the entire rest. There live approximately one and a half million Jews under German domination. He will give or set free one million, and all that for ten thousand trucks, for less, for one — for a few million dollars. I am completely convinced of this."

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, is that a translation being read from the German by the witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is.

THE COURT: The exhibit can't come in until there is a translation on it.

This trial is being conducted in English, not in German.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. The witness swears that is an accurate translation.

THE COURT: How do I know that the jurors read German? I don't. If it's going to come in, we have got to have a translation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Can I do that by an undertaking to introduce that later?

THE COURT: Yes. If you want to make it a letter exhibit; it will not come into a number until such time as that occurs.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Are you writing on that exhibit, sir?

A. No, just a note that it has to be translated. {3447|3448}

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Could I withhold that then, sir, until a little later, because I'd have to keep it out.

THE COURT: You have referred to it. It should go in now, and you can have it back. The Clerk will give it to you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, okay.

THE REGISTRAR: "W".

MR. CHRISTIE: That's Exhibit "W", if you'd just make a note of that.

— EXHIBIT "W": Photocopy of Pages from Book "Die Geschichte von Joel Brand".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Going on further, there's the much-contested portion about Chambers Encyclopaedia. It deals under the — with the —

THE COURT: Are we still on page 7?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. It's under the topic heading "Population and Emigration", and it says, second paragraph in that heading, quote:

"In the first place, this claim cannot remotely be upheld on examination of the European Jewish population figures. According to Chambers Encyclopaedia the total number of Jews living in pre-war Europe was 6,500,000."

I now produce and show to you the extract from Chambers Encyclopaedia, and I'd ask you to read the underlined portion on page 99 of that encyclopaedia. I believe it's already in evidence.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's already in evidence.

THE WITNESS: Do I still read it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Just read it out loud. I think it's already in evidence.

A. "... only a handful of numerically unimportant communities in neutral countries {3448|3449} escaped and of the 6,500,000 Jews who lived in the Nazi-dominated lands in 1939, barely 500,000 remained alive when the war ended six years later."

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. I don't think I'll file that, Your Honour, in view of the fact it's already in evidence.

Q. Now, there's another reference to – further down, there's one to Aufbau, which I do not have, and there's one to, and I quote,

"This is acknowledged by the World Jewish Congress in its publication Unity in Dispersion (p. 377) which states that: 'The majority of the German Jews succeeded in leaving Germany before the war broke out.'"

I now produce and show to you the book known as Unity in Dispersion: a History of the World Jewish Congress, published in New York in 1948. I'd like you, if you would, to open it – check the title, open it and check the page 377.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. And could you read us the highlighted portion of that page, please?

A. "Quite different is the problem of the Jews from Germany. The majority of German Jews succeeded in leaving Germany before the war broke out and a substantial number of them settled in Latin American countries."

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty.

THE REGISTRAR: Sixty. {3449|3450}

— EXHIBIT 60: Photocopy of Eight Pages from Book "Unity in Dispersion: a History of the World Jewish Congress".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Turning now to page 8, the second paragraph on the left-hand side says:
