"The exodus of Jews before and during hostilities, therefore, reduces the number of Jews in Europe to approximately 5,000,000. In addition to these emigrants, we must also include the number of Jews who fled to the Soviet Union after 1939, and who were later evacuated beyond reach of the German invaders. It will be shown below that the majority of these, about 250,000, were migrants from Poland. But apart from Poland, Reitlinger admits that 300,000 other European Jews slipped into Soviet territory [sic] between 1939 and 1941. This brings the total of Jewish emigrants to the Soviet Union to about 550,000. In Colliers magazine, June 9th, 1945, Freiling Foster, writing of the Jews in Russia, explained that '2,200,000 have migrated to the Soviet Union since 1939 to escape from the Nazis,' but our lower estimate is probably more accurate."

I now produce and show to you what purports to be an article by Freiling Foster in Colliers magazine on the date alleged, and I'd ask you to read the highlighted portion.

Q. "Russia has 5,800,000 Jews, 41 per cent of the present Jewish population of the world, of whom 2,200,000 have migrated to the Soviet Union since 1939 to escape the Nazis." {3450|3451}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty-one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE REGISTRAR: Sixty-one.

— EXHIBIT 61: Photocopy from Colliers of Article "Keep up with the World".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Reading on further, under the paragraph heading "3 Million Jews in Europe", there is a sentence which begins with the words, "This is a major factual error", and then it says, the next sentence:

"The 1939 Jewish population census for Poland put the number of Jews at 2,732,600", and in quotes "Reitlinger, Die Endlosung", which by now I understand to mean "The Final Solution". Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Okay. It says page 36 for that quote.

And I'd like to produce and show to you the extract from that book, that is, The Final Solution by Gerald Reitlinger. I'd ask you to check the underlined portion under the heading "Deportations, 1939-1941", and read me the highlighted portion and tell me if it compares to the text.

A. "In the speculation of the day there was little curiosity concerning the fate of the largest national group of Jews in Europe – 2,732,600 in September, 1931, perhaps 3,250,000 in September, 1939. Under the secret terms of the Ribbentrop-Molotov pact of August 23rd, 1939, about 1,170,000 of these Jews passed under Russian rule."

Q. Was that on page 50? {3451|3452}

A. That's on page 34.

Q. Thirty-four. So the page number alleged in the Harwood book is wrong?

A. Type-setter's error.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. It's a type-setter's error.

Q. Other than that, how do you compare it with the text of Exhibit 1?

A. It essentially states the same.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty-two.

THE REGISTRAR: Sixty-two.

— EXHIBIT 62: Photocopy of Four Pages from Book "The Final Solution".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Further on, the words begin in the sentence "Moreover, the journalist Raymond Arthur Davis, who spent the war in the Soviet Union, observed that approximately 250,000 had already fled from German-occupied Poland to Russia between 1939 and 1941 and were to be encountered in every Soviet province."

Then it says, "Odyssey through Hell, New York, 1946".

I now produce and show to you a transcript of the book – or a copy of the book Odyssey through Hell by R. A. Davies – Raymond Arthur Davies, copywrite [sic] 1946. I'd ask you to check the spelling of the name and see if it's spelt correctly, for "Davies".

A. There's a spelling error in the name.

Q. How is it really spelled?

A. There's an "E" missing in "Davis".

Q. All right. So it's actually "Davies", is it? {3452|3453}

A. That's right.

Q. Could you check the highlighted portion to see if it compares to the text, Exhibit 1, and read out the text of that book that is highlighted?

A. "Some three million Jews lived in Poland (excepting areas now in the U.S.S.R.) before the war, Doctor Sommerstein told me. Of these, possibly a quarter of a million were saved by the Red Army between 1939 and 1941."

Q. Is there any further highlighted portion?

A. Well, the book elucidates further on, yes. On page 103 and page 102 it says:

"Dr. Sfarid told me that more than a quarter million Polish Jews had found refuge in the Soviet Union during the war."

It ends up by saying,

"They were distributed throughout the whole of central and western Soviet Asia. There were 12,353 Jews ..." and so on.

It lists them per Soviet republic.

MR. CHRISTIE: I see. Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty-three.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

—EXHIBIT 63: Photocopy of Four Pages from Book "Odyssey through Hell".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Going on, I don't think I have anything more on that column, until we get to the number or the section under "Russian Jews Evacuated". And going down halfway through that paragraph it says:

"Reitlinger agrees with the Jewish authority Joseph Schechtmann, who admits that huge {3453|3454} numbers were evacuated, though he estimates a slightly higher number of Russian and Baltic Jews left under German occupation, between 650,000 and 850,000 (Reitlinger, The Final Solution, p. 499)."

I now produce and show to you an extract of the book The Final Solution. I'd ask you to check the highlighted portion on page 499 and compare it with the text.

A. "Mr. Joseph Schechtmann estimated that from 650,000 to 850,000 Jews had been trapped by the Germans. This figure, based on such Russian reports as came to hand, seems an astonishingly fair one within its very wide limits, but to-day it is the fashion to regard such figures as a form of dupery ..."

Q. "Dupery"?

A. Yeah, "... by the Soviet press ..." and it continues on.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty-four.

— EXHIBIT 64: Photocopy of Three Pages from Book "The Final Solution".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Going on, I'd like to read the portion that's attributed to Philip Friedman in Their Brothers' Keepers, published by Holocaust Library, New York. — This is Exhibit 54 – 64, I'm sorry, The Final Solution quote.

I now produce and show to you the extract of the book Their Brothers' Keepers, by Philip Friedman as I described, with a Foreward [sic] by Reverend John A. O'Brien, S.J. {3454|3455}

A. On page 13, the quote reads:

"But at least a million Jews survived in the very crucible of the Nazi hell, the occupied areas.

How this million survived is the theme of our story." It goes on.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Could that be the next exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Sixty-five.

— EXHIBIT 65: Photocopy of Three Pages from the Book "Their Brothers' Keeper".

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. I now produce and show to you an extract and translation from Baseler Nachrichten [Nachrichten].

THE REGISTRAR: Sixty-five.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Could you open it to the highlighted portion of the translation which is attached, and then I'll read the text, which says, "Precisely this conclusion was reached by the reputable journal Baseler Nachrichten of neutral Switzerland. In an article entitled ..." oh, it's in English – "... ("How high is the number of Jewish victims?", June 13th, 1946), it explained that purely on the basis of the population and emigration figures described above, a maximum of only one and a half million Jews could be numbered as casualties."

Could you read the highlighted portion of the translation of that article?

A. "How high is the number of Jewish victims?", was the headline.

"It can be derived from this list, which is {3455|3456} unfortunately not based on official figures, it is true, but the basic figures of which are all originating from official sources, that all in all less than 1.5 million Jews must be preliminarily considered 'dead or missing'.

It is to be hoped that a considerable percentage even of this number of people will be found to be still alive, once the precise statistics are available. In view of the enormous degree of importance which the 'extermination of the Jews' has reached in the world public opinion, it is absolutely indispensable for the United Nations to create without further delay an official investigation committee, to find out how the number of victims of the Jewish people really is.

One thing is certain already today: the contention that this figure runs up to 5-6 million (an allegation which has been assumed also by the Palestine Committee, which is very difficult to understand) is untrue. The Number of Jewish victims may vary between 1 and 1.5 million, because a higher number of Jews were not 'within reach' of Hitler and Himmler. It may be assumed and hoped that the final figure of losses of the Jewish people, will even be lower than this figure. But clarification is necessary – this is why an investigation on the part of a special committee of the U.N. should establish the {3456|3457} truth which is so terribly important for the present and for the future."

And that is the end of the article.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be the next exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 66.

— EXHIBIT 66: Photocopy of German Article from "Baseler Nachrichten" and Attached English Translation.

THE COURT: We will take twenty minutes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Thank you very much.

THE REGISTRAR: Sixty-six.

Members of the jury, you may retire.

— The jury retired at 11:30 a.m.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, we're on page 8. We have 22 pages to go. I would think there are not enough minutes in this day to get past page 20. If you have witnesses to call tomorrow, Friday, you will not, in my view, be finished by the time you estimated in front of the jury that you would be finished. Now, surely there is a better way of doing this. If you want your client to read all of these things, far be it from me to say that he can't do that. I don't. But what I do suggest you do is to get all of it together so instead of me writing down Exhibit 135 at the end of the day, you might get it all together, let him read it all at once, if the Crown agrees, whatever you can consent to, and then put it in as one exhibit. That will save a half a day. If you have no other witnesses to call and you are worried about filling in time, as indicated yesterday, please don't. I will co-operate.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I appreciate that very much, Your Honour. I've been trying to think of a way and I didn't think of a way. {3457|3457a}

THE COURT: Does that strike you, Mr. Griffiths, as —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Whatever, Your Honour. I indicated that I was prepared to consent to the accuracy of the quotes.

THE COURT: I am quite accustomed to sitting in long cases, but I don't know that you want to take twelve gentlemen and put them through this for a whole day when there is an easier way of doing it. It will not endear twelve human beings to anyone. Twenty minutes.

— Proceedings adjourned at 11:35 a.m.

VOLUME XVI

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to say something about this matter. My client wanted me to express this, that he has expended a great deal of time and effort to prove the accuracy of the quotes in the book. He feels his reputation has been maligned extensively over the past few months, and sometimes, in some cases, years, but he has been accused of being a falsifier and a purveyor of false news, so that he felt very strongly that he would like to prove the accuracy of the information that he published.

However, he acknowledges, as I am sure any reasonable person would, that it is a waste of the public's time – I suppose everyone in this room's time, to go through this tedious process.

My friend has been very generous, understanding, and I must say entirely fair in his offers to help, but my concern, quite frankly, was to establish the sincerity of the man in the efforts that he made, even though it might be repetitious. I think that probably is an error of my judgment on my part.

My instructions are, then – and I have {3458|3459} discussed this with my friend – to offer this concession. Now, it's like many concessions, I suppose. It's not without some conditions, and the first is that I be entitled to express that we don't wish to take more time with this out of consideration for the Court and the jury, in front of the jury. And secondly, that my friend concede[s] on the record in front of the jury that ninety per cent of the quotes from the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" are accurate, in front of the jury.

Then my client would – we have this all prepared in the form of a box full of file folders with each page numbered on the file folder with each quote highlighted in the book, on the pages of the book pasted to the front of the file with a number, and the quote in in the file. This could be filed as one exhibit, and then my friend, when he wishes to argue about context, which I am sure that is part of his case, it will be all there, presumably in order, because we worked hard on it, for later argument.

I will be, I think, giving up whatever effect there might have been on the client showing what is a serious inquiry here, but it will save a great deal of time. That one box will then be marked as an exhibit {3459|3460} with its contents, presumably in the order in which it is.

The only reason, Your Honour, that – I would like to stress – the only reason we bothered to pursue this page by page analysis is that at the outset I think Sergeant Williams made the comment that the book was full of lies. I know that Dr. Hilberg made the comment that it was full of lies, distortions and half truths, or some vague phrases to that effect.

I am not making a value judgment, but I can't remember precisely what the words were. So I would like to ask if – and I think my friend concedes that we may do this, because he's had seven and a half months of investigation to decide whether or not what we have said about the exhibit is true – and on that basis I think we could speed this matter dramatically and then, maybe, I can make my estimate more accurate.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content, Your Honour. I am certainly prepared to indicate in front of the jury that ninety per cent of the quotations are accurately reproduced. I make no admission as to context, but no admission is expected with respect to that.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I agree. If {3460|3461} that can be made in front of the jury, we will cease and desist at the stage we are at, and the rest can be filed in one item in one box and save all that time, I think.

There is one other. item I wonder if I could ask Your Honour. I wanted to clarify with the witness who is still here and has been sitting in court, unfortunately since he testified – Walus – one final thing which I didn't do at the time because he wasn't emotionally up to it, and the final thing I wanted to clarify is what ultimately happened in his case. I know that Your Honour tried very clearly to put it in simple terms and he didn't seem to understand, by "getting off", what does it mean – he didn't seem to relate to that.

THE COURT: How did he get free?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I can explain, I think, Your Honour, and I may be wrong because my understanding of his English is not much better than his English, but he said that he appealed, and then the government investigated his evidence, and I understand that the case was then brought – because he could prove from documents from German sources which were inadmissible {3461|3462} at trial, I think this is why the conviction existed because the documents were held inadmissible at trial – and he then introduced them, I guess, to the authorities. Now, they then dropped the case.

THE COURT: In other words, the allegations were withdrawn.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think that's correct. Although he had to appeal, and then there was a discussion of those. Am I right? I think I understand correctly.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, is there any contest about that issue? I am not asking you for comment as to whether the witness can come back to the box. I am asking you whether or not there is any contest about the fact that this gentleman's case was withdrawn at some time, or in any event, he succeeded and he wasn't extradited.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No contest with that, Your Honour, and I indicated to Mr. Christie, I felt that was clear from what was said in the witness stand by Mr. Walus, that ultimately he got off, and that he had these documents that he testified to, insurance documents and other working papers indicating — {3462|3463}

THE COURT: It seems to me he made that clear, gentlemen. I am not prepared to let him come back to the box, but I am also canvassing whether or not it can be said before the jury that the charges were either withdrawn or were eventually in some way dropped. He is still here. Does that sound reasonable?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, yes. I guess that is reasonable, Your Honour.

The other thing is that I wanted to bring out that, although he got an apology from the government, he never got anything else.

THE COURT: Well, we are not litigating his case. We are litigating your client's case.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I understand, Your Honour. It is to do with, "The West, War and Islam", the reason being that it shows the effect of some people's pursuit of these types of claims, and the shallowness of the prosecution of some of these types of claims, and the effect of them, because it does say in "The West, War and Islam" that certain vicious people who call themselves Jews have taken advantage of their control or their influence in the media. And the {3463|3464} fact of that, I think, could be demonstrated in Mr. Walus' case. That will be my argument and I will be asking for the jury to decide whether they consider that as fair comment or not. Political and religious Zionism is referred to as playing a disproportionately large role in the west because of mass media.

THE COURT: Well, is your witness going to say that Zionists control the media?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if he could have expressed that – yes, that is what he told me, and that is what he was going to say.

THE COURT: No. It's too late.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Is there anything else?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: So may I briefly put my position in front of the jury?

THE COURT: Very briefly, if you please.

— The jury enter[s]. 12:12 p.m. {3464|3465}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, as I indicated a moment ago, my client wanted to proceed to prove each of the items in the booklet point by point because of the serious allegations that were made against him of falsifying or preparing a false piece of information, but in view of the fact that that process will inevitably delay consideration of the matter, and probably the convenience of a great number of people, I am instructed to offer, then, to proceed in the following manner:

That if the Crown will make a concession and admit as a fact that ninety per cent of the quotes in the item Exhibit "Did Six Million Really Die?" are accurate in front of this jury, then we will undertake to file the source material in support of our case on that point in one box as one exhibit with numbered files, numbered in the same way as each page with the documents in support of each quote in the file, and then my friend can argue context and we can both argue from those at a later time when we are allowed to speak on those matters.

If that is agreeable to my friend, then propose that we will do that, if he will admit that {3465|3466} fact.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: With pleasure, Your Honour. I can indicate that I am prepared to admit that ninety per cent of the quotations in the pamphlet, Exhibit 1, are accurate in the sense that the words that are in the pamphlet are found in the books that are quoted, and as my friend has indicated, that admission does not go to the context in which the quotations are used in the source books, but just for the accuracy of the quotations, word for word.

THE COURT: Thank you. That will be Exhibit 67.

— EXHIBIT NO. 67: Box containing reference material re quotations in Exhibit 1.

MR. CHRISTIE: On that basis, then, Your Honour, I have no further evidence until this afternoon, about two fifteen, if we could.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a witness arriving from a great distance, and he will be available at two fifteen, if we could, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, insofar {3466|3467} as any cross-examination is concerned with regard to this narrow matter that we have been hearing about yesterday afternoon and this morning, what is your position?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Briefly, Your Honour, I would rather do all the cross-examination at a later time of Mr. Zundel, and let the case proceed.

THE COURT: Is that agreeable to you, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Certainly.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, in your absence, this must be perfectly obvious to you that this matter has undergone some discussions, and it is fortunate that there has been an agreement, as you have just heard. Had there not been, we would have been here for a long time. I think it is probably fortuitous that that happened. The next witness will be ready at two fifteen – another long lunch.

Thank you.

— The jury retires. 12:16 p.m.

— Luncheon adjournment.

—— {3467|3468}

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: I was talking to my Clerk about the existence, I think, of one of the earlier exhibits that is in the German language and not with an English translation. It will be found, and at the appropriate time I will hand it to you for a translation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is that the one we brought in this morning?

THE COURT: No. It has been in for two or three weeks. Is there anything before I call the jury?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one thing, Your Honour, and I may be premature in the end, but I raise it in any event. I understand that Mr. Christie's next witness is a Mr. Keegstra, and my concern, Your Honour, is exactly the same as I expressed with Mr. Walus, that Mr. Keegstra has nothing relevant about these matters that are before the Court to say. When I raised that about Mr. Walus Mr. Christie jumped in and he said, "Oh, yes. He is going to talk about the {3468|3469} Zionist-controlled media", and of course, we heard nothing like that from Mr. Walus. So there is just evidence from Mr. Christie going before the jury – he may have expected Mr. Walus to say something about that, but in fact he didn't. And what Mr. Walus ended up saying really has no relevance to these issues before the Court, and I am concerned that we are going to run into exactly the same problem with Mr. Keegstra.

THE COURT: All right. Then I am going to ask Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, my friend is wrong as to who my next witness is, and he is overstating the case slightly when he says that Mr. Walus' evidence is irrelevant.

I would be prepared to indicate that he would indicate the pressure of the press, the effects of the press, the media. He didn't say "press", he said television. How as a result he was beaten up seventeen times, or how many times – I am not sure he said seventeen. It would certainly be my argument that he had something relevant to say about the effects of that kind of publicity on the public, and that it is he said it was over fifteen minutes in Chicago. Chicago is {3469|3470} a very big place.

I think it's quite obvious that the issue was promoted to a large extent through the media in the Walus case. He said so. I would respectfully suggest that before we decide what may or may not be relevant, we have also the obligation to consider what the evidence is. Throughout the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" there is an allegation the the Nuremberg trial was unfair, and hysteria of the day played a part in that. Dr. Barton gave us evidence about mass hysteria. He told us he, himself, was brainwashed when he was in the Bergen Belsen camp. I intend to argue that we have mass hysteria even today because it is an emotional topic, and that not repressive measures, not prosecution, in fact, because it is not a matter of news, it is a matter of public debate which it should be.

So that was the position of the defence on Walus and on a number of other issues; but in respect to the evidence of Reverend Ron Marr, who I intend to proceed with this afternoon, first I hope to have the opportunity of having the right to argue about the right {3470|3471} to call evidence – usually the Crown is not in a position to try and preclude the defence from evidence and witnesses that it seeks to call, but if my friend is going to make me justify the calling of evidence, I am prepared to do that at the time when the witness is being brought forward.

I am aware of my friend's grave concerns in all these matters, but I think, with the greatest respect, he is overly concerned about it. I think with 'Walus' evidence, he gave evidence about what the press had done, the media had done to promote the teaching that he was a war criminal before he was ever tried.

I intend to lead evidence as to similar situations in respect to teaching both sides of the Holocaust, but I hope that I can get beyond the stage of having to justify even the right to call the witness, as my friend is trying to cast upon me now.

I would like to call the witness, Reverend Ron Marr. I don't want to debate the Keegstra case any further.

— The jury enters. 2:30 p.m. {3471|3472}

RONALD JAMES MARR, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How old are you, sir?

A. Fifty-one.

Q. And what is your occupation?

A. I am the publisher and editor of the Christian Enquirer and two other publications.

Q. And are you a Minister of the Gospel?

A. I am.

Q. How long have you so been?

A. About '61. How many years that is. 1961.

Q. And do you publish a publication known as the Christian Enquirer?

A. I do.

Q. I now produce and show to you the Christian Enquirer of February 1983, and specifically draw your attention to the article, "International Bankers Hold Control". Do you [recognize that publication and that article?

A. I do.

Q. Did you publish that article?

A. I did.

Q. And how long have you been publishing that newspaper?

A. 1970.

Q. And what is the circulation of that newspaper? {3472|3473}

A. Nearing a hundred thousand.

Q. And where are the subscribers to the newspapers?

A. All over North America in particular, and some abroad.

Q. And where do you publish, sir?

A. Where from?

Q. Yes.

A. Niagara Falls, New York, and Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Q. And what is the purpose of this publication?

A. To call the Christian Church to a sense of responsibility for society.

Q. And do you publish frequently on the subject of bankers and the subject of control?

A. Not frequently, but we do, and one of our other publications, The Prophecy newsletter, deals with it in far greater detail.

Q. Do you stand behind the truth of that article?

A. I have not read it in the last ten minutes, but I believe since I published it, I could do that.

Q. Yes. And what effect upon you does the proceedings at bar have in terms of your ability to publish your views?

A. It causes me immense concern. I think it's of the gravest gravity that any person in Canada is called upon to defend his right to say what he believes to be true, whether he is right or wrong. {3473|3474} I certainly publish things that are controversial, and couldn't guarantee, beyond all possibility of being wrong, that I was always a hundred per cent correct in all my perceptions, no matter how hard I tried, and I would hate to think that every time I published anything, that I might be called to Court to defend the idea that I had at that point as being something I had no right to say, simply because somebody else disagreed with it.

Q. This article on bankers says that they have world control?

A. It says that they have – they hold control over the world out of their economic power, and as we all know, money is power, and if the bankers have access to the volume of dollars that obviously they do, their power certainly has to be massive.

D'Israeli suggested that he would quite gladly trade political power for economic power because he would then have the true power, and I think that is just about what we would have to recognize.

Q. Does your article speak also of the relationship between international bankers and world government?

A. Very much so. We believe, and I think we have massive evidence that we are compiling great details on – one of our men is doing research almost on a daily basis on the question of world government. There is no question at all that there is a thrust toward world government. Nor is there any relevance that the bankers are among those promoters of {3474|3475} world government.

Q. So that you believe there is a relationship between world government and bankers?

A. I do.

Q. And if such things as that were prohibited, what effect would that have upon your publication?

A. Would you mind rephrasing your question?

Q. If discussing such things was prohibited, what effect would that have on your publications?

A. Discussing such things?

Q. Yes.

A. It would limit, obviously, our right to discuss the issue, and the sovereignty of Canada, and the sovereignty of the United States, the sovereignty of every country in the world. We now both have a sovereign power which is a world power and a sovereign Canada or a sovereign United States. And that is what we are discussing. And do we really want to have a world power that is greater than our national power which may be a dictatorial power? Do we really want that? And that is what we are discussing. And if we are prohibited from discussing it, where do we go from there?

Q. Have you expressed views on other matters in your paper such as Jews and humanism and scientific theories of evolution and that sort of thing?

A. Yes.

Q. And were those views controversial? {3475|3476}

A. I think every view is controversial. I never expect to meet anybody in all the world that agrees with me on every point, and I've often said that if two of us agree always on something, one of us is unnecessary; but I think we've got to expect controversy on every point that we ever bring up. So these are obviously controversial.

I would like to clarify, in regard to the question of Jews, the only time I think I've mentioned the Jewish question twice in my publication and got blistered from both sides in my situation, it is a no win situation, and all I was calling for was balance, and not suggesting that Zionists could never be wrong, nor suggesting that arbitrarily always they were wrong. And yet you can't win, so I largely avoided that question as being an unprofitable question.

Q. It creates too much controversy?

A. To much controversy and no benefit.

Q. Did you also write on the subject of censorship?

A. Yes. Frequently and often. And in Canada we have had attempts on all kinds of levels and do have all the time at censorship. We had a law passed by the Federal Government a short period of time ago that prohibited Canadians from participating fully in the electoral process, and it was something that eventually, thank God, was overturned by the courts, very properly so, but it caused us great grief and great concern that I would not be able to suggest as an individual, or you as an individual, that we were for or against a particular individual that was running on {3476|3477} a ticket or for a particular purpose or as a group of people we couldn't get together and do it. The democratic process was being destroyed, and frankly, that is what is occurring in this very idea of having a trial at all on the issue that is before this court. It is suggesting that it is possible for a court to come up with the truth and determine what is the truth, and then that everybody must agree and salute and say, "Aye, sir", or else go to jail. That is not a democratic premise and should never been in a court at all.

Q. Does it worry you that publishers are on trial?

A. Well, of course.

THE COURT: Now, now, now. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: No further questions.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Sir, what denomination are you a Minister of?

A. I am ordained with the Baptists. I am preaching at a church that is Congregational United Church of Christ.

Q. And are you publishing the Christian Enquirer on behalf of the Baptist Church, as a {3477|3478} Baptist Church newspaper?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or on behalf of any other denomination?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is your own paper.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you from which side of the border?

A. When you catch me, I am living in the United States, Lewistown, about a thousand yards from the monument and the park on the Canadian side.

Q. You live there and work here, do you?

If I may see this for a moment. And by "this" I am referring to the February '83 issue of the Christian Enquirer.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not opposed if my friend wants to file it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

Q. Who are the international bankers?

A. Who are the international bankers?

Q. Yes.

A. I use that term in this sense, sir – the key bankers, internationally. Okay? In the various countries of the world. And they do get together in meetings, and I do not think they are very hard to define. If you need help, I'd suggest you go to the bankers. {3478|3479}

Q. No. I am asking help from you, sir.

A. That's my answer.

Q. You used the phrase, and I am asking you who they are.

A. You have my answer.

Q. That's the best you can do. All right. And the international bankers, whoever they are, you say are forming a world government or would like to form a world government?

A. No, I did not say that.

Q. All right. What is the relationship, if any, between the international bankers and world government?

A. International bankers are promoting the idea of a world government as are many people.

Q. I believe you said, "We believe there is a great thrust towards world government and bankers are involved."

A. That's right. They are involved.

Q. And what is the international banker's involvement in this great thrust towards world government?

A. They want to see one.

Q. Well, we don't know who they are yet. What makes you say they want to see one?

A. Their own words. I can't give you the quotation now, unfortunately. I can't give you all the evidence. I don't have it in my pocket. But we have a great deal of research on that. I will be glad to provide someone to bring it upon request. {3479|3480}

Q. I am not requesting for all the evidence, just for some. You made a statement.

A. Mm-hmmm. And I stand behind the statement.

Q. All right. So tell me.

A. I don't have it with me. I don't have it memorized.

Q. You came over here to testify this morning?

A. No, I did not come here to testify particularly on that point.

Q. You said they published very few things on the Jewish question. What is the Jewish question?

A. Well, in the Christian domain there are largely two positions on the Jewish nation. The one is that Israel can do no wrong, almost. It's virtually that. The other is that the Jewish people, and particularly those who are accused of being conspiratorial, can do no right. And I say that neither one of them are correct, that they are human beings like everybody else and need to be evaluated individually.

Q. All right. You printed that call for tolerance on a number of occasions?

A. Two in particular.

Q. And you found that that was unprofitable so you didn't publish any more calls for tolerance?

A. I did not say that, either.

Q. I thought you said it was unprofitable. {3480|3481}

A. I did say that.

Q. And you are referring to discussions of the Jewish question that you've just told us about, calls for tolerance.

A. That's correct.

Q. So I am assuming calls for tolerance were – unprofitable.

A. Okay. You are twisting my words, and I did not say that.

Q. Tell us what you meant.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Tell me what you meant, then.

A. In particular I was simply stating our position, and I did in one of them in particular, not for tolerance per se, but for a balanced position. I said simply that either positions tended to be imbalanced, and that we needed a balanced position on the question, and that we needed – I did not use the term tolerant. I used the term balanced.

Q. No. Tolerance was my term, and I suggested to you a call for a balanced position was a call for tolerance, for each side to understand the other side; is that fair?

A. Depending on what you do with the words once you've gone there, yes.

Q. What do you print about scientific evolution?

A. Well, may I have a moment, Your Honour, just to check something?

THE COURT: Sure.

THE WITNESS: I trust I can lay my {3481|3482} hands on it quickly. It was just in front of me a moment ago, but naturally, it won't show up when I want it.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Take your time, sir.

A. The one item that I did print just a short period of time ago that I thought was lying right here in front of me and that is in my material was that in Israel a group got together to discuss creationism versus evolution, and the question thereof. And the orthodox Jewish people involved produced a statement saying that scientific evolution, so-called, did have no base at all in science; and I pointed out in that particular instance that this would be the position that we would share, and we do share, that the concept that evolution does not have adequate scientific base, we share that in common with these particular orthodox Jews.

Q. All right. That's fine. The world government that you mentioned, is this like the United Nations?

A. Is it like the United Nations?

Q. Yes. Is it one that moves towards a world government that you've told us about?

A. In the sense that apples and oranges are both fruits, yes, but in a particular sense, to say that they are of the same tree, not necessarily so.

Q. I see. Well, can you give me an example, then, of what kind of world government we are moving towards? {3482|3483}

A. I would not know what we are going to get in the end. I have published something on it in what that particular case I alluded to, the proponent of world government, I think, had suggested approximately ten world divisions that would be supranational in nature. And they were suggesting on that particular study that it would be approached. that way. There are a great many thrusts for world government from a great many sources, and I am sure that they, among themselves, do not agree.

Q. All right. And do you have any connection with banking yourself?

A. I use a bank.

Q. Anything else?

A. No. I don't have any money there.

Q. But as I understand, you are opposed to all forms of censorship?

A. My, I wasn't expecting that one. I would support only one area of the control of expression – two: If it is deliberately harmful to the body or potentially medically harmful to anybody's body in the sense that it is encouraging someone to harm another person physically, I think that should be stopped. The other obviously is pornography, salacious literature, and I am sure there are legitimate questions of where you stop.

THE COURT: I am a little unclear. You agree in the control of free speech in the sense that it should not be used to perpetrate bodily harm on the individual?

THE WITNESS: In the immediate sense, {3483|3484} not in the distant by-and-by, perhaps, sense, but if it's a threat.

THE COURT: To avoid immediate bodily harm.

THE WITNESS: Right.

THE COURT: All right.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: So that libel and defamatory libel are not things that concern you.

A. Yes, they are, but I am not thinking of those in terms of censorship at all. I am thinking a person goes ahead and does it, takes his chances and then pays the cost of having done so.

Q. All right. Either civilly or criminally.

A. I am not prepared to discuss that question. I am sure I wouldn't answer that.

THE COURT: And the other area, you agree that there should be censorship for what?

THE WITNESS: Limitations on, Your Honour —

THE COURT: Is there a difference?

THE WITNESS: — salacious literature.

THE COURT: All right. I will write down "limitations".

THE WITNESS: Yes. The word censorship conveys meanings to all of us that are undesirable.

THE COURT: On what, salacious literature?

THE WITNESS: Mm-hmmm. {3484|3485}

THE COURT: Anything else?

THE WITNESS: Not that I can think of now.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And do you have any background in commerce?

A. In business?

Q. Yes, sir, the study of commerce or business.

A. Not the study of it, but I have been president of several corporations for a good number of years.

Q. And political science, do you have any background in political science, study of political science?

A. Not in study, but as a writer on that subject, a student; if you are talking about studies in the formal sense, the answer is no. If you are talking about studies in a constant ongoing sense, very definitely, and very specifically and in great detail.

Q. All right. Do you feel any obligation to ensure that your reporters are reporting accurately to the best of their ability?

A. Yes, sir. Very much so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie. {3485|3486}

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. In regard to that last question, since you were asked whether you had an obligation to check your reporters' accuracy, do you think that that should also be an obligation of the state?

A. No, I do not.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't see how this arose out of the last question or the cross-examination.

THE COURT: I will allow it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: My friend asked you about – this business of —

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Nothing further. Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: James Keegstra, please.

—— {3486|3487}

JAMES KEEGSTRA, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Keegstra, how old are you, sir?

A. Pardon?

Q. How old are you, sir?

A. Fifty.

Q. And where do you live?

A. Eckville, Alberta.

Q. And are you married?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How long have you been married?

A. How long?

Q. Yes.

A. Twenty-nine years.

Q. And do you have children?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. Four.

Q. Did you endeavour to teach both sides of the Holocaust?

A. I definitely did endeavour to teach both sides.

Q. What happened to you in the media when {3487|3488} you did?

A. Well, the media attacked me very viciously. They at no time did they come and ask me, or confirm any of the reports they had. They apparently got the reports from someone else, and of course, they said they had taken them from the notes of students, and they made many misquotes, told outright lies, this type of thing, to smear my name, to promote hatred against me, to make sure that I would definitely lose my, not only my job which I had already lost, but also my certificate as a teacher; and of course, it appeared they made every type of effort to make sure that I couldn't make a living from then on. They approached [sic] the clergy, Christian clergy, asked them to denounce me. This is the Zionist group. And of course, every editorial, every editorial apparently in the country, whether they had ever talked to me or even heard of me or anything of that nature, were quite willing to smear me and slander me and do whatever they felt to make sure my name became a by-word.

Q. By-word for what?

A. A by-word in the sense that whenever that name was mentioned, I assume it would conjure up the fact that here was a man that gave a different view of the {3488|3489} Holocaust and this type of thing.

Q. Had you ever been attacked like that before?

A. No. I had never been attacked like that before, so it was quite a shock, to say the least.

Q. And how have you been able to make your living since?

A. Well first of all it was through odd jobs, but – and of course, I had been on unemployment for a while. However, I was then able to open up my own garage business for the repair of automobiles; and this is what I was doing.

Q. How long have you been a teacher?

A. I have been a teacher for twenty-one years.

Q. What is the effect of this controversy on your family?

A. Well, of course, you see, now, if they find out, of course, that the name is Keegstra, the reactions are mixed and varied, and of course, because of the hatred that has been promoted against me, naturally they feel hatred coming from those who are only informed by the media, not properly informed with the truth. {3489|3490}

Q. And what was it you endeavoured to do when you taught both sides of the Holocaust?

A. Well, as a teacher and following the curriculum, which I did, of the school, the Department of Education, we were to deal with the ideology, the philosophy [sic], the politics, the religion, the beliefs of the nineteenth century and how they affected the twentieth century and how they were involved in the two World Wars and this type of thing. Then – oh, and of course, we were also instructed that we were supposed to be very analytical and we were to express any point of view we could so that the student could then put this together and come up with truth. And so basically it was – we were to discover truth. And so, of course, it didn't matter which issue we came to, we attempted to give both sides. And so, of course, being that the Holocaust is quite a large item in the World War II arena, this topic then, of course, had to be discussed.

Now, they do give us, in the Teachers' Association, the right to express our own opinion and our own research, and so this is basically what I did. They were told what I guess you would say is the accepted view, and of course, I told them, because of my research and the research of others, that we felt that there was another side {3490|3491} to the Holocaust story.

Q. In respect to that other research did you have any other knowledge of the Institute of Historical Review?

A. At that time I did not.

Q. Where did you acquire the other side of the Holocaust?

A. Well, I acquired it through quite a number of authors, both – well, many Roman Catholics, many Jewish – quite a number of authors. And these were supplied generally through the organization called the Canadian League of Rights.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

THE WITNESS: Called the Canadian League of Rights.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And having tried to teach both sides of the issue, do you have any regrets?

A. I never have regrets for anything I did when I taught my students all points of view. Naturally, because I am human, like everyone else, we have our biases, and so my students were well aware. I didn't try to deceive them like so many have into, you know, not giving my bias. They knew exactly where I stood. So they were always cautioned {3491|3492} that, hey, this man has a bias. You are going to have a bias when you grow older, and so you must get all the facts, put them together in a coherent, logical, systematic pattern so that you can establish truth.

Q. Why are you here today?

A. I am here today basically to aid a fellow individual because he, too, is in the search for truth, to establish truth.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your experience, were you aware of any negative stereotyping of German – children of German descent?

A. Oh, definitely. We were well aware of that, that there was a stereotyping. However, I have to admit that through my research I didn't feel there was any justification for this stereotyping.

Q. Thank you. Those are my questions.

Answer questions from my learned friend, please.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

—— {3492|3493}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Are you aware of any negative stereotyping of the children of black people?

A. Yes.

Q. Children of Italian people?

A. I would say that every – I would say that probably every race has some type of stereotyping, even whites.

Q. What is your bias?

A. My bias is toward Christianity.

Q. Is that what you indicated to your students?

A. Definitely.

Q. And what has that got to do with the Holocaust?

A. Well, of course, Christianity itself states very bluntly, if you know the truth, then the truth will set you free. And it's on that basis that I was motivated to make sure that my students had the opportunity to arrive at as much truth as possible.

Q. And what truth did you tell them?

A. That, in the search for truth, persons must expose themselves to all their experiences, all the {3493|3494} facts and evidence that he can, and then he has to start making hypotheses and these are then tested. And that is what I attempted to instil in my students so that they would come to a position of seeking truth and how to seek it, too, also.

Q. Your Christian bias wasn't just used by you as an instruction in the Holocaust, was it? It was used throughout the course.

A. Definitely.

Q. In fact, through all of history.

A. Definitely.

Q. And can you tell us what role you indicated to your students Jews played in the course of history?

A. Well, this, of course, to give a simple answer, is rather difficult. We had to go through studying religions, politics, and of course, we had to involve whoever was involved in the revolutions, in the formation of different organizations and institutions. We had to involve whoever was responsible. And in many cases, in the revolutions, this atheistic Jewish individual was involved.

THE COURT: What atheistic ... {3494|3495}

THE WITNESS: Well, as Mr. Winston Churchill [sic] said, the bolsheviks were composed of atheistic Jews.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Is that your answer with respect to all history – being controlled by atheistic Jews?

A. No, not all of history. Up to 1776. But after 1776, with the formation of the illuminati, we find that the involvement increases.

Q. Increases to what extent?

A. To a great extent.

Q. Did you have anything to say to your students about who was responsible for the assassination of Abraham Lincoln?

A. Did we comment on that? Yes.

Q. Did you comment on that to your students?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you say?

A. It was John Wilkes Booth.

Q. Did you tie that in at all to any Jewish organization?

A. Well, he was Jewish. {3495|3496}

Q. And did you have anything to say to your students about the causes of the French Revolution?

A. Oh, definitely. These were the revolutions we were to discuss, and we were to discuss the ideologies and philosophies and what's behind them.

Q. And what role, if any, did you indicate to your students that the Jewish people or organizations played in the French Revolution?

A. Well, through their own admissions they played a role, through Jacobin Clubs and this kind of thing.

Q. Through whose admissions?

A. Jewish writers.

Q. Who is that?

A. Well, I know just offhand, to think of some, Marx, if I am not mistaken, alluded to it.

Q. Alluded to ...

A. And Lenin. Lenin makes, if I am not mistaken, Lenin made a statement in the Bolshevik Revolution that the only mistake the French Revolution made was that not enough were killed.

Q. You are telling us that Lenin was Jewish? {3496|3497}

A. I never told my students he was, although there are some who say he spoke Yiddish all the time, and apparently, according to some historians, he was given a Jewish burial. So from that point – these are just things that I pointed out to my students, that there are different points of views to all these things.

Q. And did you have anything to say to them about the Jewish role in World War I?

A. Yes. Right.

Q. And what role did you tell them the Jews had with World War I?

A. A lot of it was through advisors. They advised governments, like Bernard Baruch and these gentlemen, and also the fact that some leading bankers at the time were involved in financing.

Q. And that's all you said.

A. Oh, there's probably even more.

Q. No, but is that all you said to your students?

A. Basically that was the main thrust. Right.

Q. The main thrust of the cause of World War I. {3497|3498}

A. Oh, no. The cause of World War I, as I told them, one theory is that the cause of World War I was to bring down the Christian empire of England, of the British Empire.

Q. And who was it that was trying to bring down the British Empire of Britain in World War I?

A. I would suggest through my studies I had found that it was the Communist-Zionist movement.

Q. Did any of these matters that we have been talking about, quite aside from the Holocaust, have anything to do with your losing your position, your teaching position?

A. Originally my teaching position was – in other words, the reason for my termination of my contract with that school board was on the fact that they had said that I had disobeyed a lawful order of the school board.

Q. And what was the lawful order of the school board?

A. Well, this was something that was very hard to determine. We even had an expert at the Board of Reference Hearing, and he could not really determine what that order was.

Q. Would you care to share it with us so {3498|3499} we can try to determine it as well?

A. They said that I was to teach social studies critically and analytically, that I was supposed to express all points of view. Oh, what were some of the other things? I think, basically, that was it. I mean, they may have said it in much more verbiage, but the nitty-gritty was that to be sure that I was critical, analytical, expressed all points of view and this type of thing. This was in there.

Q. And you are presently facing a charge right now in Alberta, a criminal charge?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And you had a preliminary hearing on that.

A. Yes.

Q. And at your preliminary hearing you are entitled to your counsel or yourself to ask for a ban on publication, are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you did not ask for that.

A. No.

Q. No.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, would this be a convenient time for the afternoon break? {3499|3500}

THE COURT: Yes. We will have an adjournment. Now, just before we do, Mr. Keegstra, you have used a word – you were mentioning the death of Abraham Lincoln, and then you mentioned – the year 1776 was mentioned. You mentioned something about illuminati.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: What is that?

THE WITNESS: The illuminati was an organization formed by a fellow by the name of Adam Weishau[p]t, and this man outlined a five-point programme under which he hoped to bring about a one-world government, or a new world order.

THE COURT: Composed of what?

THE WITNESS: Well, I would presume he always stated it would be those that followed him. In other words, he would be the – he even called it a religion. He said, of course, his religion would be the elite.

THE COURT: What religion was he?

THE WITNESS: He never said what his religion was. It was just the illuminati, which means, you know, light, or the angel of light, Lucifer.

THE COURT: Does that have something to do with light, Lucifer, you say? {3500|3501}

THE WITNESS: Right.

THE COURT: Does that have anything to do with the Holocaust or anything?

THE WITNESS: Oh, no, but —

THE COURT: I am just wondering why that came in. I was writing very quickly here.

THE WITNESS: I was asked the question. I don't know why he asked the question. I'm sorry, I don't know what effect it would have.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:15 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— The jury returns. 3:45 p.m.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Did you have anything to say in your course, Mr. Keegstra, about the role of Catholics?

A. I was teaching history.

Q. Yes.

A. And therefore all who had involvement {3501|3502} in any, let's say, had any role in history, had to be discussed. So naturally, we discussed Catholics.

Q. And do you teach anything, or have anything to say about any relationship between Jews and Catholics?

A. I may have. Naturally, I suppose there would be some relationships between them. To your question I could not give an answer because — except to say that there were a number of Roman Catholic authors who had the theory that, yes, there was a large Jewish involvement in world affairs.

Q. Okay. And was that part of your teaching, then, through the Roman Catholic authors, of the large Jewish involvement in world affairs?

A. No. Like I said, I also have Jewish authors that said the same thing, like Alfred Lillienthal [Lillienthal].

Q. And is that what you mean when you say that you express all points of view in class?

A. I would say, basically, that was part of it, but —

Q. Alfred Lillienthal's point of view, and you give somebody else's point of view, but with different authors? {3502|3503}

A. Oh, no. Then we also discussed what is called at least, this is what the superintendent also called it the mainstream history. Definitely we discussed this, too, by authors such as Toynbee and this kind of thing.

Q. Was there any relationship between the marks that you would give out to students and the students' acceptance of your opinion?

A. No. The only thing a student had to realize, that when he wrote an essay he had to have documentation or evidence for his point of view and then he would get a mark, or she. It could not just be an opinion, you know, just expressed. It had to have some type of backing.

Q. And would you provide sources of information from the organization you mentioned, the Canadian League of Rights I think it was?

A. I would present some of that material. It was available to them. However, they had a whole library also available to them at the school, and they also had available to them the official textbook which we discussed, also.

Q. Did you have anything to say to the students about the inherent evil of Jews?

A. Just of the religion of Judaism when {3503|3504} it comes to Talmudic teaching.

Q. And what would you say to the students about that?

A. I would tell them that, generally speaking, like in every organization, there was a group at the top that does the deciding, that does the organizing, that does the planning. It's a small group. And a lot of times the rank and file have no idea what the plans, objectives and goals. and motives of those in this sort of elite group have, and sometimes I would say that rank and file, you know, those who call themselves Jewish, would be surprised at what some of the, the small group of elite, have said if they knew the truth of it.

Q. Well, my question was whether you had anything to say to them about the inherent evil of Jews and Judaism.

A. Yes, because they expressed such things as even good Christians should be put to death — this type of thing. They teach a millennium, a Messianic millennium in which they are going to be an elite.

THE COURT: What is a Messianic millennium?

THE WITNESS: Well, "Messianic" [Messianic] means {3504|3505} "saviour". You know, they are going to — they portray themselves, basically, as the saviour of the world. They are going to usher in a new age.

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And did this teaching have anything to do with your dismissal?

A. I now realize it did, but all I said was — at the time they told me it was because I had not — I had disobeyed a supposed lawful order of the board, but I am sure this had a bearing.

Q. All right. You were upset about the publicity that you have received?

A. I am, yes. Our town was a very peaceful town. There was no hatred in it until the media got a hold of it.

Q. Did you or anybody else today call numerous representatives of the media to let them know you were coming here?

A. I certainly did not.

Q. Do you know if that was done?

A. Not by my group.

Q. Your answer is no, it was not, then, not in your presence. {3505|3506}

A. Not in my presence.

Q. Thank you. No further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. You were asked why — you weren't asked why, but you were asked whether you asked for a publication ban at your hearing. Why did you not ask for a publication ban?

A. The basic reason that I didn't ask for a publication ban is that under no circumstances had anyone, up to this point, shown that I had done any wrong. No one had been willing to debate in an open and public-arena debate where I was wrong in the presence of, you know, the experts, and that is why we took the decision, that because I had nothing to hide, why have a publication ban.

Q. What is your attitude towards tolerance of other people's views?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, my friend tried very hard to bring out his attitudes. I don't see why we {3506|3507} can't bring out some more of them.

THE COURT: You can bring out what the rules say you can bring out, Mr. Christie, and the rules say you can't bring that out, and won't.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: My friend asked you whether you had any comments about all who were involved in Catholicism. Did you ever make such a generalization about all people?

A. No. I think I explained it later on, that I always expressed the fact that leaders had ideas and motives which a lot of times the rank and file had no idea of. In other words, I think a lot of times if the people, the ordinary people, knew some of these attitudes, ideas, motives of their leaders, they would be upset.

Q. And how do you believe that the public, or those you call the rank and file, can find out about such things as motives of leadership?

A. In our day and age the media — it's rather obvious that the media is limited in what it can say, and therefore most people must rely on the media for their knowledge. And because the media does not give a true picture in most cases, it is very difficult for people to get the truth. {3507|3508}

Q. And how do you feel they should be able to get the truth?

A. Well, the educational system should be one that teaches students how to logically and systematically come to truth through the, you know, the critical analysis of all points of view. And definitely, this is education. And this is where it ought to be done.

Q. You mentioned something about – in answer to my friend – Talmudic teachings. Where is the Talmud?

A. The Talmud is what is recognized by, I would say, most rabbis in Judaism as their holy book, and this is where their civil laws and all this type are incorporated.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And have you read into that field at all?

A. I have not read the Talmud itself, but I have read works by Elizabeth Dilling (ph) and, of course, by Mr. Friedman.

Q. Was he a Jew?

A. He was a Jew.

Q. What was his first name?

A. Sorry, I don't know whether I know {3508|3509} his first name. Benjamin, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Benjamin Friedman?

A. I am pretty sure that was his first name.

Q. What books did he write?

A. Well, the one we have is, "Facts are Facts".

Q. Do you feel that – what do you think about the slant in the media that you've referred to –

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. That is not something that was new in cross-examination.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not so sure about that, but anyway ...

Q. In relation to the media and political Zionism do you think the public gets both sides from the present situation?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. Same thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Mr. Keegstra.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

— The witness stands down.

— {3509|3510}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I have, I believe, three or four remaining witnesses. One is coming from West Germany at the moment. The other two are flying from various places, and one is already here – the latter being a very short witness.

I am not able to call that person yet because they have just arrived from the State of Illinois, and I haven't had a chance to talk to them.

I wonder if I might ask at this time, at four o'clock, to adjourn to tomorrow morning, and I might then be able to continue my case.

THE COURT: There is nothing else to go on with now?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. I'm sorry.

THE COURT: Will all three be here tomorrow?

THE WITNESS: No, I'm sorry. Tomorrow is Friday, I think, and the witness from West Germany is arriving tomorrow afternoon. He was here but he went back and is coming back.

THE COURT: How long do you anticipate the witness in the morning would be?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think very {3510|3511} long, Your Honour, and that troubles me.

THE COURT: Troubles me, too.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I am afraid the problems with scheduling have been rather extensive, and I've had people coming from various parts of various continents, and it has created a bit of a problem for me. I apologize for this inconvenience.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am sympathetic, Your Honour. The shoe was on the other foot not too many weeks ago, and Mr. Christie doesn't know how long or how short I will be in cross-examination [sic]. I just wanted to say that to you.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, please don't come to any conclusions. Please keep an open mind. Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

— The jury retires. 4:00 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 15, 1985.

— {3511|3512}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything, gentlemen, before I bring in the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, the Registrar gave me a copy of the exhibit with which Your Honour asked to have translated, and the translation has been provided for the extracted portion that is highlighted on the exhibit.

I have provided my friend with a copy of the translation I have.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. I am content, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: So if I may, I will just return the exhibit together with the translation of the excerpt on page 200.

The other thing Your Honour mentioned in respect to translation was the exhibit that is a lettered exhibit number, a letter which I can't recall, from the book, "Macht Ohne Moral", and the only reference to that exhibit is the display of a photograph which had been montaged with the addition of further bodies from a previous photograph and which is referred to in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" as an example of {3512|3513} forged photographic process. It was from the portion of the book referable [sic] to Udo Walendy's research into forged photographs, and that was an example cited in the book, only for the purpose of showing the photograph.

THE COURT: Now I remember. I don't think that[ ] needs a translation, if that is the purpose of it. All right. Thank you.

Is there anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. My first witness is ready.

THE COURT: Thank you. Call in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 10:08 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Brentar.

JEROME BRENTAR, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Brentar, what is the date of {3513|3514} your birth, sir?

A. July 17, 1922.

Q. And how old does that make you, sir?

A. Sixty-two.

Q. And where were you born, sir?

A. In Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. And where do you live now, sir?

A. In Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. And are you married?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you have children?

A. Five.

Q. And were you in the service of the United States Army in the War in Europe in 1945?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you since had academic training in a particular field?

A. Would you repeat that, sir?

Q. Have you had academic training in a particular field?

A. Yes. I studied social work and sociology at Michigan State University, and at Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not seeking to qualify the witness as an expert, Your Honour.

Q. In your personal experience in Europe, did you have firsthand knowledge of the practice and use of forged documents to obtain refugee status?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what organization were you {3514|3515} employed at that time?

A. I worked for the International Refugee Org[an]ization in Germany.

Q. What organization is that, sir?

A. That is an arm of the United Nations which was created in 1946. It is an off-shoot of ANRRA to[ ] assist in the relocation of millions of people who found themselves in Germany and had no future in Germany, and our job was to see that those who wanted to return home to their country of origin were given permission, and those who didn't want to, we would find homelands for them in Canada and the United States and Australia, countries which wanted to accept refugees.

Q. So did you have the power to accept refugees?

A. Yes. I was employed as a screening officer for approximately a year dealing with the eligibility of refugees, whether they qualified within the mandate of the IRO Constitution as bona fide, or bona fide refugees within that framework.

Q. And did you speak the German language?

A. Yes, I do, sir.

Q. And in your capacity as an officer did you come to see the use of forged identification documents?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently?

A. I was assigned basically to screen the exodus of Jewish Refugees coming from the Soviet {3515|3516} Union. They came some time in the latter part of '48, '49 and '50, and I had mostly to do with them. And they practically all of them that I screened had phony I.D. cards.

Q. How did you know that, sir?

A. Because I know what a genuine I.D. card looked like because I had so many of them, but they were very good imitations of legitimate I.D. cards. And then, none of them spoke German, and they said that they allegedly lived and worked in Germany or were brought in as slave labourers or for other reasons. None of them spoke German, not even a word, and anybody who spent any time in Germany would at least know "Danken schöne" [Danke schön] and "Gutten morgen" [guten Morgen], and they were devoid of any knowledge of German, and the geography that I exposed them to, they were completely lost. And then I had a Jewish fellow working for me, he was my assistant and he told me that these documents —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection.

MR. CHRISTIE: Never mind. In your particular line of endeavour did you have superior officers?

A. Yes, I had.

Q. Did you complain about this process — you described it as Jewish immigrants from the Soviet Union presenting false I.D.?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you complain about that?

A. I complained to them, "What am I going to do? They have phony documents." And they said, "Let them go." {3516|3517}

Q. In your experience of your office could you comment on the ethnic or religious background of most of the people in it?

A. Most of them were Jews from the Soviet Union, some from Poland, but the bulk of them were from the Soviet Union.

Q. And how did they come to be, in your knowledge, in those positions of authority in the IRO?

A. Well, there were some channels that brought them in, which I found very peculiar, because to get out of the Soviet Union was most difficult.

THE COURT: Just a moment. We may be talking two different things.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. There is a confusion arising here. I am speaking about the people who were in the administration of the IRO.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any ability to know them personally?

A. Well, some of them I did get to know, the ones whom I worked immediately under. And then I knew the names of some of them in the higher echelons, most of whom were in Geneva, Switzerland.

Q. Did you have, from your firsthand knowledge of these people, any knowledge of the ethnic background?

A. There were a number of Jews.

Q. Were your complaints about the {3517|3518} presentation of forged documents acted upon at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you continue to complain?

THE COURT: He said that he complained.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

Q. What did you do about these forged documents?

A. I just had to permit these people to gain their eligibility as bona fide refugees, even though I knew that they were not bona fide refugees.

Q. Why did you have to do that?

A. This is my job. I was told to do it this way, and I have no alternative.

Q. As a result of these experiences did you become involved as an investigator for the defence in a war crimes trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are you still acting in that capacity?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who is the accused in that case?

A. Ivan John Demjunjak [Demjanjuk], from Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. Have you been obstructed in your search for evidence on history?

A. I have, sir.

Q. By whom?

A. Basically the OSI.

Q. What's the OSI?

A. The Office of Special Investigations {3518|3519} in Washington, arm of the Department of Justice.

Q. Do you know the office well and the people in it?

A. Most of them. Most of the ones who I had dealings with, yes, sir.

Q. And how many are there in that office?

A. There are fifty lawyers and paralegals working in the office. Fifty.

Q. Do you have knowledge of them on a personal basis?

A. Well, I know Neil Shirer, who was in charge. I know Clan Ryan, who was the original man in charge, and Neil Shirer succeeded him.

Q. And do you know the religious background of those people?

A. Yes. Forty out of fifty are Jews.

Q. And in regard to the difficulty that you have experienced, what have you done on behalf of this accused, John Demjunjak [sic]?

A. I became involved by reading an article in the newspaper;

Q. Don't quote the article.

A. Well, it was a story about John Demjunjak [sic] being indicted on the basis of an I.D. card provided by the Soviet Union through the office [sic] of the Special Investigations.

Q. So why did you become involved?

A. Because I know how prevalent phony documents were in Germany, that they were — they could have been bought for a pound of coffee if one {3519|3520} wanted to, or birth certificates, or certificates of ineligibility for military service. Witnesses could be bought for a pound of coffee or a carton of cigarettes. So I knew that there was something phony about that document.

Q. What did you do, sir, to investigate the case?

A. I volunteered as a witness.

Q. What did you do to investigate the case?

A. Well, I went, first of all, to Hamburg, Germany, to Karl Streiber, who was the Oberfu[ü]hrer of Trawcki [Trawniki] camp in Poland.

Q. Why did you go there, sir?

A. Because his signature was on the card that it was allegedly issued in Trebnicki (phonetic) [Trawniki] and I went to see him once on the Island of Majorca where he was vacationing or had his winter residence, and then I met him twice in Hamburg.

Q. When was that, sir?

A. This was in '82 and '83.

Q. And did you present the card that you were seeking confirmation of?

A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. And without giving anything as to what he said, did you form an opinion as to the authenticity of the card?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you then conduct further investigations?

A. Yes, sir. {3520|3521}

Q. What further investigations did you do?

A. I went to see, at the suggestion of Mr. Stribe, a Mr. Rudolf Reiss.

Q. The man Stribe was the last man you spoke about?

A. He was the first man I spoke to. Then I went to see Mr. Reiss in Hamburg, Germany.

Q. Yes.

A. Because he told me that Mr. Rudolf Reiss was the paymaster during his service in Trebnicki [sic], and he had more of these I.D. cards, and he could set me straight whether there was — on any information I wanted, any specific information about the card, because he, Mr. Karl Streibe, said he only signed the cards, but the cards were much closely scrutinized by Mr. Rudolf Reiss.

Q. And so you went to see Mr Rudolf Reiss?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And as a result of that did you endeavour to call him as a witness, Rudolf Reiss?

A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. And was that effected by the authorities of the OSI?

A. Absolutely. They tore into him as if he was on trial, and not as a witness.

Q. Were any threats involved?

A. Well, the man it came to such a position where he said, "Tell me, am I on trial, or am I as a witness here to authenticate the document?" {3521|3522}

Q. All right.

A. And they constantly brought in, "How many Jews did you kill? Were you a member of the Totenkopf?"

Q. To whom did they make that accusation?

A. To Mr. Reiss.

Q. And he was your witness?

A. He was my witness. And they had a big headline, "Ex-Nazi to testify." And he said, "My God. I am not a Nazi. Not everyone of us is a Nazi."

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't want to hear waht [sic] he said.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Don't tell us what he said. There will be an objection. Now, what did you do to find out facts for the defence of John [ ] Demjunjak?

A. I went to Chelmno, Germany, to see a Heinrich [ ] schaffer (phonetic) who was a paymaster and I brought him a copy of the I.D. card and he said —

Q. Don't tell me what he said.

A. And he said —

Q. Never mind.

A. Then I went to see Otto Hobn (phonetic) in Berlin who was allegedly in Treblinka and who was used by the plaintiff as a witness, and I got a different story from him, too, and then I went to see Kurt Franz who was the commander of the Security Guards, the Ukrainian guards in Treblinka, and I showed him the I.D. card which was used against John Demjunjak [sic], and he says — {3522|3523}

THE COURT: No. No.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Where was he at the time?

A. He was in prison in Germany.

Q. Did you know if he was investigated by the OSI?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Wait a minute.

MR. CHRISTIE: I simply asked him a question as to whether he investigated that, and not what he said. And if I can stop the question —

THE COURT: I think we can take it that the answer is yes.

Is that correct, witness?

THE WITNESS: Yes, he was, sir.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you go to Treblinka in Poland?

A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. Why?

A. Because I wanted to learn more about Treblinka. I went to the archives there to see if I could find a similar I.D. card and also to find somebody who might have worked in Treblinka who might have seen Ivan.

Q. What is Demjunjak [sic] accused of being?

A. He is accused of being Ivan the Terrible of Treblinka who was in charge of the gas chambers in Treblinka.

Q. Yes. Now, did you find witnesses that you felt would be useful in the defence of Mr. {3523|3524} Denjunjak [sic] in Treblinka?

A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. How many?

A. I found five, but three of whom were very qualified. So I chose to stay with the three.

Q. And what did you do to endeavour to have them come to the United States and testify?

A. I had our attorneys issue subpoenas to have them come, and they got their visas, too, of — the people got their visas to give their visas on the Friday, because Saturday they had the reservations to come to Cleveland.

Q. What [ ] happened to their trip?

A. Well, they went to pick up the third visa at the American Embassy, and when they came there they were told to sit down and —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What happened to their trip? You can't say what anybody said. There will be an objection.

A. I'm sorry. Their visas [visas] were nullified.

Q. By whom?

A. By the American Consul in Warsaw.

Q. Thank you. Did you find other people who you wanted to bring to the United States in the defence of John Demjunjak [sic]?

A. Well, I came across — this was the attorney for Mr. Kurt Franz who knew about the Dusseldorf trials of 1934 — {3524|3525}

Q. How did he know about the Dusseldorf trials?

A. Because he was the defence attorney, and he got an affidavit for me signed by Eliah Rosenberg, who is also a witness against John Demjunjak [sic].

Q. And did Mr. Eliah Rosenberg testify?

A. In the affidavit written on the 24th of December, 1947, on his way from Vienna to Israel, he stated, among other —

Q. Never mind what he stated. You can't prove what he stated. I want to know what you did to get evidence, Rosenberg.

A. I went to Israel.

Q. Why did you go to Israel?

A. To speak to Mr. Rosenberg about the statement that he killed Ivan during the uprising in 1943 in Treblinka.

Q. Why did you not simply try to use the affidavit?

A. The OSI kept putting me off, and said, "Did you speak to this Mr. Rosenberg?" I said, "Well, why do I have to speak to him? He spoke on this affidavit. The signature is on 12 pages that he spoke the truth when he made this affidavit, and you can compare this."

Q. Never mind what was said. What happened when you went to Israel to get —

A. I went to get the address.

Q. Did you get the address? {3525|3526}

A. Yes.

Q. Did you find him?

A. No, I didn't find him. He moved.

Q. Did you get another address?

A. I went to the Ministry of the Interior, and he helped me find him.

Q. Were you allowed to approach Mr. Rosenberg?

A. No. They blocked my way, the OSI, in conjunction with the Israeli police.

Q. So in regard to the three people at Treblinka, your trip to Israel to get in touch with Eliah Rosenberg, and in your efforts to communicate with Kurt Franz, who was paying for all this?

A. I paid out of my own pocket.

Q. Why did you do that?

THE COURT: Just a moment, Mr. Christie, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I want to get at his intentions.

THE COURT: I know you do, but there is a certain way of doing it, and I would have thought that you wouldn't want to cross-examine your own witness, now, would you?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I quite agree, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please don't.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I suppose it is my tone of voice.

THE COURT: No, it's not only your tone of voice, but also the way you frame the questions. {3526|3527}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. I will try to follow Your Honour's advice in this respect, and instructions.

Q. Were you prevented in any other way from your investigation of this matter?

A. Yes. When the three witnesses were blocked from coming to testify as to the innocence of John Demjunjak [sic], I went to Warsaw back again. I took the three people to the War Crimes Commission in Warsaw, which investigated alleged war crimes, and I had a composite made from the information that they supplied to this artist, and then — Q. Of who?

A. Of the Ivan that they knew of Treblinka, and not John Demjunjak [sic]. And I went to the American Embassy to have this authenticated and to have their signature notarized, but they refused to do it.

Q. Who is "they"?

A. The counsel there. They just said no.

Q. Never mind what they said. Were you aware at any time of the Walus case?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What did that have to do with the Demjunjak [sic] case?

A. It follows a parallel — an innocent man who was made a scapegoat.

Q. Why are you involved in these cases?

A. Well, I am a social worker by inclination, and I fought in World War II for justice {3527|3528} and to restore the freedoms which have allegedly been deprived of these people, and if I risked my life doing that, I figured [figured] risking some money was a far lesser price to pay in search of truth and justice.

Q. How long have you known Ernst Zundel?

A. Mr. Zundel, I think for the last three years.

Q. Has he asked you to undertake any research for him in regard to Auschwitz?

A. He asked me to obtain some documents from the Auschwitz Museum and archives.

Q. And did you do so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give them to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any communications at the request of Mr. Zundel with a Joseph Ginsberg?

A. Ginsberg ...

Q. Or Burg.

A. Yes. I went to see Mr. Burg in Munich. I had a nice conversation with him and learned an awful lot from him.

Q. Is he Jewish?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. How was that interview conducted?

A. In German.

Q. And you speak German.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in any way recorded?

A. Yes, I made a recording of it. {3528|3529}

Q. What kind of recording?

A. I had a cassette recorder in my pocket, with his permission, of course.

Q. And at whose request was that interview? [sic]

A. Well, I think I was — well, Mr. Zundel mentioned what an interesting person he was, and that I could learn an awful lot, and I am always in search of knowledge, and I went to see him and had a very nice conversation with him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you. Answer any questions from my learned friend, please.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Brentar, in 1946, you said, you started working screening refugees?

A. No, sir. It was in 1948 that I started with the International Refugee Organization. I was in the U.S. Service until January 1946. I went back to Michigan State after my discharge.

Q. Okay. And how long were you with the International Refugee Organization?

A. I started to work for them in the end of August 1948, and I worked there until July 1956. I'm sorry, 1950.

Q. Two years, then?

A. Yes, sir. {3529|3530}

Q. And are you retired now from your job?

A. No.

Q. What's your job now?

A. I am a travel agent now.

Q. So you are self employed as a travel agent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so you are not working in the field of social work and sociology, and haven't really since you got your degree. Is that fair?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. What's UNRRA?

A. That is United Nations Rehabilitation and Relief Administration

Q. And the United Nations Refugee Organization that you were working for was associated with UNRRA?

A. That was an off-shoot of UNRRA. UNRRA was created to give direct aid to people, food and shelter and medical attention. And then, after they were rehabilitated, or somewhat rehabilitated, then they formed UNRO to help them emigrate to other countries.

Q. So the refugee organization was still a United Nations Organization?

A. Yes. It was still under the United Nations.

Q. Okay. And the particular section that you were dealing with was screening refugees from the Soviet Union? {3530|3531}

A. Well, it was screening of all refugees, but I was brought in basically because of the influx of refugees from the Soviet Union, and there were other nationalities, too, but mostly from the Soviet Union.

Q. Mostly from the Soviet Union. And were there other departments or other arms of the International Refugee Organization that were concerned with refugees from other areas than the Soviet Union?

A. Oh, yes. Anybody from eastern Europe who chose not to return to their homeland Poland, Ukraine, Croatia, Serbia, Slovakia, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria — all these eastern European countries.

Q. Or Germany.

A. No. The Germans at the time were still not qualified for resettlement. They became qualified later on.

Q. After 1950?

A. I think it was back — yes, after 1950, because I left the organization in July, and shortly after they began to qualify German ethnics for immigration.

Q. So you would have no information about how many phony documents were coming from other groups?

A. Well, there probably were, but cannot remember. The ones from the Soviet Union, they stood out because they are most prevalent.

Q. And that was the group that you were working with?

A. Pardon, sir? {3531|3532}

Q. And this was the group that you were largely working with.

A. Yes.

Q. So I guess my question is, you are not aware whether or not it was all the same with the other groups because your experience was just with this one group.

A. From what I was able to gather, no group was as well organized as the Jewish group in the creation of these fabricated documents, because they had the Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Litz where many of these documents, I was told, came from.

Q. Well, you say that from your knowledge?

A. This is what I was told by my Jewish employee.

Q. Did you ever follow that up?

A. I was told to do my job and to pass the people, and —

Q. That is not my question. Did you ever follow it up?

A. It was not my responsibility or within my jurisdiction.

Q. So the answer is no.

A. But I made this known to the people whom I worked for.

Q. Okay. Were you still in the service from 1948, or is this a civilian job for —

A. This is a civilian job.

Q. And who was in charge of your office? {3532|3533}

A. I worked for a Miss Agnes Hoxley.

Q. A nice Jewish name. How many were in your office?

A. Only she and I as the international personnel. And then we had four subordinates who worked for us as associates. They worked under us.

Q. Okay. Now, we heard something, a bit about the war crimes trial of a man that you are investigating now, or working for now. What was his name again?

A. Ivan Demjunjak [sic].

Q. All right. And is that proceeding still going on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it's going on in Cleveland, Ohio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what is the proceeding exactly? Is the trial going on in Cleveland, his guilt or innocence?

A. The man is now facing extradition to Israel.

Q. I see. And who has requested that extradition to Israel?

A. The Israelis and the OSI.

Q. And are there any other countries that are seeking Mr. Demjunjak [sic]?

A. Well, they claim Russia is, but that is not proven. The Israelis are more concerned than Russia is.

Q. But the formal extradition papers {3533|3534} is a request by Israel for his extradition.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long has that proceeding been going on in Cleveland, Ohio?

A. Since 1981, sir.

Q. Almost four years.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has there been a presentation of evidence yet?

A. Pardon, sir?

Q. Has there been a presentation of evidence yet?

A. We have given them all the evidence that can prove the man's innocence.

Q. No. My question, sir, is whether there was a hearing, a formal court hearing.

A. Yes, sir, but we have appealed and it is under appeal now.

Q. What was the result of the formal courtroom hearing?

A. The result was, our attorney argued that —

Q. No.

THE COURT: What did the judge say?

THE WITNESS: The judge is considering the appeal.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: No. What was the result of the hearing?

A. The hearing, our contention was —

Q. No. What was the result of the hearing? {3534|3535}

A. We presented him a five hundred page brief.

Q. What was the result of the hearing?

A. He accepted the brief. That was the hearing.

Q. There is a hearing that you are appealing. The judge made a ruling, presumably, of the hearing you are appealing. What was the ruling the judge made?

A. It's under consideration.

Q. Do you understand my question? What are you appealing, if it is still under consideration?

A. We are appealing that the man is innocent and that Israel has no jurisdiction to ask for him because the crimes are not committed in Israel and were committed — or the alleged crimes that he is accused of didn't take place during the War and not when Israel was created and Israel did not have jurisdiction over any possible fact to laws.

Q. Now, has the judge made a ruling on that already?

A. Well, this is what is being considered now.

Q. Was there a courtroom proceeding like this, with a judge sitting up deciding whether there was enough evidence to warrant an extradition hearing?

A. Yes, there was. Not as much people as here, but there was.

Q. All right. At the end of that {3535|3536} hearing did the judge make a decision?

A. The case is being continued until he lost the brief over.

Q. All right. So it isn't a question of an appeal. You are still at the first instance here.

Q. No. It's an appeal, and together with the brief — you see, I am not an attorney. I don't know all these —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. If I have your patience for just a moment, I may be able to clear this up.

Q. Was there a hearing, the judge made a finding and the same judge is now reconsidering his finding?

A. Yes. You see —

Q. Is that right?

A. I am an investigator. I am not an attorney. So I am only concerned to present the documents that are necessary to prove the man's innocence and let the attorney take it from there.

Q. All right. The proceeding in Cleveland, Ohio is not a trial; it is an extradition hearing. Is that right?

A. It is, yes.

Q. And the trial ultimately would take place, if he was extradited, in Israel; is that right?

A. Well, he would be extradited to Israel and then —

Q. And a trial.

A. And a trial would take place, yes. {3536|3537}

Q. There is no trial going on in the sense of prosecution witnesses, defence witnesses and a final determination of guilt or innocence in Cleveland, Ohio.

A. No, not at this time.

Q. You told us you got involved with this because of a newspaper article you read about this gentleman and you told Mr. Christie that witnesses in Germany could be bought for a pound of coffee. Is that what you said?

A. That's right.

Q. And do you know of any witnesses that were bought for a pound of coffee in Germany?

A. I don't know them now, but I knew them in Germany when I worked there.

Q. What were they testifying for, a pound of coffee?

A. A carton of cigarettes, pound of coffee, a pound bacon, because there was —

Q. Well —

MR. CHRISTIE: Could he finish, please? I would object to my witnesses —

THE COURT: The answer wasn't responsive to the question. Crown counsel is perfectly entitled to ask the question again to get a responsive answer.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that, Your Honour, but my concern is that while the witness was giving the answer, my friend started the question again.

THE COURT: I just gave a ruling. Go ahead. {3537|3538}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Where was he testifying, these witnesses that were bought for a pound of bacon, a pound of coffee?

A. This was information that circulated throughout Germany. There was such pandemonium hunger that people were doing anything for —

Q. You don't know this of your own knowledge?

A. This was a consensus [sic] of opinion.

Q. They were rumours?

A. Not necessarily so.

Q. Well, they weren't rumours to you. Name the person you know who testified for a pound of coffee or a pound of bacon and what trial he testified in.

A. There was no way of knowing which of the ones were, but judging from the information, the way they supplied the information, they were not legitimate witnesses.

Q. There weren't any Jewish witnesses that were testifying for a pound of bacon, were there?

A. I don't know. I didn't ask them.

Q. You then went on, you told us the trail that you followed to try and obtain evidence, documentary and otherwise, in the defence of Mr. Demjunjak [sic], and my understanding was that your testimony was that the OSI branch of the Justice Department in the United States blocked you every way.

A. Wherever they knew I was going to be, they did.

Q. Did you find that they had been {3538|3539} there before you in the course of their investigation to prepare the prosecution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. So they had done a thorough job as well.

A. A one-sided job, sir.

Q. And do I understand you that you have some information that the OSI was responsible for the witnesses from Poland not getting their visas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What information is that?

A. Because I was sent a telegram that the witnesses had their visas taken away from them, and I called the Attorney, Mr. Mark O'Connor, and he called Warsaw, and Warsaw said that at the instructions of the OSI their visas were nullified.

Q. All right. Warsaw is a big place. Who was Mr. Demjunjak's [sic] attorney speaking to in Warsaw?

A. He was speaking to the Consul who issued the visas, Mr. Hames Helmo (phonetics)

Q. Were you in contact with Mr. Helmo?

A. No, I wasn't, sir.

Q. Did you go over the second time?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you get in touch with Mr. Helmo?

A. Pardon, sir?

Q. When you went over a second time to have a composite drawing drawn up did you get in {3539|3540} touch with Mr. Helmo?

A. Yes, I did, sir, and he refused to notarize the signatures of the three witnesses who gave the depositions and the information supplied to the artist to bring about this composite which I was taking back with me to Cleveland.

Q. Okay. Did you have information as to what witnesses and documents the District Attorney or the prosecution in Cleveland, Ohio, will be relying on in their extradition proceedings?

A. Well, they had the five witnesses who testified against Mr. Demjunjak [sic], one of whom was Mr. Rosenberg who claims that that man, Ivan Demjunjak [sic], was the Ivan of Treblinka that they were searching for.

Q. All right. They had five witnesses and you were aware of who those witnesses were.

A. Yes, sir. Yes.

Q. And did those witnesses come and testify themselves, or did they submit their evidence at the extradition proceedings by means of an affidavit?

A. No. The original trial — you see, this is all in the appeal state because the original decision was ruled against Mr. Demjunjak [sic]. And just prior to that I got into the case and did my own voluntary investigating.

Q. Your voluntary investigating was after there had been a decision by the judge?

A. Well, just about the time when I was called to the witness stand to testify, shortly after the decision against Mr. Demjunjak [sic] was given.

Q. All right. So five people, including {3540|3541} Mr. Rosenberg, had already testified when you got involved?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. Your lapel button is flashing. Are those your initials?

A. No. I belong to the Singers' Club of Cleveland.

Q. I see. So when you were looking for Mr. Rosenberg in Cleveland, he had already testified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And been cross-examined by Mr. Demjunjak's [sic] lawyer.

A. The first attorney, Mr. John Martin.

Q. Yes. Who is his lawyer.

A. Yes.

Q. Were there documents as well that the Justice Department people, the OSI, were using at this extradition?

A. Yes. They were using an alleged I.D. card provided to them by the KGB of the Soviet Union.

Q. I see. Is that from the National Archives?

A. Well, from their department, the KGB.

Q. From the KGB.

A. Yes.

Q. Were there other documents?

A. That was the main document around which the whole case was built. {3541|3542}

Q. There were other documents; that was the most important one.

A. That was the one of paramount importance.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, there is a matter of slides which I would like to try to introduce, and I would like to introduce that. I suppose we should do that in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you will excuse us, please.

— The jury retires. 10:55 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, gentlemen.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I must say I object to evidence that is being submitted to the Court for discussion as to its admissibility being {3542|3543} referred to in the presence of the jury before it is found to be admissible.

THE COURT: I can only assume this is an obvious ploy on Mr. Christie's part.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can mention what it is.

THE COURT: No, you can't, Mr. Christie. What you do is, you stand up and you say, "There is a matter I would like to discuss with the Court in the absence of the jury." You don't bother telling the jury what the matter is until I rule on it. Unless you say that that was entirely accidental on your part, then I must assume it was deliberate, because you have already told me about your vast experience at the bar.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't recall telling Your Honour of any vast experience at the bar.

THE COURT: Yes, you did. It is on the record. So it was naivete on your part, or deliberate?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, if there is any imputation of malice aforethought, then I firmly and sincerely deny it. I think my friend is becoming sensitive about these matters, but I have {3543|3544} suggested I have not, at any time, raised the issue of any vast experience at the Bar, nor do I think it necessary for Your Honour to comment upon my experience at the Bar unless I have done something wrong.

THE COURT: You have just done something very wrong.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, I frankly maintain the position that, to simply say that I wish to discuss the matter of admissibility of an item in the absence of the jury is not improper. I have never been told, in my experience —

THE COURT: It is not proper and you will not do it again. Now, let's get on with it.

What slides do you want to show?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, on the previous occasion I endeavoured to introduce evidence, and I would like to put on the record in the form of a voir dire the reason why I maintain the now relevance and admissibility of the exhibits which, until now, Your Honour held were inadmissible because the accused might not testify.

I wish to call the accused on the voir dire to put on the record the relevance to the issue of {3544|3545} the reason for his belief and the fact that he is already a witness, and he will swear under oath that he is willing and able and will testify under oath, the same in front of the jury and in the absence of the jury.

I would like to call him on that point.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, there is a case of R. v. Parsons, it is from the Ontario Court of Appeal. Included in that case is the law as it pertains to voir dres.

Voir dres are held only for specific purposes, and this isn't one of the occasions. If as and when your client is called by you to give evidence on this trial —

MR. CHRISTIE: He has been.

THE COURT: — with leave of the Court for a specific reason, we are not going to hear from him again until such time as he is called to testify, at which time, if that evidence is introduced, I will rule on it. I will not rule in advance.

MR. CHRISTIE: I must insist on this right, Your Honour, that I call the accused to put {3545|3546} on record the circumstances surrounding this particular item, which is the slides of Ditleb Felderer and Dr. Faurisson, and I would like the right to put it on record, as I indicated.

THE COURT: You are putting it on record now.

MR. CHRISTIE: I must put it on record, in my submission, in the form of the sworn testimony of the accused as to certain things, and I would like the right to do so, sir.

THE COURT: It's denied.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to say, Your Honour, that there is, in respect to this particular exhibit, a problem in that the witness, Felderer, who is still here and who can produce those slides and identify them and produce the reasons why it is relevant by virtue of the fact that he told the accused the things which describe those slides makes that exhibit pertinent to the state of mind of the accused. That information was communicated prior to the alleged offence, the alleged offence of publishing false news in 1983, and Mr. Felderer communicated the information of these slides prior to that time. He, in {3546|3547} fact, communicated it in 1981 and '82, and it is my request that the accused be allowed to testify now as to the fact that he received that information from Mr. Felderer, that he will testify, as he has already on the stand, that Mr. Felderer may then introduce [sic] those slides and describe them in the same way he described them to the accused in front of the jury to show that is the accused has a reasonable basis for his belief based on them.

Your Honour, in the last ruling, said that he could not introduce the slides because I gave my undertaking, and Your Honour referred to it as a worthless undertaking.

THE COURT: I did not say it was worthless. I said you could not give it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I heard Your Honour say that it was a worthless undertaking.

THE COURT: I did not mean it in a derogatory sense, Mr. Christie. An undertaking is worthless if it cannot be fulfilled.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, the undertaking which was worthless in the sense Your Honour has described will be fulfilled. He will give {3547|3548} evidence; he is a witness before the jury and will continue to give evidence before the jury.

The difficulty that I have and makes me request that the accused be allowed to introduce this evidence now is simply this, that Mr. Felderer leaves today and, therefore, cannot be available to provide the evidence at a later stage.

If it is impossible now to allow that evidence to be introduced, it will not be possible at any other stage to introduce it. The same applies to Dr. Faurisson whose slides were also provided at the time to the accused to assist him to form the opinion that the book was true.

Now, if my client has the right to testify as he has in the past, and if my client has the right to testify that he formed an opinion based upon evidence provided by Dr. Faurisson and the witness, Felderer, then he should be allowed to introduce that at some stage.

It is obvious that if I cannot call that evidence now, it will never be available to me. The accused has already testified out of a sense of responsibility to the Court to do, at an early stage, {3548|3549} what would have to be done, in my opinion, at any stage. That was to prove the formalities of the correct identification of the references in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

It was my intention to do that so that I could indicate to Your Honour that my worthless undertaking has been fulfilled, that he is a witness on the stand in front of the jury and, therefore, I can tell Your Honour that he is prepared to swear and able to swear now that he relied upon Mr. Felderer's slides, which are not something that is not relevant to his opinion.

Your Honour says it is irrelevant to the truth. Your Honour made that decision, but I don't think that Your Honour can make the decision that it is irrelevant to my client's opinion. I have not yet heard Your Honour say that; but it would seem to me that if it is relevant to my client's opinion and if he is willing, ready and able to testify to that fact and if he is willing, ready and able to take the stand now as I have the right to have him do and swear that he intends to call that evidence and swear under oath what this evidence is in the absence of the jury, it is {3549|3550} simply a matter of convenience so that his evidence may be tendered now rather than never.

If Mr. Felderer and Dr. Faurisson have to go back to France or, rather, to Sweden and France and to other parts of the world, then, because of the stipulation that my client had not yet taken the stand at the time when I last proposed to call this evidence, and because of the ruling that he may not now testify, I assume that was the direction of Your Honour's comment, as to the basis for his belief, then the defence will be frustrated in producing before the jury the pieces of factual information upon which the accused based his opinion.

These photographs include photographs of the American gas chamber and the comparison with the alleged German gas chamber. These photographs include the firsthand eye witness observations of Mr. Felderer in the form of photographs produced on the scene with his own camera in his own presence and with lens settings and film he can describe, and if all that is irrelevant to Your Honour, it may not be irrelevant to my client's formation of his opinion; and if we are not allowed to produce that evidence, then we are not {3550|3551} allowed to put before the Court and the jury those things which were the factual basis for my client's opinion.

That, in my respectful submission, would be to frustrate the major portion of the defence in the presentation of the basis for the accused's honest belief in the accuracy and truth of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" which, to a large part, denies the truth of the gas chamber as it has been so far alleged.

That is a reason why I most fervently insist upon the right of the accused to testify, to make relevant, to place on record the reason for the relevance of his desired and proposed evidence of the photographs produced by Felderer and Faurisson. And if I cannot, at this stage, do what I have requested the right to do, then of course, the defence will not be able to produce evidence of the basis for my client's belief, in fact, the best evidence, in fact, the evidence which he already testified he relied upon to a very large extent, namely the firsthand eye witness observations of Felderer and Faurisson; then we will, Your Honour, not have had the opportunity to put before the {3551|3552} jury the defence both of His [sic] honest belief in the truth, and the truth itself, as he believes it to be derived from the firsthand observation of eye witnesses at the scene.

Your Honour said that you feel that forty years later there is nothing relevant to be drawn from the photographs. That is a matter that Your Honour has every right to say. It is Your Honour's opinion. I don't dispute that, nor Your Honour's right to have that opinion. I only wish to maintain that my client has a right to his opinion and the right to show the jury the basis of that opinion based upon what he has done for many years, to search for the truth, and have to say.

Therefore I would like to be able to put before the jury his reasonable basis of belief.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, the argument in the past on the admis-

sibility of the slides, both Dr. Faurisson's and Mr. Felderer's, has centred around the truth issue, if I can call it that, whether {3552|3553} these slides, taken some forty years afterwards, of concentration camps or of gas chambers that are entirely different in concept and purpose from that of mass gassing in Germany, are not relevant to the issue of truth because of obvious changes that have been made in the camps.

That argument still prevails, I would suggest.

Now, as I understand Mr. Christie's argument, he is not saying he is not submitting well, he is not submitting these things for the truth of them, but if the jury wants to take it as the truth they can, but the reason he wants to submit these things is to show Mr. Zundel's belief.

With respect, Your Honour, I think if Mr. Zundel testifies again before the jury, as he will, he is not finished yet, that at that time he could indicate that this is the basis of his belief, and the information that he has with respect to the slides, and the jury, I would suggest, would have to be charged most carefully that these are not evidence of proof of anything, but only to his belief.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't object to that. I am sure that Your Honour will charge them that way because it is for them to decide both the issue of truth and the issue of my client's honest belief.

I would very much like to make it as convenient as possible and not to interrupt the normal flow of proceedings, but when I am stuck with problems of transportation as I have, I must ask the right to even now put my client on the stand in front of the jury, let him say, as I am instructed he will say, let him say it now that it is the basis of his honest belief – it is my instruction that it is the basis of his honest belief – and let the jury decide the reasonableness of that basis.

So far we have the benefit of Mr. Felderer's cross-examination which portrayed him in less than a flattering light, one might say. We have not yet seen the results of his actual work. There are many people who I could, taken outside the sphere of their work, be made to look ridiculous at times; but what had Felderer actually done, produced what Zundel received, it is not in the flippant and funny nature. That is the issue. I put him on the stand {3554|3555} knowing his flippant, funny nature, but I wanted to show that what Felderer produced, my client derived some knowledge.

If my friend wishes to say that that knowledge is irrelevant because it is forty years old and the buildings have changed and all the rest, he has every right to do that in the cross-examination of my client and he also has every right to do that in submission, and Your Honour will no doubt charge them as my friend indicates, and I have no objection to that; but I am only asking for the right to put before the jury the real substance of what Felderer gave Zundel, not his flippant image, not his humour, but the substance of his communication.

So that's why I am afraid I have become rather concerned about this, because my friend has all the benefit of Felderer's flippancy, and no indication of what he actually communicated is in the jury's mind at all. And that is rather unfair, in my submission, and that is something that, if I am entitled to call the evidence that actually was communicated between the two, I could correct. Otherwise half the story, half beneficial to the Crown of what Mr. {3555|3556} Felderer said, will be available to the jury. The other half of what he actually communicated to the accused will not be before the jury, and that would, in my submission, be unfair. And I think I almost detect a suggestion that maybe it might be, for my friend – I hope I don't put words in his mouth – but I suggest that he is saying, and I think I can agree with him, that – I don't know if I am interpreting correctly, but if he is saying that for the benefit of proving whatever reasonable basis or unreasonable basis Felderer's pictures were, they might go in and Your Honour will instruct the jury that they will not go for the truth, I have sympathy for Your Honour in the difficulty that the case presents, but I don't think it is an insurmountable difficulty. I have every confidence that Your Honour can tell the jury that the Felderer slides are not to prove the truth of the opinions expressed but that those opinions were based and communicated to the accused as a method of ascertaining, perhaps, his seriousness of inquiry, perhaps his level of concern for the truth. That is one of the issues.

And I concede that there might be a {3556|3557} by-product, that the jury might think that what Felderer said was the truth, although there were previous opportunities of portraying him as a clown. Maybe they will see him in a new light, but if there is an advantage to the accused in the form of evidence about intent that therefore we should exclude it because the beneficial effect might outweigh the prejudicial value of the accused, I don't think my friend means to contest this or to say that, but I think that would be the result if we exclude it, what might be the substance of the communication between the two parties.

And I see my friend is anxious to reply and I am not implying that that was his intent, but it would certainly be the fact if I was not allowed to show what, in fact, was communicated between the two and what was the substance of the communication.

THE COURT: Anything else either side? Counsel always have the last word.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just one very brief minute, Your Honour, I'm sorry, but my suggestion is, Your Honour, what Mr. Felderer says he said is not important.

THE COURT: Not what? {3557|3558}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is not important to this trial. It is what Mr. Zundel believes that he said. And I would object to Mr. Felderer being called for the purpose of rehabilitating Mr. Felderer in his cross-examination.

THE COURT: I have your point.

MR. GRIFFITHS: But Mr. Zundel at some point will say, "Well, I received these slides and this is my understanding of what they are and on that basis I formed an opinion."

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, it is extremely important what Felderer told the accused about these slides. My client did not go to Auschwitz. How can he say what communication was made to him?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is not for the truth, but for the honest belief.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, indeed. The source of that honest belief is to a large extent Felderer. Now, am I not allowed to lead before the jury what Felderer told the accused? Are we supposed to say, "Here is a picture." The accused, for the purpose of who took it, to swear what it is. My friend says {3558|3559} you can't do that because it will prove the truth of the picture, so what might accrue to the defence on the issue of truth should be overcome and prevented so nothing can be said about what Felderer told the accused. If that is the case, I am stuck with the proposition that we can introduce the slides and it can be shown on the screen, and if the accused can say what it is without ever having been there and speaking for the Crown now as if I were the Crown, I can then cross-examine him to say that he never was there and he doesn't know what it is.

Well, that would be satisfactory to the Crown. I find that a proposition that verges on the total elimination of the effect of the defence's evidence, and the prevention of the defence from calling what is the firsthand eye witness present, the photographer, to prove he took the pictures and to tell us what he photographed.

It strikes me as a remarkable proposition that we, in a case in Canada, cannot call the photographer to prove he took the photograph, to say he gave the photograph to the accused and he described to the accused what the photograph was. That is all I am asking for the right to do. {3559|3560}

If my friend wants to show once! more how ridiculous he thinks Mr. Felderer is, I don't object to that. He will have every opportunity to do that again, but I hope that I can have the benefit of showing to the jury what my client got from Felderer and what he understood from Felderer was the substance of what he got, because Felderer took the pictures.

The same applies to Faurisson, and I can only assure you of one thing. I don't intend to spend hours boring the jury with pictures, but there are some very good descriptive pieces of evidence that my client relied upon.

Your Honour has not seen them all. Your Honour has seen the slides of Faurisson which were rather obscure.

My friend has the right to raise these arguments before the jury, but have I not the right to bring before the jury just the reasonableness of the belief of the accused and how he got it and where he got it? I don't think I am asking for more than that, and I don't think that justice should give me less than that.

—— {3560|3561}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, in the absence of the jury, has moved the Court for leave to call the accused to testify as a witness.

The purpose, as I understand it, for this request, is to permit Mr. Zundel and two other witnesses, who have already been called to the box, cross-examined and dismissed, to be recalled to testify in the presence of the jury concerning a number of photographs taken by one Felderer. Mr. Felderer has testified that he took, as I recall the number, about thirty thousand photographs of various concentration camp sites in and about Europe on a multitude of occasions. Mr. Felderer, when he was testifying, as I recall it, alluding to the photographs, was not permitted by my order to show them.

The cross-examination of Felderer and of one Robert Faurisson, who also testified for the defence, was concluded in the usual manner. It is now proposed that Mr. Zundel be called to testify with respect to the fact that he received from Felderer the photographs in question and based his belief on {3561|3562} the contents of the photographs, not only from what he saw in them, but also from what he was told by Felderer.

As I understand it, the defence also wants to call Felderer and Faurisson. Both of these witnesses, I am told, are about to depart back to their countries of origin in Europe.

As I gather, Mr. Christie has expressed some concern as to the impression Felderer might have given to the jury when he testified in-chief and was cross-examined. Mr. Christie, quite frankly, recognizes that the impression that was left by Felderer on the jury might be something, at least from the defence point of view, less than satisfactory.

There is no doubt from what I have heard from Mr. Christie that he would like to, in addition to questioning all of these witnesses on the photographs, and anxious to do the best he can if he is permitted to do so, to rehabilitate, as it were, the credibility that he suggests directly that Felderer may have lacked at least in the eyes of the jury.

This accused, with the consent of the Crown and the defence, has testified on one other {3562|3563} occasion for a specific reason. That reason was a formal one. It involved the accused being permitted to give evidence on the sources of the quotations in Exhibit 1 that the defence admits that he has published.

It is now proposed that the accused be called again for the restricted purpose I have mentioned.

I pointed out to Mr. Christie initially, and I do so now by way of formal reasons, that the motion is premature. If, as and when Mr. Zundel testifies, or indeed if, as and when the other witness testifies with respect to the defence, provided that the photographs or slides are germain [sic] to what is said, then the matter can be brought up again. If the photographs and slides are considered to be relevant and probative of an issue that the jury must decide, then consideration will be given to their admissibility.

Under no circumstances am I going to permit this accused to be called to testify on a restricted subject unless he is called to testify as a witness on behalf of the defence on this trial and {3563|3564} be subject to cross-examination on all of his evidence. I just will not permit the accused to again come to the box to testify on a certain restricted specific subject. That is so especially when it is perfectly obvious to me that the defence wants to rehabilitate one of a previously called defence witnesses who, at least from what I heard from Mr. Christie, in the eyes of the defence, may not have done as well before the jury as he was at one time expected to do.

For those reasons the motion is dismissed without prejudice to bring it again if, as and when counsel shall deem it proper as the course of the defence proceeds.

THE COURT: Now, do you have any more witnesses this morning?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I suppose as a matter of formality, but I'd like to ask the right to call the accused on this limited issue, to put before the jury the very thing that I wanted to put before Your Honour. {3564|3565}

THE COURT: I have just said you cannot do it. You can't. It is as simple as that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I suppose that nothing could stop me from calling the accused on the whole issue.

THE COURT: Nothing. Once you call him, then that is, insofar as this Court is concerned, he is testifying and he will be cross-examined totally on the trial, if Crown counsel wishes to do it. He will not be called for a specific purpose.

If you want to call him as a witness on the trial for the defence, you may certainly do that. Obviously you have a right to do it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think I do.

THE COURT: Certainly you do.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I think that I should be able to call him now on the issue of his — to put before you his evidence to the effect, and put it on the record, not just in a submission, put it on the record that what I said is true, and my friend won't allow me to do that.

THE COURT: It is not a question of {3565|3566} your friend allowing you to do anything; it is a question that I have ordered that he is not going to be called on a specific issue.

If he is going to be called, he is going to be called as a full witness for the defence.

MR. CHRISTIE: That means that all my defence witnesses will be backed up. Felderer and Faurisson will have to leave today and the consequence is that the slides will be totally without authorship.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I have no control over whether Dr. Faurisson and Mr. Felderer leave today or a month today. I have no control over that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I know that.

THE COURT: I don't suppose you do, either. All I am saying is, you can call any witness you like in any order, but once having done it, that witness is there and can be cross-examined as is the right of your opposition, the same right that you have.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour, but may I just — I don't mean to be repetitive, but is it not correct, in my understanding, that the accused has put himself in a position where he is {3566|3567} already a witness and can be cross-examined? Maybe I haven't understood well enough, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Let me make it crystal clear to you. You can call any witness on behalf of the defence that you wish in any order that you wish. If, however, you elect to call a witness from this point onward, then that witness can be cross-examined throughout, on the whole of the trial of what the witness says. And in the event that you do call your client, as you have a perfect right to do or not to do, as you shall decide and as he shall decide, then I am saying to you it will not be for a specific purpose where you can expect the witness then to be excused after the specific subject has been discussed to be cross-examined at a later date. He is open to cross-examination on the whole of this case. Now, do I make that clear to you?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Can I ask one other question?

THE COURT: Certainly.

MR. CHRISTIE: Does that mean that if he did testify on the specific subject he could not testify again? {3567|3568}

THE COURT: I am not going to permit you to call him on a specific subject, and that's the end of it. There will be no more questions and answers.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Thank you, Your Honour.

In view of Your Honour's ruling, I am afraid that I am without further evidence this morning. I have a witness available at two o'clock this afternoon, or two fifteen.

THE COURT: We will adjourn.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder, Your Honour, before the jury comes in, if I could provide Your Honour with the curriculum vitae of a witness that I propose to qualify as an expert, for your consideration over lunch? I gave my friend a copy earlier.

— The jury enters. 11:55 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, in view of the hour and the difficulty I have in terms of transportation, I wonder if I could have till two fifteen to call my next witness? I can only tell Your {3568|3569} Honour that this witness has travelled all night, arrived at seven in the morning, again on an all-night flight, and I didn't have him available because, for one thing, he needed some sleep, and I don't know how long the evidence of the morning witness would be. He can be here at two, two fifteen.

THE COURT: Is that the only witness you had scheduled other than the ones we heard from?

MR. CHRISTIE: This afternoon, yes, sir.

THE COURT: Yes. Two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 11:58 a.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I was just speaking to Mr. Christie about the argument regarding commission evidence, and I just wanted to advise Your Honour and Mr. Christie that when that argument comes up, in addition to the Bullement case, I will be relying on His Honour Judge Borins' decision of Rowbottom No. 2, and the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Demeter which – that part of {3569|3570} that decision concerning commission evidence.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder if my friend could assist me with the citations if he has them.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have them. I will give you copies of them.

THE COURT: When might that argument come up, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was thinking, Your Honour, whatever is convenient – my friend is prepared, apparently, at any time. So am I. I thought if the time permits this afternoon it might be convenient or not. I am prepared Monday morning, although I have another witness starting Monday morning. Perhaps we should leave it this afternoon to when the matter is more clear, Your Honour.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— {3570|3571}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:20 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. May I call my witness, Dr. Gary Botting.

GARY BOTTING, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Sir, where were you born and when?

A. I was born near Oxford, England, the 19th of July, 1943.

Q. And what citizenship are you?

A. Canadian.

Q. And your marital status?

A. I am married, four children.

Q. And what is your occupation?

A. Professor of English, and a writer.

Q. And where are you a professor of English?

A. At Red Deer College, Red Deer, Alberta.

Q. And what is your educational background? {3571|3572}

A. I have a B.A. from Trent University and an M.A. from the Memorial University of Newfoundland, Master of Fine Arts from the University of Alberta, and a Ph.D. from the University of Alberta.

Q. And in what areas did you obtain your Ph.D?

A. In contemporary and modern literature.

Q. Was there a specific focus in your contemporary literature study?

A. In particular, literature surrounding and following the War, the Second World War.

Q. Has there been any particular study in that area in regard to the subject of myth in post-War prose?

A. The basis of my studies, of my dissertations, was fundamentally the relationship between history, literature and myth, and the way history tends to become syphoned through literary process to become myth or mythical reality so that the myth of a given culture, or the culture myth which we all accept to be truth or, you know, the bulk of the population accepts to be truth is quite different from the original history that started it off.

Q. And in your studies of that subject {3572|3573} do you deal with the Holocaust literature?

A. Yes. I dealt with quite a bit of Holocaust literature, mostly English literature, however.

Q. You mean literature in the English language.

A. Yes. Literature in the English language.

Q. And in your present occupation of Professor at Red Deer College, how long have you been so employed?

A. Since 1972, August of 1972.

Q. And in the course of your teaching there, have you received any, or have you had the necessity to involve yourself in the analysis or presentation of Holocaust literature?

A. Yes, I have. This came to a head in particular this year when I had – I was trying to discuss two separate titles.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a moment, Dr. Botting, if I may.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just so I am clear, we are qualifying Dr. Botting, at this point, as an expert? {3573|3574}

MR. CHRISTIE: No. We are in the process, I think, of dealing with his actual experience in the realm of the Holocaust literature, and we are dealing with his experience in relation to his qualifications to speak on the subject as an expert. I have provided my friend with the information which I intend to lead on the subject, and I've also provided him with a memo of the witness' proposed evidence.

I can tell Your Honour in the presence of the jury the areas in which I will seek to qualify him, if you wish, and then we can direct all further questions more precisely in that area. That is what I am endeavouring to do.

THE COURT: I don't know that seeking to qualify him – witnesses are witnesses unless they become experts.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Do you not agree?

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, yes.

THE COURT: Then he is a witness. You won't need to qualify him in anything unless you intend to ask for his opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that, and {3574|3575} that is why I thought, well, I am dealing with the matter as fact that if he does it in his day-to-day work, I don't need to qualify him on that.

THE COURT: Anything else, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. I just needed a clarification.

MR. CHRISTIE: At a certain point – maybe I should clarify. At a certain point, dealing with his personal knowledge, I will be asking to qualify him to express his opinion.

THE COURT: On what subject?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have provided my friend with that information. I can tell Your Honour now, if you wish, first of all, as a scholar who has researched in the interrelationship of history, literature and culture myth, and I have provided Your Honour with the curriculum vitae.

THE COURT: You are going a little too quickly. First you want to qualify him as an expert in what?

MR. CHRISTIE: As a scholar and expert who has researched the interrelationships of history, {3575|3576} literature and cultural myth. Secondly, as a Professor of English literature who has taught at the University level using Holocaust literature to express his opinions upon that literature. Thirdly –

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Using his opinions on what – on Holocaust literature?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Its relationship to the necessity of his job. In other words, what he needs to have to teach the subject of Holocaust literature. Of course, there's some firsthand experiential [sic] evidence that he will be leading on this subject which I don't really care if he is qualified as an expert on that aspect. There is a firsthand experiential [sic] knowledge that I will be dealing with.

THE COURT: What's the third?

MR. CHRISTIE: The third is as a writer who has focused on the themes of authoritarian and Orwellian motifs.

THE COURT: On the theme of authoritarian and Orwellian motifs. What's a "motif"?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not an expert.

THE COURT: Motifs. Yes. {3576|3577}

MR. CHRISTIE: In contemporary society. Those are the three areas which I wish the witness allowed to express his opinions.

THE COURT: When do you want to qualify him, later or now?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, there are, in fact, two varieties of evidence the witness can lead. He has factual firsthand experiences as a Professor in this area of access to Holocaust literature. I will be leading that as a matter of fact. It also involves his teaching as a Professor, and I will be leading evidence in the course of my film, shall we say, examination on the subject of what studies and special training he has in the areas of which I was speaking.

Those three areas. Then, at the end, I will ask for the right to have him qualified to express his opinion in these areas. I assume, then, that I may make some submissions, and my friend make his, and ask for your ruling. Nonetheless, there will be leading of evidence of a nature relevant to the effect on social and racial tolerance of the very book in question, which he is familiar with, and similar books called revisionist literature. He has dealt with those {3577|3578} in those courses. I don't want to go too far. I had better just let the witness give his evidence. I shouldn't even have gone and described it any better than simply saying those are the two types of evidence I propose to lead.

THE COURT: Well, you will let us know when it becomes time to qualify.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I will not ask for an opinion from the witness until such time as I am requesting of Your Honour a ruling, and I am sure my friend will object if I did, and quite rightly so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Dr. Botting, have you written a book by the title of "The Orwellian World of Jehovah's Witnesses"?

A. Yes, I have, along with my wife. Excuse me, I have to qualify that. Along with my wife. We co-authored it.

Q. And in terms of research, you are, in fact, a Jehovah's witness?

A. Yes.

Q. And you studied, I believe, in the realm of the Orwellian works. You have studied extensively about that? {3578|3579}

A. Yes. All of Orwell's works and his basic opinions are expressed in the journals and letters.

Q. To what extent has the study of Orwell been a part of your academic research?

A. Considerably – well, both before and after I received my doctorate, I studied Orwell. Probably he was the first major novelist that I studied. Eventually I settled on doing a dissertation on Golding, the Nobel Prize winner for '83.

Q. And your book of the Jehovah's Witnesses, can you describe that for us in terms of its circulation? It is a best seller, I believe, is it?

A. In Canadian terms it certainly is. It's gone through two editions so far. It is published by the University of Toronto Press. And to describe it, more basically, it gives a breakdown of the Jehovah's Witness sect, an inside view, trying to tie it to the Orwellian theme that we saw prevailing there as we grew up. It also deals with predictions that Jehovah's Witnesses made for the end of the world which didn't come true, their own personal Holocaust, I suppose, in terms of Jehovah's Witnesses' point of view.

Q. In your teaching, do you present and {3579|3580} analyze the Holocaust literature?

A. Yes.

Q. And in what courses do you do that?

A. Just – actually, in introductory university courses. I have discussed it in senior courses as well, but most of those are of a writing nature, and coping with Holocaust themes in a literary way is a somewhat different approach to the Holocaust and attendant tragedies and so on. This is always grist for a literary mill, if you like.

Q. Are there many novels on the Holocaust itself?

A. Yes. Well, hundreds, thousands. Sure.

Q. And what degree are you concerned about the freedom to have access to that literature?

A. Well, I am very concerned, especially since when I am trying to offer two points of view, or more than one point of view, one of those points of view is denied my class and myself by government intervention.

Q. Has that actually happened?

A. Yes, it has.

Q. In respect to what book? {3580|3581}

A. In respect to "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", which was a text that I was using as suggested reading along with Green's "Holocaust", which was the required reading on the course.

Q. In other words, you have attempted to obtain and to use the two conflicting views on the Holocaust.

A. That's right.

Q. And what point of view does "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" present?

A. It presents the Revisionist point of view, if you want to call it that. I mean, this is a label that not everybody would use, but it's the notion that the Holocaust has been greatly exaggerated.

Q. And why would you present that, or seek to present that literature?

A. Well, the alternative, the other book, which was required reading for the course, "Holocaust" by Gerald Green, offered a radically, shall we say, pro[-]extermination thesis stance. So you have the two stances that are polar opposites, if you like. Hopefully, we could have come to some sort of semblance of compromise in our discussions or, at least, seen the parameters [sic] of where truth potentially lies by looking at other books, of course, in the library, {3581|3582} by doing research papers, looking at Holocaust literature from the library.

Basically, it was a starting off, or kicking off point for individual research on the part of individual students.

Q. Have you also taught journalism?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Where and when?

A. Red Deer College, from 1972 to 1975.

Q. And have you engaged yourself in writing other books and works?

A. Yes. I am the author of many plays, books of poetry, critical works on literature themes, and so on.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. About thirty, I suppose, altogether.

Q. Thirty works.

A. Around there.

Q. And in your teaching of the subjects related to the Holocaust, what have you run into in the way of censorship?

A. Well, in the case of the Butz book, the books were handed over to the R.C.M.P. by the administration {3582|3583} of the College when they came in from the United States because they had contravened, apparently, a border – well, I think it was a Deputy Minister's Order to prohibit the books from entry into Canada. They are now in the possession of the Crown.

Q. Have you read the book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century"?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And were you seeking to have your students read that?

A. If they wanted to. It was not required reading. It was suggested reading, though.

Q. And why?

A. Because I thought it would offer a very revealing point of view, quite different from that presented by Green which, of course, is fictional, but taken as Gospel by the whole generation of people in America as well as in Europe, especially after it became, once again, transformed into the television medium in the mini-series by NBC.

Q. So it has been represented as fact although it is fiction.

A. That's right. {3583|3584}

Q. And so were you able to obtain that book for your students?

A. Only on a very ad hoc basis. Not officially, no.

Q. And it was, in fact, I gather, the bookstore that actually seemed to have some fears about the book and turned it over to the R.C.M.P.

A. Well, it was a clerk in the bookstore who opened the books to put it on the shelf, and when she saw the title, she freaked out and said — gave the word to the manager at the bookstore, who gave the word to the President of the — or the Administrative Manager of the College, who gave the word to the President.

THE COURT: The witness was there, of course.

THE WITNESS: No, but —

THE COURT: I didn't think so. Just control it, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Dealing with your experience as a teacher and a journalist, could you tell us, before 1972, were you involved in graduate teaching at the University of Alberta?

A. No. As a graduate student — before {3584|3585} 1972?

Q. Yes.

A. No. Graduate student there as a Ph.D. I was also teaching at the University level there.

Q. What were you teaching?

A. Again, English Literature.

Q. And were you a teacher prior to that?

A. Yes, I was, at a high school in Peterborough, Ontario.

Q. And when you were in Peterborough, Ontario, were you also a journalist?

A. Yes. I worked for the Peterborough Examiner.

Q. Between what years did you work for the Peterborough Examiner?

A. I started with them in 1954.

Q. And when did you complete working for them as a journalist?

A. 1968. And then one year thereafter,

Q. Were you a journalist elsewhere prior to that?

A. Yes. In Hong Kong from 1961 to '63. {3585|3586}

Q. And where did you work there?

A. The Saturday Morning Post, and Reuters. I was a stringer for Reuters.

THE COURT: What does a stringer mean?

THE WITNESS: Oh, a person who feeds stories to particular news agencies such as Reuters, or Canadian Press.

Q. What effect does the prohibition to allow you to use the book "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" have upon your teaching capacity?

A. Sorry, what effect does the banning have? Basically, well, that I had to remove the "Holocaust", as well, from the course. I couldn't really treat that book without treating a balanced view, because I felt that the intention that I had in introducing the "Holocaust" in the first place was to allow students to try to gain a balanced perspective on their own. It didn't matter which direction they lean. It was just a matter of trying to go through, I suppose, a kind of academic exercise, although that sounds a little callous under the circumstances; but that was the intention, anyway.

Q. So as a result you've removed the {3586|3587} Holocaust literature from the course altogether.

A. That's right. Well, I have a different tack this time, using different books this semester.

Q. It seems you have complete control over that course; is that right?

A. Yes. That's right. I should qualify that a little, because the English Department was asked to determine whether or not the reading material that I had introduced was indeed appropriate the way I was using it, and the conclusion was that it was, indeed, appropriate.

Q. And in regard to the subject of the Holocaust and your activities in terms of teaching it, did you endeavour to find a way whereby the book could be made available to your students?

A. I really didn't pursue that too much, but there were some interested students who pursued it on their own.

Q. Did you endeavour to check with the authorities and attempt to get the book released from the R.C.M.P.?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What did you do in that regard? {3587|3588}

A. I contacted the Deputy Minister of Revenue Canada — well, I issued a complaint that the book should be released, and it was ridiculous to ban it, in my opinion, under the Deputy Minister's injunction. The fact was that the Deputy Minister had no notion of what I was talking about, he told me, and —

Q. Well, we can't say what somebody said, but I am asking you what you did.

A. That's all. Well, that was it. We had our correspondence.

Q. Did you write on the 8th of August to The Honourable Roy MacLaren?

A. Yes. He was then the Minister, I should say, of Revenue Canada.

Q. Why did you do that?

A. To protest the seizing of the books from the University of Calgary bookstore, and also from Red Deer College. It was later that I objected to the seizing of them from Red Deer College.

Q. Did you complain about any other form of censorship?

A. Well, the censorship that I was most concerned about at this point was the principle of {3588|3589} seizing two books from a university library.

Q. Where is that?

A. University of Calgary. You know, I felt this was a dangerous precedent to get into, because it challenged freedom of speech, freedom of thought, and therefore, I asked them to reinstate the books. They were reinstated shortly after that.

Q. And did you get your books back from the R.C.M.P. that were seized from the bookstore at Red Deer College?

A. No. They were still impounded.

Q. And I'd like to now peruse and show to you your letter of the 8th of August, 1984. Is that a copy of your letter?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And what reasons did you give, in that letter, for desiring that the book be released to your students?

A. Well, first of all, that in my opinion the book does not —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I don't think we are at the stage yet where Dr. Botting is qualified to give his opinion as an expert. {3589|3590}

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that. We will withdraw that question.

Q. Did you complain elsewhere about the seizure of the book?

A. I also sent a letter — sorry, a copy of this letter and another letter to the Attorney General of Alberta, Neil Crawford.

Q. And have you been threatened as a result?

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Christie, you know better than that. Surely you can ask a question which wouldn't suggest the answer directly. That, of course, affects the weight. Now, surely you can think up a question that will not just put the answer right into the witness' mouth.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I wanted to get to the point.

THE COURT: Well, don't bother. Just do it the way you have been trained to do it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What was the effect of your writing to complain about these matters?

THE COURT: If any.

THE WITNESS: There was correspondence {3590|3591} between the Attorney General, or the Attorney General's office and myself, and between the Deputy Minister and myself, and the Attorney General's letter I took to be a veiled threat. Basically, he said —

THE COURT: Never mind what he said.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What effect did this have on your willingness to stand up to protection of that book, or the right to get it, shall we say?

A. Well, principles are principles, as far as I am concerned, and I suppose this, if anything, I felt obliged to continue to do what I could to establish the principle of freedom of the press and freedom of thought and so on.

Q. Are you familiar with the Gerstein documents?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Are they taught as if they were true?

A. Are they taught? You mean by me, or ...

Q. Well, in the literature that is available on this subject, are they taught as if they were {3591|3592} true?

A. They have been in the past. I think they have been brought into question in recent years.

Q. And have you read a book such as the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Well, it was published in a different format by the Historical Review. Yes, I did read that. I didn't realize that that was the same Zundel publication. I was very surprised to find that out.

Q. And having checked the book "The Hoax of the Twentieth [sic] Century" and – excuse me, may I show you Exhibit 1? Have you seen that book before, or the booklet?

A. Just – well, something very much like it, but – and this I saw today for the first time.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Did you ever look at the contents and see if you have seen them before?

A. Basically I did do a comparison. It is very, very similar to the other publication that I was alluding to – same cover except for the title. Mostly the same pictures. Just a few editorial amendments, would say.

Q. In relation to your studies and your {3592|3593} teaching of the Holocaust literature have you undertaken research into the scope of that literature?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Are you familiar with it?

A. Yes.

Q. And are you still a qualified English Professor at the University of Red Deer College?

A. Red Deer College, yes.

Q. And were you teaching there recently?

A. Yesterday.

Q. Are you aware of any consequences of coming here to give evidence?

A. I am aware that there are strong social pressures that, perhaps, would want to curb my evidence somewhere. I believe that to be true.

Q. What are your feelings about that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your studies prior to getting your Ph.D and when you studied for your Master of Fine Arts were you studying anything to do with the literature of dissent? {3593|3594}

A. Yes. I've always been interested in literature of protest and literature of dissent, especially drama.

Q. Has this anything to do with post-War literature?

A. Well, the whole tradition of literature developed out of the Second World War. Actually, several traditions, but one of those is the theatre of the absurd, for example. Now, existential themes became focused on, increasingly, after the War, but my focus was more, as I say, in English literature and literature that was written right in England itself, but also in Canada and America, some modern German literature as well, which is Thomas Mann and Hesse (ph).

Q. Do you have any sympathy for Nazism?

A. Not really. My father was killed in the Second World War, so ...

Q. Where is he buried?

A. In Bergen-Belsen.

Q. And are you anti-semitic?

A. No. No, I'm not.

Q. In your writing of the book, "Orwellian World of Jehovah's Witnesses", what was your purpose? {3594|3595}

A. Basically to expose my own religion, I suppose, in a sense, to try to come to terms with it from a different perspective. I just felt that a lot of people were being hoodwinked, and the whole idea of George Orwell actually has become very informative to me as a person that lives and breathes, if you like, and I found that my whole life has been molded along the lines that he described in 1984 by living in a rather oppressive sect, and that it shaped, indeed, my whole attitude towards life. So gradually it became imperative to try to tell the truth of what is happening within the sect.

Q. Does that bear any relationship to your actions in regard to "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century"?

A. Well, I think the same motif is there.

Q. In your observations and studies of the Holocaust literature, have you found any attitudes prevalent in your students?

A. The prevailing attitudes that they've expressed is that, well, that their own rights have been infringed upon by not gaining free access to the material that they wanted to use for research.

Q. What material? {3595|3596}

A. Well, specifically of the twentieth century ["Twentieth Century"].

Q. Have there been any pressures applied on you by the University to cease complaining or do anything else with respect to "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century"?

A. There were initial pressures, of course, if you want to call them that. It's a very kopacetic [sic] atmosphere at the College, but obviously, I put the administration in an embarrassing position in ordering these books, so some pressures were brought to bear on me at that point. I would say that there are other academic pressures that are brought to bear on anybody who wants to deal with this as a theme from a, you know, a neutral perspective. Many academics – you know, my acquaintances and colleagues – would be very reluctant to be here in my position right now, even though they do socially hold the same views.

Q. What have you done to research into the interrelationship of history, literature and cultural myth?

A. Well, basically studied in detail of If history, and I guess the Holocaust is a good example of that, {3596|3597} the way facts, if you like, historical facts that may be fragmentary suddenly take on a certain quality of truth over and above the facts, when they are fleshed out in the form of a novel or plays, are given dramatic character, are given personality, if you like, and this is exactly what happens in Green's novel.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, objection, Your Honour. Till we get there –

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you studied the book of Dr. Rudolph Vrba called, "I Cannot Forgive"?

A. No, I haven't studied it.

Q. What other literature in this field have you studied?

A. Well, a considerable range of it, from, maybe – well several hundred tracts, and the tracts that are the primary material that are circulated similar to this.

THE COURT: Similar to what?

THE WITNESS: Similar to "Did Six Million Really Die?". Rassinier's work. Basically, the classic texts on this. Rassinier and Butz are the two mainstays, and "The Controversy of Zion" by Alfred Lilienthal (sic).

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you studied {3597|3598} the works of other authors on the subject?

A. Oh, yes. Most of my reading has been in conventional Holocaust literature, rather than revisionist literature.

Q. You have described literally the revisionist literature.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. Can you tell us what you have read in the realm of what might be called the other side, rather than revisionism?

A. Well, I just kind of went through, I mean, all of the shelves, all of the stacks of the College resources as they became available. I started with the Nuremberg Trials –

THE COURT: I just missed the last part.

THE WITNESS: The Nuremberg trials and records of them starting in 1946 when they were published, and reading more in them rather than through them because of the, you know, I was looking for specific things, and mostly corroborative of other texts. I suppose Levine Dawidowicz – several of her books. There's endless titles. I just finished one. It's on the death camps in Germany. I think {3598|3599} it's Hoeb, I just finished it on the plane, so I can't remember the name, sorry.

Q. You were on the plane all night, I gather.

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. What is your position as a Professor on the need for revisionist literature?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. It is not relevant to this trial.
 THE COURT: It is an opinion you are asking.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think it's close, but I didn't think it was necessarily an opinion as to what the literature was.

Q. And how long have you been teaching at the university level the literature of the Holocaust?

A. Actually I haven't taught it consistently, but for a period of, well, since about 1973 or so.

Q. And what part has it played in the teaching you have done?

A. Well, it serves to generate a lot of discussion of the issues, many of the issues. I think a {3599|3600} lot of people are more interested in a particular subject if first they are introduced in a controversial side and are asked to refute it, the controversy of that, I suppose, over the conventional view, or the accepted view of the myth, the culture myth, and then asked to refute that in terms of the revisionist literature. This has a bit of an intrigue, if you like, on the part of students, and it is a way of getting enthused in the art of writing English literature.

Q. And so this has been part of your teaching technique, then?

A. That's right.

Q. For what reason did you say?

A. Well, just to enthuse my students, to get them to look at things from a different point of view in academic terms, just to see both sides of an issue and to recognize that there is more than one issue, there is more than one point of view, I should say.

Q. What effect has presenting two points of view had on your class?

A. Well, that's the way we, as a specialist, as human beings, tend to operate, by polar opposites, the swing of the pendulum back and forth on polar opposites. So if one of those poles, if you like, is cut off, {3600|3601} then all of a sudden we are left with a warped view of reality, perhaps. That's my view, anyway. In order to get a complete overview, an objective view, as you have to have as a scholar or academic, or even a thinking human being, then you have to be able to be free to see both sides of an issue, all sides of an issue. There is often more than one or more than two, I mean.

Q. Does this in any way relate to your studies or Orwell?

A. Well, Orwell said exactly the same thing. In a major way I have modelled [sic] a good deal of my life, I suppose, around 1984, and the principles that he espouses as being threatening to democracy. And one of those, of course, is thought control, or thought crime. And in a sense, by, you know, thought crime suddenly becomes something that is very real in today's tangible Canada, not just in Oskania.

Q. Yes. Did you run into this?

A. Well, accusations of it, certainly, more because of the book that we wrote on Jehovah's Witnesses than anything else.

Q. Are you still teaching in the same area of the Holocaust literature? {3601|3602}

A. Yes, basically. I have changed the focus somewhat to Anne Frank and the converse. "Anne Frank" is, at this minute, probably playing in Reed Deer. Well, no. Tonight it will be playing in terms of time here.

Q. What do you mean, "Anne Frank" will be playing?

A. "Anne Frank" is a play that has been made out of "Anne Frank's Diary". That gives you an example of the sort of cross-section of what is going on at the College in reaction to the Keegstra case in nearby Eckville and Bentley. The College decided to put on the play, "A Diary of Anne Frank", and it's got full houses until, well, for the next two weeks.

Q. And what do you understand in the Orwellian context is official truth?

A. Well, official truth is not a term that Orwell uses.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. That probably answers the question, but again, Your Honour, don't see the answer of that as being of relevance here.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How many works did Orwell write?

A. Oh, heavens. About a dozen. {3602|3603}

Q. And to what extent have you studied all of them?

A. I've read them all, and I'd say probably studied them all, to varying degrees. Some of them are terrible, and some of them are very good.

You know, some of Orwell's works I am very interested, again, in the relationship between straight prose, actual prose and fiction, and Orwell tends to be much more of a journalist than a novelist. Hence, much of his work is readable, or is basically interesting, intrinsically interesting in terms of the theme that he is dealing with, that very often is not in English literature. I think in "Animal Farm" and "1984" he reached the pinnacle of —
 Q. And what relevance, does it have in respect to this case and this book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

MR. GRIFFITHS: I object, Your Honour. I understand, Mr. Christie wants to qualify him to state his opinion as an expert, ultimately.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can see where it introduces elements of opinion. I apologize.

Q. And to the extent that you have studied Orwell, have you formed an expressed opinion on {3603|3604} previous occasions in an official capacity as a teacher, without getting those opinions? Have you done that — given opinion?

A. Yes. Many times.

Q. Why?

A. Because I —

THE COURT: The way he makes a living.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is what I wanted to say, but I can't say it for him.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And in your capacity as a teacher — I don't want to lead you — but have you been required to teach on the subject of Orwell?

A. Yes, I have. Well, not required, but I have always put Orwell, especially in recent years, on courses.

Q. Is he an important part of your teaching process?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Does his work deal with the subject of history, literature and cultural myth?

A. Yes. Very much so. Again, he is taking a situation that he is living in, taking the facts of {3604|3605} that situation as he sees them, and transposing it into a mythic reality in 1984. It puts 1984 into a futuristic nightmare, if you like, and some of the other novels, though, are in a very realistic matter in terms of the world that he is living in. His essays are similarly enlightening in this way. Orwell happens to be the first one that challenged the view that gas chambers existed in Europe, in May 1984, or 1945.

Q. On the issue of his qualifications to express opinions on the realms I have requested, I would now turn the witness over for cross-examination, if we may.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Do I understand — quite possible I don't — that the course you are teaching at Red Deer is entirely concerned with Holocaust literature?

A. No. It's introductory literature, one dimension of which is Holocaust literature.

Q. One book of which.

A. Yes. {3605|3606}

Q. Year to year. It might not be the same book, but —

A. Well, one or two. Well, usually two, because I am trying to offer both views.

Q. And is that what you do in the segments of the introductory course, as well?

A. It varies. If I am dealing with satire, I will deal with juxtaposed pieces of satire. Usually I have two books in a different category.

Q. You may have students reading "Animal Farm" and the Communist Manifesto, and comparing the two?

A. I have never done that, but possible.

Q. It may be something you may do in another section of the course.

A. Possibly.

Q. Can you give us some other examples of your course?

A. Well, the course I am teaching is a general introductory course, as I say. It starts off with Beuwole, Chaucer, Christopher Marlow. From there it goes to John Milton, Jonathan Swift, "Wuthering Heights".

Q. I'm sorry, I understand it is a survey {3606|3607} course.

A. It is not exactly a survey course. Then we get into the contemporary literature. "1984" is there, and one ultra contemporary, which in this case is Green – Green's "Holocaust".

Q. I thought from what you were saying that each segment of the course you tried to have two different books.

A. Well, I do in terms of recommended reading. I would always suggest that they – for example, there is a thesis that Christopher Marlow did not die when he was supposed to have died, and he continued to go on to write some of Shakespeare's works. Now, that's obviously ridiculous from an academic standpoint, I suppose, but when all the evidence is in, it is not quite as ridiculous as it sounds because —

Q. Well, we don't want to know why, but you studied Marlow. Are you also studying a book about, did Marlow also write Shakespeare? Is that what I understand?

A. Well, something along those lines, to simplify it.

Q. All right. And I gather that in those other courses as well you would have read outside the {3607|3608} particular two volumes that you are presenting so that you can stay ahead of your students.

A. Of course.

Q. Okay. And is that any different from what you are doing in the Holocaust section of the course?

A. Not really.

Q. Do you consider yourself to be an expert in the history – not the literature, but the history of what happened to European Jews from 1933 to 1945?

A. I would say I do by virtue of the literature, though.

THE COURT: By virtue of what?

THE WITNESS: By virtue of the literature that I read.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Not by virtue of the history that you've read or the documents that you've read.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's a question which, I suggest, begs the question as to what is history.

THE COURT: It may be, but I think that the cross-examiner should be allowed to continue cross-examining. That is something for argument, if you want to make it later. {3608|3609}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE WITNESS: Yes. I would say that I've looked at a lot of documents as well. I have tried the documents, when I've had suspicions and doubts about the similitude of things that were said or written about particular texts, then I've always tried to look them up, sometimes without success, but a lot of the time with success, cross-referencing.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. And what would be the source of your research?

A. Well, as one example, the Nuremberg War Trials, eleven volumes that were published in 1946. That comes to mind immediately.

Q. The eleven volumes?

A. Yes, the eleven volumes. Well, it starts out with the indictment against – I think it's thirteen accused at the beginning. I have looked up reference texts basically. Eleven volumes in length.

Q. In your study about the Holocaust literature, leaving out the documents and the historical secondary and primary sources, the literature, the books, the novels, has your role been a literary critic of those in your interest in them? {3609|3610}

A. To a certain extent, but my interest is more in content and the way they are either – well, put it this way, the fictional process that goes beyond the facts that are corroboratable through non-fiction texts.

Q. And how do you decide what is able to be corroborated from non-fictional texts?

A. Well, it is a matter of – for example, if you take Green, where does he get his ideas?

Q. Just give me an example.

A. Okay. If you take Anne Frank, you know, one question that comes immediately to mind is, is it a hoax, or isn't it a hoax, because that often has been asked or alleged. And so you would take – cross-reference that to other texts, say, that support it or go against it as being a fraud or forgery or whatever.

Q. All right. So you look at different texts that might criticize the text that you are studying in the course. Is that —

A. In particular. But anything read, basically, I read with a fairly critical eye.

Q. Does that make you an expert on anything you read? {3610|3611}

A. By virtue of my training, I probably read much quicker than most people, yes.

Q. Aside from dipping into the eleven volumes when you want to corroborate something —

A. Well, it's not that – that is among other things, other volumes that are in a rather large library at Red Deer College as well as the University of Alberta library, and occasionally at the University of Calgary library.

Q. If there is more. that you have read from primary sources – and I am talking about history, now, not literature ...

A. Well, I have mentioned a few, but I suppose Reitlinger, Hilman (ph) [sic] – just trying to ...

Q. I know. Just take your time. This is not a test.

A. They all seem to glum together. It sounds like my Ph.D. exams. Well, basically about maybe ten different books on Hitler, for example, that weren't really directly connected with the Holocaust, but, say, works of John Toland's "Adolph Hitler", which again takes the Gerstein documents as gospel.

Q. Do you – I'm sorry, I don't mean to {3611|3612} interrupt.

A. I'm sorry, my mind is just not kicking in.

Q. Do you speak or read any other languages other than English?

A. Well, as I got my Ph.D, I had to have reading knowledge of both German and French.

Q. And have any parts of your examination into documents involve going back to any original documents in French and German?

A. Not in terms of the Holocaust. I haven't tried to do that.

Q. Have you ever attended any of the centres, document centres or archives in West Germany, in the United States and Canada?

A. No, I haven't.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much, sir. I have no further questions on this issue.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie. Any re-examination?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to ask the witness one question that relates to – I suppose maybe should have asked it earlier. I don't know if it's a {3612|3613} proper re-examination question. Maybe my friend could permit me to phrase it and see what he thinks.

THE COURT: It is not a question of him permitting you to do anything.

MR. CHRISTIE: I realize that, but maybe he won't object.

THE COURT: What's the question? Ask the question.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Are you aware of any Jewish historians who, in literature, have recognized the Holocaust as a novelistic endeavour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I do object.

THE COURT: You can ask it. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Are you aware of the book "Zakhor" by Yosef Hayim Yerishalmi [Yerushalmi], of "Jewish History and Jewish Memory" dealing with this subject?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And am I correct in understanding the text to be an indication that the Holocaust has already engendered more research than any event in Jewish history, {3613|3614} but the image is being shaped not at the historian's anvil but in the novelist's crucible. Much has changed since the sixteenth century; one thing, curiously, remains. Now, as then, it would appear that —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, who is the expert? I really do object. It is not proper reply. I don't have an opportunity to cross-examine on this.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is something that I forgot before.
 THE COURT: Yes, you will have, Mr. Griffiths.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How does this relate to your expertise in the realm of a Professor of literature?
 A. Well, in terms of the culture myth that I was talking about, that derives from history and is funnelled through the literary process, drama or novel, it doesn't matter; it corroborates entirely. We share the same opinion.
 Q. Who shares the same opinion?
 A. Yesef [sic] Yerushalmi.
 Q. And who?
 A. And myself. {3614|3615}
 MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I'd like to file that as an exhibit on this point, Your Honour.
 THE COURT: Lettered exhibit.
 THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Exhibit "X".
 — EXHIBIT "X": Photocopy of excerpt from "Zakhor" by Yosef Yerushalmi.
 THE COURT: You are familiar with that writing, are you, Doctor?
 THE WITNESS: To the extent that know that he wrote the book. That's about it.
 THE COURT: Did you read the book?
 THE WITNESS: Not all of it, no.
 THE COURT: Did you read any part of it?
 THE WITNESS: Yes, I did.
 THE COURT: How much?
 THE WITNESS: Well, basically what's there.
 THE COURT: About a paragraph.
 THE WITNESS: No, no. All —
 THE COURT: A few pages.
 MR. CHRISTIE: . It's in context, Your Honour. {3615|3616}
 THE COURT: Are those all the questions you had?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I'm sorry.
 THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Do you know who Yosef Yerushalmi is?
 A. Just a Jewish writer, historian.
 Q. Do you know what area of history he is concerned with?
 A. Mostly sixteenth century.
 Q. Sixteenth century, not the twentieth century.
 A. But here he is talking about the twentieth century, however.
 Q. I know that. Outside his area of expertise, isn't it?
 A. I imagine, if I may express an opinion.
 THE COURT: We don't want you to imagine anything, but you can express —
 THE WITNESS: If I may express an opinion, that anyone who is able to express or write a history {3616|3617} on the sixteenth century and trace it through into the contemporary times and he makes the connection he does, yes, I think he would be qualified. He has lived through it, after all.
 Q. Does he do that in these three pages, two pages that you've read?
 A. You are asking me about whether somebody who has lived through a good deal of anguish and so on has also been a scholar in the past.
 Q. How do you know that Yosef Yerushalmi went through a good deal of anguish?
 A. Moot point.
 Q. His particular field of endeavour is the study of the interpretation of history, or do you know?
 A. I really don't know history that well.
 Q. Thank you.
 THE COURT: I have two questions, if I may. The first is, what is an Orwellian motif?
 THE WITNESS: Basically, a symbol or, I suppose, an attribute that would appear in his novels.
 THE COURT: An attribute is a characteristic. A symbol is something different, is it not? {3617|3618}

 THE WITNESS: "Motif" covers both areas.
 THE COURT: "Motif" is either "attribute" or "symbol".
 THE WITNESS: Usually a symbol or image that has a powerful effect in terms of —
 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Doctor. One other question, if I may. You said something about a Board of Historical Review. Do you remember saying that?
 THE WITNESS: I don't think I did say it.
 THE COURT: Do you know what it is?
 THE WITNESS: Yes.
 THE COURT: What is it?
 THE WITNESS: Well, I think, if it's the same one that you are talking about, the idea of — there is a Board that concerns itself with the revisionist literature, but I am not sure that is the same one you are talking about.
 THE COURT: It is the same one. Do you know anything about it? Are you on it?
 THE WITNESS: No. {3618|3619}
 THE COURT: I didn't pick it out of the air. You mentioned it. But however, I am satisfied.
 Any questions arising out of my questions?
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you ever had anything to do with the publication of any revisionist literature?
 THE WITNESS: No.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.
 THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I wasn't at any time seeking to qualify the witness as a historian, but a person who is a scholar with the research he described, and the interrelationship of history, literature and cultural myth, as a teacher who teaches at the university level on the subject of the Holocaust. That is all I wished to address, being a writer who has focused on the themes of Orwellian motifs in contemporary society. I wish to only have him speak on those subjects. I wanted to introduce the matter of this historical perspective, "Jewish History and Jewish Memory" by Josef Yerushalmi, because it bears upon the relationship of those subjects to the case at bar in that it says:
 "Now, as then, it would appear that {3619|3620} even where Jews do not ..."
 THE COURT: Don't bother reading it, Mr. Christie.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it is —
 THE COURT: I will decide whether or not you can do it before you read from it.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry.
 THE COURT: We will have to decide whether or not this witness is sufficiently knowledgeable about the inherent contents, characteristics of what you are reading from before you are permitted to read it.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, it is an authoritative —
 THE COURT: Well, I am perfectly capable of reading it. Just pass it up and I will let you know. I don't want you to read that until such time as I have ruled.
 MR. CHRISTIE: I thought it was part of the evidence.
 THE COURT: It is not part of the evidence. It is a lettered exhibit for identification.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it strikes me it's part of my argument, and if I did not have the right to refer {3620|3621} to it —
 THE COURT: I didn't tell you you did not have the right to refer to it. I told you not to read it. That is an order. Please don't.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I'd ask Your Honour to read the portion highlighted about the subject of history and cultural myth, and I would like the right of this witness to express his opinion in that realm, specifically the effect I would be seeking to examine on is the realm of studying both sides of an issue to get closer to the truth. That is what I would be seeking his evidence upon, and his expression of opinion on those subjects.
 I have not, at any time, offered him as a witness as to some historical fact. I do not propose him to give his opinions on history any more than

I propose an expert in chemistry to give his opinions on history, but we live in a historical world. We also, when we read literature that deals with past events, we are reading history of a sort, and it is inevitable that anyone who reads literature today will unavoidably have opinions that affect history; but I am not asking for this witness' expertise on those subjects whatsoever, but to be entitled to express his opinion as a scholar who has researched in the interrelationship {3621|3622} of history, literature and cultural myth in something quite relevant to the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", such as the "Anne Frank Diary", also the subject of the literature upon the Holocaust upon which he is aware – not judging its truth, but judging the relationship to literature and cultural myth and questioning both objectively and academically. I think I might say that my purpose is also to relate it to the social effect of books which question the current views of our time. That is part of the case at bar, and that's one of the reasons why I want this. I would suggest the witness' opinion might be relevant. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, with great respect, Your Honour, I fail to see how anybody can comment on what is a myth unless he is qualified to say wherein the historic truth or the truth lies. Dr. Botting, I have no doubt at all, is a fine teacher and a knowledgeable scholar in the field of English Literature and playwright, but what he is being called upon to do here, I would suggest, Your Honour, as I understand it – and again, I may well be wrong – but as I understand it, is in commenting on relationships {3622|3623} between history and literature and myth in this particular field and to give his opinion as to whether or not the Holocaust is a myth, or what part of the Holocaust are myths, what parts are exaggerated, if any, and in order to do that he would have to have some extensive background as an expert for the purpose of this Court and history. So that otherwise he would not be qualified to say, well, this is a myth, or this is an exaggeration unless he is also qualified to say, because this is what history tells us.

Well, he can tell us that paragraph one of the book is full of dramatic irony and foreboding of things to come, but I don't really think that is what he is called here to testify to, and I understand this course, this particular aspect of his course, he was comparing a nonfictional work, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" with the fictional work in the form of a novel. I am not sure what that will tell us about either the truth of Exhibit No. 1, the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", or Mr. Zundel's belief in the truth of that pamphlet.

My friend suggests, well, what he is also going to tell us about is how people – what the social effect of this pamphlet is, and I guess that would be the third area, or second area that he was asked to be qualified {3623|3624} as an expert in, as a writer who has focused on the theme of authoritarian and Orwellian motifs on contemporary society. And with great respect, Your Honour, there already has been a ruling in law that, with the section under which Mr. Zundel was charged, it does not infringe upon freedom of expression, and it is a proper section properly enacted by the Parliament of Canada, not outside of their jurisdiction, and I, with respect, would say that that is not a matter that is in issue any more in this trial.

This evidence is not relevant on that issue, because it is not an issue any more. It is not a question of fact. It is a question of law, and it is a legal ruling that Your Honour has already given. So for those reasons, Your Honour, I would suggest that in those areas, Dr. Botting not be qualified as an expert.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: For one thing, we have come to the point in history where the jury is supposed to decide historic truth, and not even experts are qualified to give absolute views on historic truth.

One thing that is in issue for the jury to decide, upon which the witness' opinion is relevant, and that is not an opinion necessarily of history, but the {3624|3625} question of both sides of an issue, which is in issue in this trial, the social benefit of hearing the revisionist view as opposed in the literary process of analyzing literature through the views of others who maintain the converse. The social benefits of the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" are in issue here, and the social benefits also of freedom of expression may still be in issue here.

I am not suggesting that the law has in any way been struck down, but the jury still has to witness the relative social values of freedom of expression in relation to the subject matter of the charge, and I am hopeful that the witness may express his opinion upon the process by which scholars research the interrelationship of history, literature and cultural myth, and that is not to decide what is truth necessarily, but to describe what the process of searching for truth is. And I think that the Professor is engaged in that process to give his opinion as to the usefulness or otherwise of the booklets like, "Did Six Million Really Die?" in the process of the search for truth.

THE COURT: Thank you. We will adjourn till four o'clock.

— The jury retires. 3:36 p.m.

— Short adjournment. {3625|3626}

— The jury returns. 4:10 p.m.

RULING

THE COURT: Dr. Gary Botting is a Professor of English Literature at Red Deer College in Alberta. Among other duties of his, from what I have heard of the evidence, he teaches an introductory course to students in the English language. Introductory English is one type of course that Dr. Botting teaches.

If I understand his evidence, one facet of his teaching concerns a certain procedural relationship between history, literature and cultural myth. In that connection he has attempted to include, as part of this English course, the topic of the Holocaust. The main part of the course, however, in which he teaches the students concerns itself with the introduction to the students of the masters of English literature as, for example, Chaucer and Swift.

Dr. Botting has sworn that his interest in literature has always been in the literature of protest and dissent. He professes to be neither a Nazi nor antisemitic. He has testified that he strives to present both sides of controversial subjects in the earnest and sincere hope that the students, so stimulated, will in turn learn {3626|3627} better habits in the acquisition of knowledge and truth.

The well-known novelist, George Orwell, is a person whose literature, and in the norm of novels, has loomed large and in a very important way with Dr. Botting. It was the Orwellian theme, he says, that he employed to write a book of his own. That book, as I understand his evidence, exposes his own Jehovah's Witnesses religion to its bare essentials. For that, Dr. Botting has stated, he has sustained certain criticisms.

Counsel for the accused proposes that Dr. Botting be qualified by the Court as an expert witness on more than one subject, but on subjects which include the interrelationships of history, literature and cultural myth.

If so qualified, he would then be asked questions and will be asked for his opinions essentially, as I perceive the intent, on whether the Holocaust happened, or whether or not the Holocaust, in his opinion, perhaps insofar as the alleged use of gas chambers is concerned, occurred in that way.

Defence counsel also seeks to qualify the witness as an expert with respect to the influence of Orwellian themes on contemporary society.

From one of the questions put to Dr. Botting, it would appear that defence counsel, if permitted, {3627|3628} would draw from the witness opinions concerning Orwell and whether or not "Government think" or "official think" is, perhaps, occurring.

However learned Dr. Botting may be in the field of literature, I note that he is not sought to be qualified as having the expertise in the field of history. Undoubtedly, Dr. Botting is a very learned man. Undoubtedly he has acquired extensive knowledge in the field of literature. His acquisition of knowledge in the field of history, quite naturally, would perhaps have been too much for someone so apparently young as he is at the present time.

It is not asked that he be qualified as an expert in the field of history. Therefore, if qualified in the field of literature and if asked to comment upon the interrelationship of literature to myth to history, there would be one important facet of his repertoire missing, namely, history. The historical component in this particular field is missing from the repertoire of expertise. That being so, he will not be qualified in the one necessary field of expertise.

I note, for the purposes of this ruling, that Dr. Botting has already testified on a number of other {3628|3629} subjects before the jury. He will not be permitted to testify as an expert within the confines of the three fields of expertise that have been proposed by counsel for the accused.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. I have a few more questions.

THE COURT: Yes. Certainly.

FURTHER EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Not expressing any opinions on the subject of the Holocaust, have you, yourself, come to any conclusions, without expressing those conclusions?

A. Not really, no.

Q. What do you, as an academic, require to come to any conclusions?

A. Sorry, I missed the first part of that question.

Q. What do you, as an academic, require to come to any conclusions?

A. Well, obviously I have to have both sides, or all sides, all sides that are available to me, and I think it is a foregone conclusion in any kind of academic or scholastic inquiry.

Q. What do you, as a Professor, require to teach the academic method to your students?

A. Exactly the same thing. Basically, I have to be able to present both sides.

Q. You mentioned the seizure of the book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century". When did that occur?

THE COURT: When what occurred – the book? {3630|3631}

THE WITNESS: No. The procedure, I'm sorry. I said – you mentioned the seizure of the book.

THE COURT: Oh, the seizure. Sorry, I missed that.

THE WITNESS: September 5th.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Of what year?

A. 1984.

Q. And were you advised under what Act or by what authority?

A. Was I advised under what Act?

Q. Yeah.

A. Well, I sought that advice after the fact from the Deputy Minister, and understood the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, who, you know, I had a long telephone conversation with him, actually two of them, and we corresponded by letter. And finally I discovered it was by Deputy Minister's order.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Was it around – you have to wait before you answer this. Was any reason ever given?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, yes. Objection, . Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I withdraw the question. {3631|3632}

THE COURT: He can say whether or not there was a reason given, if you want to ask him that. What it was.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you.

Q. What happens to people in Alberta who question the Holocaust?

A. They are anathem[at]ized.

THE COURT: They are what?

THE WITNESS: They are anathem[at]ized.

THE COURT: What does that mean?

THE WITNESS: They become social outcasts.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Do you teach any books in your course that has love as their primary theme?

A. Love as the primary theme? {3632|3633}

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I suppose so. "Wuthering Heights", I suppose love is the primary theme.

Q. And poetry, love poetry as well? Does that play a role?

A. Love poetry not usually, no.

Q. Christopher Marlow.

A. Well ...

Q. No?

A. Not really, no. I teach his plays more than his poetry.

Q. "Lady Chatterley's Lover" by D.H. Lawrence, does that appear in your survey of the course?

A. I have taught that in the past, but not recently, not in the last five years or so.

Q. Do you feel that in the university setting it would be appropriate to also portray love, to portray graphic lust as a form of explicit, violent pornography?

A. Would it be appropriate in the course? Probably not in the course that I am looking at.

Q. Is there another course?

A. In the course that I am teaching in — {3633|3634}

Q. Is there another course where it would be —

A. Yes. In creative writing, for example.

Q. Creative writing?

A. Yes. Many students express themselves in experimental ways. Not that I encourage them to do so necessarily, but many times they do, and some of the models that they take are, possibly, along those lines. I wouldn't say pornographic; I would say in terms of lust, though, rather than love, if you want to make that distinction.

Q. All right. Well, does explicit and violent pornography have a role as a teaching tool in the university as another side of love, or lust, or whatever?

A. I'd say at a more senior level, perhaps, yes.

Q. Is there anything – so that's not something that you would feel appropriate to censor or to limit public access to.

A. That's correct. That's a personal view, yes.

Q. Why? Is there anything that you would feel appropriate to limit the public's access to? {3634|3635}

A. I would say anything that would enjoin people specifically to perform acts of violence against another people or individuals.

Q. All right. What about a defamation or a libel? Would that be limited at all?

A. I think that should be limited by civil law, not by criminal law.

Q. You don't think there should be constraints about that?

A. Only supplied by the people libelled.

Q. And does your belief in – for anybody to say anything, extend to anybody to deliberately lie in a manner that is hurtful to others?

A. I would say I am trying for the exact opposite. I wouldn't encourage lying, no, not deliberate plagiarism or cheating of that kind, or lying, misrepresentation, no.

Q. So you are speaking up in favour of honest inquiry.

A. That's right.

Q. You are not speaking out in favour of dishonest inquiry.

A. That's right. {3635|3636}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions. [sic]

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie.

———

FURTHER RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Is there any relationship between explicit violence, pornography, and either the book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", or "Did Six Million Really Die?"?

A. Not overtly, but I guess at a different level. Some people might think that there would be a relationship. I don't.

Q. How do you determine between an honest inquiry and a dishonest inquiry?

A. I would say if somebody sincerely believes something to be the case and presents them, you know, without deceit, that would be the criterion.

Q. How do you test the process of whether an inquiry is honest or dishonest?

A. Only by examination of alternative sources, back and forth.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. {3636|3637}

THE COURT: Thank you, Doctor.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is all the evidence I have today, Your Honour.

— Discussion concerning timetable of forthcoming witnesses.

— The jury retires. 4:24 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 18, 1985.

FEBRUARY 18, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Anything before I call the

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

— The jury enters. 9:40 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I would like to call the next witness, Douglas Collins. I would like to seek to qualify the witness as an expert {3637|3638} in journalism.

DOUGLAS COLLINS, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. How old are you, sir?

A. Sixty-four.

Q. And your birthday, sir?

A. The 8th of September, 1920.

Q. And where do you live?

A. I live in West Vancouver, British Columbia.

Q. And what is your present occupation?

A. I am a freelance journalist and a columnist for the North Shore News on the North Shore, Vancouver.

Q. And how long have you been so employed?

A. With the North Shore News?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. A couple of years.

Q. And previous to that what was your occupation?

A. I was a news editor [sic] of CJOR Radio Station in Vancouver, and an open line operator, and before that I was a columnist for the Columbian Newspaper in New Westminster, which is now defunct.

Q. How long were you a news editor at CJOR? {3638|3639}

A. A few years, a couple of years.

Q. And at the Columbian Newspaper?

A. Two years.

Q. And before that, between 1974 and 1977 what did you do?

A. Between 1944 and 1977 —

Q. Sorry, 1974.

A. I was a page six editor and a columnist for The Sun, and I left the Sun during the long strike of '78, '79.

Q. And prior to that were you employed by the CBC between 1971 and 1974?

A. Yes. I was west coast correspondent for a documentary programme from the west coast, and before that I was with the CBC in Ottawa and a member of Parliamentary Press Gallery.

Q. Did you do a network public affairs programme for the CBC between 1978 and 1981?

A. Yes.

Q. And what was your responsibility in regard to that programme?

A. Producer, interviewer, reporter.

Q. And prior to that, between 1960 and 1968, were you an interviewer for the seven o'clock show for the CBC?

A. Yes. In Vancouver.

Q. And what were your responsibilities in regard to that appointment?

A. Well, it was a nightly show, public affairs show going on as indicated, eight o'clock, and we covered the waterfront, broadly speaking covered {3639|3640} everything that went on in British Columbia.

Q. Were you also writing for the Toronto Sun in the labour field?

A. Yes.

Q. And prior to that how long had you been employed in the reporting of news?

A. Oh, well, for many years. I was also a reporter for the Vancouver province from 1955 to 1958, and before that I was on the Calgary Herald from 1952 to 1955.

Q. And in that regard were you a reporter?

A. Yes.

Q. And prior to that, from the end of the War to 1952, were you an intelligence officer in Germany and a freelance journalist at that time with the rank of Major in political intelligence?

A. Not formally with the rank of Major. The classification was Intelligence Officer Grade which was a civilian appointment, and the rank was equivalent to Major.

Q. And you were responsible for the declassification of the Nazi —

A. Yes.

Q. And you were providing news columns throughout the world?

A. No, I didn't. I did freelancing from Germany for various publications, but I wasn't internationally known or anything like that.

Q. So how many years of experience [sic] have you had in terms of journalism and reporting? {3640|3641}

A. Thirty-five years. Thirty-five to forty.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to seek to qualify the witness as an expert in journalism.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no questions, Your Honour. No objection.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: I take it that my friend has no questions and no objections? I'm sorry.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is what I said.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right, sir. I'd like to deal with your — now, what happened to you in 1939, where were you and what occurred?

A. In 1939 I was a sergeant in the Gloucester Regiment in France and participated in the Battle of France until its conclusion. In 1940 — and we were part of the rear guard action in the defence of Dunkirk and covering the evacuation — and I was taken prisoner by the Germans.

Q. And from that occasion when you were sergeant in the Gloucester Regiment captured at Dunkirk, where were you taken as a prisoner of war?

A. I was eventually taken to Stalag 8B.

Q. And where was that, sir?

A. That was Upper Silesia in Germany.

Q. Not far from Auschwitz, I gather.

A. Well, Auschwitz was a long way by foot, let's put it that way. But by car, no, not very {3641|3642} far.

Q. And I understand you made several attempts to escape from that camp?

A. Yes. Not directly from the main Stalag. I made my escape from sub[-]Stalag, working parties, which were prison camps; but Stalag 8B was the main concentration area holding thirty thousand prisoners, approximately.

Q. And how many attempts to escape did you make from subcamps or satellite camps of the stalag.

A. Four.

Q. And were you successful?

A. Yes.

Q. I assume on the last one.

A. On the last one, yes.

Q. And you escaped, then, from Germany, and in what month and what year?

A. In July 1941 we crossed the Carpathian Mountains through Czechoslovakia into Hungary.

Q. Who is "we"?

A. I had a companion called Ted Lancaster, a fellow sergeant.

Q. And what was your treatment like in the German Stalag 8B?

A. The treatment physically was not bad. I was beaten up a few times, but that was because I had been caught doing things, and I suppose it was a matter of individual guards not liking me. The food, it was very poor, and as a matter of fact, I got yellow jaundice which led to swollen glands outside of {3642|3643} the face, here, leaving me to look something like a goldfish, and I am not very handsome now, but I was worse then. I got some treatment for it from the German doctor, but of course, it was really a matter of malnutrition and nothing to be done about that. I must point out, however, that that was the food in the main Stalag. It was very poor. In the working camps it was somewhat better, and in some cases a lot better. In fact, the rumour in Stalag 8B used to be that you could get out to a working party and you could get soup in which your spoon stood up, and everybody was very anxious to have his spoon standing up, but I never succeeded.

Q. And you worked in Stalag camps doing what, sir, in 8B?

A. One was a coal mine. Another was a sawmill. Another was, I suppose, what would you call it, agricultural work. And so on.

Q. Mm-hmmm. After escaping the successful time from Germany where did you go, when you got out of Stalag 8B?

A. Well, the fourth time, you mean.

Q. Yeah.

A. The fourth time I arrived in Hungary.

Q. And what happened to you there?

A. We were interned in Hungary. It had been our hope that the British Embassy would still be in Budapest, and unfortunately it had left about ten days before we arrived, with the result that we interned in Hungary, and the Americans who looked after {3643|3644} British interests there represented us.

Q. And why were you interned in Hungary? Was Hungary at War with Britain?

A. No, it wasn't, and Britain hadn't declared War on Hungary either at that time. The invasion, the German invasion of Russia had taken place, and of course, Hungary was an ally of Germany, but there were no hostilities even in a formal way between Britain and Hungary, so we petitioned the American Embassy to get us back to Britain so that, you know, we could get into the War again, I suppose, and they were not successful in doing that.

Q. How long were you interned in Hungary?

A. About eighteen months.

Q. How were you treated there?

A. Quite well, yes.

Q. And did you attempt to escape from there?

A. Yes.

Q. How many times?

A. Three times.

Q. Were you successful?

A. Yes, on the third attempt.

Q. And where did you go from there?

A. We escaped from a castle called Shiklos, Shiklosva, in Hungarian, and we moved across part of Yugoslovai [sic] into Rumania. and we were aiming for Turkey. And so what we wanted to do was to cross Yugoslavia, Rumania and Bulgaria and getting across to the European side of Turkey. {3644|3645}

Q. And how far did you get?

A. We got into Rumania, but were caught on our way trying to get to Bucharest, and were incarcerated in Secret Police Headquarters, in Bucharest.

Q. Would that be a Gestapo headquarters, sir?

A. No. Probably the equivalent, but the Gestapo, of course, had bad connotation and I don't know what – we received no particularly bad treatment in the Secret Police Headquarters, but we were confined there.

Q. And how long were you incarcerated then in Rumania?

A. About a year, slightly less than a year, I think.

Q. And did you escape from there, or —

A. From the Secret Police Headquarters, from Rumania?

Q. From Rumania.

A. No. I was actually in a punishment camp for an unsuccessful attempt to escape when the war for Rumania, anyway, finished because King Karol of Rumania took Rumania out of the War.

Oh, incidentally, I was imprisoned in Rumania for most of the time with the Ploesti, with the survivors of the Ploesti raid, but still I was incarcerated with survivors of the low-level raid on Polesti, [Ploesti] and we made two attempts to get out of there.

Q. So when Rumania changed sides in {3645|3646} the War you were released; is that right?

A. Yes. We were flown back to Britain.

Q. And then what did you do?

A. I rejoined the Army and got back to the campaign in northwest Europe in its closing stages.

Q. Did you visit the camp of Bergen Belsen in 1945?

A. Yes. It was the end of April 1945. I was with the Documents Research Team because I knew German and could read German, and that was the Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force. It was a grand title, but I was not a very grand person. I was a sergeant with the documents research team.

Q. Right. And did you see the camp of Bergen Belsen?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see what condition it was in?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the view of the Germans at the time?

THE COURT: What was the ...

MR. CHRISTIE: The view of the Germans at the time.

THE WITNESS: The view of the Germans?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What was the opinion of the Germans at the time as to why it had {3646|3647} happened? I withdraw the question. Never mind.

Q. Have you, in your journalistic endeavours, compared the rights of Anglo-American prisoners in American camps as opposed to Japanese camps?

A. I haven't, but there are comparable figures to indicate that the death rate in the Anglo-American —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a moment, Mr. Collins.

If Mr. Collins hasn't done the research, it is not a field in which he is qualified as an expert, and he cannot form an opinion.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not going to bother pursuing it.

Q. Were you a civilian intelligence officer after the War?

A. Yes.

Q. And where did you work?

A. Various places in Germany. Gottingen, Brunswick, Hildesheim, Hanover, also Lubeck in northern Germany."

Q. Did you have to see the conditions of the civilian population in Germany in your role there?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe their condition?

A. Well, they were very bad, certainly for three years. I mean, first of all Germany had been very heavily bombed, leading to a great deal of hardship for the civilian population, and the economic conditions in Germany until the currency reform of 1948 were appalling.

Q. Did you, in your capacity last described, have a function as an interrogator of troops at border crossings?

A. Yes. That would have been in 1946. I was requested to go to the border crossing not too far from Ghetty, and probably about twenty miles, where German troops were returning, German prisoners of War were returning from the USSR, and the purpose of sending me down there was that, of course, I spoke German, and the idea was to send to internment camps in the British zone of Germany anyone who held any rank above that of Scharfu[ü]hrer in the S.S.

Q. What condition were the troops in coming back from the Soviet Union?

A. Well, they reminded me a bit of the survivors in Bergen Belsen. They were walking skeletons. In fact, so much so that I didn't have the heart to send any of them to internment camps, and I used to tell them to go home.

Q. Now, in respect to journalism, you received a national newspaper award in 1953 for the exposition of a particular problem. Is that right?

A. Yes. Quentin Reynolds, the noted American author and war correspondent, had written a book called, "The Man who Wouldn't Talk", and it purported to show the adventures of one George Dupre {3648|3649} who was Calgarian, who had put out the story that he was a secret service agent, an intelligence agent in France during the War, that he had been landed in France to spy on the German situation there and to work with the Maquis against the German occupation, and I was assigned to find out whether this story was true, because we had received a tip that it might not be true.

Q. So it was alleged this was false news, then?

A. That's right.

Q. And what did you find out?

A. I found indeed that it was false news, and that Reynolds had written a story based solely on the man's statement, and in the end I confronted Dupre with all the evidence I have collected and he confessed to being a phony.

Q. And as a result what is your attitude as a journalist to the subject of false news generally? What do you believe a journalist should do about it?

A. Well, I think that false news is a very vague title. I guess in some way or another we have all been guilty of pedalling false news either because our sources have been wrong, particularly politicians, for example, or we have made mistakes and so on and so forth. I think that the very concept of false news is not really in the interest of democracy.

I mean, if we are going to talk about false news, what about Pierre Trudeau who said that we were going to have participatory democracy? There was {3649|3650} never less participatory democracy in Canada than when he was Prime Minister. Mulroney said if we voted for him, hundreds of new jobs would be created overnight. What about the weatherman? He is always putting out false news. What about Santa Claus?

Q. There is an allegation that that might be false news.

A. Well, yes. I think it is. Don't you?

Q. From your experience as a journalist have you read and studied the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes.

Q. If you were to attempt to present a story on the Holocaust, what role would that book and, for example, the book – are you familiar with the book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century?"

A. Yes, I have read that.

Q. Why did you read it?

A. I read it because it was banned. I am always attracted to stuff that is banned, and when I heard that the customs and excise had banned, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", I made it a point of getting a hold of a copy, and I wrote a column about it. And my lead was, "Tell me I am not allowed to read a book, and it cannot be imported, and I will get on a horse and go and fetch it myself."

Q. And from your experience as a journalist and having read the book, would you say that it has value in the discussion of the Holocaust?

A. Yes, I would. It is what you call {3650|3651} the other side of the story. You know, one of the tenets of journalism is that you always get the other side of the story. There is an orthodox version, or official version, or someone's version, and then you go to the next man, find out what he's got to say. That's basic to, well, I don't think it would be too grandiose about it, but it would be basic to democracy, and it is basic to journalism certainly.

I mean, if there were no other side to the story, what sort of world would we have? In Hitler's day there was no other side of the story. If you had another side of the story you went to jail.

Q. Like so many ended up in Bergen Belsen?

A. That's right. They weren't there necessarily as political prisoners. They were there as prisoners – Russians, Poles – they were there.

Q. As a result of your experiences did you have different feelings after the War?

A. Yes. I would say it took me fifteen years to get over the War, and particularly during the War I hated Germany and the Germans, and I hated Hitler and I still don't have that much time for him.

Q. You have expressed as a journalist upon that subject as well?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What value do you place on the right to express your views as a journalist?

A. Well, if you can't express your views as a journalist, then you can't be a journalist. {3651|3652} That is all there is to it. I mean, if you are a reporter assigned to cover a story and you go, let us say, to the legislature or the Parliament Buildings and you report a story from there, then you are simply reporting what someone said or so on, but as a journalist I think there is a slight difference between being a plain reporter and being a journalist. If you are a journalist then you are putting out what you might call the journal of the day, and it's up to you to find out as much as you can about the story that you are covering.

I mean, if we had accepted the official version, you might say, a book had been published about George Dupre in Calgary and it was being published in New York, it was condensed in Reader's Digest and so on and so forth, there would have been no other side of the story because you didn't have to examine anything. You just read what was in the book.

Q. And what would have happened to the truth?

A. The truth would have gone in the ditch.

Q. Having read, "Did Six Million Really Die?" do you consider it presents a point of view that should be available for examination?

A. Absolutely. I think that it presents a very persuasive point of view. I am not saying that the point of view is necessarily correct, but I can say that as a piece of journalism, as a piece of reporting, as the representation of opinion backed {3652|3653} by what one assumes to be facts, we would have to check that, but I would say that it presents a very persuasive story indeed, and I was struck by this.

When I read the thing I thought that perhaps it might be what I'd heard on the television and so on. A hate work. And there isn't an abusive line in the whole story. I mean, I have been more abusive in my column than this guy was in writing, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Q. Have you, as a journalist, had to deal with the subject of censorship and been aware of what censorship there is in the country?

A. Of course, every journalist is aware of censorship. Censorship is always with us one way or another. If you go back to even modern times in Canada to the Padlock Laws in Quebec and so on and so forth, and the attempt to stifle the distribution of pamphlets by Jehovah's Witnesses, people were jailed, the people had to go before the Supreme Court of Canada before it was settled and it was settled the only way it was settled, which is that politicians are not entitled by law or right to suppress views, and of course, I have written a great deal about censorship anyway, because as I say, it's a subject that is fundamental to every journalist who gives a damn about the world in which he lives.

And you know, censorship, I need hardly say, is hardly confined to Canada. It is endemic, of course, in all the dictatorships, and I don't know whether you are aware of it or not, but even Alice in Wonderland is banned in Red China. I wrote a {3653|3654} column about that. Would you like to read it?

Q. Just tell us why, as a journalist, you think that Alice in Wonderland is banned in China.

A. Well, it is not a matter of thinking. It is a matter of knowing. It is banned in Red China because the regime doesn't want dangerous stuff like Humpty Dumpty get in there.

I said in my column here – well, I will read this out because it will make more sense in context. This column was written, as a matter of fact, for the paper. It appeared yesterday, and I say:

"At the risk of sending you to sleep, we return today to the subject of censorship. But stay tuned. You may even get a laugh. On Friday, we cast a scaly eye at the p n-hunters. But there are many other censors, and they're all closely related. Canada is a front-runner in the great censorship stakes. But the best story concerns Red China, the darling of the pinko set, where Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass are banned. Dangerous stuff, that. You never know what the masses will do if they're allowed to read that bit where Humpty Dumpty says 'When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean.' {3654|3655} I will believe that China is loosening up when we see a headline in the Morning Wimp stating: 'Alice Back in China!' Censorship fashions change, but in Canada the ridiculous is always with us.

In 1941, before the Nazi invasion of the U.S.S.R., the American communist magazine New Masses was banned from the land because it opposed the United States' becoming involved in the war. The Saturday Evening Post, which preached the same thing, was not banned. In Toronto, half-witted librarians took Charles Lindbergh's books off the shelves because he had said that the U.S. could not win the war for Britain no matter how much aid was given. One of the books was We, which told the story of the early transatlantic flights. In Vancouver, in 1943, school board candidate John Stanton wanted a schoolbook thrown out because it 'utterly distorted history'. The book was critical of Russia. Hilariously, Stanton stated: 'The author claims that secret police and the army rule Russia and keep {3655|3656} the people in check. And a number of other passages contained a slander that Stalin is a dictator. It seems all nonsense in view of the way the people of Russia have fought in this war.'

Kindly old Uncle Louis. St. Laurent sometimes didn't have much time for freedom of speech either. In 1943, Agnes McPhail of the CCF said that all Canadian judges were political heelers. Uncle Louis announced in the House that he would ask the censors to look out for such statements and suppress them. So much for the promise that the Defence of Canada Act would be used only to prevent the broadcast of information useful to the enemy.

In 1945, the Vancouver Sun was fined $300 for having the audacity to say that West Coast defences were weak. The censors had plenty of work to do after the war, too, and are as active as ever today (vide the Customs ban on The Hoax of the Twentieth Century). In 1950, Leon Trosky's Excerpts from My Diary was banned, but Joe Stalin's golden words were not. At that time, too, Blair Fraser of Maclean's Magazine reported there were 505 books {3656|3657} of all sorts on Ottawa's 'forbidden' list.

Yesterday, it was mainly the left wing that was under attack. Today it's the right-wing and 'racists'. Schoolbooks that mention 'Heap Big Indian' are out. For years, Little Black Sambo wasn't on the library shelves. But the watchdogs must have forgotten about him, because he's now crept back. Professor Robin Ridington please note. Last August, the RCMP, acting on a complaint from 'human rights' fanatic and the Canadian Jewish Congress, swooped on visiting U.S. speaker Col. Jack Mohr, grabbing $5,000 worth of tapes and books deemed by those purity experts to be obnoxious. The mainstream media snored.

I guess this country likes censorship.

Hello Alice. Is that you?"

Q. And that was your column on censorship?

A. Yes.

Q. What influence has the Holocaust had on journalism?

A. Well, the direct influence it's had is that it is, I suppose, dangerous, in quotes, to question the Holocaust. I mean, the important thing {3657|3658} about this trial, it seems to me, quite apart from —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. I am not interested, and I don't think the jury is, as to what Mr. Collins thinks the important thing is about this trial.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is he not free to express his opinion as a journalist?

THE COURT: He is here to testify in a criminal proceeding. He is not here to use the trial as a soapbox for his views.

MR. CHRISTIE: This is not an ordinary criminal proceeding, Your Honour. Freedom of speech is at stake.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you will excuse us, please.

— The jury retires. 10:10 a.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you will do what I order. He will not give his views. You will not give yours in the presence of the jury. You will conduct yourself as a counsel in a criminal trial.

Now, just do it. Bring back the jury.

— The jury returns. 10:13 a.m.

THE COURT: Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

Q. The last question was, what influence has the Holocaust had on journalism. {3658|3659}

A. The influence the Holocaust has had on journalism, as far as I can perceive it, is that it has become dangerous to question the orthodox view of the Holocaust. In other words, if you don't agree, or if you even question the allegation that six million Jews died in Nazi concentration camps or in Nazi Germany, you are immediately suspect. You are accused of anti-semitism, and of hate literature. You go down the lexicon of all the charges that are obvious to everyone, I think.

And my point is that there is always another side to the story, and that the other side of the story should always be available to the public.

So what this sort of thing leads to, at the very least, is a form of self-censorship. And I think that would be obvious to you if you made a study of the main newspapers in Canada, because there's very little in them that give the other side of the story.

Now, as I say, I am not an expert on the Holocaust and I don't know what the truth is, but I know that there are many versions of how many died in Nazi Germany. As far as I am concerned, if ten died unjustly, or one, that's an important thing. One life is important.

Now, in my experience, for instance, right after the War, the popular figure was — and I say right after the War, I say two or three years after the War — the popular figure for the number who died, the number of Jews, that is, who died in Nazi Germany was five million. When I was in New York in 1953 talking {3659|3660} to Westbrook Pegler (phonetic), who was a very well known, now deceased, a very well-known American columnist, he told me — and we weren't talking about this kind of thing —

Q. I can't have hearsay.

A. I can't say what he told me.

Q. No.

A. Well, anyway, the fact is that you can read all kinds of figures. You can read four million, you can read one million, you can read three million. The CBC has taken to using six and a half million, and I believe there was even an allegation of nine million. So I believe it is a matter of paying your money and taking your choice.

Q. What, if any, journalistic value does the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" have?

A. Well, I think it has as much journalistic value as any dissident view. I am wondering, you see, whether it will be necessary, in the future — I don't know whether I can state that view, perhaps the judge will tell me. I wonder whether it will be necessary in the future, if this case goes against Mr. Zundel over there and one is writing about the War and this aspect of the War, whether it will be necessary to check with the Canadian Jewish Congress or B'Nai B'Rith or the Jewish Defence League, which would be better known as the Jewish Attack League, whether it is necessary to check with them before one gets a story into print, or whether it would be necessary to go to, let's say, the Canadian Japanese Association because you are writing about the evacuation of the Japanese from {3660|3661} the West Coast during the War and say, "Is it all right for me to print this or will I land in Court for spreading false news in your opinion?"

Q. Is there any other story or subject upon which you, as a journalist, experience as much apprehension in printing or writing as the Holocaust?

A. I think not.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Collins, what was wrong with what Quenton Reynolds did about printing this story about George Dupre?

A. He didn't get the other side of the story, sir. What he did was go in a very dumb fashion to Dupre, spend ten days in Calgary. He was a very noted journalist, as I pointed out. No doubt you heard of him, too. He was a star word in the journalism world. Sometimes it happens that people are so big in journalism – and I don't mean to be facetious here, that they don't dream that people will say they had a false story. So instead of doing what any cub reporter would have done, namely check on Dupre's antecedents – for {3661|3662} example, when I did the story, of course, I was given a tip that part of what he had said wasn't true. That is what started the whole ball rolling. But nevertheless, any cub reporter would have done what I did, which was to go around to all the former RCAF people in Alberta, where Dupre's story was well known —

Q. I don't need to know all the steps, but you checked the story.

A. That's right. And the story was available to Reynolds as it was to me, so he failed to get the other side of the story in much the same way as some people are failing to get the other side of the Holocaust story, whether that be right or wrong.

Q. I see. So a publisher or a writer has some obligation to check and see whether what he is writing is true.

A. Yes.

Q. You are not in a position to tell us whether or not these articles are true.

A. I am not in a position to tell you whether they are true, because if I were in order to be in a position to tell you whether they were true I would have to conduct a personal investigation, which might take a long time. All I can tell you about the article, as I have indicated already, is that the man makes – the writer makes a persuasive case and produces a number of what he regards as facts, anyway, and offers them for public consumption.

Q. Would you agree with me that if the persuasive case that he is making is false, that that could be pretty powerful piece of propaganda because {3662|3663} it is a persuasive piece?

A. If it is false, but can you prove it's false?

Q. I am asking the questions.

A. Well, I don't know that it's false and I am saying —

Q. I am not asking you to say whether or not it is false. My question to you is, if it is.

A. Oh, if it is false, then of course he would be just as much at fault as Quentin Reynolds.

Q. And wouldn't it be a powerful piece of propaganda if it were false?

A. I would think so.

Q. All right. Wouldn't you agree with me that the impact of this article, Exhibit 1, would be to malign Jewish people everywhere?

A. No, I would not, absolutely not. I believe I mentioned in my earlier testimony that I didn't come across one line in the article which was abusive of Jews.

Q. I see. And so you don't feel that it would be abusive of Jews to indicate to them that the family that they say died hadn't died, to say that they were involved in a colossal hoax, enormous fraud to gouge money from West Germany; that wouldn't be abusive.

A. No. That is a point of view.

Q. And do you recall, from looking at this article, what the author said that his reason was for re-examining this issue? {3663|3664}

A. No. I'd have to read it again.

Q. Well, there is an introduction to it.

A. Yes. Do you want me to read it?

Q. I don't need you to read it out loud, but just take a minute and refresh your memory by looking at it, and [ ] then, it's not twenty questions here, there's no mystery, I am going to ask you whether his reason for writing that was to make it easier to discuss, I think as he puts it, problems of race.

A. I don't see that phrase, but I see here something about it. He quotes Pandit Nehru as saying that:

"India as a nation. and Indians as individuals were subjected to insult, humiliation and contemptuous treatment. The English were an imperial race, we were told, with the God-given right to govern us and keep us in subjection"

He concerned himself with race to some extent, anyway.

Q. All right. In the following paragraph, the sentence under "The Race Problem Suppressed", "One could scarcely miss", read from there.

A. "The white races of Europe and America have become used during centuries to regarding themselves as a Herrenvolk."

I suppose that is Nehru speaking.

"The twentieth century, the century of {3664|3665} Auschwitz, has also achieved the first stage in the recognition of multi-racial partnership."

Yes, but I don't know what you are talking about.

Q. That is because you didn't read where I asked you to: "One could scarcely miss the object ..."

A. "... of this diatribe, with its insidious [sic] hint about 'multi-racial partnership'. Thus the accusation of the Six Million is not only used to undermine the principle of nationhood and national pride, but it threatens the survival of the Race itself."

That is a point of view.

Q. Is that a point of view you share?

A. No. But there have been points of view similar to that. For instance, Rene Levesque, I was present when Rene Levesque absolutely spat into a television camera when addressing an audience about the White Rhodesians of Westmount, which was a direct racial slur, and Rene Levesque, a man for whom I have some affection in many ways, wasn't at all reluctant to abuse, in racial terms, the population of English Canada. And the same is true of many of the Separatist Party.

Q. Would you have occasion also to read "The West, War and Islam", the second pamphlet?

A. No, I haven't read it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I know {3665|3666} it is quite early, but I have some questions that I'd like to ask Mr. Collins on "The West, War and Islam".

It is about four pages. It might take him some time to read it, May we take about ten minutes, please?

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't understand this. Why should the cross-examination be interrupted to ask the witness about something he has never read before?

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is an expert entitled to give expert opinion.

MR. CHRISTIE: On journalism, yes, he is. Usually when one starts a cross-examination, one carries on with it. I don't usually ask for time to prepare for cross-examination.

THE COURT: You object to it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think we should go ahead.

THE COURT: Then we will sit here and have the witness read it.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Would you read it, please, Mr. Collins?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't mind if my friend points out portions if there is something he wants to ask in this, to get to the point. He is cross-examining.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: He can lead the witness.

THE WITNESS: Okay. {3666|3667}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir. Now, if I could take you back to page one of "The West, War and Islam", there are some comments there about people involved in the media and disseminating, people who disseminate information to the public.

A. Mm-hmmm. You mean his reference to the Zionist influence in the media?

Q. Yeah, I'll come to that. He says, if I can quote – I think it's the third paragraph page one:

"Certainly, the West has at its disposal tremendous facilities for the education of the public, but until now, these facilities of information, education and entertainment have been used purposely to misinform, to miseducate and to instil hatred against the Islamic peoples."

Have you ever done any of those things?

A. Have I ever done any of those things?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I have not.

Q. "Just as certainly, this situation has not come about by accident, for the media by which disinformation is being disseminated are controlled by a small group of unscrupulous men who know exactly what they are doing and who will stop at nothing in order to attain their criminal and {3667|3668} murderous end."

As a man who has worked in journalism for thirty-five years in the main areas in Canada, what do you say about that?

A. I haven't experienced any of that.

Q. "This same group of media manipulators and its predecessors broadcast and published anti-Nazi propaganda in both world wars and included the Japanese as victims in the Second World War. These people are capable brainwashing experts."

When you were sending dispatches, are you a capable brainwashing expert?

A. I might be, but I don't think that I saw myself in that function ever.

Q. All right.

"On their account, millions of Westerners who had never met a German or Japanese were inflamed with murderous hatred, sufficiently so that they killed millions of persons who might otherwise have been their friends. If it can be done against Germans and Japanese, it can be done against the Islamic peoples — and it is being done. We Germans have learned through this sad experience that a nation's salvation lies in its reputation and a nation's reputation depends upon information — not misinformation and misrepresentation. {3668|3669}

The same principle is true for the Islamic nations. Let us now look upon the face of the enemy."

A. Do you want a comment on that?

Q. Do you care to?

A. Well, I can't say that I agree with Mr. Zundel on this, but it's a point of view, and perhaps he is referring to things like the attack on Idiyasin (phonetic) [Deir Yassin] in Israel or outside the borders of Israel at that time which was conducted by Menachin [Menachem] Begin who later became the Prime Minister of Israel, as we know, and who was a terrorist and perhaps he is referring to that sort of thing. And you see, we get into an area here where the political objectives of Zionism and the military objectives of Zionism and Israel may be in dispute. And I think that it's legitimate to dispute the Zionist case.

I am not" suggesting that Mr. Zundel is right. Once again, it's a different point of view, and are we to have a world and one, only one point of view, an orthodox point of view is permitted?

You see, you could have accused — not you personally, sir, but your side, let me put it that way, or the politicians of that day, could have accused Martin Luther of the same sort of hate propaganda and so on and so forth, because he regarded the Pope as the devil and said so, and had it not been for the fact that certain German princes were interested in economic independence from Rome, Martin Luther would probably have ended up at the stake.

You see, what we are talking about here {3669|3670} is heresy. And Mr. Zundel is regarded as a heretic.

Q. Excuse me, Mr. Collins. His Honour has ruled that we are not interested in your opinion.

A. Well, you are asking me for my reaction.

Q. Your reaction to this article. This is the indictment Mr. Zundel was charged under. The reference there is that he, knowingly, published false news, not that he published something false in good faith, but knowingly published something false.

A. I see.

Q. Does that make a difference to your comment?

A. Not very much.

Q. Martin Luther thought he was telling the truth.

A. If you want an answer, I can give you one. Can you read Mr. Zundel's mind? Can you look into that man's brain and say that he knew something or did not know it? All you can do is look at the printed word and make a judgment on that, and that is a value judgment.

Q. Have you looked at page 4 of Exhibit 2?

A. I think so. Yes. Okay.

Q. "Because most western news[ ]media are owned or managed by Zionists, Islamic nations can only look forward to more slander and hate propaganda such as the atrocious program, 'Death of a {3670|3671} Princess.'"

Is the CBC owned or managed by Zionists?

A. I don't think it is, no. It certainly isn't. It wasn't when I was in it, anyway.

Q. The Vancouver Sun?

A. No. What he is referring to —

Q. Murdoch?

A. No. He certainly wasn't a Zionist, I wouldn't say.

Q. He owns the Chicago Tribune and the London Times?

A. Yes.

Q. And he is a magnate?

A. Yes. The Thompson Fleet. He was a magnate. The new one.

Q. And he is not a Zionist?

A. No, I don't think so. I have never heard that. But if you want a comment on this point that Mr. Zundel is making, what he is referring to is the undoubted fact that there is very definite Jewish influence in the United States media, and I am not suggesting that there is any plot or anything like that. I am merely stating a fact. The New York Times, The Washington Post, the Newman chain and so on and so forth, the influence at the top — Hailey (phonetic), I believe, was Jewish, isn't he, CBS, or has just retired?

I mean, there isn't any question that for the better or for worse, there is a considerable influence in the American — Jewish influence in the American media. Now, it doesn't worry me, but it {3671|3672} apparently worries Mr. Zundel, and I suppose he is entitled to be worried about that.

Q. This doesn't say American media: It says most western —

MR. CHRISTIE: I object because my friend is misleading. If you look at the bottom of page 4 there one, two, three, four, and it is not fair to say that Lord Thompson —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not saying that.

THE COURT: Gentlemen. Gentlemen. Sit down. You will have a chance to re-examine.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can object.

THE COURT: Sit down. How dare you interrupt cross-examination like that? Not a word. Any more questions, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: This article doesn't refer to American news media. It says most western news media. If you want to place an interpretation, you can put it this way, that the American media are to a very great extent, perhaps the majority body, if I may put it that way, of Western news services and news, and certainly that, to that extent, it would be justified; but as I say, this is Ernst Zundel's point of view and I don't suppose you can change it, and I don't think it's particularly criminal, or criminal at all.

Q. My question is really whether it's incorrect. As a journalist, you are in a position to know that.

A. I would say if you want to get to the bottom line, it's not correct. {3672|3673}

Q. Thank you. That's the line wanted.

I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. In regard to the suggestion that it's not correct that you were given, or asked to give the bottom line for, if you look at page four —

A. I don't have page four here.

Q. That is what I thought. I think that's quite unfair not to.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He had it and I took it at the end of my cross-examination, Your Honour. I resent that.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: He didn't have it when I asked him about it, and I don't know when my friend took it back.

THE COURT: Well, he has it now, and that's fine.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Looking at page 4 where remarks are made about the western media, who are the media referred to in the photographs as being the western media?

A. The New York Times Boss Sulzberger, CBS Boss Paley – Paley was; Mervin Kalb; Silverman, and Schlosser. I don't know who Silverman and Schlosser are. {3673|3674}

Q. Are any of those referring to Canadian media?

A. No.

Q. So in the context of those photographs with page four attached, is it still —

A. It is the American media that is being referred to there.

Q. Is it still incorrect to say that they are being controlled by Zionists?

A. No. No. May I make one point, Mr. Christie, which I think bears on questions that the prosecuting attorney raised.

You know, we all get, for whatever reason, certain mind sets. And one of my criticisms of our media has been, for example, that when Arabs are portrayed in cartoons, they usually, or very frequently, are portrayed as rather revolting people with big noses and burnouses, and I think that MacPherson: of the Toronto Star is particularly good at this, and my friend, Les Peterson of the Vancouver Sun, has produced some brilliant cartoons along those lines.

The point is, though, and I don't want to censor anybody including my friend the cartoonist, the point is, though, that if a Canadian cartoonist represented a Jew as being a guy with a big nose and looking sinister and so on and so forth, there would be all hell break loose; but we don't have the same reaction to the other kind of thing, and what I'm after, and that is why I am appearing at this trial, is fair play. {3674|3675}

Q. In regard to the part of "The West, War and Islam" on the third paragraph down, it says —

THE COURT: Exhibit 41.

MR. CHRISTIE: Does 41 have the fourth page?

THE COURT: No. There is just an exhibit I want to look at. And 42, please. Go ahead, Mr. Christie. It was only for my education. I just didn't want to interrupt what my clerk was doing, but I wanted to get the proper exhibits for "The West, War and Islam".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you Exhibit 2, and if you read Exhibit 2, the paragraph that my friend directed you to, in conjunction with page 4, which identifies the American media, would you say it was false to say the west had at its disposal tremendous opportunity for the education of the public? Is that false?

A. No. Patently not.

Q. No. "But until now these facilities of information, education and entertainment have been used purposely to misinform, to miseducate, and to instil hatred against the Islamic peoples."

Is that consistent with the point you just made in your representation?

A. Yes, it is, but I still would not say that there has been an organized campaign to achieve those ends. I mean, I am not aware of one, let me put it that way. All I am aware of is that when one treads into this very delicate area, one is placing one's head {3675|3676} on the line.

Q. It says:

"Just as certainly, this situation has not come about by accident."

Are you aware of any common relationship between the five persons on page 4 of this brochure as to their religious affiliations?

A. Well, I certainly know that Mr. Sulzberger and Mr. Paley, and Mr. Kalb are Jewish, and I would assume that number four, Mr. Silverman, is Jewish, and I would take it that Schlosser is also Jewish since he appears here.

Q. Do you know what roles they play in the media of the western world?

A. Important roles. Sulzberger is the president of the New York Times, or president of the board, and Mr. Paley was the head of CBS. Marvin Kalb, well-known leading television commentator. I forget for which network. Maybe it's CBS.

Q. Do you think that they would be at any time pro-Islamic in their view?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection.

THE WITNESS: Pro-Islamic? I wouldn't think so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour. It's a leading question.

THE COURT: He can ask.

THE WITNESS: I don't know. I haven't the faintest idea what their view with regard to Islam would be. One thing I do recall, and I don't know whether this is related to the question or not – {3676|3677} perhaps His Honour would comment on that – but when I was in Ottawa doing, among other things, a weekly programme called, "Capital Report" on radio, I was the press critic for the programme for about three years, I had occasion to comment on the lack of, let us say, critical analysis on the part of Canadian newspapers toward what was going on in the Middle East, and particularly with regard to the State of Israel, and what I was talking about and what gave me the occasion to talk about it was the fact that the foreign editor of the London Times who was normally resident in London had taken a trip to Israel and had done a rather devastating [sic] article on the bulldozing of Arab settlements in Israel and the expulsion of the Arabs from their home.

Well, we haven't read anything about this in the Canadian newspapers, or for that matter, as far as I knew, the American newspapers, and I commented that it was a very strange thing that an important story of this kind had been overlooked.

Well, subsequently the story did appear, or similar stories did appear in our press. The Globe and Mail, for example, carried a story on it, but I thought it was significant that this story had been around for some time and it took a London Times man to report on it, and obviously, anyone who had been correspondent in Tel Aviv or Jerusalem or the Middle East generally would have known what was going on.

Q. Were you visited or lobbied about that?

A. Yeah. {3677|3678}

Q. By whom?

A. Well, I believe, and I am only going now from current press reports, I believe it was Mr. Sol Littman. I am not absolutely sure. I don't want to swear to that, but I was certainly lobbied by a representative of the Canadian Jewish Congress who came to see me in Toronto and wanted [sic] to put Israel's point of view and so on and so forth, which I was quite happy to receive. We had lunch together. And subsequently I was visited by a representative, a public relations man from the Israeli Embassy in Ottawa who wanted to give me further introductions to people representing Israelis and so on and so forth.

Now, I thought there was nothing wrong with being lobbied, but I, myself, saw that when one is critical of anything that Israel does, one is certain to receive a visit from someone. The same thing happened in Vancouver where, when I was the editor of page six, I did a whole page and a short article myself on the Middle East, particularly the more political aspects as they devolved on North America, and our attitudes to the Middle East, and I want to say that I am not a propagandist for the Arab cause. Once again, as a journalist, if I see that something, perhaps, in my view anyway, isn't being covered properly, my instinct is to jump in and do something about it, and on this occasion I ran, among other things, into two pictures, one of Menachin [sic] Begin and the other of Yasser Arafat, and under Begin I put the caption, "Good terrorist", and under Arafat put the caption, "Bad Terrorist" because it was quite {3678|3679} clear from press reports in general that Mr. Begin was okay and Mr. Arafat wasn't okay.

Well, I have no particular love for Mr. Arafat. I have no particular love for him or – anything like that, but I know that he was being portrayed in the media as a very sinister man, and it is clear, too, that he is a terrorist.

However, I made a point that there was a difference in approach on the part of the media in general to the two kinds of terrorism, and of course, Mr. Begin was the guy, I believe, who was behind the blowing up of the Camp [King] David Hotel, and it seemed to me again that his reaction to what was going on in Lebanon was excessive, and many deaths were caused.

Q. Were you lobbied on that occasion?

A. Yes. I had a public relations man who was visiting Canada, and he was visiting as many newspapers as he could visit. And so I am not suggesting that he came simply to see me, but he did come to see me and we had a long talk and he explained what was going on from the Israeli point of view. And so, as I say, one is always certain to receive a visit. There is nothing wrong in that, but it happens.

Q. It says in the next sentence that you were asked about:

"If it can be done against Germans and Japanese it can be done against the Islamic peoples."

Now, as a journalist for many years do {3679|3680} you say there was propaganda in the War against Germany and Japan?

A. There certainly was.

Q. And would you go so far to say it went so far as brainwashing?

A. No. Brainwashing is something different. Brainwashing is when one person is opened to one point of view and is schooled in that point of view, and I was most vehemently anti-German, or anti-Nazi, anyway, and I think my record indicates that played some role in that, but I can't say that I was ever brainwashed. I suppose I was the product of my own culture, it is true, and I wanted to represent the standards and values of my own culture, but I can't say that I was brainwashed.

Q. Do you have the same views four years after?

A. Four years after what?

Q. Forty years after.

A. About the War?

Q. About Germany.

A. About Germany? I think that Germany was wrong. I don't think anyone will be able to prove that Belgium started the War by invading Germany, but nevertheless, it had a broader view of the whole thing, and I think our side was right; but what distresses me to some extent, in fact, to a very great extent, is the continual propaganda war that is being waged against Germany now and Germans particularly; not particularly against Germany, but I think it is very sad that forty years after the event when we have people who are now {3680|3681} grandparents and who could never have been involved in anything that Hitler did, have to bear this very heavy cross of the six million or whatever it was. And it's never dropped for a week, and if I were a German, I think I would be in a very depressed state of mind, because there have been other crimes in history, and there has been no instance, to my knowledge, of a war of words being waged to the extent that this one is being waged.

I mean, Mr. Zundel over there, if I am correct, was six when the War finished. So he could hardly have been a member of the Nazi party, could he? And yet from the newsclips that I see on the television constantly, I would say that he is labelled as a Nazi, and this is done by the media.

And I don't think that they care one way or another whether he is, but I also see no investigative journalism on the part of the Toronto media or the national media into Mr. Zundel's background or into his views.

Q. It says:

"We Germans have learned through this sad experience that a nation's salvation lies in its reputation ..."

Is that false?

A. No, I couldn't take issue with that.

Q. "... and a nation's reputation depends upon information ..."

Is that false?

A. Yes. No, that's not false.

Q. "... not misinformation and {3681|3682} misrepresentation."

Would that be a false statement?

A. No.

Q. And, "The same principle is true for the Islamic nations."

Is that false?

A. No.

Q. And looking at the piece as a whole how would you characterize it, "The West, War and Islam"?

A. I would characterize it as a heretical point of view [sic]. It is not a point of view that is shared by the majority of people, but obviously, Mr. Zundel, unless we are slipping into some sort of mind control or dictatorship or whatever, is perfectly entitled to pursue [sic] his views.

I have never heard of anyone being charged before with spreading false news.

Q. Would it make any difference to your apprehension or concern about the piece if you were told that it was only sent to Arab Embassy officials and not distributed publicly?

A. I don't think it makes any difference, really. If you write something and only one person sees it, I don't think it makes a difference in principle. You know, I assume that if Mr. Zundel could get his story on the front page of the New York Times, he would do it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— The witness retires.

(VOLUME XVII FOLLOWS) {3682|3683}

VOLUME XVII

MR. CHRISTIE: I am ready for my next witness, sir. Udo Walendy.

UDO WALENDY, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to offer Your Honour a curriculum vitae. I'd like to seek to qualify the witness as an expert in the history of the Second World War.

Q. Mr. Walendy, were you born on the 21st of January, 1927?

A. Yes, I am born on the 21st of January, 1927, yes.

Q. All right. And were you born in Berlin and you were married and the father of one daughter?

A. Yes.

Q. And you spent your childhood in North Germany, Berlin and in East Prussia, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And in 1943 at the age of sixteen your entire school class was inducted in an anti-[air]craft school and taken to Hamburg for training?

A. Yes.

Q. And in 1944 you served four months at the Paramilitary Reich Labour Service?

A. That's right.

Q. And in 1944 you were in the War Services of the Wehrmacht for training, taken to {3683|3684} Denmark where you were taken prisoner by the British?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do when you returned from the War?

A. I finished my school, matriculation of the highest school.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will lead the witness, Your Honour, to some extent, unless my friend objects. I have given him a copy and the witness has a little difficulty in English – some, not a great deal, but some words may be a problem.

Q. Did you have one year of training as a journalist in a special school created by the authorities to produce journalists?

A. Yes. In A[a]chen. In 1948 and 1949.

Q. And you were issued a certificate as a journalist?

A. Yes.

Q. And from 1950 to 1956 you studied at the Institute for Advanced political Studies: History, Political Economy, Constitutional Law, International Law, Media Management, Social Sciences, with a specialization in East European Studies?

A. Yes. That's right. In West Germany.

Q. And did you study Russian as a result?

A. Yes. It was a part of my studying, because I specialized on the eastern, or partly specialized on the eastern European problem and communism. {3684|3685}

Q. And did you graduate as a Diplome [Diplom-]Politologe; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. 1956.

Q. And you worked for one year at the British Army Headquarters, the Army of the Rhine [Rhine]?

A. Yes.

Q. And from 1957 to 65 you worked as a part[-]time political lecturer for the Ministry of German Re-Unification; is that right?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. You were involved, then, as a lecturer for the workshop and democratic institution, I understand?

A. Yes.

Q. And from 1959 to 1960 you were an administrator of an institute of higher learning?

A. Yes. In Hellthort, (ph) [Herford] yes.

Q. And you then became managing director of a manufacturers' association?

A. In Bielefeld, yes.

Q. And you were a lecturer at the Institute for Advanced Economy at — where was that?

A. Yes. Also in Bielefeld. It was my other profession. I had several opportunities to be active in this form.

Q. And you have written several books; is that right, sir?

A. Yes. Surely. I began writing already during the studying, and I published the first book in 1963, in December, and it was a book of the {3685|3686} guilt question of the Second World War.

Q. Is this a book that I now produce and show to you, "Fruit for Germany — the Guilt Question of the Second World War"?

A. Yes. And this is an enlarged edition which was published first in '65, and the translation is published in '81.

Q. Is there a list of the research authorities and the references that you used in your research in the back of that book?

A. Yes. Surely. Yes, it is. You can have a look at it. It is published. That way everybody can avail of this book and I can sell it.

Q. And did you later publish a two volume work on the history of Europe between 1939 and 1945 known as "Europe in Flames"?

A. Yes.

Q. A copy of which I now produce and show to you?

A. Yes. Surely. Yes, that's my work, too.

Q. And there were, I believe, four pages of reference material referred to in each page of the volume; is that right?

A. Yes. That's right.

Q. And did you also write a book regarding Auschwitz and called "The I.G. Farben Process"?

A. Yes. I published it. And that is in the main form only, a documentation of the trial against the concern by the American Military Tribunal in 1947, and I made a compilation of the main facts which {3686|3687} were going on in this trial, and therefore it's only a real documentation without personal comments, with the exception of the foreword.

Q. Yes. I now produce and show to you a book entitled "Auschwitz in I.G. Farben Process. Holocaust Question?" Did you write that book?

A. Yes. I said I published it. It is a documentation. I made a compilation of the most important things which happened there in that trial and I personally wrote only the foreword.

Q. Yes. Did you also write a work analyzing religion, philosophy and natural sciences in reference to and in relation to the Second World War known as, "Die Weltanschauung des Wissens", a two-volume work?

A. Yes, but it has no connection with the Second World War. It is a natural science work which deals with the philosophy, with some natural science problems, with religion and also some new aspects of natural science.

Q. In regard to the research for the work, the two-volume work, "Europe in Flames", how many years of research are involved in that?

A. Yeah. It's very difficult to say, but I [ ] started my writing with this theme because I have engaged in the answer of the main questions of the philosophy. And in writing this I found I have to answer many other questions, too. So the first book of the question of the Second World War was the first result which I published. But in the whole time, I worked also with other themes, and let's say beside my {3687|3688} profession and besides writing, I need for publication of the first book, fifteen years of work, during studying and during working for living and so on.

Q. And have you also published a small work on forged war crimes documents?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. Is this the book?

A. Yes. It was a book. It was this book and booklet, and it was partly involved also in my other book of Jew in names, but this is a much better edition because I had involved much more researching than I published the first edition of this.

Q. Have you also published and distributed a series of booklets on the Second World War?

A. Yes. Surely. We have them in there.

Q. I now produce and show to you a booklet entitled, "Starben Wirklich Sech[s] Millionen?["]

A. Yes. This is a German edition of the case. I have not printed it and I have not written it, but this was published in England in the year of 1975, and I got it from England and it was surprising for me, too, that this was published in England, and I was astonished that some English people or English body had published, made this. And therefore, I engaged myself to get the whole selling rights for the German language.

Q. And did you do so?

A. I did so, yes.

Q. And you have distributed that in {3688|3689} Germany.

A. Distributed it in Germany, not printed it.

Q. Yes. I now produce and show to you a booklet called, "The Methods of Re-education". What did you have to do with that book?

A. I published these books because I am, since 1965, an independent publisher in Germany, and I published first my books and found out that the financing of books and selling of books gives some problem. And I found that to publish things in that form would be much more attractive. And so I followed this example and complete this periodical of historic effects and I produced number two, and till now, till number twenty-one. And in that book that I made the research of how millions of people, of men, can be re-educated by false informations, and I analyzed the methods how it is done.

Q. Did you also write a booklet on the Nuremberg process?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. And is that —

A. It is the Nuremberg process analyzed of the Military Tribunal in Nuremberg from 1945 till 1946, and afterwards Military Tribunal, they are going on, if this has something to do with real Reich or if it is a military process on for political ideas and principles which some foreign minds are linked with.

Q. I now produce and show to you another book called, "Der Verrat an Osteuropa".

A. "The Treaty of East Europe". In {3689|3690} that content it has analyzed the methods of how East European countries were treated by the western powers partly before the beginning of the War, and especially during the War and afterwards.

Q. And I now produce and show to you another book. If you could tell us the English title and what it is about.

A. Yes. The English title is very difficult to translate. The content is to analyze a lot of problems which are in connection with the Holocaust, and the Court cases of them were dealt with Western Germany, and they were analyzed also a lot of documents which are presented as allegedly German documents, and which in reality were not German documents, but were fabricated after the War.

Q. I now produce and show to you another booklet. Tell us the title and the subject of that inquiry.

A. The title is "Realities in the German Reich". It was written from an important and qualified German industrialist who had written also a very big book about the theme of the main economic measures during the Third Reich from the beginning, and especially in the second volume No. 8 is the same, during the War, as a war production and industrial measures during the War, and that is industrial measures in the Third Reich before the War.

Q. I see. You did the research for that?

A. No, no. I took over. I am not a writer. I published it only. He wrote it by himself. {3690|3691} I only published it.

Q. All right. I now produce and show to you another booklet. I would like you to tell us the title of this.

A. This is a modern index. You know it perhaps in English, too. That's a name of a special word for banning special literature, and we have in Germany the right to write and speak and lecture as we like, but we have a special right for special things which are not allowed to be made public to the use. And it was created, this law was created for pornography, but they have a Mr. Vena (phonetic) from the SPD had contact with some communist states who had for to use this law to ban also special not liked political and historical literature.

Q. Have you written a book on the Holocaust, a booklet specifically on the Holocaust?

A. Yes. That booklet deals with the fact that after it was known that the aircraft photos from the U.S. Air[ ]force were published, the Holocaust historians endeavoured to tell the public that the Germans murdered the millions of people underground, and therefore they couldn't be seen from the air, and here I dealt also with the case which was, tried to start against the book of Professor Butz, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", and also the number one in Germany, they like to forbid this too, but I gave them in that number a scientific answer for that, and as a result of that answer the case was dropped, either against Butz also against the number one.

Q. Thank you. Have you also written {3691|3692} a book of that title, and please tell me, translate the title, please, and tell me —

A. "German Israelitic facts" that are a lot of historical events which were described here and relates to the German Israelitic fate or —

Q. Relationship.

A. — or relationship, yes.

Q. Have you also written this booklet?

A. Yeah. This is a booklet which deals with the fate of the West Prussian people which were, after the Versailles Treaty, put to Poland and described how this fate was going on and how it dealt with this population.

Q. I now produce and show to you another booklet. I'd like you to tell me the title in English and the subject matter.

A. That is, "The Reich in which we Live" in Germany, because it is very important to us to know the legal situation in which we are living and which gives us a possibility to say this, or this not, and so here are a lot of examples of how the publishers were dealt by the ...

Q. Government.

A. ... by the authorities and by the Courts.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And not only deals with the writers or historians, but also with the political parties.

Q. Thank you. That comes right up {3692|3693} to the present time, does it? Does that deal with history up till the present?

A. Up to the present. That is the main analyze of the Federal Republic in German population.

Q. What is the title of this in English?

A. We have in Germany also the behaviour that, to give only to the public common interpretation of historical views, and to make very difficulties to people who has a different meaning of this. And here are the problems and special effects published about this.

Q. Have you published also this booklet?

A. This booklet, yes, I have published this. This is Moscow decided the War against Germany in 1940, that means one year before the real War began.

Q. Does that deal with the historical circumstances of that time?

A. Yes. And because I am speaking Russian and translate it and can read, the things was not simple to find the most important passages of the Russian publications about these questions, but I compile most important things which proves that the Russians decided the War against Germany during the War against France in the year of 1940.

Q. And could you tell me if you published this booklet and the title, and an indication of what it involves?

A. That I published too and wrote, too, {3693|3694} and that deals with not available knowledge of the Powers during the War. It is proved now by the science.

Q. No, don't give your opinion because there will be an objection. Just tell us what is in the book.

A. To tell us about the knowledge of the Powers in the East and West about the knowledge they had of the Holocaust and the answers that they had nothing.

Q. Did you publish a book on the Einsatzgruppen?

A. Yes. I published two volumes, two numbers of the Einsatzgruppen because it is a complex theme, and it is number one and this is number two.

Q. And where did you make your research in those regards?

A. Yeah. There are very much publications on the market, and when there are some problems which were not fulfilled by wishes of real research, I contacted the Bundes schiff (phonetic) [Bundesarchiv] in Freiburg and in Nuremberg and some other . institutions, Institute for Temporary History in Munich to get information, perhaps, about special documents which were published in the publications. I looked for it. I liked to see it in the original, and therefore I have to contact them.

Q. Yes. Did you track down the originals?

A. Yes. I had some help from them, {3694|3695} but I had also some difficulty, especially with the Institute for Temporary History in Munich, because they don't answer me any more. I have to make my correspondence by third persons.

Q. Did you also do a book on Adolf Eichmann?

A. Yes. I published this, too. I wrote and published this, too, and it deals with a special publication from the Institute for Temporary History in Munich. It's a thick book, about a special theme that the Germans had made for so-called scientific [sic] researches skeleton collections, and I proved these things and analyzed it and found out that it is not true, but that it is publicly indicated after the War only in respect to atrocity propaganda.

Q. I now produce and show to you another booklet. Did you publish that?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you write it?

A. I wrote it and I published it, and that deals with problems of the German unity, in fact, practically beginning from 1871 on till now.

Q. I show you another booklet. Did you write that?

A. Yes. That's the guilt question of I wrote it and published it.

Q. Thank you. I now produce and show to you what is, in fact, entitled, "Volume 21". What is that?

A. Yeah. That is a special one, because No. 15 I published, made some difficulties in {3695|3696} Western Germany, and they tried to forbid it. They made no personal trial against me, but they used the situations that we have now in Western Germany, specially court decision which enables to forbid special literature, in spite of the fact that such a banning is not possible, and they tried to take this court decision to ban this copy, this number, and how the Court case was going on is the content of this number, and this case is not till the end now decided, because constitutional court in Germany is confronted now with my answer about these things, and I have to write what I will do in that case.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. But I must say that they were not able to find only a single sentence which is false that is proved.

Q. Are any of those items at the present time banned in Germany?

A. No. I can sell everything from these things till now without any disturbances.

Q. All right. Now, I am going to ask you —

THE COURT: I think we will adjourn now for twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:26 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: The last witness, when reading "The West, War and Islam", saw fit to mark up the front page of, I believe, Exhibit No. 2. The {3696|3697} simple solution, if you gentlemen can agree, another page can replace it. If you don't agree, I will make an order.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 12:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Walendy, have you been a lecturer?

A. Yes. Several times.

Q. Where have you lectured?

A. In Bielefeld and in Obenkelchen. (ph) That's East Westphalia. And also in Lintren. (ph)

Q. And have you lectured in other parts of Europe as well?

A. No. When I worked for the Ministerium in Bonn, in the Special Lecturer Service, I held lectures in all parts of West Germany, and so did, but it was most time of these lectures were held in Westphalia, and the themes were history and constitutional law and international law.

Q. Have you lectured in Canada?

A. No. {3697|3698}

Q. In the United States?

A. No. One lecture by one visit, but not as a profession.

Q. Not as a profession. Have you done research in major libraries in the eastern section of Berlin?

A. Yes. Berlin was a centrum of very good libraries, and also I needed them and visited them and made researching in the East sector, and in the East sector is especially an official Russian bookshop where all the most important Russian books can be seen and can be bought, and therefore I have been often there during my time of my studying to look what they have published there and could buy the things which I needed. So that after studying ended, I could go through all these books when I had time for it, because during the studying I had not the time to read all these things, and so I endeavoured to have the conception of what the Russian has published, and after that time, when I was not able to go to the Russian sector, I have enough acquaintances that they will be informed I should be sent this and that book.

Q. Did you study in the Allied Documents Centers?

A. In the Allied, yes. I have been in National Archives in Washington. I tried to get, to go to London, but in London it's very difficult for a foreigner to start researching this very complicated, so when I had the question for those problems there, I find a friend who will make the researching for me there, but it was not so important to mention it. {3698|3699}

Q. Now, in order to qualify you as an expert in the realm of history I would like to go through the book, "Europe in Flames", "The Truth for Germany", the bottom one, and ask you explicitly —

A. And here, this?

Q. Yes, okay. Dealing with Volume I of the book, "Europe in Flames", how many pages is that volume, those two volumes?

A. 456.

Q. In one?

A. And the other is five hundred.

Q. On page 437 of your first volume, to page 440, are those the works that you studied in the preparation of this volume?

A. Yes.

Q. And it lists there the name of the author, the publisher and the year. Is that right?

A. Yes. That's right. But if you look through this bibliography, you must know, if you write a book, you must have written much more books than are named here because only here is mentioned —

Q. Do you mean read much more books?

A. Read, yes, because here are mentioned only those books which gave important details which were documented [sic] in that.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So there's more research involved in Volume I than is reflected in the three pages of bibliography.

A. Surely. Yes.

Q. All right. Looking at Volume 2 of your book, "Europe in Flames", '39 to '45, on page 486 to {3699|3700} 491 or 492, six pages of bibliography, did you study and refer to all those books in your research?

A. Yes. Yes, surely. You must remember that I studied all these things so that I began writing already during the time when I studied. So I had, in Berlin specially, contact with good bibliographer, with bibliothèques [libraries], bibliographies, and so I had an amount to read to all these problems, and so if you read these books, it's not only a problem, especially, you look for for [sic] research, but you are confronted with a lot of problems and specialties. So that when I read these books, some points will be part in that volume and I could have the knowledge to complete, for instance, that volume. So it's not so that every book, what is named there, is only specialized for that volume, but the problems are much more complex. So that they are partly, part of that Volume 2. Let's say, for instance, if you analyze the writings between Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin during the War, it relates something to the bombing situation. It relates something to the second front, and it's relating something to dividing Germany. So you have several problems selected from one book, yes, and so you have to combine all these things. But the bibliography which is in it is mostly concentrated on that volume in which this is published.

Q. I see. In regard to the book, "Truth for Germany", 530 pages, the bibliography there extends over 523 to 530 — seven pages.

A. 531.

Q. Yes. Excuse me. 531. Were all {3700|3701} these sources drawn upon in your research?

A. Yes. Surely. And in the original language, which it's named here.

Q. Some in English, apparently, some in German

A. Yes, some in Russian.

Q. In regard to your research in the area of forged photographs and documents, how many years of research have you expended in that process?

A. Oh, that was a work which I got beside all the other things, because in the published books I only read scientific [sic] books, and in these books were published also photographs, and that was a by-product.

Q. Of your research.

A. Yes. Yes. It's now, shall I tell it in English, I found that these things were not correct, and I researched them and I made the second — this is the second edition which is much more detailed and proved [sic] than the first edition with this part in this book.

Q. Yes. What immediate thought did you develop to analyze photographs to determine their authenticity?

A. I had published the first version only by personally researching. And the second version I have for every picture made an enlargement for comparing these things, and have for every picture specific testimony from three specialists, from one photographer, from one microfilm specialist, and from one retoucher. I don't know the English expression for that term, {3701|3702} retoucheur. That is a man who changes pictures.

Q. Retouches pictures.

A. Retouches pictures, yes. And then I can say that German authorities had made an investigation on these things and sent copy to Tel Aviv, to Israel, for answering, and they answered it's all right what I have published.

Q. When I asked you earlier about whether you had lectured in America and in Canada, what I meant was, have you spoken as a writer and publisher in, for example, Austria, Holland, Belgium and in California, Chicago and Milwaukee.

A. Well, where I have spoken?

Q. Yeah.

A. About all these things.

Q. Yes. That's what I meant by lecture. I meant spoken about them publicly.

A. Yes, Yes, surely.

Q. You mean as a profession, but I was asking you as a speaker.

A. Yeah, yeah. Here, in U.S.A. and Canada. I said that I had not spoken as a profession, as a known man who that is published these things and invited as an assembly.

Q. But have you spoken in that manner, invited at an assembly, in Belgium, Holland, Austria, Chicago, California and Milwaukee?

A. Yes. Several times in these countries. Several times.

Q. Have you developed a method of analyzing photographs in relation to standard works on {3702|3703} anatomy using a human skeleton?

A. I didn't understand.

Q. Have you developed a method of analyzing photographs using the human skeleton, the proportions of the human skeleton?

A. Yeah. I had made a special analysis by myself for identifying if a photograph will be authentic or if it will be not authentic. And therefore I produce from the books skeletons in every size for comparing the photographs. [sic]

Q. Why?

A. For scientific [sic] proving.

Q. Of what?

A. For instance, I will show you an example. If you see these pictures in a small form, in a tiny form, you will surely not find any differences, but if you will enlarge them, then you will see them. You have the special look, for instance, for underwearing [sic] of the persons here. Say you had another underwearing on this picture, but take —

Q. I just ask you if you used skeletons to compose the proportions of the human body in various photographs with the proportions of human bodies.

A. Only with such forms, such photographs.

Q. In the course of your research in regard to forged photographs, have you examined the various Holocaust literature photographs?

A. Yes, surely. It's the main books which I needed for this, or which I find, in which I find {3703|3704} these photographs.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I see Exhibit 1, please?

Q. Have you read the portion of "Did Six Million Really Die?" page 26 shown in Exhibit I?

A. Yes. I have seen and they have taken it from this edition, or perhaps on the first edition. It's maybe possible. But they have taken it from me.

Q. I see. Have you read it to determine if they accurately took it from you?

A. No. No. I know definitely that this combination of the pictures were never before my edition published. And I know that the persons who printed it in England had these things from me.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Was it with your permission?

A. If you publish some things, you have — it's not needed to give a permission to publish it the same thing again. When you have not special rights. I have not special rights for these pictures.

MR. CHRISTIE: I seek to have the witness qualified and speak in the area of the documentary research that he has done, and in the area of history that he has done research in and express his opinions as they are expressed in the books that he has published, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

—— {3704|3705}

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Walendy, we have a different system of universities here in Canada. On your curriculum vitae Mr. Christie refers [sic] to a Diplom Politologe

A. Yes.

Q. And you received that after going to the German Institute for Advanced Political Studies for some six years.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Do you know, sir, if that is the equivalent of a Bachelor [sic] of Arts degree in Canada?

A. No, I have not confirmed this. I don't know. How do you mention that here? How do we manage that here?

Q. Okay.

A. But independent college which is now, after I had gone there, and official institute of university of West Berlin.

Q. All right. At the time that you were going there it wasn't connected to the university [sic].

A. No. It was a special institution, because in the former Germany there was a special ... (German phrase) also, and it didn't change the construction after the first years of the war.

Q. It says, and Mr. Christie took you through this, that your [you] studied history, political economy, constitutional law, international law, media management, social studies. Does that mean that you took a course in those subjects? {3705|3706}

A. No. You have, as a student, a possibility to go to this special section, or to this special section, but you were compelled to have a special number of sections in which you will be proved afterwards. You can have speciality. My speciality in all these things is European situation, and besides this, you have to attend and to have to work in the other sections, too. For instance, economy and social politics, and compelled to have knowledge about all the main problems of the other sections, too.

Q. All right. So you would take one or two courses in the other sections, those ones I just read, but your specialization is Eastern European studies.

A. Yeah. In the form, the student status was, I had to elect a special subject, and therefore I learned Russian and was proved in Russian, too, and you know, that is —

Q. All right. When you worked for the West German Ministry of German Re-Unification, what was your job?

A. To hold lectures on assemblies. I got an order there on that school, or there on that assemblies, you have to speak about unification of Germany or about communism or about German history, and for that I got paid, and that was the job. I could be dismissed if these lectures couldn't find any good reactions. So it was constructed, but I made this for several years.

Q. All right. And would the German Government, then, arrange for the hall where you were going to speak and what subjects you were going to speak on? {3706|3707}

A. Yes. They arranged all these things, or the initiators of such assemblies will call for lecturer about this or that theme, and this Ministry will declare, yes, for that theme this man is good, or for this theme this man is good. So it was arranged.

Q. All right. At that time you were called upon to lecture about your analysis of photographs. That is something you developed later.

A. Yes. This I developed later. Surely. This is published, for instance here. As a first edition it is published '67, and the second edition — maybe this is the English, is published '73.

Q. Okay. And the first edition of your volume for war crimes is included in "Europe in Flames". Is that what I understand?

A. Yeah. Yeah.

Q. Do I understand that you publish all these books yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. Has anybody else ever published your books?

A. No. They didn't like it. I tried with the first one. In the first one the guilt question of the Second World War, I had finished my studies and I tried to get it published by another publisher, but they didn't dare because they were, sorry, if something will be false we will have trouble, and we wouldn't invest so much money for that and have the trouble afterward. And they couldn't use about {3707|3708} content as I could use it, and afterwards they said, "Yes. How is it possible that you have no troubles here?" You can be sure that it was all right what I published, and there is no accusations. There's no published controversy against this book till now. And I published the first one it's more than twenty years ago.

Q. Okay. So the answer is that you published all the books yourself.

A. Yes.

Q. And there is now controversy about this book?

A. No. No.

Q. You said till now. I thought you meant that is now. No? Okay.

A. So you mean the controversy — they put it on the index for use dangerous literature. They mean this controversy, yes, but this controversy is now not decided to the end by the highest German administration court, and they only have to decide, is it necessary to have, in answering this question of the guilt question of the Second World War, is it necessary to have knowledge, or will it be enough to say Hitler is the only guilt person and nobody knows it, and the question, the highest administrative court has to decide, and they decided till now not.

Q. And are your other books included here also on the index?

A. No. Nothing. No. Nothing. But I will give you a special document from the General Attorney in Bielefeld. {3708|3709}

Q. I am going to stop you because you can't refer to that. He isn't here. My question is whether others are on the index, and you say no, they are not.

A. No. There is nothing banned, nothing on the index. But here, from this copies, is one on the index. It is number five, but this is a special because it happened not real discussion. It was confiscated with Berlin pension there, and in Berlin we have special right yet by the Allies, and the Court there put it, confiscated from that pension there and therefore they put it on the list of use dangerous literature, and I went to court for it and the court has not decided this thing.

THE COURT: What is the name of that one, sir?

THE WITNESS: "NS-Bewältigung". I can't translate that. It is the commonplace word for handling the German contemporary history.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would it be possible to ask – I don't know whether the witness said "youth dangerous" or "use dangerous". I didn't understand that word.

THE WITNESS: That is the specialty which I had declared before that, that that last was made against pornography. You can't publish pornographic things because they are dangerous for the youths. And they transformed this to put also with the help of this law paragraph, not political historical literature which they disliked, perhaps. And that is in the main form, a party decided decision from special parties. {3709|3710}

Q. I am just looking through your bibliography, and it seems that most of your sources are what we call a secondary source rather than the original documents. Do you agree with that?

A. No, I don't agree with that, because I told you that I have made intensive researching for the real documents, too, but in much cases you have not the possibility to find the original documents.

For instance, the whole or the most of the whole, the most documents of the Nuremberg Trial in Nuremberg in 1946 or '47 are not available in Germany. You can have only, perhaps, copies of them. And they are not available for us or for anybody, partly in the United States. And therefore, you must relate, for instance, on the official publications of the Nuremberg documents, or you must relate on the official publications of the Institute for Temporary History in Munich. And therefore I am compelled to cite them.

Q. All right. You mentioned the National Archives in Washington. Can you tell us how much time you spent in the National Archives in Washington?

A. Some days only.

Q. Some days. And what are the other major repositories of documents?

A. I didn't understand.

Q. I'm sorry. What are the other archives where one can find original documents?

A. Yeah. In Western Germany, you have much possibility to find them, and in .... (German phrase) {3710|3711} too, and I tried to go to the Military Archives in Freiburg and they have not these documents which I needed for my research. So I was not personally there. And then, you can get the help of the Institute for Temporary History in Munich.

Q. And have you been to any of the French Archives or the English Archives?

A. No. I don't speak French.

Q. Or the Israeli Archives?

A. No, I wasn't there. No. I can only read those books of which I know the language. It is difficult for me to read French books, but if you analyze historical problem of this kind, you will see that important Jews and important documents which were published in French will also be published in English, and surely, perhaps, in German, but insofar if you have time for these things, and such a book is not published in some days, you can wait if the English version is going on, coming on to the market, and then you can say, yes, this is a secondary source, but therefore it is a public discussion to find out, is it the right translation or is this the right document, or is it a falsification. So the public discussion about these things will bring you nearer to the truth.

Q. All right. And do you have any chemistry background?

A. No, no. I am only informed about chemistry things on the background of the documents of the I.G. Farben trial, and here are much problems discussed about chemical problems and the knowledge of my chemical knowledge is founded on this document. {3711|3712}

Q. Are you a photographer, or do you have any training in photo interpretation?

A. I don't understand.

Q. Do you have any training in photograph interpretation?

A. Before I published this second edition I told you that I had contacted three experts which gave me the knowledge that, and the proofs that these things are correct, and what I have to do to find these things when they are changed and so on. So that my specialties and photographs are founded by this background. I have not studied photographs, but I have published these things, and the experts in the world had the opportunity to say that I am not right, but they said I was right.

Q. And the anatomy charts that you have there, that was your idea, was it, to compare the anatomy charts? I'm sorry. You have some pictures over there of skeletons.

A. That was my idea.

Q. That was your idea. Okay. And do you know what your hat size is?

A. What my hat size?

Q. Yeah.

A. I don't need the masses of my hat sizes to analyze these pictures.

Q. I wonder whether we all wear the same hat size, whether we all have the same anatomy.

A. Yes, surely, but the differences can't be so. I will show you an example.

Q. No. No. You will have an {3712|3713} opportunity, perhaps, to show me an example in a while, but my question is whether your analysis is based on the idea that we all have the same anatomy.

A. No. There are differences, surely, but not such differences as on these pictures.

Q. I see. Do you have any background in anatomy? Have you ever studied anatomy?

A. No. I studied not anatomy, no, but I can only say that all experts who are anatomists didn't bring, till now, only one argument against this publication.

Q. Okay. Now, I may have missed this. Did I understand you to say something about documents being forged after the end of the War?

A. Yeah.

Q. All right. Do you have any background in analysis of forged documents, any training in that field?

A. Yes. I can only say that I was very much interested in all these things to find the truth, and I found that these pictures are forged and painted, and partly put together from partly from real documents to make another picture of them. And if you will take time for these things for analyzing these things for many years, by private initiative, in my opinion it's not necessary to have studied, if you have personal friend who give you the expert advice how to go on with this research.

Q. All right; So it's just photographs you are talking about when you have formed some opinions as to forgeries. It doesn't relate to documents {3713|3714} as well; is that right – just photographs?

A. No, no. The documents were published in the scientific [sic] books as real historical documents.

Q. All right. I am talking about documents like reports or memoranda, German type documents, in the photographed documents.

A. I analyzed documents, too. Yes, surely.

Q. And do I understand that you have a method, then, as well, whereby you determine whether typed documents or memorandum are forged?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And do you have any background in handwriting analysis, or anything at all that would assist you in that analysis?

A. I didn't understand. What is the question?

Q. All right. Do you have any background or have you taken any courses in handwriting analysis or analysis of typewriters or —

A. No.

Q. Or have you done anything other than your own personal opinions?

A. That is not a personal opinion, but I will show you an example.

Q. No, I am not asking for an example. What I am asking for is your qualifications to speak in that field.

A. Yeah.

Q. Why are you more qualified than {3714|3715} anybody else?

A. If you will be confronted with special documents, you can analyze if the content of such a document can be historical true, because you have the knowledge to compare this content of this document with other documents and would show you if the development of special events can be in such a way happen or not. I have been trained also to analyze documents from the form as it's published or as it's therefore for investigation. So you can analyze the document on two main things — from the content, where it was found, how it is produced, and how is the form of it. And if you have the knowledge of other historical connections, it's clear that you have the knowledge to judge if such a document is honest or is not honest. And if I publish, for instance, a document that it's not honest and in the public reaction of the publicity there's no reaction against me, then I must say that I am right. If I am not right, everybody has a chance to prove that I am not right.

Q. What training do you have, then? You said you were trained to analyze documents. What training do you have to analyze documents?

A. I have studied six years political sciences, and the analyze of documents is a part of that.

Q. How many courses?

A. That I can't answer now with a special number.

Q. Okay. Is there a body of knowledge or a science that is devoted to the study of {3715|3716} documents?

A. If there is a science ...

Q. ... devoted to the study of documents.

A. During the studying in Berlin, you mean?

Q. No. My question is going to be what that study of documents, what that science is called, if you know

A. Yes. Political science. That is all the material of social science to history to constitutional law to international law. That is the whole compound is political sciences. But as a student you are compelled to get the knowledge of all these connections and you have to study documents with very critical view. That's a task for every student in every semester.

Q. Have you ever heard of diplomatics?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. What's that?

A. That is a publication of the American Foreign policy.

Q. All right. Thank you. I am going to suggest to you that in English the knowledge of the science of languages is called Diplomats.

A. Yes, diplomatics. It is a special bibliography word for that naming it foreign relation policy documents of the United States.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Walendy. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie. {3716|3717}

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no questions of the witness.

THE COURT: Mr. Walendy, I am showing to you a document or a booklet which I believe is in the English version as our Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" Do you write English?

THE WITNESS: I don't write English, no.

THE COURT: And so, therefore —

THE WITNESS: But I —

THE COURT: Can you read English?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I read English and I can write English, but I didn't publish English versions by myself.

THE COURT: You will see that there is a piece of paper right there in English.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Did you type that?

THE WITNESS: No.

THE COURT: Who did?

THE WITNESS: I don't know.

THE COURT: But you read English.

THE WITNESS: I read English, yes.

THE COURT: What does that say, that typed piece of paper?

THE WITNESS: I shall say it in English?

THE COURT: Yes, please.

THE WITNESS: "I have the sole right to distribute the German edition of this booklet".

THE COURT: Yes. All right. But {3717|3718} you didn't write that.

THE WITNESS: I didn't write that, no.

THE COURT: I show you another piece called, "The Nuremberg Trial". Did you type that?

THE WITNESS: No, I didn't.

THE COURT: Who did?

THE WITNESS: It was done in the house of Mr. Zundel.

THE COURT: Yes. I see. Here is another one, typed piece of paper in the book. What is the heading? What does it read?

THE WITNESS: "The reason about the Eastern European countries".

THE COURT: You didn't type that?

THE WITNESS: I didn't type that, but I must say, perhaps — I didn't, no. I made the first formulations for it, if it is of interest for you to know that. I made the first, my first writing for this paper is made by myself, but it was proved and typewritten from another person.

THE COURT: Who?

THE WITNESS: I don't know. It must —

THE COURT: Were you there when it was typed out?

THE WITNESS: No, but I have read it afterwards.

THE COURT: You read it.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: I see. What is the {3718|3719} purpose of these pieces of paper in these books?

THE WITNESS: To give a helping, I believe, that things were produced for of a gift to the court that the court can have a view of what is the content of these booklets.

THE COURT: I see. All right. Thank you. Any questions arising out of my questions, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

FURTHER EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Was there any attempt to deceive anyone by preparing summaries of what were in those booklets?

A. No, no, no.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions arising out of that.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a submission.

THE COURT: I will hear your submissions after I ask Mr. Griffiths if he has any questions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May I have the Court's indulgence?

Thank you, sir. I have no questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

——— {3719|3720}

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a brief submission. I have the submission that we have heard the opinion evidence of Dr. Hilberg regarding train schedules and information derived from such things, and he had no experience in railroads or the handling of railroads or train schedules. Nonetheless, his opinion was allowed.

We have a witness who gives his evidence [sic] on the basis of years of research and experience. Christ had no degree in Christianity; Karl Marx had no degree in communism, but they certainly represented people who had obvious opinions based upon experience which had validity in terms of history. And consequently it is my submission that this man as much as anybody else is qualified through his experience and research to give opinions, because he knows as well as most of us the results of that research.

He has done research, trained in the field of political science, much as Dr. Hilberg was. Nobody in this world is able to say who is a better expert than another unless we measure countries in having measures of expertise which they probably didn't.

It is my opinion that he published, {3720|3721} and that he was self-published. If he was self-published and has done adequate research, I suggest that is no criticism of any validity. In fact, there is money behind the publication of Dr. Hilberg that does not come from Dr. Hilberg but does not lend any more credibility about these than anybody else.

He, Dr. Hilberg, was appointed by the President's Commission of the Holocaust. I don't think that, with respect, makes any difference either, but the witness on the stand's evidence is that he has studied, he has published, he has researched, he has researched documents, he has researched the documents that are before you.

I regret that – at the time when he was about to give evidence he prepared summaries of the items that he had. I anticipated he might not be able to explain in English, and as a result had him write out in advance what the book says and had it typed so he could look at it and refresh his memory. They were not notes made at the time, but I don't think they were an attempt made to deceive anybody. They were not evidence and they weren't referred to. But the books published have a wide bearing on the subject. {3721|3722} They were referred to by Mr. Zundel in his work, not written by him but published by him, and I suggest that not only is his expertise relevant, but it is also useful for the jury to determine whether or not the opinions expressed in "Did Six Million Really Die?" have a reasonable basis in fact.

It would be, I suggest, for the jury whether his opinions are credible, but it cannot be denied that he hasn't researched in the area, and the books which are before you speak for themselves. They certainly indicate a wide range of information research and knowledge far wider than any of us who have not been in Lublin or the States Archives in Nuremberg. The witness has been. And I suggest for those reasons we should be entitled to hear his opinion, especially since the accused has relied upon it.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Christie. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I don't suppose either Christ or Marx would have been accepted, Your Honour, as an expert by the Court.

THE COURT: I am relieved I am not {3722|3723} obliged to make that decision.

MR. CHRISTIE: I said I don't suppose Christ or Marx would be accepted as experts I would suggest they would be from knowledge acquired through experience. In Christianity [Christianity] and Marxism who else would be an expert.

MR. GRIFFITHS: But Mr. Walendy, Your Honour, is a man whose expertise we must decide. I would suggest that if I could leave aside for just a moment the question of his expertise on general history of World War II and go to those areas where, as I understand, he also claims expertise as a corollary to that general history, namely, in the field of photographic analysis and interpretation and in the field of the authenticity of documents, that Dr. Walendy, or Mr. Walendy has no further expertise in those areas than any other average person.

He uses his own methodology. He lacks the expertise so he went and talked to a couple of people, and from that developed his system, at least as far as photographs are concerned. He has no special training or preparation other than his general course in political science some years ago in the analysis of {3723|3724} whether or not a document is authentic, and I would suggest that those are areas that he is not qualified to speak of.

As to his expertise, Your Honour, in the field of the history of the Second World War, it would appear that from his body of work that he's brought into court, that the majority of the items, and it is for Your Honour to find, are secondary sources, not primary sources, but that he certainly has read far more than the average person has read.

The study of the secondary sources, Your Honour, at least at the U.S. Archives, has been at least, it would appear, cursory. He has only been there a couple of times.

I would suggest there is one further problem with Mr. Walendy's expertise, and it's the issue that I raised as well when Dr. Faurisson was presented for qualification, which is that an expertise is an expert's opinion, to have value must be moderate and unbiased, based on his expertise. And Mr. Walendy, directly or indirectly, as a publisher of the German edition and the sole holder of the rights of the German edition of the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", {3724|3725} is somebody who has an interest in this proceeding. And as such, with respect, I would suggest that notwithstanding that he has read more in the area than the average person, – his expertise should not be accepted.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: By such analysis, if we call the person who wrote a book and he claimed to be an expert in defence of the book, he couldn't testify, according to his opinion. I suggest that doesn't make sense.

I don't know, and I don't think my friend can find authority for the proposition that an expert must be unbiased or moderate, whatever criteria of moderation my friend may suggest. I suggest experts are often biased, and it is for the jury to decide what's right, and nobody can say to a jury before he testifies, in my opinion you must be unbiased because that is to pre-judge what his opinion was.

He hasn't expressed his opinion. If he is biased, why should he be stopped from expressing his opinion? The jury can decide whether he is correctly or incorrectly biased. It isn't for Your Honour, my friend or myself to find that opinion or for Your Honour {3725|3726} to put restrictions on opinion evidence because the academic qualifications don't exist. It would certainly limit the evidence if we were to apply the same principle, as I said, to Dr. Hilberg's evidence in regard to railroad trains. Thank you.

THE COURT: Yes. What I propose to do is ask the jury to adjourn now. I will have over the lunch hour to study this documentation as best I can and make my ruling at two fifteen.

These documents are not, at the moment, exhibits. If I must, I will make them exhibits. They may well become exhibits. But what I'd like to know is, do I have the permission of counsel for the accused who is calling this witness to take all of this into my chambers so I can look at it, rather than do it here and bore everybody?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I didn't realize I hadn't filed them. I think that that would be certainly agreeable to me as well as to my client.

THE COURT: Is that agreeable to you, sir?

THE WITNESS: Yes, surely. I have {3726|3727} two copies of these here. This is one copy and I have a second one of all these things.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, have a good lunch. Two thirty.

— The jury retires. 12:55 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:32 p.m. {3727|3728}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Udo Walendy is in the process of testifying as a witness on behalf of the defence.

In the presence of the jury, counsel for the accused seeks to qualify Mr. Walendy as an expert witness in the field of recent history – that is to say, as a historical expert. He wants to further qualify this witness as an expert in the field of the analysis of documents and photographs.

Mr. Walendy is a West German national. He lives in that country. He trained for a year as a journalist, as I see from his curriculum vitae. He then studied history in school as part of what I infer is a wider course which I understand was termed, "Eastern and European Studies".

He has written a number of books. He has published some books. He has published yet other books and pamphlets. He brought with him to the witness stand three hard-cover books that he authored. They are titled, "Truth for Germany", "Europe in Flames", and a third book the German name of which is beyond my German pronunciation. The latter two are written in the German language.

In addition, he was shown by counsel for the accused thirty-eight printed booklets or statements on {3728|3729} a host of subjects, all of which appear to me to relate to events which occurred in World War II from a German perspective. All are soft-cover; all are in the German language. One of the thirty-eight appears to be the original version of what is Exhibit 1 in this trial, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Mr. Walendy says, as I understood his evidence, and I am subject to correction, that he owns the publishing rights to that particular booklet, the German equivalent of Exhibit 1.

Mr. Walendy explained his academic qualifications which appear on his curriculum vitae, or his resumé. His academic background appears to be the equivalent of a Bachelor of Arts degree in Political Science. At least, it would appear that political science was his subject as an undergraduate.

He claims expertise in the analysis of documents and photographs. The basis of the claimed expertise is through his acquired knowledge over a six-year period of the study of political science.

He admits to having taken no training in anatomy, handwriting, type-writer forgery, photography, {3729|3730} and allied subjects of that nature.

Counsel for the Crown submits that Mr. Walendy's evidence as an expert be rejected for the following reasons:

1. He is not unbiased. That is to say, he has a biased approach to the subjects upon which he proposes, if permitted to do so, to give expert evidence.

2. His skill and knowledge is insufficient in that he is insufficiently trained in both of the proposed fields to the point where his expertise in each is no different than that acquired by any knowledgeable student in those particular disciplines.

3. He has a stake or an interest in the outcome of this proceeding.

I am in agreement with the submission that, merely because a proposed expert is biased, or has strong opinions going in one direction within the field of expertise, of itself does not necessarily disqualify a witness from becoming qualified by a court of law as an expert witness. The jury, being the triers of fact in this case, will apply what weight it decides to apply to the evidence of any witness. {3730|3731}

The issue, essentially, goes to the weight of the evidence. It is not related to the admissibility of the evidence itself.

I make no comment with respect to Mr. Christie's submission as to whether or not, if Jesus Christ or Karl Marx were proffered [sic] as expert witnesses, their lack of formal academic training would preclude them from becoming expert witnesses.

On another ruling on this subject on this trial I have observed that much knowledge on any particular subject does not necessarily qualify the person holding that knowledge to give expert opinions in a court of criminal jurisdiction.

On the other hand, the lack of formal training, of itself, does not disqualify, necessarily, a person in a similar position from becoming an expert witness within the confines of a particular field of expertise.

I find that Mr. Walendy, on what I have heard, does not disclose a sufficient basis of expertise in the skill or the discipline of document or photography examination and interpretation. He was examined with regard to the methods indigenous to the {3731|3732} field of examination and interpretation of documents and photographs.

He will not, therefore, be asked any questions concerning his opinion on those two subjects.

Mr. Walendy has not been proven to be sufficiently skilled as a historian [sic]. Knowledge of political science, of itself, hardly qualifies as a basis for the giving of historical opinions. The two disciplines are not identical.

On the other hand, Mr. Walendy is a knowledgeable writer. He is knowledgeable in certain aspects of German history. He has acquired certain opinions and views within that field that may be of assistance to the jury. He has published those views in a book known as, "Truth for Germany". He has written that book. He has a knowledge of certain World War II events which, depending on the view this jury takes of them, may be of assistance to the jury.

Mr. Walendy is a knowledgeable writer with opinions on the Holocaust. Those opinions are german [sic] to the issues this jury must try. He will, therefore, be permitted to give his opinions within the confines of the contents of the only document that is here in the English {3732|3733} language, namely, "Truth for Germany".

He may not be questioned on any one of the other pieces of material, all in the German language, that he has produced, and upon which I am absolutely certain it is proposed, if I admit it, that he is to be questioned. That is so because they are written in the German language and he could not be fairly cross-examined on any of them.

That is the ruling.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. {3733|3734}

— The witness returns to the stand.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. What, if any, official use was made of the book, "Truth for Germany" by the West German Government?

A. Shortly after the first edition every German Embassy will get this book in his library in his official library in '64.

Q. Why?

THE COURT: In what, sir? In '64, did you say?

THE WITNESS: In '64, yes. The book was published in '63 and in '64 every German Embassy got this book in its official library.

Q. Was it ordered by the Foreign Office of the West German Government?

A. Yes.

Q. And what conclusions do you draw regarding the Holocaust from the book, "Truth for Germany"?

A. The book, "Truth for Germany" is only research guilt question of the Second World War, whereas the Holocaust —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed what you just said at the very end.

THE WITNESS: The Holocaust is not seen as the question of how the Second World War began, and therefore, that is not part of this book.

Q. As a result of your research have you formed opinions respecting the Holocaust? {3734|3735}

A. Of this book I said it is not in the content of the book. The Holocaust is not mentioned, but you ask in respect to the other books —

THE COURT: No. He asked you whether or not you formed any opinions about the Holocaust. That's what he asked.

THE WITNESS: My knowledge about what is the result of my researching. Yes?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

A. The first one is that the Allied powers in East and West had no knowledge of the Holocaust till the end of the War. The second is that the tales which were produced in the literature, in the main literature to this question can't be happen in that way as they are described because they are technical reasons and much more other details which do not allow that the proceeding had going on in such a way as it is described since '45. That means, for instance, that — Oh, I think in other ways. There is a whole story of literature about these things developed after the Second World War in respect to the many trials which were going on in East and West, in the Eastern and Western zones of Germany, and in Poland and Russia, and in these trials were a lot of witnesses or eye witnesses who told this and that, and these tales to were combined afterwards from the Holocaust writer, from the writers, from the so-called historians which the published books about it seems. So the whole tale is compiled with a lot of these tales which were not speaking up, were not co-ordinated in the whole literature. So that we {3735|3736} find in that form of literature so much fault, so much technical and other impossibilities and so much errors and so much contradictions that you can see that it would not give a clearance what could have happened in reality. And the situation is that in all the last thirty years nobody seems willing to bring clearness in this contradiction, but only, they only were interested, so it seems to me, only to bring up the history that six million were murdered, six million Jews were murdered. And all these publications were not in such a way that the scientist can be sufficient with that.

And we have, in the meantime, so much documents on the market that you can't prove what has been happen, what cannot have been happened, and there are probably documents of the I.G. Farben Trial by the American trial in '47 published about this trial with only the seizures of the accusers and by the end of the trial — and it was not published all what was going on during this trial and what had defenders and accused to say.

In the trial of the I.G. Farben trial were accused mostly German engineers of I.G. Farben who had built up in Auschwitz big industrial complex, and they were confronted with the Holocaust accusers, and they could answer that they had no knowledge till the end of the War, and that is not possible that these things could have happened because, in Auschwitz region, there were one hundred thousand people of very different nations from the Pole to the Russians to the Ukra[ini]ans to the French, and from the Germans and the prisoners {3736|3737} of war, and the concentration camp prisoners, and they had very much contacts, each with outside world, and it was not known till the end of the War what the accused sees the State.

Q. Have you read the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" in English?

A. If I have it?

Q. Have you read it?

A. Yes. Surely I have read it, yes.

Q. What do you say about the truth of that thesis?

A. I have not found any faults in statements there, and I will say that it's perhaps not the best scientific [sic], historical scientific version which can be produced on the scene. This may be, but I have not find any faults [false] statements in it.

Q. What do you say about its thesis?

A. Yeah. The thesis are right, because in, especially in respect to our knowledge of today, because this pamphlet was published '75, we have now '85, and in this last years we have a lot of new documents which approve this publication in that statement. I mention only the book of the Professor Arthur Butz, the book of "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", who started his research of the theme from another point than all the other books before him, because he built up his story not from the stories of other eye witnesses, but he went into the New York Times Archive and looked for the things which the New York Times printed and published during the War. And then he looked for the American Air Force photographer [sic] {3737|3738} and was wondering that till that time nobody of the other side has presented these photographs till thirty-five years after the War. They were not presented in Nuremberg. They were not called for any of the other historical writers about this scenes, and Professor Butz was the first man who provoked the publication of these air photos, and these air photos were made from the American Air Force just of that moment when the Holocaust historians will tell that there were the high point of the mass murders in Auschwitz that was in 1944. They made official photographs in nearly all ten days of the whole year of '44.

Q. Nearly every ten days?

A. Yeah. Nearly every ten days of the year of 1944. And on these photographs you have the place where it should have been done, and you have the time where it should have been done, and you compare, if these photographs will confirm this thesis, or if it will be directly contradiction of that. And I will only tell you one point of that, that —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. I don't believe this witness has been qualified to give us an opinion of photo interpretation, Your Honour, on the photographs.

THE COURT: No, he hasn't.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I just wanted to prevent that.

THE WITNESS: You speak too — I didn't hear you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry. I was objecting to your giving a point of interpretation of the {3738|3739} aerial photographs.

THE COURT: What's your next question, Mr. Christie?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you have other reasons from your research for agreeing with the thesis in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"?

A. No. I can only say that the thesis of this booklet is right, but the scientific [sic] researching can be much better presented, can much be better presented by the new documents we have now.

The history is going on, and whether we can see that we have know some documents and knowledge is which we are not known as that moment. I tell you another instance. In the meantime there were published the memoir books of Nahum Goldman. He was the President of the Jewish Congress for more than thirty years. There was published the memoirs of James Weitzman. He was the president of the World Zionist Organization and has another post in the World Jewish Organization. They are published another books here in America, for instance by Mr. Weitzman or Mr. Gilbert or Mr. Lacqueur. He has research the situation about the situation what did the Allied nations know about the disappearance of six million people in Jewish Europe, and what would have they done after they had heard about it. And if you compare all these books it must be said that they had no knowledge of it. There were no actions to get knowledge of the disappearance of people there, and if you compare that with the question when fifteen thousand Polish officers were murdered by the Russians and were found partly in Katyn during the {3739|3740} year of —

Q. In where?

A. In Katyn.

Q. What is that?

A. The Forest of Katyn. That is a famous name. There were found more than four thousand five hundred Polish officers shot down by the Russians, and this was an example for the other fifteen as a whole which were shot as Polish prisoners of war by the Russians. And after it was known that the German Government had published this thing, a worldwide initiative was started if this news will be right, then where are these people. And it had diplomatic consequences and much other reactions, but this was only about fifteen thousand persons. And now compare the six million question that must be a proportion much bigger, and there were no international investigations, neither by the Red Cross, neither by the Catholic Church, neither by the Secret Services of the other lands, and you have to remember that either the British also the American and also the Russian had knowledge of the secret codes of the German Army and were in connection also with the opponents against Hitler within the German Army and they had no knowledge, no confirmation of all these things got. And if you compare all these things, then you must say that could not happened what it was told. And if you compare, perhaps, that the whole civilian bombing war during the Second World War led to the loss of one, circa one million German civilians during the whole war and see the destroyance [sic] of the German cities, then you compare what it means to exterminate one million people. {3740|3741} It can't be in a silence, and especially not in the industrial region where hundred thousand people are working. And in the Court of Americans that till the end of the War there was not a single case of sabotage in Auschwitz. There was not a single strike in Auschwitz till the end of the War, and it can't be possible, if those tales would be right.

In Birkenau and in Auschwitz where the modernists, most modern German hospitals, and these were not necessary when the intention would have been to kill all these persons.

Q. Have you studied the fuel necessary to cremate six million bodies?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: I just asked him if he studied it. What is objectionable about that?

THE COURT: It is on the curriculum vitae. There is no point in getting all frustrated. You know why he objected.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if he had gone further I wouldn't have —

THE COURT: Ask another question.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a right to ask that question.

THE COURT: You have a technical right, yes. Ask him that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you studied the question of how much fuel is necessary to cremate five million bodies?

A. Yes. I have published it, but {3741|3742} I don't have the numbers in my mind.

Q. You are not entitled to say it, but —

A. The witnesses —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Go ahead with your next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you communicate this knowledge to Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes. I know Mr. Zundel since the end of the sixties, yes. At the end of, I believe, '68, '69.

Q. Are you a publisher in your own right of other people's books as well?

A. Yes. I publish other books, also by myself, but I don't have them here. Yes, I publish several other authors, too.

Q. So you are a publisher as well.

A. Yes, I am a publisher. Surely. Not only of my own things, but for other things. That's right.

Q. What kind of a man is Ernst Zundel?

A. Yeah. He has — we were in contact since the last years of the sixties, and he has bought a lot of my publications, and we were in contact with him. I was in contact with him and I knew what he was doing, and I tried that he would build up a book selling service, the German published books, the books which were published in Germany could be sold here in Canada, but this business was not going on so as I liked to be because he said he had not the possibilities {3742|3743} for that in that form, and he was mainly occupied with graphic.

THE COURT: With ...

THE WITNESS: With graphics.

THE COURT: Graphics.

THE WITNESS: Graphics, yes. And he published, yes, pamphlets and things which he distributed here in Canada and other works, and sometime I got them, too, and I had not a bad impression of him, but I am personally historian and scientist, and my feeling for the necessary publications and formulate publications will differ from his things which he published. And so I got my way in Germany in my form, and he is going his way in his form. And what shall I say more?

Q. In your opinion what is his reputation for honesty and sincerity?

A. Yeah, always good, but he has published some things about the UFOs and in Germany about this theme as serious people, but would not be so friendly about that theme. And that too he publishes something about UFO.

Q. UFO?

A. Yes. It is a technical — yeah.

Q. So he is not serious enough, in your view, is that right?

A. Yeah. It depends on the people. There are people who are confident with, let's say, literature, or romance. There are people to whom such scientific literature would be too strangers for them to read and they wouldn't take a book because they say, "Oh, {3743|3744} so much I have to read and I don't have time and I prefer such a booklet or such a copy which I can over read in a few minutes. And for those people Zundel has a good reputation in Germany, but for the others who likes or prefers more serious scientific literature, they know that he exists, and that not everybody must do what he likes, but we can't interfere with it, and we would prefer that he, perhaps, would also engage himself in such more scientific [sic] things to publish, but we are content when he will inform the people with this quality which brings him success in his country where he lives. The mentality of the people may be a little different.

Q. You said that you knew about documents and research now which supports the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?" that we didn't know before. What other documents and research do we now have that supports the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?" that we did not have before?

A. Yeah, especially the I.G. Farben documents. All these documents which were part of the I.G. Farben trial documents in 1948, and especially all the technical things which happened in Auschwitz in the situation of the concentration camp labourers [labourers] there and the situation of the engineers who worked there. And naturally, also, the documents about Zyklon-B. That was the main question in that trial. What was Zyklon-B? How was it used, and how was it known, and what did the Germans with Zyklon-B in Auschwitz?

Q. As a result of your research have you come to any conclusions as to the number of Jews who {3744|3745} died in concentration camps through gassing during the Second World War?

A. Till now we have now, forty years after the end of the War, there is not a single earnestly proof that Jews were gassed in gas chambers in Germany. There is no scientific [sic] proof till now. There are only tales. There are only statements of eye witnesses who state that, but they state also that that what they have seen must have been in gas chambers with a volume of one thousand till three thousand persons which were gassed within five minutes which were taken out twenty minutes after the —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection.

THE COURT: Yes. Just a moment, please.

THE WITNESS: — and which were burned —

THE COURT: Mr. Walendy, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't understand why that should be limited.

THE COURT: Because he is repeating technical hearsay that I ruled that he couldn't say.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I haven't heard you to say that he couldn't give his opinions as to how he concluded that, in respect to the Holocaust. I thought he was entitled —

THE COURT: The objection wasn't to that. It was only his last two sentences that the objection was taken.

MR. CHRISTIE: Any reasonable basis for his opinion can't be given, am I to understand that, {3745|3746} involving technical answers?

THE COURT: It is hearsay. He can give his opinion as a writer on the Holocaust, but not on technical opinions. I thought I made that perfectly clear. I told you that he could not be examined on anything that is contained within those thirty-eight books. I looked at them and it's there, and he can't. So ask your next question, please.

You left off where he said that there is no proof that any Jew was gassed in gas chambers in Germany. That is perfectly admissible.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Walendy, is there some other explanation for the six million Jews alleged to have died other than the gas chambers that makes sense to you?

A. Yeah, this six million will be put together from several places where Jews were. It was called, it was stated that you would have been shot or would have been murdered. That is the one thing in the main camps in Poland, that means in first line in Auschwitz, and in Sobibor, Belzec and Treblinka, perhaps in Chelmno, and on the other side in Russia, in Russia by the so-called Einsatzgruppen, the special units which had the task to hold the land behind the front to secure the land behind the front. And it is called, stated in the books about this scene that these Einsatzgruppen, these special troops should have murdered two hundred and half the Jews, and these —

Q. Two hundred and a half?

A. Two million and a half. Two million and a half Jews. And this number you must put {3746|3747} from the six where the others were should have been murdered.

Q. From your research what is your opinion about that matter?

A. I have published two booklets here, the number 16 and 17 of the historical effects about justice, and it's really very difficult researching about the theme because no historian has the possibility now to go to Russia and look for the findings, but you have to combine all the publications and all the results of the Military Tribunals about this theme and can prove and compare the documents which were presented about it, and you can compare all these things with a new publications of the Russians themselves.

Q. What is your opinion?

A. As a result of my research is that there is — that's not an opinion but that's proven — that also confirmed by the Institute of Historical Contemporary History in Munich, that there is not found, till now, any order of Hitler or Himmler or Heydrich or Goebbels to murder the Jews, neither in gas chambers, or through the Einsatzgruppen. There is not found any order till now; But they say, yes, they had not done it in a written form, but they have ordered it with mouth, and so that is the reason why you didn't find it. But if you follow that version, you must have a way on which, and the date from which that order should have go through the units and will be given a special units of the S.S. But the result is that these special units of the S.S., they are not understanding the direct order from Himmler or Hitler, but they were organized within {3747|3748} the normal German Army, and every Army Kommando, the commanding of any Army had the order about a special task, tasks and works of such units, and it's proven, too, that the military commanding centres had no knowledge of such murderers, where I have to say that, in reality, surely were used shot there, but not by real central order from the Fuhrer, but that relates in the cases which I researched for from the special situations in the Baltic States, for instance, or in the Balkans and the partisan situation.

The Jews were part in the War. They declared in the name of the world jewry [sic] the War against Hitler beginning already in 1933, but they declared in that year, that's only economical war, but they confirmed after the War that that it was not only an economical war but a war, reality, but one may differ if the world jewry [sic] was a reality or not a reality. But Voltman (phonetic) said, yes, it was a reality, but it may be how it be, but the Jews in the West worked very intensive together with the Jews in the Communist Soviet Union, and especially in the Baltic States. He knows that the Soviet troops advanced into the Baltic States in 1940 during the German advance into France. The Russians marched into the Baltic States and they expelled there and exported there the whole Baltic intelligence circles, and I read today in the Canadian, in the Toronto newspaper that there was a protesting assembly against these mass deportations and murders against the Latvian, Lithuanian intelligence. Should be a trial against the Russians. And in that situation in 1940 till the beginning of the Russian German war, especially {3748|3749} know it from the history about historical books about this, especially the Jews had the main initiative to destroy the intelligence of the Baltic States and therefore, in that situation, was intensive hatred situation created which had reactions after the Germans invaded these lands, and in that situations were shot a lot of Jews, partly by the Lithuanians themselves, also partly by the German troops. But that was not an order from Himmler or Hitler, but it was created by the situation that was on the lower units there. And such situations happened also in the Ukraine during the War, but there is no, in no case, proven the immense amount by these numbers which were published about two million and a half. And two million and a half is such an amount that they must have been mass graves there. There must have been findings there, and it must be proven now that the Russians must have published in their publications in the last year that they found it in the year of '43, or combine every military unit with the so-called researching unit to research for the German crimes. But they published also that they had find massive grave near Wostocki (phonetic) which the witness had seen, but they published in the same place that in the mass graves was Katyn with the results of the German shooting of the Polish officers, and you can see in this case that they are not honestly and they are publishing things which are not correct, or directly contrary to the truth. But they published also that they tried to find the findings of the Germans, but they were disappointed about these things, because the Germans, so they published because the Germans were able {3749|3750} to destroy all the findings, yeah, but when you look for the years '43 and '44 about the possibilities which the Germans have to burn million peoples as they are saying that the dead bodies were first put in graves, and then again put out of the graves and then burned, and that nothing was – there were no findings about that, that the Russians had not invented the international investigation of these findings, then you must see that they have the findings, and scientists have to prove all these connections and the result will be, especially when you compare the books about this and I think books of the Institute for Contemporary History in Munich from Dr.

Hausnick (phonetic) [Krausnick] and Villers (phonetic) [Wilhelm], and I researched this book very honestly, then you will see that they take sources which state that the Germans had this and that done, which were not honestly documented [sic], but they were overtaken by Russian statements.

Q. They took over Russian statements.

A. Yeah, without any documentations, and so history is written about this theme, and if you will earnestly research these things, you have been honestly to prove these documentations, and you will find that these things, in that volume, could have been done in spite of the fact that, perhaps, Mr. Ohrndorf [Ohlendorf], in Military Trial after the War, had said that he gave the order for shooting eighty thousand Jews. But this man was not a free man. He had not the possibility to utter, to give independent statements. He was a prisoner and he knew the consequences of the situation. And this statement were given a document number and found and {3750|3751} was overtaken into the history book, but we have to research these things and these connections with independent scientific [sic] methods and real documentation, and so you find that shortly after the War, there happened many things and many statements which can't be overtaken by an earnest historical writing.

Q. Are all the publications that you have published that you have written yourself true to the best of your knowledge?

A. Yes, they are true from – I have given my earnest – I have endeavoured to formulate and research the best I can, and when there are false sentences, false conclusions, then the publicity is confronted with they can take me and they prove me I am false, but till now nobody did. Q. And are those distributed all to Mr. Zundel and around the world?

A. Well, surely. Surely.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to file those as exhibits, Your Honour, the whole works.

THE COURT: They are in German.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right.

THE COURT: They are not going in as exhibits.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can my client not read German and say later that he relied on the German language —

THE COURT: Well, if as and when that comes to pass.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could they be put in as exhibits for identification until then? {3751|3752}

THE COURT: Not until then.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, how can I – then there will be continuity.

THE COURT: Are you prepared to translate them into English? Well, you can put them in as exhibits for identification. Is that all you want?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I can put them in a box.

Q. Do you have a box for those?

A. No, I don't have a box for it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a box. Those are my questions on examination-in-chief.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. The last book that you held up, the Einsatzgruppen book, do I understand somebody complained about that book and that is before the Courts and —

A. No. There are two parts of that. They are no trouble to say this.

Q. Okay. But has anybody complained about those?

A. No.

Q. I see. What if somebody did complain about them?

A. Pardon?

Q. What if somebody did complain {3752|3753} about them?

A. About this, not ...

Q. About any of them.

A. Well, here, number 15, number 15 there was started trial not against me personally but it would have been handled as a punishable dealing that I published things which are not correct, but they are not make personal trial against me, but the new situation we have now, that the highest court made the decision that in spite of the fact that a publication is more than six months old, they can taken these things which are punishable and destroy them. And the General Attorney made a statement for that. He only wrote a lot of my publications on his statement, and without any – without any proving or argumentation he formulated afterwards this shows that I have insulted the Jews, and for that there is the paragraph so and so of the criminal book in Germany, and therefore it is to forbid.

Q. My question, really —

A. The General Attorney was not able to tell one single sentence that that sentence is false or that such sentence should be insult to anybody or to the Jews.

For instance, I will show you. I published in that book —

Q. No, sir —

A. I published in that book facsimile of the German, Berlin German, it was book from 1941, with all the Jewish telephone addresses, and the General Attorney wrote in his script on what he made that {3753|3754} because I published this, I insulted the Jews. I can't understand, but that's the situation. And this case was going on in Bielefeld and I went to the next higher court and I complained about these things, and at the time I published all these details of that trial, and this number now is presented to the Constitutional Court now, and till now it's not decided what should be done.

Q. Thank you. My question, really, sir, is as I understand it you say your pamphlets must be true because nobody has complained. And I am wondering whether you take the reverse of that, that if somebody does complain, they are not true.

A. They didn't complain that's not true what I published. I told you. They are not able to tell one sentence that should be false. They accused this copy without any explanation without any scientific [sic] with —

Q. My question is, if nobody complains, how is that evidence that what you print, how is that scientific evidence that what you print is true? Isn't that just evidence that nobody complained?

A. In my publications I research the statements of the publications of the other named persons which were published as qualified specialists about this thing. And if you read such books and such arguments you can, as a scientist, see if these arguments are right. Did these so-called experts all the connections, did they acknowledge that the Soviets and also the Western Powers, after the War, falsified the documents, why could they, in confirmation of their {3754|3755} thesis, overtake documents which are so ridiculous that the scientist only shook his head about it? And you can put all these things together, publish it, and when that should not be correct they can answer, they can attack me. They can make trials and let's prove by the general, by the highest courts, and they are silent. Why did they do? It is not what can I do more? I can only present scientific [sic] publications, and when they are not attacked, then you can say, yes, they are so and so silly, that nobody necessarily will take them to knowledge.

Q. Is that what they say in Germany, you're so silly?

A. No, no. But I say you could perhaps do that, yes. And so that we don't be, we don't waste time about it. And therefore we are silent, yes, you can say it, but that is no basis for a scientific [sic] discussion.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Is this a convenient time, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 3:50 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand. {3755|3756}

— EXHIBIT "Y" (For Identification) Reference material – Udo Walendy.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Walendy, are you on the editorial board of the Historical Review Board?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you share that position with Dr. Faurisson?

A. I share his views.

Q. He is on the editorial board as well?

A. I believe so, yes, but I have no influence what is published there, and I was invited to be there, but I have not written there till now in that genre, you mean.

Q. You haven't written there till now. And were you a speaker at the conference?

A. Yes. I had been, yes.

Q. And when you mentioned that you lectured in North America, is that the lecture that you are referring to?

A. You are difficult to understand.

Q. I'm sorry. When you testified earlier about your lectures in North America, is one of your lectures, that talk you gave for the Institute of Historical Review?

A. Yes. Not directly the same as {3756|3757} here, but about the free education of the German nation and about falsified photographs [sic].

Q. Okay. And have you lectured on university campuses? Have you been invited by universities to come and give a lecture?

A. In Los Angeles, yes.

Q. What university?

A. No. Only by the Historical Review Institute. Not university. It took place in the building of a university, but I was not invited from a university.

Q. All right. And the lecture you gave at Milwaukee, what was that?

A. That was assembly. I was invited, I don't know the people and I don't know the organization. I was only invited by them.

Q. Do you know the other people on the editorial board of the Journal of Historical Review?

A. Yes, the publishers.

Q. Dr. Butz?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. And Ditleb Felderer?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. Dr. Weber?

A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Lindsey?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Okay. You mentioned one of the reasons that you didn't think Auschwitz could be a death camp or extermination camp is because there were a {3757|3758} hundred thousand people in the area. Were those hundred thousand people inmates of the camps?

A. No. No. No. The inmates of the camps, there is a number that is not clearly known because Jews were coming and prisoners were sent on other camps, so there was order not to come to acquaintance [sic] with the neighbours and the others. So that is very difficult to answer this question because surely there was a long-lasting typhus epidemic [sic] there and died a lot of people, and I can't answer this question exactly.

Q. So that does not include prisoners; the one hundred thousand people does not include prisoners.

A. No. The most of these people were free workers which had treaties with industry, and were coming from France, for instance, were free workers of Poland, were free workers of the Italians and some Balkan States, and German, and some were displaced persons from Russia or free persons of the Ukrainians, yes. There was a very mixed people, and the situation was that so-called gas chambers should be in the west of Birkenau, and this was just direction where the main winds were coming, and it's not possible —

Q. No. My question was about how many people were in the area.

A. And so one hundred thousand were working in the area and most of them were free people who worked there and partly lived there.

Q. And does that include S.S. and prison workers, military people or personnel, German {3758|3759} military personnel?

A. That surely was military personnel in Germany for the camps.

Q. Does that include in it your hundred thousand people?

A. No, but they were so — they were not so much that they will look for in that number.

Q. And was this an area that Himmler tried to obtain Reich ownership of the area around Auschwitz?

A. Himmler – if Himmler was in Auschwitz?

Q. No. My question was whether Himmler tried to get the ownership of the lands in the area around Auschwitz for the Reich.

A. Yes.

Q. Out of private hands.

A. Yes. It was sold by the Reich, by the German Reich, the whole land was overtaken by the Reich in the form of Dreihuntschaft (phonetic), trusteeship, in the form of trusteeship.

Q. So that land was held in trusteeship by the Reich?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they do that around other concentration camps?

A. Yes. The other concentration camps – I mean by that question the complex of the industry in Auschwitz, not only the concentration camp in Auschwitz, and in Auschwitz it was so as I said, the trusteeship, but it was not in every case so. {3759|3760}

Q. Was it in every other case but Auschwitz?

A. No, I can't really answer that question because I couldn't find real ownership relations of the land where the concentration camps were situated.

Q. So the people working in that area would be there courtesy of the S.S. who owned that district on behalf of the Reich, or in trusteeship for the Reich?

A. Yes. The S.S. had the command about, or the control of the concentration camps, and so it has to happen there, yes.

Q. Okay. Now, you said also that another reason why you thought that there must be some difficulty with this extermination of Jews, annihilation of Jews, is that there must have been some knowledge in the West, and there wasn't any knowledge in the West of what was happening during the War.

A. What you mean with West? What is West?

Q. Well, you cited some books by Gilbert [sic], by —

A. In the Western countries.

Q. Yes. Have I got that right?

A. Yes. I researched these books and went through these books and published, and in this book I dealt with Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Gilbert's book. His book is published in English and in German, too, and he analyzed the situation what did the Jews or the Zionists or the American Government know about this {3760|3761} Holocaust, because they founded a commission in New York in 1981 to find out these questions. And Gilbert handled with these problems and published things which confirm that neither the Zionists nor the Roosevelt [sic] administration nor the British had any knowledge and undertook any actions in respect to the Holocaust theme till the end of the War. Nobody, for instance, asked for a gas retaliation war against the Germans because the Germans gas these Jews. For example, they had no information, or no confirmation from secret services of the English, and the Poles, and so on, about these things, and therefore there was no investigation by themselves about these things.

Q. Doesn't Martin Gilbert, in his book – I assume this is the one you are referring to, "Auschwitz and the Allies"?

A. Yeah.

Q. Doesn't he spend an entire chapter talking about the Vrba-Wetzler report and how it found its way West and was published during the War?

A. Yes. I must tell you that in the Allied Press during the war, surely there were published things about the Holocaust. They were published in the New York Times, for instance, that the Germans had – that was in the year of '42 – that the Germans [sic] had already murdered and gassed two million peoples. They didn't say where and who did it and so on, but they published it; but they didn't believe it by themselves. They took no consequences of that knowledge. And Mr. Vrba surely he was a man who informed on the way through Switzerland, and Mr. Edna (phonetic) and Mr. Leichten (ph) {3761|3762} who was [sic] sitting there as representatives of the World Jewish Congress, they transferred the information to the British and so on, and at the end of the War, with the help of Mr. Morgenthau and so on, they had found a special refugee board where all these things were, for reason for propaganda and political activation, were published. And so in that case Mr. Vrba had special tasks to fulfil that political task.

Q. But that isn't what Martin Gilbert says. That is your analysis. Mr. Martin does not say the Refugee Board that it is a political board. That is your analysis.

A. I have not in mind every word what Gilbert has written, but refugee board, there is a connection with Mr. Vrba is imminent, known for every historian about this question. So I must refer to this. If Gilbert tells it or not, it is not so important, but Mr. Vrba has, in that connection, very important political task for the Roosevelt Administration, but it does not mean that what he published there and told there should be right.

Q. Well, you said they had no knowledge, and I am suggesting to you that was a report that was published during the War which indicates some knowledge.

A. Mr. Vrba published during the War only the situation that in Auschwitz were concentration camps, that in Auschwitz were concentrated industry complexes, and then he, as a witness, told what he have seen there and what is going on there. But just these statements of Vrba you can prove now by the historical {3762|3763} compulsions (sic) of the other connections which you have and witnesses any other possibilities if these statements are right or if they are not right.

Well, you must see the situation in 1944. I will refer to a document of the British Minister of Information, for instance. In the February of '44 he sended [sic] to all ministers of the publicity in the British Empire in order with a content that we now cannot any more taken the – we cannot any more be silent about atrocities which the Russians during their advancing in Eastern Europe —

MR. CHRISTIE: I have the document if the witness would like to refer to it. He can read it in English, if my friend is willing to show it to him. He seems to be in pain.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am always happy to save some pain.

THE WITNESS: Yes. That's an order of the British Minister for information. He said, it said: "I read with profound regret your address to the House incorporating your statement as to the possible solution of the Russo-Polish frontier dispute. Stricken Europe is looking to the United Nations for the liberation of her territories ..."

THE COURT: Yes. That couldn't be 1944, could it?

THE WITNESS: "In 1939 Britain pledged assistance to Poland in the event of aggression. By our declaration of the 3rd of September we did associate ourselves with her cause, although we could afford no material support. This declaration of {3763|3764} War was made when her western frontiers were overrun by Germany."

THE COURT: Just a moment. Is this —

MR. CHRISTIE: The document referred to by the witness, I gave to my friend. It is high lighted in yellow and it is dated February 29, 1944. If my friend wished to allow the witness to read it, then he doesn't have to try to converse in the English language without reading it. That is all I offered it for. I will re-examine on it anyway, so if you want to go through this ...

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do I understand that the British Ministry of Information, February 1944, that talks about Russian atrocity? I see.

A. "Sir, I am directed by the Ministry to send you the following circular letter: It is often the duty of the good citizens and of the pious Christians to turn a blind eye on the peculiarities [sic] of those associated with us. But the time comes when such peculiarities, while still denied in public, must be taken into account when action by us is called for. We know the methods of rule employed by the Bolshevik dictator in Russia itself from, for example, the writing and speeches of the Prime Minister himself during the last twenty years. We know how the Red Army behaved in Poland in 1920 and in Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Galicia, and Bessarabia {3764|3765} only recently. We must, therefore, take into account how the Red Army will certainly behave when it overruns Central Europe. Unless precautions are taken, the obviously inevitable horrors which will result will throw an undue strain on public opinion in this country. We cannot reform the Bolsheviks but we can do our best to save them – and ourselves – from the consequences of their acts. The disclosures of the past quarter of a century will render mere denials unconvincing. The only alternative to denial is to distract public attention from the whole subject. Experience has shown that the best distraction is atrocity propaganda directed against the enemy. Unfortunately, the public is no longer so susceptible as in the days of the 'Corpse Factory,' the 'Mutilated Belgian Babies,' and the 'Crucified Canadians.' Your cooperation is therefore earnestly sought to distract public attention from the doings of the Red Army by your wholehearted support of various charges against the Germans and Japanese which have been and will be put into circulation by the Ministry." {3765|3766} That is only one example where it's shown that the official politics connected with official atrocity propaganda to distract the public opinion, but the British were not the only people and not the only government who followed this policy, but the American Roosevelt Administration was going on in the same way.

Q. Is that what Martin Gilbert says?

A. Pardon?

Q. Is that what Martin Gilbert says?

A. No, no.

Q. Is that what Windome (ph) has said?

A. No.

Q. Well, those are the authors that you signed in in support of your position. They don't support your position, do they?

A. Those things they will be silent about, and therefore distracts the public opinion of these connections. But I have, as a scientist, to say that Mr. Vrba was in the War Refugee Board of the U.S.A., was working in the same sense with his statements there in the times of the end of the War.

Q. Was Vrba working for the War Refugee Board, is that what you are telling me?

A. He was. When he not worked for it, he was —

Q. They published his report.

A. Pardon?

Q. They published his report.

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. But he wasn't working for them. {3766|3767}

A. You can't argument about this as you like, but the situation is that his statements were useful.

Q. I see. And was there a conference in December of 1942 out of which there was a statement given in London, England, about the role of Germans to account for the annihilation of the German [Jewish] people?

A. Yes, but —

Q. Wouldn't you say that showed some knowledge by the Allies and some action by the Allies of what was going on?

A. They had no knowledge, but they made propaganda without knowledge.

Q. I see. So any action that they take, you say is propaganda.

A. During the War it's definitely proven that they had no knowledge, because they did act in a total otherwise as if person would act if they had the knowledge. They published this propaganda, but they did not act that this propaganda what they published would be real.

Q. Do you make any distinction between knowledge and action?

A. Yes. When I know that such things happened there, I act in a special form that can be proved that I have really knowledge of that.

Q. I see. Are you aware that — have you had any exposure to Churchill's private correspondence?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of correspondence Churchill had with Sir Anthony Eden about Auschwitz? {3767|3768}

A. Yes. He had correspondence with Roosevelt, too, and Eden, but —

Q. He called it the most horrible time of mankind during the War.

A. Churchill was not the man who was honestly making politics.

Q. This is his private correspondence.

A. Oh, maybe. Maybe. But you see that Mr. Bracken (ph), the British Information Minister, made private correspondence, too, in that way. That is not the proof that this is honest and that he has real knowledge about the thing. Mr. Churchill has, at the end of, the War, not praised God that the British has won the War because Germans are such bad people because they burned and gassed Jews and so on, but he prayed for God that the British have overtaken the German power. If Churchill would have had knowledge about these things, it wouldn't be necessary to ask the Russians what they have found in Auschwitz. The British Government had sent a diplomatic note to the Russians in the end of February. Auschwitz was occupied by the Russians on the 27th of January, '45, and they didn't publish anything about that what they have found. They were silent about these things. And the British asked them, please tell us, we must inform the publicity, inform the publicity in the autumn '44 that Auschwitz happened so many bad things, and now we like to know what you have find there. The Russians were quiet. They didn't answer in March. They didn't answer in April. The British sent a second note to Moscow and then Moscow answered in a short form, "We have found that in Auschwitz were murdered four {3768|3769} million people, but no English ones." So that is to say, "Your English people doesn't matter about that." But if Churchill would have knowledge about things what have happened there, it was not necessary to take such intervenings [intervention] of the diplomatic basis to Moscow.

Q. Well, he had enough knowledge to ask, didn't he; enough knowledge to know what they found in Auschwitz. He knew they found something there.

A. When Churchill would have had any knowledge about these things, he would have ordered to give the publicity concrete details to start a gas war against Germans as retaliation, because the Germans gassed [the Jews. For example, because Churchill was just the man who likes to enforce the bacterial warfare against Germans, also in that moment, '45, and he had no scruples to do that, and he would have ordered the British Air Force to bomb the murder stations in Auschwitz, but he didn't. He has no knowledge, real knowledge about these things.

Q. Because Churchill didn't order the gassing of Germans in retaliation he had no knowledge.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is not what the witness said.

THE WITNESS: Yes. He —

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a right to object, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please sit down.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a right to object, Your Honour, upon —

THE COURT: You have no right to {3769|3770} interrupt cross-examination like that. Do they not teach you that in British Columbia?

THE COURT: What is your objection?

MR. CHRISTIE: My objection is that my friend was misleading the witness. He also said that the matter of bombings was one of the reasons he suggested, and my friend suggested only one in the questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Proceed.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do I understand you to say that because Churchill never ordered the gassing of Germans, that you take from that that he had no knowledge of what was going on?

A. He had no knowledge, yes. Really.

Q. Thank you. Now, how many do you say were killed by the Einsatzgruppen?

A. Perhaps I can give a sentence yet in addition to that.

Q. Please.

A. There is no diplomatic correspondence between Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin. There is no theme of any Allied Conference about the gassing of Jews through the Germans, and that is the best proof that they had no knowledge about these things.

Q. How many do you say were killed by the Einsatzgruppen? How many Jews?

A. It is not clearly known, because the situation for research is not free for us. We have no possibility to go to, as you Canadians, to go to the {3770|3771} Baltic State to investigate as an independent researcher.

Q. All right. You investigated the Kohrer [Korherr] report, the statistical findings?

A. All these things are papers which were presented to us which you cannot prove if, say, they were made freely, if they were not falsificated [sic]. They are only papers. And when anybody says to me in the Kohrerr [sic] Report is named or is stated that there are so and so many Jews, several hundred, for instance, that was a special expression.

Q. Yes. And there was special treatment, wasn't there?

A. Yes. And I can't give you evidence is that right, is that not right. We have so-called real German documents during the Wartime numbers in these points, the numbers killed persons which, in reality, if you like to have the condemnation of that, there isn't no confirmation.

Q. And by confirmation you are referring to the mass graves.

A. Findings and perhaps other circumstances which proves these things, but that is very difficult, because Soviet Union dictatorship, and you have no free researching possibilities there, and it's not possible to rely only on papers about the thousands and thousands of dead people.

For instance, I will give you an example.

Q. No. You can give that to Mr. Christie, sir. I will take your answer as given.

A. That is – {3771|3772}

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will take your answer as you have given it. I don't need an example.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to suggest, if I may rise politely, that [w]hen witnesses give answers, they sometimes wish to give complete answers, and my friend shouldn't really say, "I don't want the rest of your answer."

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, I didn't understand that to be a ruling of Your Honour.

THE COURT: That is no ruling. I am indicating that the Crown can proceed. I've heard what you have to say and so has the jury.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. Now, as I understand, you've read the English version of "Did Six Million Really Die?" which is Exhibit No. 1 in this proceeding.

A. Yes.

Q. And your command of the English language is sufficient that you will be able to read that and understand it fully.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And is what you publish in Germany as close as you can get to an exact translation of that Exhibit 1?

A. No. I didn't print it. I didn't write the German and I didn't make the translation of the German edition, but it was all done in England by persons I don't know. I overtook them only, and that {3772|3773} is —

Q. But the German translation was done in England.

A. In England, yes.

Q. Well, have you read the book that you published? Have you read the German copy of Exhibit 1?

A. Yes. Surely.

Q. You published that in Germany?

A. No. It's English published that in German.

Q. I'm sorry. I thought this was a publication from your publishing house.

A. No. No.

Q. Do you sell this?

A. Yes, I sold this.

Q. You sell it, but you don't publish it?

A. No, I don't sell it now because my edition in Germany is ended, and the risk for me to get some new edition from England through the border, I got advised not to do it. It would be too, too ...

Q. Risky?

A. Not risky, but it would be better not to take this title, "Starben Wirklich Sechs Millionen?", because so many people will be disturbed about that title. So I said, "I don't like that title", and my edition in Germany is sold, but it was published in English.

Q. Published in England. And you imported so many copies and you had the right to {3773|3774} distribute that in England.

A. Yes.

Q. And have you compared the English copy with the German copy?

A. Yes. It may be that there are some improvements in the meantime.

Q. That is what I am wondering, whether there are any changes.

A. Yes, but in the last time I did not compare that. In the first time I compare it, and it was, in my point of view, not the best translation, not the best translation, but I had no influence about that, and maybe that he and the English versions, English editions which were published afterwards were some improvements or some changes, and so I am not up-to-date if every sentence will be the same.

Q. Okay. But when Mr. Christie asked you whether you are prepared to vouch for the truth of the pamphlet, which pamphlet were you vouching for, the German one or the English one?

A. It is the German one.

Q. All right. Are you in a position today to vouch for the truth of the English one?

A. Yeah. Do you mean that there are some differences between them?

Q. I don't know. — I don't read German. That is why I am being very careful in this area.

A. Have you a special sentence which you are asking for and I can tell you. I can give you now not real convincing answer that you will be content {3774|3775} about that, but give me at least a special sentence and I will tell you, and we can compare it.

Q. All right. Chapter 9, which is on pages 26 and 27 of Exhibit 1, is titled, "The Jews and the Concentration Camps: A Factual Appraisal by the Red Cross". We've read that chapter over line by line in this trial. Now, are you vouching for the truth of that chapter?

A. That's Chapter 9?

Q. Yes, sir. Chapter 9.

A. There is one, yes. There is a survey.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, there is what, sir?

THE WITNESS: That "There is one survey of the Jewish question in Europe during World War II, and the conditions of Germany's concentration camps which is almost unique in its honesty and objectivity, the three-volume Report of the International Committee of the Red Cross on its Activities during the Second World War, Geneva, 1948. This comprehensive account from an entirely neutral source incorporated and expanded the findings of two previous works", and so on.

Q. And so on. Excuse me, Mr. Walendy, I don't mean for you to have to read all that over out loud. My question really is whether you are in a position now to comment on the truth of the matters contained in paragraph 9 — I'm sorry, in Chapter 9, dealing with the Red Cross.

A. Yeah. That's a real translation of that. {3775|3776}

Q. All right. And is it your evidence that those matters contained in Chapter 9, if I can call it that, are all true?

A. Yes, they are true. I had special Red Cross publication in my hand.

Q. All right. And you went through it all and you found that that was all true.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And how many Jews do you say died from all causes during the War? I am not asking for an explanation. I am asking for a figure.

A. Please, I can't —

Q. I'm sorry, sir, I will repeat it. How many Jews do you say died from all causes during the War?

A. This number is not, cannot be really answered with any provings [sic] because —

Q. Is it less than a million?

A. No. No, I can't say any number.

Q. All right.

A. But they were registered round three hundred thousand Jews died during the War on different causes, maybe on disease, maybe on elder people, and maybe in the partisan war, yes. And maybe murdered, perhaps. I was not in these conditions to be an eye witness [sic] about that.

Q. Three hundred thousand registered Jews died ...

A. Yes. Not registered perhaps, but it is also perhaps not exactly figure, but if you sum up all the registered things, you will get these numbers,

{3776|3777} because just with the theme of youth you have special difficulty that Jews were partly taken as Russians or Poles or Czechoslovakian or Germans and not as youths. And so there are the possibilities to mix up these numbers.

Q. Who registered the three hundred thousand?

A. That was a publication of the International Red Cross which summed up all the losses of the European people during the War.

Q. Oh, what publication is that of the International Red Cross? I'd love to see that.

A. It was published in German newspaper Cann Statte [Cannstätter Zeitung], which was published in the very big circulation, and —

Q. When was that?

A. Pardon?

Q. When was that? When was it published?

A. In 1950.

Q. In 1950. All right. And this is the publication the Red Cross you are talking about, or reported in the newspaper?

A. This paper published these numbers as the official numbers of the International Red Cross which they had circulated in not publicly publication, but publication only with a small distribution circle, so called not secret at all, but half secret. It was not an official publication for everybody, but it was a circulation within the Red Cross Organizations. They published these things. {3777|3778}

Q. So you don't trust something like the Kohrerr [sic] Report where you have a document in front of you, but you do trust a newspaper report of a document you've never seen. Is that what I understand?

A. I can only say — you asked me for the figures, and I said I can't give you the real figures. I only have this publications [sic] as the only, as the single one that was published at all about these numbers which is half way reliable. This number you can't, I believe, also in ten years afterwards, not specialize, because the main things about this questions [sic] happened in Russian area and you have no possibilities to examine these things there.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Thank you very much, Mr. Walendy. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Subject to filing the books, I don't have any questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down, Mr. Walendy. Thank you.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a witness here, Pierre Zundel. He has been waiting in the witness room.

THE COURT: How long will it be, Mr. Christie? {3778|3779}

MR. CHRISTIE: I wouldn't think it would be much more than fifteen twenty minutes. I see it is four thirty-five. I didn't realize it was that late, but I don't think he will be very long. If you wish, maybe tomorrow.

THE COURT: I think tomorrow. Nine thirty.

— The jury retires. 4:35 p.m.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, just before we rise, I can foresee that perhaps there may be some reliance placed on those thirty-eight documents in the German language, and I need your assistance.

In the event that the defence intends to rely upon those documents and present them to any witness who may be called as the basis for a belief, I will want some legal authority, some case law authority as to why they should be admitted and so employed while they are in the German language.

I am just planning that now so that it won't come as any surprise, and any argument on it {3779|3780} will be made, of course, in the absence of the jury.

Nine thirty tomorrow morning.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 19, 1985.

FEBRUARY 19, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am prepared to call my next witness.

— The jury enters. 9:45 a.m.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to call Pierre Zundel.

PIERRE ZUNDEL, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, you are the son of the accused; is that right?

A. That's right. {3780|3781}

Q. And what's your date and place of birth?

A. Toronto, April 17th, 1960.

Q. And what's your academic background?

A. Well, I have a high school diploma from Neil McNeil High School here in Toronto, and I have a Bachelor of Science in Forestry in the University of Toronto as well. I am currently finishing a Master's in Forestry as well in that same university.

Q. How are you presently employed?

A. I am both a lecturer at the university and a consultant in the forestry and renewable energy field.

Q. And what language do you speak?

A. I speak fluently French and English and I have some German, although I am not fluent.

Q. And when did you graduate from the University of Toronto in Forestry?

A. I graduated with my first degree in June of 1982.

Q. And prior to the employment as a lecturer at the University, how were you employed?

A. I was a management professional trainee at the Ontario Hydro for a period of time. I was self-employed as well as a researcher under contract to other organizations. I've worked in the forest industry and for the Provincial Government in Forestry as well as in a factory during my high school days.

Q. What were your activities at university? Did you participate in the activities of the student body? {3781|3782}

A. Well, I am afraid it hurt my marks at some point, too. I was one of the governors of the University, and that required me to spend a fair bit of time, for example, on one committee advising the President of the University on his budget process, which was $280 million at the time, and as well as on the Planning and Resources Committee of that same governing council, and in my last year I was President of the Foresters Student Council called the Foresters Club, and that took up a period of my time as well.

Q. How did you get to be on the governing council of the University of Toronto?

A. It is a kind of a —

Q. An election process?

A. Yes, it is an election process, although in the year that I was there I was acclaimed.

Q. That's fine. What has been your father's attitude expressed to you about freedom and tolerance?

A. Well, I guess it's been more in actions than in talk. We don't often talk about a thing called tolerance, but over the years, as I've met my father's guests that he's had to his place and as we've travelled in Europe and places like that, I've met people of all kinds. I met once a Somalian Islamic scholar through my father who was a negro gentleman and who studied for a living the Islamic religion, and I've met Chinese people, Jewish people, all kinds of people through him, and he's never been anything other than polite with them, and why shouldn't he be? So through seeing him I guess I've learned tolerance in a sense. {3782|3783}

Q. What type of study and research have you participated in when you travelled with your father throughout the world?

A. Well, I can't say I was actively involved in the research, although I met all kinds of people, some of whom are related through World War II history. Thies Christopherson was one of the people who put us up at his farm in Germany, things like that, that kind of research.

Q. Your father has been involved in politics, is that right?

A. Yes, he has. My earliest recollection of it is when he ran for the Liberal leadership in 1968. I wasn't very old at the time, but I remember that was a big deal, and he's been, I suppose, in politics ever since.

Q. What parts of the world did he travel in with you in the course of your growing up?

A. Well, we travelled all over Europe I guess on two occasions, and to the United States with the main sorts of places, Scandinavia ...

Q. And how long has your father been publishing?

A. I am not sure, but I would say it must be somewhere close to twenty years that I recall, anyway.

Q. When you were in high school were you obliged to study the Holocaust?

A. Yes. In one particular course which was called a philosophy course in the Catholic Separate School that I was attending at the time, Neil {3783}3784} McNeil High School, we had a course which was based almost entirely on books about the Holocaust, the majority of which were written by Jewish authors, some of which were not historical books, but rather historical fiction. We had several movies that dealt with the same subject. "A Night in Fog" is one. Another one is "Harold and Maude". And the books were, for example, "The Pawnbroker", and another was, "Night", "The Plight of the Jews" by Andre Schwartz (ph), books of that kind.

Q. Were you aware at that time of what stereotyping is?

A. I suppose. If I wasn't aware before, I certainly was aware after I had read the books, because the books portrayed German people in the worse imaginable light, particularly the last book, "The Plight of the Jews", in which not a single character in the book shows a trace of humanity at all.

Q. How did this affect you?

A. Well, at the time I was angry that all of the books that we had to deal with in a course that was only marginally related to the Holocaust at all should portray the Germans in so bad a light.

Q. And what did you do about that?

A. Well, I guess I didn't do very much until I was asked to do a book report on Simon Wiesenthal's book, "The Murderers Among Us", and when I did a book report on that book I think what would appear to most people as ridiculous, the story didn't seem to hold together very well, so I tried to find out more about the events that Mr. Wiesenthal was talking about in his book, and that was my first experience in this {3784}3785} field myself, and I dredged up things from the Red Cross which showed that Mr. Wiesenthal was either not present or didn't recount the stories properly.

When I brought this out in the class presentation of my book report, the teacher stood up and told me this is not what he wanted and he would have somebody else do the book report again. When I told my father about that, he thought that he should —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: So far there's been no objection.

THE COURT: There has been from me. What the accused thought is not evidence.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, is not the accused's intent part of this trial, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I just apply the rules of evidence as I see them. If you don't agree with them, I'm sorry, but please proceed. There is no point in you and I wrangling. I will send the jury out if you want me to.

Now, please ask your next question. Let's get on with this.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Zundel, what did your father do as a result of the situation?

THE COURT: That's better.

THE WITNESS: He, I believe, wrote letters to the principal and to the teacher of the course offering his time to come in and give the class a different view from that which was expressed in the majority of the books which we had in the course. {3785}3786}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did any such activity take place?

A. No, it didn't.

Q. How did you feel about this presentation? What effect did it have on you?

A. Well, it seemed odd to me that because I went further than normally you would in a book report and researching a bit about the author and about the events that were in the book, that rather than being praised, which is what you normally do, certainly what I do when one of my students goes further than he has to, that I was told that this is not at all what the teacher wanted.

It seemed to me at the time that if even in a philosophy course which wasn't a history course, if you try to make a point based on false facts, then the point that you're making is quite weak, so this is one of the reasons why I was researching this stuff.

Q. In your experience with your father over the years, what's his attitude toward violence?

A. He is, at the most, one of the most non-violent people I know. He dislikes violence of any kind in sports or otherwise. He is a pacifist. He tolerates no one who makes violent suggestions, things like that. In fact, he never even struck us as kids.

Q. What's his attitude towards debate?

A. He has always encouraged us, as kids, to debate, if we thought there was a point to be debated and to look for information and to, in a sort of orderly way, ask questions. And I think that attitude has rubbed off on me and one of the main points that I {3786}3787} make to my own students in the university is that you need to always question what you read, take nothing at face value or forever you will be spreading other people's opinions. Take the facts and make up your own mind. And I think that was my father's attitude towards debate, and the first time I saw my father on television is when he debated with art critics here in Toronto in a Crossfire programme, modern art, and whether agencies should fund modern art or all kinds of art.

Q. Your father had an interest in art?

A. Yes. His formal training was in commercial art and fine art, so he has, over the years, he has always liked art.

Q. And how has he made his living over the years?

A. The majority of his living was made from his commercial art studio.

Q. Now, what is your attitude towards racial and social tolerance?

A. Well, I can only say it's good, I suppose.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Mr. Zundel.

Your Honour, with respect —

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw the question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How is the representation of your father in the media compared to your knowledge of him?

A. Well, it's varied according to {3787}3788} reporters and papers, but there have been times when the reports bore virtually no resemblance to the man at all.

I remember one article by Mark Bonokowski of the Sun who had wrought iron swastikas in the house and enshrined pictures of Nazi officials during the Second World War. I have been to my father's house on a regular basis and I never saw any of those things. So when I was in my grade thirteen class and saw this article and some of my friends as students have been to my father's place, we couldn't believe it. But there have always been extremes, and that is what is portrayed.

Q. Well, you speak of your father's house. You live in Toronto.

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How has this media presentation affected your family?

A. Well, we've had numerous calls from people in the middle of the night, three o'clock in the morning, threatening us or calling us names. We've had people who we know look at us strangely saying, "Is that really what your father is like?" or, "Do you really believe that?" or, "Are you the son of the infamous Ernst Zundel?" And that kind of stuff. It's caused a lot of tension, I think, for my mother more than anybody else [sic] because when we were still young she would get threats to our health, and I think there is nothing that would send a mother around the bend than threats to her kids' security. So it always made to some tension and some worry, and maybe that affected the {3788}3789} family.

But in another way we knew what my father was really like, so we could, I think, be a little bit immune to what the news were saying. We knew the reality of it, although we solved the lies. What hurts is when people you know make remarks about it, people who are your friends.

Q. What effect have your father's views had on your attitude towards racial and religious tolerance?

A. Well, I think a lot of racial and religious tolerance is based on ignorance and never having met people. It is much easier to be intolerant of something you don't know, and in meeting all these different kinds of people at my father's place, he had a photographer working for him, a Chinese fellow called Sylvester, who was very friendly to me when I visited my father's studio, so I learned from Sylvester what the Chinese people were like, and I learned from a Somalian scholar what the Somalians were like, and my father never tolerated that kind of red-necked bigotry that is based on ignorance. He has always wanted to judge people on what they were. If he liked somebody, whether he was Jewish or anything else, it didn't matter, he liked somebody, and I have seen lots of Jewish people in my father's place and it was the same with me. It rubbed off. One of my mentors in the university is a Jewish professor there, and my supervisor in my graduate studies is a fellow from India, so I don't think I have been adversely affected in regard to tolerance. If anything has affected me in regard to tolerance, it has been the treatment my father received at the hands {3789|3790} of the Jewish defence league and other organizations like that who won't tolerate open debate. That would inspire intolerance with me, not what my father did.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are my questions.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Zundel, you are out in the world now, obviously. When was the last time that you were living under the same roof as your dad?

A. Living under the same roof, you mean in a sort of permanent arrangement. I guess about ten years ago, eight or ten years ago.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have one in re-examination.

Q. How often do you visit your father's house and see him?

A. Weekly, at least.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Zundel.

— The witness retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: I call the accused.

—— {3790|3791}

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. What is your birthdate, sir?

A. April 24th, 1939.

Q. And where were you born?

A. In the Black Forest region in Germany, in a small town.

Q. And could you briefly describe some of your childhood experiences in Germany?

A. My first recollection is living in a very old house, 370 years old. Later on I was told that it belonged to my family for all those years. My father was very seldom at home and he did come home only on periodic visits because he was a soldier. And I had a normal childhood like millions of other kids in the War on all sides of the battles, and when the War ended, towards the end of the War, we suffered the bombing raids and the sirens going off and the frequent wake-up calls from our mother, herding us children – we were five of us at the time – into a basement air raid shelter, a bunker. And the house would shake and rattle, but these hundreds of bombers were streaming towards cities like Dresden or Berlin and so on, and I think that the most vivid recollection that I have is the cold, stark terror of the air raid sirens and the droning of these bombers, then the anti-aircraft fire, the searchlights in the sky, Allied planes limping back over the Black Forest area burning, some crashing. It was, for a little kid, a pretty frightening experience.

Q. What's your attitude towards War?

A. Well, I was just coming to that. The neighbouring City of Pforzheim was bombed. Twenty thousand people were killed in one night and we, of course, had been once again yanked out of bed and a fire storm was raging in that town that was twenty kilometers away. And we lived in this mountain valley, and there was this terrific howl as if there was a tornado going on, and it was the air being sucked into this town to feed the fires as if it was burning, and the sky was red wherever we looked from, flames as distant as twenty kilometers away. And that left an impression on me that I never forgot.

Then the invasion of the Allies came. You call it liberation. We call it the invasion. The French and colonial troops took over the Black Forest, our region. It is not a pretty story.

I had four sisters – three sisters at the time, and they were of an age when they were ready to be taken as the spoils of War, and my mother was alone. I remember that we were pretty frightened, everybody, and we were hiding in the forest and artillery shells were hitting the areas where we were hiding, and some of our goats got loose and some of our chickens scattered in the forest, and it was mayhem, and we returned to our house only to find out that we had been robbed of everything that was edible. And so we went to our neighbour's house for, I suppose, misery loves company, for a kind of community or moral support, and a French Army officer came in and he said, "Why are you crying?" He spoke German to my mother, and he spoke to {3792|3793} these French soldiers taking all our food and our belongings, and he said, "Don't you cry." And all the stuff was taken back. So some memorable experiences. And in the post-war period, of course, there was the cold. There was no heat. There was no food. We had to go to a church basement to school because the French Army had taken over our schoolhouse. School was on an irregular basis. We didn't have paper to write on. The one thing that I will always remember was hunger, and we broke out in sores all over our skin. Later on I found out it was nutritional deficiency disease, lack of protein and so on, and it was just basically a horrible time. And my father was a prisoner of war. He didn't come home [sic] till almost 1948. So here was my mother with five children putting up some other people who had lost their home in the bombing raids. So we were living in very cramped quarters. We had no proper shoes, we had no clothing. Our suits and pants had to be made from Army blankets. Our shoes, if we had some that were left, had been stripped of the leather soles. We had put wooden soles on them. We had to sleep two in one bed on straw sacks because everything else had been used up. If you had no replacement for anything, it's amazing how quickly clothing is used up. We had a few dishes and so on. It was just the scene of general misery, and things only changed after the currency reform in 1948 in Germany. And the French Army moved out of our schoolhouse and put back in the schoolhouse and life resumed some semblance of normalcy.

The rest of it is basically the story of any other kid. I grew up – I noticed one thing, that {3793|3794} in the inside front pages of our textbooks in school there were foreign language things written. Only later I found out that it meant a kind of a censorship approval stamp by the various occupying powers that censored all our text[b]ooks, even our mathematical books and song books, and I think that is an indication of what education that we children in Germany received after the Second World War. We were the victims of the occupying powers who taught us their version of history, and the result was that we became alienated from our parents. What our parents taught us as their life experience seemed like lies to us and fairy tales, because the teachers in the textbooks that we were given were reflecting a totally different reality.

And this made for many an unhappy home and a kind of tribalism between the younger generation. We were kind of sticking together, and the parent's generation, the older generation was separated from us.

As we got a little older, naturally, my brothers and sisters, we would ask questions of our father who had been in the War, and friends would drop in, and we began to realize that not all was well with history that we were being taught, that in reality our parents had lived and were eye witness [sic] to one version of history, and our school books reflected a totally different version of history. And this made me, certainly, realize that I had to inform myself somewhat independently.

I graduated from public school and went to a trade school because we had no money to finance our education, although I was one of our top students in our very large class of ninety-six children. I went {3794|3795} to this trade school and always had loved, as a young boy, to sketch and to draw, and enrolled in this art school, taking training as a commercial artist, because as the instructors and advisors to the manpower office told me, that there was no future in the bombed-out beaten Germany for fine artists. The last thing the German people wanted was painters. What they wanted was people who could put the shoulder to the wheel to rebuild the country, and in retrospect, it has turned out to be very sound advice that I got there. I graduated after three years from this graphic arts spec[i]alty school where we were at the same time working at a graphic arts institute earning our living in commercial art, advertising, sales promotion, stuff like this.

During that time I met, naturally, people who had been out in the world, a different class of people, professional people, and at my place of work there were a very interesting group of Germans who had come together from all over Germany, and my suspicions were correct that I was being lied to. And my recollection was one, well, if I am being lied to by what I had thought my parents' generation, and now I am finding out by the school books and the new authorities; I am going to believe nothing. And so I tried to strike out in an independent course, and this beginning and budding research was interrupted by a threat from the German Government which had just passed legislation to re-arm Germany under the pressure of the United States, and I was absolutely convinced if I had anything to do with it, I would never serve in any man's army, because {3795|3796} I believe still that the Germans had killed millions of people, especially Jews, just because they were Jews, and I thought the same generals and the same officers who had been responsible for that were going to be the ones who were building up the new Army which was true in many cases.

Q. Do you still believe that?

A. No, no, no. But I'll come to that. I decided that since I had no chance in Germany to [oppose] being drafted against my will to the military forces, that I would look around for a place in the world that I didn't have to be a soldier, and the thought even struck me that I could go to East Germany where propaganda broadcasts were coming that people could go there if they didn't want to serve in the Army, and kind fate prevailed and I wrote to Argentina, South Africa, Canada and Australia, because they had magazines all over Germany, invitations to young people to, in this, immigrate to Canada and Australia, and you were not going to be discriminated against, one of equals and so on. So I wrote away to various places, and when the coloured brochures came and the descriptions of the different countries, I chose Canada because number one, it had no army, it was the only country that had no army, and also I liked the climate.

Q. No army?

A. Well, no army that you were drafted to. It had a volunteer army. And this was the deciding point. And so in 1958 I came to Canada, and I haven't regretted to this day ever having coming here.

Q. And what have you done since {3796|3797} arriving in Canada in the way of employment?

A. I arrived in Canada in September of 1958, and little did I know that I arrived in one of the worse depressions or recessions that Canada periodically gets, but I was fortunate because my training apparently impressed some of the local people in the graphic arts business and I found employment within four days, even though I couldn't speak any English or French. And I got a very good job immediately and made very good money, went to night school to learn English.

Q. What was your job?

A. I was a graphic artist. I worked for Simpson Sears at the time.

Q. And what did you do?

A. Well, I did photo retouching, working for the catalogue department of Simpsons Sears, and at night school I first took English and later on French, but during the English that I took, I met a very nice girl and she was there to learn English, too, which surprised me, because it turns out she was French Canadian. She had come to Toronto to learn English also. And we met, fell in love, married, and I worked as a graphic artist for a while, deciding to go on my own, because I had this drive that I wanted to be a businessman for myself. My wife supported me. And shortly after Pierre was born, we decided to move to Montreal because I wanted to totally immerse myself in the French milieu in order to improve my French that I had taken in night school and University courses here in Toronto. To my regret I have to say that I never really did master French as well as English because {3797|3798} French just seems to be a little bit more difficult. And French Canadians, whenever you speak to them in French and you have an accent or you made grammatical errors, are very kind – they immediately respond to you in English. So it is much more difficult to learn French than it is to learn English.

I became a businessman in Montreal. For nine years I lived in Montreal, had a very thriving business, advertising for some of the larger corporations in Canada, which gave me such a good living that it afforded me to take off three months a year, sometimes five months, four months. I saved money frugally and then my wife and I, Pierre, would take off on trips, and the trips involved, at first, sightseeing, but later on it was basically an excuse for me to go to places, to meet authors whose books I had read, or about whose work I had found footnotes in other books. And I went all over Europe, all over Canada, all over America to meet these people, and I had a very interesting time. I will forever be grateful to this country to afford that I had such a good job to have such an interesting life.

Q. And were you searching for something in particular when you sought out these authors?

A. One cannot be awake and alert person living in Canada and America without being exposed to programmes like "Rat Patrol", "Hogan's Heroes" and things like this, and if you are of German background you know there is another German people not bungling idiots or brutal killers, you know there is something going on from all the media and all those books and {3798|3799} school textbooks. And so I decided to, once again, to in depth research with eye witnesses from around the world, and for instance, I went to England to meet a British admiral, Admiral Benville [Barry Domville], and people like that, also, naturally, German people who had been in the War.

Q. Did you learn anything in particular from these people?

A. Well, the first thing that I learned was that the heroes, my heroes which were kind of indoctrinated into me, meaning the Western Allies, were heroes with clay feet, that they had concentration camps, that Admiral Sir Barry Benville [sic] served years in a British prison, was treated roughly with cells in ankle-deep water, dungeons, that other Britishers had been interned, Canadians had been interned in concentration camps, who had lived here who were white, not Japanese, and had lived here for generations. So that was a big surprise to me. I had never heard it before. So that made me realize that not all was black and not all was white. I was beginning to mature intellectually. And when I finally decided to go to university to night courses to advance my education, I found that in Canadian textbooks that I was naturally forced to take, the Germans were depicted in a totally false, negative stereotype manner. And I have been all my life, I suppose, somewhat of an active type. When I saw that I thought that this wasn't right, because I knew that although there were Germans, undoubtedly, which had been cruel or were anything less than virtuous, the great mass of the German people were like the rest of the people of the {3799|3800} world, like Canadians or Americans, decent, law-abiding, hard-working people. And I did not want to be a member of an ethnic group or be associated with a nation that had such a bad public image. And I thought, what was wrong ought to be corrected through truth. And my research which I had done up until then led me to write to various politicians, to, in those days, the Board of Broadcast Governors, letters to editors, and letters to politicians, to public figures, to poets – I remember Irving Layton was one of them trying to stop the negative stereotyping and to bring out the truth, whatever the truth was. And when I wasn't successful in a kind of invoking the authorities which I felt were duty-bound and paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, I mean after all I was a substantial taxpayer myself, I felt that they should represent German Canadian interests also.

I then appealed to other German Canadians, and in a kind of ad hoc fashion we decided to have letter-writing campaigns, too, but citizens, action groups, or the kind of today we call them human right activists, too.

Q. Do you have a record of all the correspondence you made to what might be called authorities and complaints about the negative stereotyping with Germans?

A. In the beginning it never dawned on me that one day I might find myself a hero in similar places to defend my reputation. I didn't keep copies. I think like everybody else that writes to a politician, we don't file them and keep them in filing cabinets. {3800|3801}

Q. When was this activity going on?

A. In 1962, '63, '64, '65, but I have some letters, for example, to the former Justice Minister Guy Favreau, and later on, when I realized that this was going to be —

Q. You have a file, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. From people to whom you complained about.

A. Yes, I do. And then I realized this was going to be an effort that took a little more than I thought, and in my youthful exuberance I thought I could take Canada by storm and change it all and can go back to being a businessman. Here I am, thirty years later, slightly overweight, bald and still treading like a hamster in the treadmill.

Q. Have you given us the extent of your research in this whole topic?

A. Well, I could give you the names of authors that I have been to see.

Q. Why don't you tell us a few of the names of authors that you researched and met?

A. In the beginning they were, quite naturally, German, some Canadian, and some British, and later on some Jewish people. The first one I went to see was a frequently quoted author called Eric Kahlmuer (phonetic) and he published numerous books on the Second World War and Holocaust related topics, and I went to see him in Munich. Then I went to Vienna to meet a man called Verbelen who had been the Senior Spy Chief in Austria, and later on had been the Flemish leader in {3801|3802} Belgium, and he had written some fifteen books. He was very much involved in wartime history, and also in post-war European and political history.

Q. Did you have a particular interest in the Holocaust?

A. Not as overwhelming as it became in 1977, '78, '79, but I was bothered, definitely, like every other German, yes, by this guilt feeling that the German nation collectively should be responsible for the death of so many people in the genocidal programme. You know? That really bothered me. So I met a German author by the name of Arthur Hart who was the publisher of a small periodical, monthly periodical called, "Nazion Europa", "Nation Europa", and he had published a very short precise type article on the problem of the six million and was the first one to point my nose into the direction of other authors and other documents.

Q. Why were you interested in finding other authors and other documents on the Holocaust?

A. Because first of all, purely gut feeling, all the Germans whom I had met for the first half of my life by then, you know, they were not the types who would go around killing Jews. My father was no killer. He was just a soldier like every other soldier. And my uncle and my aunt's husband, it was just a perfectly normal common sense feeling. I've met hundreds of people since I grew up, and there is not one of them that looked to me or talked to me or sounded to me like some guy out of Hollywood. So I felt that something was amiss. And when I got older, a little older, naturally, I could look at this problem {3802|3803} a little bit more dispassionately and it led to this, first to doubt, and then —

Q. Doubt about what?

A. That it might not be true.

Q. What might not be true?

A. That the story that the Germans killed six million Jews was not true. I had believed it firmly till 1960, you see.

Q. Then you had a doubt; what raised the doubt?

A. First of all, as I said, the people that I met didn't fit the stereotype that we were supposed to have done the evil deed, and then the article by Arthur Erhart in "Nazion [Nation] Europa" and the interview with him, then the Karl Meier interview, he was a war correspondent on the Eastern Front and was an author of some fourteen or fifteen thick volumes on the history of the War in various divisions. I mean, if anybody would have seen anything, some of these people that I interviewed would have seen something. Leon Degray [Degrelle], Hans Ditrich Roehrs, he was a high-ranking medical man in the Third Reich political hierarchy, and I interviewed him for ten years about the extermination programme, and his experience is on the Eastern Front. Also he had written a book called "Adolf Hitler The Destruction of a Personality", in German, in which he analyzes the various medicines and doctors surrounding Hitler, what they had given him and what frame of mind these drugs and medicines would put a man into, and so on.

There is another German doctor by {3803|3804} the name of Fi[c]kinger (ph) who was a medical expert on the eastern front who has written a number of books on the programme of black fever which is a typhoid, and I went to see him and interviewed him, so —

Q. Where did you see him?

A. In Schleswig-Holstein in West Germany.

Q. When?

A. 1971 or '72. And I obtained his books, apart from a personal interview with him. So I began to realize that there was something that was not right with the Holocaust and it became a topic of more interest, but somehow it was also macabre. I was young. I was an artist. There was an attraction-repulsion about the issue. So I dabbled in publishing my own books. I had briefly helped this German author, Erick Ker[n]mayer, in supplying sections to a book that he published on anti-German propaganda. I have it here in the Court where I did the translating from English to German, supplied the photographs of forged photographs and also of these lurid covers on these men's magazines.

Q. You mention anti-German propaganda. What part did it play in your researches?

A. I think the more important one is to keep me going.

Q. Why?

A. Because it annoyed me that every time I turned on my T.V. programme or I went to a movie I liked, "The Sound of Music", a perfectly good musical, ninety per cent of the time, suddenly there is the whole screen of the Nazi swastika being ripped, or {3804|3805} Nazis in the most fanciful uniform get-ups chasing innocent people. It bothered me, annoyed me. So I was forced to, whether I wanted to or not, on a daily basis, to confront this negative stereotyping of Germans.

Q. And you accumulated material on that?

A. Mountains.

Q. And have you brought some of them today?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And where are they?

A. In those boxes under the table.

Q. And what was the offensive type of those negative stereotyping to you?

A. It showed the Germans to be all things to all men, usually an evil connotation. We were at one time cowards, criminals, ruthless butchers, romantic dreamers. We were the Colonel Klinks. We were the butt end of every joke, and I didn't like it. My father was a simple man, but a very honourable man, and so were my uncles. And the people that I had been trained by in Germany, my school teachers and so on, and I would not be party to such a blanket condemnation of my entire people.

Q. I would like to show some examples of that type of literature. Could you show us some examples of that type of negative stereotyping?

A. Yes.

Q. Maybe we could take a box of what you've selected and if you could give examples from that box. {3805|3806}

A. There is so much of this stuff that I will just select a few.

Q. Describe, if you would, the title and whatnot.

A. There is virtually a publication or a book or magazine or a comic book for every warped taste from sadomasochism to pornography in the outright sense. Here is one that was very prevalent in the sixties called, "Man's Epic", "Nazi Torture Cult Lust Orgy of the Wild Nymphs", and it shows these semi-nude women with swastikas on their thighs, German soldiers with swastikas on their arm, whips, man with dogs.

Q. Describe another one.

A. A similar one here, where Germans are putting women on electric chairs again after they have been tortured and so on. So these were especially for young men, men's magazines. There is another one, "War Criminals" A whole series of booklets in the series dedicated only to war criminals, and virtually every German leader of any note had pages in this book, including Rudolf Hoess, the 84-year-old man. "Hitler on Sex and Pain. Why Women Can't Stand Torture". And these things were sold, I did some research into that, to the tune of hundreds of thousands of copies, all over Canada, all over America and all over Australia. And there are comic books for children. This is some of the most insidious propaganda, and I don't know if you know that, but in America every month fifty million comic books are being printed like this. And if you want to look at those pages, there isn't one of these things here that don't show Germans as unshaved brutal {3806|3807} killers. And as a young father with children at home was naturally disturbed when Pierre would come home and trade these things with his friends. And there is a code that these comic book publishers are supposed to abide by, which is more broken than it is adhered to. So I objected to those things. I mean, there's just mountains of those things going all the way back to wartime.

On the contrary, what I have found on my research that the anti-German stereotyping has become more polarized, and is more vicious now than it was in 1941 and '42.

Then there are the other magazines where you get stories wrapped in what looks like an innocuous thing for a man's interest, and the next thing you know, they are talking about Auschwitz here – "Second World War Inside the Camps", publishing virtually all one side of the story only.

Q. Were you beginning to have doubts about that one side in 1960 or '61?

A. Of course I did. By that time I had met enough people, had read enough books and had enough balance. I met Canadians who had been in prison during the Second World War in Canada by their own government, for their political view, were never charged properly, certainly were not compensated for what they called illegal imprisonment. They were not Japanese. They were Canadian, Scottish Canadian, German Canadian. So I began to realize that there was a different side to the history.

Q. Did you think it was right that {3807|3808} the Canadian Government should incarcerate the Japanese?

A. I have studied that policy and it was as racially motivated, more so than of the German policy, because the German policy was largely ideologically motivated, and there were thousands of Jews who lived in Nazi Germany outside the camp but there were very few Japanese, I believe in Vancouver, and they were Canadian born.

Q. In your understanding of the allegation pertaining to the genocide allegation, what conclusion did you come to?

A. There was no policy of genocide by the Third Reich. There is no order for it. Even Professor Hilberg could not produce an order. There are rumours of orders. Somebody said that he heard that. None of these German writers who were part of this thing and have written books since and who live in occupied Germany where the laws are very strict on those topics and the research has to be far more exact than in the free-wheeling society of Canada, none of them has produced an order. Even today there is a standing order for a thousand pounds if a writer can produce one order by Hitler or one order by Himmler saying that, "We want to exterminate six million Jews."

Now, I lived in Germany when we had ration coupons, ration coupons to build chicken coops, coupons to buy cement, wood, nails, ration coupons for shoes. Believe me, anybody that said that the Germans during the War where they also had ration coupons and needed special permission to build an outhouse needed lumber for that, if anybody tells me that there were {3808|3809} hundreds of thousands of German Army personnel or Einsatzgruppen or secret police or whoever running around Europe in trucks asking for whole trains to be taken somewhere without papers to get the locomotives or the whole train assemblers, is perfectly ludicrous. Only somebody mesmerized by propaganda could believe in such nonsense.

Q. In your study of the subject has any order been produced to indicate a plan to exterminate Jews?

A. No. An order has been produced, and I have a photocopy of it, where Hitler says specifically not to mistreat any Jews because of the rumour mills that were going around in the Allied World. He was very sensitive to Allied propaganda.

Q. You have a copy of that order?

A. It's somewhere in my files, yes.

Q. And what was the extent of your study of the theory of the Holocaust?

A. I am almost like Dr. Botting when it comes to – you read one Holocaust novel, or one Holocaust story, and you virtually have read them all, because only the names change, the places change, the actors change. The accusation never changes – gas chambers, the Germans are guilty, they are the brutes and vicious. So ultimately, in your mind, it begins to contract into a big blob of one Holocaust [sic] story. It is virtually the same. I've got boxes of these books here – "Treblinka", "Doctor in Auschwitz" – the whole historical trend of history series – "Doctors of Death". If you want to, I can list them. It's an unrewarding {3809|3810} enterprise, and I think it's a sad commentary on —

Q. Why is it unrewarding?

A. Because it warps people and it agitates people to help other people. The intent of the writers, obviously, has to be that they want to make the Germans appear in a bad light, and the Germans are upset like I was and like I am that we are being negatively stereotyped. We ought to get on with living. This is 1985 not 1945.

Q. Did you get involved with the German community and other German people in Canada about this matter?

A. I certainly did.

Q. How?

A. I appealed to them in letters to the editors, in advertisements, and when I ran against Trudeau in public speeches, to help me help ourselves and help Canada in the process, because by helping German Canadians get a fair deal, we help Canada to become a better place. It's not a German thing that I am riding this hobby horse and be Mr. Superman German. It is not that at all. I think this country has room for a diversity of people and it also has the greatness that we can come and say, "Look, bad things happened in the Second World War["]". We Germans have forgiven the world a long time ago for the bombing raids and for the mistreatment of our prisoners of War, you know, and so my —

Q. His Honour is interested in your answer. Would you like to direct it to His Honour?

A. Well, that was my answer, really.

THE COURT: Excuse me, members of {3810|3811} the jury.

— The jury retires. 10:45 a.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I cite you to show cause why you shouldn't be held in contempt. I will deal with you at the end of the trial.

Bring back the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I understand what Your Honour means by that?

THE COURT: The record will display it. Bring back the jury.

— The jury returns. 10:46 a.m.

THE COURT: Thank you, Proceed.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What involvement did you have with the German community in regard to their children? We've had evidence of the children from other witnesses and from other people who experienced difficulties in regard to the Holocaust and the school. How did this affect you?

A. In response to my high profile, if you want to call it, German parents from all walks of life and from many parts of Canada contacted me with {3811|3812} problems that they had with school textbooks, with university textbooks, with some physical attacks on their children, death threats to their children in school, and I was like the unpaid ombudsman to these parents.

Q. So what did you do in order to help them?

A. First of all, I calmed them down, because many of them were near hysterics. Some of them had taken their children out of school, and I advised them to talk to the principals, talk to the teachers, try to get a line to the parents of the kids that had threatened them with cruel exterminators and stuff like this. I usually cautioned them not to take the legal route or take legal action, because children in school become very easily hostages. You know, kids get picked on in school. If kids, we come too stridently to their defence, I have enough experience in this to know that that is the case. So I try to use a kind of a conciliatory method of making some teachers see the errors of their ways, and some kids to calm down. And in a number of cases I was successful.

Q. I want to get into the realm of – have you explained thoroughly or to your satisfaction as much as you wish to say about the subject of anti-German propaganda?

A. I don't hope to get you into any more problems if I did something wrong with this display of this stuff, and I would like to know if – I don't want to run afoul of His Honour.

THE COURT: You are not running {3812|3813} afoul of anyone.

THE WITNESS: So we have looked at comic books which are very serious problems, especially for our children. We have looked at men's magazines which are no longer prevalent because of videos, but nevertheless, they were in the sixties.

Then there are other specialty magazines that misrepresent Germans, and then there are, I think, the biggest offender, apart from television, are pocket books.

Now, I challenge anyone to go to any bookstore and to look at the vast display of swastikas of one way or another that you will find in bookstores. I have a collection of hundreds of those books.

Q. Have you read them?

A. I have glanced over them. Some of them I read in detail. Others I don't because, as I say, they are basically the same stuff. It's what they call formula writing in writing circles – the villains assume a certain shape and names and so on, and the story virtually is the same.

Q. Have you read Dr. Vrba's book, "I Cannot Forgive"?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. How did you find it in relation to the types that you have described?

A. Well, I think he said it best himself, that he took artistic liberties when he wrote the book. I certainly think it was a long time in coming, an admission that it was an artistic work rather than {3813|3814} a documentary, and it would have been nice if he had said it some twenty years ago.

Q. I'd like to now move into the realm of your research, what you've described in terms of travelling throughout the world. Have you described all the people that you have interviewed in the course of your research?

A. No, I have not. The one man in West Germany who had a profound influence on me in the sixties was Joseph Ginsburg who publishes under the name of J.G. Burg, and he is a non-Zionist, a Talmud scholar coming from a long family of Talmud scholars, and he wrote a book, "Schuld Und Schicksal". The English translation of the title would be, "Guilt and Destiny".

Q. And what did you derive from that book?

A. Well, in it he reproduced documents about the Madagascar Plan and the official German policy of emigration, not extermination. And his book had a tremendous impact on me because here was, for the first time, a Jewish author that spelled out in detail what the German policy really was.

Now, he is not a Nazi lover. He was, himself, uprooted and interned in one of the settlements in the East and he was critical of German policy because the sub-title of the book is called, "Europe's Jews Between Hangmen and Hypocrites". But I met Mr. Burg. I corresponded with him and subsequently met him. He came to Canada to do some video film with me. I spent three and a half weeks with this {3814|3815} man. He was a guest in my house, and he has written some ten, maybe twelve by now, books on this angle of the Holocaust. And he flatly said to me, and he says it in his books, that there were no gas chambers in German concentration camps for killing Jewish people.

Q. Do you think there were, from your research, gas chambers in German concentration camps?

A. There were delousing chambers.

Q. What is a delousing chamber?

A. It is a fumigation room, if you wish, for clothing and for bedding and for blankets, some even for food, I understand, but certainly not for killing people. And also I must add that in 1963, as a result of my research, I went for my first visit to Dachau, and in four languages, three of which I could by then understand – English, French, German and Russian – it said, on a model, inside the gas chamber in Dachau where my French Canadian wife was standing right beside me, that nobody was gassed in the concentration camp of Dachau yet. We were standing inside what was called the gas chamber, and in the entrance hall to that gas chamber there were two books, thick books, guest books they called them, impressions where people put their reaction to the concentration camp of Dachau, and in that, in every language in the world, many of whom I couldn't understand, but certainly English, French and German, there were outpourings of such hatred against Germans after people had been to this faked gas chamber, to this macabre display, that I thought to myself, what an evil thing to do to the people of the world, because {3815|3816} many people are uncritical, obviously. They were all around me. They were almost in a kind of religious awe as they went through this concentration camp. And they were agitated to the point of putting down on paper some of the most vicious things that I've ever read. And I decided that somebody had to do something about it, and this is what spurred me on.

Q. What did you learn from your interview and discussions with Mr. Ginsberg?

A. That Jews were not treated nicely in Germany, that there was persecution of Jews – not all Jews, some Jews, many Jews, maybe – that they were humiliated, that their property was confiscated, that in the beginning they had to write their names in large letters outside their stores so that Germans could realize these were Jewish shops. He told me about the Crystal Nacht, the crystal nights with their broken glass, but he cautioned me not to be overswept by emotion. It was highly overblown, an event in Germany that very fewer people died than is popularly claimed, and he told me about his own personal experiences in the Eastern settlements where the Rumanians and others collaborated into putting people into those settlements, saying to me that they were worse off in those areas where they were not in concentration camps in Russia and Rumania and the Ukraine, because there they had some self-government, and many Jewish people died there because, he said to me, that they had forgotten how to survive. There were intellectuals, professors, stuff like this, and in the German camps everybody got maybe not good food, but some food, some blankets, some {3816|3817} shelter, some medical treatment, whereas in these areas where he was, the administration had virtually broken down and it was Jewish self-administration.

Q. Where was this?

A. It was in yellow Russia.

Q. Yellow Russia. Did he describe Auschwitz at all to you?

A. Yes. He said that he was part of a Russian team or a Russian commission that, when they were liberated by the Red Army, he went as part of this commission to Auschwitz in 1945, and he said when he was there he found no gas chambers. And I introduced him to the Toronto media. There were some police officials present, and he would not tell me the name of the commission. And when I pressed him on it in three and a half weeks, he said that he was entitled to keep that secret because it would be interpreted that he was a communist, and he didn't want to be known that he was a communist, but from what he described what he saw, I have no doubt that Joseph Ginsberg was in Auschwitz in 1945.

Q. Did he publish these things in his book?

A. He certainly did.

Q. And you are familiar with his book?

A. I certainly am.

Q. What other authors did you interview and persons who had been eye witnesses to these situations?

A. I have signed and sworn affidavits of Germans who were in the camps shortly after the War {3817|3818} and who they are too old to come to Toronto, but I had them notarized in Germany who installed some of these death contraptions, like the apparatus to shoot people in the neck for mass killing. And this is another big pillar of the Holocaust. Q. So they had instruments to shoot people in the back and neck, did they?

A. Built in 1946 on Russian instructions by these German engineers who are very much alive today and who took the trouble to write their experiences in front of notaries and sworn under oath.

Q. What do you mean, they were built during the War?

A. No. They were built after the War.

Q. Why?

A. So the Soviets could show the tourists who were herded through there and the officials, not like the films we saw here where the Senators were shown through and thought they saw a gas chamber in Dachau. It is part of propaganda. Mr. Walendy read the directive of the British Ministry of Information about creating, deflecting propaganda. Anybody over the age of twenty that has studied this stuff doesn't find this surprising.

Q. Are there other people you interviewed in your research besides Dr. Ginsberg and others? Can you name other people?

A. Yes. I interviewed a woman, Frau von Tonnigen (ph) who was the wife of the former Minister of Finance in Holland, and she knew and her {3818|3819} husband knew Seyss-Inquart, who was the Governor of Poland, and knew Heinrich Himmler personally, and they were high-ranking officials of the government who, through the policy of deportation went during the Nazi area and they had also known Hitler, and she is very much alive. He was killed under mysterious circumstances while in Canadian custody. She never heard any discussions of gas chambers in Dutch concentration camps or policies of mass extermination. And she is very much alive to tell me this.

Then I spoke to minor party people, because sometimes the lower echelons we have heard here in Court that it was not the high-ranking officers that the evil deeds, it was a kind of miraculous conspiracy that was started in the lower ranks by themselves, and I interviewed people who had been on the Western Front and the Eastern Front, had been working in Warsaw, which was the main railroad switching point, one lady in particular called Emma Schoenlebe who had prepared the timetables for the GERman [sic] railroad intersection point in Warsaw, and who would have had knowledge of alleged death trains.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And one-way trains and all this stuff. She said to me that they had plenty of trains going to various concentration camps, but the idea of them not coming back and stuff like this was ludicrous because there were constant train movements into camps and out of camps, and we had some of the eye witnesses here in the courtroom, and Mrs. Sabina Citron who was the lady who laid the charge against me in the first {3819|3820} place, she was taken out of Auschwitz to other camps. So it wasn't a one-way ticket.

Q. How do you know she was taken out of Auschwitz to other camps?

A. She told us under oath at the preliminary hearings.

Q. She didn't testify in the trial.

Q. [A.] Not yet.

Q. So did you do other interviews with people in connection with the Holocaust allegation?

A. Well, I naturally, everybody in this courtroom that was here has heard that I interviewed and collaborated with Dr. Faurisson, in France, with —

Q. What did you find out from him?

A. Well, those who were here know I got plans of Auschwitz, and I got his research on the gas chambers in America going all the way back to 1924, '25.

Q. Why is that, in your opinion, to your view, why was that necessary to examine that?

A. Because the same method of killing, allegedly, was used in Germany. And the same compound in the gas chamber was allegedly used also in Nazi Germany.

Q. How does that make it relevant in your view?

A. You know, science doesn't suddenly change, and chemical compounds don't change their nature just to please a particular ideology. I think that Zyklon-B, the trade name or whatever it is, the chemical name, will be forever that. It doesn't {3820|3821} change for Germans and it certainly doesn't change for Jews.

Q. But that still doesn't explain why you think the American gas chambers are relevant to the German allegations.

A. Well, I thought that it was very much relevant because it showed the construction and the care and the quality of a building, the size of a building necessary to kill just two people or one person, and it showed it at a time when the technology would be similar to what German technology was like, and there was some suggestion in this courtroom that today's technology is different. That's true. We have more advanced technology, but if a gas chamber built in the 1930s or 1940s in North America using Zyklon-B as the murder weapon can be compared to what is alleged to be gas chambers in Nazi Germany, I think we get a very good comparison of what is feasible and what is not feasible, what is possible and what is not possible.

Q. Why, in your common-sense understanding, why does the examination of the gas chambers show that it was not possible to do the mass gassings alleged?

A. The photostats of the documents that Dr. Faurisson supplied to me was that over forty safety steps alone that were necessary to prepare a victim for gassing in the gas chamber, to receive the victim, and then the cleaning of the gas chamber and so on were so extensive and has been borne out, if I may say, by later testimony by the chemist, Dr. Lindsay, that it is ludicrous to suggest that these Germans used this method to kill these people, as it is alleged. I {3821|3822} don't believe it.

Q. Other than Dr. Faurisson, do you know a Dr. Stäglich?

A. Yes, I do. He was a German anti-aircraft officer stationed at Auschwitz. He was a judge for the finance court having to do with tax matters in Hamburg. From what I can read, a respected member of his particular profession. And he wrote an article about his experiences, his eye witness account of what happened to him and what he saw in Auschwitz. Apparently the next thing the poor man finds himself without a job, his pension reduced, vilified and now stripped of his doctorate in Germany for telling the truth about his eye witness account in Auschwitz.

Q. How was he stripped of his doctorate?

A. Because the Director of the University where he received his doctorate in law decided a man who has such views should not have a doctorate from his university because by that he was dishonouring that university, and he was using the decree passed by Hitler, strangely enough, by Jewish academics to do it.

Q. You mean there are still laws passed by Hitler in Germany?

A. I am not an expert in law, but as I understand the German Criminal Code, it is virtually the same with few additions. It was the same that was under Hitler, and it was the same that was active under Kaiser II.

Q. So Dr. Stäglich has written on the subject. Have you read what he's written? {3822|3823}

A. I read the initial thing which got him into trouble.

Q. What?

A. Well, his experiences at Auschwitz that he was as an officer free to roam in Auschwitz, and he saw no evidence of mass gassings. And then, when he got into hot water and was forcibly retired, he wrote a very thick book, I can produce it in this court, of some eight hundred pages, describing, as the title says, the "Auschwitz Mythos [Mythos]", "The Myth of Auschwitz", all the convoluted ways that the judiciary and the press and everybody works together to keep this myth alive.

Q. Why do you think they do that?

A. Germany is an occupied country. We have a media which was and still is licensed by the by the Allies. They receive their licence under certain stipulations, and the stipulations were not to show the former German Government under Adolf Hitler in any favourable light, and to not publish a picture of Hitler in less than thirty screen reproductions, which means rather large dots, so that people couldn't use it as wall hangings. That's how thorough these Allied licencing authorities were, and that is a thing which apparently has quietly now been dropped recently, but up until the middle seventies Hitler pictures in German publications and news had to remove the swastika insignia, a German veteran could not show the medal, he has to wear a new one with the swastika removed because it is a two-year jail term if you display a swastika. {3823|3824}

Q. So did you read that big book?

A. No. I read portions of it because he writes, with all due respect to the legal profession, like a typical lawyer, and I have read the story before. It's —

Q. Have you talked to Stäglich?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. How often?

A. I have corresponded with him. I have telephoned with him back and forth asking some fine points. I had asked him to be a witness here at this trial, but he just had a heart operation so he couldn't come here. I have a very nice letter from him where he supports and also lauds my work.

Q. Have you discussed this issue with other people throughout the world and interviewed persons who have written on the subject?

A. In 1968 already I went to West Germany, and there went to the Government Office in Bonn responsible for the Ministry of German Units and took along some of my then smaller collection of German propaganda and pointed out to them the devastating [sic] effect it was having in Germany, in foreign lands and also on German sales of industrial products in Canada and America, and so on, and I had a whole afternoon session with the Secretary of this Ministry and some assistant secretaries, and we discussed the problem at length, yes. I mean, there was one remedial step that we hoped to undertake. I have gone to German Consulates, German Consular officials, press attaches, consules [sic], vice-consules, [sic] on the level in Montreal, certainly here {3824|3825} in Toronto and also in Ottawa. Usually they tell me that they are diplomatic representatives, and they are very tightly governed and regulated that they cannot interfere in the affairs of this country or host country, and it is much better if German Canadians fend for themselves and fight our own battles. That was virtually the answer that they gave me.

Q. Did you interview other people as to eye witness accounts and research in that regard throughout the world beyond what you've described?

A. I interviewed a writer who put out a book on foreign volunteers in the S.S., because many of those people are accused in this popular literature by the exterminationists that especially Latvians, Estonians were the killers and got them to do the dirty work.

Unfortunately the man has died since, but he published a book on the Germany's foreign volunteer armies, and in his research he came across the Einsatzgruppen, the work of the Einsatzgruppen, nowhere near to the extent that one Einsatzgruppen would kill ten thousand or thirty thousand people, but he mentioned that there were executions of a hundred, two hundred, three hundred even[,] partisans, even in the area where von Manstein was operating towards the Crimea.

Q. Do you deny those executions?

A. No, of course not. I am convinced that the Germans were ruthless, tough, certainly in the east where the Soviet Government did not adhere to the Geneva Conventions, did not adhere to the rules {3825|3826} of warfare, of the Hague Convention and so on. This was a gloves-off fight with a ruthless enemy, and I have done enough research into Soviet treatment of German prisoners, Stalingrad Army, von Paulus (ph) comes to mind, where ninety-two thousand Germans surrendered and only six thousand came back. The others are dead. And those six thousand which did come back, I've met a few of them, they are like the living dead.

So I am sure that the Germans were rough and that they did execute people, and I am the first one to admit that there was wrong done in some cases. War is terrible, therefore I subscribed to Faurisson's dictum that war itself is a crime, and that we ought to remove reasons for war through information.

Q. Just how many people can you tell us you've interviewed since you came to Canada for the purpose of understanding what happened on the Eastern Front in the Second World War?

A. If I say countless, it sounds like braggings [sic], but frankly, I didn't keep score in the sixties because I never thought it was important. I have some interviews in the last ten years which I have made, but not only in Canada but overseas, in America and so on.

Q. Are there any other examples?

A. Yes. I interviewed a friend of Menachin [sic] Begin's called Haviv Shiver (ph) in Washington and he is the man who told me about —

Q. Was he Jewish?

A. Yes, he was. He was the former Major of Betheba. I have a long interview with him. It {3826|3827} is on tape. I have marked it. And he told me about the activities of when they were taking over Israel, how they acted towards the Arabs, and he has since become a Christian, because he was so horrified and felt guilty about what this fight took and the brutalities committed in it. You know? Then I went to interview Benjamin Friedman in New York City, who is a very prominent Jewish manufacturer, candy manufacturer who used to be the president of Secretary Morgenthau. (Sic)

Q. You mean the secretary?

A. He was the secretary to President Wilson, and I have a two-hour tape in my publishing house of my interview with him, and it is a wide, far-reasoning interview touching on topics of the First World War, how it came about, the Balfour Declaration, how the Second World War came about, the railroad arrangements. He was a big influence on me. He was a very nice man and he just apparently recently died, ninety-six years old. He was a kind man and he was maybe one of the few that I met, he was Jewish, he became Christian, also. And so —

Q. What influence did your conversation with him have?

A. Well, he showed me that we had to live in this world together. By the time I interviewed him he was a man getting on in years and he had no animosity, and there was a quality about him which was almost — it was perfectly evident from the interview — and I interviewed a French psychologist, Professor Dommerque.

Q. Are these writers people who have published? {3827|3828}

A. Dommerque has written a number of books in French, yes. And they are small publications.

Q. Is he Jewish?

A. He is very much Jewish. He belongs to one of the most illustrious families going back in France. He was a resistance fighter, he tells me, during the War.

Q. Why did you interview [sic] him?

A. Because he had written on the Holocaust, and I had received his publication in which he calls the Holocaust a mensonge historique, which means a historical lie, which is the same thing Dr. Faurisson said. And I republished his letter. And I had difficulties with Ottawa to come to my support, and he made tape recordings for me of his viewpoint, and his independent research comes to the conclusion that approximately seven to eight hundred thousand Jewish people died of all causes during the Second World War. He does not believe in the gas chambers, and he certainly does not believe that the Nazi Government were in totality ogres. As a matter of fact, he had some, from his psychologist point of view, interesting assessment of some of the leaders at the time, which he shared with me in a tape recording.

THE COURT: Is this a convenient time, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

— The jury retires. 11:20 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment. {3828|3829}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury returns. 11:55 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: We were discussing people that you had interviewed in the course of your research, Mr. Zundel, and we are discussing the Professor Dommerque in France. Is there anything more that you learned from him that had a bearing on your opinions?

A. He also did research into the gas chamber allegation and population statistics and corroborated independently what Dr. Faurisson had told me about the situation of French Jews during the Second World War, and after the Second World War he —

Q. Where were these interviews [sic] carried out?

A. Some by telephone. Most of them in person.

Q. Where?

A. In France, in Germany, anywhere. Usually in these people's homes.

Q. Where? Professor Dommerque where?

A. Him by telephone. In other words, I would call him from Toronto, or first it would start out as a matter of correspondence, and then, when {3829|3830} I realized that I wasn't getting out of the correspondence fast enough what I wanted to get, I would call him and make tape recorded interviews with him.

Q. And did you obtain his books, his curriculum vitae and that sort of thing?

A. Yes. I have a signed, notarized affidavit when he gave it to me that I could present to this court, if need be, because his teaching does not permit him to be here. If the trial was held somewhat later, he had offered to come here.

Q. And do you know what his academic background is?

A. He is a professor of psychology, still employed in teaching psychology in France.

Q. Do you know where he teaches?

A. It's on his letterhead. I could look it up.

Q. Who else did you conduct interviews of?

A. With Professor Dr. Austin App. He was a great influence on me. He was an American, and once was awarded the medal of the Great Educator of Men. He was a professor of, I think, literature at La Salle College at one time, and he is retired and now dead, and I have many of his books and I have some filmed interviews and some tape recorded interviews with him. He spoke quite good German, so I made some interviews in German and other interviews in English which I distributed.

Q. What books did he publish?

A. He wrote a number of books on {3830|3831} the Third Reich, on the six million, one called "The Six Million Swindle". And he also came to the conclusion, based on in-depth research by himself with especially people within the hierarchy of the Catholic Church. He was a very well-known Catholic writer, and he went, for instance, to see Bishop Neuheuser (ph) [Neuhäusler] who had been a Bishop in Dachau, and he put these experiences in there, responses to him in these book forms, and later on also in my interviews and tape recordings and all of them come to the conclusion that life in concentration camp was no Sunday school picnic. It was terrible. There was deprivation and in all the things that we have heard from some of these eye witness people, except for the gas chamber. They talk about delousing, the methods by which they arrived, by which they were registered, but there is always one component missing, and that is always the gas chamber allegation. After many years of research he came to the conclusion that there were no gas chambers in German concentration camps. Then I consulted the technical engineer in the United States who published based on his research the method of killing inmates in what are now called gas wagons. These are mobile gas chambers, allegedly so, and he has done a great deal of research into automotive engineering, and he comes to the conclusion that in the trucks that are allegedly used for these gas wagons usually are Saur trucks from the firm of Saur in Austria that they basically produced diesel trucks, and in some of the films that we are shown, diesel engines, some of the eye witness accounts said these are diesel engines killing these prisoners, {3831|3832} and apparently the emissions from diesel engines are not so poisonous that they could kill people. He said it would give you a searing headache. It might make you even unconscious, but it certainly wouldn't kill you.

Q. Why is that?

A. Because one is carbon dioxide that is emitted by diesel engine, and carbon monoxide by gasoline engines.

Q. Who is this person?

A. He is an automotive and chemical engineer in the United States. Again he wanted to testify here, but he had other commitments. If the trial had gone on a little longer, he would have come up here to testify.

Q. And how long had you been in communication with him?

A. Three or four years.

Q. Had he written books?

A. Booklets, video tapes.

Q. On this subject?

A. On this subject. And I interviewed a Professor James Martin who was long before this Institute for Historic Review, he was the foremost revisionist, Dean of Revisionist in the United States.

Q. And his name was ...

A. Professor James Martin.

Q. Where was he a professor?

A. In Denver. I interviewed him in California, and I had read his books previous to that, and he talks — he is a scholar that has actually done {3832|3833} about sixty or seventy years of research into what is now known as revisionism. He was a very knowledgeable man on the work of Professor Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes who was a revisionist after the First World War, and he introduced me to this man's works, and he was also of the opinion that this unspeakable crime didn't happen in the way it allegedly is.

Q. Is he still alive?

A. Yes. He is elderly, but still alive. I asked him to come as an expert, but he is too old to travel.

Q. And what has he published on this subject of the Holocaust?

A. Numerous books on revisionism. Nothing specifically on the method of killing and so on. He looks at propaganda versus revisionism. That is his field of specialty. And then I frequently consulted, visited and interviewed Professor Oliver who lives south of Chicago and is an author of numerous books and was an intelligence officer during the Second World War, and he shared some of his findings about anti-German propaganda, especially which he had published under a nom-de-plume. Then Professor —

Q. What nom-de-plume did he publish under?

A. It was a very famous American writer during the War called George Sylvester Fierech (ph) and it stands out in my mind because it was alleged that Fierech was the illegitimate son of the Kaiser. So one of the names he used in propaganda was Fierech in conjunction with all the names. Then I spoke to, {3833|3834} corresponded with and certainly read over and over again two major works by Professor Dr. David Hoggan, and his two massive works. One is called, "Der Erzwungene Krieg" — "The Forced War". There is no English edition of this work. It is a book of over a thousand pages. And it details and goes in depth into the coming about of the War, what caused it, what forces were at work. It's a massive, interesting study. It was published, I believe, by Grabert and Lubinen [in Tübingen]. And he wrote another book called ... (German title), which is "The Unnecessary War". The title speaks for [itself]. He came to the conclusion that that War, Second World War, was totally unnecessary. Then Professor Charles Weber who was here as a witness, he shared some of his findings with me. Then Dr. Lindsey, who was also a witness here, the chemist who especially convinced me that Zyklon-B in the manner described in many of these Holocaust exterminationists' thesis books could not be the compound used in the manner described in the gas chambers. He shared with me and I still have the photographs which he took on all his trips to these alleged extermination camps in the East and I have used those in video films. Then there are some films —

Q. There is something I want to ask you particularly, if I might. Have you read the book, "Debunking The Genocide Myth" by Paul Rassinier?

A. Yes, I did, a long time ago.

Q. Did you study that?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did it form a basis of your opinion? {3834|3835}

A. Yes. I got after the French version copy because my French isn't what it should be, and I obtained the English version after.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT 69: Book "Debunking The Genocide Myth" by Paul Rassinier.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What part did Paul Rassinier play in your understanding of this question?

A. Paul Rassinier was one of the first non-Germans that got concerned with this question. Maybe because I am an artist, I am more into atmospherics. I was impressed that that man, who undoubtedly suffered in German concentration camps, was a French national, was a former member of the French National Assembly, was certainly anti-Nazi, that he would have the greatness, as a person, to overcome his own personal animosity and to exonerate [sic] the German people from this terrible thing.

Q. And did you get a chance to meet him?

A. No. He died two weeks before I got to France.

Q. I didn't intend to interrupt you, but can you carry on describing people?

A. Yes. During that trip when I had planned to meet Rassinier I met Henry Coston, a famous French writer, and he is possibly the best known, {3835|3836} call him the greatest French authority on Freemasonry and implication world politics. His specialty concerns the Great Orient Lodge in Europe.

Q. And are you aware of the distinction between that and the British lodges?

A. Yes, I am. I met him in Paris where he lives and still writes.

Q. Yes.

A. Then I met a Professor Dr. Otto Frederick, who is one of Austria's most renowned geologists. He has undertaken a study of all the stones and rocks and formations in all of Austria. He's gotten many awards. And he, too, has studied the Holocaust question, got into hot water over it and won two court cases, and he shared with me the information which helped him win the court cases which are part of the basis of my own thinking.

Q. Well, what is that information?

A. It's information which I have mentioned before, that there is a physical impossibility involved. This man is a geologist, a mining engineer, and he examined it from a scientific area and brought into it — he has three doctorates, that man. So he brought into it all his expertise, and he comes to the conclusion that no Jewish people died in the Holocaust [sic] as stated in this eye witness literature through gas chambers. He again, like anyone else that is serious about this question, does not deny Jewish suffering.

Q. Do you?

A. No, I don't deny Jewish suffering. It is a well-known fact. Then Dr. Helhuber (ph), an {3836|3837} Austrian who has three doctorates to his name, published on the human side of what war does.

Q. What did he publish?

A. Oh, yes. He even wanted me to publish two of his books. One in French and have one translated in English; but publishing is a terribly expensive enterprise, and I had to turn him down.

Q. Has he published already on the subject?

A. Yes, he has. In Austria.

Q. And what are the titles of his books?

A. Oh, you got me there. I don't, frankly, remember.

Q. What is his thesis, having discussed it with him?

A. He is a very strong Catholic. He chides me in some of his letters that I am not religious enough in my writings. He thinks I should inject more religion; but outside of that he thinks it's necessary that the job that I do, I do.

Q. What is his thesis on the Holocaust?

A. That there was suffering in the Second World War, that not anywhere near six million Jewish people got killed in that War.

Q. Are there any other authors or publishers?

A. Well, there is Ditleb Felderer that Your Honour has met and everybody has met. I went to see him in Sweden. I first heard about him on a {3837|3838} publication, I think it was the Latin Jewish Chronicle that there was this splinter Jewish group. Somebody sent me information that there was a Jewish revisionist who was publishing stuff about these camps in the East. That really aroused my interest and I corresponded with him and I got a book authored by Ditleb Felderer and David Cohen, and that led to an exchange of letters.

I then travelled to Stockholm because I wanted to see for myself if this man was for real or not, and I did a filmed interview with him, audio interviews in English and in German, and obtained from him at that time slides, maps and charts and firsthand information. I even brought back from him actual crystals in a bottle of Zyklon-B which he had brought from Poland.

Q. From Poland?

A. But by now the gas had gone out of it, just the carrier of it.

Q. What did you think was significant about his work?

A. I don't share his flamboyant style of promoting what he finds. He called me that I was a typical humourless German, too serious, and, well, that's — maybe that's true, but he impressed me most with him was that he is an eccentric, but he took fantastic photographs and risked a great deal to get these photographs, even jail, to bring this truth out, and whatever one might think about him, he is an incorruptibly honest researcher.

Q. What did you see from the photograph? what effect did it have on your mind? {3838|3839}

A. He has just beautiful colour slides of fumigation chambers in the rusty conditions that you can find them today in these camps.

Q. What camps?

A. In Auschwitz, Auschwitz I, II, Birkenau, Treblinka. Treblinka is not much left, but especially the Auschwitz complex. He apparently snuck into forbidden rooms and had very good camera equipment and came back with close-up photographs, and interestingly enough, these photographs of the fumigation chambers look very similar to Dr. Faurisson's photographs of the American gas chamber.

Q. Well, how is that significant to your understanding of the gas chamber story?

A. Because according to Felderer the Polish authorities in the camps don't claim that these were gas chambers, that they were fumigation chambers. And you can see the clothes racks and mattress racks where mattresses were fumigated in those chambers, particularly in those photographs. It is as if somebody walked away yesterday and just left every thing standing in place. An interesting component which I learned from him and had not seen with anybody else was the stained, bloodstains that apparently Zyklon-B leaves on mortar cement walls, brick walls and so on, he came up with extreme close-up photographs, and gave to me a sample of brick which he chipped out from one of those chambers. Now, I haven't had it analyzed. He assures me by this work that this was the residue of Zyklon-B that Zyklon-B causes in mortar and brick. {3839|3840}

Q. Have you had an opportunity to see from him what was inside Leichenkeller I on the map?

A. I did.

Q. Why is that relevant?

A. Because he had taken infrared photographs of this structure, and in the photograph itself you can very clearly see that there had been partitions, walls on the floor, on the side and on the ceiling. You can see very crudely-chopped holes in the ceiling with reinforcing rods pulled back. He showed me photographs of crematoriums not connected to chimneys which are on the outside. He showed me – I mean that man has just thousands of photographs, and I spent almost three weeks in Sweden, frequently going to visit him, and very seriously studying this. He showed me photographs of kitchens where even today you see these German field kitchen pots, huge pots, where food was prepared in, which I remember from the wartime in the German Army used to come through a valley. And laundries, Olympic-sized swimming pools.

Q. Have you seen photographs of that?

A. I have seen it. And it was a big surprise to me.

Q. Have you seen the Auschwitz Album and other documents that show Auschwitz?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And are you satisfied in regard to the location of that pool?

A. In some maps the pool is just {3840|3841} omitted. It's not shown. And I certainly didn't find any mention of it in the Auschwitz Album.

Q. In regard to Mr. Felderer's work are there colour slides of the inside of Leichenkeller I in Krema II in Birkenau?

A. Yes, there are.

Q. What is significant about that in your opinion?

A. Because, I mean, they are of such brilliance and sharpness that you can see every minute detail, even the structure of the wood and the concrete and the rust on the metal and the Zyklon-B stain on the fumigation chambers. There are pillars there in that particular photograph, very clearly visible, huge pillars about the thickness of a man's grab, grabbing around it, that weren't supposed to be there.

Q. The inside of Leichenkeller I, did you see any Zyklon-B stains?

A. No. In that photograph, that's the remarkable thing. There are no Zyklon-B stains. That's the one that is – are you referring to the one gas chamber that is now on display in Auschwitz today?

Q. I said Leichenkeller I, Krema II. Would you be able to identify these photographs if you could show them to the jury?

A. Yes, I could.

Q. And were they the basis of your opinion?

A. They sure were.

Q. And have you had instructions {3841|3842} from Mr. Felderer as to what they represent?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And have you called Mr. Felderer back to show them to the jury?

A. Yes, I did. I hope he can be here with us today or tomorrow.

Q. And did he have to come from a distance to do so?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. How far?

A. California.

Q. Now, what else did [you learn from Mr. Felderer's photographs?

A. That, to my big surprise, there was apparently a theatre in Auschwitz where inmates were acting out plays, and that there were pianos. You can clearly see the outline and shape.

Q. Do you know the work of Fanya [Fania] Fenelon?

A. Peripherally, yes.

Q. What is it about?

A. About her life as a pianist.

Q. And is she Jewish?

A. Yes.

Q. And are you aware of the existence of an orchestra in Auschwitz?

A. Yes.

Q. And are they in the revisionist literature?

A. No. In Washington, D.C. I had files that I had researchers go to. One of them is {3842|3843} called Durfelder (ph) file. And that file talks about the whole Auschwitz area, Monowitz and so on, and there are very good black and white photographs of bands, male bands, female bands.

Q. What do you mean, "bands"?

A. Well, orchestras.

Q. Musical

A. Musical bands.

Q. Are these supposed to be S.S. men?

A. No. These were largely inmates, musicians who were inmates.

Q. What else did you learn from Dittlieb Felderer's pictures?

A. Not from Felderer's pictures. They are photographs in there of the very latest x-ray equipment. One of them even has a person lying on it, a very healthy-looking person, and there is even one photograph of a fencing match going on, where it says, "Auschwitz Monowitz Fencing Club", or whatever, in the background.

Q. These are in the archives where?

A. In Washington, D.C. And there is also a menu in there, the daily menu broken down in calories, and the composition of each meal, which I would say is as good as any meal that we could get in a cafeteria today, maybe not quite as large portions as we are used to in Canada, but it was a good meal with soups, mashed potatoes, carrots, even some meat, coffee.

Q. You heard the evidence of Mr. Vrba on the issue of drinking coffee at Wetzler's {3843|3844} mortuary shack. Have you examined the maps to see if such buildings existed?

A. I couldn't find the mortuary shack.

Q. Okay. Have you looked at maps of Auschwitz-Birkenau?

A. Yes, I have, but I certainly don't claim to be an expert map reader, believe me.

Q. Now, are there any other people you consulted?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Is there anything else you derived from Dittlieb Felderer, first of all?

A. Well, there is one more item which I learned from him, and that is his analysis of the Swedish book, "The Diary of Anne Frank", which was published later on in the United States, and it is interesting that his work seemed to parallel the work of Dr. Faurisson; both apparently were unaware of one another's interest in this thing, at least the ongoing research, and I was interested, naturally, in it myself because an attorney whom I employed in West Germany for some cases in West Germany, he handled the Ernst Roemer case, and it is during the Ernst Roemer case in the investigation that it came out that the Diary of Anne Frank, at least the pages that were examined by the forensic branch of the German Bundis (ph) Kriminal [Bundeskriminalamt] which is similar to the FBI Criminal Lab, they had travelled to Switzerland. Otto Frank had died by this time, and the Anne Frank Foundation apparently had taken over the estate and Otto Frank never allowed, to my {3844|3845} knowledge, people to actually analyze the pages of the diary.

Q. Well, getting to the point, what was the conclusion?

A. Well, the conclusion was that many of the additions in the diary were made in ballpoint pen and ink which only became available in 1951.

Q. Well, who did that analysis that you know of?

A. The West German Government, Forensic Criminal Police.

Q. And where was it used?

A. In the Ernst Roemer case in Hamburg. Der Spiegel, the German news weekly published an almost two-page article about that also.

Q. When?

A. In 1981.

Q. And other than that, in respect to the Anne Frank Diary, what was your conclusion respecting the Anne Frank Diary from what you now know?

A. Well, for me the forensic study of the actual pages by the German police who had no interest to falsify or corroborate but just at the order of the Court in Hamburg to analyze the stuff, that was the piece de la resistance. As far as I was concerned that was proof that a literary fraud had been committed. We don't know who the person is that committed it, but we do know that we have handwritten analysis in another court case by a graphic expert, handwriting expert called Becker in a case in 1960, and she analyzed all loose leaves as well as the books of the Anne Frank Diary and {3845|3846} she came to the conclusion that the loose leaves, plus the additions, plus the two books of chaos (ph) they call them, like pads, that they were one and the same writer.

Now, if the additions were made in 1951 with a ballpoint pen, it does mean that this girl did not die, or she did not write the diary. Whoever wrote the diary did it in 1961 in some parts and still very much alive in 1951.

Q. So there's part of the reference to the Anne Frank Diary in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", isn't there?

A. There is, but I concede that there is an error in that part of the story about Anne Frank.

Q. Were you aware of this at the time?

A. Not when I published it, no.

Q. What is the error in regard to that?

A. Well, Harwood erroneously believed that Meyer Levine had written the Diary of Anne Frank. He did no such thing. He just wrote a stage adaptation of the play, and Otto Frank wasn't too happy about the way it turned out, gave it to somebody else. That is the story, at least as I have pieced it since, and since he wasn't happy with the story, he didn't think it was his job to pay for it. So there was a dispute about the sum of money involved, and that is what the court case was.

Q. Does that affect your opinion on {3846|3847} the substance of the book itself, Anne Frank's Diary?

A. Not really, no, because the forensic study by the West German police nails it down as being a fraud.

Q. So how would you describe the Harwood reference to the Anne Frank Diary in relation to the truth or falsity?

A. It's an error, but it was an honest error.

Q. Was the statement about the Anne Frank Diary being a hoax a false statement?

A. No. That statement stands, and I stand by that, naturally, but the picture about the Meyer Levine thing was an error.

Q. When did you become aware of that?

A. I believe I became aware of that certainly after I published it, you know. I don't recall exactly when it was.

Q. You've had a lot of research done into the details of the book "Did Six Million Really Die?". Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. How many people have you employed or had help from to check the facts alleged in that booklet?

A. I had been involved in a study of this topic for a long time, and I had planned to write something on this topic, but always held back because it's such a distasteful subject to me. And I just couldn't get myself to write it, and then I heard {3847|3848} of a booklet in Europe called, "Did Six Million Really Die?" out of England. I wrote to the publisher, got a copy of the booklet in English. Then I received one in French, in Dutch, in Flemish. There were later editions in Swedish, in Finnish, in German I already said. I think there is one in Hungarian, and one in Rumanian. I saw at that time before I ever thought of publishing it four or five different languages of this booklet, so I naturally read through this booklet and I thought that it was in a nice condensed form virtually what I had intended to write myself, because I thought something like that should be written. Most of the revisionist literature of the day, like Rassinier, fairly thick tones, and I have learned one thing being in the graphic arts, that people like to read less and less, especially serious stuff. So I felt this was a good vehicle, of the best that I had seen. And Dr. App with whom I was at that time working and had been selling some of his publications, "The Six Million Swindle", for instance, and another booklet called, "A Straight Look at the Third Reich", and Christopherson's booklet, "The Auschwitz Lie", I thought that the Harwood booklet was superior to all the three or four which was selling at the time.

Q. Why?

A. Because it was a handy form. It had pictures in it. It was more complete, more well-rounded, and so I began to import it from England. But I found that these English people were very sloppy businessmen and certainly couldn't wrap a parcel decently. The thing would always come to Canada in {3848|3849} shreds. So it was impossible to sell it. And I was giving it away to newspaper people and so on. And ultimately, in the end, I got myself an American source to purchase it from an American source that has since been reprinted in America. It certainly matched the German version that I had also gotten hold of, and then there was this bruhaha about the Attorney General from British Columbia saying that I was a hate mongerer, the newspaper stories published in the back, and I was called some rather non-complimentary names at the time in a press story, and I was besieged by media people in writing this story called, "Firm Aiding hate Racists", — and then panicked and I thought, since the Attorney General of Ontario was asked to lay charges against me under the Criminal Code —

Q. When was this?

A. In the eighties, I think. Maybe late seventies, early eighties. And so I thought, if I am going to be closed down as a publishing house for distributing [sic] this stuff, I'd better bet one more chance of showing to the people of Canada, the media, politicians, clergymen and so on what this booklet was all about because I didn't think it was hate literature.

So you read in here the introduction and the last ten pages, the only thing in this booklet that I have contributed is the words, "Truth at last Exposed", a little self-promotion over here, the story of my life over here, then, to all Canadian lawyers and media representatives. This page. The last page, and the back page. I had contacted the publisher of the Harwood booklet thinking I could put out a Canadian {3849|3850} edition, and he would not permit me to change one comma, one picture or anything.

So what you are seeing, what is hanging down here has been reproduced in the offset process using photography to make offset plates. I had absolutely nothing to do with the content of this booklet except that, of course, I paid the printer to print it for me, and I paid the postman and the postage and so on to send it out to me.

Q. On the basis of what you heard and all the research, do you think there is anything wrong with the contents that you described?

A. Well, the Meyer Levine thing is wrong, and Mr. Griffiths pointed out that I overlooked things in the Red Cross Report which I can explain. I don't know if this is the time or the moment.

Q. I ask you if you stand by what was printed.

A. Ninety-nine per cent of this publication is as good today as it was ten years ago when it was written. It is flawed, as Mr. Walendy said yesterday, because there has been so much new material that has come on the market since that time. He can say that. He is a full time publisher, researcher, writer and academic in this field. I am an artist, really not interested in writing one more booklet about the Holocaust. I took somebody else's writings and today I find myself here because the man most likely made some sloppy errors in the Red Cross Report thing and the Meyer Levine story. {3850|3851}

Q. What other sources did you research? Ditleib Felderer did the last —

A. Well, the story of Anne Frank, the attorney —

Q. Well, what about authors?

A. Authors. Some of the people I was going to mention are people whom I have obtained what I consider unimpeachable witness accounts, German eye witness accounts of our side of what happened inside those camps.

Q. Can you name the name of those? Were they published at all? You haven't mentioned Thies Christopherson.

A. Yeah. Thies Christopherson is one of them. Then I interviewed for part of my story on Frank Walus, and this fellow Demjunjak [Demjanjuk], a fellow called Reis. He was a German official during the War. His job was to issue identity cards, apparently, in this camp. And he came to Toronto and I interviewed him here in Toronto.

Q. And did he indicate the existence of gas chambers to you?

A. No, he certainly did not.

Q. What was his view on that?

A. Well, he says he was there, and he's at a loss to explain how something like that could have happened under his very nose for all the time that he was there. He denied flatly to me that he saw anything of the sort.

Q. Anything of what sort?

A. Gas chambers. {3851|3852}

Q. Did you inquire about any other methods of mass extermination from him?

A. No, because I knew his function. He was a paymaster in the Treblinka office, and I mean, I don't think that anybody except shortly after the War claimed electrocution and steam killing, but this is so far out and ludicrous that in 1985 nobody believes in it, and I wouldn't have embarrassed the man asking him.

Q. Who else did you interview?

A. Rudolf [Rudolph] who was a member, a former member of (German phrase), that's like the security service, and he was an interpreter and sometime interrogator in the (German phrase) office in Krakow which was directly under the Governor, and he himself had been in Polish concentration camps shortly after the War, certainly where some of the camps were which the Germans took over. He never saw any gas chambers or heard of any gas chambers.

Q. Have you met with and talked with a Dr. Butz?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. How many times have you met with him?

A. Four times.

Q. Have you read his book?

A. I have read his book.

Q. What is the thesis of his book?

A. Yes, I know the thesis of his book. I found the book, from my own taste, somewhat dry and statistical. It is a somewhat boring book, but {3852|3853} nevertheless the thesis of the book stands.

Q. What is the thesis?

A. It is that in no way did the Germans exterminate six million Jews by using gas to do it in gas chambers as described in the popular literature.

Q. What does he do in the examination of that thesis?

A. There is an appendix. The book is over there. Page after page after page of footnotes and documentation. I know that the opponents of Dr. Butz are calling him non-scientific and slipshod researcher and so on. I would have to say that that book is well-researched. It is only a university professor could love it.

Q. So you take a certain amount of pride in your publications, I gather.

A. Contrary to what Dr. Walendy said yesterday, that I am a non-serious type because of my few adventures into flying saucers – I admit freely that I have written a number of flying saucer books; I think they were quite funny and successful and did exactly the job that I designed them for – what I publish myself in my publishing house is a small publication. Here is a newsletter which is two and a half pages thick, if you want, sometimes more, sometimes ten pages or fifteen pages on a regular basis. I make absolutely no pretense to be the greatest revisionist writer, researcher or publisher. I am not nearly as serious as Dr. Walendy was or Dr. Butz. I made no such claims. All I am interested in is finding a tool, a {3853|3854} simple tool that people can read to oppose all this anti-German stuff. And the day that I have been successful that I have brought balance into the picture of the Second World War and make the Germans fess up to exactly what they did – no more, no less if I have achieved that, then I will retire and I will be out of trouble. Believe me. I am not a passionate publisher that likes to see his name in print. That is not my intention at all.

Q. What kind of a tool do you think that the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is?

A. It is simple, plain English for common sense people. It has pictures in it, because publishers know today that the attention span has been ruined by television, so ...

Q. Is it the truth?

A. Is it the truth?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe that this book is the truth with one or two honest errors.

Q. Now, who else did you discuss the question of the Holocaust with?

A. Well, one Jewish man, Max Lipson, who had me on his programme lots of times.

Q. I mean research.

A. Oh, research. Excuse me. He is Rabbi Elmer Burger of the American Council for Judaism. He gave me a number of insights on Zionism, because Zionism is very much part of the Holocaust legend.

Q. Why? {3854|3855}

A. Because Zionism is the chief beneficiary of the Holocaust legend. Financially, propagandistically, politically – even, to a certain amount, morally – they seem to have a copyright [sic] on pain because of this propaganda. So I sought our Rabbi Alma Burger because he had published formerly in the Toronto Sun in his publication called "Current Events and Issues", Jewish issues in 1968. And that fascinated me, so I travelled to New York and interviewed Rabbi Burger who I've met since. He is the one that, for the first time, made very clear to me what the difference is between Judaism and Zionism. His particular philosophy of life and the people that he represent[s] is that they are Americans first and foremost, and Jews by religion, whereas the Zionists are Jews first, at least that is the way I understand it, and virtually to the exclusion of anything else. They happen to reside [sic] in a different country, but their first loyalty is to Zionist tenets, Zionist goals, Zionist politics, and he felt it was a dangerous ideology because it questioned in the eyes of the general public the loyalty of Jews living in America or in Canada.

Q. And what does the State of Israel have to do with the Holocaust?

A. The State of Israel, since its foundation, some people even say it was only founded because there was a Holocaust because the Allied occupying powers in Europe, for instance, especially Britain, felt that the Jews needed a homeland, you know, and so one of the chief tools and argument, if you peruse {3855|3856} the newspapers and magazines of the Time and History books about it, is that these Jews were homeless and they were victimized by all in Europe and they needed a place where they could go and be safe and be in safety, and so it came up as an aftermath to World War II.

It is interesting that when Israel had been created, the question came up of reparations. Now, this is according to my source, Ginsberg, and Menachin [sic] Begin later on Premier of Israel, stormed out of the Knessit [sic] when there was a question of accepting money from Germany in reparations. It was quite a small sum at the time, but he didn't want money. He called it blood money at that time. But things changed. Germany became, got back on its feet, became prosperous again, and then a delegation of Israeli leaders came to Bonn and negotiated a deal with Konrad Adenauer's government, and it found its official sanction in the Treaty of Luxembourg where Germany, for the first time since 1945 officially, a German Government, even if it was only West Germany, but a German Government admitted under the signature of one of its Chancellors, Konrad Adenauer, that the Germans had killed quote millions of Jews. Never before had that been written down anywhere. Not just one million or three million, but that great number, millions of Jews.

Based on that, the German Government promised to give sizeable [sic] reparations to the State of Israel, a transfer of technology, ships for the Israeli merchant navy, build transmission lines, housing, harbour, streets, and so on, in Israel proper. And this reparation is, as one has to call it, Dr. Hilberg gave a {3856|3857} good definition – I think it was him – it was indemnification, and there was reparations and restitution. This whole complex the German people have paid, and I think it will come as a surprise to many people that over a hundred billion German marks – now, a hundred billion German marks is the gross national product of many a state. It is a huge sum of money. And one of the reasons why I say what I say and do what I do is that intellectual writers and historians have accused the German people of being directly responsible about the troubles in the Middle East and all the deaths caused in that region, because we spend money so freely to this particular state which then turns around and uses some of that money to go to war against its Arab neighbours, and once again the German people stand accused of being responsible for murder and war because of the money that we so freely payout without strings attached.

Q. Have you been involved in the Walus case?

A. In the Walus case?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Why?

A. Frank Walus was a farm worker in Germany during the Second World War. The people who were in this courtroom saw him. He is a simple man with Grade 3 education. He is not very much more literate in German than he is in English. I had pity on him, and when he was pounded upon by Simon Wiesenthal {3857|3858} I thought it was disgusting, and I thought I should come to his aid, and I did. I helped him with research. I helped him with money and I published a long expos of his case in my newsletter which I distributed to thousands and thousands of addresses all over the world appealing for help, for finances, that this man could get justice. And I am proud that I did.

Q. Did any help come? Did you send that information to the media?

A. I certainly did. Worldwide.

Q. Was there any coverage of his case at the time?

A. Yes, there was. The Toronto Sun in Toronto locally had an article on Frank Walus, quite a good article.

Q. Were you aware also of the Finta case?

A. Yes. The Toronto Sun did a feature article, two-page spread on this case, and Dick Jackman was the writer for whom I have great respect, and I know that he is a man who goes to the source, and he had double-checked the story back and forth, and —

Q. Why is this relevant to your concerns about the Holocaust?

A. Because basically the same people that brought me here today, namely the Holocaust Remembrance Association, were the driving force behind causing Finta's problem. Ultimately it was Wiesenthal who was responsible for Walus' problem. My problems did get abused by Simon Wiesenthal writing to Robert Kaplan, which cost me one {3858|3859} year's postal privilege. So that's true, yes. There was an involvement there, yes.

Q. Are you aware of any continuing involvement from that source, even here, today?

A. Simon Wiesenthal frequently publishes in one of his news letters.

Q. In this courtroom?

A. I don't understand your question. Simon Wiesenthal certainly isn't here.

Q. No. Does he have any representatives here?

A. Well, yes, he has Mr. Littman here who is a representative of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, apparently, according to the news reports.

Q. And have you heard from other people that those who write as you do questioning some of these beliefs about Zionism are visited by such people?

A. Well, I have known that for the last twenty-five years, because I experienced it myself. No sooner did I become vocal on this issue that I did receive the usual number of threats, except in my case I was visited by the R.C.M.P., and I mean, I have lists of names of famous Canadians who were beset, if that is a good word, who were threatened and ultimately did lose their jobs because they broadcast these things. One is Max Lipson, the former news director of CHUM on the radio who had me on his station, SJRN in St. Catharines, and he was told once too many times; and this Jewish man who was an orthodox Jew, going to a synagogue every Sabbath and read the Torah on everything {3859|3860}

I asked him, he said, "I have to read Torah on this", this man was hounded out of his job, out of his home, had his marriage destroyed and ended up by checking himself into a mental home in Ottawa because he was so hurt, and his crime was that he had allowed Ernst Zundel on his radio programme. He was told once too many. So there's Max Lipson. So this is not an issue that makes a difference between Germans or Jews. It is a highly charged ideological question, it seems to me, and he was a victim of it. The fact that he was a Jew, he got possibly worse treatment. After all I am still alive and still working. Max Lipson is not. He has been blackballed from the media. That man is a broken wreck today.

Q. How does this relate to the other people you've talked to, like you mentioned Faurisson, Felderer, Walendy, Butz, Stäglich — what is the relationship in regard to that?

A. Well, they all suffered for their viewpoint and we don't have to go that far away from Toronto. We have, I think his name is Brian Nelson of CRV who made one broadcast in a far-off place like Kuwait and promptly was fired from his job here in Toronto because he had called Israel "that Zionist entity", or whatever. You know? Now, ask any of the writers that have — Fisher, Douglas Fisher wrote in one of his columns that when he touched upon the maltreatment of the Palestinians in only one column, that he was called an anti-semitist, that people visited the publisher of the Toronto Sun trying to get him fired for it. I've got the column. So this is not a unique {3860|3861} experience. Larry Henderson who used to be CBC anchor man. In his case I don't think it had to do with the Holocaust. It had to do with communism. But these pressures do exist. All of us who have written something or published something or broadcast something know about that. I mean, this is an open secret that, I think, it was the Reverend A.C. Forest of the United Church Observer who wrote a book entitled, "Who Must Know Better Must Say So" about Palestine. Coles, by the way, at the time the people owning Coles were Jewish brothers. They published a book. The next thing the JDL or somebody else, forty or fifty individuals were outside Coles Bookstore and got the book removed. And A.C. Forest was in trouble over it. He had his name banded about and questioned, and from what I know and have observed of the man, he is an upstanding good Canadian.

So this is nothing to do with somebody liking an ideology or not, or me publishing flying saucer books or things favourable of Hitler. This is an inquiring, you know. The fact is there is a terror loose in this land against people who tackle the Holocaust from a revisionist viewpoint. If I may add, I think I am one of the few Canadian writers and publishers that had his home bombed and within a very short time the JDL, an offshoot of the JDL's People Liberation Army or something, took credit for it, and the bomb, according to the bomb squad, was a pipe bomb, and I have from the FBI anti-terrorist organization all the anti-terrorist file, and each one lists attacks by ideological, by Puerto Ricans and the Symbionese {3861|3862} Liberation Front in the old days, and the JDL always uses pipe bombs of the type used outside my place.

Q. What are the results of your research respecting the subject of the Holocaust and, for example, the evidence of Dr. Vrba?

A. I don't believe him. I think that he is, maybe not himself personally, but certainly that his testimony as reflected in the War Refugee Board is a direct result of that British directive that Walendy read yesterday that the Allies were deflecting away from the murderous rampage and the destruction in Europe, and especially the atrocities committed by the Red Army by putting the blame on the Germans and cranking up the rumour mills and the atrocity mills, and I believe that the War Refugee Report has to be looked at only in that light, because, for instance, the one point it makes in a glaring error is that he claims a hundred and fifty thousand French people killed by gas in Auschwitz in two years alone, whereas Klarsfeld, thirty years after the War, when there is more material available, not just trucks rumbling by his barracks at night but research manifesto, and he comes to the total number of Jews evacuated to Germany for the entire War to a little less than seventy-six thousand.

Now, here we have Professor Vrba standing here insisting that this is not true, that he, counting, lying in his barrack as a youth, in the night in Auschwitz, counted a hundred and fifty thousand French people gassed at Auschwitz. I think it was an insult.

Q. Did you study the Nuremberg War {3862|3863} Trials records?

A. Certainly. Not as well as some of the people who have appeared on the witness stand. I looked for specific reference points. I find it very burning and very upsetting reading, and after I am through with the Holocaust I hope to have Nuremberg overturned.

Q. Why do you hope that?

A. Because it's a travesty of justice in my opinion. It will be a blemish on civil[s]ation as we know it, and certainly a magnificent traditional system that we have created in most civilized countries.

Nuremberg, in my opinion, it is only my opinion as an artist and a writer, will go down as a blemish on the record, because so many people did so many nasty things in order to get these people convicted. I am very saddened for all those participants. I really am.

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of the time, Your Honour, may we take a break?

THE COURT: Two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 2:25 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand. {3863|3864}

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Mr. Zundel, in the testimony this morning you indicated you relied on a book called, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" by Arthur Butz.

I now show you a book by that title. Would you examine it, please. Is that the book you referred to?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. What relationship does it bear to the thesis presented in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. It basically answers the extermination thesis that the Germans killed six million Jews by the method of gassing, gas chambers, were largely Allied documents. And it points out that the Germans did no such thing.

Q. What relationship does it have to the thesis of this book, Exhibit I?

A. One could almost say that the Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is an abstract or a condensation of the thoughts in this book.

Q. And you've met Dr. Butz four times?

A. Yes, I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, longer ago than any of us care to remember, at the beginning of this trial I indicated that this shouldn't be a trial of one library against another. I have no objection to my friend referring to it, showing it to Mr. Zundel, {3864|3865} obviously, but matters that are being filed as an exhibit of a very large number of books, it is unreasonable to expect that the jury or anybody else are expected to read those books in rendering their decisions. The fact that the book is accepted and is shown to Mr. Zundel, we have all heard of this book before during the case in the course of this trial, but in my submission it is not appropriate that it be made an exhibit, or the other books, for that matter. We might have more of them.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is not my desire to be unreasonable, but it is my desire to lay before the jury the reasonable basis for my client's belief. He, unfortunately or fortunately, reads all these books, and the jury should be entitled to see them to decide for themselves whether there is a reasonable basis for his opinion. It is not my client's desire to be involved in such a process.

THE COURT: We have heard this before, Mr. Christie. We know that. No one desires to be involved in a court case.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. But I suggest that the jury ought to be able to see and hear from him the basis of his opinion, the research involved. It is all very well for my friend to acknowledge that the book exists, but there are a lot more things I would like to introduce and refer to in my submission and see what it is that is such an unreasonable basis for his opinion that the Crown has to prove. Now, I think I am entitled to lay before the {3865|3866} jury the foundation of my belief and to lay before it in the form of evidence, and if he says, as he just I did, "This is the basis of my belief", then the Crown can argue it is an unfounded basis, let the jury see for themselves and they will be able to see whether it is an unreasonable basis.

THE COURT: I agree. That will be an exhibit.

— EXHIBIT NO. 70: Book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" by Arthur Butz.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you also read and analyzed the book by Dr. Rudolf Vrba, "I Cannot Forgive"?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And did you examine it from the point of view of inconsistencies?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And have you marked the points where they are inconsistent?

A. Yes, Yes, I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that, please?

THE COURT: You can file the book.

MR. CHRISTIE: They are all marked the way you found those inconsistencies. I have no desire to remove them in any way unless the Crown wishes to do so.

— EXHIBIT NO. 71: Book, "I Cannot Forgive" by Rudolf Vrba. {3866|3867}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you rely on the evidence from a book of Dr. Charles E. Weber called, "The 'Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers"?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Is this the copy of that book?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Why do you find it useful to understand the question —

A. I like it because it's thin, small, simple to understand. It is for normal common-sense explanations. It is similar in format to this.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. May that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit 72.

— EXHIBIT NO. 72: Book, "The 'Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers" by Charles E. Weber.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you relied on such Jewish sources as those of Nahum Goldman, "The Jewish Paradox"?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "The Jewish Paradox" by Nahum Goldman. I ask you to identify it and see if that is the book you referred to.

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Why is that a relevant basis for your opinion?

A. Mr. Goldman was one of the leading figures in Jewish life for almost eighty years {3867|3868} and was a colourful figure, interesting man, and he was the chief architect of the reparation scheme of the West German Government to the State of Israel.

Q. What portion of that book do you say is relevant to the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Most of it, but particularly the section dealing with the foundations or the behind the scenes development of the Nuremberg War Crimes trials, how they came to be, who originated them, who thought about them.

Q. What did he say about that?

A. He says it was the brainchild of two Jewish Lithuanian jurists, Jacob and Nehemiah Robinson.

Q. Who told us ...

A. Thanks to them the Jewish Institute worked out two completely revolutionary ideas.

Q. What did he say about that?

A. Page 122, "The Nuremberg tribunal and German reparations".

Q. Did he say anything else about that that you consider important to your position?

A. Well, I'd have to read the whole book. It is a very important book.

Q. Have you read it all?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book by R.T. Paget called, "Manstein". Is that relevant to your understanding of the question of the Einsatzgruppen?

— EXHIBIT NO. 73: Book, "The Jewish Paradox", by Nahum Goldman. {3868|3869}

A. Yes, it is.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

— EXHIBIT NO. 74: Book, "Manstein" by R.T. Paget.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Why is it?

A. Because von Manstein was charged with war crimes, and some involved the mass execution of an outrageously large number of Jews, and during his trial this question was looked into, and I find that in this book the simplest, most common-sense expose is made of why these charges of these massive numbers of people killed by the Einsatzgruppen could not be true.

Q. Well, is there a particular part that indicates the answer to that problem?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. Please read the portion that you used as a basis for your opinion on that matter.

A. It is a rather lengthy one.

Q. You can find it besides the parts that are relevant to the issue of your opinion.

A. On page 170, I think that's the most cogent point. Previous pages also deal with the number of Jews allegedly executed, and the number given for four and a half months is eighty-five thousand. The man quoted to have made those charges is Ohlendorf, and I have here:

"According to Ohlendorf the procedure {3869|3870} was first that the Jews were required to register, then they were assembled in some ..."

Q. What page are you reading from?

A. Page 170.

And now comes to the very important point:

"It seemed to me that the S.D. claims were quite impossible. Single {3870|3871} companies of about 100 with about 8 vehicles were reporting the killing of up to 10,000 and 12,000 Jews in two or three days. They could not have got more than about 20 or 30 Jews who, be it remembered, thought they were being resettled and had their traps with them, into a single truck. Loading, travelling at least 10 kilometres, unloading and returning trucks would have taken nearer two hours than one. The Russian winter day is short and there was no travelling by night. Killing 10,000 Jews would have taken at least three weeks."

In one instance we were able to check their figures. The S.D. claimed that they had killed 10,000 in Simferopol during November and in December they reported Simferopol clear of Jews. By a series of cross checks we were able to establish that the execution of the Jews in Simferopol had taken place on a single day, 16th November. Only one company of S.D. were in Simferopol. The place of execution was 15 kilometres from the town. The numbers involved could not have {3871|3872} been more than about 300. These 300 were probably not exclusively Jews but a miscellaneous collection of people who were being held on suspicion of resistance activity. The Simferopol incident received a good deal of publicity because it was spoken of by the prosecution's only live witness, an Austrian corporal called Gaffa who said that he heard anti-Jewish activities mentioned in an engineers' mess when he was orderly and had passed the scene of the Simferopol execution. As a result we received a large number of letters, and were able to call several witnesses who had been billeted with Jewish families and also spoke of the functioning of a synagogue and of a Jewish market where they bought icons and similar bric-a-brac right up to the time that Manstein left the Crimea and after.

It was indeed clear that the Jewish community had continued to function quite openly in Simferopol and although several of our witnesses had heard rumours about an S.D. excess committed against Jews in Simferopol, it certainly appeared {3872|3873} that this Jewish commu- nity was unaware of any special danger.

Q. Who wrote that book?

A. It is by R.T. Paget, K.C., M.P.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is a member of Parliament and I think he was the defence lawyer of Manstein, if I am not mistaken.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please.

Q. Did you also, in the course of your research of the question of the Holocaust, study the question of cremation and disposal of the dead?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I now show you a book called, "The Disposal of the Dead" by C.J. Polson. Have you read and studied that book?

A. Yes. Especially the section having to do with the method of incineration of bodies and so on.

Q. Why is that relevant to the issue of the subject of the Holocaust and the cremation of the dead therein?

A. It's one of the central themes that the Germans cremated millions of people in cremation ovens, which we have photographs of, and some which are still in place in this concentration camps. So one can calculate by the capacity of these particular cremation ovens, and by what is standard cremation times, the number of victims possible to burn.

Q. What, from your study of that {3873|3874} book, was the indicated time for the cremation of a single human body in normal, modern circumstances?

A. It says:

"The time taken to cremate a body depends upon the build, weight and water content of the subject and on the kind of furnace, but the usual time is from one to two hours."

And this book was published in 1953, in England.

Q. In the course of your study did you also study the question of the transfer agreement?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I show you a book entitled, "The Transfer Agreement". Have you studied that book?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could this book, "The Disposal of the Dead" by C.J. Polson, be an exhibit?

THE REGISTRAR: 75.

— EXHIBIT NO. 75: Book, "The Disposal of the Dead" by C.J. Polson.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What relevance did that book have to the question of the extermination thesis of the Jews?

THE COURT: What is the name of the book?

MR. CHRISTIE: "The Transfer Agreement".

Q. Who wrote it? {3874|3875}

A. Edwin Black, Copyright [sic] 1984.

Q. What is the relevance of the book to the exterminationist thesis?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, is that 1984? So it post dates this charge.

THE WITNESS: Yes, it does.

THE COURT: I didn't know that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. I will withdraw the question.

Q. Have you studied the question of Dr. Stäglich's work?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "Der Auschwitz Mythos [Mythos]". Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Have you read it?

A. As I said this morning, not every letter of it because it's a very wordy, almost legal document, and I have an aversion against that style.

Q. What have you derived from that book?

A. That Auschwitz was not a death camp, that it was an industrial complex, that he was there during the War and had the firsthand knowledge of what went on there. He was apparently with a flak, anti-aircraft battery.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of Thies Christopherson?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And has he published in English {3875|3876} a book called,

"Auschwitz Truth or Lie?"

A. Yes, he has.

Q. And have you used that in your research and understanding?

A. Yes, I have.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, this last book, "Der Auschwitz Mythos", I would like to file it as an exhibit, if I may.

THE COURT: No.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you read and understand the German language, sir?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: No for the reason that in the event that the jury wanted to read it, unless the members of the jury were fluent in German, and I mean all members of the jury were fluent in German, it would be quite impossible, and if they weren't all fluent in German, it would be very difficult for any member of the jury to not impart its contents to the others, which is not the way a jury considers verdicts.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Have you read and understood other German books, sir?

A. Quite a number, yes.

Q. Are there other books that you referred to in your research by Jewish authors, for example Alfred Lilienthal?

A. Yes, but I was going to say, Your Honour, that puts me in a bit of a bind because I have read so many books in German on this topic.

Q. How many books have you read in {3876|3877} German on the topic that supports your understanding on the thesis of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Well, about twenty years' worth. There would be hundreds, at least, thousands of books over the years, over the twenty-year period.

Q. Among those what part would Dr. Stäglich play?

A. He is an important recent addition to my findings. He basically only confirms what I had gathered before.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "The Controversy of Zion" by Douglas Reed. Have you referred to that in your research?

A. I have researched it because of the content on Zionism, but it is not in the booklets here. Well, excuse me, it is in "The West, War and Islam". It is relevant to "The West, War and Islam".

Q. Why is it relevant to "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Well, because it is – Douglas Reed is a very well-known British author who has written many books.

Q. Well, what does it say that is relevant to "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It outlines the power and development of Zionism.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could I file that?

Q. Is there any particular part of that book to which you referred?

A. Quite a number of pages, yes. {3877|3878}

Q. I can't hear you very well.

A. Quite a number of pages, yes.

Q. Thank you.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 76.

— EXHIBIT NO. 76: Book, "The Controversy of Zion" by Douglas Reed.

THE COURT: That is in English, is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is.

THE COURT: And I presume it is published, Mr. Christie, before this charge.

MR. CHRISTIE: Shortly after the War. If I am not mistaken, the last copyright [sic] is 1978, but it is quite an old book, really. It was last published in 1978. I am not sure when it first came out, Your Honour, but I think it fits within the time that is relevant prior to 1983.

May it be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, did you, yourself, publish a book relative to the Second World War other than "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book, "Report and Hearings of the Sub[-]Committee on the Judiciary United States Senate". Do you recognize that book?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How is that relevant to your thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?" {3878|3879}

A. It talks about some of the background of some Jewish leaders in the Bolshevik Revolution.

Q. Is that published under the authority of the United States Government?

A. The original report, yes.

Q. This is a re-publication?

A. Yes, it is.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: This is to do with Exhibit No. 2, is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think Exhibit No. 1 and 2, but ...

Q. Could you answer the question, witness?

A. Both, yes. More so with "The West, War and Islam".

Q. Why?

A. Because it outlines the history of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Q. What has that got to do with "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Well, by showing the origins of communism, Bolshevism, pointing out that it is Jewish to a large extent. It has a basis on the thesis of that flyer.

Q. The relationship between Judaism and communism?

A. Zionism, communism.

THE COURT: Exhibit 77.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. {3879|3880}

— EXHIBIT NO. 77: Book, "Report and Hearings of the Sub-Committee on the Judiciary United States Senate.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: It is called the Overman Report, is that right?

A. Right.

Q. I can hardly hear you beyond the jury.

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "Germany Must Perish" by Theodore N. Kaufman. Do you know that book?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And what does that have to do with your thesis in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. It is one of the first books that I purchased in America, and it is the most virulent anti-German books, and it is one of the books that stimulated me to get off my derriere and do something about the propaganda.

Q. Why? What does it say?

A. It is a plan for the total annihilation of the German people.

Q. When was it published?

A. In 1941.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "At Last the Truth about Eichmann's Inferno Auschwitz". Have you read that book? {3880|3881}

A. Quite some time ago.

Q. How is that relevant to the thesis of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

THE COURT: Exhibit 78.

— EXHIBIT NO. 78: Book, "Germany Must Perish" by Theodore N. Kaufman.

THE WITNESS: It is not an important work. It is just one of the number of books about happenings in Auschwitz by Miklos Nyiszli. We have spoken about him in this courtroom.

Q. Have you read that book?

A. Years ago.

Q. And what does it indicate to you relevant to your thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Well, he recounts some pretty hair-raising tales.

Q. Do you believe it's true?

A. Embellished, if there is a seed of truth, yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of Udo Walendy?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How long have you been in cooperation with him?

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this as an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: No. 79. {3881|3882}

— EXHIBIT NO. 79: Book, "Auschwitz" by Dr. Miklos Nyiszli.

THE WITNESS: I purchased my first book from him in 1963, late in '63, and purchased quite a number of books from him. Only in the seventies did we establish a kind of relationship master-pupil type relationship.

Q. Who is the pupil?

A. I am.

Q. Why?

A. Well, he is one of the most prolific writers on political history [sic] in West Germany today, and he writes, with very few exceptions, again, material which I like, as he introduced it yesterday, small booklets like this. One can read through them in a night or two, and he is pedantic in the citing of his sources. He uses his common sense approach, simple language. At least, that's in those smaller books. Some of his heavier at home are a little more difficult to read, but I started out by getting his book, "The Truth For Germany".

Q. I now produce and show to you a book, "Auschwitz in I.G. Farben Process". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. When was it published?

A. 1981.

Q. How is it relevant to your thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. As Mr. Walendy said yesterday, it {3882|3883} is a compilation of the court happenings in the trial of Dr. Tesch, the man who was in charge of Zyklon-B distribution to the concentration camps, and he had almost a monopoly on the production, I believe. He was assigned by the German Government to produce and make sure that there was always a steady supply of these chemicals. He was also a chemist, very well-known chemist in Germany, I believe, and Walendy wrote the first, the foreword, which is really a fair-sized book.

Q. Well, what do you mean? People don't know what you mean by the foreword. Is that the blue part of the book?

A. Yeah. That's it.

Q. All the blue pages?

A. Because there is so much of it, he divided the book. There is the photo section, map section of Auschwitz and camps and so on, and [ ] then there is his commentary on the trial.

Q. Have you discussed his books with him?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you discussed the thesis of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" with him?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What are his conclusions communicated to you?

A. Well, as he said yesterday, he thinks that this booklet is right. That's what he said, that it was truthful, but we have ten additional years of released documents from various government archives and so on. So he felt that an improvement could be {3883|3884} made in the booklet.

Q. All right. That's in German, isn't it, the book in your left hand?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. All right. I now produce and show to you two books on Zionism. How is that relevant to the issue of "The West, War and Islam"? Identify them if you would, please.

A. The one book is by Alfred Lilienthal, and it is called "The Zionist Connection". It was published in 1978, and it is what many consider one of the definitive books on Zionism, their methods of operation, Wiesenthal, greediness of certain Zionist organizations and institutions.

Q. Have you studied it in detail?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. What do the bookmarks represent?

A. Well, these are all quick markers that I can refer to during a radio show or T.V. show.

Q. You have used that as a source of material for your opinions?

A. Very extensively, yes.

Q. What is it called, again?

A. "The Zionist Connection".

Q. By ...

A. Alfred Lilienthal.

Q. And is he Jewish?

A. He certainly is.

Q. Thank you. What is the other book? {3884|3885}

A. It is, "The Decadence of Judaism In Our Time".

Q. By ...

A. Moshe Menuhin, and he is the father of the famous violinist.

Q. Yehuda Menuhin?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he Jewish?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the thesis of that book relative to your printing on "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It is similar to Alfred Lilienthal's book.

MR. CHRISTIE: May that be an exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 80.

— EXHIBIT NO. 80: Book, "The Zionist Connection" by Alfred Lilienthal.

Q. Why is it similar?

A. Because it delves into Jewish politics, history, power, organization.

Q. What does it say about Zionism?

A. It is not that complimentary.

Q. Does it say anything else?

A. Well, I would have to go —

Q. Never mind.

A. It outlines the Zionist credo in page after page.

Q. What is your position on the {3885|3886} Zionist credo?

A. If somebody wants to be a Zionist and doesn't harm the rest of society, I have no quarrel with him, but if they become so powerful and assume the role of the government within the government, or a state within a state, then I think it is the duty of every decent man to oppose him.

Q. And how?

A. By publishing information on them exposing the social danger that they represent.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this please, your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 81.

— EXHIBIT NO. 81: Book, "The Decadence of Judaism In Our Time" by Moshe Menuhin.

THE WITNESS: It is a compilation of the assessment of the trials, especially Doenitz' treatment.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, the jury might be interested in who Admiral Doenitz was.

THE WITNESS: Admiral Doenitz was the last leader of Germany. Adolf Hitler made him Chief of the Reich and he was in power a very brief time, and he was in charge of Germany's submarine warfare during the Second World War and was charged as a consequence as one of the war criminals in Nuremberg, and in this book are all the assessments by famous military men and judicial people and priests and bishops, many famous people from around the World who agree with, if I may {3886|3887} humbly say, with my assessment that Nuremberg was a travesty of justice, and he certainly got a rough deal, and I have put, given photographs to these authors, signed their submissions and —

Q. It's a compilation of submissions of various people throughout the world on that subject?

A. Yes.

Q. Including Supreme Court Justices?

A. That's right. Famous authors.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Exhibit 82.

— EXHIBIT NO. 82: Book, "Doenitz at Nuremberg: A Re-Appraisal".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In relation to the work of F.J.P. Veale referred to in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", have you read the book, "Advance to Barbarism"?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now show you a book, "Advance to Barbarism" by F.J.P. Veale. Is that relevant to the thesis in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Why?

A. Because it outlines exactly what the title says, the tragedy that was the Second World War and how we advanced to barbarism.

Q. And what is the conclusion of that book in terms of its thesis?

A. My conclusion was that he was an English writer that appealed to the world that we should {3887|3888} prevent war rather than talk about war.

Q. What's his conclusion about the Nuremberg trials?

A. Not very complimentary.

Q. Well, let's not understate the case. What does he say?

A. He says it was a travesty of justice.

Q. Is this your copy of the book?

A. Yes, it is.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit 83.

— EXHIBIT NO. 83: Book, "Advance to Barbarism" by F.J.P. Veale.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you know who Veale was?

A. He was — in German we call a jurist. He was certainly a lawyer or a magistrate.

Q. Did you ever meet him?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever meet him personally?

A. No. I just know his book.

Q. Are you familiar with this book, "Unconditional Hatred" by Lord Russell, R.N.,

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Why is it relevant to the thesis if at all of "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. He explains the war guilt in {3888|3889} Europe, the propaganda for war.

Q. And is that book relevant to the issue of "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Well, this was the result of war, and this explains, this man explains how it got there, through propaganda and so on.

THE COURT: You will have to do better than that, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw the question. Since it's not relevant, I won't file it.

Q. Is there something that goes in that?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. Was it part of your studies?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry" by Walter N. Sanning, with a foreword by Arthur Butz. Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Was it part of your understanding and research as part of this Holocaust question?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. What part did it play?

A. It's a statistical analysis of population trends and, what do you call it, surveys, what do you call it, when you count people, census, census figures of Jewish populations. It is a highly technical analysis of the population.

Q. Is it published by the Institute {3889|3890} for Historical Review?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And do you know what its conclusion is in relation to "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Again, he concludes that nowhere near six million Jews could have perished in the Second World War.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: 84.

— Exhibit No. 84: Book, "The Dissolution Of Eastern European Jewry" by Walter N. Sanning.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book called, "The Myth of the Six Million". Have you read that book?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What is its conclusion?

A. It's similar to "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Q. It is what?

A. It is similar to "Did Six Million Really Die?" However, there is no author given for it.

Q. Why?

A. Well, I have found out in the meantime who did write it, but the author was not given because he was a university professor afraid of losing his job.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this? I don't think the Crown objects. {3890|3891}

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. It is July '83.

THE COURT: What is the name of it?

MR. CHRISTIE: "The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry" (sic)

— EXHIBIT NO. 85: Book, "The Myth of the Six Million" — Anonymous.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The author was a university professor; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know now who it was?

A. Yes, I do.

THE COURT: What is the name of this book, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: "The Myth of the Six Million".

THE COURT: By an unknown author?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not unknown to my client.

Q. I now produce and show to you, "Atrocity Propaganda 1914-1919". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Who is the author?

A. James Morgan Read.

Q. Why is it relevant to the thesis in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Because it illuminates how hate propaganda was in the First World War, and the results {3891|3892} that it had, and there is a striking parallel to what happened in the Second World War.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this as an exhibit, please?

THE REGISTRAR: No. 86.

— EXHIBIT NO. 86: Book, "Atrocity Propaganda 1914-1919" by James Morgan Read.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of Dr. Raul Hilberg?

A. The one that we have discussed in here, yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book, "The Destruction of the European Jews" by Dr. Raul Hilberg. Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How much inquiry have you made into that book?

A. He is in the same category as our Mr. Stiglich. I have gone through the book, scanned it and marked areas I was interested in and looked for the inconsistencies, and they were discussed already in this courtroom.

Q. Yes. How much time have you spent studying that book?

A. I really didn't —

THE COURT: He didn't say "studying". He said he scanned it, looked for inconsistencies.

THE WITNESS: I took a speed-reading {3892|3893} course a few years ago and I read rather quickly, and only go for the meat of the matter which interests me.

Q. All right. Thank you. Are you familiar with the book, "Truth For Germany" by Udo Walendy?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Published in 1981. Are you familiar with the contents of that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Is it relevant to your thesis as to the questions in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Why?

A. Because it is a source book thoroughly documented about the entire political situation, development, war, war period, post-war period in Germany.

Q. Did you study this in the course of your research?

A. I especially studied the German version. This is a translation of that book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, Your Honour?

THE REGISTRAR: No. 87.

— EXHIBIT NO. 87: Book, "Truth For Germany" by Udo Walendy.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show you a book. Could you identify the author and indicate the year of publication?

A. The book is called, "Germany is {3893|3894} Our Problem", a plan for Germany by Henry Morgenthau, Junior, former Secretary of the Treasury, and it was published by Harper Brothers in New York and London, 1945.

Q. Why is it relevant to the thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Because it contains the Morgenthau Plan.

Q. What is that?

A. The Morgenthau plan was the official plan adopted by the United States Government for a time to turn Germany into a gold pasture, (sic) to deindustrialize Germany by destroying its industries and plans for production and so on.

Q. How do you consider that necessary to the thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. I consider that as a real plan for the concentration of people —

THE COURT: That wasn't the question. Ask it again, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. How do you consider that necessary to the thesis of the booklet "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Because it outlines a plan, a detailed plan of how to destroy Germany, and the methods to use it. And if one was looking for a master plan of how to exterminate a people, here was a good example, and I thought there were certain parallels to this, and —

Q. Could you indicate what parallels?

A. You'd have to give me a few {3894|3895} moments. For instance, the institution reparation section details the transfer of German territory, German property, German industries, which would have led to the eradication of at least one third the population of Germany, maybe half, because the Germans couldn't feed them.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book on the Red Cross published by the Red Cross in 1974 on the German concentration camps from 1939 to 1945. How is that relevant to your opinion respecting the Holocaust and respecting Auschwitz and the thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. This is the booklet which has landed me in a problem with this little magazine, in that I had read this in the original, well, the French version, because the English version was out of print.

Q. Would you open it at the bookmark, please? Read, if you would, the highlighted portion.

THE COURT: In what language?

THE WITNESS: This is in English, Your Honour, but I was just going to explain to you what that booklet did for me. This is the first publication of the Red Cross visits to Auschwitz and the other concentration camps, and it does not talk about extermination camps in this book. However, I brought it to Mr. Griffiths and the three larger volumes and the subsequent edition, where this particular part — it incorporated words to the extent of there having been extermination camps were added.

Q. After the war. {3895|3896}

A. So I had read this, and —

Q. Well, could you indicate the portion that indicates the relevant part to the thesis about "Did Six Million Really Die?" in respect to Auschwitz?

A. The story of a visit by the International Committee of the Red Cross delegate to the Commandant of Auschwitz Camp September 1944, and —

Q. Does the subject of gas chambers come up in that report?

A. Yes. They say:

"The principal British spokesman from Teschen spontaneously asked us whether we knew about the 'shower room'. A rumour was in fact going round that the camp was equipped with a very modern shower room where groups of detainees were being gassed. The British spokesman tried to secure confirmation of this through his Auschwitz Kommando. It was impossible to prove anything whatever. The detainees themselves said nothing."

Q. Are you familiar with what was done with that report later in history?

A. Well, it was amended with words talking about extermination camps that were added to this, and it was incorporated in the larger reports.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit this, please? {3896|3897}

THE COURT: Exhibit 88.

— EXHIBIT NO. 88: Book, "The Work of the ICRC For Civilian Detainees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "What to do with Germany" by Louis Nizer. Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How is it relevant to the thesis in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. This book is quite similar to the Nahum Theodore Kaufman book, "Germany Must Perish" which we started out with, and it follows the Morgenthau plan. As a matter of fact, it pre-dates the Morgenthau Plan, so you could say that one writer had a concept of eradicating or exterminating the German population totally in 1941; Louis Nizer watered this plan down in his "What to do with Germany" in 1944. It was still pretty radical and pretty drastic. And then Morgenthau, in 1945, delivered to the government his plan which would have resulted at least in partial extermination of the German people.

So this book, Morgenthau's book and Kaufman's book you could say are soul brothers.

Q. What is indicated to you in the period of time that is indicated?

A. One of hatred, vengeance, un-{3897|3898}forgiveness.

Q. What was the situation at the time of the Nuremberg Trials?

A. One of vengeance, hatred, unforgiveness.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to exhibit that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Exhibit 89.

— EXHIBIT NO. 89: Book, "What to do with Germany" by Louis Nizer.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy" by Gary Allen. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Why is it relevant to your thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. I like it because it's like a political handbook. It is publicly available. It is small. It is thin. It is simple and it sold over five million copies. It is something that people don't shy away from.

Q. How is it relevant to the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. It talks about the power structure, world government, collaboration between capitalism and communism.

Q. Is it relevant to the area of "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It is more relevant to this one {3898|3899} than "Did Six Million Really Die?", yes.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit that, please?

THE COURT: Ninety.

— EXHIBIT NO. 90: Book, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy" by Gary Allen.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now show you a book called, "Censored History" by Eric Butler. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How is it relevant to "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It deals with Zionism, Soviet Zionist collaboration. It is written by an author who I know personally. He has frequently visited in Canada and has been my guest. He analyzes the smear tactics employed against people that are discussing the six million by calling them anti-semites and worse.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit that, please?

THE COURT: Ninety-one.

— EXHIBIT NO. 91: Book, "Censored History" by Eric D. Butler.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I show you a book entitled — it is in German. I won't file it.

A. This is a book about Dachau {3899|3900} and Landsberg prison and the executions there.

THE COURT: Just a moment. If it is in German, Mr. Christie, the witness can say what it says. Since all of these books are being filed by you as exhibits, it seems to me that — well, he can say what it says, but what good is it to the jury in case they want to check?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I suppose my friend has the ability, as we all do, to cross-examine him and put to him that he is not saying the right thing about it.

I mean, I am in a bit of a problem here because I think a lot of his information comes from those sources.

THE COURT: You have been doing all right up to now. You have about thirty-five or forty books.

MR. CHRISTIE: They are all in English, Your Honour; but the point is that his source of information comes from that.

THE COURT: How can Mr. Griffiths, unless he is fluent in German, know what the book says?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, that is really Mr. Griffiths' problem, Your Honour. Sorry, but I don't think it is my problem to have to translate books for him. It is within, I hope it is within my right to put before the jury the facts as the witness —

THE COURT: I think you can put to the witness that he's read the book and he relied on it. I think that is all you can put unless you elect to file it. You have elected to file the books; they are going {3900|3901} in as long as they are in English. You can go that far.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you rely on that book?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Why?

A. Because it is a book about the injustices as I consider them done to these people in Dachau and Landsberg.

Q. Where is Landsberg?

A. Landsberg is a famous prison that Hitler was imprisoned there.

THE COURT: Just a moment. What have I finished saying?

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't ask about the book.

THE COURT: He relied on it. Now you say what the book says.

MR. CHRISTIE: He has other sources.

THE COURT: Then ask him about the other sources, not that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you know from sources about Landsberg?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What do you know about the van Roeden [Roden] report?

A. It was set up by the Senate for the alleged torture of German prisoners in Allied hands in Dachau.

Q. And what did it find?

A. That they had indeed been tortured. {3901|3902}

Q. What kind of torture?

A. It was referred to as "hooding", meaning to put black hoods on people and punching them.

THE COURT: Just a moment. Are we talking about an event subsequent to 1945?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: How is that relevant to the exhibit?

MR. CHRISTIE: It has to do with war crimes, and this book says "War Crimes" —

THE COURT: Well, are those people subject to the alleged torture at Nuremberg?

MR. CHRISTIE: They were tried at Dachau, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I am asking you whether they were tried in Nuremberg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Not technically.

THE COURT: Well, is Dachau made reference to in Exhibit 1 [sic] as far as those trials are concerned?

MR. CHRISTIE: It seems to me there's reference to Malmedy.

THE COURT: You can ask. If it isn't, you can't.

MR. CHRISTIE: Certainly, Your Honour. It is the Simpson van Roeden Report.

THE COURT: All right.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell us what the Simpson Van Roeden [sic] report indicated was the type of torture used in respect to the Dachau trials?

A. "Hooding", which means putting {3902|3903} a black hood over a prisoner and then hitting his face with fists or gloves. Investigators would come and pretend that the accused was gonna be shot that night, and priests ask for their confessions, and if they obtained these confessions, they would then go and use the confessions against other accused. Beatings, severe beatings, psychological torture. It caused quite a stir at the time and led to the suspension of executions of some of these men and the call for clemency in all those who were convicted in Dachau; and the men who were responsible for the tortures, their names, naturally, because of the inquiry, became public and they were hauled in front of this committee.

Q. What became of the men who were initially convicted after their sentences were suspended through the use of this evidence?

A. The executions continued nine or ten months after the storm in the press had died down.

Q. How do you think that's relevant to the issue of the trials of the other major so-called war criminals?

A. One cannot read the Simpson Van Roeden [sic] Commission material and come away from it thinking that it was anything else but the norm.

Q. Are you familiar with Judge Wunerstrum's [Wennerstrum] publications, and did you do research into the Chicago Tribune?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you find in relation to — what did you find in relation to the book, "Did Six {3903|3904} Million Really Die?"

A. That the claim made in the booklet is essentially correct, that Judge Wunerstrum [sic] had spoken out and in uncomplimentary terms referred to some of the ethnic backgrounds and recent naturalization papers of some of the interrogators at Nuremberg.

Q. Are you familiar with the results of your investigation into the "Did Six Million Really Die?" conducted in the course of finding out if it was true?

A. Yes, I did. I got the original source from the Chicago Tribune. Also a speech that Justice Wunerstrum [sic] had given, I think it was in either Washington State or Oregon State, a get-together of judges and lawyers, and he had repeated his charges there. I believe he had even expanded on it.

Q. Are you familiar with the book, "Gruesome Harvest" by Ralph Franklin Keeling?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What part, if any, did it play in your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. It is one of the most upsetting books I've ever read.

Q. Why?

A. It was published in 1947 and it details the misery and the post-war conditions in Germany that millions of German people found themselves in, slave labour and hunger and disease and lawlessness in Europe, whole parts of Europe, and he does quote in there a quote by General Eisenhower that I thought he would never have made, and I was shocked when I double {3904|3905} checked them that, indeed, he had made them.

Q. How is that relevant to, for instance, the Posen speech that is alleged to be that of Himmler?

A. General Eisenhower says that, "We will kill every German in our way as we are advancing into the Rhine." I have to look for the quote where it is.

Q. How is that relevant —

A. He says:

"Allied fervor to destroy everything German had been expressed by General Eisenhower with the opening of the Roer drive. 'Our primary purpose,' he declared, 'is destruction of as many Germans as possible. I expect to destroy every German west of the Rhine and within that area in which we are attacking.'"

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that as an exhibit, please?

THE REGISTRAR: Ninety-two.

— EXHIBIT NO. 92: Book, "Gruesome [Gruesome] Harvest" by Ralph Franklin Keeling.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did they do that, to your knowledge?

A. I don't think they did that, no. Many times it is like Stalin said, "No soup is eaten as soon as it is cooked." {3905|3906}

Q. Now, this is in German, is it?

A. Yes, in German.

Q. Why have you, over the years, continued to research into this area?

A. I do a lot of radio shows and give lectures and write my newsletter. I get asked by a lot of students, high school students, university students and just ordinary people, some newspaper people, too, questions about this issue, and I find that I have a memory that is maybe not as good as it ought to be, and so I constantly have to go over books that I have to refresh my memory, and there is so much new material coming out, one can't really keep up with it. It is a value judgment. You have to make choices. I usually start reading a book by the index and start the front of the book and start the rear of the book and then go down through the book quickly to find out what material I have not read over the years, because otherwise I would be constantly only regurgitating what somebody else said or thought, and I don't think that this is a very good state of being.

Q. And when has your research stopped?

A. It has never stopped.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book, "Atrocity Propaganda Is Based On Lies". Have you seen this book, and what is it?

A. It is a trilingual book, came out in 1983 by the Jewish publication house of Jakow Trachtenberg Verlag in Berlin, and it contains the answer of various German Jewish individuals and {3906|3907} organizations to the atrocity propaganda that started to spring up as soon as Hitler became Chancellor in Germany, and many of these things are notarized affidavits by leaders in Germany at the time. It is a book, I acquired it in Germany.

Q. And how is it relevant to the thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?"[?]

A. It shows that many leading German Jewish organizations and Jews at the time were also upset by this agitation that was going on outside Germany, and it shows a working along by German government by Jewish and anti-Zionist organizations at the time.

THE COURT: Is there an English version?

THE WITNESS: It is trilingual, Your Honour.

THE REGISTRAR: Ninety-three.

— EXHIBIT NO. 93: Book, "Atrocity Propaganda Is Based On Lies"

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In the course of your research did you obtain the plans from the Auschwitz Museum from Dr. Faurisson?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Why?

THE COURT: I think, before we start on that, we should have an adjournment. Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:25 p.m.

— The witness stands down. {3907|3908}

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 3:53 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Zundel, I produce and show to you two books. I'd like you to identify the book, the author or publication and the publisher's name, please.

A. Both books are by Professor Dr. David Hoggan. One is called, (German title), "The Unnecessary War", published in 1974 by Grabert Verlag Tubingen.

Q. How many pages is that book?

A. Six hundred and twenty seven.

Q. And the other book?

A. This one is again by David L. Hoggan, and it's called, (German title), "The Forest War", and it deals with the origins and the originators of the Second World War and subsequent events. It is published by Robert Gain (ph) in 1976.

Q. And are those your books?

A. They are my books, yes.

Q. How does this relate to the book entitled, "The Myth of the Six Million" which is anonymous?

A. I was told on very good authority — {3908|3909}

THE COURT: No.

THE WITNESS: No? Sorry.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Why do you believe the book "The Myth of the Six Million"?

A. Because it was written by David Hoggan.

Q. And is he known to you?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. What is his background?

A. He is a university professor in California.

Q. And do you, from your own personal — have you had conversations with him?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Why doesn't he come out and admit that he wrote the book?

A. The publication of these two books in Germany cost him such grief in America, even though they were never translated into English or published here, that he decided that that hot potato he was going to do without his own name on it.

Q. Did you have some models made in order to understand the allegation pertaining to Auschwitz?

A. Yes, I did. I had numerous models made over a number of years. The first ones I made myself in my — as a skill as an artist, I put something together, but they were not in proper scale. So they were more for visual effect rather than for technical accuracy, and they were to portray the ludicrousness of some of the claims advanced by the {3909|3910} exterminationists in their claim of dropping Zyklon-B pellets down certain holes into gas chambers and other claims where German soldiers were supposed to climb through rafters and attics to dump Zyklon-B pellets and so on.

However, I found that I used these in video films I had made, and the one complaint was that they were not to scale, and therefore they could be misleading. So this is when I had commissioned a professional model maker to make the new models exactly to scale so that I could improve my presentation and not have this criticism.

Q. Have you, in order to make these models, obtained plans?

A. Yes. I get those plans from Dr. Faurisson, and —

Q. Where did he indicate they were from?

A. From the Auschwitz Museum when he was in Auschwitz himself. I saw these plans for the first time in 1979 at a convention of some three hundred writers on history, historians, academics.

Q. Revisionists?

A. Revisionists, yes.

Q. Where?

A. Academists [sic]. In Los Angeles, California.

Q. And did you present a paper there?

A. Yes, I did present a paper for Dr. Faurisson because he felt his English wasn't well {3910|3911} enough, and since I had a knowledge of French and was there, he asked me to present his paper for him while he was beside me showing the slides of these plans, and he explained part of these plans to the audience.

Q. What was the topic of the paper you presented for Dr. Faurisson?

A. I don't remember the exact title of the talk, but it had to do with the impossibility of the exterminationists' claim that the Germans could kill so many Jews in these structures in a day in Auschwitz, because they were in direct contradiction to the plans that Faurisson presented and the photographs of the gas chambers and so on.

Q. Have you examined the models that were prepared lately?

A. Carefully. Checked them, measured them, went over them with fine toothcomb.

Q. And have you discussed them with other researchers in this field?

A. Yes, I have. I have even made video films with these researchers, looking at these video films at these models. These are very sophisticated models where the roof can be lifted off and the top floor can be lifted off revealing the first floor, second floor, basement and so on.

Q. In your study of the Holocaust literature have you come to understand the operation of the crematoria process?

A. For a layman I think sufficiently, yes.

Q. And as a result of that, what {3911|3912} conclusions have you come to as to the extermination claims, for example, advanced by Dr. Vrba here?

A. I don't want to slander the man, but I think that they're ludicrous.

Q. Why?

A. It couldn't be done, not even for Dr. Vrba. It couldn't be done. He makes outrageous claims. He obviously made a mistake in the height of the building, for instance.

Q. Which building?

A. The so-called gas chamber building.

Q. He was describing to us, as I recall, a building that he said an S.S. man climbed up on to?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you examined the plans?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. In the area that he described, from what he called Wetzler's mortuary hut, to what he said was a flat roof building, what is the height on the plans of that building?

A. I don't remember the exact measurement, but it certainly was just barely above the ground that building.

Q. Have you seen the slides of Auschwitz?

A. I have seen, I think, thousands of slides of Auschwitz till my head was spinning, and have selected from those that Felderer had and that Dr. Faurisson had, and that Dr. Lindsey had, a number of {3912|3913} the ones that I think are the most pertinent. I mean, to show so many slides to an audience or to people who one wants to educate or inform, it would be boring. So I selected what I consider were the most pertinent ones. At least, it's a value judgment, but I think that my background in graphics, I made a very fair choice in there. There are some two hundred, two hundred and twenty-five slides that tell the story very well, illustrated very well.

Q. Why have you instructed these models to be made?

A. Partly for my own sake.

Q. Why?

A. Because I like to see things in three dimensions. There are people who learn very well theoretically. I learn by seeing and by touching and by comparing, and I wanted to be a little bit sure that I understood these structures and what was alleged to have gone on in there. Also for the films I have felt that I owed it to the people who were going to watch these films to do the best job that I possibly could.

Q. And what observations have you made as a result of this research in respect to the allegation of extermination made in those premises?

A. It just doesn't hold water. It is illogical. It is impossible, physically impossible to have, as the claim is made, two or three thousand people in one gas chamber where these people were supposed to have been gassed and have in an adjacent building three, four thousand other people waiting, getting undressed, waiting to go into the gas chamber {3913|3914} where the corpses go in, and then have a relatively small door coming out of this gas chamber, the door going inside it, and a very small lift that wouldn't allow for more than one body at a time to be lifted from that ground floor up to where the crematoriums were.

I mean, it would have taken an endlessly long time to haul these individual bodies out, take them up in this lift and put them towards where the crematorium was. And then there is the problem of the crematoriums. They are five units, three openings each, makes fifteen units. There's x number of corpses – some say two thousand, others say three thousand, others say more in this chamber. If I calculate the length of time it took – in the British book it says two hours – even in the figure of one hour they have to be cremating just the first batch of gassed people for two and a half, three weeks, and the others were waiting in the adjacent dressing room. It's ridiculous.

Q. How many versions of the Auschwitz story have you studied?

A. There are thousands. I have, maybe, studied personally dozens with wildly different claims. For instance, Dr. Vrba said 1,765,000, I believe, victims for a two-year period. Now, I have the Encyclopaedia Judaica in my house. In there they say four million. And the Russian said 4.5 million. Now here they have three sources – one is the official Russian Government, then there is the Encyclopaedia, and then Dr. Vrba who gives his, and then we have Dr., Hilberg who says 1.1 million. We are talking about people. People get sent to jail for life for murder {3914|3915} and here we are talking about one million, three million and it gets to rest on the reputation of the German people who can't defend themselves.

Q. Are you familiar with the processes that went on at Nuremberg by studying some of the volumes of the Nuremberg trials?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Are you familiar with the process of the voir dire, for example, in your own case?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Do you understand what that is?

A. Oh, we have had a number of them here, yes.

Q. Have you examined the record of the Nuremberg Trials to see if there are voir dres pertaining to the statements there?

A. Not that I can recall.

Q. What do you mean, not that you can recall?

A. Well, this was apparently not a procedure followed in Nuremberg.

Q. In the film, "Nazi Concentration Camps" which we were shown, what was your observations pertinent to the issue of the conditions in Germany from your studies?

A. I'd have to – I mean, that is a terrible film, and I am very saddened that people would have suffered like that at the hands, or in institutions where people were in charge. I think there is not a German alive that doesn't feel a sense of shame about this, and I had known about Dr. Barton's {3915|3916} work for almost fifteen years, so I realized that the tail end of the film depicted a tragedy which was not premeditated. Nevertheless, it doesn't make the film any less shocking.

As I told you, I grew up in Germany. During the wartime I was a very small boy, but I had seen in my village and my neighbourhood the damages that bombs can do to bridges and waterfalls and things like that. I felt, somehow, that the makers or compilers of this film were blaming the victims, the Germans who were the victims of this genocidal bombing campaign by the Allied powers in order to get unconditional surrender. We were in a nation as much victim as these poor people in that concentration camp in Belsen, Hademar [Hadamar] and all the other places.

If I may say a few words to the lampshade story, that's a grotesque propaganda lie, and John J. McCloy (ph), I believe the Military Governor of West Germany, pardoned Elsa Kovwoch (ph) [Ilse Koch] when she was accused and sentenced during the War about the lampshades. And he came, apparently, to understand that there might have been a medical research station at one of the camps where tattoos [sic] were taken from people, not unlike places where we keep embryos – I have been to museums in Austria, museums in America where embryos in various stages of development are kept or where the effects of syphilis on the human body are shown photographically in bodies affected by syphilis and cancer, and the shrunken heads came from an eastern museum where they came from the head hunters. Now, I was not there, but the Elsa [Ilse] Koch (ph) {3916|3917} story I recall that John J. McCloy had pardoned her and she was re-arrested by the Germans when she was freed and put back in prison again because, unfortunately, it is one of the German character traits that we want to be more Catholic than the Pope, and in Germany, we have in East Germany we have communists who are more communist than Karl Marx himself.

Q. I'd like to show you a book "The Jewish Lists". I ask you if you are familiar with the book.

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Why is it relevant to "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It's a book put out in 1979 by Schocken Books in New York, and it is by Martin Greenberg, a Jewish writer, and it lists all the physicists, generals, actors, writers and hundreds of other accomplished Jews and various professionals about the medium of television, the media and so on, and it is interesting because many times it gives their real name, their birth name and their assumed name after War.

THE COURT: And it lists what?

THE WITNESS: It lists hundreds of other lists of accomplished Jews, Jews in all areas of life, Your Honour.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like you to explain to His Honour and the jury why it is relevant to "The West, War and Islam".

A. When we talk about the media, for instance, journalists, publishers and so on and {3917|3918} television producers, it has, for instance, a whole section on television executives, and I won't bore the audience or the jury or Your Honour with all this, but William Paley is in there, Leonard Ruskin, Richard Salant, David and Robert Sarnoff, Newton Minow, Don Mankiewicz, Robert Kaufman – many of the famous people in the media we find in here, and it is called, "The Book of Jewish Lists", and it is unabashedly proud of the fact that these people are Jews. And quite a bit of my knowledge of name changes by people in the media and show business and so on comes from this book and other books like it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Yes.

THE REGISTRAR: No. 94.

— EXHIBIT NO. 94: Book, "The Jewish Lists" by Martin H. Greenberg.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your article, "The West, War and Islam", you make claims that the western media is to a large extent Jewish controlled; is that right?

A. When I say the Western media, I didn't mean the Vancouver Sun. I mean in the same context that the Third World countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America have called United Nations Conferences about the Western domination of the world's media. Now, they don't cite Jewish domination of the Western media dominating the Third World. I distinctly {3918|3919} recall that there were meetings held by these Third World countries threatening to boycott the Western media because they felt that they were getting the short shrift in the media field, and I don't think – it is an open secret, General George Brown, the Chief of Staff of American-Canadian Armed Forces, gave a speech in 1977, I think October, November, in Duke University which nearly got him fired when he said, "Look at who owns the banks and the media in America", and he mentioned the influence these people have in public life in America.

Now, he was the Chief of the General Staff and he was called on the carpet by President Ford for saying that, but even though he was embarrassed, he stuck to his guns and he was reconfirmed as Chief of the General Staff.

Q. So what Western media do you mean when —

A. I mean the Washington Post, which is influential because it is read by every member of the United States Government delivered free of charge, apparently, to Senators, Congressmen, their administrators, the President, the White House, the New York Times and large publications like that. And I would hasten to add that I am not saying that there is a commissar with a special room in all of these newspapers that checks all the copies that the reporter submits to them.

Q. Then what are you saying?

A. I am saying that reporters – I have met many in my life – they are alert, they deal with news and people every day. They continually have {3919|3920} to be told with a sledge hammer that, for instance in the Toronto Sun, Paul Godfrey yanked an advertisement only three, four weeks ago that was placed by Penthouse which had a big swastika in the centre of the ad. And I remember him the next day talking about, it was offensive to him. "I am a Jew and it shouldn't have been done and if it was shown to me it would not have made the newspaper. Well, doesn't that say that this man can even censor advertising? This happened right here in this City. And take the reporter for CTV that I mentioned this morning, White – that is a long distance from Toronto. All he made was one broadcast. It was a man with a tremendous tradition in journalism. All of a sudden he is without a job.

Q. You are charged with false news. I now produce and show to you, "Canada The Twentieth Century". How is that relevant to the charge?

A. It's a school textbook currently used in Canadian schools and it says on page 146 it is by FitzHenry [sic] and Whiteside. Under the heading, "Holocaust" there is a whole section —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Does this have anything to do with Mr. Zundel's belief, this book?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. I can demonstrate that. The book demonstrates [sic] the false statements made by the Holocaust that led Mr. Zundel to doubt the story itself. If I might be allowed to have the witness —

MR. GRIFFITHS: When was it published? {3920|3921}

MR. CHRISTIE: There is no publication date, if you would like to examine it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand this comes from the early sixties, then.

THE WITNESS: I couldn't find it here.

MR. CHRISTIE: It had something to do with my client's belief prior to 1983. That is why I introduced it.

THE COURT: Anything further, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: It just says, "In Auschwitz and Poland Jews were stripped of their clothes. Men and women and children were herded into showers. When the showers were turned on they rained poison gas. Once the gas was cleared the piles of bodies were shovelled out. Dentists examined them for fillings. Sometimes human hair was used to stuff mattresses. Bodies were boiled to make soap."

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What is wrong with all that, Mr. Zundel?

A. Professor Raul Hilberg said that he investigated the soap story and he said it was a rumour, that there certainly was no such thing going on in Auschwitz, if I recall.

Q. What effect did these stories have upon your perception of the Holocaust as a whole in the story?

A. Maybe I will get in trouble for {3921|3922} saying this, but I think it is hate propaganda against quite a large segment of the population in this country, and not only in this country.

Q. Now, I understand you've read a number of books in German. You referred to the Burg books. Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes. It is by Judge G. Burg, real name Ginsburg.

Q. What effect does it have on your opinion on the Holocaust?

A. The title is "Scapegoats", and he points out how the German people have become scapegoats in this Holocaust story.

Q. Has he suffered for his views?

A. Yes., he has.

Q. How?

A. Well, when he went to put flowers on the grave of his deceased wife, equivalent members of the Jewish Defence League except German version of it beat him, assaulted him and he was hospitalized.

Q. How old is he?

A. He is getting on in years. He is seventy-five, seventy-six, quite frail and small and he now has a problem with his eyes.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I have known of him since I first read the book.

Q. Personally?

A. Personally. I have corresponded with him and so on, seven years, six years.

Q. Have you made a study of the {3922|3923} Stroop report, or had other people undertake a study to check into that matter?

A. I checked myself, and I had others check my findings and give me an opinion on what they found. I certainly didn't find fifty-six thousand people dead.

Q. Have you also conducted inquiries to determine if the story about the fire shooting from the chimneys day and night was possible?

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, it may be getting on late in the day, but there is really no reason why you should ask leading questions like that. You might not be quite so bald.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, Your Honour. I thought I could get to the point.

Q. What have you studied about the question of chimneys that, in this case, have been alleged to be burning and shooting flames into the air?

A. Well, since I have been in Canada I have built one house from scratch where I laid on hands myself. I had the plans drawn up and so on, and there was a chimney built in there with a fireplace, and in my current house I have a fireplace, and I am pretty alert to the danger that flames can cause to ordinary bricks, and I mean, it's just ordinary wood and ordinary flame. But if one looks at the long channels from the crematoriums to the chimneys in the places where this event is supposed to have taken place, namely Auschwitz, you talk – I mean, one sees that it must have been in some of the outlying furnaces, the next furnaces in ten, twelve meters anyways, of a kind of a pipe or a {3923|3924} passage made of – it's like a conduit for the flames and stuff like that. It was so long, it would have been the wierdest [sic] flame. They would have to first go down and go around curves and up chimneys and still be long enough and powerful enough to shoot fourteen feet out of the brick chimney.

Well, that seems a little far fetched to me and we have heard from Dr. Lindsey and I discussed it with Dr. Lindsey at length after the preliminary hearing when that charge was first made, I think it was Mr. Friedman made it when he said during the preliminary that he could determine when the skinny Polish Jews were burned by the colour of the flames or fat Hungarian Jews were burned by the colour of the flames. I immediately called Lindsey and asked, "What do you think of this?" Because I am not an expert on chemistry. And he just laughed uproariously and certainly thought he was ludicrous.

Q. Have you studied photographs of the smoke channels at the camps of Maidanek and Auschwitz?

A. I studied the slides by Dittlieb Felderer, yes, and of course, I also used some aerial reconnais[s]ance photographs over Auschwitz.

Q. Made by ...

A. Made by the United States Air Force or the South African Air Force, some of them.

Q. And did you examine them for smoke?

A. Yes, I did. And this is one area where I think I have some expertise in that I am {3924|3925} a photo retoucher by trade, and I have earned my living with photographs and retouching photographs for years, and I had these photographs purposely enlarged and looked at them under powerful magnifying glasses, and there were certainly no flame shooting from chimneys, and there was certainly no billowing smoke coming from the chimneys.

Q. How many of those photographs were taken?

A. The United States Air Force and Allied Air Force overflew these camps, apparently, every ten days.

Q. Do you have those photographs here?

A. Yes, I do.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could we produce them, Your Honour, please?

THE COURT: Have you shown them to anyone other than – have you shown them to Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: I believe we did once, Your Honour. I will show them again if you want.

THE COURT: Do you have any complaint about them?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I haven't seen them, Your Honour. I'd like to have the opportunity, if it doesn't unduly interrupt the flow of my friend.

MR. CHRISTIE: We can do that another time. I will show them to my friend this evening.

Q. Have you examined the question {3925|3926} of the fuel problem for the cremation of various corpses like a million human beings?

A. I made some calculations, and —

Q. Have you studied that question from the point of view of the authorship of the book that was filed on that subject?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What conclusions did you make as to the amount of fuel necessary from that research to cremate one human body? How much coke?

A. This is a complex question, and I want to give you a common sense answer to it, because charges have been made that bodies have been cremated in pits, and when a body is burned in an open pit, like Indira Ghandi was, for instance, burned in an open cremation, it takes 440 pounds of wood to burn one human body. That would have meant, if all the people were burned in open pits that were alleged to have been burned in open pits, like Mr. Vrba said and others have claimed in the Holocaust legend, there should have been wood piles visible in those aerial photographs of a huge size. But there were no unduly large wood piles in any of these photographs.

Q. Did you see any wood piles?

A. Well, Mr. Vrba said that he even hid in a wood pile, so there must have been some wood piles. And much of the construction of the concentration camps, the wood posts and so on, the barracks and so on, so there must have been wood; but I mean, twelve thousand bodies multiply that by 440 pounds of {3926|3927} wood, there is an enormous pile of wood, day after day. There should have been trains visible or some people should have talked in literature about the mass shipments or coal shipments to Auschwitz, or coke shipments to Auschwitz, because the Auschwitz furnaces, apparently, were coke-fired.

Q. Did you ever make any study to determine the amount of coke necessary to produce enough energy to cremate one human body?

A. I am not an expert in it, but in the technology of the day, applying common sense rules, the estimates vary for coke per one body, about forty kilograms.

Q. And how many pounds is that?

A. That's in Canadian pounds almost a hundred pounds.

Q. And then, for a million bodies, how many pounds?

A. That's a hundred pounds multiplied by one million, so that's a hundred million pounds. And that's a lot of pounds.

Q. In all the research you have been able to undertake from the sources you have been able to communicate with, has there been any indication of that volume of coke or coal or wood available?

A. Strange as that may seem, I have come across very few discussions, if any, of large shipments of coke to Auschwitz or coke trains being unloaded. None of these inmates that we have – well, certainly not of the eye witnesses that we have had here. We have had them unload potatoes; Mr. Friedman {3927|3928} said he was unloading potatoes. So here are these kids unloading potatoes not coke. And Vrba said he was unloading bodies and sardines and slivovitz and all this stuff.

So I don't mean to be facetious, but certainly, in order to make a point, did the S.S. unload the coal and did the prisoners unload the slivovitz and the potatoes Ludicrous. It is a common sense look at this problem.

Q. Have you examined the photographs of the hole in the roofs of Kremas II and III and Leichenkeller 1?

A. Yes, I have, extensively.

Q. And could you describe them?

A. It's – the roof is a very solid roof. It is reinforced by concrete, and the roof itself is reinforced concrete, and there were very, crude holes chipped into it, and the reinforcing rods were bent down and they were just hanging there in every which direction. It hasn't even been patched up. The rest of the building is in very good state of repair. It is a properly constructed building, the way I would, if I may say so, expect Germans to build buildings, you know. And then, suddenly, there is this awful hole or a series of holes in the ceiling with, of all things, wooden enclosures where you can see through and wooden lids on it, and we have heard testimony here from an expert in chemistry about the properties of Zyklon-B, and we have heard Dr. Vrba describe how the method was done by the S.S. men climbing up, carrying the can, and then dumping it in the hole. Well, he wouldn't have {3928|3929} gotten one step back from the hole or he would have been dead, because most of this stuff would have come up since it rises.

Q. Have you photographs of what you have referred to?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Where is the place that you have referred to located?

A. In Auschwitz. Auschwitz I. That's the old gas chamber.

Q. And the old gas chamber, have you seen photographs of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have photographs of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have them enlarged?

A. Yes, I did.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those, too, I'd like to show at maybe a later date.

Q. Having seen those photographs and enlargements of what is proposed to be the old gas chamber, what do you have to say about that?

A. The kindest thing I can say for them, it is a macabre if vicious joke and con game pulled off on tens of thousands, maybe millions of people who go to visit those sites out of respect for those who may have died there. And I think it is diabolical that people in this day and age should do that and continue to do that. It is misleading the public and if it is done in Canada, these people, I am quite sure, would be closed down and, most likely, would be standing where {3929|3930} I am standing right now.

Q. Have you made an inquiry as to the colour of the bodies of persons gassed with Zyklon-B?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Why did you do that?

A. Again, because some of the survivors' literature talks about how these bodies looked, and so I contacted a pathologist who has experience in, he told me, four cases of Zyklon-B poisoning, and he described to me in an affidavit, notarized affidavit, what it does to human bodies and how quickly it discolours the human body, and what the hallmarks are of a human body that has ingested or come in contact with Zyklon-B.

Q. And were those symptoms consistent with the stories you've heard?

A. Certainly not. And also these symptoms set in much later than some of the survivors have claimed, that some symptoms or parts of some of the symptoms allegedly set in. It takes quite some time before the symptoms are visible in the body, and they are usually first visible in the stomach area and the lining.

Q. Did you inquiry into the – for example, we've heard Mr. Urstein's evidence here in regard to hauling bodies. He said that it was from the same level as the ground. From your observations of the plans what do you say about that?

A. I don't know where he worked or where he was, but he certainly wasn't where he alleged he was, because those buildings were below ground, and {3930|3931} he said definitely, when asked repeatedly, he said they were level.

Q. What effect does that have on your belief in the gas chamber story?

A. Well, I have lived in a number of houses since I have been in Canada and if I lived in a place for a certain length of time I certainly know whether I walked upstairs into the kitchen or downstairs into the kitchen, you know. Certainly if I had such a horrific experience that I had to carry human bodies out, that would tend to, as Dr. Vrba said, give my memory training a jolt.

Q. Now, in your observations you said that you relied to some extent on what Udo Walendy discussed with you. What did he discuss in relation to fake photographs?

THE COURT: We will hear about those in the morning.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Nine thirty.

— The jury retires. 4:35 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 20, 1985.

(VOLUME XVIII FOLLOWS) {3931|3932}

VOLUME XVIII

FEBRUARY 20, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Good morning, Your Honour, may I proceed with my witness?

THE COURT: Yes. I was going to mention, if there is any motion to introduce evidence which is the subject of any past ruling on my part, that will be done in the absence of the jury while I hear argument and make a ruling, subject to that procedure.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

I was wondering, maybe Your Honour could assist me by directing me, I was going to proceed through the lettered exhibits and ask the witness if he relied on some of these informations. Would that pertain to —

THE COURT: It might very well pertain to that. I don't know. I'd have to hear from you as to which ones. Are you going to do all of them?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Which ones will you do?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will have to provide a list, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You can carry on now, I gather?

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, yes.

THE COURT: I think that should be done in the absence of the jury, and if you can let Mr. {3932|3933} Griffiths know, we can save some time. He may agree or not. That depends upon his views.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Anything else? Call in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 9:40 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, previously sworn.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, do you recall the evidence of Dr. Hilberg about the subject of 56,065 persons involved with the Strop report?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And do you recall Mr. Hilberg saying – Dr. Hilberg saying that is his figure of Jewish dead?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Did you conduct an inquiry into the trials of the war criminals in respect to that matter?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I now produce and show to you pages 256 and 296 of Volume V of the "Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuernberg [sic] Military Tribunals", and I ask you to go to the pages relative to the figure of 56,065. {3933|3934}

A. Page 256:

"A great number of Jews, who could not be counted, were exterminated by blowing up sewers and dugouts. 'Of the total of 56,065 Jews caught, about 7,000 were exterminated within the former ghetto in the course of the large-scale action, and 6,929 by transporting them to T II (an obvious reference to Treblinka), which means 14,000 Jews exterminated altogether. Beyond the number of 56,065 Jews an estimated number of five to six thousand were killed by explosions or in fires.'"

End of quote page 256.

Q. And that is from the Allied view of the matter; is that correct?

A. That's right. Contained in the War Trials of War Criminals Nuernberg Military Tribunals.

Q. Could you turn to page 256 and refer to the number of 56,065 persons?

A. It is on page 986. It says:

"He cannot free himself from his share in Brigadefuehrer Strop's shameful boast – 'The total number of Jews dealt with is 56,065, including Jews caught, and Jews whose extermination can be proved.'"

Q. From your observations of those {3934|3935} transcripts did you draw any conclusions as to the accuracy of the statement of Dr. Hilberg that the 56,065 figure represents Jewish dead?

A. If I may say without being unfair to Dr. Hilberg, this is, I feel, symptomatic of his way of looking at things to claim, just because fifty-six thousand people were caught in the ghetto and were arrested or detained or whatever, to refer to them as being killed. It's very clear from this particular document and there are many other supporting documents in books from England, from America, that say that fifty-six thousand people got killed.

MR. CHRISTIE: May. I file this as an exhibit, please, Your Honour, being Volume V of the Trials of War Criminals?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 95: Volume V of "Trials of War Criminals Before Nuernberg [sic] Military Tribunals".

Q. In respect to the whole of your thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?", what part did Camp Dachau play?

A. It is a major part.

Q. Why?

A. Because some of the major events and allegations in the Second World War centred around Dachau. Dachau was for many years the largest camp, concentration camp – it also being the main distribution centre for Red Cross parcels and so on. {3935|3936}

Q. I'd like to draw your attention to the magazine, "Vital Speeches", and the editorial article of Malcolm W. Bingay, "What I Saw In Europe", page 625, and ask you whether it refers to gas chambers in Dachau. Please read it loud.

A. It is a publication by the "Vital Speeches of the Day" and it is from August 3rd, 1945, and it certainly does talk about gas chambers. It quotes:

"The gas chamber which I had read about and heard about, as I have said, was not at Buchenwald. At Dachau we found one. It was nothing that was just thrown together for temporary use. That, to me, is one of the most hideous facts in the investigation.

It was a solidly built building. The cornerstone was cut to the year 1937; a great, brick structure; and over the top of it the words 'Brause Bad,' Shower Bath. Prisoners were told that they were to be taken to the bath. They had the idea that a bath, a shower, meant that they were to be liberated. They were given a little piece of soap and rag for a towel. They were put through these doors from which no man ever returned alive. The lobby looked very much like an American bath house with a {3936|3937} mosaic floor and wicker furniture. At the center was a big desk, and there were flowers on it – faded flowers.

These victims, fifty at a time, were told to strip. They were ushered into what they thought were showers. There were what looked like shower sprays, but no water ever came out. When they were all under these showers, the great iron door clanged shut. A heavy glass covered peephole was there for the guards to watch. The gas was turned on. All were dead within three of four minutes. Then great ventilators were turned on to cleanse the air of the poison, and other prisoners were moved in. The bodies were dragged to the crematories. It is estimated that these crematories burned as high as a thousand bodies a day."

Q. What's that indicate to you, a common sense view of the existence of gas chambers in Dachau?

A. There are numerous historians, expert writers, researchers, even the people who are running Dachau today as early as 1963 when I visited Dachau museum. The Dachau site, I was told, there were no gas chambers in Dachau. There were a number to see {3937|3938} for tourists.

Q. Now, when was the publication?

A. August 1st, 1945.

Q. I now show to you a book called, "The Liberators" by Yaffa Eliach and Brana Guerwitsch published in 1981. Are you familiar with this publication?

A. Yes, I am

Q. What does it indicate about gas chambers in Dachau and how they were used?

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file the "Vital Speeches" article, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 96: Article in publication "Vital Speeches" by Malcolm W. Bingay.

THE WITNESS: On page 37 of this book it states, under section 8, "Inspection of the Crematorium and the Gas Chamber":

"Next I was conducted to the gas chamber. This establishment consisted of three rooms, the dressing room, the gas chamber or shower and the office. Here, the unsuspecting prisoners after a long train trip were conducted under the subtle pretext of taking a shower before entering the enclosure. In the dressing room, they calmly undressed in batches of sixty, hung up their {3938|3939} clothes, men, women, and children together. Each was given a towel and soap and calmly conducted into the gas chamber. Over the entrance to the gas chamber was written in Jewish the word, 'Showers'. The subtle Nazi mind was at its height, in the gas chamber! The room itself was inlaid with a high quality, brown tile. The ceiling was covered with chrome-finished shower nozzles, two hundred of them. The door was tightly closed behind the fatal sixty; they waited quietly, calmly, soap in hand, for the water to clean their filthy bodies. Suddenly, the cruel Nazi hand pushed the gas lever! Cruel, deadly gases, not water, poured from the shower heads. In two minutes all were dead. The mad Nazi in the office then released the lever, peered through his glass window at the dead, sneered as he had done thousands of times before, and pushed another lever to suck out the gases. When the gases had been removed, a large door at the opposite end of the 'shower' was opened. SS troops would rush in, drag the bodies to the warehouse {3939|3940} to be thrown on the ever growing heap, while other S.S. men calmly gathered up the bars of soap and towels for future 'shower Guests'. While this was going on, but inches away in the undressing room, other victims happily undressed in expectation of their shower! All quiet, all was orderly – the peak of calmness. The doves warbled outside. The flowers were beautiful in the garden."

Q. Do you believe that is true?

A. I think it is a vicious lie and it is published in 1981 by respectable people.

Q. Why do you think it is not true?

A. Dr. Broszat, the man in charge of the Institute for contemporary History, and Germany's highest official in these matters, already in 1960 stated publicly in the German newspaper "Die Welt" there were no gassings, especially in Dachau, and not in the Altreich, meaning old Germany.

— EXHIBIT NO. 97: Photocopy of book, "The Liberators" by Eliach and Gurewitsch.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you an excerpt from "The War A Concise History 1939 – 1945" by Louis Snyder, published in New York in 1960. Could you find the part where it refers to {3940|3941} gassings at Dachau?

A. On page 426 it says:

"Perhaps the worst atrocity-center of all was Dachau, near Munich, where 32,000 were liberated on April 29, 1945. Here the method of execution was diabolical. Victims were provided with a towel and a piece of soap with orders to enter the Brausebad, the shower bath. They were lined up outside, marched into a room, ordered to undress. They expected water to flow from the showerheads in the ceilings. But, instead, gas descended upon them. As fast as they were killed, their bodies were removed through a back exit to the adjoining crematory, where five furnaces, each holding several bodies, worked around the clock. It was a model of Nazi efficiency! For this grisly business of wholesale slaughter a Polish scholar and attorney, Dr. Raphael Lemkin, invented a new word 'genocide,' derived from the Greek word genos (tribe, race) and the Latin cida [caedere] (kill or exterminate). Professor Lemkin called attention to Hitler's statement in Mein Kampf – 'the {3941|3942} greatest of spirits can be liquidated if its bearer is beaten with a rubber truncheon.'"

Q. Do you believe that that account of Dachau is true?

A. It seems to me that there must have been one rumour which has been repeated for the last thirty-five years by quite notable [sic] writers, and it was based on a lie, obviously.

Q. How does this relate to the matter of Auschwitz and the story about Auschwitz?

A. The German concentration camps were virtually all the same, same type of administration, and the same layout. Many of the building plans and huts and so on were repeated over and over again. The way of most military establishments. So what was true, in Dachau, was true for all the other camps.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this, please, Your Honour?

EXHIBIT NO. 98: Photocopied excerpt from "The War A Concise History 1939-1945" by Louis Snyder.

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "The Scourge Of The Swastika" by Lord Russell of Liverpool, published in 1954. I'd ask you if it provides a vivid description of gassings in Dachau.

A. On page 37, headed, "Epilogue" {3942|3943} – I won't read the whole page. It just says this was in Dachau, 1945, and I quote:

"Gone were the corpses which once lay in the annex waiting their turn to be burned when the gas chamber killed more than the ovens could hold: gone too were the lines of hapless humans waiting outside in the changing room for their turn to enter the lethal chamber. Gone they were forever; but their ghosts remained and their memories filled the air.

But there, clean and swept, still for all to see was the room where the victims undressed, the gas chamber itself with the peep-hole through which the operator watched for the last death agony so that he could switch on the electric fan to clear the air of its deathly fumes, the adjacent crematorium, and the iron-wheeled stretchers by which the corpses were brought to the oven's mouth, ..."

Q. And what does that indicate to you about Dachau?

A. I think it's becoming apparent that the story is very slightly – this is 1954, 1945, 1981 – it's the same lie, except repeated in a slightly {3943|3944} different way.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Ninety-nine.

— EXHIBIT NO. 99: Photocopied excerpt from "The Scourge Of The Swastika" by Lord Russell.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book entitled, or an excerpt from a book entitled, "This Must Not Happen Again! The Black Book of Fascist Horror" by Clark Kinnaird, published by Howell, Soskin, Publishers Inc., 1945. I'd ask you if that book contains an excerpt which indicates gassings in Dachau.

A. It contains a picture of an American soldier standing outside an alleged gas chamber with a death head emblem on it, and it says in German, "Careful. Gas. Danger to Life." And the caption reads:

"In this gas chamber at Dachau, 100 prisoners were executed at a time. Many hundreds were forced into it in a single day."

Q. From your study of photographs and other research into the field, do you recognize what is depicted in the picture called "The Gas Chamber"?

A. It is a fumigation chamber for clothes.

Q. For what?

A. For clothing. {3944|3945}

THE COURT: That will be Exhibit 100.

— EXHIBIT NO. 100: Photocopied excerpt from book "This Must, Not Happen Again!" by Clark Kinnaird.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "S.S. Dachau", printed by the United States Army. Would you identify the date of its publication, please?

A. It's a Pentagon publication from the O.S.S. Section, 7th Army, U.S.A., July 1945. And the foreword is written by William W. Quinn, Colonel, G.S.C., whatever that means. And it details on page 33, headlined "Executions", "Gas Chambers":

"The internees who were brought to Camp Dachau for the sole purpose of being executed were in most cases Jews and Russians. They were brought into the compound, lined up near the gas chambers, and were screened in a similar manner as internees who came to Dachau for imprisonment. Then they were marched to a room and told to undress. Everyone was given a towel and a piece of soap, as though they were about to take a shower. During this whole screening process, no hint was ever given that they were to be executed, for the {3945|3946} routine was similar upon the arrival of all internees at the camp.

Then they entered the gas chamber. Over the entrance, in large black letters, was written 'Brause Bad' (showers). There were about 15 shower faucets suspended from the ceiling from which gas was then released. There was one large chamber, capacity of which was 200, and five smaller gas chambers, capacity of each being 50. It took ap- proximately 10 minutes for the execution. From the gas chamber, the door led to the Krematory to which the bodies were removed by internees who were selected for the job. The dead bodies were then placed in 5 furnaces, two to three bodies at a time."

And then it goes on to talk about crematories.

Q. What does that indicate to you about Dachau and the subject of gas chambers?

A. Well, that is, officially, a United States publication and it comes from July 1945. The first public mention we have in August 1st, "Vital Speeches" article, so I think we are getting very close to the source of this misinformation.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this, {3946|3947} Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 101.

— EXHIBIT NO. 101: Booklet, "S. S. Dachau", Pentagon publication.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a translation and photocopy of a letter from Dr. M. Broszat. Just read the pertinent portion. Identify the author, the date of publication and the pertinent portion on the issue of the gas chamber, if you would, please.

A. The article is by Dr. Martin Broszat, Institut für Zeitgeschichte, München, which is the Institute for Contemporary History in Munich.

Q. Can you describe that for the benefit of the jury, just how official is this organization?

A. This is an organization of experts. It is an official German institute attached to the Institution of Munich in Bavaria and is called upon to render expert opinion, supply documents in court cases of this type. And Dr. Broszat is a frequent expert witness in these proceedings.

Q. So what does he say about gas chambers in Dachau?

A. The article appeared in "Die Zeit". This is from the U.S. edition 26th August, 1960, No. 34. And "Die Zeit", in Germany, is the paper of record. And the translated version reads:

"Neither in Dachau nor in Bergen-Belsen nor in Buchenwald Jews or other prisoners were gassed. The {3947|3948} gas chamber in Dachau was never fully completed and 'put into operation'.

Hundreds of thousands of camp inmates who perished in Dachau or in other concentration camps in the territory of the Altreich (German Reich in its frontiers of 1937) had predominantly fallen victim of the catastrophic hygienic and supply conditions. Alone in the twelve months from July 1942 up to June 1943, 100,812 persons died of sickness and starvation in all concentration camps, according to the official statistics of the SS."

And it goes on to say:

"The mass extermination of the Jews by gassing commenced in 1941/1942 and took place exclusively at a few places that had been selected for this particular purpose, and with the aid of the respective technical facilities, above all in the occupied Polish territories (but nowhere in the Altreich): in Auschwitz-Birkenau, in Sobibor on the Bug, in Treblinka, Chelmnno and Belzec. It was there, but not in Bergen-Belsen, Dachau or Buchenwald that those mass extermination facilities {3948|3949} camouflaged as shower baths or – disinfection rooms were constructed of which mention is made in your article."

This was in response to an article that had appeared in "Die Welt [Welt]".

"This necessary differentiation will certainly alter not one little bit the criminal nature of the erection of concentration camps. However, it may help to clarify the fatal confusion which is caused by the fact that many an incorrigible person would avail himself of an argument which is correct but polemically separated from its context, and that, in reply to this argument, people would hurry to the scene who have a correct general judgement of the subject, but who base themselves on false or erroneous [sic] information."

Q. What do you derive from that letter?

A. That certainly Dr. Broszat, without equivocation, states that there were no gas chambers in Dachau, Buchenwald or Bergen-Belsen, which means that every book, every article, every film that is made has been made and is still being made and is shown in the western world is nothing but a bunch of lies. {3949|3950}

Q. What do you derive from the last part of this letter pertaining to his statements about the Eastern camps?

A. Somebody clutching at straws, and just as they took twenty years or fifteen years to admit that there were no gas chambers in Bergen-Belsen, Dachau and Buchenwald where people were hanged for operating gas chambers, I am told, they will come around and admit sooner or later there were no gas chambers in Sobibor, Treblinka or anywhere else.

Q. Do you know who Stephen F. Pinter was?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who was he?

A. He was an attorney. I believe he was an investigative attorney in the Nuremberg War Crimes proceedings.

Q. How did you become aware of him?

A. He signed an affidavit that he never – that he did not believe that six million Jews were killed in Germany, and that there were gas chambers, I believe. And it is quoted in the booklet, “Did Six Million Really Die?”. I had friends who have corresponded with him. I received photocopies of the correspondence and I am told that Mr. Pinter is very much alive in California today, age ninety-six.

Q. Are you aware of his publication of a letter in “Our Sunday Visitor” in 1959?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. I now produce and show to you a photocopy of the letter of Stephen F. Pinter of the 14th {3950|3951} of June, 1959, from “Our Sunday Visitor”. What does that say pertaining to the gas chambers in Dachau?

A. It's headed —

THE COURT: Excuse me. The previous article will be Exhibit 102.

— EXHIBIT NO. 102: Article in “Die Zeit” August 26th, 1960, by Dr. M. Broszat.

THE WITNESS: It is headed, “What Our Readers Think”, headline, “German atrocities”, and I read the pertinent part:

“In addition, false statements appear in the Pritchett article, such as the reference to gas chambers at camp Dachau. I was in Dachau for 17 months after the war, as a U.S. War Department Attorney, and can state that there was no gas chamber at Dachau. What was shown to visitors and sightseers there and erroneously described as a gas chamber, was a crematory. Nor was there a gas chamber in any of the other concentration camps in Germany. We were told that there was a gas chamber at Auschwitz, but since that was in the Russian zone of occupation, we were not permitted to investigate, since the Russians would not permit it. {3951|3952}

Pritchett also uses the old propaganda myth that millions of Jews were killed by the national socialists. From what I was able to determine during six postwar years in Germany and Austria, there were a number of Jews killed, but the figure of a million was certainly never reached. I interviewed thousands of Jews, former inmates of concentration camps in Germany and Austria, and consider myself as well qualified as any man on this subject.

Stephen F. Pinter

St. Louis, Mo.”

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 103.

— EXHIBIT NO. 103: Photocopy of letter in “Our Sunday Visitor”, June 14, 1959, by Stephen F. Pinter.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you have your researchers in 1974 inquire of Stephen F. Pinter by communication?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And did your researchers receive communication from him? {3952|3953}

A. Yes, he wrote back. I have a photocopy of his letter on his own stationery with his address here.

Q. And do you know the person to whom that letter was directed?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And he has assisted in appreciation of your research?

A. Yes, he has. For many years.

Q. And could you read the portions pertinent or pertaining to the subject of the Dachau gas chambers?

THE COURT: Just before you do that

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. What year is this letter?

MR. CHRISTIE: '74.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And this is a personal letter to a researcher of Mr. Zundel?

MR. CHRISTIE: Correct.

Q. You were endeavouring to contact Stephen Pinter, I gather, through your researchers?

A. That's right.

Q. And he communicated with this letter?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. All right. Could you read the portion referable [sic] to the gas chamber in Dachau?

A. “As I recall there was no gas chamber at Dachau, and in talking to former inmates of Camp Dachau, one of them a Polish priest, who {3953|3954} during my stay at Dachau, was celebrating Mass daily in the Camp Chapel. I seem to recall seeing the room pictured and labeled ‘Gas Chamber at Dachau’, at the time I was there but am not sure, after all of these years.”

And he goes on and says:

Q. Thank you. In the course of your research did you get a booklet called, “After The Battle” respecting the camp of Dachau. {3954|3955}

THE COURT: The previous document will be Exhibit 104.

— EXHIBIT NO. 104: Letter dated Marsh 22nd, 1974, by Stephen F. Pinter.

Q. Does this booklet indicate a problem in respect to that issue of the gas chamber?

A. This is copyrighted [sic] 1980, and it has an extensive section with many photographs, some in colour, some using old photographs and recent photographs.

Q. I'd just like to draw your attention to the issue of the gas chamber that was alleged in some of the literature, and ask you what it says about that now.

A. It shows the same door that was shown in the film that we saw in this —

Q. “Nazi Concentration Camp” film?

A. That's right.

Q. Does it show the door with the words “Brause Bad”?

A. Yes. It shows sequences of this.

Q. Well, please read what it says underneath to describe what the picture now says?

A. It says:

And then it says:

And it shows one of the authors standing in front of the alleged gas chamber, this time with the German writings, the death's head skull and crossbones removed.

Q. Please read now what they say about gas chambers.

A. "The actual gas chamber is examined by medical corpsmen of the 42nd 'Rainbow' Division. It was disguised as a shower room and the painted inscription 'Brausebad' remains above the entrance door" (photo to centre right). Today the notices and associated literature in Dachau state that the room (above right) was never used for its intended purpose."

Q. What do you derive from that in your understanding and common sense?

A. That it has taken from 1945 to 1980 to finally reach a publication that you could buy {3956|3957} on newsstands that Dachau, in effect, had no operating gas chambers for people.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 105.

— EXHIBIT NO. 105: Booklet, "After the Battle", No. 27.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called "Dachau Concentration Camp" published under the authority, I think, of the International Committee of Dachau, 65, rue de Haerne, Brussels. I'd ask you to indicate from that what you derive about gas chambers in Dachau.

A. This is a publication which one can purchase at Dachau today, and this organization is made up of former Dachau inmates and friends of those people. And it says on page 15:

"In 1942 a gas chamber was also built in the Dachau concentration camp, but inexplicably, it was never used. It was located within the new crematorium, a larger building whose construction with four ovens became necessary when the first crematorium, which had only one oven, proved inadequate."

THE COURT: 106.

— EXHIBIT NO. 106: Book, "Dachau Concentration Camp" {3957|3958}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Do you know what page you are reading from?

A. Page 15. I put a little dog[ear] in it. It is just that there is writing on them. So I thought it was the ruling that I shouldn't do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to now produce and show to you a book called, "What was it like in the Concentration Camp at Dachau?" Are you familiar with that booklet?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What's it say about gassings in Dachau?

A. It is a book by the Auxiliary Bishop of Munich, Dr. Johann Neuhausler, who was there.

Q. He was there. How was he there?

A. As an inmate.

Q. What does it say about gassings in Dachau?

A. It says at page 29:

"Now we come to the sad story about the exterminations. Besides the cases of arbitrary flogging to death and direct murdering of individual prisoners by brutal SS-men, camp-seniors, block-seniors and apartment-seniors and even by the Capos of the infirmary, general massacres and individual executions took place at the order of the Gestapo {3958|3959} and the high Nazi leaders. General massacres took place above all in the so-called Invalids-transport which had no other purpose than death by gassing. As already mentioned, Dachau had, in the last year, also its own gas chamber. But its 'showers' were never used. Instead, the inmates of the Dachau camp were sent to Linz in Austria to be gassed."

And then it goes on to some figures.

Q. Did you try to find out about the allegation of gassings in Linz, in Austria?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Have you had the benefit of information on that?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Who?

A. Dr. Faurisson for one. He was referring to Hartheim Castle.

Q. Who is?

A. Dr. Faurisson. And this author here, but in Linz it was the only institution where it alleged Hartheim Castle, but it falls under the matter that

Dr. Broszat says because Linz is very much in the Altreich.

THE COURT: Exhibit 107.

— EXHIBIT NO. 107: Book, "What was it like in the Concentration Camp at Dachau?" By Dr. J. Neuhausler [sic]. {3959|3960}

Q. Have you consulted Dr. Faurisson about what he found in Linz, in Hartheim Castle?

A. He said that he found a very small room. He had the slides to —

Q. Have you seen the slides?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And have you seen what it depicts?

A. I want to correct myself. Linz was in Austria, so therefore it would be outside the Altreich.

THE COURT: What is that?

THE WITNESS: That means the pre-1937 border, Your Honour.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you seen the photographs of the Hartheim Castle alleged gas chamber?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Could you describe what it looked like?

A. It is just basically a small room in a castle, castle with thick walls. There's a door on it. It doesn't look anything near like a gas chamber that was used in the United States, for instance, for executing prisoners.

Q. Are there windows?

A. There are glass windows that prisoners could look out, or the gasers could look in, yes.

Q. And do you know how many people are alleged to have been gassed there?

A. They ranked from one million and a half to a few thousand. I believe when I was in Dachau {3960|3961} in 1963 they said one thousand three hundred and some people were sent to Hartheim Castle. They usually referred to it like a euthanasia centre, but I am not too sure on that figure.

Q. In respect to Dachau I now produce and show to you "The National Geographic Magazine" of 1947 and I ask you what it indicates on the killings in Dachau. How many people does it say were killed in Dachau?

A. It says in The National Geographic article:

"At Dachau, where the Nazis cremated more than a quarter of a million civilian victims ..."

Q. How many cremation ovens were there in Dachau, to your knowledge?

A. Well, the story is very confusing. We have heard already quite a number of claims in these various articles. Some of these crematories were built but were never used, apparently, by the end of the War, so it depends entirely on whose stories you believe. The exterminationists take a rather high figure. The people who believe that Dachau is just a concentration camp take a lower figure.

Q. What is your view of the matter?

A. I think there were three or four crematories. There was a new one, there was an old one and some new ones added.

Q. What about the quarter of a million victims mentioned in The National Geographic of 1947? {3961|3962}

A. Well, 250,000 people, to cremate that in the facilities that are available in Dachau, even if we were to use all the facilities which were not ready by the end of the War, mathematically you couldn't reach the figure.

Q. Have you collected, through your research attached to that, a series of items referable [sic] to Dachau?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And could you indicate what they show you in respect to the claims about Dachau?

A. I have a fairly thick and bulging file on Dachau, and Dachau was — I have been there twice — a very well-constructed, well-run camp that, if I were to describe how it really looked, and some of the photographs that I have seen, there were large chapels for people to have religious services in with crucifixes on the wall for different denominations. There were religious services. There were tree-lined streets, flower beds, kitchens with stainless steel laboratories described, large milk cans, described in the Bishop Neuha[ä]us[er's book. So to all extents and purposes it was a German concentration camp that was run efficiently, and as the statistics clearly show, terrible death numbers were reached in epidemics, usually typhus epidemics, especially towards the end of the War. More people died in Dachau from January, February and March in 1945 than did in the entire existence of that camp back to 1933 or '34.

Q. Why is this relevant to your understanding or belief about Auschwitz? {3962|3963}

A. I could be flippant and say if you have studied one you have studied them all. I don't want to be that way. The administration of the German concentration camps, the people that were sent there were interchanged. They were trained the same way. The facilities were virtually the same. So why would they have rather nice, clean comfortable, under the circumstances, camps in Ravensbrück, for instance, the way we have heard from Bormann, or Dachau in some of these things here? It doesn't make any sense. The only sense that I can derive from it is that Chelmno, Sobibor, Treblinka and also Auschwitz are out of reach for Western investigators, and since there is communist control in those areas, these people can get away with lying in a massive scale, the way they lie about propaganda and everything else.

Q. You are familiar with the photograph in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" which refers to a bunch of – it says, "Smiling faces on release day". And then we see the film with all the corpses and it tends to make one wonder.

Have you checked to see if that photograph was actually a photograph of liberation at Dachau? I am referring to page 25.

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "Deliverance Day The Last Hours at Dachau". Would you examine that to see – I'd like to just file page 70 of the January 1947 edition of the National Geographic referable [sic] to the quarter of a million figure at Dachau. {3963|3964}

THE COURT: May I see the whole thing?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. There's other things attached, but I didn't – unless Your Honour feels I should, I wasn't going to file them because they are somewhat unrelated.

Q. Do you find a photograph in that book pertaining to the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes. The photograph is actually reproduced in smaller form in a different cropping on 216.

Q. What do you mean by a different cropping?

A. Just the segment of the photograph that the author in this book, the publisher, the author and his books chose. But I have numerous different crops or sections from this photographs [sic]. There's a very good one.

Q. Well, now, listen, please. Does this photograph on page 25 represent, or is it unrepresentative of the photographs you've seen?

A. No.

Q. Is there a cropping of a good part with people smiling as opposed to some other part?

A. This is a United States Army photograph taken on the day of liberation, and it shows smiling, happy, healthy faces, quite round.

Q. No. If you understand what I mean, is this cropping, the picture on page 25, is it unrepresentative of the whole scene that you have seen? {3964|3965}

A. No, it is not. It is a true representation. The reproduction isn't very good, but I have seen the actual photograph from the National Archives of the United States Army, and it shows that scene except in a larger frame.

Q. With more people in it?

A. With more people in it, but these people are definitely healthy.

Q. All right. You have the photograph there?

A. Yes, I do. On page 216.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that, please?

THE COURT: The National Geographic, I think the whole thing should go in. 108.

— EXHIBIT NO. 108: Photocopied excerpts from "The National Geographic Magazine" January 1947.

THE COURT: Now, this is what?

MR. CHRISTIE: This is an excerpt of the book, "Deliverance Day The Last Hours at Dachau" by Michael Selzer, published by J.B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia and New York, in 1978.

THE COURT: 109.

— EXHIBIT NO. 109: Photocopied excerpts from book, "Deliverance Day" by Michael Selzer.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, there will {3965|3966} be a short adjournment for ten minutes. The jury is excused.

— The jury retires. 10:35 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 10:40 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Did you, prior to the time when you were aware of any charge against you, write to the Attorney General and ask for guidelines?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I now produce and show to you a copy of a letter of November 10, 1983, to the US Honourable Roy McMurtry. Who wrote that letter?

A. I did.

Q. Why?

A. There was agitation, ongoing agitation in the media here in Canada, and it was based on statements made by Mr. McMurtry in Parliament here, in Ontario, and he had mentioned that senior staff members of his Ministry were looking at all my material.

Q. Well, never mind what he mentioned. {3966|3967} Please tell us why you wrote the letter and what the letter indicates.

A. It is pertinent to why I wrote it. I said, "If you are already looking at my material with six senior members of your staff, then have the common decency to inform me what the guidelines are that you gave those people. And if you share those with me and other members in the media, then we won't run afoul of the law. If you won't, it will be like a case of entrapment."

I never heard from Mr. McMurtry.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like the witness to read the letter as an indication of his attempt —

THE COURT: Have you seen the letter, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Please read the letter.

A. It is addressed to The Honourable Roy McMurtry.

"Dear Mr. McMurtry: Re: Guidelines On 'Hate Literature'

It is dated 10 November, 1983:

"I have observed your recent moves in regard to so-labelled 'hate literature' by your appointment of Patrick Lawlor who is to investigate this matter in order to tighten up existing laws on thought-crime. Politically, you were astute in {3967|3968} assigning a former member of the opposition this unenviable, antidemocratic task, for it let you off the hook in regard to your own constituents, many of whom are, it seems, of the Jewish and/or Zionistic persuasions.

You have been quoted in the press and in Hansard in reference to your discussions with some five federal ministers of justice and your constant consultation with the committee of lawyers in your ministry regarding the content of my writings which your ministry has been assiduously studying for years. You have declared publicly that these ongoing studies of my publications are being conducted with the purpose of discovering grounds sufficient for the laying of criminal charges against me and against Samisdat Publishers Limited and you have unjustly and erroneously gone on to accuse me of being 'behind a lot of the very vicious material that has been disseminated', although you yourself admit that this is merely a belief on your part and that insufficient proof exists with which to substantiate your allegations. {3968|3969} I have at my disposal a copy of The Criminal Code of Canada and I am quite familiar with the content of the so-called Hate Law or Thought-Crime Statutes of section 281 et al., but as I am not a lawyer, I may not be fully aware of certain implications which your own lawyers are using in their perusal of my writings.

Pending the outcome of Mr. Lawlor's investigation and report (the attached copies of news clippings refer), I would like to suggest and request that your committee of lawyers supply me with their guidelines and criteria on 'hate' content so that I may apply them to my writings in advance of publication. Similarly, these guidelines should be available to all writers, educators, media representatives, etc. so that everyone in the community can know exactly what the rules are in Ontario. I make this request solely in the interests of insuring greater community harmony, the lessening of inter-ethnic tensions and misunderstandings and for the relief of current anxieties and uncertainties on the subject of 'hate literature'.

If your motive is really the elimi- {3969|3970} nation of so-called 'hate literature' from our society and not actually the malicious persecution, entrapment and victimisation of Ernst Zundel and Samisdat, then I see no reason why you would be reluctant or embarrassed to provide me and the general public with information about your thought-crime guidelines; otherwise you are keeping us all in ignorance of the law as it is currently interpreted and enforced. I hope you do not think that this request for a look at your guidelines on 'hate' is impertinent or peculiar. The various ministries of revenue, for example, provide as a matter of course guidelines for businesses which advise them from time to time about items that are taxable or tax exempt and about tax accounting practices which are acceptable or unacceptable. Since your ministry's guidelines are already being applied internally within your ministry, the cost of making these guidelines public would be far less to the tax payer than would be the initiation and prosecution of a thought-crime trial against a hapless member of the public who has inadvertently [sic] {3970|3971} transgressed the guidelines out of ignorance, rather than malice. I know that Anglo-Saxon justice stipulates that 'ignorance of the law is no excuse', but for you, whose mandate is the interpretation and enforcement of the law, there can be no justification for keeping the reality of the law a secret. In view of your preference for private communication via the mass media, I shall reciprocate by making this communication available to representatives of the media."

Signed, "Yours very truly, Ernst Zundel".

Q. Were you at that time aware that you were going to be charged?

A. No. I found out on a television programme, a debate with Sabina Citron, that I was going to be charged, some time later.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 110.

— EXHIBIT NO. 110: Photocopy of letter from Ernst Zundel to Mr. Roy McMurtry, 10 November, 1983.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you have communication with the Jewish author J.G. Burg? {3971|3972}

A. Frequently.

Q. In 1972 before this event arose?

A. I did.

Q. What were his remarks? You told us how many books he published.

A. Twelve.

Q. Could you read the letter that he sent you in 1982 about your work?

A. It's in German. I —

Q. Have you translated it?

A. I didn't. I had the translation.

Q. Is the translation attached?

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Mr. Christie, I wonder if I can ask what this letter goes to? If it's Mr. Burg's comment on Mr. Zundel's work, how is that relevant to the issue of either the truth of the material before the jury, or how is it relevant to Mr. Zundel's belief in the truth?

MR. CHRISTIE: In answer to the first question, J.G. Burg is an author who wrote extensively of which the accused is well aware on the subject of the Holocaust, and he was aware of Mr. Zundel's work and the publication in question. On the second question, the expressions in the letter with which I am well familiar express the approbation of the content of Mr. Zundel's work in such a way that it would be my argument, at least, that Mr. Zundel could assume that J.G. Burg, from this writing, was expressing approval. {3972|3973}

I think I could quite safely say that and it indicates support, understanding and approval, — this bears on racial and social tolerance, because it comes from a Talmud scholar and a Jewish author.

THE COURT: Has the Crown seen the letter?

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm afraid not, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Well, perhaps you could show it to the Crown and we will go on to something else after he sees it. He may change his mind, he may not. I don't know.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Thank you, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In respect to the photograph we were discussing earlier, I now produce and show a photograph that purports to come from the National Archives. Are you familiar with this?

THE COURT: Which National Archives?

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry. The United States National Archives. The address is on the back, the Depository, DAVA Centre.

Q. Could you give the address, please?

A. It is the Still Photographic Depository, Building 168, Anacostia Naval Station, Washington, D.C., zip code 20374.

Q. How was that obtained?

A. I sent a researcher there to get the original photograph that was in that book, "Did {3973|3974} Six Million Really Die?"

Q. And have you checked it?

A. I have.

Q. And have you compared it?

A. It's the identical photograph, except it is the complete photograph as it was taken, an eight by ten print, 1945.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Is that the one that shows the American flag?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it is a white flag, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: It is a white flag.

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe I am mistaken.

THE COURT: The one I saw is an American flag in one of the exhibits, one of the early exhibits. It's liberation, isn't it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is liberation.

THE COURT: What does the photograph show?

MR. CHRISTIE: Just the faces, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, is that the whole photograph?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's all I have, Your Honour.

THE COURT: It's all you have. All right. Yes. That can be an exhibit. 111.

— EXHIBIT NO. 111: Photocopied photograph — liberation of Dachau. {3974|3975}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You've said some things about worship services, religious services in Dachau. I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "Christ in Dachau or Christ Victorious" by John Lenz. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where did you get that information?

A. I obtained it via Professor Dr. App, now deceased.

Q. Is that Austin App?

A. Austin App, yes

Q. What is the date of publication?

A. There is a stamp in here that says, "Georgetown University Libraries, July 5, 1972", I think.

Q. What does it indicate about the availability of religious services in Dachau?

A. It is by John M. Lenz. The whole booklet has eighty photographs in it and it shows camp life, especially religious life in the camp, since it's a religious publication. It shows large chapels, religious chapels with pianos or organs beside the altars, candles on the altars, lots of flowers and religious relics. It also contains that photograph again, the day of liberation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit that, please?

THE COURT: 112.

— EXHIBIT NO. 112: Photocopied excerpt from Book, "Christ in Dachau or Christ Victorious" by John M. Lenz. {3975|3976}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now show you the cover of "The Day Of The Americans" by Nerin E. Gun. Are you familiar with that booklet?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. First of all, what does it indicate about the photograph in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. The same photograph is on the cover of Mr. Gun's own book. Again, an enlarged section clearly showing the faces.

Q. Yes.

A. And it is the story of Mr. Gun, who was there at the time, and he was an eye witness to the events at Dachau. He describes it and he also was present when the German guards were murdered by the Americans.

Q. How many?

A. I have forgotten, but could be well over a hundred, two, three hundred.

Q. Do you know how they were dealt with?

A. They were machine-gunned to death.

Q. By whom?

A. By American soldiers. It also has the Brausebad photographs again and so on.

Q. What does it say about the gas chambers in Dachau; are you familiar with that?

A. It intimates that the Brausebad was, yeah, same photo, same everything.

Q. Have you studied this issue of the machine gunning of the guards at Dachau?

A. Extensively, yes. {3976|3977}

Q. Are there many sources?

A. There are sources in England. The one is already introduced into evidence called "Dachau" by the Historical Publication deals extensively with it, then the German writer Eric Kirmayer (ph) [Erich Kermayer] deals extensively with it, and Gun deals with it.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 113.

— EXHIBIT NO. 113: Cover and photocopied excerpts from book, "The Day Of The Americans" by Nerin E. Gun.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now show you a magazine entitled, Paris ..., February 1965. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What part is referable [sic] to the matter of dealing with the guards at Dachau?

A. It shows a famous double[-]spread photograph.

Q. Could you turn it towards His Honour, please?

A. That is also in the Gun book and in many other books, and it shows the S.S. as they have just been mowed down, and there is a machine gunner in the middle of the picture, others with their rifles at the ready, four Germans are still standing. Some have their hands raised and the others are dead.

Q. Do you know what Allied Army or {3977|3978} unit was responsible for that?

A. I believe it was the Rainbow Division.

Q. How does that relate to your understanding of the ability to defend the accusations at Nuremberg?

A. Well, within a few miles of Nuremberg here were — American troops cold bloodedly murdering prisoners who had surrendered within custody. Not one of these men, to my knowledge, who murdered these persons in the Eastern front, some of them on crutches and with bandages still, was ever charged or convicted against the crime that they have committed against these Germans. So there seems to be one set of — and one rule of laws applied to Germans and that is, that you kill whomever you can lay your hands on for transgressions like gassing people at Dachau when you didn't have a gas chamber, and you shoot

German prisoners without trial, with machine guns, without due process. I think it shows utter hypocrisy, lawlessness.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I exhibit that, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: What language is it in?

THE WITNESS: In French, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The captions are in French. The photographs are neutral, I guess.

THE WITNESS: The same photograph is in the Nerin Gun book.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I will withdraw that. {3978|3979}

Q. The Nerin Gunn [sic] book is in English.

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do you read French?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Did you obtain, through your research, a copy of "An American in Rome" by Michael Stern?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. How does that bear upon the issue of proof and legality in regards to the proceedings of the liberation at Dachau?

A. It has, a section in it, Chapter 5, "A Nightmare called Dachau", and also the liberation, and it describes in detail the murder of the East Germans, how they were beaten to death. Some of them were shot to death by the American liberators and by camp inmates.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that as an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 114: Photocopied excerpt from book, "An American In Rome", by Michael Stern.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend has had a chance to look at the letter and the translation, Your Honour. I think I am safe in saying that he does not object to its translation.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. I concede that.

THE COURT: Yes. 115. {3979|3980}

— EXHIBIT NO. 115: Photocopy of German letter and English translation of letter to Mr. Zundel from Mr. Burg, dated 18.11.1982.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: For the benefit of the jury, Mr. Zundel, I'd like to have you read those portions of the letter of Joseph Burg that pertain to your belief about your work as to its value. It is a short letter. Perhaps you can read it.

A. It says:

"You are to be admired as a man struggling for truth and a sincere German-Jewish reconciliation — so much more as you have to overcome much trouble on that. It's a pity that we over here have not a single man of your kind, but notwithstanding your efficient capacity radiates even into our area, and we feel sure this will be helpful to enlighten some obscurities. The spokesmen of those alleged 6 million gassed Jews have no legitimation whatsoever and they do not keep to the command of the bible".

And he quotes a Bible passage.

Q. Please quote it.

A. "Leviticus 3, 19, 18: says clearly 'Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of {3980|3981} thy people; but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self.'

Also the Talmud says that 'every good Goi is a fellow-man' according to Tosefta ( Supplement) Sanhedrin 13-2:

'The righteous of all peoples will have to share the future world.'

Your untiring activity is much more but sheer righteousness, because of so much trouble you are forced to overcome.

We read in the Talmud chapter Joma 23a:

'He who forgives the faults of his fellow-men, will be forgiven, too.'

Please give pardon to those few Zionist-Nazis who molest you. If they would be correct Zionists they would work in Palestine. Ben Gurion, the Pope of Zionism, said that all Zionists living outside Israel are hypocrites acting to the detriment of Israel.

Go ahead — the future belongs to truth and justice.

With my very best wishes, Very Sincerely, Joseph Burg".

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: It is already an exhibit. {3981|3982}

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry.

Q. Now, in regard to the concentration camp of Mauthausen, have you undertaken a study of that?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you obtain the literature pertaining to that camp?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. From the authorities that are administrating it?

A. Yes.

Q. And I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "Mauthausen", official guide. I'd like you to direct your attention to what it indicates about gas chambers in Mauthausen.

A. It says on page 6, paragraph 12, "The gas chamber" headline:

"The gas chamber was camouflaged as bathrooms with showers and sluices. Cyclone B gas streamed into the gas chamber from the control room through a shaft (situated in the corner on the right: it was removed by the SS in April 1945).

Q. I think that is the relevant portion. I now produce and show to you another booklet from the Mauthausen Concentration Camp Guide.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could this be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 116. {3982|3983}

— EXHIBIT NO. 116: Booklet "Mauthausen".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Just read the part referable [sic] to gas chambers.

A. It says, "Guide to the former concentration camp of Mauthausen", and it has a number of stations where the visitors are directed to, and it says, No. 9, "The gas-chamber"[:]

"This was arranged for purposes of deception as a bath-room containing showers and sinks. It was connected with the room of the ss-henchmen by a tunnel and a window (which was adapted in the right corner). From – here they were able to watch the situation in the gas-chamber and to observe the effect of the poison-gas streaming through the tunnel into the gas-chamber. Before leaving the camp in May 1945 the SS-crew removed the gas installations and the window was walled up."

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 117.

— EXHIBIT NO. 117: Booklet, "Guide to the former concentration camp of Mauthausen".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you Chapter 9 of Yehuda Bauer's book, {3983|3984} "History of the Holocaust". What does it say on gassings in Mauthausen?

A. On page 209 it says:

"Although no gassings took place at Mauthausen many Jews, as well as non-Jews, died there in a process the Nazis called 'extermination through labour.'"

Q. What impression does that common sense impression leave you about the issue of gas chambers in Mauthausen?

A. We have been told in this courtroom that Yehuda Bauer is one of the foremost historians of the Holocaust, and I believe he lives today in Israel and he says, in his own book, "The History of the Holocaust", that no gassings took place. Yet the officials of that camp, once again, are showing people gas chambers and talk about gas chambers. He says there were none.

Q. How does that affect your belief?

A. I think that a pattern begins to emerge, and I have to have my nose pointed at one fact only so many times before it even clicks with me that there is a lie being told to me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: 118.

— EXHIBIT NO. 118: Photocopied excerpt, page 209, from book "A History of the Holocaust" by Yehuda Bauer. {3984|3985}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, did you undertake the study of the documents at Nuremberg respecting the death rates at Mauthausen?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I now produce and show to you the Staff Evidence Analysis of Document 499-PS. Where did you obtain this?

A. This comes from the National Archives in Washington.

Q. How did you get it?

A. By sending a researcher there who did that work for me.

Q. What does it indicate about the daily death rate in Mauthausen in the years up to and including 1945?

A. It has a complete breakdown of the death rate from 1939, 1940, '41, '42, '43, '44 and '45. And in 1939, the daily death rate average was 1.2 inmates. In 1940 it was 10.5. In 1941, 21.1. In 1942, 30.7. During the typhus epidemic, in 1943, 23.2. 1944 it was 39.4, and in 1945, during the collapse of Germany, it was 208.6 per day.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 119.

— EXHIBIT NO. 119: Photocopy of Staff Evidence Analysis of Document No. 499-PS.

MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a letter from the Administrative Director, {3985|3986} City of Dachau. Are you familiar with this letter?

A. Yes, I am. His name is Rahm, and he is the managing director.

Q. And how did that letter – how did you get that letter?

A. I had someone write to Dachau and ask if there were gas chambers in Dachau, and if they had any documents either way, and the response was –

Q. Is there a translation provided?

A. Yes, there is a translation.

Q. How long is the letter?

A. One sentence.

Q. Would you like to see that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Please read the one sentence translation.

A. "In response to your inquiry, I hereby inform you that no gassing of prisoners occurred in the former concentration camp of Dachau."

Signed, "Rahm, Administrative Director, City of Dachau".

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 120.

—EXHIBIT NO. 120: Letter from Rahm, Administrative Director, City of Dachau {3986|3987}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, in your research on the subject of the Holocaust have you come across reasons for disbelief of it from literature of the established authors?

A. Yes, sir. I have.

Q. And what effect did that have upon your belief on the Holocaust?

A. Well, I certainly feel justified in looking at every alleged piece of evidence or new evidence or new book or publication that come forth with a critical eye.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "Adolf Hitler" by John Toland and I ask you to look at the photograph on page ...

What do you now have in your hands?

A. Two books by John Toland, famous expert on European history, certainly Second World War. He has written five major works on Adolf Hitler and the Third Reich. I have seen him interviewed many times on television and heard him on radio, seen many articles by him and have his books.

Q. In respect to the issue of the Holocaust, is there a particular picture and a caption in that book that is relevant?

A. Yes. In the pocket book version, which is two volumes in one – the hard-cover version has two volumes – on page 1007 there is a picture of Adolf Hitler shaking hands with Heinrich Himmler above the usually skinny bodies and so on and skeletons photograph, and it is captioned:

"On October 10, 1943, Hitler congratulates Himmler, who has privately revealed progress in implementing the Final Solution."

The caption is important – October 10, 1943, and this particular book was issued in 1976; the hard-cover edition, it came also out in 1976 and under the same picture it has a different caption, and it says:

"October 10, 1943, Hitler congratulates Himmler who has just revealed that six million Jews have been exterminated."

At the end of it it says, "U.S. Army".

Q. What does that indicate to you that affects your belief?

A. Same author, same books, same photographs. It puts the death rate of the Jews already in 1943 on the 10th of October as having been completed, that six million Jews were already killed, which Dr. Vrba and certainly Dr. Hilberg would dispute because they claim that the killing went on right up till liberation day. So it's false.

Q. I now produce and show to you an excerpt of the book entitled, "The Nazis" by George — can you read that title?

MR. CHRISTIE: Could these two books be exhibits, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 121.

— EXHIBIT No. 121: Soft-cover edition and hard-cover edition of "Adolf Hitler" by John J Toland. {3988|3989}

THE WITNESS: It's called, "The Nazis", by George Bruce. It is a kind of illustrated history book with photos, published in 1974, printed in Great Britain and by Butler & Tanner Ltd. And it has all kinds of photographs and it starts out under the headline, "Death Works Overtime". It shows a photograph of Auschwitz, the concentration camp enclosure, and it says — it has a caption, "Auschwitz Concentration camp was opened on 14 June 1940. By 1945, 300,000 people had lost their lives there." And on page 145 he quotes the sections from the Hoess interrogation where he was supposed to have said that it was Poland's turn; camps were established at Belzec, Treblinka and Wolzek.

Now, many experts believe that Hoess slipped that in to show that he was in dire straits. Anyway, Wolzek did not exist.

Q. Is it cited as not existing in the book?

A. No, it is not.

Q. How is it referred to?

A. "Camps were established at Belzec, Treblinka and Wolzek in the General Government area."

Q. So now he indicates the existence of a camp that doesn't exist?

A. Yes.

Q. Because of a repetition of Hoess' earlier —

A. That's right. And finally we have:

"Rudolf Hoss, an ever-willing subor-dinate, learned the lesson well and Auschwitz became an especially notorious camp, if this was possible, in which, according to Gerald Reitlinger, the names of an estimated 363,000 people were registered on the books between February 1940 and January 1945. Of these 280,000 died, were murdered or killed themselves."

Q. So what does that indicate in relation to the four million and 1.5 million, and 2.5. million of the various sources? What does it indicate to you?

A. It makes the claims by Dr. Hilberg vast exaggerations and makes Dr. Vrba certainly not reliable. He has exaggerated the figures by some five times.

Q. Is that a book or an authority that comes from anything like a revisionist school?

A. Absolutely not. It is available on book stands and kiosks. It is just a regular publisher.

Q. You've heard the figures referred to by Gerstein of seven to eight hundred people for twenty-five square meters.

A. Yes.

Q. You've heard Dr. Hilberg on that point.

A. Yes, I have. I believe he said it was amazing how many people one could squeeze into a space if one wanted. Maybe it was in the preliminary {3990|3991} hearing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could this be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: 122.

— EXHIBIT NO. 122: Photocopied excerpt from book, "The Nazis" by George Bruce.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you the Israel Pocket Library "Holocaust" and ask you to refer to page 86 as to the figures of Gerstein. Could you just quote the portion of that book?

A. Yes. It says:

"Those marked for Selektion and after it were forced to run to the 'showers' to the accompaniment of a band playing music. Between 700 — 800 men and women, elderly people, and children were crammed into a chamber measuring 25 square meters ..."

And it goes on to describe the gassings.

Q. Have you tried to set up a room of twenty-five square meters?

A. Yes. I asked [sic] a number of friends to help me, but we did it on a reduced scale of one square meter, which would be about as big as my prisoner's box here, or the witness box, excuse me.

THE COURT: That is the witness box. {3991|3992}

THE WITNESS: Yes. Excuse me, Your Honour. I am unfamiliar with this term. So that means in this space I am standing right here, ending behind me, we would get nine or twelve people in, and that, to me, is ludicrous. Unless they were dissolved in, I don't think we could do it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: If you divide seven to eight hundred by twenty-five, what do you think you can get out of that? Is it twenty-eight to thirty-two?

A. Oh, yes. It was supposed to be that — twenty-eight to twenty-nine, depending on how fat the people were.

Q. In one square meter, then, how many people were supposed to be included in the Gerstein statement?

A. You got me confused.

Q. Never mind. It's a matter of argument, anyway.

I now produce and show to you one of the current popular magazines on the subject of the Holocaust.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could this be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: 123.

— EXHIBIT NO. 123: Book, "Holocaust", Israel Pocket Library.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What does it say about the process of the burning of bodies that you {3992|3993} consider ridiculous?

A. This is a very recent magazine which was sold on the book stands and corner stores, variety stores in Toronto; April '84, and it's a complete rehash of every lie ever told about the Holocaust. And one section —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. April of '84.

THE WITNESS: Oh, sorry.

MR. CHRISTIE: My apologies. That is after the charge.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have things changed, in your experience, as to the war stories told after the Holocaust?

A. I think that the stories are becoming wilder. As some of the old generation dies off, that could bring some semblance of truth to it. Young people are repeating lies which they have learned and been told, and it is like with every rumour, it becomes more colourful every time it is re-told. So I find that the stories get more unbelievable as we move into the twilight zone of the elder generation.

Q. Now, have you made a study to determine whether there was admissions made during the War of wartime propaganda referable [sic] to the Holocaust?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you an excerpt of the book by Edward J. Rozek of the Department of Political Science at Boulder, Colorado, entitled, "Allied Wartime Diplomacy", and I would like to draw {3993|3994} your attention to page 209 and ask you what that has to do with your understanding of the Holocaust. First of all, we must establish when it was published. Can you do that, please?

A. Yes. It was copyrighted [sic] in 1958 by John Wiley & Sons Inc.

Q. Please proceed.

A. It is called, "Allied Wartime Diplomacy[?]", and the author is Edward J. Rozek. On page 209 it quotes a date:

"On February 29, 1944 the British Ministry of Information [sic] sent the following note to the higher British clergy and to the BBC."

And here is the letter:

"Sir, I am directed by the Ministry to send you the following circular letter: It is often the duty of the good citizens and of the pious Christians to turn a blind eye on the peculiarities of those associated [sic] with us. But the time comes when such peculiarities, while still denied in public, must be taken into account when action by us is called for."

And he continues on page 10 —

THE COURT: I don't mean to interrupt you. Is this a long letter?

THE WITNESS: No. Just a couple of {3994|3995} minutes.

"We know the methods of rule employed by the Bolshevik dictator in Russia itself from, for example, the writing and speeches of the Prime Minister himself during the last twenty years. We know how the Red Army behaved in Poland in 1920 and in Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Galicia and Bessarabia only recently.

We must, therefore, take into account how the Red Army will certainly behave when it overruns Central Europe. Unless precautions are taken, the obviously inevitable horrors which will result will throw an undue strain on public opinion in this country.

We cannot reform the Bolsheviks but we can do our best to save them – and ourselves – from the consequences of their acts. The disclosures of the past quarter of a century will render mere denials unconvincing. The only alternative to denial is to distract public attention from the whole subject.

Experience has shown that the best distraction is atrocity propaganda directed against the enemy. Unfortunately – the public is no longer {3995|3996} so susceptible as in the days of the ‘Corpse Factory,’ the ‘Mutilated Belgian Babies,’ and the ‘Crucified Canadians.’

Your cooperation is therefore earnestly sought to distract public attention from the doings of the Red Army by your wholehearted support of various charges against the Germans and Japanese which have been and will be put into circulation by the Ministry. Your expression of belief in such may convince others.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant, (Signed) H. Hewet, Assistant Secretary.

The Ministry can enter into no correspondence of any kind with regard to this communication which should only be disclosed to responsible persons.

It is unknown how many recipients of this communication complied with the above instructions.”

Q. How does that bear on your belief in relation to the atrocity propaganda in relation to Auschwitz?

A. I have spent many years researching atrocity propaganda, video films I have made on that topic, and I think that it is the cornerstone document that explains all these wild tales and charges against the {3996|3997} German people, and I believe it also gives a way out to every writer, reporter, publisher, film maker to cease and desist from spreading more propaganda because this was wartime. The War is over. We are no longer bound by these directives, hints or suggestions. Let’s recognize it for what it was. It was lies in the national interest in the War. It has nothing to do with truth.

MR. CHRISTIE: May that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 124.

— EXHIBIT NO. 124: Photocopied excerpt from book, “Allied Wartime Diplomacy” by Edward J. Rozek.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are documents from the War still classified, to your knowledge?

A. Many of them. For instance, the reason why Rudolf Hoess is still in Spandau and why he went to England in the first place is only going to be released in the year 2037, which is very unusual, even for England.

Q. Have some secrets been revealed since the War?

A. Many have, yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you an article on page A16, Sunday, January 2, 1972, from The Washington Post. How does this bear on your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. It’s headlined, “British Papers {3997|3998} Indicate FDR Sought War With Hitler”, and it is by Colin Cross, a well-known British writer who writes, on January 1st:

“President Franklin D. Roosevelt was so eager to get America into World War II in 1941 that he went out of his way to provoke ‘incidents’ which could be represented as German aggression against America, according to British documents now declassified. The documents show at least that this was what Roosevelt was telling British Prime Minister Winston Churchill in the summer and autumn of that year.

This is revealed in secret British wartime cabinet documents for 1941-45 – 35 volumes of them – which will be open to historians for the first time Monday at the public record, office in London.”

And the article goes on, to make it short:

“The President had said that he would wage war but not declare it, and that he would become more and more provocative. If the Germans did not like it, they could attack the American forces.”

He quotes:

“‘Everything was to be done to force an ‘incident’ to justify hostilities,’ {3998|3999} the papers said.”

And one final quote:

“According to the records, the British cabinet discussed in advance what its attitude would be if Germany attacked Russia, and decided that Germany should be represented as an insatiable tyrant that had attacked Russia in order to obtain material for carrying on the war.”

End of the article.

Q. You heard Dr. Hilberg say the reason for the Second World War. What is your view in light of what you have studied?

A. From this article of my viewpoint on the Second World War and the attack on Russia?

Q. No. What does that article tell you in respect to —

A. It basically is a conspiracy by the President of the United States to, by hook or by crook, get into a war with Germany.

THE COURT: Exhibit 125.

— EXHIBIT NO. 125: Photocopied article in The Washington Post, January 2, 1972, by Colin Cross.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you familiar with the process of censorship from studying the matter? I now produce and show to you an article from Harpers Magazine of February 1946 on “How the Censors Rigged the {3999|4000} News”. Are you familiar with that article?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How is it relevant to your understanding of the subject of the Holocaust?

A. The article is a very good summation of censorship, even in democratic countries, and what censorship can do to people and their perception of things, and I want to quote briefly from page 98:

“A dispatch by Stoneman, the correspondent, telling of destructive looting by American troops at Jena during the German collapse was held up till after the Nazis quit. In other words, the official censors have pretty well succeeded in putting over the legend that the war was won without a single mistake, by a command consisting exclusively of geniuses, who now have asked to be rewarded by being placed in control of all scientific thought and utterance.”

And on page 99 the author states:

“Last time we had the fables of the Kadaver-Fabrik and the crucified Canadians, and the Civil War produced the story of General Butler’s silver spoons, to mention only one.”

And he goes into a litany of what censors do, and he ends up saying:

“The magazine pointed that it could {4000|4001} appeal to the Bryon Price Office of Censorship (whose role throughout the whole censorship business was highly honourable) ...”

On page 101 he concludes by saying:

“‘You will be judged,’ a new Navy public relations officer was informed on taking over his post, not on what you get into the papers but on what you keep out of them – an instruction to maintain relations with the public by not having any.”

THE COURT: That will be the next exhibit.

— EXHIBIT NO. 126: Photocopied excerpt from Harper’s Magazine, February 1946.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How does that bear upon your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. Well, number one it proves to me that there was censorship in America, and certainly everywhere else where there was a war going on, and I think that the people who have now gone through the war and are at peace should begin to realize that every government in the world manipulates and manages news through censorship, and we owe it to ourselves to inform ourselves, and if people like myself are not allowed to ring alarm bells or expose unpopular facts, then we will be mental slaves, even after the War is over. I think we owe it to ourselves as people to tell the truth about {4001|4002} these things.

THE COURT: We will adjourn now.

Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:30 a.m.
 — The witness stands down.
 — Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.
 — The jury returns.
 — The witness returns to the stand.
 THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. In the course of your examination of the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" before your publication were you aware of other language editions?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. I now produce and show you a series of language editions. Can you identify those?

A. Do I show it to the jury as well?

Q. If you can identify them.

A. One is by the Institute for Historic Review. One is a French edition, published in England. One is a German edition, again published in England. One is a Dutch edition published in England. One is a Spanish edition, and that one is published also in England.

Q. What effect did this have on your {4002|4003} understanding of the truth of the booklet?

A. I felt that since it was published in so many other countries and I had received numerous versions, that it was available for the general public and, therefore, I felt rather safe in publishing it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as one exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Does it all say essentially the same thing?

THE WITNESS: Yes. The languages that I understand, Your Honour, English and French, it does.

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe we had better not.

THE COURT: If it is published in English, you can file it.

THE WITNESS: No. German and French.

MR. CHRISTIE: I won't file them, Your Honor.

Q. In your research over the years have you kept track of things that happened in the news?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show you an article from the Miami Herald of July 7, 1964. Can you tell me how this relates to your understanding of what happened in Auschwitz?

A. The story is headlined, "War Trials Testimony", and in an even bolder headline, "Ex-prisoner Admits: 'Lied about Nazis'", and the article {4003|4004} goes on to describe one of the former Auschwitz inmates apologized in court for making nasty accusations against his one-time Nazi masters, admitting that he had been drunk at the time when he made the accusations, and he basically apologized; but nevertheless, he admitted that he had lied under oath. He had called him, the German fellow, the Auschwitz inmate had called the German man a nasty — one of the worst killers and so on — the usual allegations that have been levelled against these Germans.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit?

THE COURT: Exhibit 127.

— EXHIBIT NO. 127: Photocopied article from The Miami Herald, July 7, 1964.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: We heard in this trial about the Posen speech and Himmler. Have you studied that subject?

A. Yes, I have. I have a large collection of original speeches which I bought from various archives around the world.

Q. Original speeches of who?

A. Winston Churchill, Franklin Theodore Roosevelt, Kaiser Wilhelm II.

Q. You have to tell us why you consider it relevant to the Posen speech.

A. Well, I have studied oratory. I have taken public speaking classes myself.

Q. How does that relate to the Posen {4004|4005} speech?

A. Because it helps me analyze quite a well-known public speaker at the time, Heinrich Himmler.

Q. What do you conclude about the Himmler speech?

A. I have numerous versions of the Himmler speech and numerous versions of the Posen speech.

Q. Do you believe it reveals anything significant?

A. One thing it reveals is that it is absolutely the worse in speech in quality that I have listened to by Heinrich Himmler which tends to make me suspicious.

Q. Why?

A. Because the quality of German radio at the time and of the German government was excellent, even by today's standards, and here we have one speech that is scratchy, crackling, sometimes inaudible, and I thought I just had gotten a bad copy. And so I contacted Udo Walendy who gave testimony earlier; he drove to Frankfurt to the Radio Archives and listened to the entire disc which is available which is allegedly the original disc.

Now, he is a political scientist and he said —

Q. Well, you can't say what he said.

A. Well, he came to the conclusion —

Q. Never mind what he said or his conclusion. Just give your evidence. Have you compared {4005|4006} other rhetorical speakers of the time to determine what value we can place upon the Posen speech?

A. It is unfortunately, in wartime, very often the case that perfectly rational and normal men seem to fall victim to their passions or their hates sometime created by propaganda where they say things in words, and possibly in the heat of battle or whatever, to address one issue or just under the emotional impact of something which they would never do in peacetime.

However, Allied leaders, I have listened to many speeches by Allied leaders, war speeches or warrior talk, if you want to call it that way, even if that speech was unedited or uncut, it would be very little difference from speeches by Allied leaders. And I mean, I refer especially to one George S. Patton who was rather colourful, and to the point in his speech ...

Q. I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "As He Saw It" by Elliott Roosevelt. How does that bear on the subject you have been discussing?

A. Himmler stands accused of some pretty loose and wild talk, rhetorical stuff, and at one of the meetings where Mr. Stalin and Churchill and Roosevelt were present there was talk, and toasts were made, and it's Elliott Roosevelt, the son of FDR, has written this book and he quotes here:

"[I] propose a salute to the swiftest possible justice for all Germany's war criminals — justice before a firing squad. I drink to our unity {4006|4007} in dispatching them as fast as we capture them, all of them, and there must be at least fifty thousand of them."

Now, Sir Winston Churchill[I] was quite upset by that, and the book goes on by saying —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Whose remarks were those?

THE WITNESS: These here? I believe they were Stalin's. And it says:

"Quick as a flash Churchill was on his feet."

And then Churchill replied that the British people will never stand for this, but the book goes on and says:

"As usual, he said, 'it seems to be my function to mediate this dispute.'" — which was FDR.

"Clearly there must be some sort of compromise between your position, Mr. Stalin, and that of my good friend the Prime Minister. Perhaps we could say that, instead of summarily executing fifty thousand war criminals, we should settle on a smaller number. Shall we say forty nine thousand five hundred?" Americans and Russians laughed. The British, taking their cue from their Prime Minister's mounting fury, sat quiet and straight-faced." {4007|4008}

Q. So what does that say to you about the Posen speech?

A. Some people are just loose talkers in the heat of passion, or maybe after a few drinks.

Q. Have you instructed your researchers to prepare an analysis from your library of the alleged daily death figures in the Holocaust literature of our time?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Is this in your library at your home where you have reviewed it from time to time?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Exhibit 128.

— EXHIBIT NO. 128: Book, "As He Saw It" by Elliott Roosevelt.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you an analysis of the various death allegations in the Holocaust literature. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Are the excerpts in the text attached to the estimate in that file?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Could you just briefly and quickly run through the author and the daily alleged death total in Auschwitz from the first to the last?

A. Yes. The Guinness Book of Records for 1966 claims six thousand per day. Then the author, J. Bezwinska, in his book, "Konzentrations-lager Auschwitz Seen by the SS" in 1984 quotes three different people, one called R. Dawidowski, that author says eight thousand {4008|4009} a day; H. Tauber says eight thousand a day; a Feinsilber says eight thousand a day. Then W. Michalak, the editor of Auschwitz, page 117, says eight thousand a day. Then comes the Polish Commission of Inquiry according to Reitlinger on his book on page 150 claims twelve thousand people a day. Dr. Nyiszli in his book on Auschwitz, page 48, claims twelve thousand nine hundred and sixty. Rudolf Hoess, according to Reitlinger on page 150 of the Reitlinger book, says sixteen thousand per day. Raul Hilberg in his book, "Destruction of European Jews" on page 629 says twenty thousand, over twenty thousand burned on some days. So it is not a flat rate. Then Nyiszli, according to Reitlinger, on page 150, says twenty thousand a day. Michalak again, in another part of his book, "Auschwitz", on page 117, claims twenty-four thousand a day. And Judge Sehn —

Q. That is Jan Sehn, is it?

A. Yes. Jan Sehn, in his book in the third edition, 1961, page 132, claims sixty thousand a day. And again W. Michalak, the editor of "Auschwitz" on page 117 says sixty thousand a day, also.

Q. Have you made any effort to calculate how much fuel would be required, how many trains would be required for those figures?

A. Well, we were talking about the fuel yesterday, and we haven't talked about the trains yet. I have informed myself from the Federal Archives in Nuremberg where the West German railroads are, about the size of trains and length of trains, and I have come to the conclusion that some wildly exaggerated claims were {4009|4010} made of trains taking ten thousand people to Auschwitz when, in effect, the absolute maximum of trains possible on a German railroad in the way they were constructed would allow the transport of about three thousand people, even if they were cramped in one transport; but frequently there is talk about many more prisoners being taken in one train into Auschwitz in these camps.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 129.

— EXHIBIT NO. 129: File folder concerning statistics of deaths per day.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you been aware of an article in a famous book review called "Books and Bookmen" in England?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. What is the 'book review about?

A. The publication is called, "Books and bookmen" and it is like a literary magazine where books are being reviewed.

Q. What is the year of this publication?

A. It is November 1974.

Q. Yes.

A. And there is a book review by Colin Wilson in there entitled, "The Fuehrer in perspective. 2", and specifically, on page 31, he discusses having purchased a booklet called, "The Myth of the Six Million", {4010|4011} which is, "Did Six Million Really Die?", I suppose. No. "The Myth of the Six Million" published by — excuse me, no. It's the booklet by Richard Harwood of the University of London, and it's called, "Did

Six Million Really Die?"

Q. And did you read that at the time, or since that time, prior to the publication you made of the —

A. Yes, I did. Yes.

Q. What was your conclusion from reading that?

A. Well, this book review certainly caused a controversy in these literary circles, and an animated correspondence and writing in to the editor and so on took place, and for a period of several months — famous people, famous authors wrote to "Books and Bookmen", one of them being none other than Richard Harwood, the author, and also Simon Wiesenthal, and they thrashed out, in the pages of this book review and literary magazine, the merits or lack of merits of the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Q. What social value do you see to that process?

A. Well, I think that this is the way a problem like this should have been handled and should be handled in a civilized and in a democratic society. There should be room for debate, and it should begin with people who are knowledgeable on the subject, or pros and cons should be aired, and if there are errors, then the publisher of any magazine has a second chance to publish an errata sheet or even a second edition, as {4011|4012} Dr. Hilberg said he, himself is going to publish a second edition of his book, because he has new material and will make additions and so on.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And have you compiled also the correspondence that resulted from that article?

A. I have everyone of the letters that were sent back and forth to "Books and Bookmen" and published in the magazine.

THE COURT: 130.

— EXHIBIT NO. 130: Photocopied excerpt from Magazine "Books and Bookmen", November 1974.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now have you conducted an in-depth study of the Nuremberg studies from the point of view of the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes. I have gone to some length.

Q. How many years have you spent researching this field of the Nuremberg trials?

A. Beginning from the middle sixties on.

Q. Why?

A. Because to the Germans, especially in German history, it is possibly our darkest hour, and it's very important, it's a frequent topic of discussions, soul-searching by many German writers, thinkers, intellectuals, especially by people of my generation who were really too small to be personal eye witnesses to what happened, and we had to rely on the history as it was told to us, and many of us have serious questions, {4012|4013} and some of the best revisionist work on the Nuremberg War Crimes Trials is done by young men around the world.

Q. Are you familiar with The Journal of the National Archives on the topic called, "Prologue" dealing with the defence availability of documents at Nuremberg?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And had you studied it prior to publishing, "Did Six Million Really Die?" What year is it published?

A. It is published in the winter of 1975. It is Volume 7, and I have to say it is by the National Archives in Washington, D.C.

Q. How is this pertinent to the defence at Nuremberg?

A. Well, it is by John Mendelsohn, who is today one of the directors of the National Archives. And he, in this article, admits quite freely for instance he says on page 227, called, "Trial by Document: The Problem of Due Process for War Criminals at Nuernberg":

"Nevertheless, a number of the indicted, particularly members of the SS, found the procedures harsh and an impediment to their defence. Yet considering the crimes charged one wonders if there were many exonerating records at all."

And he goes on — there is a photograph of Judge Wen[n]erstrum, for instance, in the article. On page 230 he says: {4013|4014}

"On the other hand, the resources of the defense were considerably more limited than those of the prosecution. The charter of the IMT stat- ed only that a defendant should have the right to present evidence to the tribunal. As a result, the defense was compelled at first to engage in a long and often futile struggle to obtain the records it deemed necessary."

And he continues further on down in the article:

"Frequently the defense could not properly cite an item. At other times procuring a document might require more time than the defense had. The defense therefore had to obtain many documents from private sources."

And he continues on the next paragraph:

"Again, it is generally true that SS defendants received severe sentences, often the death penalty, and had greater difficulty in obtaining documents than other defendants."

And he continues:

"Only when the defense could show relevancy did the tribunal grant the documents. In the Ohlendorf case, {4014|4015} nearly half the documents asked for were denied when the prosecution objected. There were fewer objections and the defense obtained most of the documents it applied for in the Pohl and Greifelt cases. However, when Dr. Gawlik, counsel for defendants Bobermin and Volk in the Pohl case, applied for access to prosecution held files of the staff that controlled SS economic enterprises, the request was denied, although the defendants had worked on the staff and its files were essential to their case. The tribunal sustained a frequently used prosecution objection that the defense was engaged in a fishing expedition and that it had no right to private files of the prosecution."

And I think in the very end of the article on page 234 he says:

"The judges themselves were of considerable importance in evaluating these differences and assessing the degree of fairness to the defendants. Judges Robert M. Toms, from Michigan's third judicial district, Fitzroy D. Phillips, from North Carolina's thirteenth district, Michael A. Musmanno, from the court of common pleas in Pen[n]sylvania, and John J. {4015|4016} Speight, admitted to the bar of Alabama, adjudicated the Milch and Pohl cases. In addition, Judges Musmanno and Speight were on the bench in the Ohlendorf case. Their rulings and interpretations of document handling procedure were often more rigid and disadvantageous to the defendants than were those of other judges. Among the latter were Judges Wennerstrum, Shake, and William C. Christianson, from the Supreme Court of Minnesota, who presided over the Weizsaecker case. These three former state supreme court members interpreted document-handling procedures so liberally as to put the defense in a much more advantageous position."

And he continues:

"The policies regarding documents, as practiced by the tribunals in the SS and ministries cases, thus appear to belong to two different worlds. In the SS cases procedures were sometimes harsh on defendants whose counsel did not have the same free access to the holdings of the collection centers which the defense had in some other cases, particularly the Weizsaecker case. The defendants in the SS cases {4016|4017} were thus more dependent on the Defendants Information Center and on the documents the prosecution [sic] was willing to share with them, putting them at a distinct disadvantage."

Q. I think that is far enough.

A. There is one final and important paragraph:

"Although one might say then that this account of document-handling procedures at Nuernberg strongly suggests that, greater leniency in document procedures in the IMT and SS cases might have resulted in better defenses and less severe sentences, considering the crimes charged, there is no absolute assurance that even the most liberal procedure would have produced exonerating records. The prosecution's greater control of documents in the earlier cases, acting under rules similar to adversary proceedings, tainted the trials."

Q. Are you familiar with the allegations of Streicher that were stricken from the {4017|4018} Tribunal proceedings?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where did you find that information, please?

A. I first came across it in a small booklet by a well-known English author called Belgion, and it is called, "Epithat [sic] Nuremberg". And then I tracked it down in the Times of London, Saturday, April 27, 1946.

Q. What do you have in your hand?

A. A copy of The Times, Saturday, April 27, 1946.

Q. What does it say about Streicher's testimony that wasn't at the testimony at Nuremberg?

A. It says, "Streicher Opens His Case", "Anti-Jewish Racial Law Defended", and then he speaks to the Tribunal.

Q. What did he say about torture?

A. He says:

"Raising his voice to a shrill cry, he declared that after he found himself in allied captivity he was kept for four days in a cell without clothes. 'I was made to kiss negroes' feet. I was whipped. I had to drink saliva', he declared. He paused for breath, and then screamed: 'My mouth was forced open with a piece of wood., and then I was spat on. When I asked for a drink of water I was taken to a latrine and told, 'Drink.' These are the sort of {4018|4019} things the Gestapo has been blamed for."

Q. If you search the record of the Nuremberg Trial do you find any reference to that?

A. No. It was expunged.

MR. CHRISTIE: May that be an exhibit?

THE COURT: 132.

Q. Are you familiar with any actions of Churchill in respect to the case of Manstein where he was accused of Einsatzgruppen activity?

A. Yes. I came across an interesting story that Sir Winston Churchill gave a $100 donation to the defence fund for Field Marshall Manstein.

Q. And I now produce to you the Chicago Herald of July 17, 1949. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And is that the source of your information?

A. Yes, it is. It is headlined, "Churchill Gives $100 for Nazi", "Fund to Aid at War Trial". And he goes on to describe what was happening.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit?

THE COURT: 133.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In respect to the issue of documents, have you studied the articles of the Charter of London that established the Nuremberg War Trials?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Are you familiar with the issue of the London Agreement of August '45?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Are you familiar with Article 21 and Article 9 thereof?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Could you comment on Article 9? I now produce and show to you a photocopy of the London Agreement of August 8, 1945, from the International Military Tribunal records.

A. It reads, on page 12 of this document:

"Article 9. At the trial of any individual member of any group or organization the Tribunal may declare (in connection with any act of which the individual may be convicted) that the group or organization of which the individual was a member was a criminal organization."

And Article 21 reads, on page 15 of the document:

"The Tribunal shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof. It shall also take judicial notice {4020|4021} of official governmental documents and reports of the United Nations, including the acts and documents of the committees set up in the various allied countries for the investigation of war crimes, and the records and findings of military or other Tribunals of any of the United Nations."

Q. From your knowledge of the history of the time, from your reading of all that you have studied, what would you say of the common knowledge of the time?

THE COURT: The common knowledge of the ...

MR. CHRISTIE: The time referred to in the article. It says, it refers to common knowledge at the time as being —

THE COURT: Well, the common knowledge on the part of whom?

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, that's a very good question.

THE WITNESS: It doesn't specify that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then if it doesn't specify, how can the witness answer the question? It could be the common knowledge of — it's got to be the common knowledge somewhere.

MR. CHRISTIE.: Yes, I appreciate that, Your Honour. If I may say, Article 9 ...

Q. Well, can you just give your opinion as a layman on what you considered about Article 9? {4021|4022}

A. Article 9 meant, in effect, that once the Tribunal had labelled an organization criminal, like a police force or the SS, for instance, that every stable boy, every truck driver, every mechanic, every medic in the SS automatically was charged as being a member of a criminal organization. And if you think that there were one and a half million men, I believe, at one time, in the Waffen SS, to put the stain on these men's careers and their reputation and their life and put them in serious jeopardy, they were, in effect, fair game because of this ruling. It was prejudicial to these people. And that stain has never worn off them.

Q. Do you know anybody personally who was incarcerated because he was a member of the Waffen SS?

A. I certainly do. I have interviewed quite a number of these men.

Q. And were they tried individually for any war crime?

A. They were not, no, but nevertheless they couldn't get jobs of a kind for many years. They couldn't get pensions for many years. Their lives was one of misery and terror.

Q. Do you know of any who were obliged to work without pay for any period of time?

A. Oh, yes, I do.

Q. Can you name anybody?

MR. GRIFFITHS: What —

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I'm sorry. Let's move on.

Could we file the articles of the {4022|4023} London Agreement?

THE COURT: 134.

— EXHIBIT NO. 134: Photocopy of London Agreement, 8 August 1945.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you Nuremberg Document PS-2223. Can you tell me what you consider as relevant to that, or how that is relevant to the judgment in regard to Nuremberg expressed in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. It is a piece of paper that is called, "Staff Evidence Analysis".

Q. Yes.

A. And it talks about interrogation of a German by persons — it mentions persons implicated. The source is the original. Here is a document, when the question of the documents comes up frequently, this is an Allied document and this is how documents looked, especially military ones are very specific. And it says this is an extract copy. The date is of the 13th and 14th February, 1945. It gives a preamble. It gives the Unit number of the person typing this and name, and it says:

"Two Polish deserters, both former members of the Polish Army, tell of their experiences in concentration camps Mauthausen and Gusen."

And it goes on, part of the interrogation, the important part came in the bottom area where it says:

"A Surmisal of the death rate can be {4023|4024} made by the presence of 3 crematoriums whose chimneys were smoking day and night. A gas chamber with a capacity of 200 took care of many other victims; many women, among them Czech patriots, suspected of sabotage and refusing to give information were gassed there. Beneath one of the crematoriums was a chamber called the 'Genickschusskammer'. This was a tiled room with slits in the walls behind which stands an SS man with a pistol. When the victim enters the chamber he is shot in the back of the neck and a special water system washes the body away."

Q. Where was this supposed to be?

A. This is Mauthausen. Mauthausen Gussen [sic].

Q. And what do your sources say about that?

A. That there were no gas chambers in Mauthausen.

Q. And this is the testimony of two eye witnesses?

A. That's right. Two eye witnesses.

Q. And from the number what do you perceive happened to that document?

A. I didn't understand you, Mr. Christie.

Q. Well — {4024|4025}

A. I was reading.

Q. Well, from its number, PS-2223 ...

A. Yeah. This is a Nuremberg document.

Q. It is a Nuremberg document.

THE COURT: May I see it, please? Just a moment, Mr. Christie.

Mr. Christie asked you whether this was testimony. Can you say whether it's testimony, or was it a statement?

THE WITNESS: Well, I misunderstood him, Your Honour. This is an interrogation report by Allied —

THE COURT: You didn't do anything wrong. It was Mr. Christie who suggested to you whether it was testimony.

MR. CHRISTIE: I must object. I didn't say it was testimony. I asked him what he understood it to be, and he said it was a Nuremberg document. I didn't suggest it was testimony.

THE COURT: Madam Reporter, please read that back.

THE REPORTER: "Q. And this is the testimony of two eye witnesses?"

A. That's right. Two eye witnesses.

Q. And from the number what do you perceive happened to that document?

A. I didn't understand you, Mr. Christie.

Q. Well —

A. I was reading. Well, from its number, PS-2223 ... {4025|4026}

A. Yeah. This is a Nuremberg document.

Q. It is a Nuremberg document."

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I asked from the number what do you perceive happened to that document.

THE COURT: I see what you mean. It is not testimony.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is testimony of a sort. I don't know whether it was testimony received at Nuremberg. I asked if it was testimony.

THE COURT: All right. Proceed. I'm sorry if there was a misunderstanding.

THE WITNESS: The document, at the very end of it, called "Partial Translation of Document No. 2223-PS," ends up by saying that in Auschwitz:

"Their bodies were then loaded on the little carts which brought them right into the cremation building. In this manner 6,000 Jews were killed within 3 days in 1938 after the VON [vom] RATH assassination."

Now, the significant thing here is that these men who were being interrogated say that the Germans, who were not even anywhere near Auschwitz or in Auschwitz or Poland in 1938, already killed six thousand Jews within three days of the 1983 assassination of Von Rath.

— EXHIBIT NO. 135: Document — Staff Evidence Analysis of Document No. 2223 PS.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you an article from the Chicago Tribune of Monday, February 23, 1948. Does that have any bearing on your view at the Nuremberg Trial?

A. Yes, it has, because it is the entire article published in the Chicago Tribune.

Q. By whom?

A. It's an interview that Judge Wennerstrum gave to a Chicago reporter which was intercepted by the United States Army.

Q. What was the name of the reporter, if you recall?

A. Foust. He lives today in California.

Q. What does that story indicate?

A. Well, without reading the whole article, it says:

"If I had known seven months ago what I know today, he told friends as he packed to leave for America, I would never have come here."

And he goes on about the personnel being of recently naturalized Americans, and he says:

"The entire atmosphere here is un-wholesome. Linguists were needed. The Americans are notably poor linguists. Lawyers, clerks, inter-[4027] 4028}prefers, and researchers were employed who became Americans only in recent years, whose backgrounds were imbedded in Europe's hatreds and prejudices.

The trials were to have convinced the Germans of the guilt of their leaders. They convinced the Germans merely that their leaders lost the war to tough conquerors. Most of the evidence in the trials was documentary, selected from the large tonnage of captured records. The selection was made by the prosecution. The defense had access only to those documents which the prosecution considered material to the case.

Our tribunal introduced a rule of procedure that when the prosecution introduced an excerpt from a document, the entire document should be made available to the defense for presentation as evidence. The prosecution protested vigorously."

And the last headline reads, "Justice Denied":

"Gen. Taylor (Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor, chief of the prosecution) tried out of court to call a meeting of the presiding judges to rescind [4028]4029} this order. It was not the attitude of any conscientious officer of the court seeking full justice.

Also abhorrent to the American sense of justice is the prosecution's reliance upon self-incriminating statements made by the defendants while prisoners for more than 2 1/2 years, and repeated interrogations without presence of counsel. Two and one-half years of confinement is a form of duress in itself.'

'Although you and your associates were conspicuous in Nuernberg for your efforts to give the defendants a fair trial,' said a reporter, do you think it wrong that there is no appeal from your judgment?' 'The lack of appeal,' replied the judge, leaves me with a feeling that justice has been denied.'"

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 136.

— EXHIBIT NO. 136: Photocopied article from Chicago Tribune, 23 February, 1948.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you aware of whether the accused at Nuremberg could communicate with the Press? {4029}4030}

A. Many of them were in custody, so I don't think so.

Q. I now produce and show you a transcript of the Nuremberg proceedings of Monday, 17 December, 1945. Are you familiar with the judgment of the trial?

A. "Monday, 17 December 1945 Morning Session", The President Lord Justice Sir Geoffrey Lawrence:

"The first announcement is this: The attention of the Tribunal has been drawn to publications in the press of what appear to have been interviews with some of the defendants in this case, given through the agency of their counsel. The Tribunal considers it necessary to state with the greatest emphasis that this is a procedure which cannot and will not be countenanced. Therefore, counsel are warned that they should observe the highest professional standards in such matters and should not use the opportunity afforded to them of conferring freely with their clients to act in any way as intermediaries between the defendants and the press, and they must exercise the greatest professional discretion in making any statement on their own behalf." {4030}4031}

And it ends:

"The press of the world is rendering a very great service in giving publicity to the proceedings of the Tribunal, and the Tribunal feels that it may properly ask for the co-operation of all concerned to avoid anything which might conflict with the impartial administration of justice."

Q. Was there a jury involved, to your knowledge, at Nuremberg?

A. No. There were judges.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I exhibit that, Your Honour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me —

MR. CHRISTIE: There is some writing on it. I suppose that might affect it. I could, maybe, cut that off.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, this goes to interviews that counsel were giving, not interviews —

THE COURT: Sir Geoffrey Lawrence telling the lawyers not to talk to the press.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sort of like the Law Society today, Your Honour.

THE COURT: If you want it as an exhibit, Mr. Christie, you are welcome. 137.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, my friend is aware there is some writing attached. Does he wish me to delete that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think the writing {4031}4032} attached should be deleted in light of what it says in reference to what is in the article.

MR. CHRISTIE: That can be done.

— EXHIBIT NO. 137: Photocopied excerpt from Nuremberg Trials proceedings, 17 December, 1945.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you aware of the plea of some of the defendants in regards to these trials of the plea of the use of the British and American Rules of Land Warfare?

A. Yes, am.

Q. Are you aware of the judgment in respect to those matters?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. I now produce and show to you the judgement, pages 1236, 1237 in, I believe, the Hostages Case.

THE COURT: Is this Nuremberg or another matter?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. The IMT, but it is at Nuremberg, too, respecting the Hostages Case. The NMT, of course, in the forty-two volumes, is the Major War Criminals Case.

Q. I would just like to draw your attention and ask you to point out the judgment respecting that particular plea that's highlighted on that particular page.

A. It says:

"The fact that the British and American {4032}4033} Armies may have adopted it for the regulations of its own armies as matter of policy does not have the effect of enthroneing it as a rule of international law. We point out that army regulations are not a competent source of international law. They are neither legislative nor judicial pronouncements."

Q. What does that mean to you in your understanding of the fairness of those proceedings?

A. We are talking about hostages, shooting of hostages?

Q. No. That judgment and that paragraph, what does it mean to you in relation to the fairness of those proceedings?

A. It is patently unfair, because German military men are on trial. for having allegedly shot hostages, and it says here that the fact that the British and American Armies may have adopted this kind of of [sic] hostage in their regulation is immaterial.

THE COURT: Did you say "hostage"?

THE WITNESS: Yes, hostages, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I introduce, this, Your Honour, as an exhibit?

THE COURT: Exhibit 138.

— EXHIBIT NO. 138: Photocopied excerpt, pgs. 1236, 1237 from IMT.

Q. Were you aware of the Simpson van {4033}4034} Roeden [Roden] Commission which we discussed yesterday?

A. Yes.

Q. Why do you consider that of some significance in relation to the rest of the Nuremberg Trials?

MR. GRIFFITHS: We have already established that it wasn't about a Nuremberg trial, Your Honour. I think the question is improper.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I said in relation to the rest of the Nuremberg Trials. I don't think that is to say that it was a Nuremberg Trial. The Dachau part is what was investigated by Simpson van Roeden [sic], and perhaps the Malmedy case is in a different category, but it is in the pamphlet. I assume I am entitled to ask him that.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What relationship, if any, do you see between the inquiries of the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission and the rest of the Nuremberg Trials – and I mean by that not that Malmady was a Nuremberg Trial in the sense of that it was being held at Nuremberg, but otherwise. Do you see any relationship?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Why?

A. Because it gave official recognition to the fact that there was torture used against these defendants in order to get confessions, and it details what kind of hooding, beating, posing as false priests {4034|4035} and so on was used in order to get confessions. And Streicher, whose complaint was deleted from the Nuremberg record, deletes it altogether. Just because there is no record at Nuremberg doesn't mean that it didn't go on. It was stricken from the record.

Q. And how much have you read in Nuremberg about your studies over the years?

A. Sometimes it seems more than I care to remember. It's a sad subject. It's dry. It is nothing but human – recounting of human misery and human unfairness and human debasement of man against man. People in authority riding roughshod over people who are their prisoners and so on. It's not my favourite chapter in history.

Q. Did you keep track of what happened by your study of the newspapers of the day, what happened to those who were found by the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission to have been tortured?

A. Yes. They were hauled in front of the investigative committee. They gave their stories, some of them incredible stories, and to my knowledge they were never punished.

Q. Who was never punished?

A. The people who had done these tortures in American uniform.

Q. And what happened to the people who had been tortured?

A. Many of whom were found guilty and executed.

Q. Have you followed the controversy of that matter in various books and records? {4035|4036}

A. Yes, I have. There is a large body of literature on this, especially, naturally, German press dating back to the middle fifties. One of the most famous lawyers involved in writing about these stories is a man called Rudolf A[s]chenauer who is an attorney in the appeal cases later on in the fifties, and I have studied his material extensively.

Senator McCarthy, for instance, whatever one might think of his policies, has produced in the Congressional Record long excerpts of A[s]chenauer material, so has Senator Langner (ph).

Q. I now produce and show to you a copy of an article called, "The Progressive", which I believe is referred to at one point in "Did Six Million Really Die?" Are you familiar with that?

A. I am familiar with his article, yes.

Q. Why? What has that got to do with the subject of torture?

A. It's an article that came out in February 1949, which is pretty immediate and topical for that time. It's headlined, "American Atrocities in Germany", and it's by Judge Edward van Roeden [sic]. And it is quite lengthy, in which he recounts what he found.

Q. Does it deal with the torture aspect?

A. Yes. Yes, it does. It talks about mock trials, knocking out teeth, breaking jaws, beatings and brutal kickings, [in]voluntary confinements, posing as priests, spiritual deprivation, very little rations, promises of acquittal and so on. {4036|4037}

THE COURT: That will be an exhibit.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that is already an exhibit in the box that you provided.

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe it is. I am not sure.

THE COURT: We shouldn't have two exhibits.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. All right. I won't proceed with it.

Q. Did you also study a book called, "The High Cost of Vengeance" by Freda Utley?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I show you what appears to be a photocopy of that book. Are you familiar with it?

THE COURT: What is the date?

MR. CHRISTIE: 1949, Your Honour. Published in 1949.

Q. What did you derive from her writing?

A. She has a whole section, two different sections, one called the Nuremberg judgment, and our crimes against humanity, on page 162 and page 182. They are rather lengthy, and it talks about her viewpoint and her research about what went on in Nuremberg and behind the scenes in Nuremberg. Also the Allied crimes against humanity during the War.

Q. Did you instruct your researchers to conduct an inquiry into who Freda Utley was?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And as a result of that did you obtain – could I file the book, Your Honour? {4037|4038}

THE COURT: We can make it all one and the same exhibit.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

Q. Did you inquire as to who she was and what she wrote?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: I thought the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission document was Exhibit 139.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend said he thought I had filed it.

THE COURT: I appreciate that. I am looking at my own numbers. Sorry. That will be exhibit 139.

— EXHIBIT NO. 139: Photocopy of book, "The High Cost of Vengeance" by Freda Utley.

Q. Could you tell us what sources you researched in order to find out who Freda Utley was?

A. "Who Was Who in America with World Notables" from 1977 to 1981, and it has quite a lengthy background on Freda Utley. She is an author, lecturer. She has written many books, many articles.

Q. Other sources you've checked to find out who she was?

A. Yes. "Current biography Yearbook" 1958, published by Wilson Company, and it has even a photograph of her in that, and it again has almost one and a half pages devoted to her creative production what she has done in her life. {4038|4039}

THE COURT: We will adjourn now till two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, as you indicated last week, you thought you would be finished by this time. You are not finished, and it would appear to be far from it. I am in no way hurrying you along in the defence. All I am saying is that by reason of the backlog of cases in this courthouse I am putting everyone on notice that we maybe forced to sit this coming Saturday and we may be forced to extend our hours from nine o'clock until six o'clock until such time as the evidence is all in. If I hear anything different at two fifteen, I will change my mind.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:20 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Are you familiar with the name Harlan Fiske Stone? {4039|4040}

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Who is he?

A. He was the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Q. When?

A. 1945.

Q. Are you aware of his views in regard to the Nuremberg trial?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Do they support or have something to do with "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. They support the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Q. I now produce and show to you a biography of Harlan Fiske Stone, "Pillar of the Law" by Alpheus Thomas Mason, published in 1956 by the Viking Press, New York. I'd like to direct you to page 715 and 716 pertaining to his remarks about the Nuremberg Trials to indicate what they were.

A. On page 715 it says:

"I did not wish," he explained, "to appear, even in that remote way, to give my blessing or that of the Court on the proposed Nuremberg trials."

"For your information, but not for publication as coming from me, I would like to advise you that the Supreme Court had nothing to do, either directly or indirectly, with the Nuremberg Trials, or the government's action which authorized them. I was not advised of Justice Jackson's participation until his appointment by the Executive was announced in the newspapers. So far as the Nuremberg trial is an attempt to justify the application of the power of the victor to the vanquished because the vanquished made aggressive war," he explained, "I dislike extremely to see it dressed up with a false facade of legality. The best that can be said for it is that it is a political act of the victorious States which may be morally right, as was the sequestration of Napoleon about 1815. But the allies in that day did not feel it necessary to justify it by an appeal to nonexistent legal principles."

On page 716 he continues:

"It would not disturb me greatly," he wrote, "if that power were openly and frankly used to punish the German leaders for being a bad lot, but it disturbs me some to have it dressed up in the habiliments of the common law and the Constitutional safeguards to those charged with crime. It looks as though we were committing ourselves to the proposition that the outcome of every war must be that the leaders of the vanquished are to be executed by the victors." Just how, he wondered, is this new rule of law to be applied between the Russians and Finns, or the Russians and the Japanese, the Russians having entered the Japanese war in violation of the treaty of non-aggression? "Fortunately," he said, "I do not have to settle these questions."

And one final paragraph:

"Jackson is away conducting his high-grade lynching party in Nuremberg," he remarked. "I don't mind what he does to the Nazis, but I hate to see the pretense that he is running a court and proceeding according to common law. This is a little too sanctimonious a fraud to meet my old-fashioned ideas."

Q. Was this a basis for your belief?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit that, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 140.

— EXHIBIT NO. 140: Photocopied excerpt from book, "Harlan Fiske Stone Pillar of the Law" by A.T. Mason. {4042|4043}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you know who Mr. Forrestal was?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who was he?

A. Secretary of the Navy of the United States at that time.

Q. At what time?

A. End of the War, I believe, 1946-47.

Q. And did he publish some diaries dealing with diplomatic affairs at the time?

A. Yes. He published "The Forrestal Diaries".

Q. Did you refer to that in your research?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I now produce and show you a document known as "The Forrestal Diaries". What has it to do with the views of the Americans in the world just in relation to World War II?

A. In Mr. Forrestal's diaries there is an entry on the 27th December, 1945, in which he quotes Joe Kennedy, the father of the late President Kennedy, and it reads:

"Played golf today with Joe Kennedy Joseph P. Kennedy, who was Roosevelt's Ambassador to Great Britain in the years immediately before the war. I asked him about his conversations with Roosevelt and Neville Chamberlain from 1938 on. He said Chamberlain's position in 1938 was that England {4043|4044} had nothing with which to fight and that she could not risk going to war with Hitler. Kennedy's view: That Hitler would have fought Russia without any later conflict with England if it had not been for Bullitt's (William C. Bullitt, then Ambassador to France) urging on Roosevelt in the summer of 1939 that the Germans must be faced down about Poland; neither the French nor the British would have made Poland a cause of war if it had not been for the constant needling from Washington. Bullitt, he said, kept telling Roosevelt that the Germans wouldn't fight, Kennedy that they would, and that they would overrun Europe. Chamberlain, he says, stated that America and the world Jews had forced England into the war."

Q. Was that paragraph relevant to your opinion in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Do you wish to file the book? What page was that?

A. Page 121 and 122.

MR. CHRISTIE: We will file the book, I think. Could that be exhibited, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Exhibit 141. {4044|4045}

— EXHIBIT NO. 141: Book, "The Forrestal Diaries".

THE COURT [MR. CHRISTIE]: Your Honour, there was the book of Freda Uteley and the "Who was Who". I made a mistake. Apparently it has been given a number, 139.

THE COURT: Perhaps that is where I became one out. What is the name of the book?

MR. CHRISTIE: "The High Cost of Vengeance" by Freda Uteley.

THE COURT: It is already 139.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you familiar with the position of Senator Robert Taft in respect to Nuremberg?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Are you familiar with the work of John F. Kennedy entitled, "Profiles in Courage"?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. How are the two related?

A. Senator Kennedy wrote that book and it was a kind of a cross-section of people he admired, and he mentioned that he admired Senator Taft for his stand regarding the Nuremberg Trials.

Q. I now produce and show you an excerpt of the book, "Profiles in Courage" by John F. Kennedy. I direct your attention, if I may, to page 183 and ask you how that relates to your views on the Nuremberg Trials.

A. On page 183 Senator Kennedy says:

"But Senator Taft was disturbed — {4045|4046} and when he was disturbed it was his habit to speak out. He was disturbed by the War Crimes Trials of Axis leaders, then concluding in Germany and about to commence in Japan. The Nuremberg Trials, in which eleven notorious Nazis had been found guilty under an impressively documented indictment for 'waging an aggressive war,' had been popular throughout the world and particularly in the United States. Equally popular was the sentence already announced by the high tribunal: death.

But what kind of trial was this? 'No matter how many books are written or briefs filed,' Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas has recently written, 'no matter how finely the lawyers analyzed it, the crime for which the Nazis were tried had never been formalized as a crime with the definiteness required by our legal standards, nor outlawed with a death penalty by the international community. By our standards that crime arose under an ex post facto law. Goering et al. deserved severe punishment. But their guilt did not justify us in substituting power for principle.' {4046|4047}

These conclusions are shared, I believe, by a substantial number of American citizens today. And they were shared, at least privately, by a goodly number in 1946. But no politician of consequence would speak out — certainly not after the verdict had already been announced and preparations for the executions were already under way — none, that is, but Senator Taft."

I continue on page 185:

"The trial of the vanquished by the victors," he told an attentive if somewhat astonished audience, cannot be impartial no matter how it is hedged about with the forms of justice.

I question whether the hanging of those who, however despicable, were the leaders of the German people, will ever discourage the making of aggressive war, for no one makes aggressive war unless he expects to win. About this whole judgment there is the spirit of vengeance, and vengeance is seldom justice. The hanging of the eleven men convicted will be a blot on the American record which we shall long regret.

In these trials we have accepted the {4047|4048} Russian idea of the purpose of trials – government policy and not justice – with little relation to Anglo Saxon heritage. By clothing policy in the forms of legal procedure, we may discredit the whole idea of justice in Europe for years to come. In the last analysis, even at the end of a frightful war, we should view the future with more hope if even our enemies believed that we had treated them justly in our English speaking concept of law, in the provision of relief and in the final disposal of territory.”

And he concludes:

Q. Is that a part of your opinion in respect to “Did Six Million Really Die?”

MR. GRIFFITHS: With great respect, Your Honour, the Taft article, all we heard was the count on aggressive war. It is the same thing with Chief Justice Stone, the count on aggressive war, not war crimes, which is what is being referred to in “Did Six Million Really Die?”. A completely different count altogether. I can’t see how, even under the rubric of honest belief, this would have anything to do with the matter before us.

THE COURT: It may or it may not, Mr. Griffiths. I am going to permit it in. That will be something that you can argue to the jury at the time, and the jury will make what it will of all of this.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: 142.

— EXHIBIT NO. 142: Photocopied excerpt from “Profiles in Courage” by John F. Kennedy. {4049|4050}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you researched a number of other sources pertaining to the justification for the Nuremberg trials?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Some Jewish as well as other sources?

A. Yes.

Q. You’ve mentioned Nahum Goldman’s reference to the Nuremberg Trials. What reference is that?

A. It is contained in Nahum Goldman’s own book called “The Jewish Paradox”, and it is really the basis, the origin, the very idea behind having these trials mentioned as to being a Jewish idea.

Q. I now produce and show you an excerpt from the book, “A Jewish Paradox” by Nahum Goldman., and I ask you to identify what part of that —

MR. GRIFFITHS: That has already gone in. The whole book is already in evidence.

MR. CHRISTIE: If that is the case, I am apologizing to Your Honour and anybody else if I wasted any time at all.

Now, it seems to me there are a number of lettered exhibits, Your Honour, which have not yet gone in, and I wonder if I may produce Exhibit A.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, will you please excuse us? This will take some time and I will make decisions in your absence.

— The jury retires. 2:35 p.m. {4050|4051}

THE COURT: Gentlemen, are there any lettered exhibits that you are both aware that will not be the subject matter of contest?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, my apologies, but if I could just have a moment or two to look at this list; Mr. Christie, do you want to join me here?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a list of my own. I will check it with yours.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think we can agree to most of these matters, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Which ones, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is not materially different from the other matters that have gone in.

If I can perhaps pass this list up to Your Honour, we can run through it that way.

Mr. Walendy’s book, Exhibit “A”, is no different from the other matters that have gone in. My friend is seeking the Masonic medal. Fine.

THE COURT: That’s “C”?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. “C”.

MR. CHRISTIE: “E” is already in, I think. {4051|4052}

MR. GRIFFITHS: “F” is already in in [sic] another form. The Stroop Report is in German. “G” is in German, so that cannot go in. “H” is already in. “I” is in German so that cannot go in. “J”, “Hitler’s Table Talk”, fine.

THE COURT: Translation from Picker?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not sure. Yes. This is German with an English translation, Your Honour, of one page out of a book.

THE COURT: That’s in. With some French commentary.

MR. GRIFFITHS: “J” is all right. “K”, the Rudolf Hoess statement, that’s fine. I believe the entries of the German dictionary are already in.

THE COURT: They are in.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The two photos – perhaps we will discuss all photos at the same time, Your Honour. Photo map of Maidanek Concentration Camp I have no objection. The Red Cross —

THE COURT: That’s already in, I see.

MR. GRIFFITHS: . No, sir. I think we just read that in. That should not go in. It has {4052|4053} matters that are ruled inadmissible on it.

“P” we are not seeking. “Q” is not appropriate either. The curriculum vitae, Faurisson’s paper is fine. There has already been reference to that. — The slides we will discuss, perhaps, in a moment. The curriculum vitae of Dr. Russell, it is not appropriate. The article by Dr. Barton is fine, on consent, Your Honour. The reference book is already in.

MR. CHRISTIE: The History of Joel Brandt.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is already in led the group of exhibits. And that’s it.

THE COURT: What do you propose now, Mr. Christie and Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would just like to put those which are not objected to to the witness and ask him if it forms a part of his research.

THE COURT: Do you want to put each one individually, or do you propose that you might put them all en bloc and then in any order that you wish?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would think, Your Honour — {3600|3601}

THE COURT: Whatever way you want to do it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to deal with some of them by putting it to him. I don’t intend to try to put them all in. Just a few that are now agreed to that I will want to put in.

THE COURT: Is that satisfactory to the Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Certainly, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Done. Do you want the jury back in now? They might have to go out in ten minutes if you are going to argue photos at some point. Do you want to do it now?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, perhaps you could do that.

THE COURT: It is your case. If you want to do it now, you may.

MR. CHRISTIE: There are some enlarged photographs and slides which we might be able to show. The slides we’ve discussed a number of times. The witness has now said that he relied upon them to a large extent on his research. {4054|4055}

THE COURT: He has said that, yes. Are these the slides taken by ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Felderer.

THE COURT: Felderer, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: There’s about eighty of them, and Felderer has been brought back to be available to show them or, in the alternative, he has prepared for my client a typed description of each frame, a list of those, and he has delivered it to my client. That's all available at any time, and it could be done tomorrow.

There are a number of things that I think could be done today, if I may, to finish my examination. Then the other thing is that there are some enlarged photographs which were used by my client to analyze the situation in Auschwitz from enlargements of aerial photographs, enlargements of other photographs that we have made, from those that Faurisson has provided. For example, the mechanisms associated with the American gas chamber, and also photographs from the Auschwitz Album. They were enlarged for the purpose of viewing the situation that existed there. {4055|4056}

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Particularly the aerial photographs, and photographs of the alleged gas chamber in Krema I and Auschwitz I, which I would like to be able to show you.

THE COURT: Taken by – the original photographs taken by ...

MR. CHRISTIE: The original photographs I believe were taken by Faurisson in the case of Auschwitz I, Krema I, and also in the case of the American gas chamber.

THE COURT: Do you want Mr. Zundel to stand here while we discuss this, or may he leave the box temporarily? It is fine with me if it is fine with you.

MR. CHRISTIE: It could be very useful if he could assist me in relation to that matter, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Return to the box, Mr. Zundel.

— The witness stands down.

MR. CHRISTIE: There are basically {4056|4057} three or four that I wanted to put in, Your Honour, that were made by the accused in the course of his research, and he can identify where they came from and why he relied on them and where they are.

I have now sorted through them. If it was of assistance, I would be prepared to have my client explain why they were useful to him in his research, where he got them and what they signified to him in the voir dire form, and then, if there was a question about it, my friend could deal with in in that way.

THE COURT: Well, I will hear submissions from the Crown. If you wish to call reply, you certainly may.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. If I could, I will do that.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn on voir dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, in reference to these enlarged photographs, I would like to show you the photograph that purports to be an aerial photograph [sic] of {4057|4058} Auschwitz-Birkenau extermination camp in Poland 1944. Do you recognize that photograph?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And how is it enlarged in that fashion?

A. It is a copy negative. We made a copy negative and an enlarged print from a publication called "Holocaust Revisited", which is a publication of the C.I.A.

THE COURT: You made a copy of a negative?

THE WITNESS: Copy negative, Your Honour, and from that copy negative I made an enlargement.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is, I believe, Your Honour, the exhibits that is in evidence, the C.I.A. photographs we referred to.

THE COURT: It came from a book.

THE WITNESS: Yes. From a report from the C.I.A.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you another photograph that's been enlarged.

THE COURT: That will be Exhibit A on the voir dire.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT "A" (Voir Dire): Enlarged photo from CIA publication. {4058|4059}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: us where you got that from and what Can you tell it signifies?

A. I believe it is from the Auschwitz Album, which is also in evidence, if I am not mistaken. It was done in the same way, copy negative and enlarged print. It shows twins being liberated from Birkenau, 27 January, 1945.

Q. And what is the significance of that photograph in terms of your defence?

A. In that it shows there were children very much alive at the time of liberation, and that they looked quite healthy, quite round-faced.

Q. I now produce and show to you another photograph —

THE COURT: Exhibit "B".

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT "B" (Voir Dire): Enlarged photo from Auschwitz Album.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell us where that comes from, how it was made and what it signifies?

A. It is a copy negative made from page 113 in the Auschwitz Album, and it shows inmates with their heads shaven but round-faced and healthy.

THE COURT: EXHIBIT "C"

— Exhibit "C" (Voir Dire): Photograph from "Auschwitz Album, page 113. {4059|4060}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you another aerial photograph from the same survey from the C.I.A. What does that signify?

A. It's an aerial photograph, a copy of it, with a copy negative and a print made of Birkenau extermination camp on the 21st December, 1944.

Q. And I now produce and show to you the photograph that purports to be of —

THE COURT: Exhibit "D".

— EXHIBIT "D" (Voir Dire): Aerial photograph from CIA survey.

THE WITNESS: It is the exterior of Auschwitz I.

Q. Are you familiar with the interior of a gas chamber?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where did it come from?

A. It came from a photograph from Dr. Faurisson.

Q. And what does it signify in terms of your defence in this matter?

A. It shows the gas chamber on display in Auschwitz today, and it shows the doors and so on, and it also shows the lack of Zyklon-B stains.

THE COURT: Exhibit "E"

— EXHIBIT "E" (Voir Dire): Photograph made by Dr. Faurisson re Auschwitz I and gas chamber. {4060|4061}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you another photograph which appears to be of the same building. Do you recognize that?

A. Yes. It is the same building, except it shows the rear entrance, I believe.

Q. And what is the significance in terms of your defence of that photograph?

A. It shows the flimsy door leading into the gas chamber opening into the gas chamber, and it shows the construction of the alleged gas chamber.

THE COURT: Exhibit "F".

— EXHIBIT "F" (Voir Dire): Photograph of Auschwitz gas chamber.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a photograph of what purports to be – well, do you recognize that photograph?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Where did it come from?

A. It came from Dr. Faurisson.

Q. And what does it signify?

A. It is an enlargement of a photograph he took in Baltimore of the American gas chamber.

Q. What is the significance of that in relation to "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. It shows the need for quite modern and very solid construction of fumigation, of gas chamber doors.

THE COURT: Exhibit "G". {4061|4062}

— EXHIBIT "G" (Voir Dire): Photo from Dr. Faurisson, enlargement –

American gas chamber.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you recognize what this is?

A. This is a photograph of a fumigation chamber in Birkenau where clothes were fumigated, and it shows the quite modern and very strong build of the door and door mechanism of the fumigation chamber.

Q. How is that relevant to the theory of your understanding of the gas chamber question?

A. Because it relates to the look of an American gas chamber that was used for killing people, and it shows the difference in construction to the alleged gas chamber in Auschwitz I.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Exhibit "H".

— EXHIBIT "H" (Voir Dire): Photograph of fumigation chamber in Birkenau.

THE WITNESS: This is a different angling of a fumigation chamber in Birkenau showing the door and the way it is set into the walls together with a rack where clothing would be hanged on.

THE COURT: Exhibit "I".

EXHIBIT "I" (Voir Dire): Photograph of fumigation chamber, Birkenau. {4062|4063}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And a final photograph. Could you identify that in relation to the series of tests —

A. It's a close-up photograph of the hinges, the massive hinges and airtight seal on the gas chamber they used to kill people in Baltimore.

Q. And where did those photographs come from?

A. They came from Dr. Faurisson as well.

THE COURT: Exhibit "J".

— EXHIBIT "J" (Voir Dire): Photograph — close-up of door hinges and seal in Baltimore gas chamber.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. What is the purpose in comparison of those items?

A. Because it shows the tremendous care that needs to be taken in the construction and the very strong build of these doors that go to gas chambers that are used to kill people, and it becomes apparent that no such doors were installed in what are today being shown in gas chambers in Auschwitz I that are allegedly used to kill people.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Those are my questions on those issues. Will you answer questions from my learned friend?

THE COURT: Are there other slides?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. {4063|4064}

THE COURT: Do you want to do this separately?

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps, Your Honour. I have difficulty producing them at the moment. I have someone waiting to show them, sir, but I think it would be a little time to set up. Perhaps we can deal with these things one at a time.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS (Voir Dire):

Q. The aerial photographs, enlargements of the aerial photographs are taken from, I gather, Exhibit 27, C.I.A Report?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And can you tell us when you made those enlargements?

A. The enlargements were made for the trial, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Okay. And that would be both aerial photographs ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's "A", Your Honour, and "D". I think that's it.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. And the photographs of inmates on liberation, Exhibits "B" and "C", when were those enlargements made? {4064|4065}

A. They were made at the same time.

Q. And what is the source of — at the same time of preparation for trial?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the source of those photographs?

A. I believe it came out of the Auschwitz Album, but I am not quite sure. The one with the twins.

Q. Auschwitz Album. And that is already an exhibit.

A. Yes, it is.

MR. CHRISTIE: A lettered exhibit, I think.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. A numbered exhibit no. Exhibit No. 29.

Q. And what about the other one of the shaven heads, round-faced prisoners, Exhibit "C"?

A. That came from the same album at the same time, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Offhand — I don't see it in here — is it the "KL Auschwitz"? There are a number of different Auschwitz albums.

A. No. That would be the brown one that I referred to there, Auschwitz Album. I don't know if this is the French edition or the English edition. I am not sure which one was used.

Q. I had understood that the Auschwitz Album was around August of '44 one day when an SS officer photographer took some pictures of the selection process and what-have-you, that it wasn't liberation pictures. {4065|4066}

A. On page 113 there is one photograph with a man in a striped suit, sir.

Q. All right. Page 113 is a photograph.

A. Page No. 129.

Q. All right. Well, that's not liberation day.

A. It could come from the French edition, Mr. Griffiths. I don't know. It is not in this book.

Q. It seems to me we had a French edition here as well, a lettered exhibit. It wasn't admitted because it was in French.

THE COURT: Not "J"?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. We don't have it here, Your Honour.

Q. All right. So you are not sure of the source of that one.

A. No, I am not, Your Honour.

Q. All right. And the photographs of the inside of Auschwitz gas chamber, those are taken by Dr. Faurisson, and your information about them comes from Dr. Faurisson.

A. That's right. I was first shown those in 1949 [1979], during his lecture.

Q. And they are blown up in preparation for the trial.

A. Yes. I had only eight-by-ten photographs, and I thought they were not big enough to show to the jury.

Q. Okay. And Dr. Faurisson's American {4066|4067} gas chamber, that's "G", and that was also given to you in 1979?

A. No. He mailed those to me subsequently, eight-by-ten photographs again, and I enlarged them for the trial.

Q. Can you tell us when you would have gotten those?

A. About 1982, '83.

Q. Was it before or after this charge was laid, Mr. Zundel?

A. It would be, I believe, before, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. And the fumigation chamber in Birkenau, that's "H", and "I". Those, I believe, were from Dr. Faurisson?

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. And when would you have seen those?

A. At the same time. I received them in one batch.

Q. At the same time as —

A. As the doors for the gas chamber, you know.

Q. '82, '83?

A. '82, '83, yes.

Q. All right. And "J" was another American gas chamber. Right? And if I have you right, the Faurisson pictures of the American gas chamber and of the fumigation chamber in Birkenau are important because of the difference in the construction of the doors shown there and the construction of the doors in Exhibits "E" and "F", which are the Auschwitz I gas {4067|4068} chamber, and that's the only importance of those photographs.

A. It's a very big importance, Mr. Griffiths, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Because the other ones are wooden doors, square, rather flimsy regular house doors, whereas these —

Q. Are they the doors that Mr. Felderer referred to in Exhibit 44 who you also rely on as being different outside doors, gas chambers? It is in paragraph 4, a letter headed, "Dear Friend".

A. No. These are not outside doors, Mr. Griffiths. They are inside doors. The models I have made will reveal that.

Q. I am not as interested in your models as I am in the photograph.

A. No. These are – I can explain it to you. If this is the room, the gas chamber, this particular photograph here, for instance, this one, and this wall here, there is like a little vestibule which is a schrapnel captured [sic] during the time when this was used as a field hospital. So you are not looking at the inside. There is a vestibule. In other words, they are not going outside doors. And you see, this is a square building like that.

Q. Where the sun is coming in through those doors?

A. No. This is going through the crematorium. You see, this is the same. This is going {4068|4069} through the crematorium.

Q. And a door with a glass window?

A. There is an adjacent room to that.

Q. I see. And these pictures were made, as well, in preparation of the trial?

A. Yes, they were.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Okay. No further questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Any re-examination, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes. Any further evidence?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have just a brief submission, that they exemplify the basis for his belief on the information that he received.

I suppose it's true that they are enlargements at the time when he was preparing for trial, but the photographs themselves were received probably well before the time when he was charged.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Exhibits "A", "C", {4069|4070} "D" are already in evidence.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And I don't think we need two copies. Exhibit "B" is from an unidentified source.

THE COURT: Which is that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Twins liberated, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: "E" and "F" are, I would say, Your Honour, the remaining photographs that are before the Court here, are enlargements and not the matters on which Mr. Zundel based his belief, and if they are not matters on which he is basing his belief, then they really shouldn't be shown to the jury because if they are, then they are going to matters of truth, and Your Honour has ruled that this evidence does not go to the truth of the matter but only goes to Mr. Zundel's belief in it.

If it is to go to his belief, then it should be the material he examined for his belief and no other material. And that would be my comment, Your Honour, on those. There are some uncertainties in Mr. {4070|4071} Zundel as to when he received Exhibits "F" through "J" from Dr. Faurisson.

THE COURT: When were all these pictures taken, the photograph of the gas chambers?

THE WITNESS: When were they taken?

THE COURT: Just a moment, Mr. Zundel. You had better follow your lawyer here. I am interested in knowing when the American gas chamber photographs were taken and when the Faurisson and Felderer photographs were taken.

I have some evidence from Felderer as to when the photographs were taken, but I am unsure of precisely when.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The precise dates, Your Honour, really we don't have.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it was on the voir dire of Faurisson, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes, it was, but not on this one.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My recollection, Your Honour, which may well be faulty, is that Dr. Faurisson indicated that he wrote a paper based on his comparison of the gas chamber systems in Maryland and {4071|4072} Germany, and he presented that paper in 1979.

I drew inference from that which may or may not have been correct.

That, Your Honour, would really be my submissions on the admission of these particular photos that are before you, and I should say that I think that now or at some future time, that it should be made clear to the jury that if the evidence is admitted, that it does not go to the truth of the matters contained therein Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have nothing to add, sir.

—— {4072|4073}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury and by way of voir dire, counsel for the accused seeks to introduce into the record before the jury, on this trial, a number of photographs. I have, for the purposes of the voir dire, numbered the photographs "A" through to "J" inclusively.

The photographs are, to some extent, already in evidence in a smaller form. Some of the photographs are enlargements of smaller photos. These smaller photos in one form or another are either in evidence or, in the alternative, have been referred to by other witnesses in this trial.

The photographs Exhibits "A" and "C" are now exhibits in the trial. They will not be admitted for that reason. I agree with counsel for the Crown that "B", the photograph of the twins leaving a prison camp, is a photograph the source of which is certainly unknown to me on the evidence I have heard. There are photographs of gas chambers that, it is said, are used in the United States of America to execute people convicted of a crime deserving that punishment. There is no evidence on this voir dire {4073|4074} as to when those photographs were taken.

The purpose that counsel for the accused seeks to lead the American gas chamber photographs, if I can refer to them in that way, is to compare or contrast the construction of those chambers with what it is said by other evidence led in this trial to have existed forty years ago in Europe at the end of World War II in various prison camps or even several years before that.

The balance of the exhibits are enlargements of other photographs that have been in the possession of the accused, Mr. Zundel. Those enlargements were made in preparation for this trial.

The evidence led by counsel for the accused through his client, the accused, has consisted of essentially Mr. Zundel's alleged belief. I say that in the kindest sense, that what he admits having published in the form of Exhibit 1 is an honest belief.

In that regard, somewhere between fifty and a hundred sources of reading material of various kinds, photographs and other documents, have all been submitted to the jury as exhibits in support or to buttress the belief that Mr. Zundel said he had as to {4074|4075} the contents of Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", when he published it.

The jury will be told in due course that all of that evidence was submitted not for the purpose of proof of the truth of the contents thereof; that evidence was submitted to permit the jury to better assess the weight of anything that it will attach to the evidence of this witness insofar as the honesty of his belief is concerned.

The jury will also be told in due course that it is not up to Mr. Zundel to prove anything. It is up to the Crown to discharge the burden of proof cast upon it beyond a reasonable doubt.

Any enlargements that are now sought to be reproduced and shown to the jury could hardly be said to constitute evidence insofar as the honesty of the belief the accused said he has in the contents of the publication. It is the belief he had when he published, not when he was preparing for trial.

For the reasons I have given, none of the exhibits "A" through "J" will be admitted.

—— {4075|4076}

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:45 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, did you make a study of the soap story allegation coming from the Second World War and the story coming out of concentration camps?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Why did you do that? How is that relevant to the Holocaust story itself?

A. An integral part of the concentration camp propaganda mentioned here.

Q. And did you mention it in Dr. Hilberg's work that he mentioned it as a rumour?

A. Yes. He has frequent mentions in his book as to the soap story.

Q. Could you specify where, in the book, "The Destruction of the European Jews" it is referred to?

A. It's on page 470, 614, 623 and 624.

Q. And is it referred to as just a rumour?

A. It is extensively discussed, and might say with some relish, all kinds of details are {4076|4077} referred to.

Q. Was it taken seriously at Nuremberg?

A. Yes, it was. It is mentioned in the Blue Series.

Q. I now produce and show to you Volumes 19 and 7 of the Trials of Major War Criminals International Military Tribunal. Could you identify where in those volumes it is referred to?

A. In volume 7 of the Blue Series on page 597. It is referred to in great detail, and if I may quote:

"[I]n the Danzig anatomic institute several experiments from soap from human bodies and the tanning of human skin for purposes ... were carried out. I submit to the Tribunal as Exhibit Document No. USSR-197 (the testimony of one of the direct participants in the production of soap from human fat.)"

It is the testimony of Sigmund Mazur who was a laboratory assistant at the Danzig Anatomical Institute. I omit two pages, and turn to page —

Q. Rather than go on about it, do you believe those allegations today?

A. Not even Dr. Hilberg believes it so I am safe not to believe it myself.

Q. Was there any suggestion that they were just rumours in that evidence that you could see?

A. In this one here it is treated {4077|4078} with the utmost seriousness and it gives chemical formulas of ...

Q. Well, never mind going into detail, but is there any other reference to the soap story that takes it seriously at Nuremberg?

A. Well, this one on page 597, and page 598 certainly does, and it carries over on page 599, and then in the second series again, volume 19. It says on page 506, and I quote:

"[M]eanwhile the mass murder of Jews at Auschwitz and the other extermination centres was becoming a state by-product; bales of hair some of it as you will remember still plaited as it had been shorn off the girls' heads, tons of clothing, toys, spectacles and other articles went back to the Reich to stuff the chairs and clothe the people of the Nazi State. The gold from their victims' teeth, seventy-two transports full were to fill the coffers of the Reichsbank. On occasion even the bodies of their victims were used to make good the wartime shortage of soap. Document No. USSR-272."

Q. So, what does this serious regard to the allegation of making soap indicate to you about the rest of the Holocaust literature and allegations?

A. It's just one facet of this World War II propaganda, and it comes up every time that one hears {4078|4079} it on a radio programme. Invariably people troop out this propaganda lie.

Q. Have you conducted extensive research over the years into this story of the soap story?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Did you have a file on it?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Is it now in your hands?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Just without going into detail, what are the sources that you sought out to find about this allegation?

A. Many of these people are quite serious authors like, for example, Walter Lacqueur who published a book called, "The Terrible Secret". He talks about the Jewish corpses for the manufacture of soap, glue and lubricants.

Q. Was the soap story originating only after the Second World War, or is there any other such story?

A. It was a hang-over, a warmed-up version of the corpse or cadaver factory of the First World War.

Q. What other authors took it seriously and portrayed it seriously in the literature?

A. Robert Ross discusses it in, "So it was True", a book that was published in 1980. And then another book called, "While Six Million Died", a chronicle of Americana by Arthur Morse. It claims that there are at least two factories processing corpses {4079|4080} for the manufacture of soap, glue and lubricants. And then the German book of the "Macht Ohne Moral", which has been mentioned here before. Then there is, of course, Gitta Sereny's book, "Into the Darkness". There are, in the footnotes of this referred to: A few corpses from concentration camps proved impractical. The idea was apparently abandoned.

It is apparently the idea of Dr. Hilberg, but they do claim that these productions of soap took place.

Q. So what is your conclusion about the soap stories?

A. Well, I have a cross-section here of French, German and English books, magazines and so on, all in fairly similar wording, regurgitating what came out of the Nuremberg War Crimes Trials.

So it seems when the Russians introduced this allegation, many writers took it for reality and for truth, and even in 1983 and '81 and '80 are regurgitating what even Dr. Hilberg admits today were nothing but rumours which he could find no substantiation.

Q. Thank you. I now produce and show to you an article from "The Canadian Jewish News, December 11, 1981. What does that signify in relation to your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. This is a condensed article that appeared in the Canadian Jewish News, and it discusses reparations or wiedergutmachung which Germany paid to Jews all over the world, and it lists, and I quote just the section of the news item: {4080|4081}

"According to data supplied by the German Information Centre in New York, 99.8% of all claims had been settled by Jan. 1981."

The news item is dated December 11, 1981.

"Payments have reached 50.18 billion German marks. About 40% of the victims live in Israel; 20% in West Germany, and 40% elsewhere."

Q. How does that relate to the figure you gave before of a hundred billion marks?

A. No. This was — excuse me. There is, again, a difference in numbers if one counts payments to individual recipients and does not add on payments to Jewish organizations, to the State of Israel itself. If there were material reparations, if one calculates these such as ships, even arms, pipelines, railroads — when I was in Israel, there was a youth hostel that was built with money like that, and every fixture in that place had, "Made in Germany" on it.

Q. Does that play a part in your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Why?

A. Because it has certainly generated a tremendous windfall, especially for the State of Israel and for certain individuals and organizations which they would not have without the Holocaust {4081|4082} propaganda.

Q. I now produce and show to you an item of the New York Times of August 7 —

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit this, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Is that one of the lettered exhibits that you ask go in?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't believe so, sir.

THE COURT: All right. 143.

— EXHIBIT NO. 143 : Photocopied excerpt from The Canadian Jewish News, December 11, 1981.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you familiar with this speech?

A. Yes. It is a microfilm print-out from The New York Times, Monday, August 7, 1933.

Q. Who obtained it?

A. I obtained this thing a long time ago.

Q. And what's it signify to you in relation to your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. Well, it is the first declaration of War that I am aware of on Germany by an internationally famous and powerful Jewish organization and its leader, and it calls for a global war against Germany.

Q. It calls for a global war against Germany. Why?

A. Economic boycott. Total. It was broadcast over many United States radio stations and {4082|4083} the first address of the speech was given in Amsterdam, Holland.

Q. What effect did this have on the German Government of the day?

A. Near panic. It is now a documented fact, since we have a book by this fellow, Black, called "The Transfer Agreement" which came recently on the market, and the boycott took hold, was effective and nearly toppled the German Government. It caused tremendous unemployment, because German exports to the United States, especially, took a nosedive.

Q. So how does that relate to the Holocaust?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is the book that was written in 1984, Edwin Black's book, I believe?

THE WITNESS: I believe it is, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think it's in evidence, but unfortunately it's been referred to, so ...

THE WITNESS: I apologize, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What does that have to do with your understanding of the Holocaust?

A. Well, it certainly does explain that there were two protagonists in the struggle that preceded the Second World War, and if there were hard feelings in Germany and if there were harsh measures by the German Government – {4083|4084}

Q. In regard to who?

A. I am referring to the reaction of the German Government to this particular type of propaganda and international boycott. Some of the anti-Jewish measures undertaken were a direct result of this kind of agitation outside Germany. It's a matter of asking what came first, the chicken or the egg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. What is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's —

THE COURT: New York Times 1933 speech by who?

MR. CHRISTIE: Samuel Untermyer, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Exhibit 144.

— EXHIBIT NO. 144: Microfilm copy of Untermyer's Speech in The New York Times, August 7, 1933.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you the book of Udo Walendy called, "War Crimes Malign the German Nation" Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Are you familiar with it being referred to in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read it yourself? {4084|4085}

A. Yes.

Q. What do you think of it?

A. It shows numerous photo montages, and it shows on page 74 the photograph of a photo montage with background retouched which appears in Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", this photograph here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 145.

— EXHIBIT NO. 145: Book, "Forged War Crimes malign the German Nation" by Udo Walendy.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you what has been entered as Exhibit "C". Do you recognize that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is it?

A. It's a medal called "Victoria No. 205" of the Royal Arch Masons, and it shows a Star of David in a circle together with some other masonic signs.

Q. Why is that relevant to your publication or writing, rather, of "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Because it reveals, certainly in the graphics, a strong influence of Jewish influence.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 146. {4085|4086}

— EXHIBIT NO. 146: Royal Arch Masons Medal.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, in the earlier stage of these proceedings Exhibit "J", for identification, was introduced, a translation of the table talk of Adolf Hitler. Could you give the year, please?

A. It's by Henry Picker, 1941-1942, and was published by Percy Ernst Schramm, Stuttgart, Seewald publishers, 1963.

Q. And what does that signify to you in relation to the subject of exterminationists' thesis?

A. It was a talk that Hitler had during supper and in which he discusses the Jewish question, and he mentions his attitude towards it, and he says "[:]

"In this 11nd [sic] world war which is a struggle for life and death it must never be forgotten that after the declaration of war on the part of the World Zionist Congress and its leader Chaim Weizmann (in his message to Britain's Prime Minister Chamberlain). World Jewry, the most relentless adversary of National Socialism is the Enemy No. 1. When doing business, Jewry is looking for Europe, but Europe must reject this already for sacro-egoistic reasons, since Jewry is harder in terms of {4086|4087} race. After the war he would be rigorously hold the point of view that he would destroy one town after the other, unless the 'Drecksjuden' (filthy Jews) get out or wander off to Madagascar (2) or some other Jewish national state, (Hitler said)."

Q. Do you know when that conversation was supposed to have taken place?

A. 24th of July, 1942, evening.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 147.

— EXHIBIT NO. 147: Copy of Picker's English translation of Hitler's Table Talk – excerpt.

Q. Now, early on in these proceedings there was a quote from Benjamin D'Israeli's speech which we undertook to prove. I now show you a book in the German language. Have you undertaken a translation of that book?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. Can you identify the book, the author, year of publication and the portion referable [sic] to the quote that mentions D'Israeli?

A. The author of the book is Heinrich Blume. The title of the book is "Das Politische Geficht [Gesicht] der Freimaurerei". It's "The Political Face of Freemasonry", published 1937.

Q. What is the portion of the book on {4087|4088} page 5 that refers to the banishment of D'Israeli?

A. I read:

"Contemporary European history can only be written by one (who is) aware of the secrets of the secret societies ... This century's statesmen deal not only with governments, emperors, kings and ministers, but also with the secret societies. These societies can conclusively nullify all political arrangements, they have agents everywhere, unscrupulous agents who instigate murder, and they can cause a bloodbath if they deem such to be a means to their ends."

It comes from D' Israeli's speech at Aylesbury, 20th September, 1876.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to file that, Your Honour, if I may.

— EXHIBIT NO 148: German book by Heinrich Blume with English translation of excerpt from page 5.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What was the circumstance in which you wrote the book or the item, "The West, War and Islam"? Why did you do that?

A. There were two reasons. One, I saw an advertisement in a German newspaper. I believe it was "Die Welt".

Q. What does that mean? {4088|4089}

A. It is in German. "The World". A German newspaper. And it shows a picture of Hitler – I don't have "The West, War and Islam" in front of me – Daladier, von Ribbentrop and Arafat, I believe, in the advertisement.

Q. Why did that upset you?

A. It's the juxtaposition of Hitler with these statesmen, and also Arafat, and especially the caption, the text that was put with it, and especially those who paid for the advertisement.

Q. Well, tell us about the ad. Who paid for it? Why did that upset you, if you wouldn't mind?

A. If I may have Exhibit 1 then I can be more specific. I mean Exhibit 2.

Q. Well, perhaps I could show you what is a photocopy of the ad. I now produce and show to you what appears to be a photocopy of an advertisement. Do you recognize that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What upset you about that ad? Have you provided a translation in handwriting of the ad?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What's the ad all about?

A. Oh, Chamberlain also appears, excuse me, in the picture as well. The ad, basically, says that political appeasement in the year 1938 helped Hitler destroy Czechoslovakia and led to World War II, to the death of six million Jews and to fifty million war casualties. Political appeasement in the year 1980 would help the PLO, would threaten three million Israelis {4089|4090} with death and would make a Third World War more likely.

"We, the undersigned, belong to the few survivors of the concentration camp hells and we appeal to the European community not to encourage violent forces, injustice and destruction, to not force Israel into an untenable position, prevent a new tragedy, learn from the ignoble past, recognize the similarity of the mistakes and their threatening results."

And in a smaller part of the text it says:

"We appeal to the nations of the European community to assist us in our wrestling for endeavour for peace, justice and human rights. Never again war. Never again Auschwitz. Never again Holocaust. We defend ourselves against the new deadly threat in the name of the Israeli people ..."

And the German name for it was "folk".

"... and the Jews the world over. We appeal for a free Europe. Do not let us face these dangers again alone."

And then it gives the name of the individuals:

G. Albeck, (Buchenwald), S. Borenstein, (Auschwitz), W. Schulz (Auschwitz), and M. Zuckermann (Mauthausen).

And then it states:

"Responsible for the content of this {4090|4091} advertisement is the Janusz-Korczak Loge, Berlin, of whom the four signatories are members."

Q. What do you mean, Janusz-Korczak Loge? Who is that?

A. These are former survivors of Buchenwald, Auschwitz, Mauthausen who are Freemasons, German Freemasons belonging to the Janusz-Korczak Lodge and who pay for a series of ads in the major newspapers in Germany, "Die Welt" and the Frankfurt ...

Q. What do you consider is wrong with that, if anything?

A. It had to be seen in the context of the time, because there was tremendous agitation for war in the world in that the Iranian crisis had just passed, and there was virtually daily talk about possible war in the Middle East, the invasion of Iran, maybe, by the Americans. The Americans were organizing a strike force in a rapid deployment force, and so on, and I felt, number one, that it was an unfair comparison of the political situation to compare Arafat and Hitler in the context of this particular ad, and I felt that this was almost like a call for war that would drag Europe, and possibly the world, into a Middle East war.

And so this thing that I put out, "The West, War and Islam", basically, as will be quite apparent from the text, was an attempt to prevent war. That's why I appealed to support us financially, that we could buy pamphlets, make films, publish books; in other words, prevent war through information rather than the purchasing of guns and so on. {4091|4092}

Q. Why did you, in the article, write about Masons in "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Because it was Masons, certainly those four German Masons who, quite proudly, said that they paid for these ads.

Q. Did their lodge have anything to do with that ad?

A. Well, I didn't contact the Janusz-Korczak Lodge in Berlin. I assume when men of calibre mention the name of the organization, that they belong to that, it must be okay or certainly checked out that they would have some kind of sanction.

Q. What research have you done into the whole subject of Freemasonry?

A. I have done some research into it. It's a peripheral thing that I am interested in. It is almost like my flying saucer hobby, maybe a little more serious.

Q. Have you had occasion to check the New Catholic Encyclopedia on the subject of Masonry?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What does it have to do with your views?

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this ad, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

THE WITNESS: The translation is in handwriting.

THE COURT: Yes. Is it in English?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. It is in hand writing, though. {4092|4093}

THE COURT: That's all right. As long as it is in the English language, that's fine. 149.

— EXHIBIT NO. 149: Photocopy of advertisement in German in "Die Welt" with handwritten English translation.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What does that reflect in respect to Masonry?

A. It gives a chart, number one, an organizational chart of how Freemasonry is structured, various degrees of the Scottish Rite, the York Rite, Shriners, their organizational graphics, for instance, and it discusses, from a Catholic viewpoint, the Catholics' relationship or history of the Catholic Church towards Masonry. It is a very condensed thing.

Q. And prior to the date of this charge was there a statement by the Catholic Church from Cardinal Ratzinger?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. Is that attached to that?

A. Yes. On November 26, 1983, there was a declaration on Catholic membership in the Masons by the Vatican's Doctrinal Congregation, and the gist of it is:

"The authority to make a different judgment and to decide that the case is otherwise is explicitly reserved to the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. This congregation {4093|4094} has to examine whatever evidence is presented for a more lenient discipline."

It gives the whole reasoning. It is quite a long thing about Masonry.

Q. Were you aware of that position in respect to Masons at the time you published?

A. Yes. The relation of the Catholic Church towards Masonry has been a very long one, and there are many sources that I have in my library and magazines and newspaper articles that Catholics cannot be Masons, and there is a book which I have called, "Christianity and Freemasonry" where it expressly forbids Catholics to be Masons and mentions that one Catholic Priest had been a Mason and was asked by the Church to leave the Rotary Club, I believe it was, because he was the Canadian head of the Rotary Club. And the Catholic Church did not look kindly on even the Rotary Club. It is in a book called, "Christianity and Freemasonry." It could be that I have it in my books here.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, the indictment says 1981 for "The West, War and Islam", which is consistent with what Mr. Zundel had said at the time of the advertisement that he saw; but November of '83 is hardly the same timeframe.

THE COURT: I think that Mr. Christie might agree with that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How many years have you spent, how much research have you done in the subject of Masonry? {4094|4095}

A. I think I have been interested in Masonry as far as I have been politically aware. The turn of the sixties, early sixties.

Q. Did you distribute "The West, War and Islam" publicly?

A. It was mailed to a specific group of people whose addresses I have and thought it would be important that they should receive it.

Q. Was it mailed to a group?

A. No. To individuals.

Q. How was it mailed?

A. Via Canada Post in sealed envelopes.

Q. How were the envelopes addressed?

A. With the addresses of those individuals on the outside.

Q. Where were the names of the individuals on the envelopes?

A. Under the right of centre, and —

Q. So it was addressed to specific individuals, was it?

A. Yes, it was, in each case.

Q. Was it available for public distribution in Canada?

A. It was mailed exclusively to people outside Canada, mainly in what is referred to as the Moslem Crescent, which would be people from Morocco to Pakistan.

Q. Was it ever available to people in Canada from you?

A. Not from me.

Q. Have you made a study of the power {4095|4096} of Jews in the media?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "The Powers That Be". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this?

This is from the Catholic Encyclopedia for Masonry.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 150: Excerpt from New Catholic Encyclopedia re Masonry.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is published in 1967.

Q. What has that got to do with Jews and the media, their position in the media?

A. It's a book by David Halberstam.

Q. What is the year? When was the book published?

A. 1979.

Q. And what does it indicate to you about the prominence or otherwise of Jews in the media?

A. It describes with quite a number of fascinating and great deal of detail the ownership, for instance, of the Washington Post and other papers in America.

Q. Why are they significant?

A. Well, The New York Times, the Washington Post and some of the Los Angeles papers are the greatest and the most important newspapers, certainly in North America, and by their influence, in the world.

Q. And what effect did that have, in your view, on the subject of Middle East peace or the Arab world?

A. Because many of the inflammatory headlines about the Middle East situation could be found in those newspapers.

Q. And what were you attempting to do through the article, "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It might sound grandiose, but I thought I could defuse a rather dangerous situation.

Q. How?

A. Well, I knew I wasn't powerful enough to do it in North America, but certainly by writing to people that had influence in the Middle East I could alert these people and hopefully bring about an infusion of information, and through information, understanding, and I was perfectly willing to be a vehicle for that information if they were to help me financially.

Q. Information to whom?

A. Information to the people in Canada and America, in England and in West Germany, to not go to war, but to solve that problem peacefully.

Q. Information about what?

A. About the Middle East situation.

Q. Well, why didn't you feel they were already being informed?

A. I don't know how many people read The Washington Post or The New York Times over there. {4097|4098} I just thought, like many other writers do and publicists do that I had something unique to say and to contribute, and I felt duty-bound to say it. And I don't regret that I did.

Q. What was your objective in doing it?

A. I have said it before that I wanted to defuse what I thought was a situation where we were drifting towards a war in the Middle East, and it was a war, I felt, that was totally unnecessary, and that could be prevented through the distribution of information, especially through the removal of stereotyping of the Arabs, which was at that time, thanks to the Ayotallah Khomeni, very strong in the western world.

Q. And what, in relation to "The West, War and Islam", did you do to research the statements you made regarding Jews in the media?

A. I relied on the book, I think, which is already in evidence called "Jewish Lists" by Greenberg, and I had in my files the speech by the Chief of the General Staff of the United States Army Air Force and so on, George Brown, who had mentioned the undue influence of Zionists in the American media, and books like "The Powers That Be", and there is a whole range of other books that deal with the subject.

Q. What do they lead you to believe about it?

A. That although the people in the Middle East were possibly reading American newspapers, I felt they were getting only one side, meaning largely the Zionist side. {4098|4099}

Q. And what, in regard to that, did you think Masons had to do with it?

A. Well, since these German Masons had paid for the advertisement, and I just thought that this was one time when the confluence of interest, or whatever, should be exposed that exists between Masonry, Zionism — it is a very complex thing. And I thought since it is very difficult for people in the Western World to understand it, people who did not grow up in our culture and had not access to our libraries and our information, my information, for instance; that they could not possibly comprehend what is going on, and I felt that in the space available to me, which was dictated by airmail postage considerations that I could afford, I had to be extremely terse and, like many abstracts, possibly it is as faulty as an abstract can be. It is the boiled-down essence of an idea. That is why it is only in short paragraphs.

Q. What knowledge did you have of the connection between Jews and Masons?

A. There are the graphics. There are the rituals exposed in many books, numerous articles, especially in Europe and France. In the German area of the world a well-known author who I know personally whose books I know for many years, whose books I have bought — Europe has a long tradition of writing about the role of Masonry, especially in politics. It is in America and in Canada this is not a tradition, but in Europe, intellectual circles in Europe and publicists circles and so on, and people who are politically conscious, Masonry is frequently discussed and its role {4099|4100} in politics, and it is acknowledged.

Q. What is acknowledged?

A. The power of Masonry in politics.

Q. And what about the relationship between Masonry and Judaism? I now show you an object which you have brought to my attention. What is that?

A. It is, I suppose, a certificate, you may call it.

THE COURT: A what?

THE WITNESS: A certificate, Your Honour.

THE COURT: A certificate, yes.

THE WITNESS: Handed out to a fellow whose name is down here. It says, "Edwin Smith".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: But what does it display in connection to Masons and Judaism?

A. Well, on the right hand on the bottom side there is a seal, and it has the Star of David very prominently displayed almost as big as the seal on the other side.

Q. Are you aware of the symbolic meaning of the letters over top?

A. Geez, I did know it, but for the moment I don't. It's an abbreviation of a Masonic statement, possibly. I don't know it for the moment.

Q. Have you studied the influence of Masons in history and politics?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you tell us some of that?

A. In recent history, I think the {4100|4101} most memorable that many people would remember and recall is the scandal caused by the P2 lodge in Italy and Argentina which led to the death of many prominent – of some prominent people and financiers, arrests, massive arrests. It is responsible, I believe, for toppling one government in Italy.

Q. Well, could you give us some detail about that, because I don't know that anybody else understands that.

THE COURT: Excuse me a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could we have the date when that scandal occurred, first?

THE COURT: You might ask Mr. Zundel that.

THE WITNESS: I would have to go through my box of files, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Could you go on with something else, and perhaps – —

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I could – yes, I suppose I should provide the date.

Q. What, particularly, are you aware of in respect to the P2 scandals prior to 1983, '81?

THE COURT: Prior to?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, my client's knowledge of the world did not cease in

81. If he acquires knowledge about something to do with Masons after '81 that confirms his knowledge of Masons prior to '81, would that not be relevant?

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I take the position, Your Honour, that what Mr. Zundel is testifying to now {4101|4102} does not go to the truth of the matter as to his belief in these matters, and the relevant time for his belief in these matters is not today before the jury, but when he published them, and the date of publication is 1981.

THE COURT: It makes sense to me, Mr. Christie. It doesn't mean you can't ask him what beliefs, if any, he had prior to 1981 concerning Masons.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what political activities of Masons are you aware of existing before 1981, then, that –

A. There is a massive body of literature dealing with the influence of Masonry which led to the First World War, for instance.

Q. Can you give us some information about that?

A. It was published by the German Field Marshall Ludendorf, and he has written tomes and tomes of books about the influence of Freemasonry on European Governments which brought about the assassination of the Archduke in Sarajevo, and from there on, various alliances and political moves in Europe. And he attributes them squarely to Freemasons. He names names, dates, places, and that's only one author. Henri Quaston (ph) does the same in his French books. He talks about the Grand Orient Lodge, and the European writer, as I said, Johann Muller (ph) who lives in Argentina and publishes his books in Europe and Argentina, there are some six or seven, he again mentions dates, places of events in European history where Masons figure prominently. {4102|4103}

Q. I think I have an American dollar bill before 1981. Do you see any significance on that?

A. There is a Masonic emblem on the dollar bill[.].

Q. Have you made a study of Masonic emblems?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. I produce and show to you a book called "Masonic Symbols in American Decorative Arts" published by the Scottish Rite Masonic Museum. Are you familiar with this book?

A. Yes, I am. It comes from my library.

Q. I can barely hear you.

A. I said yes, I did, because it comes from my library.

Q. What does this indicate to you about Masonry?

A. The book is full of emblems, shapes and graphics that are found on the pyramid on the back of the United States dollar bill.

Q. What does that have to do with your understanding of the influence of Masonry on politics?

A. I have subscribed for a number of years for magazines like "Northern Lights" in the United States that are magazines put out by Masons that proudly state that President George Washington, for instance, was a Mason. I have an envelope in my collection mailed in Frederic[k]sburg, Virginia, and it says, "Masonic Club {4103|4104} Stationery", and it says, "225th Anniversary George Washington, Master Mason". And I have seen a plaque with George Washington's name on it referring to him as a Mason.

Q. So this is something not new, right?

A. No. The Masonic movement in America was there since colonial times.

Q. Are you aware of its influence in relation to communism?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book by Monsignor George Dillon.

THE COURT: The first book you referred to, you want that in as an exhibit?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: 151.

— EXHIBIT NO. 151: Book, "Masonic Symbols In American Decorative Arts"

THE COURT: What is the name of the book that you are referring to now?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is called, "Grand Orient Freemasonry Unmasked as the Secret Power Behind Communism" by Monsignor George F. Dillon.

Q. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where did it come from?

A. It comes from my own library.

Q. What does it indicate to you? {4104|4105}

A. The title is self-explanatory, that it calls Freemasonry the secret power behind communism.

Q. I now produce a book called, "Freemasonry and the Vatican" by Vicomte Leon De Poncins.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this book as an exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 152: Book, "Grand Orient Freemasonry Unmasked" by Monsignor George F. Dillon.

THE WITNESS: Yes. "Freemasonry and the Vatican."

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And that is before 1981, is it, sir?

A. This was published ...

Q. I think in '67 if I remember right.

A. First published in 1917. This is published in 1968.

Q. And where did that come from?

A. This came from my own private library.

Q. And what does that indicate to you about Masonry?

A. It talks about the campaign in favour of Freemasonry, Masonic secrets, Judaism and Freemasonry, Satanism and Freemasonry, and it discusses communism and Freemasonry, Freemasonry and the Revolution of 1789. It is not a long book, and it — {4105|4106}

Q. Have you read it?

A. Yes. And it covers these topics, I think, with sufficient detail to certainly make me understand that there is cause to believe that certain Freemasons are promoting communism.

Q. Why is there an association in your understanding of those institutions?

A. Well, if, at certain times in history, certain organizations pursue the same goals and do not oppose one another in working in congress with one another, then I think that they are allied. Certainly, at least, allied.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit this, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 153: Book, "Freemasonry and the Vatican" by Vicomte Leon de Poncins.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you, over the years, compile a file on Freemasonry?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Is this it?

A. This is part of it, yes.

Q. Has any of the research that you have done indicated anything to the contrary of what you printed in "The West, War and Islam"?

A. No, it hasn't. And much of this research comes from popularly available books, magazines, New Catholic Encyclopedia, some even Life Magazine, some from the BBC, London. There is a publication called {4106|4107} "The Listeners", books on Klu Klux Klan pointing out that it was Masonic in origin, German magazines, even material by some well-known Soviet writers on Masonry. There is quite a body of writing, I understand, in the Soviet Union. This is an English version and it's called, "Who Are the Masons", a Soviet's views of the Masons.

Q. Is it the Soviet view of the Masons now?

A. At the moment they had a falling-out, it seems.

Q. In "The West, War and Islam" you said, "Vicious, greedy people who call themselves Jews". What did you mean by that?

A. I think you will see in the text of the publication that "who call themselves Jews" is in quotation marks.

Q. But what does it mean?

A. It means that there are people in the world today who cloak themselves under the protection, the umbrella of being Jews and do all kinds of nasty things, because they know that the smear word "anti-Semite" is so powerful that they can get away with murder, as in the case of Israeli terrorists killing people. We have just heard news reports about murder squads roaming the world killing alleged Nazi war criminals without trial. So these people are making use of the goodwill extended to Jews around the world and camouflaged under that protection they are what I consider greedy, vicious and militant.

Q. Have you had experience with {4107|4108} Sabina Citron in the past?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. The complainant in this case.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. I think it is something that should be discussed in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: Please excuse us, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 4:40 p.m.

THE COURT: I gather, Mr. Christie, we are off Masonry for a while.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, for the moment, yes. I was going to deal with the background of the prosecution, this prosecution has, with its inception with the past activities of the same complainant, and trying to demonstrate some of the allegations made here in relation to the accused's own experience, particularly — that's all. I want to display the fact that Sabina Citron was involved in trying to have my client's postal rights taken away. When that failed, she was also instrumental in these proceedings.

Shortly after they were taken by the Crown, but it is a fact that she was the private informant against the accused, and I feel that the jury {4108|4109} should realize that there is an element behind this proceeding that should be made known, and that it demonstrates some of the militance of people who cloak themselves [sic] in this appellation.

I was inclined to the view that we should seek to have Mrs. Citron called as a hostile witness because she was a witness at the preliminary and gave evidence which demonstrated the fact that Auschwitz was not a one-way ticket. She, herself — left there, as I am well aware from the examination of the preliminary hearing. She refused to work and she was not put to work, apparently, and she left there and went to somewhere else in a passenger train, and read that transcript. And I wanted to have the benefit of that evidence to demonstrate that Auschwitz-Birkenau was not, as some people have described it, somewhere out of which one only left dead or up the chimneys, as it has been said. But I certainly hope that I am not precluded from bringing out the background of the case to show what's really behind the prosecution.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {4109|4110}

I suggest, Your Honour, that the Crown has intervened. There is nothing behind the prosecution other than the fact that in the prosecution there was a preliminary inquiry at the end of which the judge found that there was sufficient evidence to put Mr. Zundel on his trial. There is certainly not a totally groundless or baseless complaint.

We have been involved in that trial now for two months, which also indicates it is not a groundless complaint, but there are reasonable and probable grounds upon which a charge could be laid and was laid.

The Crown intervened at the earliest opportunity when the charge was laid, as it is bound to do, as it was an indictable offence. The reason why I was promptly on my feet is I thought — and although Mr. Christie hasn't made specific reference to it — that we would be getting into other proceedings.

He did make reference to the postal authorities proceedings during the course of which Mr. Zundel's postal rights were initially taken away, here in Canada, and then following the hearing returned to him, and I would say, Your Honour, I would submit that {4110|4111} that has no relevance whatsoever to this matter before the Court, that it is evidence from which the jury might draw a totally improper inference that this charge has already been dealt with, where it is not.

It would be like Dr. Morgenthauer getting up and saying, "I have already been acquitted of this charge three times before, four times before." Everybody may know it, but you can't say it. And I take the position that Mr. Zundel is in no better or worse position than Dr. Morgenthauer. He can't say what happened in other legal proceedings where he's been acquitted. They are not criminal proceedings and they are not dealing with the section or matters that are before this Court.

That's my submission, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: If Dr. Morgenthauer was pursued by the same complainant in the proceedings and something falls in terms of saying by that very person that they are vicious, greedy and militant, and if the issue is that the statements were true, I would think that it would be relevant to the hearing of that matter as to what happened in the background between the {4111|4112} parties, and it is my submission that the accused should be able to say what he means by the terms, "militant, greedy and vicious", which I intend to do by putting before the jury what he thinks is going on between someone who represents an organization that calls itself Jewish and calls itself The Holocaust Remembrance Association.

I don't see that the jury should be unaware of that. It is certainly not a situation of separate prosecutions by unrelated persons when it has, as in this case, because the same person seems relentless in pursuit of Mr. Zundel.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Postal authority came after, if I may, Your Honour, 1981.

MR. CHRISTIE: After 1981?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is my understanding.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think so. My client's instructions are that they didn't come after 1981.

THE WITNESS: November 1981 they were initiated.

THE COURT: It is thirty days before {4112|4113} 1982.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it is certainly a personal experience of the accused. It is not something that he is giving hearsay evidence about, so maybe it is a factual basis for his opinion that does not have to be prior to the time of the prosecution [sic] or alleged offence, if it is going to the truth, because he has experience of some viciousness by a person in that category.

—— {4113|4114}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, during his examination of the accused himself, has proposed to ask Mr. Zundel certain questions concerning what I understand to be, perhaps, a private complainant in this prosecution.

He proposes, also, as I understand it, to make reference to certain postal rights which are said to have been removed from Mr. Zundel and then restored at a point in time, Mr. Zundel interjected, about the month of November 1981.

His purpose is to bring to the attention of the jury the fact that an allegedly Jewish person representing an allegedly Jewish organization has hounded, harassed and chased Mr. Zundel and has been responsible for this prosecution which has consumed the last approximate seven weeks of our time.

Crown counsel, quite correctly, objects. Crown counsel in this country, and certainly in this province, do not act as gladiators for certain specific groups within the fabric of Canadian society. Crown counsel are independent persons, just as defence counsel are. {4114|4115}

This prosecution is obviously not brought on behalf of one specific group. This prosecution, I am quite satisfied, has been brought on behalf of the community at large. Crown counsel does not represent one specific group. He represents the whole of our community. That is a tradition which goes back many, many decades.

There has been due, lawful process, I am satisfied, insofar as the committal [sic] for trial is concerned. This prosecution is here. It has consumed our time. I do not sit in judgment between Germans and Jews or anyone else; neither does this jury. This jury represents the community at large.

Whether a person harasses another person is not a matter this jury is called upon to decide. This jury is called upon to decide certain things on instructions from me and no one else. Relief for harassment, insofar as relief to Mr. Zundel is concerned, can be sought by him, if proper and lawful grounds exist, in other forums and at another time.

What Mr. Christie proposes here is not relevant to the issues this jury must decide on that subject. There will also be no questions put to {4115|4116} Mr. Zundel with respect to whether or not his postal rights were taken away, whether they were restored, where or when.

THE COURT: Now, is there any doubt in anybody's mind about what they can ask and not ask? Because I will make it very plain.

Bring back the jury, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Will we be sitting till six o'clock?

THE COURT: What is your convenience?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, my convenience is quite irrelevant. I am prepared to be here.

THE COURT: I will decide how long we will sit when I see how tired the jury is becoming. I am quite prepared to sit through till midnight, but I don't think I will impose that on the jury.

— The jury enters.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie. {4116|4117}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you familiar with the relationship of bankers to the influences and power of Islamic nations?

A. I am not an expert at it, but I have looked into that, yes.

Q. What have you studied in your understanding of international finance?

A. All kinds of books on bankers, the Federal Reserve system that issues money in the United States, the banking system generally, the great families in banking, merchant banking — the Rothschilds, the financing of the Russian Revolution, for example.

Q. What do you know about the financing of the Russian Revolution?

A. There is a great body of literature, especially in the thirties and forties.

Q. Can you name some of the titles you are aware of?

A. Well, there is a fairly recent book by a fellow called Sutton, Anthony Sutton. It's called, "Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution" which deals in great detail with the machinations of certain financial interests, especially in the United States, to help the Bolsheviks, to secure markets for them and loans for them and invest money in the Soviet Union.

Q. Do you have that book yourself?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And what effect did it have on your thinking in regard to bankers and international finance? {4117|4118}

A. It is similar to Freemasonry. One cannot study and hope to understand politics if one does not examine what drives politics and what finances politics. Politics is basically related to money. Sometimes money comes before politics, and sometimes it is the other way around. There is an interrelationship there. It is a symbiotic relationship and always has been. People with money were frequently powerfully connected, and there is a very cynical view amongst many people in the writing profession that, if I may be permitted to say it, that you can even buy justice.

Q. What do you know of the influence of the Rothschilds?

A. In international banking?

Q. Yes.

A. They are a very old family of bankers, started shortly after the Middle Ages, and films have been made about them and written about them, about all the various sons of the Rothschilds. There are banking houses that are far-flung in France, in London, in America now, even, and they are involved in many international financial dealings.

Q. Do they have any relationship with the Warbergs? [Warburgs]

A. I can't prove that there is a specific corporate interconnection or relationship, but bankers are very congenial people and frequently get together in thrashing out international agreements and so on. I think that's an open secret.

Q. What is your understanding of the {4118|4119} relationship of international finance and, for example, the Bolshevik Revolution from your understanding of the Sutton book?

A. There is no doubt that without the help of powerful financial interests in the Western world, most especially Germany in the period, and also America, especially America, the Bolshevik Revolution would have failed.

Q. And where would this information, this money come from?

A. Jacob Schiff, for instance, in America, was one of the bankroller of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Q. Are you familiar with the activity of the Trotskys in North America?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you acquire that knowledge?

A. He was living in North America. He was writing columns in North American newspapers and he was a fundraiser and he left from here to go back to Russia with quite a number of people who lived on the lower east side of New York. Many of them couldn't even speak Russian when they got back to the Soviet Union.

Q. And do you have any knowledge of their activities in travelling to the Soviet Union?

A. Well, they came at the tail end of the First World War, whether in Switzerland — and some of the chief leaders of the Bolsheviks were shipped through Germany into Russia in order to topple the Soviet Government. And the German Foreign Minister at the time had a hand in that, in that they were shipped {4119|4120} in a sealed railroad car to Russia. Their coup, or their revolution was successful. Little did these Germans realize that they had unleashed a spirit which they had found impossible to bottle ever since.

THE COURT: We will adjourn now.

— The jury retires. 5:00 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 21.

FEBRUARY 21, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Yes. Is there anything, gentlemen, before I call in the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, Your Honour, it would be appropriate if I might raise the issue of the slides now.

THE COURT: Yes

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour has heard evidence from the accused that he has relied upon the information relied upon by the slides in respect to his conclusion that the camp of Auschwitz was not an extermination camp. You have heard that he obtained {4120|4121} the slides from Dittlieb Felderer. You have heard a good deal about what those slides are and what they represent to the accused.

It is my hope that we can show those to the jury to indicate the condition of the camp relating to a number of things relating to the evidence of the witnesses of the Crown, particularly the evidence of Dr. Vrba pertaining to, among other things, the height of Leichenkeller I and Krema II, the question of the possibility of the six-meter-deep pits for burning, and the general discussion of the layout of the camp.

In the slides there's photographs of water treatment plants, sewage treatment plants, the barrack logs; there are slides of the swimming pool alleged by Felderer to be within the camp. There are slides of the cooking facilities and the kitchen buildings, all of which are located at the Auschwitz Museum which purports to be a representation for the world of what the Holocaust was all about.

A museum is not a tourist attraction. It is something designed to communicate information to the public about something of fact, and so certainly it is on that basis that my client has, I think, the right to {4121|4122} correct, that the four million people by the authorities alleged there to have died there, there are slides that indicate the plaques and other graphic representations which tell the world today that four million people died there, and we have led the evidence of Dr. Hilberg as to 1.2 million.

You have the evidence also of Reitlinger and evidence from Dr. Hilberg as to 700,000 people. These things, I suggest, are part of the reason why my client has doubted the allegations and has, I suggest, the right to place before the jury the reasons for his doubt.

There is a slide, as I recall, of that very plaque which shows the claim of four million people, victims of Auschwitz-Birkenau, and that's one of the factors in the defence theory that the representations spread to the world are not accurate, not correct. {4122|4123}

I don't think in the past there has been necessarily before you the evidence that the accused relied upon these slides, but I undertook to provide it, and I have provided it. The accused has sworn to it, and I would like the opportunity to show the jury why he relied upon that information.

Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Your Honour, there are two separate issues to be put to the jury ultimately dealing with the allegations found in the pamphlet, Exhibit 1. The first issue is whether or not the information contained in Exhibit 1 is true.

The Crown has called some evidence on that point, and the defence has called some evidence on that point. The Court, Your Honour, has already ruled that slides taken by Mr. Felderer thirty-five years or forty years after the event is not relevant to the truth of the events, that there is no expert interpretation of, either from archeologists or an architect {4123|4124} to these buildings. There is no continuity of ground levels and systems for drainage in the camp today, when these slides were taken, in relation to 1942, '43, '44.

So these slides cannot go to the truth of their contents.

They may, Your Honour, as I understand it, the only reason that they are being put forward is for Mr. Zundel's belief in the truth of the matters contained in Exhibit No. 1.

To assess Mr. Zundel's belief, Your Honour, it would be necessary to know what it is that Mr. Zundel understands about each slide that was taken, none of which can be taken for its truth, but only for his belief.

I would respectfully suggest that there should be some evidence on a voir dire, if we are going to consider this matter at this time, there should be some evidence on a voir dire of what his understanding is of each slide. And when the slides were taken and when the slides that are in court were taken, and when the slides were assembled, as these are the matters that, supposedly, go to his belief.

And absent some evidence of that {4124|4125} nature by the people who seek to put in that evidence, I would suggest that it not be admitted.

I would suggest that it is not appropriate to hear from Mr. Felderer, whoever took any slides that Mr. Zundel might have, because it is irrelevant what they think about the matter. That is not even gone into. The only relevant thing is what Mr. Zundel thinks about the matter based on information he received.

So we need the receptor and not the sender of the information.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

MR. GRIFFITHS: We need the receptor and not the sender of the information with respect to the slides.

So that it is my submission at this point, Your Honour, without seeing the slides, knowing when they were assembled and whether the slides before the court are the same slides that were received, we are not in a position to say whether or not they should be admissible, whether or not these are the slides on which Mr. Zundel based his belief.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie. {4125|4126}

MR. CHRISTIE: On the issue of the voir dire, I thought that is what I tried to do once before when Mr. Zundel was on the stand. I endeavoured to ask Your Honour if we endeavoured to hold the voir dire and give his evidence as to how he got the slides, and I remember Your Honour saying voir dres were not for that purpose.

I am quite happy to put the accused on the stand at any time to explain the whole origination of those slides, and I am glad to do that now, if I am permitted.

As far as it not being to prove the truth is concerned regarding drainage, we called Thies Christopherson who was there at the time to talk about the conditions. It is strange for me to hear the Crown say when a picture is not taken contemporaneous to the event it is not to be taken for the truth of the contents.

I have been aware of the introduction of photographs taken in murder cases, taken many days, sometimes weeks after the alleged event, none of which would be possible to prove the same situations existed.

It's true, of course, that in those regards minor changes change more rapidly than buildings, {4126|4127} but we have certain physical structures like ground and walls and brick buildings which, it is a matter of argument, may have been moved, may have been taken down and disassembled. That is an argument that Crown could make. It is also open to the Crown to call rebuttal evidence if they think this is true; but I have never heard the proposition before that you could not call evidence to show the location, the evidence, plans, things of concrete, their existence in this world.

However feeble the argument is considered by the Crown, he can't, for a moment refuse to permit us or object to the introduction of such evidence.

If the judge decides that it is admissible, if Your Honour decides it is admissible, I would simply be arguing that this is certainly evidence which today my client has, and before 1981, or these slides were taken in 1980. I will lead evidence to that, if need be, from the person who took it. He can tell us the aperture of the camera, the film he took, the conditions under which he took the pictures, the information he got from Auschwitz, the research he has done. I am quite able and willing to put it in evidence {4127|4128} on the voir dire now as I was three or four days ago, as I recall, which I was trying to do at the time.

I have no objection to introducing all that evidence. I would be glad to do it now in the absence of the jury. I am equally able to do it in the presence of the jury.

If my friend wishes to conduct his own research and present evidence to the refutation of the reality of these photographs, but it strikes me as strange that at this stage the Crown should object, saying we have not conducted a voir dire when that was very clearly what I tried to do once before.

The slides are what he relied upon to a large extent to show the location, the understanding of the scene, the physical structure of the buildings and the location of items upon which the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" comments and extensively states opinions.

My client has no other means of going back in time to 1940, to '45 than through the official sources of information to which we are all able to have access, namely Auschwitz itself, Auschwitz I and Birkenau, the Museum authorities, the books and literature on the {4128|4129} subject, none of which, if one is to be strictly technical about it, can he say has been proven by firsthand observation. But if the issue is how he derived his opinion and is his opinion reasonably founded upon some reasonably verifiable source, why, then, could we not be allowed to place before the jury the actual inquiry that he has undertaken with the help of others to do as much as he can to get as close to the facts as he can and to then show the jury what research he has undertaken? That is all that I have asked the right to do, and nothing more.

—— {4129|4130}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury, counsel for the accused has moved the Court for leave to lead evidence from the accused, and probably from one Felderer who has already testified, concerning the contents of a number of photographs taken by Mr. Felderer of one or more concentration camps said to have been employed during World War II by Nazi Germany. One of the camps in question is Auschwitz.

The evidence already heard by the jury to this point is that Felderer took about thirty thousand pictures in all of every aspect of the camps that he visited. There is much evidence that Mr. Felderer visited many, many sites of Nazi concentration camps both in Germany and North-west and Central Europe, as well as in Eastern Europe – Poland and areas such as that. There is also clear evidence that Mr. Felderer took those photographs, as I recall it, between 1978 and 1981, perhaps 1982.

Clearly, whatever the years the photos were taken, they were all taken at a point at least thirty and perhaps more years following the end of World War II.

The issue is essentially that counsel {4130|4131} wishes to lead this evidence as to the honesty in the belief that Mr. Zundel has testified that he had in the contents of Exhibit 1 in this trial entitled, “Did Six Million Really Die?”

The slides in question depict the position of various buildings and other structures within the confines of the concentration camps.

It is the desire of counsel to employ the photographs, if permitted to do so, in order to buttress the honest belief in the contents of Exhibit 1 which the accused says he possessed when he published the exhibit.

Mr. Christie has indicated that some of the photographs display the contents of the plaques on the walls of buildings. Those plaques indicate that four million died, for instance, at one of the camps. The photographs show the location of the crematoria, the alleged gas chamber in one of the camps, as well as the area surrounding the camps where other evidence discloses burning pits for dead bodies as they are being used and are located.

The slides show that there is a Museum in Auschwitz. One slide shows the existence of a {4131|4132} swimming pool. He also desires to show, in addition to all of this what, for instance, the camp of Auschwitz looks like today.

The defence desires to place before the jury these photographs in order to disclose to the jury the efforts that the accused had made to acquire, as professed, honest belief in the contents of Exhibit No. 1.

Crown counsel, on the other hand, takes the position, essentially, that photographs taken some thirty or forty years after the event cannot be used for the purpose proposed because what the camera saw thirty or forty years later is not relevant to conditions as they existed in the period of time that is covered within the pages of Exhibit No. 1.

I note that there is no evidence of a nexus between the conditions that other evidence discloses existed between 1939 and 1945 when the photos were taken. I made a previous ruling with respect to the introduction of these photos through the witness, Felderer.

I see no reason to change my mind now. It is my respectful view that the contents of photographs taken in the year 1978 through 1981, unless {4132|4133} there is an evidentiary nexus or connection that relates back to conditions that existed at the time that this jury is going to have to deal with, are irrelevant. For that reason they will not be admitted. I conclude by saying that virtually every topic that Mr. Christie wishes to cover on behalf of his client has already been covered by evidence other than that contained in the photographs themselves, as I am told.

There is no need to have a voir dire because the photographs themselves, as I have ruled, are irrelevant to the issues the jury must try by reason of the fact that they are about three to four decades remote. The motion is, therefore, dismissed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

There is only one other matter that I wanted to make sure I did not want to raise in the presence of the jury without raising it in front of Your {4133|4134} Honour, and that is the issue of this situation.

I am not entirely clear on what Your Honour directed me respecting the question of my client's belief about the “greedy, vicious and militant nature of some people who call themselves Jews”, and that being —

THE COURT: I don't recall it. You had better remind me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it was Your Honour's direction, I believe, that I should not raise the difficulties between Mrs. Citron and my client.

THE COURT: Yes. Oh, I know what you are talking about now. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: There was one thing that I was going to ask Your Honour if that applied to, and that is this, that this would be firsthand, direct experience between my client and a group known as the Holocaust Remembrance Association and a debate that took place publicly on a television show known as the Charrington Show. It is, apparently, a television show, a talk show, open line kind of thing, that took place — it's after the date of the charge. But I was under the impression that that stricture as to state {4134|4135} of mind acquired before the date of the charge only applied to those things upon which he was relying from secondary sources, that if it is direct experience, if he had direct firsthand experience of a thing that could prove knowledge at the time, if he could give evidence upon it.

Now, I may be mistaken in it, but — that if he had experience, direct, firsthand eye witness experience of a situation that supported his view published at the time, that it was direct evidence. It was not, kind of, the basis for his belief.

Now, specifically, what I mean, is that my client would like to raise in front of the jury certain statements made by Sabina Citron pursuant to Mr. Frank Walus who has testified in this case that in this television debate Mrs. Citron publicly stated that she felt that Mr. Walus should be prosecuted, and that she had information that she would like to put before the courts to pursue him. And my client takes the view that that's an evidence of a rather vicious kind of conduct on behalf of people that are taking — that role for themselves and would support his view that they constitute the kind of viciousness he referred {4135|4136} to in the pamphlet, because he called Mr. Walus; Mr. Walus has told the story, and my client's view is that it is vicious to pursue this man further. And these people are doing it. So I wanted to be able to put before the jury through my client just what happened there.

Now, I have a video tape of that interview which would show exactly what was said, but I think it wouldn't be necessary to do that. I think that it would take too much time. But he could, at least, say what he heard face to face from Mrs. Citron, a representative of this group that has been pursuing him for many years, about Mr. Walus, because it does show a kind of viciousness that he says is what he is talking about in the article, “The West, War and Islam”.

THE COURT: When was “The West, War and Islam” published?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I checked the indictment, because that is what my friend directed me to —

THE COURT: I should have asked, I'm sorry, I should have asked when he alleges it happened. {4136|4137}

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have admitted the facts as I understand them, sir. There was a distribution, but we could argue about publication.

THE COURT: I know; but here is — what I am trying to decide in my mind at the moment is this:

When did this television interview, contest or debate occur?

MR. CHRISTIE: It took place long after this date, sir.

THE COURT: Long after Exhibit 2?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Long after it was distributed, yes.

THE COURT: That is what I wanted.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is why I thought that certainly if Your Honour meant to indicate to me that anything that occurred after that date is not relevant, then of course, I understand this is not relevant.

THE COURT: That is what I am questioning at the moment, but I naturally have not made up my mind. I want to hear from both sides. That is the point why I asked you the question. {4137|4138}

MR. CHRISTIE: My understanding was that he could still give evidence about factual events that supported his view at the time if it's like direct evidence. He experienced this:

"I am sitting right across from Mrs. Citron and she says, 'I still think Frank Walus is guilty and we have witnesses that I know that are coming from Jerusalem and we should still go after him.'

As I understand it, that is direct evidence of —

THE COURT: Frank Walus is the witness from Chicago.

MR. CHRISTIE: Right. And Your Honour, he has a tough time explaining what happened, but the best I can gather from it is that it was eventually dropped after an appeal was filed, and I don't know even if an appeal occurred. Anyway, he has explained what happened. He said he never was there, and here is somebody saying publicly, "We need to go after this man", right in the presence of my client. And he said that is what he means by "vicious people who call themselves Jews", and that is what he means in his article. {4138|4139}

So that is basically what I'd like to know, because that is something that he would like to be able to explain to the jury, one of his experiences which verify his factual experiences which verifies his publication.

Now, I don't think I can explain it any clearer, Your Honour. I think that is ...

THE COURT: No. That is clear enough. That's fine. Thank you.

Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, on page 1 of Exhibit 2 under the paragraph, "The International Zionists" is where the phrase occurs:

They have an influence on Western leadership. "Political and religious Zionism play a disproportionately large role in the West because of Zionists' domination of the mass media of information, education and entertainment, the banking system, the secret societies and the world communist conspiracy. Zionists are aided and abetted by millions of brainwashed Christians of the West who have been led to believe that vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good', because the Christian {4139|4140} Bible mentions 'Jews' as 'God's Chosen People'."

Now, how does Mr. Zundel's personal relationship with any individual go towards the proof of that phrase? I don't understand.

"Just as mistakenly, the brainwashed Christians of the West have been led to believe that vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good', because the Christian Bible mentions 'Jews' as 'God's Chosen People'."

I don't, with respect, Your Honour, see the relevance of the evidence that is sought to be called as to Mrs. Citron's personal belief about a matter that was before the courts, how that relates to that phrase. That is the first objection.

The second is that it does, indeed, come after the time set out in the indictment. My third objection, I guess, is more of a factual one: How a personal belief that somebody holds as to the guilt or innocence of man, involving a man, is vicious. If it was improper, there are civil channels that are open. I don't believe any of them were exercised.

Mr. Walus lives in the States, not Canada. There is no indication of what influence, if {4140|4141} any, Mrs. Citron has on proceedings in Chicago or in the United States; indeed, no indication that she was involved in the first prosecution of Mr. Walus, which is not to say that there is expected a second prosecution. I don't know what the situation is.

There was a conviction of Mr. Walus, an appeal, and the appeal wasn't proceeded with by the Government, so that the conviction was quashed. Assumedly there was enough evidence for a first court that, as you heard, it was a matter that had apparently hung on the issue of one of identity, a long time after the event. Those are issues, a short time after the event, that give every court a great deal of difficulty, Your Honour, and I would, for those reasons, respectfully submit that it is irrelevant to this charge.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Just briefly, in reply, my friend refers to Mrs. Citron as merely her personal belief. She does represent a group who have been highly visible and highly influential in public discussions, and it is my client's [sic] desire to show the type of thing that he means when he says "vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews'". {4141|4142}

He is not seeking some kind of legal remedy against Mrs. Citron. He is seeking to justify the right to express an opinion. I think that's really the issue. I don't know why we raise this issue of legal actions.

THE COURT: I agree with you. I don't think that Mr. — and I say this respectfully to both sides — I don't hold with Mr. Griffiths' last point.

MR. CHRISTIE: My client's position is to justify the views he expressed, and he is trying to demonstrate some things that happened in his own life that led him to come to that conclusion.

I guess that is about the size of it. And this is one of the situations that caused him to form this view, and I suppose it is arguable whether it is a justifiable basis, and we can eventually argue that, but we will be able to have the right to say what happened and why he feels this way.

Thank you very much, sir.

RULING

THE COURT: I say this to both counsel, that if I can possibly help it, and I am quite satisfied in my own mind that I can, I have no intention of permitting this trial to go beyond the issues that have been joined between Crown and defence.

The issue that I must now decide is whether or not Mr. Zundel, when he continues before the jury, may be permitted to make reference by way of explanation to a line contained within the confines of Exhibit 2. That line appears under the title of, "The International Zionists" on the first page of Exhibit [sic] 2. The sentence in which the line is contained is as follows:

"Just as mistakenly, the brainwashed Christians of the West have been led to believe that vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good', because the Christian Bible mentions 'Jews' as God's Chosen People'."

Counsel for the accused wishes to ask for an explanation of why that line is there in the {4143|4144} exhibit. The explanation, I am told, will involve an exchange which occurred between Mr. Zundel and a Mrs. Citron in another forum on another occasion. That other forum or occasion, as I understand it, was a confrontation under controlled conditions of, perhaps, a media situation in which certain allegations were made and exchanged by Mrs. Citron and Mr. Zundel.

Those allegations involve one of the witnesses who testified on behalf of the defence, Mr. Walus. Mr. Walus was charged with being a Nazi war criminal. The charges are made against him in the United States. The evidence, as I heard it, seems to disclose that that charge was not proceeded with.

It is of some significance that the confrontation that I have mentioned occurred at the point in time well subsequent to the writing of Exhibit 2 and its distribution or publication, as the jury may decide.

The only ground on which I rule that no such questions can be put to Mr. Zundel on this subject is that very point. It is not relevant to the issues this jury must decide. That is the reason I make no comment any further with regard to what, if {4144|4145} any, other means of obtaining relief or redress Mr. Zundel may be advised to take. That is none of my business.

My business is whether or not the jury should hear something relevant to an issue here. The only possible relevance would be the accused's belief in the truth of the line mentioned at the time of the publication, if that is proven.

It indeed was published long before the confrontation. There is no relevance. Therefore it cannot be asked.

MR. CHRISTIE: Therefore Thank you, Your Honour.

I have no other issues to raise other than one that I think I mentioned a long time ago, and I advised my friend of it. He has exchanged cases with me in regard to it. That is the issue of the question of a commission to take the evidence of John Fried.

THE COURT: Let me interrupt you just a moment. I am concerned about the jury. They have been there for forty-five minutes now. I gather {4145|4146} this will take some time.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I believe so.

THE COURT: I need some help. How long do you gentlemen feel I should let that jury out of that room?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would think I will be about fifteen minutes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths? Well, I will let the jury go free until eleven o'clock.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have provided my friend with a copy of the case of Jewel and Weiss, and I'd like to offer that, Your Honour, and the case of R. v. Davis. These two cases and some other cases of which I have informed my friend are the basis of my application.

THE COURT: Which one are you going to cover first? {4146|4147}

MR. CHRISTIE: I was going to refer to the case of Jewel and Weiss.

THE COURT: This is an application to take commission evidence from a witness in New York?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: And that's all.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is all I am asking, Your Honour. There is no other issue that I have attempted to raise at this point.

In this particular case, Your Honour, the facts are – in the issue that I am addressing the witness, John Fried, was a witness at the preliminary hearing who, the record will indicate, was an advisor to the Judges at Nuremberg. The argument of the defence would be that his location and background was evidence of the influences involved in Nuremberg, and therefore it would be a significant and integral part of the defence. I, at the outset —

THE COURT: I just missed that. I got, he was an advisor of the judges at Nuremberg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: What was your next —

MR. CHRISTIE: Because of that and {4147|4148} his background and antecedents it would have been an integral part of the defence in that his position was certainly that – argued, that is – of bias. He was someone who had fled from Austria. It's all on the record in the preliminary. He was Jewish. He had expressed animosity towards certainly the government and the defendants of the day, and he was in some capacity that he explained in which he communicated directly with the judges and, by my recollection, he was also involved in the process of prosecution, specifically taking commission evidence.

THE COURT: Sorry, Mr. Christie. He was prosecuting, you say?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, no. He was involved in some way in the prosecution by taking commission evidence in some regards. My recollection of the transcript, subject to any corrections by my learned friend, is that he exercised some kind of judicial function itself in which either he took evidence on commission, or he took part in interrogations. That is certainly something that would have been interesting and relevant to the defence.

His actual presence there involved {4148|4149} with the judges, as he said he was, in itself would have been relevant to the defence because it indicates the person with intense animosity and involvement in the situation, being a person of Jewish background, was obviously something significant to the influence of justice at Nuremberg.

We are not able to bring those facts to the jury because he did not return from the United States at the time of the trial.

THE COURT: This trial.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. He was apparently not requested to do so by the Crown, and my concern was, and I have expressed it to my friend, as to why he would not come back. I asked that he be produced for cross-examination. Nothing of that nature has occurred.

THE COURT: When did you do that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I did so in December, from personal conversations with my friend before the trial commenced. I did so at the outset. I think I indicated from the very first day —

THE COURT: Yes, you did.

MR. CHRISTIE: — that I would take {4149|4150} that position. And through the trial that has been my position.

In the case at bar, the allegations in "Did Six Million Really Die?" about the Nuremberg trials rest upon the substantial ground that those involved were certainly motivated by intense animosity towards the accused and their position.

THE COURT: Those involved in Nuremberg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. That's the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?", and therefore, because the accused has indicated his belief in that thesis, it's adopted by the defence in this case.

THE COURT: When you say those involved, you mean those who have sat as judges.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry?

THE COURT: When you say those involved at Nuremberg were, as contained in Exhibit 1, were motivated against the accused at Nuremberg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: What do you mean by those involved?

MR. CHRISTIE: I should mean more {4150|4151} specifically, and more articulately, I have tried to indicate the judiciary.

Now, the reason why it's significant in regard to John Fried is that his relationship as expressed in the preliminary was as some kind of advisor as to the judiciary involved; and that involves a close contact.

This area one can never now place before the jury without an opportunity to do so by commission. I have checked the Criminal Code section provision for commission evidence, and it does permit an application in the midst of the trial. I didn't make one earlier because I had asked the Crown to produce the witness in the meantime, and in view of that fact not having occurred, I am put in the position to request that now.

My client has indicated that he is prepared to pay all the expenses of the commission, and I am submitting that this witness, because of his position, expressed under oath at the preliminary, becomes a significant part of the defence to which we had a right to rely in view of his being called at the preliminary and not being called at the trial. We are {4151|4152} not presented with the opportunity to rely on that portion of the Crown's case supportive of the position of the defence.

In the case of R. v. Jewell and Wiseman (1980) 6 W.W.R. 185, a decision of Mr. Justice Hughes, in that case the prosecutor did not call as a witness the person who had been a witness in the preliminary hearing, and he was the only person who could give evidence as to the blood alcohol level of the victim of the murder who could aid in the case of the accused. The accused applied for an order directing the Crown to call the witness. The application was granted.

"The witness' evidence was material, and where a material witness is held back because his evidence may assist the accused, the court is justified in interfering with the exercise of the prosecution discretion to call witnesses."

THE COURT: I gather that was a witness who was already within the jurisdiction of the court.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. And I think that that's – the circumstances of this situation are such that I am not asking for a subpoena to issue, but {4152|4153} I am asking for the right to take a commission, because we cannot really subpoena a witness from another country.

The same argument arose in R. v. Ross, in that – well, that case involved – I won't cite that case, but it was a case in which the same issue arose. It was a murder case in which I was involved in which one of the witnesses was from the United States, and in the course of the trial – that went to the British Columbia Court of Appeal, R. v. Thomas Ross, Jr., and it involved a witness from the United States, and I was advised then that I should actually ask for a commission, although I have argued that the similar fact evidence from another country should not be admitted because no answer could be provided to it without the witness. So because of that case from British Columbia I thought I would ask, because of the location of the witness and the circumstances of this case, that we consider a commission to take that evidence.

I am well aware of the inconvenience that would result. Nonetheless, we have, in that person of John Fried, a firsthand witness to the proceedings at Nuremberg whose presence there tends to indicate a {4153|4154} strong support to the thesis of "Did Six Million Really Die?" that actual persons involved in Nuremberg did have quite an axe to grind and emotional involvement in the prosecution and were in close contact with the judges.

A statement that confirmed the reported views of Judge Wennerstrum, which we have heard even from Dr. Hilberg, indicated that he felt that there were an awful lot of Jews involved in the prosecution at Nuremberg, and one of the explanations tendered in the evidence of this case was that Jews from Europe frequently were able to speak German and, therefore, able to conduct or be involved in the prosecution and interrogation process.

The unfortunate by-product of that logical and practical situation may very well be that the thesis in "Did Six Million Really Die?" has some support.

I had undertaken a computer search of all relevant authorities on the subject of the right to call witnesses, the right to require the production of witnesses, and all of that is available. I offered it to my friend. He indicated that he doesn't wish {4154|4155} copies, and I am prepared just to file that material.

In one particular case to which I would like to refer is Lemay vs. The King, (1951) 120 C.C.C. 1, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, I believe, also reported in 1 S.C.R. 232, which indicated that in certain circumstances a prosecutor is under a duty to call witnesses essential to unfolding the narrative, although he has a discretion which may not be interfered with unless the accused is prejudiced by it.

Well, John Fried would have been a very important part of our case, as I indicated. He swore under oath the extent of his involvement in the Nuremberg proceedings, and to that extent I suggest it was improper not to have him available.

The explanation provided at the time I don't particularly want to go into unless there is some denial of the fact. Otherwise there is nothing particularly difficult about producing —

THE COURT: Was Fried cross-examined at the preliminary?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, he was.

I have the results of the computer {4155|4156} search on the subject, and there are some cases —

THE COURT: One that comes to mind is Bulleymond.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. My friend is prepared with that case, and he has given me a copy of it.

Those are numerous and sometimes off the mark, but there are some there that are particularly useful.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I'd like to start with Lemay, Your Honour, which I think is the leading case, because it is a Supreme Court of Canada case. It is Lemay v. The King.

THE COURT: I have it here.

MR. GRIFFITHS: This deals with the prosecutorial discretion in calling witnesses. And {4156|4157} indeed, even eye witness of an offence. Not all eye witnesses need be called by the Crown, as long as the Crown is not acting from some — and the phrase used is "oblique motive". And LeMay is referred to in a number of cases, and that's the phrase that keeps cropping up, is that the Crown —

THE COURT: "Oblique" could be exchanged for the word "unfair", I suppose.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that could be a good translation, Your Honour. I would pass that up to Your Honour. There is a little note on the front referring to some specific pages of that case that I am relying on.

Your Honour, the difficulty with this trial or the unusual nature of this trial is not that there is a paucity of witnesses available. Clearly, the difficulty is the vast number of witnesses that are available to testify. Many, many people who, as soldiers, as concentration camp victims, indeed as participants in the judicial proceedings at Nuremberg although I believe most of the justices are now passed on — are still alive today. Does the Crown have an obligation to call everybody? We could be here for more {4157|4158} years than I'd care to count, Your Honour. Clearly, we don't.

Mr. Fried, Your Honour, was called at the preliminary hearing. He was qualified as an expert in international law is my recollection. He had written a thesis and had background in the United States in international law before he was seconded from the Department of Labour in Washington to the Nuremberg proceedings to assist with legal memoranda to the justices.

What I failed to understand fully until Dr. Fried was on the witness stand was — at the preliminary — is that he was not involved in the International Military Tribunal. He was involved in the subsequent American Military Tribunals and provided assistance to the justices at those tribunals. He is a Jew who is now in his eighties. He uses a cane, somewhat frail, and was living in New York.

In light of the fact of his age and health and of the lack of knowledge that he had as to the International Military Tribunal that Dr. Hilberg had a more intimate knowledge with, notwithstanding that Dr. Hilberg was never at Nuremberg, but had read {4158|4159} the entire proceedings and the evidence of the proceedings which Dr. Fried had not, in my discretion I chose to lead that evidence through Dr. Hilberg.

Now, I had initially advised Mr. Christie the first time that we met to discuss this case, which I think was in November, late November, that at that time I was still expecting to call Dr. Fried, and it wasn't until before Christmas time that I advised him, shortly before Christmas, that I advised him that I was not going to call Dr. Fried. I advised him that I was prepared to, any witnesses that I was not calling who had testified at the preliminary hearing, I would assist him in whatever way he felt he required in the locating of those witnesses in terms of addresses or phone numbers or what-have-you so that he could make arrangements for the witnesses to testify for the defence.

In that sense, Your Honour, there has been no effort by the Crown to hide Dr. Fried, to preclude the defence from calling Dr. Fried if they so desired.

Now, there are, in this field, Your Honour, three cases really that I rely on. Bulleymond {4159|4160} is one of them. Your Honour is familiar with that. I will deal with the others first, Your Honour.

R. v. Rowbottom No. 2, 36 C.C.C. (2d) 303 —

THE COURT: Is that Judge Borins?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Judge Borins, yes, Your Honour. It was an application to take commission evidence of two Americans who apparently were subject to some sort of judicial order in the United States not to leave the jurisdiction, so they were unable to come up to Canada to testify. An application was made during the trial for their commissioned evidence. His Honour Judge Borins first of all ruled that a section application could not be made during the trial. That was subsequently overruled by the Court of Appeal.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, in the Rowbottom case?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. The other matters that he discussed, Your Honour, the criteria that were not appropriate, were not dealt with by the Court of Appeal, and at page 312 of the case he sets out some of the criteria. The first full paragraph, in fact, is the only full paragraph on that {4160|4161} page, 312, and he says in part that ss. 637(b) and 640(2), "... when a witness is out of Canada, provides an exception to the general principle of common law as found in s.575 that the evidence of a witness be viva voce in the presence of the accused and the Judge and jury. Where an application to take commission evidence is brought in the course of trial it is not sufficient for the applicant to merely allege that the witness is out of the country and unwilling to attend to give evidence. Depending on the circumstances of each case, evidence must be before the Court to demonstrate at least a good reason why the witness cannot attend, the extent of the efforts made to procure his or her attendance, why the application was not made before the commencement of the trial, the nature of the evidence which {4161|4162} the witness is able to give, its materiality, the willingness of the witness to testify, and the compellability of the witness to testify. These and other considerations are no doubt proper for the trial Judge to consider in the exercise of his discretion. The applicant should be able to demonstrate that the granting of the application will not result in a serious interruption to the continuity of the trial and, indeed, its very completion. This is of particular importance in jury trials."

Then he concludes by saying:

"Needless to say, the matter being one of discretion, it is not possible to set down any general rule as to when a commission will be granted or refused in the course of a trial."

Now, Your Honour does have in the {4162|4163} form of submissions and certainly some of those submissions are not denied, some evidence before you in that form of why the application was not made before the commencement of the trial and the nature of the evidence which the witness is able to give. Mr. Christie has commented upon its materiality to his case.

What you have not heard, Your Honour, and what I'd suggest there should be evidence on, in all the cases that I have indicated, that there is at least affidavit material as to the efforts made to get the witness here to testify, the efforts by the applicant, whether the witness is willing to testify, whether he is compellable to testify. If he cannot attend, why he cannot attend. We have no evidence of those matters, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is there any case law of which you are aware, and I will ask the same of Mr. Christie whether he is aware, as to whether or not commission evidence has been taken on the basis that the witness must be produced by the Crown from a foreign jurisdiction and made available for cross-examination?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I know of no cases {4163|4164} on that, Your Honour, and indeed, I would take the position that that, if he were in the jurisdiction, that would not be proper, either. He should be made available as a witness for the defence.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you have anything on that?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, when I set out to investigate this situation I thought that that was a well-founded rule, that if a person was called at the preliminary, that it was pre-supposed that the defence had a right to cross-examine at the trial.

THE COURT: To cross-examine at the trial.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, that the witness would have to be produced for cross-examination at the trial. And I confess that after looking, I haven't found any cases that support that proposition, although I always thought that it was a well-established rule.

THE COURT: Which is probably why on so many occasions judges step in if they feel that unfairness is going to be the likely result. It some- {4164|4165}times comes under the heading of prejudice.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have many times, you know, as a matter of course, heard judges say, well, the witness will be produced for cross-examination, having been called previously, but I have no cases on that point. I thought it was a basic rule of fairness that was generally recognized, but I have found no jurisprudence that establishes that that I am aware of.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes, go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

The next case, Your Honour, is R. v. Demeter, and I haven't, Your Honour —

THE COURT: Is that Mr. Justice Grant?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. This is the Court of Appeal, Your Honour. I haven't photocopied the entire case. There were so many issues there, but the issue that I am particularly directing Your Honour, it is on page 450, it starts at (c): "Counsel for the defence applied to the trial Judge for an order directing the Crown to take the evidence of Oleynik on commission evidence in Hungary and alternatively for an order {4165|4166} appointing a commissioner that the defence might take Oleynik's evidence on commission in Hungary."

That matter is discussed, and on page 453, following a review of the law, at the first long paragraph under the phrase, "Emphasis supplied":

Oleynik [ ] was the one who, I think, was being pointed to as the killer of Mrs. Demeter, and he subsequently died, and before his evidence could be taken.

So Your Honour, again the Court of Appeal seems to indicate there that there has to be some evidentiary basis for the application for a commission, that, as to the attempts that were made to locate the accused, and there is some evidentiary basis of that in Demeter, his willingness to testify, why he is unable to come to Canada. You have none of that before you.

In that circumstance, Your Honour, I would suggest that first there is no oblique motive for not calling Dr. Fried. He was brought as an expert witness, not an eye witness, on Nuremberg and qualified as such. My friend would now seek to utilize his evidence not as an expert witness, but as an eye witness of events, participant in an event.

He is not the only witness. The Crown {4167|4168} has not hidden that witness, so there is no oblique motive on that.

Secondly, Your Honour, there is no evidentiary foundation before you for the granting of the commission.

You have Bulleymond as well for the other considerations that our Court of Appeal has said should be applied and considered.

Those are my submissions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: With respect to the issue of whether there is an oblique motive, I must say that it is clear that had the witness been produced, albeit as an expert, it would certainly have lent some support to the factual basis for the argument in "Did Six Million Really Die?", and I am not going to allege anything untoward about obliqueness, but it would seem to be somewhat unfair that his absence will deprive us of a certain factual piece of information which would support the thesis.

Thank you, sir. {4168|4169}

THE COURT: Thank you gentlemen. Once again I have been given food for thought. It will take some time.

— Short adjournment.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: In the absence of the jury, counsel for the accused has moved the Court to order that the evidence of one John Fried be taken on commission.

The jury in this trial will be asked to decide a verdict on whether or not Mr. Zündel published a false statement or false news pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. The motion with which I now deal is brought pursuant to s.637 of the Criminal Code.

The subject of count number one concerns the publication of a statement or booklet entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?" The issue really is whether six million Jews were massacred or murdered in Nazi concentration camps during World War II or not.

One issue within the confines of the broader question concerns itself with the honesty of the accused's belief as to the essential truth of the contents of Exhibit No. 1. Mr. Zundel is now in the process of testifying in-chief on his own behalf before the jury. {4170|4171}

One of the basis for his professed honest belief is his view that the American trials at Nuremberg, in contradistinction to the Allied trials of senior Nazi War Criminals at Nuremberg, were unfair proceedings.

Dr. John Fried was called as a Crown witness at Mr. Zundel's preliminary hearing concerning the charges with which this Court now deals. Dr. Fried, I am told, in his younger years, was an advisor on matters of law to the judiciary presiding at the American Nuremberg Trials.

At Mr. Zundel's preliminary hearing Dr. Fried testified and was cross-examined by defence counsel then appearing on Mr. Zundel's behalf. Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused at this trial, moves that either the Crown produce the witness, Fried, for cross-examination by the defence, or else this Court should order that his evidence be taken on commission at the place where Dr. Fried resides, namely, New York City.

I have not been informed on whether or not Dr. Fried has expressed a willingness or an unwillingness to testify at all, nor have I been told what {4171|4172} specifically he would be expected to say, if anything, if he did agree to testify. I have been advised, however, that the witness is Jewish. He fled his country of origin, Austria, I infer presumably to escape from Nazi Germany. Further, he expressed animosity towards the accused who were being tried by the Americans at the American Trials in Nuremberg. He was further involved in the taking of commission evidence or in some other capacity in that regard in what I gather from Mr. Christie was either a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity during the course of the American Nuremberg Trials.

Mr. Christie suggests that Dr. Fried may have influenced the presiding judges at the American Nuremberg Trials to the point where unfairness resulted. Beyond this information being imparted to me on this motion by counsel from the well of the court, I have no other indication of what Dr. Fried would be expected to say by way of relevance to the issues this jury must try in this trial.

Both counsel agree that the defence in either November or December 1984 asked that this witness be present at this trial. Crown counsel agreed {4172|4173} then that he expected to call the witness at this trial. Mr. Griffiths then decided to lead the expected evidence of Dr. Fried through another witness, Dr. Hilberg, who did testify here. He informed Mr. Christie in December last of this change of mind.

Defence counsel has advised me that at the start of this trial about seven weeks ago, or at least on the 22nd of January last, which is about four weeks ago, that he would be making this motion. Beyond that I have not been advised of what, if any, steps have been taken by anyone to attempt to obtain the appearance of the witness in question in these proceedings at this trial so that the witness could be viewed by the jury.

In the case of Lemay v. The King 120 the Supreme Court of Canada made it clear that the Crown has a discretion to decide what witnesses it will call in the prosecution and what witnesses it will not call. Barring an "oblique motive", which I translate to mean an unfair motive, that discretion should not be interfered with.

Judge Borins in the case of R. v. Rowbottom No. 2, 36 C.C.C. (2d) 312 inter alia sets out {4173|4174} a number of considerations which, in his view, must be judicially considered when an order such as this is to be made or not made. The relevant paragraph on page 312 reads as follows:

"Where an application to take commission evidence is brought in the course of trial it is not sufficient for the applicant to merely allege that the witness is out of the country and unwilling to attend to give evidence. Depending on the circumstances of each case, evidence must be before the Court to demonstrate at least a good reason why the witness cannot attend, the extent of the efforts made to procure his or her attendance, why the application was not made before the commencement of the trial, the nature of the evidence which the witness is able to give, its materiality, the willingness of the witness to testify, and the compellability of the witness to {4174|4175} testify. These and other considerations are no doubt proper for the trial judge to consider in the exercise of his discretion. The applicant should be able to demonstrate that the granting of the application will not result in a serious interruption to the continuity of the trial and, indeed, its very completion. This is of particular importance in jury trials. Once such an order is granted and a trial is adjourned to permit the evidence to be taken there are many reasons why a substantial delay can result, e.g., preparation of a transcript, translation of a transcript into English or French, refusal by the witness to answer certain questions. It would seem that once an order to take evidence by commission is granted it cannot later be cancelled where substantial delay results in the {4175|4176} taking of the evidence. Needless to say, the matter being one of discretion, it is not possible to set down any general rule as to when a commission will be granted or refused in the course of a trial."

I respectfully agree with those last statements. I also respectfully [sic] agree with the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of R. v. Demeter 25 C.C.C. (2d) 417 where, at page 453, the Court held as follows:

"It is unnecessary to decide whether the Court has a discretion under s.637 to refuse to order the appointment of a commissioner to take the evidence of a witness who is out of Canada where the application is made before trial. We are all of the view, however, that the trial Judge was warranted in refusing the application for an order appointing a commissioner to take the evidence of Oleynik at the stage of the trial at which the application was made in {4176|4177} the absence of any indication that Oleynik was willing to give evidence, or that he could be compelled to give evidence or what evidence he would give if willing or compellable."

The cases of R. vs. Davies (1970) 5 W.W.R. 704 and R. vs. Jewell (1980) 6 W.W.R. 186 I have read with interest. Mr. Christie states that they can be distinguished on their facts as those of the case at bar.

The Ontario Court of Appeal in the decision of R. v. Buleyment 46 C.C.C. (2d) 429 appears to widen the judicial discretion given the trial judge in an application such as this. At page 442 Mr. Justice Martin had the following to say:

"The learned trial Judge in his reasons for granting the application expressed the opinion that the prosecution having established that the witness was not available to give evidence at the trial and could give relevant evidence, his discretion to refuse the application was a {4177|4178} narrow one to be exercised only if the evidence sought to be obtained was of slight probative value and gravely prejudicial.

I am, with deference to the learned trial judge, of the opinion that the field of his discretion with respect to granting the application at that stage of the proceedings, in all events, was not so narrow. Where an application is made during the trial to take the evidence on commission of a witness who is out of Canada, the Judge is entitled to take into consideration such factors as whether the trial will be seriously disrupted by the taking of the evidence and the possible prejudice to the opposite party resulting therefrom, as well as the consequences that the tribunal of fact will not have the advantage of observing the demeanour of the witness. {4178|4179}

Although the trial Judge indicated that his discretion was narrowly confined, he none the less, demonstrated that he was alive to the importance of the fact that the jury would not have an opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witness under examination and cross-examination, and the necessity for alerting the jury to that defect in the evidence. The fact that the jury will be deprived of the opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witness is, of course, a factor, but no more than a factor to be weighed by the Judge in deciding whether to grant an application made during the trial to take the evidence on commission of a person who is out of the country.

If the absence of the opportunity to observe the demeanour of the witness were controlling, the provisions in {4179|4180} the Code for procuring the evidence of a witness who is out of the country would have a very limited application indeed.

In the present case there was no likelihood that the taking of the evidence of Williams on commission in the United States would disturb the orderly progress of the trial, and the appellant suffered no prejudice in that respect. I am of the opinion that an analysis of the trial Judge's reasons as a whole does not disclose that he failed to exercise his discretion in a judicial way, and his order appointing a Commissioner to take the evidence of Williams is not susceptible of attack in this Court."

This trial started on January 10th or thereabouts, 1985. It is now February 21st of the same year. In my respectful view to issue an order for the commission to take the evidence of Mr. Fried would unduly {4180|4181} disrupt the orderly progress of this trial. Certainly the jury would be deprived of observing the demeanour of the witness in examination-in-chief and in cross-examination.

I respectfully agree with Mr. Justice Martin. That, of course, is one factor of many that I have considered. We do not know if Mr. Fried, who is now, I am told, in his eighth decade of his life and in frail health, would testify, or if he did what he would be expected to say.

In the last analysis one must exercise a judicial discretion by coming to a decision as to whether or not to deny this application would result in real prejudice to the interests of the accused. That involves an examination of the issue upon which the Commission is sought.

In this case the Commission is sought in order to buttress or support an honest belief that Mr. Zundel said that he has in the contents of Exhibit No. "Did Six Million Really Die?". If I thought for one moment that the only supporting evidence that exists on evidence of Dr. Fried, then I would give very serious {4181|4182} consideration to the issue of the order that is requested in the motion.

However, when one examines the record of the evidence that has been given by a multitude of witnesses, if I may use that term, on behalf of the defence, it is certainly clear to me, at least, that there is much other evidence which, if the jury accepts it, tends to support the evidence given by Mr. Zundel himself concerning that issue.

Therefore it cannot be validly said, in my respectful view, that the evidence of Dr. Fried, if not before the jury, would result in real prejudice to this accused upon his trial.

For the reasons I have given, the motion is dismissed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Those are the matters that I think wanted to bring before you in the absence of the jury. Would it be convenient to bring them back and deal with some other matters?

THE COURT: Yes. Bring in the jury, please.

(VOLUME XIX FOLLOWS) {4182|4183}

VOLUME XIX

— the jury enters. 12:10 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, thank you very much for your patience. I can assure you we started at nine thirty, and with the exception of a little time for me to marshal my thoughts, we have been working ever since.

Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, previously sworn.

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, you mentioned [sic] the other day a forensic report on the Anne Frank Diary. Did you obtain that in 1980?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And from whom did you obtain it?

A. From the attorney general.

Q. And did you translate it from the portion of the Anne Frank Diary?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And having read it, what does it {4183|4184} say in respect to your earlier evidence?

A. It corroborates that the German Federal Police, Forensic experts, examined these documents, Diary I, Diary II and Dairy III, and they found out that additions with ballpoint pen had been made which only became available in 1951.

Q. And how does this affect your opinion in relation to the whole of the diary?

A. It cast serious doubt on the authenticity of the diary, certainly. The writer, whoever was the writer, was alive in 1951 because there was [sic] subsequent court experts who testified in other cases in West Germany that the body of the diary is one that all the handwriting matches.

Q. Matches with what?

A. With the original. In other words, there are some loose leaves in the diary, and there are three books, and this court expert, Menabecher (ph), in a case in 1960, testified and said that the diary in its entirety was written by the same person.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have the translation and original, or photocopy of it, Your Honour. I would like to file that.

THE COURT: Number 154.

— EXHIBIT NO. 154: German forensic report (and English translation) of the Anne Frank Diary.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you done research into the reports of the International Tracing {4184|4185} Service from time to time from 1978 till 1980?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I now produce and show to you a series of reports from 1978 to 1980 including translations of those portions in French, and the original of that portion in English. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they from your records?

A. Yes.

Q. What do they indicate about the annual death figures, or the total death figures in concentration camps?

A. Every year the number of deaths listed increases slightly. It started in 1970 with 343,661, and ends in 1983 with 373,468.

Q. What is your understanding of why these changes have occurred?

A. Because we have been told in this court that there are over forty million cross-reference files on file in Arolsen, and there are constant requests. I was told when I contacted them, in the early eighties, that they have five thousand requests which still had to be processed, and they have a terrific backlog there for people who have lost people in concentration camps or have lost friends and so on. So by no means were forty million people dead as in the cross-reference files. These are as in every filing system to arrive at one point. I think the final death figure in the camps is presently close to the 373,468. They might fluctuate in a year or two by two thousand, {4185|4186} three thousand, but I believe all deaths in German concentration camps pretty well are registered in here, in spite of what the Tracing Service says in its publications. I have had some experience with these people and we have had Mr. De Grace here as a witness who was put under extreme restrictions on what he was allowed to say by his own people. The Red Cross [sic] is very loath in getting involved in political controversies because they are beholden to their national governments frequently for funds and for offices, and for being allowed to work in these various countries. They are apolitical, and so they are desperately trying not to get involved in this revisionist Holocaust controversy that is going on.

Q. They do not agree with that figure being the total; is that right, sir?

A. That's right.

Q. What do they say about it?

A. They say it is based on incomplete statistics, and I think that they are not lying. I think that this is true. There are thousands of soldiers missing, German soldiers missing which the German Tracing Service hasn't found because many of the records of the Second World War, especially in individual cases, a man gets blown up by a grenade, there is absolutely no trace of him. If there is nobody there to witness it, the man is missing.

Q. Well, then, what is your opinion as to that figure that they record?

A. It is very close to the number of people who died. However, their statisticians make {4186|4187} allowances in wartime casualties as to the number of missing. It is understood. The percentage is understood.

There is a small variance.

Q. How large a variance do you think there is?

A. Five, ten per cent maximum, absolute maximum.

Q. You heard the evidence of Dr. Vrba pertaining to the millions of deaths he described being unregistered. What is your view of that matter?

A. I don't believe him.

Q. Have you done a study over the years into the subject of delousing with Zyklon-B?

A. Yes, I have.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to file these Red Cross Reports, if may, Your Honour, as one exhibit, perhaps. And that way —

THE COURT: 155.

— EXHIBIT NO. 155: Documents relating to the Internatinal [sic] Tracing Service.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a file. Is this your file?

A. It is.

Q. And what does it reflect as a result of your research?

A. It deals in depth with the delousing procedures of various countries at various times, and particularly with delousing through Zyklon-B, or HCM. It goes back as far back as the First World {4187|4188} War, looks into steam delousing of clothing and so on, and it deals with the first delousing chamber, if you want, in Hoffman's land outside New York City that was instituted by the United States Government.

Q. Why did you undertake all these studies?

A. Because I wanted to find out for myself if some of these wild charges that were bandied about by Holocaust promoters could be true in fact. And scientifically they come up short.

Q. I am not going to file that, but how many years have you worked on that question?

A. Since the middle sixties. If anybody were to build gas chambers the way the Holocaust promoters say they were functioning or operating, they would most likely kill more people outside the gas chamber than inside the gas chamber, including the operators and the people who run the damn thing that had constructed it.

Q. Now, in your work have you researched into the question of Masonry in depth?

A. In some depth, yes.

Q. How long have you studied the subject?

A. Since the beginning sixties when I became politically aware.

THE COURT: That is Masonry, I'm sorry?

THE WITNESS: Freemasonry, yes.

THE COURT: Oh, Freemasonry

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I'm sorry. {4188|4189}

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "Secret Societies and Subversive Movements" by Nesta Webster. What do you know about that? First of all, where does it come from?

A. It was published in the United States of America by E.P. Dutton and Company, and it is a reference work by anyone wanting to deal with Freemasonry or subversive societies, and it was frequently quoted. I know one printed by Sir Winston Churchill in the Sunday Telegraph in 1919 when he talks about the origin of Bolshevism.

Q. And do you have that book in your library?

A. That is my own library, yes.

Q. Is it from your own library?

A. Yes, it is. It belongs to me.

Q. What does it tell you about Freemasonry and why is that relevant to your opinion?

A. Well, it ties in Freemasonry with the subversion and points out the Jewish connection, both in ritual, in words, in graphics and in content to Freemasonry.

Q. Is there any particular reference that you feel is relevant to the issue of the publication "The West, War and Islam"?

A. The total book is relevant to it. I'd have to read the whole book into it.

Q. And in relation to the thesis of that book, what do you have to say about "The West, War and Islam"?

A. I feel that I have given a truth-{4189|4190}ful and correct abstract of this book and other books on the topic in the space available to me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. I'd like to file that book.

THE COURT: No. 156.

— EXHIBIT NO. 156: Book, "Secret Societies and Subversive Movements" by Nesta H. Webster.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now show and produce to you a book. Can you identify the author, the title, the year of publication, where it comes from?

A. It's called, "The Secret Powers Behind Revolution", "Freemasonry and Judaism", by Vicomte Leon de Poncins, and it was published by Boswell Printing in London, England, in 1929.

The entire book deals with this question, and there is one, just one sentence or two sentences on page 95 I would like to quote in support of the thesis of "The West, War and Islam", and it says:

"In support of this we can quote the article of Dr. Isaac M. Wise published in The Israeli of America 3rd August 1866:

'Masonry is a Jewish institution, whose history, degrees, charges, passwords and explanations are Jewish from beginning to end.'"

Q. And you were aware of that before publishing, "The West, War and Islam"? {4190|4191}

A. Yes, I was.

Q. I now produce and show to you, "Revolution and Freemasonry 1680 – 1800". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am familiar with that book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I exhibit this, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 157.

— EXHIBIT NO. 157: Book, "The Secret Powers Behind Revolution" by Vicomte Leon de Poncins.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How long have you owned that book?

A. 1965, '64.

Q. And what does it say in relation to your opinion in "The West, War and Islam"?

A. The book was published in the United States by Little, Brown and Company, and it's called, "Revolution and Freemasonry 1680 – 1800" by Bernard Fay. Again it supports my thesis as expressed in "The West, War and Islam", that it is a revolutionary organization, and on page 116 it says:

"All that Masonry owed to Desaguliers, the shrewd Huguenot, who gave the intellectual impulse to the society and launched Freemasonry on its conquest of the world."

So it's considered a world revolutionary movement. The entire book is full of — for instance, on page 168, it says: {4191|4192}

"It is false and fallacious to pretend that the Masonic lodges had no political activity; ..."

"They took the place of our contemporary political discussions and created the political atmosphere of the period."

And so it goes on throughout the entire book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. I'd like to file that, please.

— EXHIBIT NO. 158: Book, "Revolution and Freemasonry 1680 – 1800" by Bernard Fay.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "Christianity and American Freemasonry". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Can you tell us when it was published, by whom and where?

A. It was published by The Bruce Publishing Company of Milwaukee in the year [sic] 1961, and it deals with the Christian people's relationships to Freemasonic lodges and other secret societies.

Q. Is there anything particularly referable [sic] that you say supports your view in "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Page after page and chapter after chapter deals with the Popes, various Popes throughout history, canons on Freemasonry, and Catholic involvement {4192|4193} in Freemasonry, but there is one particular point that I would like to quote from from [sic] page 145 that I stand accused of, and that is "The West, War and Islam":

"A similar word of caution was given in 1950 regarding membership in Rotary, the businessmen's luncheon and service club. Since then Catholic priests have been forbidden to hold membership in Rotary while lay Catholics have been discouraged from joining the 433,000-member club. At the time of the prohibition a number of priests were serving as presidents of local Rotary clubs and a Canadian Catholic held the position of international president. The Holy Office pointed out that Rotary presents a purely natural ethical code without reference to the Church or divine law. Furthermore, in some countries Rotary seems to have become a recruiting service for the Masonic lodges and the center of incipient anti-clerical activities."

Q. Are you aware of any instance in history where Masonry has been connected with assassination?

A. There was a lodge called The Assassins —

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this?

THE COURT: Yes. 159. {4193|4194}

MR. CHRISTIE: I am asked, Your Honour, to file only an excerpt. Unless there is an objection, may I do so?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Whatever he based his evidence on, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT NO. 159: Photocopied excerpt from book, "Christianity and American Free-Masonry" by W.J. Whalen.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you describe further your understanding of the relationship between Freemasonry and any assassinations?

A. I have studied the period of French Revolution, and the subsequent terror in France, and I have seen many illustrations of Masonic aprons of that period, for instance, that showed bloody daggers and cut-off heads, bleeding, and throughout European writers who cover this period, there is a tremendous amount of reference to violence and so on, and I have brought one English language book, the case of a Captain Morgan, just south of Toronto here, across the border in the United States.

Q. I now produce and show you a book entitled, "Freemasonry Exposed" by Captain William Morgan. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Where does it come from?

A. It was published by Ezra A. Cook; Publisher, in Chicago, Illinois, and it was written by a {4194|4195} Captain William Morgan, who was subsequently killed, for it is thought, having published this book, and the fate of William Morgan is the very first page of the book, how he was found drowned and his legs tied with rope in Niagara, I think it was ...

Q. When was the event that is described in that book?

A. September 1882.

Q. Are you familiar with the history of that case?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Did it create a public alarm about the subject of Masonry?

A. It created an outcry that even reached as far as Presidential campaigns of the period, wide newspaper publicity about it.

THE COURT: I just missed — we have come over a century here. I was at the French Revolution and all of a sudden we are up — is there a connection here?

MR. CHRISTIE: Just the connection of assassination connected with Masonry, Your Honour.

Q. Perhaps we should elucidate in that. Are you familiar with the role of Masonry in the French Revolution?

A. Throughout the books of the period and certainly in Masonic magazines to which I have made frequent reference in my research, like the Canadian Mason, and especially the Canadian Masonic Magazine called Northern Light, they quite proudly picture in virtually every issue revolutionary leaders in various {4195|4196} parts of the world who have, like George Washington, for instance — I think if I may add here, it must be understood that there was a government in power in the colonies in the United States very much a lawfully, legal government, and George Washington and his people overthrew that legal government, and the plot was hatched, so was the story, in these Masonic lodges. So just because they succeeded and became the Government of the day doesn't make it any less a conspiracy to overthrow a legal government.

Q. Have you studied in a book called "The Nature of Freemasonry" by Hubert S. Box?

A. Yes, I have.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 160: Book, "Freemasonry Exposed" by Captain William Morgan.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What does this have to do with your thesis in the article "The West, War and Islam"?

A. This book was published in 1952 by Augustine Press in London, and it is a very scholarly book. It deals with virtually every aspect of Freemasonry. It talks about the initiation ceremonies, the Master's degrees and so on, and it was very instructive and helpful to me in my research.

Q. Are you familiar with current newsmagazines — {4196|4197}

THE COURT: Just a moment. Is it connected to his —

MR. CHRISTIE: His research.

THE COURT: Well, I know that. Is it connected to his belief in Exhibit 2?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you identify it to the expressions of opinion you uttered in the publication of "The West, War and Islam"?

A. That's right. For example, on page 30 it discusses the connection of Freemasonry to the Kabala, which is a Jewish trend of thought.

Q. Are you familiar with Kabalism?

A. Only peripherally. It's something that almost disgusts me, really.

THE COURT: Almost what, sir?

THE WITNESS: Disgusts me.

THE COURT: It disgusts you.

THE WITNESS: Yes. It is not an area I want to get into.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You said it was Jewish, though. How do you say that?

A. On page 29:

"But the source of inspiration which admits of no denial is the Jewish Cabala."

And the whole story is based on the Cabalistic rituals, cabalistic signs in Freemasonry. They draw very heavily upon it. There are books such as "The Occult and Freemasonry". There is a vast body of literature available on Freemasonry.

Q. Are you aware as late as 1981 of {4197|4198} political activities in which the subject of Masonry was involved?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file this book, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 161: Book, "The Nature of Freemasonry" by Hubert S. Fox [Box].

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now specifically refer to a magazine. Can you identify it?

A. Yes. Newsweek Magazine, June 8, 1981.

Q. What does that indicate about Freemasonry or the subject of Masonry?

A. It talks about the famous scandal that rocked Italy, Argentina, Switzerland and it's called the P2 Lodge Scandal.

Q. Do you know about that? Have you read into the subject?

A. Quite extensively, yes.

Q. And did you read about that at the time you published "The West, War and Islam"?

A. I did, yes.

Q. Were you aware of some of these things?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What were you aware of at that time from those magazines?

A. That there was a group of people {4198|4199} who were defrauding the Italian Government and the Italian public, syphoning off billions of dollars in funds through clandestine dummy corporations and so on, and their network spread to Argentina financial dealings, into the Catholic Church. I think it was the Banco Ambrosiano, and all kinds of interesting inter-banking connections. It led to the either suicide or murder of a fellow called Gelli, I believe, in London.

Q. How was he found?

A. Hanged under a bridge in London.

Q. Are you familiar with the origin of that organization, the P2 Lodge?

A. It's a Freemasonic lodge. It was founded by Italian Freemasons.

Q. Are you aware of the distinction between the continental Freemasons and some of the British Masonic lodges?

A. Yes. There are different lodges and different graphic emblems, different signs that they identify one another.

Q. What kind of signs?

A. Secret handshakes, signs of distress, that if they are in need of help and they want to signal somebody that they need help, that they think might be one of their lodge brothers, then they have a certain way of identifying themselves, or they meet in a meeting, they have certain ways of letting the other person know that they are Masons. And there are certainly oaths. We have been witnesses right in this courtroom where people who are Masons took their Masonic oaths very seriously. {4199|4200}

Q. Are you aware of secrecy being an aspect of Masonry?

A. Well, if you can't even reveal the oath, and if even the oath is secret, then all secrecy derives from that and goes on from there. How can we find out if it is so secret?

Q. Do you see anything wrong with that?

A. Well, as a person who is a normal human being in public life, I don't go around keeping secrets. Maybe I should have kept a few, and I wouldn't be standing here today, so ...

Q. Were you relying upon that publication in relation to your publication in "The West, War and Islam"?

A. It only confirmed what I already knew for about fifteen years. And it's not the only incident. There is the corruption in Mexico under the current government in Mexico. That was widely written about at the turn of the century – well, 1910, 1920, to be a Freemasonic government.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. 162.

— EXHIBIT NO. 162: Newsweek Magazine, June 8, 1981

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Why did you feel inclined to write about that subject in relation to the publication "The West, War and Islam"? {4200|4201}

A. There is a great ignorance about Freemasonry in the general public, especially in North America and Canada, not so much in Europe. In Europe Freemasonry is always discussed again and again in political journals and political meetings; it is a topic that is frequently raised and aired. In North America there is not very much interest in that. I could speculate on that, but it's not the place nor the time. So I felt that these people in the Middle East to whom this material was exclusively directed could not have, possibly couldn't have knowledge of the political structure and power, influences and so on in North America, and that's why I felt in that very small paragraph which, undoubtedly, is inadequate, that at least I should alert them to the thing that there is such a thing, a very powerful group in North America called The Secret Societies with international connections into financing and so on.

Q. In your research did you consult the definitions and understanding of this publication?

A. Yes. It's the New Catholic Encyclopedia. It's published in San Francisco, Toronto, London and Sydney, and on page 134 it deals quite extensively with the Church's role or explanation. It's called, "Condemnation of Freemasonry by Church and state", and it lists date after date going back to 1738 right up to modern times, and it certainly makes no bones about the fact that the Catholic Church, officially, does not think that Freemasonry is a Christian thing, and if anything, it is anti-Christian, and it states and warns, as I have said before in the case of the {4201|4202} Rotarians that they don't want Catholics to become Freemasons.

MR. GRIFFITHS: What is the publication date of that, the New Catholic Encyclopedia?

THE WITNESS: 1967.

THE COURT: What is the name of the publication, please?

THE WITNESS: It is called, "New Catholic Encyclopedia, Volume VI".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you, in the course of your research, also consult the Encyclopaedia Judaica?

MR. CHRISTIE: May that be an exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 163: Photocopied excerpt from the New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. VI.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I did.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And what did it indicate in regard to your research?

A. This one is called the "Encyclopaedia Judaica", Jerusalem, The Macmillan Company, copyright 1971 by Keter Publishing House, Jerusalem, Israel, and it is organized in columns rather than pages, and beginning with columns 122, 123, 124 especially, it deals with Freemasonry at some length, and it points out the Jewish involvement in Freemasonry from the very beginning, especially North America the first lodges, how many Jews there were, how dominant {4202|4203} they were, what their rituals were, Solomon Bush, deputy inspector general of Masonry for Pennsylvania. Jews were influential in the Sublime Lodge of Perfection in Philadelphia which played an important part in the early history of Freemasonry in America. They chose a number of prominent Jewish names. And it deals also with the role of Freemasonry in Israel, once Israel was created, and how, what kind of lodges there were in Jerusalem, because Jerusalem figures a great deal in the, can I say, the folklore or the King David, Solomon and the reconstruction of the Temple is very important. It is a very important piece of information.

Q. And does that come from your sources?

A. I had it copied by a researcher in the library.

Q. And were you aware of that when you published "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. And the conclusion of this series of questions, I now produce and show to you a publication of another source.

THE COURT: Exhibit 164.

— EXHIBIT NO. 164: Photocopied excerpt from Encyclopaedia Judaica.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What does that indicate in relation to your thesis expressed in "The West, War and Islam" regarding Masonry?

A. This publication is called, "The Catholic World", "Can a Catholic Join the Masons?", {4203|4204} and on page 367 it outlines that many Masons are totally unaware of what the very small ruling circle on the top plans for their organizations, and it says that the Masonic Federation is to be judged not so much by the acts and things it has accomplished as by the whole of its principles and purposes. It shows the aspect. And I wanted to stress this, that I don't, by any means, want to condemn every Mason. I have known and still know Masons who are very decent people, but they are lower echelon Masons. There are seventeen million people, apparently, in the United States that belong to secret societies, and there's only sixty-six Masons that have attained the highest thirty-third degree rank. So we can't blame seventeen million people, maybe even out of the sixty-six, what even only a handful may be planning or doing. I have known many Masons who are decent people. I want to stress, however, I felt bound in my article to alert them, these people that received this material, to the power and influence of Freemasonry in the Western World. This is totally apparent from the whole body of this [sic] little three and a half page thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I file that, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 165.

— EXHIBIT NO. 165: Photocopied excerpt from "The Catholic World".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, also in the publication "The West, War and Islam": you make certain {4204|4205} remarks pertaining to the persons you called, "vicious, greedy and militant persons who call themselves Jews".

What were you referring to in regard to that, those remarks?

A. In my own personal private life I have had enough personal experiences, threats, including bombs, finally, but including threats of beating, arson, threats to my children, threats to my business. I was the victim of a huge demonstration outside my house organized by people who call themselves Jews that had placed ads in ethnic newspapers and bussed people to my place.

Q. How many people?

A. Depends on which newspaper you believe. Some say fifteen hundred. Others say two thousand. And that mob of people called for my public execution, hanging, storming of my building, throwing fire bombs and so on. I have the tape recordings of that particular demonstration, that alone. And then, over the years, a number of telephone threats have come to me, that it came to the point when Bell Telephone finally had to intercede and did record those things and trace the callers, and that turned out to be in the greatest number Jewish kids, young kids, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen years old, members of the JDL, apparently.

Now, when I went – maybe I cannot talk about this here, but the very day, my first day of the court appearance I was knocked down outside Old City Hall by members of the JDL, and if it hadn't been for the intervening of some police officials here, I {4205|4206} may have been killed there that day in full view of the media.

I consider that vicious and certainly militant, and if I read the pronouncement of a certain Rabbi Meir Kahane, emanating from the late sixties in New York and now Israel, that man is anything but a nice man. He is vicious and militant, and if I dig long enough I will find that he is also greedy, I bet.

Q. I now produce and show you a book called, "They Must Go", by Rabbi Meir Kahane. Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Is it available in our society?

A. Yes, it is. Regular bookstores.

Q. Have you read it?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you derive from it?

A. It is a policy of, drive the Palestinians out of Palestine, and I consider that vicious.

Q. I now produce and show you a book called, known as "The Avengers". Is that your book?

A. I own it, but it is written by Michael Bar-Zohar who was, for many years, the assistant to Ben Gurion.

Q. Why is that relevant to the case of some Jews being called vicious and militant and greedy?

A. It advises, like all books, the most ruthless lawlessness and murder that some people who call themselves Jews perpetrated on German people after the Second World War, and at the end of the Second {4206|4207} World War —

Q. Rather than give an editorial version, can you quote from it?

A. It says:

"Beni seemed rather embarrassed and he hesitated before going on. The Nakam leaders evolved a scheme which was disclosed to only a very few people. Much time and money went into the preparations. We knew that if we succeeded, no other actions would be necessary. Looking back, it could be called a diabolical scheme. It was designed to kill millions of Germans. Yes, millions, and all at the same time, men, women and children, old and young. The main difficulty was that we wanted to kill only Germans ..."

That's on page 52. And then, on page 55 he talks about Operation Poisoned Bread.

Q. What was that all about?

A. The Toronto Star carried an article about it on March 9th, 1968, and it says that one thousand S.S. officers were poisoned.

It is corroborated in this story here where they say that on April 15th, 1946, they poisoned two thousand loaves of bread which were destined for German prisoners. And according to some accounts published in Nuremberg newspapers, twelve thousand prisoners of war suffered from arsonic [sic] poisoning, and several thousand of them died.

Q. So that is what you call Vicious, is it?

A. I certainly do. {4207|4208}

Q. I now produce and show to you a book called, "Memoirs of an Assassin" Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What does that have to do with Jews being called vicious, greedy or militant?

A. It was published in 1959, and the publisher is Thomas Yoseloff, and I don't think I need to elucidate on it, on the Stern gang.

Q. Maybe you do.

A. The Stern gang were a bunch of terrorists and caused mayhem in Palestine while the British had the mandate there.

Q. Why?

A. Because they felt they wanted the British out and they wanted to take over Palestine.

Q. What happened?

A. They were instrumental in taking over Palestine and they later formed the Government of Israel.

Q. Did they do illegal acts?

A. Lots of them.

Q. Why?

A. I think it was the blowing up of the King David Hotel that, certainly, was laid at the doorstep of these terrorists which killed, I believe, ninety-six people, maimed others.

Q. Well, just particularly what, in that book, relates to your belief that there are some people who call themselves Jews who are greedy, vicious or militant? {4208|4209}

A. Well, Avner is a very famous writer and he outlines how they went about assassinating people.

Q. For what end?

A. To remove them. There were stumbling blocks in their path to creating Israel.

Q. And where does that book come from?

A. It was published in New York. It comes from my own library.

Q. From your library.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to just file these three books, maybe as one exhibit.

THE COURT: Exhibit 166.

— EXHIBIT NO. 166: Three books, "They Must Go", "The Avengers", and "Memoirs of an Assassin".

Q. What is your feeling towards Jews generally?

A. I have no special feelings for Jews, no more special than I have towards Irish or Lebanese. If you wonder whether I discriminate against Jews, some I find interesting, others I wouldn't go near with a ten-foot pole. I treat them as people.

Q. Why did you make the remark about some people who call themselves Jews being greedy, vicious or militant?

A. Because it's the truth. Some people who call themselves Jews behaved in a vicious, greedy and militant manner. And I put that in quotation marks, "Jews".

Q. I show you now the book called, "The Rise and Fall of the Jewish Gangster in America". Are you familiar with that book?

A. Yes.

Q. Who published it?

A. It's called, Holt, Rinehart and Winston in New York

Q. Is that your book?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. What does that have to do with the suggestion —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me. What is the date?

THE WITNESS: Copyright 1980, by Albert Fried.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And what does it indicate about certain criminal activities?

A. It details, just like the title says, the rise and fall of Jewish gangsters in America, {4210|4211} and it dispels one of the biggest myths, may I say, that crime in America is Italian, namely the Mafia. It lists some names which will come as — it certainly came as quite a surprise to me, that many of the crime kingpins certainly of the thirties were Jewish.

Q. In the course of your research over the years you examined the question of Jewish involvement in activities that are described as greedy, vicious or militant?

A. Of course, yes.

Q. Why have you done that?

A. Partly because I was surprised at the reaction that I was receiving. I was at the receiving end of all kinds of threats and violence, intimidation, boycotts, threatening letters, threatening phone calls. And so naturally, that made me examine how come that the Irish are not threatening me, or how come the French Canadians are not threatening me.

Q. I now produce and show to you a series of files which I do not intend to enter without indicating what they signify.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to file this book, if I may.

THE COURT: 167.

— EXHIBIT NO. 167: Book, "The Rise and Fall of the Jewish Gangster in America".

THE WITNESS: This is a very condensed and selected amount of material on this {4211|4212} topic which led me to write this particular sentence in this little newsletter.

THE COURT: Just before we hear from it, I see it is close to one o'clock. If you don't intend to enter that mass, you might give some thought to, hopefully, abbreviating it by letting the jury know what is in it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was just going to do it, just in a very general way, ask him what it signifies.

THE COURT: The witness was ready to make another quotation. That is why — do you want to do it now?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think I will just ask the question and direct the witness, and that way, if I may, cut it short.

Q. What does this whole pile of documentation signify?

A. Viciousness, militancy and greed by identifiable people who cloak themselves in the ethnicity of being Jewish while they are carrying on their nefarious activities.

Q. And does this judgment apply to all Jewish people?

A. Of course not.

Q. Why was reference made in your publication to such persons that call themselves Jews as vicious, greedy and militant?

A. I wanted to make a distinction, because that is to my friend Ginsburg and others, and Alfred Lilienthal and others, I am very aware that {4212|4213} there are all kinds of Jews in the world, many different streams, there is no uniform body of Jews as there is no uniform body of Germans. You know, we are all different people. But that's why I put it in quotation marks. Some people who call themselves Jews.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Thank you. Those are my questions on that point.

Now I will withdraw these documents, Your Honour. Would this be a convenient time?

THE COURT: Yes, it would.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— {4213|4212a}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury enters.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Zundel, in support of your thesis in "The West, War and Islam" did you do a study on the subject of banking and its relationship and influence upon the world?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Could you describe the sources you relied upon for your information?

A. Some publicly available books, especially one called, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy", which is already an exhibit, I believe, and the other one called, "The Rockefeller File".

Q. What does the Rockefeller name have to do with banking?

A. It is a well-known wealthy family dealing with banking in the United States.

Q. And were you referring to the Royal Bank of Canada particularly?

A. Not at all. Nothing was further from my mind that singling any Canadian bank.

Q. With respect to the media, what type of media were you talking about?

A. Basically American media. When we talk about Western media, we talk about the American media, the New York Times, Washington Post, Chicago Tribune. {4212a|4213a}

Q. Are there any other sources of banking that you relied upon?

A. Yes. "Lincoln Money Martyred".

Q. That is a book about whom?

A. About President Lincoln in the United States and the banking system going back to the Bank of England, the establishment of the Bank of England. It gives a brief synopsis of the various ways in which banking systems have been set up in England and in America.

Q. Are there any other sources for your opinion in respect to banks?

A. Books from the library about — Peter Trueman's books about the Bronfmans — just people who are involved in finance; but I think this booklet here more than anything else tells a very good story.

Q. Why is that?

A. It gives a quick overview. It only has 140 pages, and it deals with the Consul [Council] of Foreign Relations, manipulations of bankers and politicians, the Federal Reserve Board, World Government. It is a real good synopsis, I believe.

Q. Now, were there any other major sources for your opinion in respect to banks?

A. I went to some inspected areas, the Globe and Mail, for instance, had a very good story on Paul Volker (ph), not too long ago, and they call him the second most —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, excuse me —

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was it before 1981, because — {4213a|4214}

A. Geez, I don't recall the date, but I mean, I have known about Paul Volker and the Federal Reserve long before 1981.

Q. What is your opinion in respect to those institutions?

A. Well, they have a lot of money and they represent wealth, and wealth is power and power is influence.

Q. Are there any other sources of information respecting banks that you would like to indicate before the jury that you relied on in your research?

A. I am not an expert on banking, really, no. I didn't delve into the banking as deeply as I delved into the Holocaust extermination legend, because number one, I don't have much money so it's of not that much interest to me, and I am on very good terms with my local bank manager, so it's not — my interest in banking is strictly from what banks have traditionally been doing or have been accused of having done over the last fifty years.

I have been involved with Bernard Barous (ph) [Baruch] in the United States Government and with the Neil Report that President Roosevelt asked to go into to check into the interest of the Morgan trust in the United States, the financing of the First World War, there was a big controversy which lasted, and an investigation which lasted over two years and produced over two thousand pages of testimony.

Q. What was that called?

A. The Nigh Report established by the {4214|4215} United States Government, but this is what I was attempting to do here.

Q. Have you introduced here before the jury all the reasons why you believe in the thesis you put forward?

A. In the time that we had, I couldn't possibly begin to do that, and also, there are restrictions that a court of law, I have found out, imposes on a forum like this. It's not like a university or a television debate or a kind of a high school jam session. If it was, we would go to courts to learn about life and not to universities. This is a restriction that is placed on it. The rules of evidence, first of all, are very strict. This has been something new to me. I have never been before exposed to a courtroom environment, and the linguistics, as His Honour has ruled that German, any text in German couldn't be admitted here I was raised in Germany, I was educated in Germany, I was trained in Germany. Like every ethnic that comes to this country, I suppose, for the rest of my life, I will carry my German ethnicity like a snail[-]house with me and that is the total of my experience. So what I am defending myself with up here is material from the English-speaking world, some French texts, and a few translations because of the necessity of this courtroom procedure.

Q. What effect has this prosecution had upon you?

A. I have lost twelve pounds, which might have been a good thing. It's tiring. It's an educational process, I will say that. I have learned a {4215|4216} great deal. It has taught me that legal people have a specific language and are very careful in the way they phrase things. They are not like artists or writers certainly, or business people. It has and it is going to cost me a lot of money – that's the bottom line to defend myself in this courtroom, but outside of that, it has been an educational experience for me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would you answer questions from my learned friend, please.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Zundel, I'd suggest to you that you purposely sought to mislead and deceive this jury in presenting your beliefs to this jury. What do you say to that?

A. You are entitled to your opinion. This is your job. You are prosecuting me, so I am not surprised that you make that charge.

Q. Do you agree or disagree?

A. I totally disagree with you.

Q. All right. I point out to you a book that's not been entered into evidence yet called, "The Hitler We Loved & Why".

MR. CHRISTIE: I object to the introduction of books that are not before the jury at this time. It is something I would like to discuss in the absence of the jury if it is going to arise. {4217|4217}

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is going to arise.

THE COURT: Excuse us, members of the jury.

— The jury retires.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, the accused is charged with the publication of two books with which we have been dealing for approximately two weeks. Now, the Crown is intending to introduce two books which, from the preliminary hearings, it is alleged to have been published and authored by the accused.

I am not about to launch into the defence of some other publications. If the Crown intended to do so by some allegation of similar fact or other justification for this type of evidence, that they should do so now as late in the defence as the cross-examination of the last witness – because if it was the intention of the Crown to allege some pattern or form of introduction of this form of evidence under the rules of similar fact, it should have been done in the Crown's case and we could have answered it in the preparation and delivery of the defence.

We are now, therefore, confronted with {4217|4218} this, at the eleventh hour having finished all examination-in-chief, and I can tell you this was and is the last witness – I should have indicated that to the Court – but I respectfully suggest that to now involve the accused in the defence of other publications at this hour of the proceedings is entirely unfair to the accused.

I am well aware of what my friend intends to do with regard to this, having read the transcript of the preliminary. It is an attempt to introduce other publications by the accused or allege they are by the accused when, in fact, that is not the issue in the trial at all. And I would respectfully suggest that any cross-examination on collateral matters of publication that are not the issue in the proceedings is entirely unfair to the defence of the accused.

THE COURT: You have an advantage over me, Mr. Christie, because I don't know anything about the book. You say, first of all, it's collateral and you say secondly – or that is secondly. Primarily you say it is similar fact?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am saying there can only be few basis for introducing things of the accused, {4218|4219} one of which is similar fact allegations which, if that was the Crown's intent, it should have been introduced at the time the Crown was making its case so we can defend against it. It is now impossible to answer any new publications as to their truth, their falsity or the other issues that arise. I think it should really be proper for my friend to indicate the justification of the introduction of this, and then we would be in a better position to respond, because I don't wish to make statements of facts as to my friend's reasons without specific —

THE COURT: Don't worry. I will handle that.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I am well aware, my understanding is that the accused published this book or had something to do with the publication, and it is going to launch us into a whole new sphere of inquiry into other publications which the Crown wanted to allege had to do with crimes or similar facts, they could have done it at any other stage. Then we could have defended against these things, but the Crown has elected by the conduct of this case not to introduce those things, and we were entitled to assume we were not to defend against {4219|4220} other publications.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. First of all, Your Honour, I do not introduce it as a similar fact. If I was going to introduce it as a similar fact I would have done it in my case. My friend has very clearly, in the defence put in by Mr. Zundel's testimony led by my friend over the last two days, he has put (1) Mr. Zundel's reputation for honesty and sincerity in issue, and (2) he has put in issue his true belief in the matters that are contained in Exhibits 1 and 2.

THE COURT: Do you want to change to honest belief?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Honest belief, I beg your pardon, Your Honour. Honest belief.

I suggest and submit to Your Honour that when those things have been put into issue, that I am able to inquire into, through cross-examination of Mr. Zundel, his honest beliefs in these matters.

THE COURT: Your position is that you want to test the honesty of the belief.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir, through {4220|4221} other writings of Mr. Zundel.

THE COURT: I ask you now, is the book in question, the one in which is probative of the issue of the honest belief, the contents of them, I mean? If it is, that is one thing; if it is a story about something else entirely irrelevant to the issue the jury must try, I'd like to know that now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand, Your Honour. Mr. Zundel, in his testimony before the jury, indicated how he is a pacifist, he is a peaceable man. He has indicated that he doesn't wish to spread intolerance within the community or disrupt social harmony. He has called his own son to give evidence in that regard.

This book and other writings that I will be alleging Mr. Zundel is involved with do not go to the Holocaust per se. They do go to his motive, I would suggest, for printing this material that is before the Court; and the motive is not as pristine as Mr. Zundel would have us believe. Motive is something that the Crown is entitled to bring out in cross-examination, particularly in circumstances such as this where the good character is put into evidence and where his belief in the pamphlets, Exhibits 1 and 2, {4221|4222} are in evidence and where there is imputed within the confines of the indictment an intention to disrupt or injure the public interest, which he has said he did not have.

THE COURT: All right. What do you say, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, I say that if the Crown wanted to prove some other publication that he was intending to disrupt social and racial harmony, they should have charged him with that. We came here to defend two publications, and now I know what my friend proposes to do. He proposes to drag in a whole bunch of other publications that were not the subject of the inquiry until now. He says that it goes to his honest belief, and he also, then, says it doesn't go to the Holocaust per se. It also, I am sure, in regard to this booklet, I am well aware, does not go to the issue of "The West, War and Islam", either.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Granted.

MR. CHRISTIE: It goes, if anything, to a totally different subject, a totally different publication which my friend will allege is attributable {4222|4223} to my client for no particular reason other than to introduce another publication that I cannot defend against because the case is over. And I suggest that is to introduce some irrelevant piece of possible prejudice at a stage when there can be no probative value to the issue at stake, the truth or falsity of the two publications in issue, and the honesty and the belief in them.

All of a sudden, at the last hour when I can no longer call defence on this collateral issue, I will be opposed by a piece of information which has nothing to do with the issue until now. I certainly think it is an unfair tactic by the Crown to wait until now to bring forward books that, if we had to, we could answer. We could have made them the issue. If the Crown wished to throw them all together, which now I see at the last minute they will do or try to do, then the whole case would have been a vastly different and much longer trial. He chose to take us by surprise at this hour so that we would not have the ability to answer all these other publications. It's a very deliberate choice. I don't think it is an accident. And it's got nothing to do with either "The West, War and Islam" or {4223|4224} the Holocaust per se.

I would hesitate to imagine, I would be frightened to think of how long the trial would have been if I had to defend every publication of Mr. Zundel's in the last fifteen or twenty years; but that's really what we would be obliged to do somehow if we are now confronted with other irrelevant publications.

I can't think of a more unfair tactic than to wait till now to introduce a damning piece of prejudice which we could have answered with a fair defence if we had been confronted with it in the case for the Crown previously.

—— {4224|4225}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the Crown proposes to question this witness by way of cross-examination concerning what I understand to be a publication either published by Mr. Zundel or perhaps written by him. Whether it is one or the other, or both, is not of pivotal importance to this ruling.

The subject matter of the proposed publication does not relate in its subject matter to that of either Exhibits 1 or 2 in this trial. Crown counsel proposes to test, via this publication, the evidence that the accused gave when he was testifying in-chief concerning the honesty of his belief in the essential truth of Exhibits 1 and/or 2.

It is proposed to employ this publication generally to test the honesty, but in addition, Crown counsel has indicated that he proposes to employ the publication, if he is permitted to do so, in order to test the credibility of this witness insofar as that Mr. Zundel has sworn, when he was examined in-chief, inter alia that he is a peaceable person seeking community harmony between all members of the community, regardless of their racial or ethnic background, and that his {4225|4226} motives go in that direction. That, I understand, is the issue I must decide.

Wide reasonable latitude should be accorded to any counsel whose duty it is to cross-examine in what is an adversary situation such as this. It seems to me that provided that proper groundwork is laid, Crown counsel may ask those questions.

The honesty of the belief as put forward by the defence has been buttressed or supported by very close to a hundred books and periodicals. Regardless of the fact that the subject matter of the proposed tool of cross-examination does not relate directly to the subject matter of the two periodicals in issue, it nevertheless does relate and is probative of the honesty of the belief.

Insofar as I have described it, and to test the credibility generally speaking of this witness, you may use it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {4226|4227}

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, may ask one clarification? I think this matter is likely to arise with a number of books. If my friend would list those, then I will not have to object every time it comes up, and then I know where I stand.

THE COURT: Exactly. As you both know, I am all in favour of that.

Would you mind doing that, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. "Our Emblem The Best of Two Worlds", a mailing called, "Achtung Samisdat Truth Squad". There are a number of other files and pamphlets that I may be referring to, Your Honour, in the course of my cross-examination.

THE COURT: If there are, you might be good enough to let Mr. Christie know in due time, although you may not reach those today. You may. It is up to you.

Is there anything further, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think so, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please. {4227|4228}

THE COURT: I missed the name of this book we are dealing with.

MR. GRIFFITHS: "The Hitler We Loved & Why".

MR. CHRISTIE: Other than that and the book, "Our Emblem", there are no other books to be presented?

MR. GRIFFITHS: If there are, I will let you know.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to avoid having to object every time.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is why I will let you know.

— The jury enters. 3:05 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Zundel, I showed to you a book called, "The Hitler We Loved & Why". Do you recognize that?

A. I do.

Q. And it's written by, or the author is given on the front of the cover and inside as Christof Friedrich & Eric Thomson. Do you know either of those two men?

A. I supplied pictures. {4228|4229}

Q. No. Are you either of those two men?

A. I have written a number of books under Christof Friedrich.

Q. So Christof Friedrich, in this book, is you. Right?

A. I supplied photographs from my archives.

Q. We will come to that. Christof Friedrich in this book is you. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. What role did you play in the writing, your production of this book?

A. I supplied photographs of the Second World War era and the pre-Second World War era to the book.

Q. All right. And were you involved in writing any of the copy with those photographs?

A. I did not. I had the idea of a book explaining why the Germans voted for Hitler. A publisher in the United States, as is frequently the case, liked the idea. I had not the money nor had I found out the market to put a book of this type out, and so he said that he would like to produce a book like that. And he used his own staff writer to write the book. What he got from me was photographs, as you can see, inside here, from my own archives, some of whom he supplied, some of whom I supplied.

Q. How many of those photographs did you supply?

A. I can't really recall. {4229|4230}

Q. Was it most of them, or some of them?

A. A fair number.

Q. And who was the publisher?

A. White Power publications, — who it's a corporation in the United States. He apparently runs three or four publication houses, and this one is called White Power Publications.

Q. And is it run by a man by the name of Dietz (ph) ?

A. Yes.

Q. And Dietz is a friend of yours?

A. Acquaintances.

Q. And he puts out other publications as well as this one?

A. He puts out a magazine called, "Liberty Bell".

Q. And he put out other publications under "Liberty Bell"?

A. No. Mr. Dietz, free of charge, advertises some of my books in there.

Q. Why would they be free of charge?

A. In circles like mine, Samisdat means self-published by the underground. People often want to do you a favour, whether you ask them or not, and they include your name and address and they advertise free of charge for you. It is supposed to be their form of giving you a boost in sales or a boost in audience, or in lieu of donation.

Q. In lieu of a donation to what? Mr. Dietz, was he asking you for a donation? {4230|4231}

A. No. He thought he was doing me a kind turn by advertising some books for me.

Q. I see. Well, you had an opportunity to look this book over?

A. That's right.

Q. And do you agree with its contents?

A. I don't see much wrong with the content, no. There's a couple of posters in there which they inserted done in the United States which are of a nature totally typical to the United States, certainly not to Germany in the nineteen thirties; but outside of that, much of the contents to do with the Third Reich, there is not much wrong with it. The writer chose the style of "we", making himself as part of the Third Reich. Well, he is an American, and he never set foot in Germany, apparently, during the era of the Third Reich. It is just a method of writing it.

Q. All right. Page 21, there is a photograph. Is that a photograph that you supplied?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And do you agree with the copy that's written underneath that photograph?

A. It's in a rhetorical style, but the true content is there, yes. It's truthful.

Q. That is a picture of some men in fedoras and suits with a machine gun; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. It says, "Street-fighting, civil war ...":
"Disorder: Jew-dominated communists barricade the streets and machine[ ]gun {4231|4232} law-abiding citizens. The Jews tried to conquer Germany with their Red Terror and civil war, just as they had done so successfully in Russia."

Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And this photograph that you took or that you had in your archives, do you know where that's from?

A. It came from a publication in the 1920s when Germany was experiencing a series of Jewish dominated controlled revolutions in Germany, in Bavaria, one especially by the Jewish Bolshevik by the name of Kurt Eisner (ph) who murdered a number of aristocrats and other people. There were others like Rosa Luxemburg, and they were certainly known as Jews, and the literature of the day refers to them as such, and they were Jewish terrorists, yes.

Q. All right.

A. So historically it is accurate. By the way, he also declared war on Switzerland.

Q. Who declared war on Switzerland?

A. Kurt Eisner.

Q. Do you have a picture of that, too?

A. Maybe not in this book, but I certainly have in my files.

Q. Page 32, there is a photograph. Is that a photograph you supplied?

A. I can't recall, but I could very well. It looks like a newspaper clipping from the 1930s era. {4232|4233}

Q. And you agree with the copy provided there?

A. It's like the rest of the book, I think tailored for an American audience, a specific audience that this man's deeds appeal to.

Q. Sir, the question is, do you agree with the copy?

A. I would not have written it that way, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. All right. But do you agree with it?

A. I am not a literary judge. I think it is, as I said to you, that man's style and that is what he wrote.

Q. I am not talking about the style. I am not asking for literary analysis. Do you agree with the content contained on page 32 describing what is in that photograph?

A. No, I don't, really.

Q. All right. Do you agree with me that this book is classified as a hymn of praise to Hitler and to Hitler's Germany?

A. I think a hymn of praise is certainly your choice of words. It is a book trying to give a different viewpoint of Hitler's Germany.

Q. Is there anything critical?

A. Is there anything critical in there? I doubt it very much.

Q. You doubt it very much. Okay. Page 42, is that a picture you supplied?

A. No. That's a picture that again, {4233|4234} "The Face of The Enemy", it shows Jacob Rothschild supplying an award to Martin Luther King.

Q. And it is under the captioned heading, "Face of The Enemy", Jacob Rothschild and Martin Luther King.

A. That's right.

Q. What would you receive in royalties for this book? How much money would you get from this book?

A. For this book?

Q. How much does this book sell for? Does it say here?

A. No, it doesn't say here. I received no payment for the book.

Q. Five dollars it says here. How much did you get for the book?

A. Mr. Dietz agreed to print one of my flying saucers books in the United States, one of my editions of my flying saucers books, and he agreed to it if I supplied photographs for him.

Q. So you got money indirectly?

A. Well, I received some money because he said he would give me a good deal by publishing the flying saucer book.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May that be an exhibit?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think it should be an exhibit. He has answered questions on it. He identified what he had to do with it. I don't see why it should be an exhibit against him.

THE COURT: I will mark it as a {4234|4235} lettered exhibit. I will hear argument on it later.

— EXHIBIT "Z" (For Identification): Book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why", by Christof Friedrich & Eric Thomson.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you remember when this was published, what year?

A. Inside it says 1977.

Q. Does that seem right to you?

A. '76, '77. Could be another edition. I don't know.

Q. It says, "Copyright 1977 by White Power Publications".

A. Yes.

Q. And were you involved on the editorial board of any of Mr. Dietz' publications in that time?

A. This has caused me some embarrassment. Without asking me, he made me either an associate editor or contributing editor to one of his publications.

Q. Which one?

A. I am not quite sure if it's the White Power Report or Liberty Bell.

Q. You have to speak up, Mr. Zundel. White power Report or Liberty Bell?

A. Yes. White Power Report or Liberty Bell. I am not sure which one. I asked him when it came out immediately to take me off and to, in future, please not use my name without asking me.

Q. All right. Wasn't White Power {4235|4236} Report, hadn't you contributed some material to White Power Report?

A. Under the name Christof Friedrich appeared one article in there, I believe, one of the things you mentioned before, "Our Emblem" or "The Best of Two Worlds".

Q. Had you written anything else aside from — I'm sorry, you say "Our Emblem" or "The Best of Two Worlds" appeared in White Power Report?

A. Either that — in one of two publications. I publish a lot of stuff, Mr. Griffiths. I am not trying to evade your question, but I am a little hazy on it. It was somewhere in 1976 or '77.

Q. That is the time you were on the editorial board?

A. That is when he put me on without asking me, and you will note if we have subsequent publications, that it was not for very long because I asked him to take me off.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I believe, Your Honour, that Mr. Christie and I have something, I'm sorry, once again, that will have to be discussed in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: Coffee will be quickly ordered, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 3:20 p.m.

THE COURT: How long will it take, gentlemen?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't know, Your Honour. {4236|4237}

Mr. Christie indicated to me that he wanted an opportunity, I don't know whether it was to object ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, all I said — I want to know what he is going to be putting forward, and before he does —

THE COURT: That's fair enough.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I've indicated.

MR. CHRISTIE: There is a whole file folder, and if he intends to put the whole thing to the witness, I have certain things to say. If there is something particular, then I'd like to know what it is he intends to put forward.

I am given three pieces of paper, for the record, now four.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And the booklet that I think is still in your possession.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have absolutely nothing in this regard other than the four pieces of paper, and one is called, "Achtung", the other is "Re-treat", and something typed out which says, "This is sent to an unsolicited address free of charge, Bonn Police State". Now, I have never seen this before. I {4237|4238} have no idea. And consequently I would need a little time to look at this.

THE COURT: How much time do you need?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have now been given number five, "White Power Publications", "The Best of Two Worlds". I would like twenty minutes to look after these things.

THE COURT: Certainly. Twenty minutes.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have had the opportunity from my friend to see some of the things, being things that I indicated that he intends to cross-examine on. I have asked his permission and obtained it to speak to my client while he is under cross-examination in order to ascertain if those things were admitted by him as a publication, etcetera. I have {4238|4239} been informed that this same series of exhibits was put to him at the Postal Hearing Inquiry in Ottawa at the very period of time when I was not entitled to cross-examine or lead evidence about because it was after 1981, that being 1982.

That, I think, has some bearing on what my position is, because it involves questioning about things that were put to him at a time when I was not entitled to lead evidence, and I was told then that the state of mind, the activities of his learning at that stage was irrelevant to the charge. However, if Your Honour views the ruling you had earlier as applicable to that, then my remarks are just put there for the record; but I do think that it's a situation where my friend should not be examining on a period of time or cross-examine on a period of time that I was not allowed to examine on or lead evidence about.

In addition, it's my understanding that some of these items have already been denied once by my client under oath, and so I don't understand why the Crown is putting them to him again, with respect, in particular to the alleged booklet, "White Power {4239|4240} Publications" and "The Best of Two Worlds". My understanding is, from my instructions, is that they were denied already by my client under oath, and it is as if one keeps on putting something to him when he is well aware that he denied it. That process has some error in it involving the suggestion that the Crown could put to a person —

THE COURT: Well, what you really mean I think, is that that submission has some merit to it. I think it may. I will ask Mr. Griffiths about that in a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. What I mean to say is, as if to put to a witness something that he has already publicly denied under oath at another time, in front of this jury, obviously with prejudicial implications, even if he repeats his denial, I think that that's about the state of affairs respecting that brochure.

The other thing, the only problem that I can see which strikes me as a somewhat serious problem, is that they rose, to my instructions, in 1982, and they have been dealt with once before a tribunal. Now they are coming forward again. {4240|4241}

THE COURT: Yes. What about the White Power matter, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am prepared to voir dire that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Do you want to do it today, or would you just as soon do it some other time?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will do it whenever, Your Honour, at the convenience of Your Honour and the jury.

THE COURT: All right. Swear the witness on the voir dire.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn on voir dire

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Zündel, I am showing to you a pamphlet called, "Our Emblem The Best of Two Worlds". Do you recognize that?

A. I do.

Q. Who is the author of that pamphlet?

A. I am not.

Q. Who is the author of that pamphlet, Mr. Zündel?

A. A staff writer for George Letz (ph) {4241|4242} Publication.

Q. What role, if any, did you play in the writing of that article?

A. I did not play any role in the writing of it.

Q. What role, if any, did you play in the publication of the article that is written?

A. The staff writer called me for some background information, because there was a postal strike in Canada at that time and so the only matter that he could get in touch with me was by telephone.

Q. What is the name of the staff writer?

A. Eric Campbell.

Q. Eric Campbell?

A. That's right.

Q. Were you on the editorial board of the publication at the time this was written, January '77?

A. It doesn't say here, no. This is not a publication, Mr. Griffiths. It's just —

Q. Were you on the editorial board of White Power Publications

A. For a brief period of two or three months, I believe, but that's about it. I am not quite sure whether that was the time on it.

Q. Were you on the editorial board when this publication was written?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Whose name is attributed to that article? {4242|4243}

A. Christof Friedrich.

Q. That's your name, the name that you write under?

A. It is one of the names that I write under, yes.

Q. And have you taken any legal action as a result of somebody using the name you write under and putting it to an article?

A. I have never taken legal action against anybody, Mr. Griffiths, and in all the years that I have been hounded around, I never have, not against Madam Citron or anybody else.

Q. Page 6, it says:

"[I]f we were a commercial outfit — patriots for profit — we would ... to the fringe and have no trouble obtaining handouts from racial enemies. We have been accused of running our printing plant for the Jews the Communists and the United States Government, even a UFO base located in Antar[c]tica."

A. That's right.

Q. Are there any other people writing about UFO bases in Antarctica beside you?

A. Lots of people writing about that. And Mr. Dietz published that, I told you.

Q. He published that. No question about him publishing. The question now is the authorship of that article {4243|4244}

A. Well, I have told you, and that is the answer. I didn't write it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. No further questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no questions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I won't submit it, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Are there any other problems, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, since we are in the process, I would certainly object to this book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why", going to the jury.

THE COURT: I don't want to hear about that now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. I will carry on.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury.

— The jury returns. 3:50 p.m.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I am putting to you six pages {4244|4245} stapled together. The first page says, "Achtung: Samisdat Truth Squad". Can you identify that material that passed to you?

A. Yes, this comes from me.

Q. All right. And all six pages come from you?

A. I think so, yes.

THE COURT: I'm sorry?

THE WITNESS: I think so.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: They are poor photocopies, but I think so.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Poor photocopies.

All right. The first page, "Achtung: Samisdat Truth Squad Ernst Zundel, 200 Carlton St., Toronto, Ont."

A. That's right, sir.

Q. And there's a couple of paragraphs there signed "Ernst Christof Friedrich Zundel".

A. That's right.

Q. And it deals with a tour of yours in North America, and Udo Walendy, I presume to speak on issues about the Holocaust; is that right?

A. I made a number of tours. I wanted to quickly check if his name appears here. No, I don't think it was with Udo Walendy.

Q. It was a tour to speak on that subject.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Second page, back of the first page, "Combat Belt Buckle".

A. Right. {4245|4246}

Q. All right. That's by you. Just hold it up so the jury can see it. Now, is that something you sell or sold at that time?

A. Yes. That's a trade mark. This is for the letter "z" for "Zundel".

Q. It is very much like the "SS" sign, isn't it? —

A. Well, it's the other way around, but it's a lightening flash. That is a belt buckle that I have designed, yes.

Q. Why would a pacifist like you sell a combat belt buckle, Mr. Zundel?

A. Well, for the same reason that Rabbi Julius Rosenthal would write a foreword to a book called, "Adolf Hitler". Same thing.

Q. I don't understand the connection, sir.

A. Well, it's very simple. I have to raise money somehow, and this was strictly a method of raising money.

Q. Okay.

A. Except I used my own design, a thing which was produced by my firm, whereas here someone is enriching himself by using Adolf Hitler, and he is a Rabbi to boot.

Q. "We are planning to produce a limited quantity of this beautifully-crafted, black, white and red enamelled belt buckle. For the purpose of economy, we must submit a minimum order of 200 buckles. The projected cost of these {4246|4247} buckles will be $15, including postage and handling. Please let us know how many you would like for yourself and your friends. Not only will they make excellent gifts, but they will serve to let others know that you support Aryan Man in his struggle for Truth, Freedom and Justice! Please indicate interest only. Send no Money!"

What is "Aryan Man"?

A. In the thirties all white people were known as Aryans. It's a term which is no longer used these days, but all white people are Aryans.

Q. Why would you use that term?

A. It was going to an audience of people who used this term.

Q. "Let others know that you support White Man in his struggle for truth, freedom and justice." Is that how we should read that, then?

A. Yeah.

Q. Are you a racist?

A. I am not a racist because I identify my own race as white. You could ask me am I colour-blind. It is ridiculous. Of course I am white.

Q. You sell — there is also some tapes here, cassette programmes that you are advertising for sale.

A. Yes, I do.

Q. No. 41, "Samisdat Media Tactics I."

"Ernst Zundel show us how he introduces {4247|4248} forbidden and censored subjects on the airwaves. Listen how he gets in to win with the entering wedge of a 'far-out' topic (UFOs) and proceeds to drive home facts about Allied war crimes, the myth of the 'six million', Canadian concentration camps, communist infiltration, racial and Jewish problems; all subjects known to very few North Americans. This fantastic presentation was broadcast for two hours on a live, uncensored, coast-to-coast talkshow."

Have I read that right?

A. Very well.

Q. What are "racial and Jewish problems"?

A. Exactly what it says. There are race problems and there are Jewish problems.

Q. Well, what is censored or forbidden about getting into talk about racial and Jewish problems?

A. Well, now, let's see. We should ask Brian Nelson of CTV.

Q. No. I am asking you.

A. Okay. Brian Nelson was fired from CTV for touching on what is known as a Jewish problem. He called Israel a Zionist entity in the State of Kuwait, got back to Toronto, and lost his job, was kicked out of CTV. That is a Jewish problem for {4248|4249} Brian Nelson.

Q. What's the Jewish problem for you?

A. The Holocaust legend.

Q. I see. All right.

A. And the vilification of the German people.

Q. What's a race problem for you?

A. Well, it's spelled in a small "r", whereas Jewish is spelt with a capital "J". So it is in the same line as "communist infiltration, racial and Jewish problems[ ]". That was 1976. In '77 there must have been some race problem as a public topic. I don't remember directly today what it was referring to. But I could listen to the tape again.

Q. These are all subjects known to very few North Americans, so it wasn't a public topic you were getting to there.

A. Well, it was a broadcast video show. It had a fair-sized audience of a thousand people. So it is not secret. It is public to me. And you want to hear about the flying saucer thing?

Q. Certainly.

A. I have used my flying saucer books as a wedge to talk about the Holocaust, yes, because certain self-appointed censors have managed, in North America, and especially in this city, to keep the topic of discussing the Holocaust from another viewpoint off the airwaves. And I must say that it has worked quite well.

Q. So that's a hook that you use. you might sell a book on UFOs and then get them to come {3767|3768} {4249|4250} back and buy some more. What kind of material would you sell them, then?

A. Material on the Holocaust.

Q. I see.

A. And it's not a hook. You could call it a wedge.

Q. A wedge. All right. German tape No. 43 called, "The German Holocaust”:

“In the midst of Samisdat/Kampfgruppe Zundel’s campaign of press interviews, ...”

I am going to stop for a minute. What does “Kampfgruppe” mean? It is a German word, isn’t it?

A. It means “action group”. We are activists. We don’t sit behind writing desks only or microphones. We go out and proselytize our viewpoint by handing pamphlets to people and going on stations, if necessary.

Doesn’t it also mean “battle”, “battle group”?

If you are talking about war, then it is battle. If you are talking about intellectual pursuits, then it is called action.

So when Hitler wrote “Mein Kampf”, he was talking about “My Action”, or was he talking about “My Battle”?

No. He was talking about his struggle. His struggle, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. His struggle.

A. The literal translation of “Mein {4250|4251} Kampf” is not “My Battle”, but “My Struggle”.

Q. So this is a struggle group?

A. Yeah. We certainly are struggling, you can say that, just like I am struggling in this courtroom.

Q. And since we started reading that, we should probably finish. “The German Holocaust”:

“In the midst of Samisdat/Kampfgruppe Zundel’s campaign of press interviews, mass-mailings and marches against the Zionist Holocaust Hoaxers, police authorities advised us to record incoming telephone calls as evidence in possible criminal proceedings. While these calls are not outright hate calls like those recorded in #40, ...”

That is another cassette you sell. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. “... they are important because they reveal to the uninformed or misinformed German that World War II propaganda shown no signs of diminishing and that overseas Germans suffer the effects of this Zionist brainwashing campaign. Zionists are teaching Germany to love the entire world, while at the same time they teach the entire world to hate Germany! Listen to beaten and {4251|4252} brainwashed Germans who hate themselves and to Jews who love this postwar, self-hating Germany.”

What do you say?

A. And what do you find wrong with that?

Q. No. In fairness to you, we should read the whole thing.

A. Oh, I agree with that.

Q. You agree with that?

A. I sure do.

Q. Okay. No. 48, tape in German, “My Plans”:

“Ernst Zundel, leader of Samisdat/Kampfgruppe Zundel discusses his worldview and battle plans for the achievement of our glorious future.”

Whose future is that you are talking about, Mr. Zundel?

A. The entire German people, if you wish.

Q. The German.

A. Yeah.

Q. “His detailed blueprints for action are based upon his own living monument to Aryan tenacity and strength of will – his twenty trying years of experience in the political arena. The programme concludes with his stirring appeal to global action, the only cure for the global evil of {4252|4253} Zionism, the only salvation from Zionist enslavement. Hear this universal declaration of independence from today’s corrupt and life destroying system.”

Have I got that right?

A. You sure did.

Q. And what kind of actions are you talking about in your battle?

A. Well, let me see.

Q. For Aryan Man.

A. Before we were talking about action and what I called for was marches. Right? And naturally, that’s exactly what I am preparing, is political action, because in my twenty-five years in this country I have never been in trouble with any laws save s.177 of the Criminal Code, s.281.1 in Ottawa, which I won, and therefore, since this thing is from 1977, I have not heard any reports of civil unrest, uprisings, shoot-outs or anything else like this. I have been known and I still am known as a writer, a thinker and a political activist, a human rights activist, it turns out to be now.

Q. Are you on track now for your global plan.

A. It’s part of it.

Q. There is a tape in English. I can’t make out the number. It looks like it would be about No. 50, in English, “A Plan for Aryan Man”:

“Ernst Zundel, leader of Samisdat/Kampfgruppe Zundel gives us the benefit {4253|4254} of our news media, of his 20 years of frontline political experience in a globe-girdling State of the Race ...”

State of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. “... State of the Race Message.”

What race?

A. The white race.

Q. Are we in good shape?

A. No.

Q. Because of the Jews?

A. Because of Zionist manipulation yes, and infiltration of our society by secret societies.

Q. Anything else?

A. I think for the beginning that will do.

Q. What about black people?

A. They don’t bother me at all.

Q. All right.

“How is Aryan Man faring on Planet Earth? What are his prospects for the future?”

I guess a Zionist couldn’t be an Aryan man.

A. As a matter of fact, many of them are, according to Arthur Kressler (ph) [Koestler], eighteen per cent are Semites, and many of them are Khazars, and Khazars are from the central area of Russia and they are Aryans.

Q. So this is your plan for White Man including Jews? {4254|4255}

A. Those who want to identify with us, yes.

Q. Who is “us”?

A. Aryans, whites.

Q. Well, you said they are, and they were; why would they have to identify if they are and were?

A. Don’t put words in my mouth.

Q. You said eighteen per cent were white.

A. I said racially speaking they were, but I have no idea whether they want to identify with us or somebody else.

Q. I didn’t know they weren’t white already.

A. Well, then, maybe you have to study up on it.

Q. You are telling us that they’re not white. Jewish people are not white.

A. I am saying that Arthur Kessler said —

Q. I am not asking for Arthur Kessler. I am asking for you. You are the one who made this tape about Aryan men.

A. Well, everybody’s information is based on something. Mine happened to have been based on something that Arthur Kessler [Koestler] found, who was a prominent Jew.

Q. Yes.

A. And he said in his book, “The Thirteenth Tribe”, that many of the Jewish people are {4255|4256} not Semites. Therefore, for instance, they have no right to the State of Israel.

Q. All right. So that’s Arthur Kessler’s [Koestler’s] view.

A. Which I share.

Q. You share that.

A. That’s right.

Q. All right. And are the ones that you say that eighty-two per cent of Jewish people are not Semites – and by “Semite” I take it you mean descended from Arab peoples

A. That’s about right, yes.

Q. Have I got that right?

A. Pretty close.

Q. Okay. Eighty-two per cent are not black; eighty-two per cent are not white.

A. Arabs —

Q. How many? How many? What is the percentage of non-white Jews, then, according to your estimate? You make a distinction, and I am not sure I understand.

A. Well, if you want to know how many black Jews there are in Israel, they have quite a number. I have been to Israel, and I have seen the problems between Ashkenazi [Ashkenazi] Jews and Safarti [Sephardi] Jews, and I have all kinds of articles about the race problems in Israel and the non-acceptance of dark-skinned Jews by white-skinned Jews.

Q. Are white-skinned Jews white people, or black people?

A. Well, basically that is their {4256|4257} choice. I don't know. I don't know every Jew in the world, you know. Israel seems to identify for the moment with American interests, so I don't know. That's an indication. It doesn't indicate that they are associating with Red China, for instance, or with black Africa.

Q. Does Aryan man have anything to do with northern European, christian, white people?

A. Not northern European.

Q. Well, how would Hitler define an Aryan man?

A. He was talking about Germanics. The Aryan race includes even Brahmin Indians'

Q. Is that the definition you adopt, or is there some different definition?

A. Well, if you look into some books on genetics and race, you will see the term used. These days it has evolved, like many other terms, but generally speaking Aryans were what we used to, or what we sometimes called Caucasians of Caucasian race.

Q. Is that how you use the term, or do you have some other definition for the term?

A. No. There are Swedish, Bulgarians, Russians, Belgians, Maltese ...

Q. Slavs ...

A. Certainly in — Germanic. Sometimes even beyond.

Q. That is your definition, then of Aryan.

A. Yes.

Q. So would only Jews who identify {4257|4258} themselves as Aryans can be Aryans? They have to decide whether they are or not. Is that what I understand?

A. Well, those eighty-two per cent of the Jewish population who are Ashkenazi and made up of the old Kasar [Khazar] empire, Kasarians, [Khazarians] yeah, they have to make the choice sooner or later, and some of them have done it in the Soviet Union. They have dropped being Jewish and they have integrated into Soviet society as Russians. The census show that.

Q. So if they dropped being Jewish, then they can be a member of Aryan men?

A. Yeah. Sure.

Q. And if they want to continue being Jewish, then they are not Aryan men and they are not white people.

A. They might look like white people.

Q. But inside in their heart they are not.

A. It's a cultural affinity. It's their choice. Some Germans, they go to India and become Indians. I know one person, he came from Japan, came from Germany, he had such an affinity for the Japanese, met a Japanese girl, married her. That is his affinity, you see.

Q. It goes on, then:

"How is Aryan Man faring on planet Earth? What are his prospects for the future. If he does not wish to become enslaved nor extinct, what can he do? Ernst Zundel points unerringly ..." {4258|4259}

Is that fair?

A. Yes.

Q. "... points unerringly to the bright sunrise of Aryan victory and shows us what we can do — right now to make certain our Final Victory."

Is that right?

A. You read it correctly.

Q. Okay. What can we do right now to make certain of our final victory, Mr. Zundel?

A. To free us from the shackles of lies and brainwashing and mind manipulation. So that we once again begin to think like ourselves.

Q. "Ourselves" being Aryan?

A. If that's what you want to harp away at, yes.

Q. And can we say non-Aryans are the ones that are enslaving us?

A. No. We are allowing ourselves to be enslaved.

Q. By whom?

A. By those who would dominate the news, manipulate the news, some of them Aryans, some of them Zionists, some of them communists.

Q. This is a message to Aryan men. Right?

A. Right.

Q. And calls for an Aryan victory. So I assume that somebody other than Aryans that are enslaving us.

A. Not necessarily so at all. {4259|4260}

Q. Oh?

A. In the Soviet Union, in Poland, for instance, and in West Germany today the government is made of of Aryans, and they are holding their people subjugated. They are hounding them, jailing them, sending them to the Gulag in the Soviet Union for writing unofficial history, questioning sacred cows. It has always been a hallmark of dictatorship to usually use people of their own kind, because if non-native dictators are imposed — dictatorship lasts a very long time, Mr. Griffiths, the best dictatorship is best if you are run by your own kind, or the worst, whatever way you want to look at it.

Q. So how are we going to have an Aryan Victory? We are going to have a civil war among ourselves?

A. No, you don't need civil wars. You need the truth. It is like this. You are in a large room, a number of people, all minding their own business, not realizing that among them there is a pickpocket on the loose. Now, that pickpocket is a danger to each person in that room. Until such time that the light of publicity, in this case the light of the law, maybe, points at him and follows him throughout the room — nobody has to touch the man, nobody has to beat the man, nobody has to arrest the man. All you have to do is expose the man. And with publicity, that's exactly what you can do.

These people who are lying about the Holocaust are only a problem until such time that their racket has been exposed through truth. {4260|4261}

Q. All right. So Dr. Vrba, Mr. Urnstein, Henry Leader, Arnold Friedman, Ignaz Fulop, those are all the people that are lying and that you are exposing; is that right?

A. No. What we are doing is, thanks to this trial that I'm on, they have to come here in this witness box, and these twelve people are looking at them for the first time because these people have never met them, most likely, and it is due to these twelve people, they will make a decision whether they think Dr. Vrba, with his fantastic recollection, was telling the truth or was telling half-truths, or lies. And the same with the other witnesses.

Q. And the other witnesses? Well, what do you say?

A. I'm not the jury. I'm the accused.

Q. No, I am asking you, Mr. Zundel. What do you say?

A. Okay. I will answer you that since you have asked me, and obviously gave me the permission to answer it.

I think Dr. Vrba's stories are an insult to this court. I really do. For a man to say, bandying around his doctorate, insisting that he be called a Doctor, and then to say that he counted by the rattle of his barrack how many people were taken to the gas chamber, and that he did that for two years in a row and comes up with this sum total of 150,000 gassed Jews in Auschwitz from France in two years when Klarsfelt, Serge Klarsfelt, a man very much alive {4261|4262} poring over all the train manifests in France that he has available, brings the sum total of Jews deported in Germany during the entire war to 76,000, and you are asking me if I think Dr. Vrba is telling the truth?

Q. Okay. That's Dr. Vrba. What about Urnstein, Leader, Arnold Friedman, Chester Tomaszewski?

MR. CHRISTIE: Can we have one question at a time?

THE WITNESS: We will take Mr. Friedman. Mr. Friedman was testifying in the preliminary, and I assume that a preliminary hearing is meant to be held —

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I will stop you, Mr. Zundel.

MR. CHRISTIE: What's the problem?

THE WITNESS: You asked me to answer for Mr. Friedman.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Friedman's testimony in this court.

A. Oh, Mr. Friedman's testimony in this court not in the preliminary.

Q. No. The jury hasn't heard the preliminary. Right here,

A. Okay. Sorry. When Mr. Friedman says that he saw flames shooting out of the chimney of the crematorium — he has changed his testimony from the preliminary to this one, so we will address ourselves to this one. I think it is twelve or fourteen feet. If one then studies the plans of the crematories in the place where he said he was and you say that they have {4262|4263} ten meters or eight meter-long smoke and flame channels that go flat into a chimney, and then there is a seven meter tall chimney, and still, out of this length of pipe and chimney there are fourteen-foot flames shooting out, I think we are dealing with a man with a vivid imagination at best. I mean, in all fairness to him. Also he smelt the smell of burning flesh in that camp. Now, we have a book here in evidence by two British authors that deal extensively with what happens when a human body is cremated. Since the 1870s, Mr. Griffiths, there is no smell associated with the burning of human flesh.

Now, what was Mr. Friedman doing to these people here? Was he trying to deceive them?

Q. Well, my question is what you think he was doing.

A. I want to give him the benefit of the doubt.

Q. Just tell us what you think, Mr. Zundel.

A. I think he was retelling standard Holocaust stories which he might unwittingly, in the last thirty-five, forty years, have made his own in some form of group hallucination or mass hallucination. So that is Mr. Friedman.

Now, Mr. Urnstein, he told a good tale, was interesting, but he certainly didn't convince me. Now, there was who, Mr. Tomaszewski? Mr. Tomaszewski, I felt the sadness for him because I had the impression that here was a man who really had suffered.

Q. The others hadn't.

A. He convinced me more than the others. {4263|4264} Okay? You are asking me for my opinion. I am giving it to you.

Q. That is what I am asking.

A. I was a little surprised about his diet of horse manure and boots at lunch, you know, because I quickly calculated, if in the camp of Gussen [Gusen] there were six thousand people — there were many more in the total complex, but that would mean six thousand boots a day, if they had a daily ration of boiled boots. I think that this is pretty far-fetched. Also the number of Jews who were admitted to Gussen [sic] was considerably less than Mr. Tomaszewski said. Also the number of deaths in the camp of Gussen [sic], where he was, only in 1945 amounted to some 209 per day. Whereas in the first years that he described that he was there, — there were very, very, very much lower figures, Mr. Griffiths. So therefore his story was like all the stories told by people who have suffered, embellished.

Q. Group hallucination, group fantasy?

A. There are articles written in scientific magazines about such things as group hallucinations, yes.

Q. Oh, is that what you think?

A. I think it is perfectly possible. Otherwise, why would we get such far-fetched testimony out of so many people? Because in the Frank Walus case, for instance, we had people —

Q. No, I am not asking you about that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like the witness to be allowed to answer the question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not asking about {4264|4265} the Frank Walus case. That is not the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I would respectfully suggest he is answering the question. It is for Your Honour to say, but —

THE COURT: Yes. I will just say that you can cover that if you wish, Mr. Christie, in re-examination.

THE WITNESS: Is there anything else now?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, there is. There is an advertisement in there for a book called, "The Hitler We Loved & Why".

A. That's right.

Q. And there is some copy accompanying there. Is that your copy, I assume? It is your mailout.

A. Yes, it is my copy.

Q. Could you read that, please?

A. Okay. I will get my glasses.

Q. If it will help, I will read and you can follow.

A. Okay.

Q. "The Hitler We Loved & Why":

"Here it is: Hitler as the Germans saw him! As a nation, Germans were the best-educated people in the world. They followed Hitler to the end, through good times and bad, not for what he did to them, but for what he did for them. Were the Germans dupes when they fought for Hitler, or were we dupes when {4265|4266} we fought against him? This photo documentary tells the true and surprising story of Germany's Hitler. 225 rare and beautiful photos, 35 concentration camp documents, 2 drawings, adoption requirements for prospective parents, sterilization procedures, etc. 120 information-filled pages show how the Third Reich was really run! $4.95 + 75 ¢ postage & handling."

So you did make some money on this book.

A. That is assuming that there is profit in the $4.95 book.

Q. Well, you sold some of the books.

A. Okay. Good. So what would you like to discuss on that, Mr. Griffiths?

Q. I would like to discuss how you adopt the book in total. You don't say this is me writing the copy. You adopt it.

A. No. It's one of many books. Look, you have just skipped over, for instance, this book, "Achtung! Waffen SS". We sell all different books.

Q. Not all have your name on them, though.

A. We have already covered that ground.

Q. Right. And this book with your name on it, you describe as information-filled pages show[ing] how the Third Reich was really run.

A. But that is what the book is, in essence, with the exception of some of the things {4266|4267} pointed out, I think, in the absence of the jury, if I am not mistaken, some of the posters included in this.

Q. Go ahead.

A. I hardly think a poster dealing with Martin Luther King has to do with the Third Reich. This is the difficulty that we are facing with this book.

Q. All right. Do you agree with the first page?

A. Oh, well, we are going to go through this page by page.

Q. We sure are. Yes./ A. The writer sums up the prevailing opinion of the people at the time when Hitler was in power. He was repeatedly, in plebiscite, selected again and again. First he was democratically elected in 1933 after, for thirteen years for office laying bare his platform. Then, when he was first elected, he was re-affirmed in power. First, I think, in four or five plebiscites usually with percentages somewhere in the neighbourhood of ninety-seven, ninety-eight per cent.

Q. The kind of plebiscite you get in Communist Russia. I mean, those weren't democratic plebiscites, were they, Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, they were, in a way.

Q. You can vote for one person?

A. Well, it is the nature of a plebiscite like a multiple choice questionnaire. You have a choice. You could spoil your ballot or you could vote against Hitler's party, or — that's right. These things were then taken into account and remedial steps were taken {4267|4268} into areas where these National Socialists were encountering a lot of spoiled ballots. So that is the way Germans did things at the time.

Q. So you agree with the first page.

A. In essence, what Thomson has written there would reflect what was the conception at the time, yes.

Q. And you believe that.

A. Yeah.

Q. "At no time in recorded history has a leader, a wielder of power in human terms, not a popular figure-head or celebrity, had such a closeness to his followers, his entire people, as did Adolf Hitler. It can only be called a love relationship.

What, other than love, can explain the German people's glad welcome of this humble, but thoroughly dedicated savior from the Eastern Marches? What, other than love, can explain how the people of Greater Germany remained with him in bad times and good, for better or for worse? What, other than love, can explain the fact that those who remember him love him still?

We loved him because he stood for the best that was in us, and as Our {4268|4269} Leader, demanded of us our best.

It was never Hitler's Germany. It shall always be: Germany's Hitler, the man loved by his people.

This is why we loved him ..."

Have I got that right?

A. You did. This was the viewpoint, Mr. Griffiths, of millions of the majority of German people.

Q. And it's your viewpoint today.

A. Because nobody rose against him.

Q. And it is your viewpoint today.

A. That it reflects accurately the spirit of the times? Yes.

Q. And it is your viewpoint today. That is still how you feel about Hitler.

A. I wasn't there, but certainly the older generation of Germans as, for instance, in this book here called, "Adolf Hitler", translated by a Catholic priest, sold here in Toronto in the world's biggest bookstore, introduction by Rabbi Rosenthal, Ph.D, it exactly portrays the viewpoint of that book, except it is better quality printing with nicer pictures and is texted in by Goebels, Rudolf Hoess and others.

You see, Mr. Griffiths, there is such a thing as truthful history.

Q. It is your viewpoint today, is it not?

A. That Hitler was loved by the Germans? {4269|4270}

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. And you today, still agree with the programmes put forward by Hitler in the nineteen forties, thirties.

A. Where does it say that? It says —

Q. I am asking you that.

A. No. Hitler is a historic figure. He has entered the pages of history. His programme was tailored to the German people. It was formulated in 1921 or '22. We have gone on. Society hasn't stood still. Europe is being united. He was speaking for the Germans of 1918, 1919, 1920, and he did lift the German people up by their bootstraps and, as Winston Churchill said, brought them to a place in the sun in a book called, "The Great Contemporaries", where he devotes twelve pages lauding Adolf Hitler, and so did Sven Hedin (ph), the Swedish writer and novelist.

Q. And so does Ernst Zundel?

A. Ernst Zundel agrees with what page 3 of what this writer summarized about Adolf Hitler.

Q. All right. And you would like to see, in Germany, a return to the values and to the programmes and policies of Adolf Hitler, would you riot?

A. These are your words.

Q. I am asking you.

A. No. Because the times have changed, Mr. Griffiths. We have learned. Errors were made. Nobody can turn back the wheel of history. The {4270|4271} German people would be, certainly after all the brainwashing and the war that they have been through, they would never go back to Hitler with his funny moustache. Media has changed. Maybe today his style wouldn't be accepted, and so on, but if you are asking me about the essence of what that man brought to the German people, which is law, order, work, honesty, honour, yes.

Q. Integrity of the race?

A. Yes.

Q. Nationalism, German nationalism.

A. I think I just answered that. I am not a vertical nationalist of the 1919s and the 1920s. I came to Canada. I have lived here for twenty-five years. I married a French-Canadian girl. The friends that come with me today are drawn from every nationalities on the globe. So don't try to put words in my mouth and attach things which do not belong to me.

Q. So you are not a German nationalist today.

A. I'm not, no.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Could that be Exhibit "AA", Your Honour? I will be submitting it ultimately.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, we have discussed that, and I think we will discuss it again.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT "AA" (For Identification): Pamphlet entitled, "Achtung! Samisdat Truth Squad". {4271|4272}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Before I move to a new subject, Your Honour

THE COURT: Members of the jury, please don't come to any conclusions until this case is totally finished and in your hands. Please don't discuss the case. Please keep an open mind.

Tomorrow morning at nine-thirty.

— The jury retires. 4:35 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 22, 1985.

FEBRUARY 22, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

— The jury enters. 9:35 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

ERNST ZUNDEL, previously sworn.

CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Zundel, I am showing to you {4272|4273} a four-page article called, "Samisdat Kampf Tips", which is in German.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And can you tell me if you can identify that?

A. Yes. I wrote that in 1980, August 20th.

Q. That's the date on there, is it not?

A. That's right. Mm-hmm.

Q. And was that directed to people here in Canada or to people in other countries?

A. In West Germany, largely, but some people also in America.

THE COURT: A little louder, please.

THE WITNESS: In West Germany clearly, Asia, Switzerland, the West German-speaking of the world.

Q. When it says, "Samisdat Kampf Tips", can you translate that, please?

A. It means "Samisdat Struggle Tips".

Q. And at the bottom of the page, again in German, there is a brief signed note with your name at the end of it.

A. That's right.

Q. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Can you read that to us, please?

A. In German?

Q. No. In English. An English trial as His Honour has told.

A. You want me to translate it for {4273|4274} you?

Q. I have a translation here. Perhaps you could take a minute, compare the two, and tell me if it's accurate.

A. Yes, I recognize this. This came from the postal hearing in Ottawa.

Q. Is that accurate?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Could you read that, then, please?

A. "Foreword [Forward] Germans — the others have begun their retreat. Everywhere in the world, Anglo American style capitalism is on the way out. The old, unnatural alliance of yesterday seems to be breaking up. New, natural power blocs, such as China, not based on money, tanks or rockets but on the power of work, threaten to put an end to the old 'isms'. Germany's time has come. At last the ideals of our fathers will be realized all over the world. America's power has come to an end.

The Jewish world conspirators find themselves on the defensive and are only capable of noisy rearguard action. European communism is shaky. There is ferment in Poland, Romania and in the Soviet Union. We will soon get our chance. {4274|4275} We must hold our ground, wait for our turn and strike at the right moment. Do not despair. Nature and time are on our side.
Ernst Zundel."

And it advertises a little badge. Another one of —

A. Zundel pins, yes.

Q. "At last the ideals of our fathers will be realized all over the world." What does that mean?

A. As it says quite clearly here:

"power blocs, such as China, not based on money, tanks or rockets, but on the power of work, threaten to put an end to the old 'isms'."

Capitalism, Bolshevism, communism, Zionism are dying.

Q. And "the ideals of our fathers" only refers to ideals of work and not ideals of Hitler?

A. You are talking about my father's ideals?

Q. Well, I think you are referring generally to the fathers of German people.

A. Yes.

Q. Which in 1980 I take to be people from the thirties.

A. Mr. Griffiths, the Germans in Europe are known as the powerhouse of Europe, and just like there was at one time in this country something called the Wasp ethic, in Europe we have the German ethic, which is usually based on hard work, frugality {4275|4276} honesty and at one time it was also honourable behaviour, honour. Now, these were the components of Germany's national ethic. That is what we were known for.

Q. All right.

A. That's why goods, for instance, made in Germany had such a good reputation.

Q. Nationalism, then, is apart of that ethic, German nationalism.

A. If you are talking in the context of the thirties, and if you want to keep harping away at nationalism, I don't see anything wrong with somebody being proud of his ethnic background and heritage. In Canada we make a fetish about it. We talk about the two founding races, French Canadians and English Canadians. We have the Multi-culturalism Ministry which is to encourage the ethnic heritage of people, and I will tell you, whether you like it or not, we Germans are entitled to represent and to see our history represented by ourselves the way we know it from eye witnesses, the way I know it from eye witnesses, not only through the eyes of some Jewish writers.

Q. Thank you, Mr. Zundel.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could that translation be an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT "BB" (For Identification): German pamphlet with English translation, "Samisdat Kampf Tips" {4276|4277}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Zundel, you have told us that you published Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" Can you tell us when you started publishing that?

A. I re-printed an English publication in the Soviet process, adding the first sheet, I believe. I didn't bring my own copy. May I look for a moment.

Q. Yes. I have some marks in there but I don't mind if you see them.

A. The body of the text ties every picture. I re-printed in total from an English magazine, whatever, thirty-two pages that it was. I added different graphics on the front cover, in that I added, "Truth At Last Exposed". I added this page, this page, this page and this page. The rest was taken over in the Soviet process in total. Not a comma was changed or anything.

Q. Well, if I use the wrong word, my question was whether you published this and when you published it.

A. I had it printed, I think it was the beginning of the eighties.

Q. All right. There is in your article on the back page, there is a reference to a newspaper article indicating the British Columbia Attorney General, and there is a date there, November 22, 1979.

A. Yes. It could be a reaction by the time I wrote the stuff, found a printer to print it, it could have been January '80, '81.

Q. And how long did you publish it {4277|4278} for?

A. I published two editions for it.

Q. And when did you stop publishing?

A. Oh, 1981, '82. The last edition was rather large, and so I just kept selling that.

THE COURT: A little louder, pleas.

THE WITNESS: The last edition, it was one of the large ones, so I had lots left.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And how much would you sell this for?

A. I sold very few of them. I think $2 or $3. The rest of them I sent to members of Parliament, all members of Parliament, all the Ministers in various governments of Canada. I sent it to every Catholic priest in Ontario, every Protestant Ministry in Ontario, every Catholic priest in the Province of Quebec, to all radio stations, T.V. stations, newspaper editors, and I think to every history professor that taught history in high schools in Ontario.

Q. All right. And the pamphlet is said to be written by Richard Harwood.

A. That's right.

Q. That's a pen[ ] name, isn't it?

A. Yes. His real name, I found out, was Verral[ ].

Q. Richard Verral[ ]?

A. Yes.

Q. And when did you find that out?

A. I think Dr. Faurisson told me in {4278|4279} 1982, '83. But the booklet itself, Mr. Griffiths, I wanted to add to this, has quite a history.

Apparently Professor David Hogan originally drafted the booklet, and it was submitted to a publisher who didn't want to publish it, and then it found its way to England, and Richard Verral[ ] relied heavily on the material by Professor Hogan.

Q. You must have contacted Richard Varrel [sic], Richard Harwood, whatever his name is, in England to get copies of this.

A. I did?

Q. Yes.

A. No. I contacted the publisher called Historical Review Press.

Q. Historical Review Press. Is that any relationship to the group in California?

A. I have no idea if there is any kind of corporate connection or not, but these are the people that I dealt with, and interestingly enough, I naturally addressed myself to Richard Harwood, and back came correspondence signed, "Richard Harwood" over two or three years.

Q. Do you know who Richard Varrel [sic] is?

A. Richard Varrel [sic] was, so I am told, I never met him personally, I have had one letter from him, I asked him to come and be a witness at this trial. He says he has dropped political work. He has married a Jewish girl, and he wants, to have nothing to do with the political scene any more. He said the people that published this booklet didn't pay him enough and he is {4279|4280} currently in litigation for the money that he was supposed to get for that booklet.

Q. All right. And before he dropped his political activity do you know what that political activity was?

A. I have no idea, Mr. Griffiths, at all. He was, apparently, though, a graduate student of one of London's universities in history.

Q. So before publishing this, distributing and printing it, you didn't contact the author and discuss the matter with him?

A. No, I did not. I thought that the publisher, as I think I have said previously, I first imported the booklet from these people in England, but they were very tardy in deliveries. They didn't wrap the parcels well enough. They were sent by surface mail, which means by ship. They came to Canada in such horrible condition that I couldn't sell them and had to give them away.

Then I found a source in the United States. I bought them from there for a little while because you see, Mr. Griffiths, I did not have a printing press at that time, and even now I have a very small Gestetner-type printing press that allows me to print these cheap news letters that you have showed to me. I have not the capacity in my shop to print booklets.

Q. And the source of the publication in the United States, is that the Historical Review?

A. In the beginning, yes.

Q. And the booklets, the first shipment that you got that was damaged, was there a {4280|4281} letter reprinted in those from Albert Speer?

A. No, I don't recall anything like that.

Q. All right. On page 4 – we are just going to go through this; it might take a little while, but there are a number of things in here I want to ask you about, and I'm sorry I have to use my marked up copy.

A. All right. At lunchtime I will bring my own.

Q. Page 4, column one, the first paragraph, "Introduction", the author says:

"A great deal of careful research into this question, however, has now convinced me beyond any doubt that the allegation is not merely an exaggeration but an invention of post-war propaganda."

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. Do I agree with the allegation is largely an invention of post-war propaganda?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir. I certainly do.

Q. All right. And on "The Race Problem Suppressed" well, there's two things here. The author goes on to say in the introduction, and you correct me if I am wrong, that part of the purpose of publishing this piece is because nationalism was being discouraged and the race problem was being suppressed. Is that a fair representation? {4281|4282}

A. Well, that is what Mr. Varrel [sic] said in his book, yes.

Q. All right. And was that part of the reason why you wanted to print it, because nationalism was being suppressed – I'm sorry, race problem was being suppressed and nationalism was being discouraged?

A. No. That refers typically to Britain. He said, should the people of Britain or any other country suppress their nationalism, blah, blah, blah, especially addressing himself to a British problem where they have a very strict, I forget what they call it, but it is race control laws, or something like that. It's a human rights organization, and writers in England constantly chafe under this particular thing. It hangs over them like a Democlin [Damoclean] Sword. It's a law in England that they have there, you see. And so he addresses himself to this. But I think that I understand what you are trying to elicit from me, and I will be happy to try and tell you this.

I had written, before I published this booklet to the publishers in England and asked them if I could change the format of this magazine, I would have liked to put it out in pocketbook version that people could read on the subway or while they are driving to work, because I find this rather not very handy, although it is nice, it is small. I would prefer things in this size, you see, and they would not give me permission, because apparently the publications had been rated, in other words. The publishing house had bad experiences with people cutting out the booklet, putting {4282|4283} it together, and printing smaller versions and so on. So I had the choice of not publishing it at all, or publishing it exactly in the photo offset method that I did, not touching a thing.

Q. All right.

A. Oh, and the letter of Speer I don't quite understand. Are you saying there was a letter by Speer re-produced in one of these books, or was it coming with the book?

Q. I am asking you if you saw a letter of Speer re-produced in one of the books.

A. No. Maybe there was an earlier edition that I didn't see, but this is the one that I had. This is the one that I reproduced.

Q. All right. "The Race Problem Suppressed", again at the start of the paragraph.

A. Right.

Q. "One could scarcely miss the object of this diatribe, ..." referring, I think, to Pandit Nehru ...

A. Yes. The one we have already quoted.

Q. "... with its insidious [sic] hint about 'multi-racial partnership'. Thus the accusation of the Six Million is not only used to undermine the principle of nationhood and national pride, but it threatens the survival of the Race itself."

Do you agree with that?

A. Again, you have to see it in {4283|4284} the context. He is a British writer, and he is obviously possibly of the generation that was still imbued with empires, or dream of empires, and here was a man, a coloured man in India who had yanked away India from the Empire, and he is telling the English how intolerant they were to the Indians. That is what Nehru said, and he doesn't like it. So he reacts with hostility towards it.

Q. My question, sir, is whether you agree with it.

A. I can understand him.

Q. "Thus the accusation of the Six Million is not only used to undermine the principle of nationhood and national pride, but it threatens the survival of the Race itself."

Do you agree with that?

A. That part of the sentence – oh, the accusation – the separate sentence. Yes, that separate sentence you can certainly see that the Zionists are manipulating this Holocaust, in quotes, the whole concept that encompasses the Holocaust to this effect, yes.

Q. So that the Holocaust threatens the survival, and it is a capital "R" racism; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So I guess it would be important for you and for the survival of the race that the Holocaust be denied.

A. Not that the Holocaust be denied, {4284|4285} you know. What we are doing is, through, I think, some pretty dedicated competent research, and I think if anything this trial has brought some people to the stand, for instance they talked about chemistry and so on, and crematoriums and also some of the methods used in Nuremberg, what we are trying to do is to bring the balance back into the picture, because every time that somebody wants to discuss, let's say that somebody wants to be proud of what he calls his race, trotting out comes the allegation of genocide and the rest of it.

I have listened to many speeches in the United Nations, for instance, where the Holocaust is frequently used by countries from the Third World to make all the other white nations sitting in the United Nations almost responsible, just like in this little book here called, "While Six Million Died", a chronicle of American apathy. Now, here is President Roosevelt, one of the greatest friends of the Jews, painted as if he allowed the doom of European Jewry, and in the next page what we see is England accused in the same way. There is a book out that accuses Canadians for not having done enough in the Holocaust. Everybody has to be made to feel guilty by the Zionist writers, because they didn't do enough to save the Jews, and they had the nerve to look after their national interest. So the Holocaust is being used today as a weapon of intimidation of politicians and media people. Of course it is.

Q. All right. And it threatens the survival of the Race itself?

A. If we allow it to continue it will, {4285|4286} Mr. Griffiths.

Q. So it must be stopped.

A. No. It must be explained, and then it will turn out that these people are using a most vicious hangover of the Second World War, a propaganda lie, to continuously keep us morally in the defensive, politically in the defensive, and they are not entitled to a copyright on our emotions.

Q. All right.

A. And on our goodwill.

Q. And the "us" you are referring to is what, white people, Germans, both?

A. All the people of the world are victimized by their lying propaganda – black, brown, green, coloured, Chinese, Japanese. The Diary of Anne Frank has been translated into fifty-two languages. A film has been made in the Japanese language about it. They are victimized.

Q. You said numerous times to Mr. Christie in the last couple of days that I think the phrase that you used was, first you believed in the Holocaust, and then you had a doubt, and then you researched it, and then you came to find that it was a hoax. Am I paraphrasing that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And as I understood you, your doubts were firmed up in the sixties, in the early sixties, and that is when you first began writing letters.

A. That's right.

Q. And did that coincide with your {4286|4287} relationship, and I mean that one in the sense of friendship – nothing improper – friendship with Mr. Arcand.

A. Yes. He was one of the competent men I realized that he tried to bring it, and I want to bring out who Mr. Arcand was. Mr. Arcand was a French Canadian man, one of the finest men in a regiment in Canada. He had at one time been the editor of "La Presse" in Montreal. His family had been here for some three hundred years, and he was a familiar figure in the Province of Quebec.

Q. What party? Christian National Socialist Party?

A. No. At one time in the middle thirties that is what it was called, and then it was involved in the National Unity of Canada, and as its emblem he had a beaver, because the ethic he wanted to project was the busy beaver.

Q. The beaver on top of the Swastika surrounded by maple leaves [sic]?

A. That's possible. So Mr. Arcand had been in concentration camps in Canada for six and a half years.

Q. He was interned as a Nazi during the War; is that right?

A. Mr. Griffiths, he was a Canadian officer. He was not properly charged. He was not properly tried. After six and a half years of no charge, no proper trial, but no restitution for his six and a half years; and even if you say he was a Nazi, what happened to all the constitutional freedoms and freedoms that people are supposed to enjoy in this country? {4287|4288}

Q. Was he not charged and had a preliminary hearing?

A. He had one of the wartime kangaroo operations, the way they were done in operation in England under the 18B Regulations, and the way it was undoubtedly done to the Japanese. Now, you wanted to know my relationship with Mr. Arcand. I will be happy to tell you about him.

He was a great Canadian. He spoke eight languages, one of them being German, and he made available to me books, speeches, articles which I had never seen before and never had access to. And he allowed me to study these books from his library. I had no other way of obtaining those things, especially not in German. Remember, it was in the early sixties when I was beginning to learn English and French. And I am not embarrassed by having known this great Canadian. He was a very good man.

Q. One of the policies of this party, of the Canadian party that he was the head of, this grand Canadian, was that Jews should be denied citizenship and deported from the country.

A. Well, that happens to be the same thing in the State of Israel with the Palestinians.

Q. Is that right, sir?

A. With the Palestinians.

Q. Is that right, sir? Was that the platform of his party?

A. That's possible.

Q. And the books and speeches were from the library of national socialist literature? {4288|4289}

A. No. There were books by Sven Hedin from Sweden [sic], books by Admiral Sir Barry Domeville (ph) [Domville] called, "From Admiral to Cabin Boy" by another British Member of Parliament, Francis D Nielsen (ph), and of course, there were some German books of the period, and some speeches by Adolf Hitler, you are correct.

Q. And he introduced you to some collaborators with the Nazi regime around the world? You made your contacts in the sixties?

A. Well, he wrote a letter of introduction for me. When I went to England, for instance, to meet Admiral Sir Barry Domeville, [sic] who had been imprisoned in England under the 18B Regulation and had been demoted from Admiral to cabin boy.

Q. And Sir Oswald Bosley? [Mosley]

A. No.

Q. And he was your mentor to your confused mind at the time?

A. No. What he helped me see was that there were people in all parts of the world – Canadians, Americans, Britishers, Spaniards, Italians, who all felt and had written and had studied the Second World War and did not think that the Germans were the ogres that the official propaganda had made them out to be. So he gave a balance of an imbalanced viewpoint, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. We are back to the Samisdat Truth Squad. Achtung, Exhibit "AA". I am just looking here, although it's not the best copy, unfortunately, a reference to – it is cut off at the top. {4289|4290}

A. Do you want me to read that?

Q. Please. This is a tape that you sell. It was tape No. 38, to my recollection. It is cut off at the top.

A. Yes.

Q. And it's from Adrian Arcand's funeral in 1967?

A. That's right.

Q. And could you read us that promotional piece?

A. Part of it is cut off at the top, and it says:

"Canada's legendary nationalist leader. Hear this solemn moment of history, the music and the moving oration. Listen to the surprised reaction of the crowd as they witness nuns and priests giving the National Socialist salute as the coffin is being lowered. Adrian Arcand's confidant and protege the last nine years of his life was Christof Friedrich who discusses retrospectively [sic] the events, the political ideas and the circumstances which made Adrian Arcand one of Canada's greatest leaders and statesmen and one of Canada's [sic] greatest missed opportunities to reverse the ongoing trend of defeat, retreat and disintegration. Listen {4290|4291} to the story of a great man who suffered the tragedy of being far ahead of his time, the man whom Life Magazine devoted a ten-page feature article, calling him 'The 'Eagle of the North'."

Q. And Christof Friedrich, the protege for the last nine years of his life, was you.

A. That's right. This flyer was put out in 1976, '77, when I was using that name.

Q. When you were using that name. All right. Now, if we can go back to Exhibit No. I. Have you got a copy now of Exhibit I?

A. I think it's your copy that you left me.

Q. No. It's the court copy. Page 6. I'd like to ask you about that. And under Chapter 2 there is a heading, "Detention of Enemy Aliens".

A. Right.

Q. And the pamphlet explains the policy of why Jews were being detained, and it says, "Chaim Weizmann. He declared war on Germany". Have I got that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And was there a Jewish Army during the War?

A. There came one into being called The Jewish Brigade who fought under England, and it is mentioned that they murdered Germans roaming Europe towards the end of hostilities. And there is quite a chapter devoted to the Jewish Brigade, but — {4291|4292}

Q. When did the Jewish Brigade come into existence?

A. 1944. And then I have here – let me just see here. It's The Daily Express of London, Friday, March 24, 1933, big headline, "Judea declares war on Germany. Jews of all the world unite. Boycott of German goods." And they are calling for mass demonstrations and so on. We have already talked —

Q. I'm sorry, what was the date of that?

A. It was March 24, 1933, Mr. Griffiths, a few months after Hitler came to power, when the German Army fitted into a football field.

Q. I've got March. I didn't get the year, sorry.

A. 1933.

Q. And what were Hitler's policies towards Jews?

A. At that time?

Q. When they came into power.

A. At that time no policies had been formulated. The Nuremberg Laws did not exist, and already propaganda in Europe had been at fever pitch, as evidenced by the book called, "Atrocity Propaganda Based on Lies", a book by the Jewish publisher Jacow Trachtenberg. It's a trilingual book in which he denounces the anti-German hate propaganda that was then going on by other Zionist leaders making life difficult for Jews in Germany.

Q. Was he a Zionist leader? {4292|4293}

A. Trachtenberg? It is possible that he was, because there was a close relationship between Zionists and Nazis.

Q. Was it in 1945 [1935] that the Nuremberg Laws were passed in Germany?

A. That's right.

Q. And what did the Laws have to do about the integrity of the German race that should be maintained?

A. They were the same kind of laws that Israel adopted in 1948 when it became a State.

Q. I am asking you about the Nuremberg Laws of 1935.

A. I am saying to you I don't know them chapter and verse right now, but they believe in disengaging the Jewish population of Germany from Germany. That was one of their goals. And one of their advisors for it, so my friend Ginsberg tells me, was the Zionist leader C.O. Beck.

Q. So it was to disenfranchise the Jews.

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. Took away their citizenship.

A. I think they had a passport, but they had a "J" in it.

Q. And they could no longer vote or hold public office. They were not citizens any more.

A. Similar to the Palestinians in Israel.

Q. They weren't citizens any more.

A. My answer is the same. They were {4293|4294} just like Palestinians are second-class citizens in Israel. So these German Jews were second-class citizens of Germany, yes.

Q. My question, Mr. Zundel, is – we don't know what the situation is with the Palestinians in Israel ...

A. I do.

Q. May be a good analysis. My question to you is whether or not the Jews remained citizens after 1935, or whether they were disenfranchised.

A. They were disenfranchised. They couldn't practise law except in Jewish courts. They could not teach in German universities except in Jewish schools. There was a flourishing education where even Henry Kissinger got a diploma.

Q. And they couldn't vote or have any of the rights of citizens.

A. Well, their pension claims for instance, were held intact. They got their army pensions. They were allowed to wear their First World War medals, but if you are saying were they allowed to be full citizens that they could run for local mayor, councilmen, no, they were not.

Q. And is that the same plan Adrien Arcand had for Canadian Jews?

A. Arcand never formulated that, to my knowledge. I wasn't interested in what Arcand did before the War, and if that sounds strange to you, it is the truth, because it is past history, Mr. Griffiths. He had offered himself to the Canadians. He had a good following in Quebec. The rest of Canada didn't follow {4294|4295} him, so he had passed into history.

Q. All right. Page 7 of the book, column 2, and above where it says, "Population and Emigration", there is a long paragraph that begins, "Even as late as May 1944".

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And in that long paragraph is discussed one Joel Brand.

A. Right.

Q. A German book is referred to about Joel Brand. Do you know anything about Joel Brand?

A. Yes, I do. Yes.

Q. And was he involved in negotiations with Hitler to save Hungarian Jewry?

A. Not with Hitler.

Q. I'm sorry, with Eichmann.

A. Yes. He was sent by Eichmann to go to, I believe it was Israel via Turkey and Syria, was intercepted at the Turkish border, was held for a while, managed to negotiate his way out, finally made it to Palestine, was arrested in Palestine, and spent the rest of the war years in Cairo in detention, in British detention.

Q. All right. Now, the proposition that Joel Brand was making, as I understand it, through intermediaries with Eichmann, was trucks for Jews.

A. That's right.

Q. Towards the end of the War in 1944. And Eichmann was offering to free Jews for military material.

A. Four hundred thousand, I believe {4295|4296} it was.

Q. Well, it says here, I think, a million.

A. Oh, a million. There you go.

Q. And my question to you is whether that was referring to Hungarian Jewry.

A. Well, if he was offering a million Jews, he must have drawn upon others, because I never heard that there were a million Jews in Hungary.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

A. And the deal, apparently – I have read the Joel Brand story from various angles, and apparently the deal was, the Zionists were very interested in that, because it would have meant a terrific influx of Jews into Palestine, rather quickly, but the Western leaders were against it because they were afraid that suddenly the German Army would have ten thousand American army trucks transporting more troops to the front, so they would rather not save the Jews. That's the charge made many times, because they wanted to deny the Germans the army trucks.

It was the end of the War. The German leadership was desperate, and in Europe it is not uncommon, Mr. Griffiths, you see. In the context of this book and the way you put it, it seems terrible, but the East German Government today regularly negotiates the release of prisoners with West Germany for various sums and various commodity arrangements and so on. It is a form of exchange that governments sometimes do.

Q. Thank you. Still page 7, Chambers {4296|4297} Encyclopaedia: "According to Chambers Encyclopaedia the total number of Jews living in pre-war Europe was 6,500,000."

And that is under the "Population and Emigration", second paragraph here. Now, is that a source that you checked before distributing this pamphlet?

A. I had a photocopy of it, but you see, the numbers came – it is interesting – there are so many statistics, Mr. Griffiths. I mean, there are books written, and Butz has got the numbers in his book about the dissolution of European Jewry; we have the Collins book about the Soviet Union and a vast number of Jews moving east of the Germans, that the Polish Jews moved to Russia when Poland was divided, and so on.

Q. Wouldn't you agree that when you do the numbers game you should quote them accurately?

A. Remember what I was working. I could not change a dot or iota in the booklet. I had to take what I considered was a very good, well-put-together, small booklet, in total or not at all.

Q. All right. So is it fair to say that you knew that that wasn't accurate?

MR. CHRISTIE: I object to that.

THE WITNESS: It was.

MR. CHRISTIE: I object. The Chambers Encyclopaedia article is in evidence, and it is not accurate to say it is a misquote of the number. It is obvious and can be argued what the consequences of {4297|4298} re-interpreting words in pre-war Europe mean, but it is not correct to say that it is a false number. I have read it with my own eyes, and I would object to my friend saying that it is a false number.

THE COURT: The jury has heard both sides. Go ahead.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Is it fair to say, Mr. Zundel, that you knew that this wasn't an accurate representation of what was in the Chambers Encyclopaedia, but in the over-all context of the article you thought that was a small error and it was, in effect, a falsehood?

A. I thought it was a matter of interpretation, you see, and context, just like the race thing in the beginning is in context, just like the truck deal that you, I feel, think was such a horrible, callous gesture —

Q. I didn't say anything about it.

A. — by the Germans. I wish that the British had gone for the truck deal, and then I am sure that many of the Jewish people who had died at the end of the War because the deal didn't go through would be with us today.

Q. Page 9, column two under the heading, "Fantastic Exaggerations", the first sentence there says:

"So far as is known, the first accusation against the Germans of the mass murder of Jews in wartime Europe was made by the Polish Jew Rafael Lemkin in his book 'Axis {4298|4299} Rule in Occupied Europe', published in New York in 1943."

That isn't true, is it? I mean, the London Charter was December 1942 where the Allies called upon the Germans to stop mistreating the Jews?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, when I was repeatedly interrupted in my cross-examination, it was repeatedly brought to my attention that I shouldn't give evidence. I wonder if the same principles might be directed to my learned friend. If he wishes to put the London Charter to the witness, I have no objection.

THE COURT: Crown counsel can make a suggestion to the witness concerning the date, if any, of the London Charter. Put it to him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Was the London Charter December of 1942, Mr. Zundel?

A. Have you got it here? Can you show it to me?

Q. Do you know?

THE COURT: Mr. Zundel, answer the questions. Don't ask questions.

THE WITNESS: I don't know about the London Charter at this moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you know of any accusations against the Germans of mass murder of Jews before 1943?

A. If you say it was in the London Charter, I believe you, because I don't think you would be lying here in this Court. So it must have been. {4299|4300}

Q. Well, do you know of any other accusations? We've had a hundred exhibits here, material that you've read, and there was something about mass murder in Dachau that was alleged, a book in 1934.

A. Oh, yes, but not the mass murder. It was talking about the murder of Jews. There is a difference. When you talk about genocide of an entire people, Mr. Griffiths, that takes on different proportions. If you talk about the murder of individual Jews, we have had stories about that already in 1933 and '34.

Q. You read "The Hoax of The Twentieth Century" before you published that booklet?

A. In the German version, yes.

Q. In the German version. All right. And we have the English version here. Does it talk, in "The Hoax of The Twentieth Century", about the Riegner telegram being sent out of Geneva in 1942?

A. Yes, to the President of the United States.

Q. That's right. The Riegner telegram.

A. Well, it's a mass murder, you see. That's the difference.

Q. I see. You made that distinction before you distributed this?

A. No, I didn't make that distinction, but I think it is an important distinction if you accuse Germans of murdering Jews in concentration camps. As we know, people were beaten to death by kapos and political prisoners and so on, but the major propaganda campaign, from what I understand it, started in the middle of the War. And you know, what {4300|4301} you say, 1942, is pretty well the middle of the War.

I don't know when Rafael Lemkin's book came out in 1943. He must have written it in 1942, so maybe you are correct.

Q. I am not trying to trick you here, I am suggesting to you that you knew at this time that there were earlier allegations than '43. If you didn't know, please tell me.

A. No. Of a smaller number of murders, yes, but the mass murder is something else.

Q. All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could the Clerk provide me with the London Charter, Your Honour? I am trying to check the date. I believe it is in evidence.

THE COURT: She will try.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. It's Exhibit 134.

I think my friend has misled the witness. If my notes are correct, the Charter of London is August 8th, 1945.

COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. When Mr. Christie is ready.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am correct. London Charter, 8th of August, 1945.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is not the one I am referring to, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it's referred to as the Charter of London. I don't understand this statement of my friend, then. I don't know of any other {4301|4302} Charter of London, I'm sorry, Your Honour. And I think I have a right to make that point, because it seems to me that's what my friend was putting to my client.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour —

THE COURT: Members of the jury, excuse us, please.

— The jury retires. 10:25 a.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, from here on in, you will catch my attention and not say anything until I give you permission to interrupt cross-examination. Do you understand? And please stand up.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I understand that the right —

THE COURT: Then you will do it. Now, please sit down.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour —

THE COURT: You have plenty of opportunity to re-examine. Do not interrupt. That was an uncalled-for interruption. You will cease and desist.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to put {4302|4303} on the record, Your Honour —

THE COURT: Put it on the record.

MR. CHRISTIE: — at this moment, my understanding of the right of counsel during cross-examination.

My understanding is that it is the right of defence counsel, in the cross-examination of the witnesses of the defence and the right of Crown counsel in the cross-examination of witnesses for the Crown to object if improper statements of fact are made to a witness, and it is put to him that such and such is a fact when it is not the fact. That is what I understand to be misleading a witness.

I have been in many courts of law in which that has been regarded as a serious offence of counsel. It apparently is not Your Honour's view, but nonetheless, if on occasion my learned friend should put to a witness that the Charter of London was in December of 1942 and my understanding of that term, and as it is listed as the Charter of London Agreement of August 8th, 1945, to the International Military Tribunal, which is in evidence here, Exhibit 134, then I would like the opportunity, as any other counsel would have, {4303|4304} to rise and object, to then ask the Registrar to produce the exhibit to examine it, as I have sought to do.

If Your Honour is directing me, and I think you are, not to object at any point during the cross-examination, then I certainly shall not do so. You have told me that, and I will not do so.

THE COURT: I have not told you that. I have indicated that you will stand up and get my attention before you interrupt a cross-examination.

Now, that's number one. Number two, it was the 1942 or '43 London Conference that he was referring to and not the London Charter. You know it, he knows it and I know it.

MR. CHRISTIE: He referred to, Your Honour, the London Charter. I heard him say those words.

THE COURT: Then perhaps you might have had the good courtesy to stand up and catch my attention, and when you do, if I consider your standing up on the point worthy, don't worry, your rights of your client will be protected.

In the meantime, please sit down and let's get on with this. {4304|4305}

MR. CHRISTIE: May I say, Your Honour, that I would like the opportunity, when I stand up —

THE COURT: You will get it if it is worthy. If not, you can appeal it.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I finish my sentence?

THE COURT: No. Please sit down. You have interrupted long enough.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to put on record that if I am in the process of phrasing an objection, I be allowed to do so.
 THE COURT: You may do it with my permission.
 MR. CHRISTIE: How do I get your permission?
 THE COURT: I shall watch you every step of the way. You will.
 MR. CHRISTIE: I am sure Your Honour is. Do I speak when I stand up?
 THE COURT: You will catch my attention and I will give you permission or not, as I choose, to speak. {4305|4306}
 MR. CHRISTIE: Then I will remain silent when I stand until Your Honour gives me permission to speak.
 THE COURT: Please do.
 MR. CHRISTIE: I am in the habit of speaking when I rise to object.
 THE COURT: You will speak when I give you permission to speak.
 MR. CHRISTIE: These rules will be understood, Your Honour.
 THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.

— The jury returns. 10:30 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Zundel, before the jury left Mr. Christie pointed out that the London Charter was in August of 1945, and I apologize. It's the London Conference I am talking about, if you were confused.

A. I was a little confused. We call {4306|4307} that in German Statute of London.

Q. Well, now, the London Conference of December 1942, are you aware of that?

A. Well, it was a discussion where the Allies were nailing down what line they were going to use against the Germans in the propaganda. And that was one of the components that the extermination of Jews was going to be one of the propaganda point.

Q. Did they call on the Germans to do anything [sic] at that time that you are aware of?

A. Well, from what I remember, they were told if they didn't stop mistreating the Jews, they were going to get the wrath of the world on their neck, in summation.

Q. Were you aware, did you think of that conference when you read that sentence?

A. No. I thought he was talking about books, books or stuff like that.

Q. Column 2, still on page nine, second last paragraph dealing with Mr. Gerstein:

"Gerstein alleged that during the war he passed on information concerning the murder of Jews to the Swedish Government through a German baron, but for some inexplicable reason his report was 'filed away and forgotten'."

Are you aware at the time this was printed that he had spoken to the British diplomat, Baron von Otter (ph)?

A. I had read it in some German books, yes. And then, later on, Dr. Faurisson explained {4307|4308} to me that the whole Baron von Otter-Gerstein statement was rather convoluted, and there are some doubts still as to whether he did or didn't.

Q. All right. Page 12, column — we are now in the Nuremberg Trials and the comment of the pamphlet on the Nuremberg Trials. Column one, it's not a complete paragraph, it's the first paragraph, and it's below the heavy type there. It says:

"Most incredible of all, perhaps, was the fact that defence lawyers at Nuremberg were not permitted to cross-examine prosecution witnesses."

You studied this matter. Who was not permitted to cross-examine?

A. In the National Archives, which was introduced into evidence yesterday, mentioned that very fact, that about fifty per cent of the people, that some of the lawyers, depending on which judge it was, could not be cross-examined. You will see that in Mr. Mendelson's article.

Q. Mr. Mendelson's article. What is that?

A. The National Archives.

Q. Do you remember the name of the article?

A. National Archives something or another. I can find it. It's by the President, head of the National Archives Division. It's the very last paragraph. Also there was one more case where a German defence attorney —

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie. {4308|4309}

MR. CHRISTIE: If it is of any assistance to my friend, I believe it is Exhibit 131.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is of enormous assistance, yes, Mr. Christie.

Q. "Prologue", the Journal of the National Archives, Winter 1975.

A. He is talking about documents rather than defendants. There was one instance in the blue series, I think we covered it early in the trial, when a witness was in Nuremberg. The defence knew that he was in Nuremberg. It could have been in the Oswald Pohl case. And he was not produced. Defence counsel asked him to be produced, and it turns out that he was denied by some legal manouvre [sic] that this witness was produced, even though he was in Nuremberg that time.

Q. Well, I am going to suggest to you there was something earlier in the proceeding, an affidavit, I think, by a William Hoettl.

A. I know what you are talking about. Right.

Q. Is that the one you are thinking about?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was the affidavit that was subsequently withdrawn and not used by the prosecution the next day, was it not?

A. It's possible. I'm not an attorney or prosecutor. You thrive on those things. I really don't, honestly, but this talks about —

Q. Documents. {4309|4310}

A. — the difficulties, yes, of having documents denied. Nearly half the documents asked for were denied when the prosecution objected, you see.

Q. Were there any other witnesses that you can think of that were not produced, or that gave evidence in-chief and that the defence could not cross-examine?

A. Well, there were three hundred thousand — there were some three hundred thousand depositions, affidavits and things like that made available to Nuremberg, and very few eye witnesses were produced there.

Q. Well, very few of those depositions were prosecution depositions, weren't they? Weren't a lot of those defence depositions?

A. There is a dispute about that, who would rule upon these affidavits more heavily and who did not, you know.

Q. I see.

A. So it depends on which side's history you read. But this is about documents.

Q. That's about documents. All right.

A. So there was the Hoettl incident came to my mind.

Q. All right. Any others?

A. Not offhand, no.

Q. No. All right. So do you think that's fair, what Harwood or Varrel [sic] or whatever his name is here, when he says: {4310|4311}

"Most incredible of all, perhaps, was the fact that defence lawyers at Nuremberg were not permitted to cross-examine prosecution witnesses."

A. I think, Mr. Griffiths, I want to explain something to you which I think is relevant to this. To the German nation the Nuremberg War Crimes Trials were a traumatic experience, and we in Germany, when we talk about all the war crimes trials — now, I know that legal minds like yours and lawyers in this court, you make distinctions between IMT, Dachau and Linsberg [Landsberg] and all kinds of trials. To the German nation, the Nuremberg war crimes trials, when we talk about it in history, about our own people's history, Nuremberg is all-encompassing, so there might very well have been other cases.

At this moment while I am standing here and being somewhat nervous, I cannot remember it. Honestly.

Q. All right. So do you think that's fair what you said there, based on your knowledge?

A. When we look at the overall complex of Nuremberg and the lawlessness, the torture and so on, I wouldn't be surprised at all if that was the case, yes, because you see, the Allies were in charge of the prison camps. The Allies were in charge of the prisoners. There were cases that I have read in German literature where the defence knew that there were witnesses in certain prisoner of war camps. They wanted to produce them. When they finally were permitted to produce them, suddenly, magically, the {4311|4312} the prisoners had been transferred to another prison camp, and then yet to another prison camp, and by then the opportunity to present them was lost. This was not unique. This is according to Rudolf A[s]chenauer and some of Dr. Zeidl (ph) [Seidl] and some of these defence lawyers. They have written about these things in the German language.

Q. And the trials – or you don't know which ones they are?

A. We talk about in Nuremberg, to us, the whole complex of the war crime scene, when we talk about the Nuremberg Trials, we talk about the tragedy of the Nuremberg, the shame of the Nuremberg. We don't talk about the tragedy of the IMT or the shame of the IMT to our history. It is Nuremberg.

Q. Still on page 12, column one, it then follows the comments of Justice Wen[n]erstrum. We have all heard his comments a number of times that he gave to the press.

A. Right.

Q. Do you know what Justice Wen[n]erstrum did in the trial that he judged?

A. Yes. I believe it was the hostage case, if I am not mistaken.

Q. You are right.

A. And he was quite harsh.

Q. He convicted, didn't he?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. And he sentenced people to long terms of imprisonment.

A. Right. Yes. And I think that is why it was particularly unfair by Dr. Fried in the pre-{4312|4313}liminary to call him an anti-semitic.

Q. Well, sir, you can't say that. The jury didn't hear —

THE COURT: I agree. You can't make reference to anything that happened in a preliminary hearing.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Still page 12, column two now, "Confessions' Under Torture":

"Altogether more disturbing, however, were the methods employed to extract statements and 'confessions' at Nuremberg, particularly those from S.S. officers which were used to support the extermination charge."

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Now, I suggest to you that what then follows is a discussion of Malmedy that had nothing to do with the extermination charge.

A. And we are already right in there, where obviously the writer of the pamphlet uses Nuremberg as an all-encompassing context, you see.

Q. Would you agree with me he started to, and then went on to say, more specifically, extermination charges?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. So it's pretty clear it is not all encompassing Nuremberg, but extermination charges is what he is talking about, the theme of this pamphlet.

A. I'm not quite sure I understand the point you are trying to make, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that what {4313|4314} follows in the discussion of trials is a discussion of trials that had nothing to do with extermination charges. Do you agree with that? Nothing to do with Jews.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, is my friend trying to suggest that Malmedy had nothing to do with extermination?

THE COURT: I have no idea until we hear what the questions are.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I thought he – thank you, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: Mr. Griffiths, am I understanding correctly that you are saying that these tortures or these alleged tortures in the Malmedy trials did not take place of those German prisoners?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: My question, sir, is whether they had anything to do with the allegations that six million Jews died, extermination charges.

A. Well, Pohl was certainly an S.S. officer.

Q. Pohl, where are we now, next page?

A. No. You say here, "confessions' at Nuremberg particularly those from S.S. officers".

Q. Yes.

A. Now, there were S.S. officers tried at Nuremberg.

Q. Right. We will come to Pohl. I promise we will get there.

A. Okay. Good. {4314|4315}

Q. Right now we are at Malmedy.

A. Oh, you are saying that he is —

Q. He is misleading us, isn't he?

A. I see. That is what you are driving at.

Q. Yes.

A. Well, we will maybe settle that when we get to the Pohl case or to the forged confessions under duress.

Q. So you are not prepared to say at this point whether or not that's misleading.

A. A prosecutor in a court of law like yourself, looking at it, with legal training, you could make that case, yes, but writers and artists and people who talk about those things don't work exactly by these, in the legal categorization and the kind of precise thought that you people apply to it. I have noticed that in this courtroom. It has been a great lesson to me, believe me.

Q. So it doesn't appear that way to you?

A. No, because, like many millions of Germans, when I say Nuremberg, we immediately think of all that the entire tragedy of Nuremberg, anything to do with the Nuremberg Trials – Malmedy, Dachau, the van Roeden [Roden] Commission – this is one vast complex, and there are books with titles exactly like that. It is all-encompassing to us. We don't make emotionally, certainly the fine legal definitions that you make, Mr. Griffiths, but I will grant you that the way you put it, it certainly could tend to put a different inference on {4315|4316} what is being said here, yes.

Q. Okay. Now, the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission was a three-man commission, was it not? Simpson, van Roeden [sic], and there was one other.

A. Yes. Possibly.

Q. You said that you read extensively in that area.

A. Yes. It was a commission set up by the United States Senate. There are some 1,800 pages all told altogether. We have an article by Judge van Roeden [sic] in evidence. Maybe we can have a look at it and see if there was a third person.

Q. Is that the same article that was quoted here from the Sunday Pictorial, January 23, 1949?

A. I'd have to see the book that was submitted backing up the quotations, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. I am not questioning these quotations. I am not questioning whether or not he said these things. My question, initially, is whether you had read extensively in the area of the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission.

A. Yes. But there are so many articles of the Simpson [van Roeden] [sic] Commission – in The New York Times, The Chicago Tribune articles, the reports themselves, and then the Senator McCarthy's Senate Speech which is quite long, some twenty pages.

Q. The report itself is not quoted here. These are van Roeden's [sic] personal comments, are they not?

A. Let me read that again. Where {4316|4317} are you exactly?

Q. Well, I am three paragraphs down, page 12, and the allegations are set out there by Justice van Roeden [sic] about posturing – it is all in heavy type.

A. Right. Now I got it.

Q. My question is whether that is what the report said not what Van Roeden [sic] said, but the findings of the Commission.

A. I don't think that in the Commission Reports there were these specific – like matches driven under fingernails, for instance. I don't think this was in there.

Q. Was there anything in there about only two out of a hundred and thirty-nine not having their testicles damaged beyond repair? Do you know whether that was in the Simpson report?

A. It was not in that specific term, no.

Q. No. Do you know, after van Roeden [sic] wrote this article, do you know if he ever subsequently had anything to say about this to the Senate, this article and these allegations particularly?

A. You mean, was there a follow-up after the controversy in the press?

Q. Did he ever retract what he'd said?

A. It is quite possible that political heat was applied to him. I remember there being quite a controversy around it, and there was actually a split between van Roeden [sic] and Simpson on this. And this is {4317|4318} what I think led ultimately to the, can I say, burying of the Simpson van Roeden [sic] Commission findings.

Q. Do you think, then, that that fairly represents that report, this column here?

A. Well, this column? It certainly fairly represents what must have been the opinion of Judge van Roeden [sic], and led him to state in numerous articles these things. It is perfectly possible, as it very often is in political things, in the Royal Commissions, that there has to be a consensus [sic] reached, and that a minority view has not been represented and therefore members of the Commissions quite frequently go to the press. We have seen that in Canada on the statutes of women's conferences, for instance, where some women were not satisfied with the official reports and then they go and write articles and appear on T.V. shows and so on.

Q. Do you think it would have been fair for this to have said that this was a minority opinion of the Simpson Commission?

A. Well, you will say it would have been fair. I will say that there was a huge document that the writer had to cover in the column, because, what he was writing was in abstract. And this is a problem, and it is admitted by every writer, by every book reviewer, every film maker. That is the difficulty with having to boil down huge documents and events covering months into a few short paragraphs, or in this case here, a column.

Q. In any event, if it was unfair, it wasn't so unfair that it couldn't be included and {4318|4319} distributing the pamphlet.

A. Well, Mr. Griffiths, anything that – any writer writes, at least I hope so, has a thesis, and naturally, everyone of us who says something you are doing it to me right now – you have a thesis that I published false news so you buttress all the little facts and figures that you think can point out to this jury that I published false news, so you are selecting. This writer selected from a vast body of selection. You are selecting twenty-five years of my writer's life, and all you have produced are a few paragraphs that is so damaging to me that this jury is going to convict me and send me to jail for a few years. So this is life.

What this man says here is, he martialled [marshalled] thesis, facts, quotations. Now we have a whole box in evidence that the Crown agreed are ninety per cent accurate. I think if we check it through, quotation for quotation, there were some printing errors, there were some transpositions of Red Cross Reports numbers, there were some typos which every book has – I think it was Walendy who said the booklet is flawed.

Ernst Zundel agrees with it, especially in light of having gone through a seven-week trial. The booklet is flawed, that is why I ceased distributing the moment that Sergeant Luby and Sergeant Williams came to my house, because I thought there was obviously a serious problem. So I ceased, and when am through with this trial, if I am not going to go to jail, if I am going to re-issue this booklet, you can be sure that I will make the proper corrections. {4319|4320}

Q. And on page 13, column one, and really it carries on the thesis of confessions under torture, there are a number of people that are alleged to have been tortured. I wonder if you can tell us who was tortured and what you have in support of that belief. We've heard something about Rudolf Hoess from his memoirs [sic] printed in fifty-five, and we've heard something about Julius Streicher.

A. That's right.

Q. From the International Military Tribunal.

A. That's right.

Q. Anybody else?

A. Well, you are talking about Wisliceny here. From what I understand about the man, he was a kind of a whimpering, trembling man when he was produced as a witness, and that's not surprising when you have gone into custody and have been in custody for a while and have been subjected – we have, for instance, the German –

Q. What is Wisliceny?

A. Wisliceny?

Q. Was he Eichmann's assistant, Peter [Dieter] Wisliceny? Have I got that right?

A. Yes. That is what it says.

Q. Do you know, or –

A. Sure.

Q. From your reading? Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And that is the extent of what you take as the proof of Wisliceny's torture that he was {4320|4321} limping and sobbing when he was in the courtroom?

A. Well, we have Julius Streicher's specific statement in the court in Nuremberg that he was made to kiss the feet of negro guards.

Q. This is torture?

A. For a man like Julius Streicher.

Q. He was a renowned racist?

A. I was going to come to that. You could say that this would be certainly, to him, degrading. Then he was kept for four days in a cell without any clothes on while people looked through the peephole. We have all seen the photos of American G.I.s looking twenty-four hours through the peephole.

Now, that is degrading. I don't want to be seen naked. Then he said his mouth was forced open and they poured saliva in his mouth. Now, that is not very nice. None of us wants to have that done to them. Then he said he was beaten. Then he was taken when he was thirsty to the latrine. His head was pointed to the latrine and told, "Go drink."

Now, you remove for a moment propaganda from these people that are made out as devils in disguise and look at them as human beings, that, to me, is degrading and torture. Now this is Streicher.

Now that the Court in Nuremberg would have this particular testimony expunged, and that we were lucky that there was The Times of London reporter there to take it down, and we were even more lucky that an author called Belgion (ph) published a book called, "Epithat Nuremberg" where I found the portion, because this allows us today to understand that Nuremberg and {4321|4322} the methods employed there were not all above-board. When Germans say it was symptomatic for it, it was a typical example of it, and in the Oswald Pohl – excuse me –

Q. Just before – we will get to Pohl. I promise. Julius Streicher, he was a newspaper publisher, wasn't he?

A. Oh, yes, he was.

Q. In the newspaper Die Sturm.

A. That's right.

Q. And he was very creative and vicious in his racism; do you agree with me?

A. Mr. Griffiths, you are absolutely right, but I want to say to you that he was deposed by Hitler in his post of Gauleiter. He had absolutely no function or interest in the German Government from 1941 on. And if I understand your inference, are you intimating that this man was so nasty, and because he had written inflammatory articles during his political career, that then these guards in that prison in Nuremberg should take the law into their own hands and mistreat that man?

Q. No, sir. I am saying he made it up.

A. Oh, he made it up. I see. Well, now, see, that is where we – okay. Good. Now, this is what this is all about, why I am here today, you see. You have grown up in this culture in Canada. You never went through the War. You only know the stuff from the history books like most of the younger generation.

Q. Like yourself. {4322|4323}

A. But you have one frame of reference. I introduced a schoolbook that is now still being current in Canada where children are taught that the Germans made soap from human cadavers – 1980, '84, '85. Now you see that the context you are looking at me standing up defending Germans' honour in some cases, I am looked at as some super-Nazi, but look at the context. I was born in Germany, raised in Germany, educated there. I lived among German people. I received my sensory input from German people forever. As long as I am going to remain in this country, I will carry, like a snail[-]house, my German ethnicity and background with me like you carry the Canadian one. The contest is now, is the thesis of the booklet correct, or is it not correct, or are errors made in this thing here. So that is what we are discussing here. You come at this from a totally different vantage point than I, myself. You see? I come from the German side. Half my intellectual life I was reading only German books, Mr. Griffiths. I had only influences from German newspapers, German television stations, German radio stations, German war veterans. I interviewed hundreds of Germans who were in the Second World War in all kinds of capacities. So obviously, I reflect a totally, maybe diametrically opposed viewpoint to you and this court. I understand I am working at a disadvantage, but if you are thinking that this is a diatribe or unfair thesis, I don't think it is. It is one thesis. My appeal in the back of the book was this: Let there be diversity. Have we Germans no right to submit to the people and legislatures of Canada, {4323|4324} to the politicians, the media our viewpoint? Why should we be beaten down and vilified in the public without having a right to defend ourselves? It is a sacred God-given right.

Now, the booklet you have already pointed out during the last seven weeks has flaws in it. Let me know the publisher that doesn't have errata sheets in his books or didn't correct things in second editions, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. You have a second edition. Did you correct anything?

A. I was not aware at the time that there were errors in it.

Q. That is what we are inquiring into.

A. Well, the third edition you can be sure will have changes or additions to it.

Q. Were the allegations of Streicher investigated in court before his comments were struck from the record?

A. I was not there, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. You don't know.

A. No.

Q. And was there anybody else that was tortured, you say, who testified before any of the Nuremberg Trials [sic]? Wisliceny because he cried, and we heard the torture of Julius Streicher. Anybody else?

A. Well, I have seen a Life Magazine story and some news reels about how these men looked in Nuremberg. The Life Magazine article and the Chicago Tribune articles tell that they all had lost {4324|4325} a tremendous amount of weight, that they could not concentrate, that their minds were wandering.

Now, I am saying to you that there are many forms of torture. One of the favourite tortures was, in this trial, I believe, from what I have looked into and also in the famous sedition case in 1944 in the United States, to deprive the prisoners of food to which they had gotten used to, and the quality they had gotten used to.

For example, the prisoners had an American diet which we Germans call cotton batten bread, not black bread, which is not very nutritious. Apparently they had no green stuff. The sedition trial, I know people who were part of the trial and it makes one's mind wander. You cannot remember. And of course, you put a man like that – I mean, I am nervous enough standing up here today, and I eat my regular food; I can imagine how these men felt with all this propaganda around them. There are many ways of torture – eating a lousy diet, lack of proteins – so their mind wouldn't function properly.

Q. Is this the kind of torture that this book is talking about – testicles punched, jaws broken, the old rubber hose in the back room?

A. Are you saying –

Q. I am asking who it happened to and what your basis for belief is.

A. I believe from personal interviews which I have conducted from many Germans, notably S.S. men who became prisoners, especially of the Americans and the Russians, that they were brutally {4325|4326} treated. And many of these men have the scars to show it.

Q. All right.

A. War was not some Sunday-school picnic. When will the world allow us also to tell the world that we have suffered as a nation, pain. The soldiers that the Allies sent over to Europe came as conquerors, as President Eisenhower said, and Mr. Griffiths, in many cases, unfortunately, they behaved that way.

Q. Did Ohlendorf – he testified quite a number of times. Did he ever say he was tortured in any of his testimony? He testified both before and after he was convicted in his own trial, did he not? Did he ever say he was tortured?

A. No, not that I am aware of. Can we go back to Hoess for a minute?

Q. Yes. Certainly.

A. You see, Hoess had an opportunity to write about it in Polish captivity and say that he was convicted – was tortured by beating with his riding crop and by feeding him alcohol and that he was I forced to sign a confession, that he couldn't read, you know, or didn't even understand what was in it.

Now, I have carried on a lengthy correspondence with the brother-in-law of Rudolf Hoess and with Mrs. Hoess who are very much alive today. Now, they were only relatives of Rudolf Hoess and they were confined, after the War, and I have a sixteen page letter in my files how the brother-in-law – not Mr. Hoess – the brother-in-law was mistreated to the {4326|4327} point that he was a physical wreck when he was released after his confinement. So it is not

Q. Did he confess under torture?

A. Pardon?

Q. Did he confess under torture?

A. The brother-in-law or Mr. Hoess?

Q. We are talking about confessions under torture.

A. It was the norm in Europe in 1945 and 1946, it was the norm. Fritsch, the assistant to Goebbels, wrote an article in Life Magazine about it. I don't know if you studied the article how he was tortured in La Bianca prison by the most refined mental torture, brainwashing and so on. It is incredible the harm that can be done to a person's mind or soul, and I am not a person to accuse somebody that I wouldn't break under torture, believe me.

Q. Arnold Pohl, did he ever complain that he was tortured?

A. No. He never complained.

Q. All right.

A. Which does not mean that he wasn't.

Q. On page 13, "The Case of the Einsatzgruppen", there is a paragraph there. It seems to indicate that there is very little factual evidence for the deaths attributed to the Einsatzgruppen. Do you agree with me on that?

A. Are you talking about the sentence just before and below the picture?

Q. No. I'm sorry, no. I am in the {4327|4328} paragraph, "The Case of the Einsatzgruppen".

A. Okay.

Q. Page 13, column one.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. I am directing you to this. Do you know of any documentary proof, German documents that are put forward to substantiate that the Einsatzgruppen did, in fact, kill hundreds of thousands of Jews?

A. The way I understand the Einsatzgruppen

Q. Well, first answer my question. Do you know how many German documents –

A. That prove?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. German documents. German documents like Dr. Walendy's type-written sheets, without any proper genealogy [sic] to them? You see, you talk about German documents. German documents, all German documents, were captured. Every document that we look at today had a chance to be doctored. So if you are saying to me, have I seen photostats or sections printed in books about documents that the Allies returned back to Germany were used, everyone of those documents, as far as I am concerned is suspect.

Q. So we can't trust any documentation

A. That the Allies produced?

Q. Yes.

A. In their one-sided kangaroo courts? No. {4328|4329}

Q. Or anywhere else. There are a great number of documents seized, I guess, in the Archives in Washington.

A. And many of them are still being held and many of them we don't have access to. We know that, too. So number one we are only talking about partial documents. For instance, we have the West Berlin documents centre where there are files on, I don't know how many, one and a half million or two million S.S. people, the whole background, where they were, what they were doing, have never been released by the Allies.

Q. We can't trust any documents that are in Allied hands right now?

A. It is not a matter of trusting anybody. It is a matter of treating them with a certain amount of suspicion and reserve.

Q. Well, I guess, is it fair to say that you reserve your suspicion for those documents that tend to support that millions of Jews were killed during the War, and you have less reserve for those documents that tend to show something else?

A. That's where you are back at the thesis thing. You come at this problem from a totally different viewpoint. You are a Canadian in Canada in a Canadian courtroom.

Q. Can you answer my question?

A. I'd be happy to. I think that the jury is still out on the Nuremberg War Crimes Trial. No international committee has investigated this. So far we have seen victors' justice over the {4329|4330} vanquished with all that it implies where the judges, the prosecutors were, in fact, supplied by the victors, and even the laws were written retroactively by the victors, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Do you remember my question?

A. Can this be justice?

Q. Do you remember my question?

A. I do.

Q. Can you answer it?

A. I am suspicious of Allied documents, and I would hope that I have the detachment to also be suspicious of German documents, yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this a convenient time for the morning recess, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— The jury retires. 11:15 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 11:50 a.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Page 14, Exhibit I, column one, under the heading, "Action Group Executions Distorted", the first sentence there, it says: {4330|4331}

"The Soviet charge that the Action Groups had wantonly exterminated a million Jews during their operations has been shown subsequently to be a massive falsification."

Is that true that there was never – the slightest statistical basis for the figure?

A. There was a publication on Manstein where the figure was reduced from thirty thousand people killed to a considerably less number. And that was in the trial when the heat of the agitation had died down.

Q. That was dealing with one particular answer. One of the group was Ohlendorf's testimony that was referred to by R.T. Paget in his book, "Manstein", which is now Exhibit No. 74. I am showing you page 170, which Mr. Christie read. Is that footnoted at all? Is there a footnote in that book referring to Paget's source in his belief, or is that, in fact, Paget's opinion?

A. I cannot see a footnote.

Q. Okay. Would you agree with me it's an expression of Paget's opinion?

A. Based on a trial which he was conducting, a defence he was conducting for Field Marshall Manstein where he looked through all the documents that were presented to him, and the charge specifically that many thousands of Jews had been killed, in effect, ten and twenty thousand Jews in two or three days. In other words, the charges were against Manstein that he killed many thousands of Jews {4331|4332} and that could not be substantiated.

Q. Stopping where Mr. Christie stopped reading, page 171, there is a paragraph that begins, "Nobody ever will know what really happened. I think that Ohlendorf probably told the truth when he said that before the campaign he received verbal orders directly from Himmler to exterminate the Jews of the Ukraine and that it is probably also true that these orders were so secret that they were known only to a few officers of the Einsatz Kommando. I think that Ohlendorf probably started off with the intention of carrying out his orders but very soon realized that the task was enormously beyond the capacity of his command. I believe also that while it was relatively easy to order the murder of the Jews in the abstract it was psychologically difficult to murder women and children in practice. Even the S.D. thugs discovered a loathing for the task. One went mad in Simferopol and started moaning, 'The eyes, the awful eyes.' This shook the others. At about this point Ohlendorf whose figure even before had been enormously exaggerated, reported that his area was clear of Jews. The extermination policy worked in the extermination camps where every individual could be given a particular job. It broke down in the field where the same body of men had to be entrusted with the whole operation from capture to murder. Human beings were just not wicked enough to go on doing the whole job. The Nazi devil had nearly but not completely obliterated the Christian tradition of childhood."

Have you read that, sir? {4332|4333}

A. I have.

Q. Thank you.

A. So if the one opinion on the left page doesn't meet your approval, then we quoted it out of context, then if the opinion on the other page, if it meets with your approval, it is a good quote. That is what this trial is all about.

Q. Well, do you agree with what's on the right page and on the left page?

A. They are certainly, in your opinion, both opinions.

Q. I am not asking for my opinion, sir. I am asking for your opinions.

A. They are his opinions. They are his opinions. On the left side, his opinion is that instead of Manstein having been responsible for the killing of twenty thousand or thirty thousand or ten thousand Jews, suddenly it was more like three hundred. You see. Now you say that is just an opinion. If he is such a faulty thinker, who says that on the right side he is not also a faulty thinker?

Q. Well, if he is a faulty thinker on the left and on the right side, why do you bother quoting him?

A. Because I consider Paget, the trial that he conducted in 1953, a far fairer trial, because by that time the propaganda, the heat of battle, the tempers had cooled in the world and the verdict in the Manstein case bears me out, and that Paget was able to feed this particular accusation is proof of this. Cooler heads remained. {4333|4334}

Q. Is there a footnote for either one of the contentions?

A. No, there is not, but I think the man is entitled to his opinion?

Q. And you accept Paget's opinion over documents.

A. Of the type proffered [sic] at Nuremberg, any time, yes.

Q. All right. Have you had an opportunity, Mr. Zundel, to read a book by Helmut Krausnick published in 1981 – and I'm sorry, but you are much better at the German than I am.

A. No, I haven't.

Q. You didn't read that.

A. No, I didn't read that.

Q. All right. Page 20, Mr. Zundel, column one, and there are two complete paragraphs there, one partial paragraph coming down from the top. One sentence starts, "Reitlinger acknowledges", and that is not the paragraph I want. The next paragraph down, "A review of the Hoess 'memoirs'", and the last two sentences of that paragraph start with a review of the Hoess memoirs:

"Of course, no Jew would ever be found who claimed to have been a member of this gruesome 'special detachment', so that the whole issue is left conveniently unprovable."

Do you have that, Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Is that true? {4334|4335}

A. If by 1975, when this booklet apparently was written, there was no Jew who came forth to say he worked in a Sonderkommando – is that what you are saying?

Q. Yes, that is my question.

A. I really don't know.

Q. All right. You've put into evidence a book by a Dr. Nyiszli.

A. Yes.

Q. And is he one who claimed to have been a Sonderkommando?

A. Well, from what I recall, he was a doctor in Auschwitz, was he not, Nyiszli?

Q. You read the book?

A. Yes, but a long time ago. If you will point it out to me, I will be happy to do that.

Q. Well, it is your belief we are concerned with, Mr. Zundel.

A. Oh, that there might be people who claimed to have been part of the Sonderkommando?

Q. Well, whether or not you knew that there were people who claimed to be part of the Sonderkommando.

A. I regard much of that, these claims in testimonies, propaganda and lies.

Q. I understand that, but do you know that the claims were made?

A. Without-refreshing my memory in the Nyiszli book, I will take your word for it.

Q. What about Filip Muller?

A. "My Three Years in the Gas Chamber"? {4335|4336}

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Well, that's true, but my mind boggles at such a claim that a man could claim what he did.

Q. I understand that. That is your testimony. We have your evidence on that. But my question is whether that's true that no Jew would ever be found who claimed to have been a member.

A. You are staying to the word "claims" as being a bone of contention. Well, in that case, if Mueller is taken as gospel truth, he was there. He said he was three years in the gas chamber.

Q. So that's false, then.

A. Is it false that Mueller was lying, or is the word "claimed" false?

Q. Well, what is here is false.

A. Speaking like a lawyer, the word "claimed" in that case is false, yes.

Q. Well, how do you read it, Mr. Zundel?

A. I start out from the context that Filip Mueller is lying, because he tells an incredible tale.

Q. What does it say here?

"Of course, no Jew would ever be found who claimed to have been a member of this gruesome 'special detachment', so that the whole issue is left conveniently unprovable."

Is that true or false?

A. If you speak like a prosecuting {4336|4337} attorney, the word "claim" is false.

Q. Why don't you speak like Ernst Zundel? Is it true or false?

A. I have just answered your question, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. That's the only answer you are going to give?

A. That is the only answer I can give.

Q. All right. We have your evidence on that.

A number of different pages here make specific references. There are references to Dachau. We've put in some twenty exhibits about the concentration camp at Dachau, and as I remember your evidence you said, having seen Dachau, you have seen one concentration camp you have seen them all. Is that fair?

A. I was referring to the construction of the camp.

Q. All right. Not to the conditions of the camp.

A. That's right.

Q. And at Dachau can you tell us whether that was a camp reserved for Jewish detainees?

A. There were Jews detained.

Q. Was it primarily a camp for Jews?

A. No, it was not. There were priests there, Poles there, we have heard, from Mr. Tomaszewski [Tomaszewski], I believe, he passed through that.

Q. Political prisoners. {4337|4338}

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. All right. And in that regard it is different from most of the other camps, isn't it?

A. Not really. Auschwitz had other prisoners.

Q. But Dachau was unique. It was the first one and it had a special position in the concentration camp hierarchy. Would you agree with that?

A. Well, Mr. Griffiths, everything has the property of being unique, of course, if you want the prototype —

Q. And was the use that Dachau was put to, the type of prisoners that were held there, different from the other camps?

A. Marginally. Marginally.

Q. Page 30, column one, the heavy typed paragraph above the words, "Conclusion", it says:

"Perhaps I may be allowed to recall here that the State of Israel was only founded in May 1948 and that the Jews were nationals of all states with the exception of Israel, in order to underline the dimensions of a fraud which defies description in any language; on the one hand Germany pays to Israel sums which are calculated on six million dead, and on the other, since at least four-fifths of these six million were decidedly alive at the end of the war, she is paying substantial sums {4338|4339} by way of reparation to the victims of Hitler's Germany to those who are still alive in countries all over the world other than Israel and to the rightful claimants of those who have since deceased, which means that for the former (i.e. the six million), or in other words, for the vast majority, she is paying twice."

Dr. Faurisson in his evidence indicated that was not true. Do you agree with that?

A. The Treaty of Luxembourg, which was negotiated between Konrad Adenauer and the Israeli Government of the day, talked about millions of Jews. So if you are saying that the six million that is mentioned here, then that is erroneous. He talks about millions of Jews.

Q. He talks about recognizing the death of millions of Jews in the Treaty of Luxembourg. Is that right?

A. Yes. That Germany does penance and settles financially.

Q. And does the Treaty of Luxembourg base the payment of monies on the numbers dead – if there were five million it would have been less, if there were seven million it would have been more?

A. The financial reparations, as understand it, to the State of Israel, are based on a lump sum payment for each Jewish person. I don't know what the exact figure is, but I have here from the {4339|4340} Canadian Jewish News —

Q. Dead or alive Jewish persons?

MR. CHRISTIE: May my client —

THE COURT: Yes, I agree. He can finish. Go ahead and finish.

THE WITNESS: Jewish individuals dead and alive. I mean, Israel is getting and has been getting lump sum payments as a State. There are Israeli organizations that have been getting lump sum payments. Then there are Jewish individuals, then there are Jewish firms. Remember we talked about reparations, indemnification, the different categories that there are, and according to the Canadian Jewish News, December 11, 1981, it says that the German Information Centre in New York says that 99.8 per cent of all claims had been settled by January 1st, 1981; the number of successful claimants was 4,344,378; payments have reached 50.18 billion marks, and about forty per cent of those live in Israel, twenty per cent in West Germany, forty per cent elsewhere. And then there is an article from the Canadian Jewish News called, "Diary of a People" where it says that compensation under the first protocol was in the form of a gradual transfer of more than 715 million of West German goods to Israel. Sometimes that is overlooked – transfer of goods. That was part of the deal. And let me hasten to say that I am not at all in disfavour of paying people who worked in German concentration camps, paid, who had lost their businesses, who couldn't teach in universities. I think they ought to be entitled to fair compensation. But I think it {4340|4341} should also be understood that after someone has been fairly compensated, that the hate propaganda mills ought to stop, and that these people should have the decency not to keep harping away at how nasty the Germans were, because my generation of Germans – and I was a German taxpayer, I was born in 1939 – yet from my paycheque money was deducted for crime that my generation of Germans did not commit.

Q. Mr. Zundel, is this an enormous fraud that is indicated here?

A. Is it an enormous fraud?

Q. Yes, sir. Are people getting money they are not entitled to?

A. Absolutely. I can give you an example. We have the Estevan collection, and it was reported for years in the European press that the Nazis had stolen that very valuable collection, and the value of it was set at about sixty million, a horrendous sum. And a Jewish attorney, an office of attorneys in Basil, Switzerland specializing only in this restitution and settlement claims, he went to bat in order to get the money for the Estevan collection. An agreement had already been struck of, I believe, eight billion German marks, had been paid, when suddenly an embarrassing thing happened. The Soviet Union had announced that they were going to return to the people of Hungary this very valuable collection of paintings. A fraud? The German nation had been made to look for fifteen years as the despoiler of the cultural treasurers of Europe in all the media. The Soviets, in the meantime, had done the evil deed, and {4341|4342} the German taxpayers had been robbed already of an amount of money which had not been paid because Mr. Dauch (ph) ended up in jail. One point, and there are others

Q. Who is Mr. Dauch?

A. He was a reparations attorney from Basil.

Q. And he was charged and convicted of fraud in relation to this?

A. Absolutely

Q. As he should have been.

A. Right. One man who was found out. How many others are there which were not found out?

Q. I see. So the numbers, the imaginary slaughters that's indicated here, it gets figures from three hundred thousand up to the millions, is that a fraud? Is that a conspiracy, a hoax?

A. Well, okay, if you doubt what I am saying, we have a book in evidence called, "The Jewish Paradox" by Nahum Goldman, who was the chief architect – no, no, Mr. Griffiths

Q. I would like you to answer my question as to whether it was a fraud or a hoax.

A. I am answering it in my own words, and if you read this book of Nahum Goldman, he will tell you how enormously he was surprised at the staggering amount of money that he was ultimately able to talk out of the Germans. And he describes the methods which were employed, illegal methods, may I say, on the part of the German negotiators as well as on his own part, where, for example, Konrad Adenauer {4342|4343} did not inform his own Parliament where he was dealing behind the scenes with Nahum Goldman.

Q. The German negotiators were involved in this hoax and fraud, were they?

A. The Germans were given a choice, Mr. Griffiths, whether or not they were going to be allowed to trade on the international market, and that the German mark, which was an occupation currency, was going to be accepted as an international currency which could be used in trade. That is the way I understand it. The price demanded for Germany by the then military governor of West Germany, I think it was John J.

McCloy the other day said, the man who pardoned John J. McCloy, he was the man in charge, and he – so I read it from German history text, he gave the Germans a choice: Come to terms with the Israeli Government, settle, make a generous settlement, and then we will allow you to trade on the international market. That's the way we see it.

Q. So the Germans opened the negotiations with Israel, not the other way around? The Germans approached the Israelis?

A. It's like starting a hockey game. I really don't know. I don't recall. I remember that Menahin [sic] Begin was, for instance, as a member of the Knesset, against accepting money from Germany. There was a furious debate in Israel. Who initiated the first steps, Mr. Griffiths, at the moment, it may well have been the Germans because of the condition of the Germans at the time.

Q. It could have been. {4343|4344}

A. Yes, it could have been.

Q. And if it was the Germans, would this pamphlet have been misleading at all to say that the numbers have been inflated to gouge money out of Germans?

A. I don't think so, no. I really don't. I think you are impugning an intent which I think is not there.

Q. The question that I asked you, sir, was whether, call it the inflated number, the difference between millions of people dead and three hundred thousand people dead, whether that comes about because of an enormous fraud or hoax or imaginary slaughter perpetrated by someone.

A. Are you asking my viewpoint on that?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Oh, okay. I believe what we are looking at here is World War II propaganda, which claimed outrageous losses. For instance, the British, after the War, had revised their number of aircraft shot down because the German figures were more precise than the British figures, and this is not unusual in wartime. These propaganda claims against Germany were made. Germany was in ruins, defeated. The entire German leadership of that particular time was either rotting in jail, was either executed, was starved to death, or was somewhere in the Soviet Gulag[s], so the German people were virtually abandoned. What was left was emigree [sic] leadership that had left Germany in the thirties, largely Jewish, communists who came {4344|4345} back with the communists or quizzlings [Quislings] who occupied positions and were given the positions by the Allied powers.

Q. Could you tell us what a quizzling [sic] is?

A. A quizzling [sic] is properly understood to be a person who is appointed by an occupying power doing the services of somebody else. And the constitutional conference that was held in Bonn to set up the West German State was hand-picked by the occupying authorities, and they rejected people when they didn't toe the line that the Allies had laid down for Germany. So therefore we started out with an occupational government, and it has been self-perpetuating, however much they want to cloak themselves in democratic trappings.

Q. So there is still an occupational government there?

A. In West Germany?

Q. Yes.

A. Definitely.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Because it is. We have a loss in West Germany that we had to sign, that Konrad Adenauer signed when they called what they called the limited sovereignty, that the Allies are still allowed to inspect German mail, intercept German phone calls, look into German parcels. You see? Now, what kind of freedom can be fostered in a state when people are unable to communicate and have their thoughts held sacred? {4345|4346}

Q. There are free elections, aren't there, in Germany?

A. Free election where the very government and the very people for a good twenty years dominated German history are ruled out and declared illegal. Up until the seventies, the German Communist Party and the Socialist Party and all other manners of other parties are outlawed. What we have in Germany is occupational government approved pa-rating around in what is called a dichomocracy, no different from Hungary, Latvia, Estonia or even the Soviet Union.

Q. And it is an approved government and the National Socialist Government is outlawed.

A. Yes. And the millions and millions of people who voted for it and its tens and hundreds of thousands of functionaries who were working in it were outlawed. Therefore the German people were robbed of a whole generation of trained, capable people which had given Germany a very stable and prosperous government, and suddenly we lose the War and tens of thousands of people are made homeless, jobless, removed from universities and so on. A terrific purging took place. And if you are wondering why German affairs are in such – why we enjoy in West Germany and East Germany this tranquil scene, we have there the pacification and the quiet of a graveyard, a cemetery. It is a political cemetery where decency is stifled, where people like myself not only are put on trial, but actually grace the inside of jails. So there is very little political dissent and therefore very little political creativity, Mr. Griffiths. {4346|4347}

Q. And I understand the dissent that you are talking about is people who would like to see National Socialism return to Germany, made lawful again.

A. Mr. Griffiths, either we have a democracy where all spectrum of political opinion is allowed, or we shouldn't lie to generations of children in school books that we have freedom and democracy where everybody can say his piece of mind. It's the same with this particular thing. Why should I not be able to offer one thesis while tens of thousands of authors and museums, hundreds of thousands of books have been written about the Holocaust, [sic] and I am here because I have written some thirty pages?

Q. You would like to see the National Socialist Party – are you working for the return or legalization of the National Socialist Party in West Germany?

A. The National Socialist Party in West Germany and East Germany is as much a part of history as De Gaulism is in France.

Q. Are you working for the return of the National Socialist Party in Germany?

A. I am not. I never did so. I was cleared of this charge in the court in West Germany in 1981 and was found totally innocent of it. The State dropped the charges and paid me for the expenses I had to pay because of it. You see?

Q. Sir, I show to you a German two-page article.

A. Yes. {4347|4348}

Q. Can you identify that?

A. Yes, I published that.

Q. When did you publish that?

A. 25th of March, 1981.

Q. Where was that distributed? It is written in German.

A. It was in West Germany.

Q. In West Germany.

A. That's right.

Q. I have a translation there. Would you take a moment, or however long it requires, and look at that and tell me whether this is an accurate translation or not?

A. It's rather lengthy. Excuse me. It's a pretty good translation, Mr. Griffiths. Now, may I give you the context of it? Since it shows a Canadian news article in here rather inaptly, "Metro Man branded a Nazi", am I permitted?

Q. Sure. Give the context and we will read it.

A. You would like to read it?

Q. Give the context and then we will read it. And let the jury share it.

A. Okay. Good. This was written in response on the 3rd day of the largest police raid which ever took place in West Germany, and as a matter of fact; in the history of German people where approximately two thousand homes were raided, and where it is said in the media ten thousand policemen, three hundred prosecutors and fifty judges took part in this operation.

The chief target of these raids on {4348|4349} these German people's homes which took place at five o'clock, six o'clock in the morning, some people were as old as eighty-six years old, the misfortune of these people had been that they had bought from me some books, some tapes, some letters, who had donated money for my work.

Q. You weren't the only target, though; there were other people, other materials and other reasons for going in there?

A. No. Which they found.

Q. I see.

A. Which they found. I mean, I have seen many of the search warrants were sent to me, and I have them here on file in Toronto.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Now, of course, you cannot raid two thousand homes and not find all kinds of literature. There's people who were raising rabbits, they had rabbit breeders' literature, and others were raising chickens, they had chicken breeders' literature, and naturally, people who were politically inclined had political literature, and my own.

Q. What kind of political literature?

A. They were looking for material which I had written, and these people had bought from me, or had donated money for tape cassettes and so on. And the operation netted, I am told, if you will pardon the pun, garbage bags full of my material, and it was all taken to a central place in Stuttgart, Germany.

Then there was an investigation, and the German judicial system is slightly different from the {4349|4350} Canadian one. And I was represented by a German attorney, and after one year's investigation, looking at all the material that I had sent over there, no charges were laid, although the State prosecutors proffered these charges against me, especially under promoting the revival of Nazism in Germany, the revival meaning the recreation of it, and also our paragraph similar to s.281.1 in the Criminal Code.

Now, a panel of judges looked at this material, the State prosecutor asked that I should be charged, and the judges turned it down. Then, the next level of the State prosecutors which is called Oberstaatsanwalt (ph) [Oberstaatsanwalt], a higher authority, went to another level of the German legal system and again offered this material for perusal, and again it was turned down, whereupon my postal chequing account, which is like a bank account I had in West Germany, was freed, the Government paid my attorney all the expenses, and many of these people received their material back, and it is interesting in the reasoning for that decision they said that the accused, meaning Ernst Zundel, cannot legally be charged with (a) the attempt to revive or to restore, which is an unconstitutional activity in West Germany, and also not the charge of s.281 similar to it, meaning the distribution of hate literature. I was completely exonerated [sic] in that.

Q. All right. Now, the two pamphlets, so we are all clear before we read this, that are before the jury today, were not part of the material that was seized, Exhibits 1 and 2. {4350|4351}

A. I have sent this material to West Germany, this one here.

Q. Exhibit 1. All right. And what about Exhibit 2?

A. As I said, that went to Arab addresses.

Q. All right. Now, let's read the letter.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed. Were these two seized or not seized? I missed that.

THE WITNESS: Your Honour, this one was among some of them being seized.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Exhibit "Did Six Million Really Die?", but not Exhibit 2.

Q. "This material is sent to the addressee unsolicited and free of charge.

The Bonn Police State: Bankruptcy of the Bonn Moguls Circular No. 21 March 25, 1981".

A. That's right.

Q. "In the night from March 23-24, 1981 I received telephone calls from all parts of West Germany, telling me of house searches and arrests of comrades. Today, March 24, 1981, I was telephoned by the Canadian media, and then visited for interviews, because here, too, this hysterical mass raid has {4351|4352} attracted much attention. The first newscast with my interview on Canadian public TV has already ended.

The interview, [sic] which was shown all over Canada and which also reached millions of US viewers, ended with the following important sentence: 'Zundel claims, 'The six million Jews allegedly gassed are a swindle, and the Diary of Anne Frank is a fraud. Tonight at 11:15 p.m. the other Canadian television network showed a detailed report which also brought a lot of plain truths to light and acknowledged our work.' What work is that?

A. My work supported by my friends around the world. The people that are receiving them?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. Meaning we speak as a collectivity. All I am responsible for is writing some of the stuff and my name is on the paper, and that is why I am on trial and they are not on trial.

Q. "Tomorrow the largest and the second largest Canadian daily newspapers will bring articles about it. Total circulation: 1.3 million. We will have to wait and see how these turn out. In any case, the sacrifice of those who were victims to those {4352|4353} police raids has already led to the first positive result, namely that millions and millions of people in Canada and the US have been confronted with the truth about the Jewish swindle; other operations have already been set in motion. The following comments on the actual searches: If a government that constantly boasts of being more democratic than all others in the world tried to defend itself with judicial and police chicanery against ideas, this is a declaration of bankruptcy that cannot be expressed more clearly. Bonn's henchmen of the occupation forces are at the end of their wisdom. Once again the moguls and their Zionist manipulators behind the scenes have gone too far with these searches, and even the most stupid and dull German citizen must slowly wake up. The great turning point has come. The occupation system and its henchmen have unmasked themselves. The dishonourable and downright shameless behaviour of the Bonn moguls during the funeral of Grand Admiral Donitz and in the case of Rudolf Hess have been the low points in Bonn's self-defilement. Willy {4353|4354} Brandt-Frahm's ..." That's a hyphenated name.

A. Yes. Because he travelled under aliases. It seems to be a German tradition.

Q. "... Willy Brandt-Frahm's genuflection in Warsaw, and the present system's DM 500 billion indebtedness to the international financial Mafia that once again delivers our people into the hands of these crooks and gangsters, are of the same calibre. Other events to the credit of the re-educators and henchmen of the occupational forces were the screening of the Holocaust movie in 'Rest Germany' as well as all the other anti-German hate and self-defilement films, as well as the mendacious history and school books for our young people, which incite the children against their own parents. Decent people find it revolting even having to deal with such subjects. Well, we have been dealing with these traitors for years, and they may as well know: that everyone of them has long been recorded, and that all of them, every single one of them, will be made accountable this time. The state-attorneys and judges who on {4354|4355} behalf of the Bonn moguls drag 80-year-old men and great-grandmothers before political tribunals for the benefit of the Zionist manipulated world press, will some day have to answer to German courts themselves. In the words of Mao Tse Tung: 'Justice will be dispensed from the barrel of a gun'. The same federal German political parasites believe that their occupation regime supported by American bayonets and Israeli secret service organizations will last forever, but these dreamers and naive provincials do not even realize that they have already missed the boat of history. The world has undergone mighty changes in the past few years. Israel is financially and politically bankrupt. Tens of thousands of Jews are leaving the terrorist state every year, and the Diaspora Jews are talking louder and louder about the Israeli millstone around their neck. Rabbi Meir Kahane, leader of the Jewish Defence League, even wants to establish a second Jewish state named Judea because Israel no longer suits him. The Bonn traitors should therefore no longer count on too much help from {4355|4356} down there. The USA with its drug infested garrisons on German soil and its negro troops will also some day either pull out voluntarily or be forced to withdraw, and then may God have mercy on the tormentors of the German soul!

But all of us, those arrested and those still free, are now united by an ever closer bond of comradeship. No police or judicial chicanery can silence us forever. Neither confiscations nor the seizure of donated funds will stop the flow of information material, tape recordings or demonstrations. On the contrary, these infamous and insidious manoeuvres [sic] will only strengthen us in our goal. Ideas cannot be conquered with handcuffs, jail terms or searches. Another element of this large-scale raid is positive for us, but extremely dangerous for Bonn: Thousands of German police officers, state attorneys, judges and journalists will now have to deal extensively in detail and officially with our publicity material – a readership which our material would have never reached otherwise. These people have often experienced for the {4356|4357} first time the decent manner and philosophy, the inner discipline and loyalty of our comrades, while engaged in the search operation. This, too, is publicity. For every confiscated circular and for each stolen tape recording 10,000 new ones, better and stronger, are already on the way. The Bonn moguls and their henchmen may torture and beat us, steal from us or slander us. Who cares? We Germans have withstood more and survived more already. If I think of the mental and physical anguish of our soldiers at Stalingrad, In [sic] Siberia, and of the sacrifice of the refugees, the horror of the bombing raids, if I picture the state of the accused and tortured of Nuremberg, Dachau, Werl, etc., I feel that none of us has the right to complain or even to let our heads hang low unless it is in shame or in reverence of those who came before us and who have fought for Germany.

Every one of us has to do his duty where he lives, works and stands: I here, you there. No one can escape his fate, not even our enemies. It is up to us what we want to do with this new state and situation. {4357|4358} Personally I have reacted immediately and consequentially. With this action Bonn has given me and our people through me the possibility to tear the democratic mask off its face for all the world to see. What the whole world can see emerge from under this mask is a morally and politically degenerate occupied state, financially ruined and without ideas for the future, whose means of power and finance have been and are always used against and never for Germany. We are without fear of and without respect for the Bonn moguls; all we have for them is disgust and total contempt. Hold out! Keep calm! Stay level-headed and cool! Bonn will get its surprise.

Please do not send money to the Stuttgart account for the time being. A good German lawyer is taking care of Bonn's highwayman and robber baron methods. Donations by registered mail are safer! In comradeship solidarity – long live our Germany!

(Signed:) Ernst Zundel."

And then there is, as you indicated, a newspaper clipping that was included with that letter.

A. That's right. {4358|4359}

Q. Is that an accurate translation?

A. A couple of spelling errors, but since I am guilty of the same offence, we will let it pass.

Q. Were you a pacifist then?

A. I am still a pacifist. What I appealed for was, and said, that one day the quizzlings [Quislings] of Germany will suffer the same fate that the quizzlings [Quislings] of other occupied countries, like in the Second World War, suffered.

Q. Justice will be dispensed from the barrel of a gun?

A. After they have been sentenced by courts. It says that very clearly in the article, does it not, Mr. Griffiths?

Q. We have heard the evidence.

A. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May that be the next lettered exhibit, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT [sic] "CC" (For Identification): Newsletter from Ernst Zundel dated March 25, 1981.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Are millions of people involved in some effort to dupe the rest of the world to gain reparation from Germany?

A. Millions of people have become the beneficiaries. Whether they were personally and actively involved in a conspiracy to defraud the German {4359|4360} nation, that stands open to be examined. However, that they are accessory to this fraud, there is no doubt about it, because the monies have been paid like in the Estevan collection.

Q. And would Raul Hilberg – he would have to be one of the conspirators; he has been working in this area since 1948, he said.

A. I cannot look into the head of Raul Hilberg, but he certainly is a man that looks at history from a rather frog-eyed position, I would think. He has never been to any of the concentration camps, you know. He strictly relies seemingly uncritical on all these documents from the Second World War that the Allied produced and even uses quotations out of context, or selected quotations from a man that he, himself, admits has a fairly vivid imagination, was unstable, like Gerstein, and with much relish, although he discounted the rumour here in this courtroom, cites in page after page the soap rumour.

Q. Well, now, he is citing it to disprove it, is he not, in this book?

A. Well —

Q. He says in this book that the rumour is unsubstantiated.

A. Well, he states it in all its glory. If it is only a rumour and he knew it in 1960 when his book first came out, all he would need to say flatly is that this was only a rumour, but oh no, he goes and gives somebody else that might not have as vivid an imagination a chance to buttress his own thing.

Q. So he says it is a rumour. {4360|4361}

A. He does, yes, but are you saying that I consider him one of the global conspirators?

Q. I am asking you, does he?

A. No, he doesn't strike me like that at all. He is just another tunnel-visioned – and I am looking at the changes he has made and how he has matured in 1960 from his book.

Q. You gathered from scanning his book in 1960 that he was immature in 1960?

A. No. But he said himself that the second edition will reflect further researching.

Q. You are thinking of scanning the second edition, too?

A. Yes, of course, Mr. Griffiths. This remark indicates that I am some frivolous character. There are some hundreds of books out on the Holocaust. If I was to read everyone from the beginning to the end, I think that I would never have gotten around to get myself into trouble with this pamphlet.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me while I sort through some of this.

Q. Okay. The books here that you have put into evidence are books that you relied on for various beliefs – Exhibits 71, 79 and 89, the Louis Nizer books, the Rudolf Vrba book and the book by Nyiszli. The Vrba and Nyiszli books, they support, the Holocaust.

A. That's right.

Q. And the Lillienthal [Lilienthal] book, I guess we could more properly combine that, although I don't see the material here to come to hand, with the material on Morgenthau ... {4361|4362}

A. And "Germany Must Perish".

Q. And "Germany Must Perish". Thank you. And those are books that were written during the War, and Morgenthau, you told us, had a plan that would starve half the German nation.

A. One-third.

Q. I beg your pardon. Was that plan ever put into effect?

A. Partially, yes. But then, the falling-out came between Stalin and the American Government, and it was ultimately halted.

Q. When the Marshall Plan came in which rebuilt Germany.

A. Yes, because there were political considerations. A new President was in the White House and a new wind was blowing. Korea was on the horizon, the Berlin air-lift had taken place at that time, so political considerations, not human love for the Germans, believe me, because the military troops were, the executions continued in West Germany of people.

Q. What was the plan for Hitler for conquering countries? What was his plan to do with the English after he conquered England, during the War?

A. It depends on what Allied source are you quoting.

Q. I am not quoting any Allied source. Give me a German source. What was the plan?

A. Germany lost the War because Hitler loved England. He was an Anglophile.

Q. So what was the matter with the Poles? {4362|4363}

A. There were millions of Poles working in Germany. What are you saying, that there was a German master plan to exterminate the Poles?

Q. I am asking you what was his plan?

A. Ridiculous. Certainly not the extermination of Poles or anybody else, whatever the propaganda has said since the War.

Q. What was his plan, if he had one, for the Slavs?

A. Are you saying or trying to get me to say that Hitler was going to go on a rampage to exterminate half the population of Europe? No such order was given. There was no planned genocide of people, be they Jews, gypsies, Poles or anybody else by the German Reich, Mr. Griffiths. That is a malicious propaganda lie oft repeated, and it doesn't make it true therefore.

Q. So that's just – he had no plans for what he was going to do with the conquered countries?

A. Oh, undoubtedly, he was going to incorporate large parts of them into Germany, and like many other people, for instance, after the Second World War, the Poles found historians, why they should have half of the German territories in the East. The Russians even found historians to say why they should have Kernsburg (ph) [Königsberg], that Kernsburg [sic] has always been Russian, and so on. Politicians always found academics, and I should say judicial systems, to support their causes.

We have trials in the East too, you know. So this is not new. This is life.

Q. You are not implying this is a show {4363|4364} trial, are you?

A. No, this is not a show trial. I am happy if I were to have a trial anywhere in the world, let it be Toronto, Canada, believe me.

Q. Now, we have some other books here. Nahum Goldman, that is a book that he doesn't deny that there was a Holocaust, does he?

A. No, of course he wouldn't, otherwise the very basis of the swindle would blow up in his face.

Q. Okay.

A. Of course, who was the person that said that he was a man of – I think it was Dr. Hilberg who said that Nahum Goldman was a man of action, and he was indicating he was senile when he wrote this book. I have seen some televised interviews with Nahum Goldman. If anything, he was a cultured, very sharp man, well into his eighties before he died.

Q. Exhibit 75, "The Disposal of the Dead," that is a book that deals – it is your book, isn't it?

A. Yes. It is about cremation.

Q. It looks like it is written for funeral directors. Is it true?

A. Yeah, for people who have an interest in this macabre subject.

Q. There is also burial, exhumation, embalming and funeral direction.

A. Sure.

Q. Is there anything in this book on mass cremation, more than one body at a time? {4364|4365}

A. You mean like burning in pits and so on?

Q. I mean burning more than one body at a time.

A. Nobody talks about cremation, and since we were talking about crematories and how they function, and since I obtained the plans of Topf & Sons who built the crematories in the concentration camps, they were basically the same kind of crematory, so I went to this source book which talks about no smell being associated.

Q. No smell in a crematory designed to burn one body at a time.

A. That's right.

Q. And from that you extrapolated to the conditions in the concentration camps.

A. Because of the authors. One, for instance, is Professor Dr. Bouchner [Buchner] from California who is now back in Germany, and who has done an extensive study on the burning of bodies. I thought this was a good book; it was in English; it is an authoritative book; but he says the claim, for instance, made of putting three bodies into an oven designed for one body, and by looking at the photographs that Felderer took, for instance, in Auschwitz, where you see the enclosures or let's call them the alleged enclosures on the human body on these, what do they call them? These trays where you put them into the oven, that you couldn't put three bodies in at one and the same time. You either had a breakdown of the system, or the bodies would not burn unless you chopped them up and you heaved {4365|4366} them in piece by piece, and not even the exterminationist writers have ever claimed that the Germans or Sonderkommando were this ghoulis.

Q. Professor Bouchner [sic]?

A. Yes.

Q. And he was a professor in California?

A. Yes. For many years he was.

Q. And taught what?

A. I think he was a political historian in California. I don't have his curriculum vitae with me, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Here is a great stack of books that you are relying on: "Debunking the Genocide Myth" by Paul Rassinier.

A. Yes.

Q. That's Professor Faurisson's book, is it?

A. I read the original version.

Q. This isn't the book that you read?

A. No. It's for the Court's sake, since it doesn't accept French books here, I brought this and I also brought the German book.

Q. This is published by Noontide Press?

A. Yes.

Q. And who controls Noontide Press?

A. Institute for Historical Review.

Q. Thank you.

A. Is there something in your thinking, Mr. Griffiths? It has come out repeatedly because I {4366|4367} have so many experts from the Institute for Historical Review. Are you questioning their credentials, or is it automatic that a publishing house that publishes books, they become untrue?

Q. I am asking the questions, Mr. Zundel. The jury will draw their conclusions.

"Germany Must Perish". That is George Deeth? (sic)

A. Yes, but I have the original book in my library. It is a very rare book, so for the sake of this jury I submitted a paperback copy.

Q. "The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry" by Walter Sanning. That is published by the Institute of Historical Review?

A. Yes. Again, I studied the German language —

Q. Also published by the Institute?

A. Yes.

Q. Exhibit No. 70, "Hoax of the Twentieth Century", Arthur Butz, published by ...

A. Institute for Historical Review.

Q. "'Holocaust' 120 Questions and Answers", Charles Weber, published by ...

A. Institute for Historical Review.

Q. "The Guilt Question of the Second World War Truth For Germany", published by?

A. Institute for Historical Review.

Q. "War Crimes and the Military Professional, Doenitz at Nuremberg: A Re-Appraisal" published by ...

A. Institute for Historical Review.

Q. "The Myth of the Six Million" by {4367|4368} Anonymous, Exhibit 75, published by ...

A. Noontide Press, which is associated with the Institute for Historical Review.

Q. "Gruesome Harvest Costly Attempt To Exterminate the People of Germany", published by ...

A. I have the original version, but it is published by George Deeth, Liberty Bell.

Q. Liberty Bell. White Power Reports.

A. Am I guilty of the sin of reading too many books by one publisher, Mr. Griffiths, or what?

Q. Exhibit No. 86, "Atrocity Propaganda 1914-1919". That doesn't say anything about the Holocaust in there, does it?

A. Well, but we were talking about propaganda. And since I insist that the Holocaust is just one more lie in an ongoing campaign, to see how lies are generated, how they are promoted, who promotes them, what governments do, what things and how they do it, this is an excellent case study. Do you know why? Because you can go to the reference library here in Toronto and any other library and although the media says that the Second World War was most reported with cameras there, it might come as a surprise to you, that is when I was there the last time, that one or two books dealing with propaganda — and I have it here if you'd like to deal with it, you see? Now, there, this is one of the books on propaganda that is in there. So there's about forty very good books analyzing the propaganda in the First World War, but the media and many of the writers have been confused into believing that the Second World War produced no {4368|4369} propaganda except Dr. Goebbels' propaganda. So the only propagandists in the Second World War, apparently, was Dr. Goebbels, and Hollywood didn't figure at all.

Q. Exhibit 93, "Atrocity Propaganda Is Based on Lies Say The Jews of Germany Themselves". Does it say anything about the Holocaust there?

A. It is a very significant book, because it is by Dr. Trachtenberg. It is an entire — it is an English, French and German book, and it reproduces notarized statements by leading Jewish personalities like The Treaty of the Jewish —

Q. When was it published?

A. 1923.

Q. Do you think Hitler coming to power had anything about the Jewish making those statements?

A. It was in response to the atrocity propaganda, Mr. Griffiths. If, for instance, you now have the hindsight of the forty years of history, all the brainwashing and the propaganda that has gone with it, naturally you, as a prosecutor standing here, you can say, this is ridiculous. These Jews were forced to do it.

Q. I am not saying anything. I am asking you a question. Do you think that publishing that book had anything to do with Hitler coming to power in Germany. Yes or no?

A. It is to Jews in the World to cease and desist from maligning Germany, because they were making life difficult for the Jewish community in Germany. It has to do with the Holocaust.

Q. All right. {4369|4370}

A. It is the beginning of the whole lie.

Q. We have some books, other books that you relied on: "Advance to Barbarism" by F.J.P. Veale, that distinguished English jurist. That is what they call him in the book, anyway.

A. You would be offended because you are a prosecuting attorney, but sometimes people refer to people who are in law as jurists. You know? In Germany, for instance, this is the law. You would be a jurist in Germany, even if you are an attorney.

Q. Well, this book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" wasn't written by a German.

A. No. But are we quibbling about this when we have so much at stake?

Q. I lost my place.

A. What did Veale have to say? I have to talk to that man.

Q. It is going to be good, though. I will tell you what. We will come back to Veale. Lillienthal [sic].

A. Yes. Well, this is my, if you will pardon the looks of this book, in radio talk shows I can rely on that, and quickly done so. I have somebody doing that work for me.

Q. A well-used book.

A. Yes.

Q. And he is not a Zionist.

A. No. He is a non-Zionist Jew.

Q. All right. Page 404, which was not marked, the paragraph between two yellow-marked paragraphs. {4370|4371}

A. All right.

Q. It is not marked.

A. Yeah. Right.

Q. It says: "That there are bigots and haters, that there was a Nazi Germany whose unparalleled genocide still stings the conscience of Man, and that there is still anti-Semitism, no one but the most irrational would deny."

You are not irrational, are you?

A. I hope not: but he is entitled to his opinion. I like him as an author. He has given me tremendous food for thought and source material.

Q. But that is not one of the foods that you choose to eat.

A. Well, if a person calls me irrational in print, I would be a fool if I were to quote it. I have a certain amount of self-esteem for myself, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. All right. Exhibit 81, "The Decadence of Judaism in our Time", it deals with Moshe Menuhin, and again it is well-used here.

A. Yes. He is a source book that I used because I consider him a Jewish man, but a very honest man.

Q. And not a Zionist?

A. No, he is not a Zionist.

Q. No. Page 95, again, not marked by you, half-way down the page it says:

"The End of World War II. 1945. Catastrophe of European Jewry Revealed Only a Small Remnant Survived National Redemption Versus Individual {4371|4372} Salvation."

That is the chapter or sub-chapter heading.

A. That's right.

Q. "Of the six million Jews that Hitler and his gangs of murderers could lay their hands on, only about 125,000 were left alive, or half-alive, in the Displaced Persons camp among hundreds of thousands of non-Jewish victims of torture and persecution."

A. Right.

Q. That is more food that you don't choose to eat?

A. Well, certainly, because I know that many people who are writers approach the subject with an uncritical mind, as uncritical as I was for the first half of my life, Mr. Griffiths, you see; but there are many authors – you have had some here, for instance, like Dr. Betting, who is a professor at a university, and it took him some thirty-five years of his life before suddenly something in his Holocaust course began to jolt his memory and made him look at the Holocaust in a new light. All kinds of people go on believing for all kinds of years all kinds of stories.

Q. Dr. Betting didn't say that he found the Holocaust didn't happen.

A. He was not allowed to give the expert testimony that he was intending to give here. If he had been, he would have said that.

Q. I am sure he would.

A. I had conversations with him {4372|4373} before I brought him here.

Q. On the back page, Mr. Zundel, of your pamphlet, in heavy type it says, "Zionists Dominate Media. Germans are denied equal time". And this is the part written by you.

A. It sure is.

Q. And the first paragraph, last sentence, it says:

"When Jews disagree as I do with the official Zionist version of Auschwitz, are they accused of 'racism' or 'hate'?"

What is the official Zionist version of Auschwitz, Mr. Zundel? Alfred Lillienthal's [sic] version in the non-Zionist?

A. No. But just because Dr. Lillienthal [sic] in this one instance adopts one of the Zionists' favourite platforms doesn't make him – are you trying to say that people independent of Zionism cannot also believe in the Holocaust? Millions of people do. For all I know ninety-nine per cent of this entire room believe in the Holocaust.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that what that implies is that the Holocaust is a Zionist conspiracy.

A. Am I implying that in this pamphlet there?

Q. That is what I am suggesting to you, sir.

A. Let me look at it again.

Q. You have it there, Mr. Zundel. {4373|4374} I didn't think I took it away from you.

A. Oh, there it is.

Q. Last sentence, first paragraph, "When Jews disagree".

A. Right.

"When Jews disagree as I do with the official Zionist version of Auschwitz, are they accused of 'racism' or 'hate'?"

Do you want me to answer this question?

Q. No, I am not asking you to answer the question. I ask you questions. It is my question I want you to answer not yours.

A. Good. Then what is the question?

Q. My question was whether you are implying in that that Zionism or Zionists have conspired to put over a hoax on the rest of the world.

A. No. I think that the Zionists are great exploiters of political situations. If they are known for anything, these people, they are terrific tacticians, as we have seen in this country with the Mengele affair magically being launched at the moment Ernst Zundel goes on trial being accused with the Holocaust thing, and every night a spokesman who sits in this room being a representative of the Wiesenthal Centre going to Ottawa and so on, and there are many people, believe me, who think that the Zionists are exploiting this trial to their own end. So that is what I am saying.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Is this {4374|4375} a convenient time, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Are you one of those people, Mr. Zundel?

A. I am what?

Q. Who think that the Zionists are exploiting to an end?

A. I wouldn't be surprised. I wouldn't put it past Mr. Littman at all.

Q. And are you exploiting this trial for your own end?

A. This trial is going to cost me a hundred thousand dollars. It has ruined my reputation in this country, and townspeople are threatening to kill me because [sic] of it, and believe me, one thing I would like to have out of this courtroom and that I have with the exception of the restrictions that I can't use German texts and books which I understand, I certainly hope that I have had my chance of explaining that I am not the monster and the ogre and the irresponsible man that would pit Canadian against Canadian, which is totally untrue.

I am entitled to my political opinions. As a German I am entitled, I believe, before God, "Dieux est mon Droit", to believe in the history of my people which I know is another version of the history to what is being taught in Canada. I am entitled to it under this country's every law of this country, and if I am not getting convicted under this s.177 of the Criminal Code, I will be continuing to be entitled to tell my side of history, and that's the reason why I like this {4375|4376} country.

Q. And are you exploiting this trial?

A. I think that His Honour would be the first person to step on me, or you yourself would kind of be on your feet very fast if I was unduly exploiting the trial. This is a forum where we are thrashing out whether I am a crackpot or whether I am not a crackpot, and to that extent I think you could say that I am getting a benefit out of the trial, yes.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: Adjourn till two fifteen.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Before the jury comes back in, Your Honour, there is another pamphlet that I have just given Mr. Christie that I would like to be able to put to Mr. Zundel. The pamphlet is problematical, Your Honour, in that it was written during the course of this trial, and the reason why would be putting it to Mr. Zundel relates to the last {4376|4377} exchange before the break as to whether this trial was being used by Mr. Zundel.

THE COURT: Do you have it there?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Yes, I read it. To what issue, the issue of credibility?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. That is the only issue.

THE COURT: Thank you. Anything else?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't see how it goes to the issue of credibility at all, Your Honour. It goes to the issue of how the accused felt about the trial. It is not something the Crown can allege, that I have heard him allege as published. I understand from my information it was sent to supporters of his to help him, to let them know what happened.

I don't know if it went any further than that. If it did, I would be surprised; but even if it did, I would suggest that my understanding was that I was restricted to putting to the witness anything that arose prior to the date of the charge, and in the case of Exhibit 1 prior to the publication in 1983. Now my friend seeks {4377|4378} to use in cross-examination something published in the course of the trial, which I understand was sent to his friends to explain what happened.

I think it would be unfair to put to him something that arose after the time in which I was allowed to introduce documents. It's up to Your Honour how this matter be dealt with, but I suggest that the same principle would apply in respect to anything that he published. I don't think there's any allegation that there's anything incredible in what he published. What he has written is what most newspapers have written. Nobody suggests they can't write about the trial. I don't understand why he isn't allowed to – I don't know what the suggestion is as to credibility. My friend doesn't specify and I am left to specify as to what degree of credibility is to be placed in issue.

Maybe I could have my friend's assistance

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would be pleased to assist, our Honour. Just immediately prior to the break I had indicated and Mr. Zundel denied most vehemently that he was deriving any benefit or any {4378|4379} propaganda benefit out of this trial, and that is not part of his thinking about this trial; he suffered nothing but losses as a result of his trial. And I take the position that there are paragraphs within that two-page letter that indicate that there were benefits that Mr. Zundel perceived to the prosecution, and that that was very much a part of his consideration during the course of the trial.

Had Mr. Zundel not raised the issue by talking about issues that were going on during the trial with Zionist propaganda and what-have-you, then I wouldn't have raised it.

THE COURT: Anything further, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I don't recall the accused saying that he vehemently denied benefitting from the trial. It was put to him that he enjoyed publicity from the trial, and he qualified that to say, he said there was some benefit that he was able to communicate to other free citizens in a free society when they are on trial being free to speak. I don't recall his precise words; they are on the record; but I don't recall that he said there were no benefits to {4379|4380} him from his point of view.

THE COURT: I agree with you.

RULING

THE COURT: The witness, in the closing moments of his cross-examination before the luncheon break, in response to Crown Attorney's questions, indicated that there might be some indirect benefit to him from this trial being held.

I have now been shown another piece of writing, if I can dignify it with that name, in which the accused apparently is reporting to those who are loyal to him. In it he makes comments on every conceivable subject concerning this trial. That includes the lawyers. He aggrandizes his own counsel. He appears to denigrate the Crown. He has little, if anything, complimentary to say about the Bench. He then proceeds to refer to the ethnic background of one of the jurors in what could be interpreted, on reading the total context, as a not too complimentary fashion. {4380|4381}

Crown counsel seeks to cross-examine the witness on this document. I must say that this is the first, and I hope the only time, that I have to rule on such a subject as this.

It seems to me that the issue upon which the Crown wishes to question the witness may come under the total heading of credibility. However, really, the specific issue is as to whether Mr. Zundel, here in the box, is benefitting or not benefitting from the mass of publicity that perhaps he may think, or others may think he is getting from this trial. That is collateral to the issues that the jury must try.

In addition to that, if the document were employed, it would have to be made an exhibit. If it were made an exhibit, the one juror of apparent Oriental extraction might not be able to follow my instructions which I intend to give.

Juries in this country consider the evidence, and only the evidence, when they reach conclusions as to the guilt or the innocence of persons charged with criminal offences.

In exercising my judicial discretion, {4381|4382} ensuring that that uncalled for comment which I consider to be totally racist, does not get to the jury, you may not cross-examine on that document.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I, for the record, in view of Your Honour's comments, either read in that portion that refers to the —

THE COURT: No, you may not. Please sit down. I have ruled, and it's over. If you want to read it to the Court of Appeal, read it. You will not do it here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I —

THE COURT: Please sit down. The answer is no. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: My question, Your Honour, has not yet been asked. My question is, may it be an exhibit for identification purposes for the record?

THE COURT: Not at all. It is not going to be further referred to at all. {4382|4383}

MR. CHRISTIE: May I keep it, then, Your Honour?

THE COURT: It's your property. Bring in the jury.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, Your Honour, just one other matter. I don't know whether this is the appropriate time to do it or not, but the exhibits that I have put to Mr. Zundel – and there are about four pieces of what are lettered exhibits at this time, if they are going to remain lettered exhibits rather than numbered exhibits, then I would deal with them in a different manner in cross-examination. I wonder if we might have argument and a ruling on that at this time.

THE COURT: I will hear from the defence.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I see the exhibits in question?

The Exhibit, I believe, first mentioned in this series is "Z", which is "The Hitler We Loved & Why", the accused testified he provided photographs and is not responsible for the copy.

It would be my submission that that {4383|4384} should not go before the jury because the accused is not responsible for the copy. Therefore I suggest that its prejudicial effect would outweigh its probative [sic] value.

The Exhibit "AA", I suggest, has little probative effect.

THE COURT: What is "AA"?

MR. CHRISTIE: "AA" is the pamphlet called, "Achtung. Samisdat Truth Squad". It involves a number of things that are quite irrelevant to the issue at bar. Its prejudicial effect may outweigh its probative value. That I cannot decide, neither can I decide on anything else for that matter, but my submission is that my client, I think, has acknowledged – I think, if I recall correctly, he's acknowledged authorship of this publication.

In respect to "BB", I fail to understand, other than for the prejudicial purposes, why these exhibits are being introduced. Perhaps they have some bearing on credibility in that the accused has been examined on them and has admitted authorship.

Now, "BB", if I recall correctly, Your Honour, is an advertisement and a statement about {4384|4385}

"Forward Germans. The others have begun to retreat".

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Mr. Christie. The German part has become detached.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I see now that the full pamphlet is produced. "BB" is a translation of a very small portion of a larger German document. The Crown, apparently, does not seek to either put the small portion in context, or translate the rest of the document. I find it somewhat difficult to understand how the jury can perceive the proper context without the translation of the rest of the document.

THE COURT: Then perhaps we should do the same to your exhibits if they are partially transcribed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps that's true.

THE COURT: Would you like that done?

MR. CHRISTIE: I wouldn't mind at all.

THE COURT: How many pages are there, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't recall books in German being introduced by me. The only books {4385|4386} I attempted to introduce in German were not allowed. The pamphlet is four pages. It's very closely typed and the portion translated is two paragraphs, which are very small, minutely on the bottom of the front page.

THE COURT: I have your point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Then, "CC", I have no objection to that. That was read in its entirety to the jury in any event. So my major objection, if it please Your Honour, is in respect to the booklet.

THE COURT: "Z", "AA" and "BB".

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour – Mr. Christie, I'm sorry, Mr. Zundel in cross-examination, on the book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why" adopted the copy contained within the book, notwithstanding that he did not write it or provide all of the photographs. Most of the photographs came from him, and in the second referred-to exhibit, "AA", "Achtung. Samisdat Truth Squad" is an advertisement for "The Hitler We Loved & Why" written by Mr. Zundel in which he adopts the contents of the book. It is a book that he received some consideration for, whether it was monetary {4386|4387} or in kind. And I would submit that given that, he can be held responsible for the publication of the book.

He was also on the editorial board of the publishers that published the book at the time it was published. The second edition, Your Honour, "AA", the prejudicial effect may outweigh the probative value says my friend. I would suggest that it may well be prejudicial, but it is also most probative to Mr. Zundel's true beliefs and his racist beliefs as demonstrated by that pamphlet. And it is considerably at odds with his testimony in-chief.

"BB", Your Honour, is the four-page German document. The part that is translated, Your Honour, is not lifted out of the body of the text, but is a separate —

THE COURT: May I see it, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is a separate paragraph at the bottom of the page. So it is entirely within context, has its own heading, and its own small signature. It is, if you like, Your Honour, a marginal area, complete of itself. And I've had translated the entire bottom margin including the advertisement {4387|4388} for the Zundel opinion.

THE COURT: Why couldn't it all be translated?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It could be over

THE COURT: Reply, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Two brief points. It is my recollection that the accused did not adopt all the text of "The Hitler We Loved & Why". In fact, he disassociated himself with some of the remarks in the book.

It is my understanding, too, that in his evidence he said he was never on the editorial board of Mr. Deeth's operation. In fact, he said Mr. Deeth used his name without his consent, and when he heard about it, he said he took his name off the publication.

—— {4388|4389}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: The defence objects to the admission of numbered exhibits in this trial of three documents. The first is a book entitled, "The Hitler We Loved & Why". The evidence discloses that the accused clearly supplied a number of photographs that now form a major portion of the book. He did not, he said, write the copy underneath the photographs.

Exhibit "AA" is a pamphlet concerning "Samisdat Truth Squad" which purports to name an accused's publishing company in which the book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why" is mentioned.

Exhibit "BB" is an advertisement on which the accused was questioned in part. That document is written in German. There is only a minor portion of it translated into English.

There is, in my view, nothing that is so prejudicial that outweighs the probative value of any of these exhibits. The contents of the book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why" may or may not, as the jury views it, appear to be unfortunate for the accused. Its admission is not unfair. That is especially so in {4389|4390} light of all the evidence that the accused has placed on the record to buttress his profession of honest belief in the issues contained within the confines of Exhibits 1 and 2 which the jury will have to decide.

Defence counsel takes no objection to the introduction of Exhibit "CC". My ruling is that it is all admissible. Anything that is to be said in favour of the accused I am quite satisfied will be argued extensively in front of the jury by defence counsel, as is his right.

The jury will decide what weight, if any, to accord any of these documents. They will now become exhibits in the order of the letters that appear, from "Z" through to "CC". Exhibit "BB" will not, however, become an exhibit until such time as it has been fully translated over this weekend into the English language. If there is any objection to the quality of the translation from German to the English language, that matter can be spoken to in the absence of the jury before me on Monday.

—— {4390|4391}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

I'm sorry, Your Honour, there is one final matter which would be very brief which has to do with an earlier ruling that you made about the postal authority hearing. Before I question Mr. Zundel about this, I'd like to not so much clarify that, Your Honour, as address a couple of questions to Mr. Zundel on.

THE COURT: You want to ask him about —

MR. GRIFFITHS: When this particular issue of "Did Six Million Really Die?", when it was distributed by him, Your Honour.

THE COURT: In connection with what?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, there is a reference, Your Honour, in the last paragraph, page 3 of the Exhibit No. 1 which says —

THE COURT: Starting, "You can help decisively"?

MR. GRIFFITHS: By saying:

"You can help decisively by sending your contribution to the Samisdat {4391|4392} Legal Defense Fund. Legal fees are costly in the extreme. We anticipate daily expenditures of $1000.00 in attorneys' fees and in the reimbursement of witnesses who must be flown in from Australia, Israel, Europe and from both American continents."

And I want to know whether Samisdat Legal Defense Fund was for the postal authorities or in anticipation —

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: There seems to be no limit as to how much my friend wants to go into the publication of the accused with respect to the money, and I don't see the relevance. I have never had a case yet where the question of what the accused paid his lawyer was a question of liability, but it is about to be.

THE COURT: No, I don't agree with that. If it was, I wouldn't permit it.

MR. CHRISTIE: What's the purpose of these questions? {4392|4393}

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Whether or not, Your Honour, there was a charge in existence — certainly this charge wasn't in existence at the time the Samisdat Defence Fund was incorporated, and preparations that Mr. Zundel was making for a prosecution and that he was inviting a prosecution, and the benefits that would have occurred therefrom to him.

THE COURT: So your question would be, I presume, along these lines: Does that paragraph refer to this trial or some other matter?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. I will say it at the outset. This was not, according to Mr. Zundel's testimony, distributed till after this charge.

THE COURT: I recall him saying postal privileges, or something like that.

Maybe now, Mr. Christie, that will assist you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I take it my client is going to be cross-examined on whether he was preparing {4393|4394} for some kind of aggressive, not war, but litigation that he is accused of, or this will be the allegation, that he was looking forward to prosecution.

This is not unusual in cases where people are testing the validity of certain legal principles. I suppose it could be said that it occurs in many cases where people believe their rights are at stake. I don't know how that is somehow going to the issue of credibility, and is it to be supposed that he is being dishonest when he says that he doesn't benefit from the trial because at some time long ago he anticipated the possibility of being charged by seeking and soliciting funds?

There may be some very remote nexus, but I think it is rather strange. Does that really have some benefit on credibility? It is for Your Honour to decide, but I suggest it is just a fishing expedition on whether he thought he might be charged or whether he was looking forward to a prosecution.

It might be able to do some damage to his credibility by virtue of accusing him of being litigious [sic] or something, but this being the first time he is charged in the Criminal Court, I don't know {4394|4395} whether that is relevant either. I suggest it is really far beyond anything that is relevant.

It is, of course, true that this comes naturally after the date of publication, I would think, because it is included in the publication. It's relevant as to whether it is true or not, but I don't – it's most unusual, most unusual.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The question, Your Honour, is whether the Legal Defence Fund is for the postal authorities in which case I won't ask the question, or some other purpose in anticipation of prosecution.

THE COURT: I think I should hear this in the absence of the jury, so we will all know.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn on voir dire

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS: (Voir Dire)

Q. Mr. Zundel, you have the issues. You know the argument. You know what we are referring {4395|4396} to. Was that a legal defence fund for the postal authorities hearings, sir, or was that for some other purpose?

A. The news clipping reproduced on the back page says the request comes after – no.

"Ontario has been asked to consider charges of promoting hatred against an identifiable group," the spokes man said."

Okay. That's the sole reason, really, why I published that booklet, in order to lay it before the public, and to let the public decide before the politicians had chosen to censor it. And so it was, in effect, for an anticipated defence fund in case that Mr. McMurtry, at that time, would have laid a charge. And therefore you will see on the back that this has been glued over when it no longer was apparent, and a United States Post Office was used.

Q. So that that pre-dates, then, any legal proceedings you were involved with in Canada. It has nothing to do with the postal authorities.

A. I anticipated a charge by Mr. McMurtry, because if you look at another exhibit we have in here to Mr. McMurtry asking for guidelines on hate literature, a news item carried in the Toronto Sun where Sabina Citron in one of her many attacks against me asked that charges be laid against me and that she was going to meet with Mr. McMurtry, so for the last six years this Democles [Damocles] Sword of having to have, to fight a court case, was hanging over me, and {4396|4397} so it was put on there.

Q. So it was put on in anticipation.

A. That's right.

THE COURT: What do you wish to do?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, it is part of the pamphlet, and if it has nothing to do with the postal authorities, I should be entitled to cross-examine on that as to the rest of the pamphlet.

THE COURT: I think not. I think the jury is going to read this document very carefully. Juries are not stupid. They will take whatever they wish to take from it. I don't think you should do that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: All right. Is there anything else? Bring in the jury, please.

——— {4397|4398}

— The jury enters. 3:00 p.m.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Zundel, Jews and Zionists is the same thing? Are the words interchangeable, or do they have different meaning?

A. Zionism is a political creed usually made up of Jews. However, there are exceptions like in the case of Roy McMurtry, who calls himself a Christian Zionist.

Q. And are all Jews Zionists and some Christians, or —

A. No, no.

Q. Are there some Jews that are non-Zionists?

A. That's right.

Q. "The West, War and Islam", do you have a copy of that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How many people was this distributed to, "The West, War and Islam", Exhibit 2? How large was your mailing list?

A. About twelve hundred, possible a few more. Twelve hundred people.

Q. Okay. And it was written in response to an advertisement that shows up on page 4. I understand that was your evidence.

A. That's right.

Q. And we have in evidence a translation of that German which is in here, a handwritten document. It would be in the last fifty exhibits. {4398|4399} Was this printed in a western newspaper?

A. Frankfurt Allgemeine, yes. And also Die Welt [Welt].

THE COURT: A little louder, Mr. Zundel, please.

THE WITNESS: It was also in Die Welt, a whole series of newspapers, as a campaign.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And was it always the same people?

A. Yes. It was obviously one master ad to different publications, and it ran with no changes.

Q. And there is a reference in there, that is why I was looking for the article in the translation, there is reference in there to a lodge.

A. That's right. But it became so small in reproduction in the assembly that it must have fallen off.

Q. Okay. Well, we will wait a minute until we get that, and then I will come back to the lodge.

Let's go back to page one in "The West, War and Islam". And in the first paragraph you deal with stereotypes, both Arabic and Western stereotypes.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And in the second paragraph you appear to do the same. I don't want to go over it too quickly.

A. No. {4399|4400}

Q. Okay. And then, in the third paragraph where you started underlining, you say:

"Certainly, the West has at its disposal tremendous facilities for the education of the public but until now, these facilities of information, education and entertainment have been used purposely to misinform, to miseducate and to instill hatred against the Islamic peoples."

Now, when you say "the West" there you are referring to North America or the U.S.?

A. The West generally, the way I see it, is the entire western world, western culture, which includes even England, France, Germany, Italy, America especially because if you are talking about the media of the West, English-speaking media.

Q. All right. And we heard what Mr. Collins said, thirty-five years a journalist in the West, as to his comments on misinforming, miseducating and instilling hatred against the German people. Did you listen to Mr. Collins at all?

A. Well, him having been a journalist and possible having been guilty of doing some stereotyping himself would have a vested interest, and therefore, naturally, would come to the defence of the press.

Q. So he was your witness, was he not?

A. Certainly, but that doesn't mean that, number one, I know the man's entire life story, or {4400|4401} that he agrees with me, or I with him.

Q. You accept that part of his evidence that you like, and you disagree with him on the areas that you dislike?

A. He is a colourful Canadian of English birth with a fantastic past. If I were to know about, everything, there are some points in every human being's life that we wouldn't like to agree with. I couldn't speculate as to that.

Q. In Canada we have a Government owned broadcasting company. In England there is a government-owned broadcasting company. In New Zealand there is a government-owned broadcasting company. In Australia there is a government-owned broadcasting company. Are all these government-owned companies, used to misinform, miseducate and instil hatred against the Islamic people?

A. Frequently.

Q. And is that because of the Zionist control of that government broadcast?

A. Certain branches of them, certainly.

Q. "Just as certainly," it goes on, "this situation has not come about by accident, for the media by which disinformation is being disseminated are controlled by a small group of unscrupulous men who know exactly what they are doing and who will stop at nothing in order to attain their criminal and murderous ends." {4401|4402}

Those are pretty strong words, are they not, Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes.

Q. "This same group of media manipulators and its predecessors broadcast and, published anti-German propaganda in both world wars and included the Japanese as victims in the Second World War. These men are capable brainwashing experts. On their account, millions of Westerners who had never met a German or Japanese were inflamed with murderous hatred, sufficiently so that they killed millions of persons who might otherwise have been their friends. If it can be done against Germans and Japanese, it can be done against the Islamic peoples – and it is being done."

Now, let's, just pause there for a moment. In order to misinform, miseducate and instil hatred and manipulate the media, it would have to be more than a small group of people involved in that, wouldn't there? Reporters would have to be involved in that. All the people involved in the media.

A. No. You wouldn't need that at all. All it would need would be people who belong to, for instance, a certain kind of a political spectrum, like Marxists, communists, or —

Q. Liberals? {4402|4403}

A. It could also be liberals, sure. Part of the reason why the country is a degeneracy, and abortion, is because there are so many liberals in the media, and why there is rampant talk about dope-taking and this kind of stuff, is because our society is being brainwashed by liberal elements, of course.

Q. It was the Liberal Party that you ran for the leadership of.

A. Certainly was, to reform it.

Q. "We Germans have learned through this sad experience that a nation's salvation lies in its reputation and a nation's reputation depends upon information – not misinformation and misrepresentation. The same principle is true for the Islamic nations. Let us now look upon the face of the enemy – your enemy and ours who is responsible for endangering world peace and in consequence, your lives and ours."

Who is the "ours" you are referring to? Is that rhetorical, "your enemy and ours"?

A. No. If I talk about Arab peoples, their enemy, and the people of the Western world as "our enemy", so together it makes two. So that's "ours". Otherwise I would be talking about my enemy.

Q. Well, I didn't know who it was you were referring to.

A. Well, in the two, and naturally I am appealing to the Arab people, and you are being {4403|4404} stereotyped. And remember, Mr. Griffiths, what I said from the beginning. This has to be seen in the context of when this ad appeared, and as a reaction thereto.

If you look at all the magazines and you go back in the microfilms – and by Monday morning I can produce that to you – I have stacks of supporting documents that there was war, tangible agitation for war in the Middle East. The Americans had set a strike force to rescue the hostages, and so on, and I felt things were coming to a head in the Middle East.

Q. You felt it was time that somebody poured a little oil on the troubled waters?

A. Through information, dissemination of information to remove negative stereotypes? I consider this a very unkind cut, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. What?

A. That you intimidated I put oil on troubled fires.

Q. No. Troubled waters. Is that what you were doing – pouring oil on troubled waters; calming the situation down with this literature?

A. That's right. I wanted to prevent rather than to increase the disharmony.

Q. You wanted people to be tolerant, to not go to war.

A. Exactly right.

Q. There is the advertisement, Exhibit 149. And in this larger portion you've got it outlined in yellow, and perhaps I will take a minute and show it to the jury so they can see where it is. And in that small part you've got it translated it here, I {4404|4405} think.

A. That's right. It says —

Q. "Responsible for the content" —

A. "... of this advertisement is the Janusz-Korczak-Loge Berlin of whom the four signatories are members."

And the four signatories are G. Albeck, S. Borenstein, W. Schulz, and M. Zuckermann.

Q. And their names are on there.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, before seeing this ad, had you ever heard of a Janusz-Korczak Lodge in Berlin?

A. No, I did not.

Q. And did you hear of it after you saw this ad?

A. No. I was interested in the context, the content of the ad.

Q. How do you know it isn't a retirement lodge or a hunting lodge or a B'Nai B'Rith Lodge?

A. When we talk about "Loge", a "Loge" in German, that is what it says. No retirement home in German is called a "Loge". We don't talk here about "Loge" for old people. A "Loge" in German only refers to Freemasons, nothing else.

Q. Wouldn't it refer to a B'Nai B'Rith Lodge?

A. We refer to in Germany, B'Nai B'Rith is like a Freemasonic lodge.

Q. So you are equating B'Nai B'Rith {4405|4406} with Masons.

A. In Germany we do, yes. There are books out that refer to B'Nai B'Rith Loge in the same way that Janusz-Korczak Loge is being referred to here.

Q. All right. That's fine. I just wanted to check that.

A. And excuse me, Mr. Griffiths. I wanted to answer that so there can be no misunderstanding. In my research for Freemasonry, the beginning of the B'Nai B'Rith Lodge, organization, had many of the Freemasonic trappings, because many of the people that came into B'Nai B'Rith apparently came from the — think you will find it in the exhibit here in the Encyclopaedia Judaica.

Q. Yes. Didn't it say that because Jews were excluded from Masonic lodges that they started their own B'Nai B'Rith?

A. Referring, in Germany and so on? That could well be. But in the Encyclopaedia Judaica it refers to B'Nai B'Rith members coming from Masonic lodges, so they must have been Masons.

Q. Wouldn't it be difficult to control the Masons if you are excluded by religion from being a member?

A. On the continent, in some Prussian countries, in some centuries when Frederick the Great was in charge of the Prussian lodge, you are correct; there was a very serious conflict of Freemasons not being allowed into some lodges and so on. There is quite a body of literature on that. {4406|4407}

Q. Yes.

A. But that changed very rapidly, 1830s, 1840s, 1870s. You will find that Freemasons, by that time, are beginning to be admitted quite frequently in the eighteenth century.

Q. And by that time Freemasonry is how old?

A. That depends on when one puts the date for Freemasonry. One Mason says it goes back to King Solomon's Temple. Others back to the 1770s or 1760s.

Q. Well, the Encyclopaedia Judaica that you have here, Exhibit 164 ...

A. It is on the next page, I think.

Q. Well, you will find some things on the next page, but it starts on page 122. It says, "Freemasons", and it says, "Modern Freemasonry began in England around 1717. In 1723 the London Grand Lodge adopted a constitution formulated by the Reverend James Anderson based on some older traditions."

A. Okay.

Q. Reverend James Anderson doesn't sound like a Jewish name to me.

A. No. But let's read it in context. You say modern Freemasonry began; other Masons believed in the rituals of, the Knights Templar going back to King Solomon. The word here is "Freemasonry".

Q. Is that the boy[ ]scout in mythology about Freemasonry, Knights Templar and King Solomon's Temple?

A. I hardly think that George {4407|4408} Washington was of a boy[ ]-scout mentality, or Staff Sergeant Bassett was, or Sergeant Williams, or anybody else who is a Freemason. These people are part of this group. They take it seriously, and they have a body of literature and belief. It may be a fake history, but there are many Freemasonic publications where the origins of Freemasonry goes at least to King Solomon's Masonry, if not before.

Q. When do you date it from?

A. As it says here, "Modern Freemasonry began in England around 1717."

Q. Okay. "... in 1723 the London Grand Lodge adopted a constitution formulated by the Reverend James Anderson, based on some older traditions."

A. So there we go.

Q. "A printed constitution facilitated the foundation of new lodges on the basis of a recognized authority. During the next decades the lodges spread, in Britain, France, Holland, Germany, and many other countries. All the lodges regarded themselves as belonging to the same fraternity, and a Freemason appearing at any lodge with a certificate of membership was admitted to the work of the lodge and entitled to hospitality and help in case of need. The first paragraph of the constitution stated that anyone found to be true and honest, of whatever denomination or persuasion, was to be admitted. The constitution obliged the member only to hold 'to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves,' a declaration of religious tolerance based on the current Deist trend, which postulated a Supreme Being who could be conceived of by any rational being. It is not known whether the possible aspiration of Jews to be accepted in the lodges influenced the wording of the constitution; yet it is formulated in a way that includes Jews as possible {4408|4409} members. Thus, when a Jew asked for admission in 1732, one of the London lodges accepted him. The doors of the English lodges remained open to Jews in principle, although in practice there was some discrimination."

So we've got about fifteen years after the founding of Freemasonry, modern Freemasonry, before the first Jew is admitted; is that right?

A. That's according to this article. And also you must remember that the people who founded Freemasonry were living in an age when they took the Old Testament, for instance, very seriously. And so that's why there are, I am quite sure, these references to the religion.

Now, there is an interesting book, further to what you have read here, and it's called, "Jews and Freemasons", it's by a Jewish professor. It was first published, I believe, by Harvard University and in that book he mentions the struggles that some national lodges, I think there was especially the lodge in Potsdam, for instance, which was a suburb of Berlin, and was quite important in the context of Prussia, was having quite an argument whether coming from Paris, or coming from England, businessmen that come through, whether they should be accepted in that lodge or not. So you are right. There was a period of time when Freemasons were excluding Jews from some parts of Europe {4409|4410} just as there now is a struggle in America whether black Freemasons should be admitted to white lodges. There is a tremendous controversy raging right now within Masonry, and I have a Mason acquaintance in Houston, Texas, who has supplied me with much information about Freemasonry who is trying to reform Freemasonry in America so they should not be lily-white lodges.

Q. Okay. The International Zionists. I am still on page one:

"The International Zionists:

The leadership of the West is heavily influenced and often dominated by a small minority of this alien political persuasion."

"Alien" – "foreign"? Are you with me?

A. Yes, it is. "Alien political persuasion", that is, I think, an important word here.

Q. And does that mean it is a foreign political persuasion in the West?

A. Yes.

Q. "Political and religious Zionism play a disproportionately large role in the West because of Zionists' domination of the mass media of information, education and entertainment, the banking system, the secret societies and the world communist conspiracy."

Quite a mouthful, Mr. Zundel. Your {4410|4411} support, you've indicated, for the proposition that Zionists control the media comes, amongst other places, from a book called, "The Jewish List".

A. One of them. The other one that I mentioned of the speech by the Chief of the Staff of the United States Army, General George Brown, at Duke University, in the fall of 1977. There were also statements by Spiro Agnew. I've got a clipping right here where he was headlined, "U.S. Mideast Policy Set by Jews Quotes Agnew".

Q. Well, we are talking about manipulation in the media. You told us that it was based on this book.

A. In part.

Q. In part. "Jewish List".

A. All right. And this book called, "The Powers That Be", by David Halverstein. (ph)

Q. All right, Mr. Zundel. We will get there.

A. Okay.

Q. And you told us that somebody who was Jewish was not necessarily Zionist, and I am wondering how you can tell which people are Zionists and which people are not.

A. That's relatively easy, Mr. Griffiths. "By their fruits you shall know them", it says in the Bible. And it's as simple as that in politics. With people who are in public life and politicians, it does one well to watch not only what they say, but what they do, and what the result is of what they say. You see? And in the United States it {4411|4412} says here, Spiro Agnew, that the national impact media are Jewish, and, with other influential Jewish had created a disastrous United States Middle East policy. And he says, Agnew's interview published in "The Washington Star" talked, about Zionist influence in a series of media interviews designed to promote his new novel about an ambitious vice-president. Now —

Q. Mr. Zundel, what was Mr. Spiro Agnew's fruits?, Was he convicted of fraud?

A. He was. He had access to all the secret service documents in the United States as vice-president, and therefore, I think, had a pretty good idea of who was in control of what. And since he is repeating what the Chief of the General Staff said virtually verbatim, I think we can figure that it came from the same source, his information.

Q. You mean it might both come from the Chief of Staff Brown?

A. Intelligence information that would be available to people at the highest level of the American Government.

Q. So although the American Government is investigating his own media to see who controls this media —

A. During the Watergate problems it came out that President Nixon had asked one of the staffers, I think it was Haldeman to go and investigate how many he said revolutionary Jews were working, for instance, in the Labour Department. You know? So this is not uncommon. There are references to those things.

Q. And what happened to Nixon? {4412|4413}

A. Well, maybe they were all at the tail end of receiving a fierce and ferocious Zionist pressure. We can look at it that way. Many people have suggested that.

Q. "Zionists are aided and abetted by millions of brainwashed Christians who suffer from the previously mentioned distortions about the Islamic World and its peoples, whom they believe mistakenly to be 'bad'. Just as mistakenly, the brainwashed Christians of the West have been led to believe that vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good' ..."

And you showed us, you had three files there in support of your belief. One was about vicious Jews and one was about militant Jews and one was about greedy Jews.

A. Mr. Griffiths, I have in my hand —

Q. Is that right?

A. No. A sub-committee report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the United States where an Israeli citizen and who happens to be the man in charge of the Human Rights Commission, Professor Israel Shahak (ph) gives chapter and verse of the treatment of people in the occupied area —

Q. We are not talking about people in the occupied areas; we are talking about yesterday when you were talking, you had three files, one for vicious Jews, one for militant Jews and one for greedy Jews, in {4413|4414} support of your views that Jews are militant, greedy and vicious. That is the question.

A. Mr. Griffiths, I am charged with spreading false news. So therefore I will martial my defence in my defence.

Q. Do you have those three files with you?

A. I still have them there. We can go through them sheet by sheet and charge by charge, and in the end I will prove to this judge and jury that there are vicious, militant, greedy people who call themselves Jews, in quotation marks.

Q. And are you telling us that at the time you read this article that you had these files already made up, or you made them up afterwards?

A. Mr. Griffiths, partly the reason why I am separated from my wife is that I have a house[-]full of papers and drive everybody nuts with clippings. Believe me.

Q. Do you have a file on vicious, greedy and militant Nazis?

A. Yes, I do. I have a big file on war crimes, a big file on war criminals, and they are all neatly filed away.

Q. And vicious and militant and greedy Catholics?

A. No, I don't, because this is not an issue in this trial, and I did not specifically glean out my thousands of, maybe millions of clippings for vicious Catholics, in quotation marks.

Q. I'm sorry, I don't want to miss {4414|4415} anything here.

THE COURT: We will adjourn now for fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— EXHIBIT NO. 170: German newsletter with English translation re Bonn Police State.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. We have finally left off here, Mr. Zundel":]

"... vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good', because the Christian Bible mentions 'Jews' as 'God's Chosen People'. Ever since 1945, the Zionists and their hirelings have used this self-serving myth as a tool for the deception of the Western Christian masses. We see the results of this massive deceit in the many 'Councils of Christians & Jews', so-called 'Brotherhood Weeks', 'Inter-faith Services', conventions and the like."

Are Councils of Christians and Jews and, Brotherhood Weeks, inter-faith services, is that part of the Zionist conspiracy from what I understand?

A. I believe they are tools, yes, propaganda tools.

Q. Okay. We shouldn't have Brotherhood Weeks, interfaith services? {4416|4417}

A. If they were only meant for fostering brotherhood, fine, but if they are used as forums for hate-mongering, then I think they are just propaganda tools.

Q. All right. And you say here, I understand, you have problems with space as you have explained to us, and you say that this is part of the "massive deceit in the many Councils of Christians and Jews, Brotherhood Weeks, Inter-faith Services" Are most of those bad?

A. Let's go to the top, about the Christian Church, to see it in context. Every Sunday morning, and quite often late at night, I watch programmes like, "Praise the Lord", "PTL Club", or Reverend Gerry Falwell's programme, and I am always amazed how Christians who are alleged to teach or are asked to turn the other cheek, love thy enemy and so on, as tenets in their religion, can show and be so full of praise for the State of Israel. Frequently we have guests appearing on talk shows on these religious programmes which have wide, wide audiences, millions of people, and they unequivocally adopt the policies and identify themselves with the State of Israel.

During the recent war in Lebanon it was almost sickening to see how much Israeli propaganda supplied by Israel, news reels and so on, quite openly admitted, Christian broadcasts were broadcasting.

Q. How many radio appearances have you made, and television appearances — two separate questions, if you know.

A. I do. About a hundred and fifty, {4417|4418} hundred and seventy, roughly, radio talk shows a year, and not that many television shows. Usually in reference to some event like the Court case, or when a place is raided somewhere, or something like that.

Q. Okay. Twenty, thirty television shows a year, is that fair?

A. Maybe in that neighbourhood, maybe less.

Q. And how many interviews to the media would you be giving in a year?

A. As I just said, maybe there's — print media interviews, of course, we haven't covered. A fair amount.

Q. That is what I meant, the print media. Is there quite a few?

A. Sure.

Q. And are you regularly putting out press packages, press releases to members of the public?

A. What I call background information on topics of interest that grab the headlines.

Q. Okay. And you are quoted as a result of those?

A. Not as often as I would like to be, Mr. Griffiths, but sometimes.

Q. So the Zionist-controlled media hasn't stopped you from getting on the air.

A. Quite frequently one typical case in point, I was asked to go on a programme with Sol Littman last fall, and Mr. Shatski, from the CBC, bumped me off the programme. Now, the inside workings I don't know why I was bumped off the programme twenty {4418|4419} minutes before this cross-Canada programme. Somebody managed not to get me on the programme with Mr. Littman, which would have certainly presented a far balanced view on this war criminals question, and here was Mr. Shatski, Jewish, and Mr. Littman, Jewish, and they dominated the show and had it to themselves. I don't call it balanced broadcasting or reporting.

Q. And that's how many times a year on the radio and thirty times a year where there is a balanced broadcast?

A. That is what you say. Do you know how many regular —

Q. I am talking about your appearances.

A. No. Let's see that in the context for an individual who doesn't get a chance to get on a radio programme that might seem like a lot of coverage. There are, in the United States alone, almost ten thousand radio and TV stations. So if I get on 175, let's say 150 American TV shows one time, one day, can you imagine how many other programmes there are? I am a drop in the bucket. No one person can — you can certainly not intimate that my 150 or 170 shows a year that I am going to the media produce a balanced viewpoint. I am a drop in the bucket. I am, what do they call it? In Europe we call it (German phrase). When Jews were popular, every monarch had one or two Jewish families, and to show their tolerance, they would trot out this Jewish individual to say, "Look how tolerant I am".

Q. That is like Himmler saying, "Everybody had their decent Jew".

A. Yes. So they gave me one programme {4419|4420} a year.

Q. "International Secret Societies". You have indicated this is your hobby, or one of your hobbies — flying saucers and Freemasons.

A. Not quite, but I was interested, yes.

Q. And you've put a lot of books into evidence. Some of them are quite old, go back to 1919, 1920, 1800s, I guess — Captain William Morgan and you have clearly read very extensively on this.

A. I didn't put Professor Katz' book in because it came from the library, you know.

Q. That's all right. You've read it and you indicated that. I am just wondering how these societies can still be secret if somebody like you or me or anybody else go to the library, can read all about them.

A. That's a good question. Maybe it is for the reason that we saw displayed right here in this courtroom that some police officers took their Masonic oath more seriously than the oath on the Bible.

Q. Well, they were both on the Bible. He says he swears oaths on the Bible, his Masonic oath.

A. Mr. Griffiths, I don't mean to be disrespectful to you, this court, or the police officers, but I was shocked. I really was shocked that there was an oath that was so important that it would supersede the oath that I had to take, for instance, in this court. That's why I think

Q. They took an oath on the Bible same as you — {4420|4421}

A. Sure, but I am to reveal everything which I am forced to do here, and do, but they were able to get a special privilege by virtue of them having certain secrets that they would not reveal.

Q. Did you take an oath on the Bible not to reveal something?

A. No. I took an oath on the Bible to tell the truth, and that is what I am doing; but what I am saying is, this is why these secret societies are still secret. I give you as the primary reason that at every level of these oaths, these oaths become more binding, and we heard about one case where they say that if you reveal any of these secrets your tongue will be torn out and your liver will be buried, or something, at sundown at some local beach. I mean, these blood-curdling things, and to these people who reveal oaths, some of these people, as they move up in the hierarchy, I don't know.

Q. And you agree with me that you frequently see ranks of Masons with lapel pins who don't make secret of their membership?

A. Yes. At certain periods of their careers, and this is the reason why they have flourished, because they have an implied allure that if you are a Mason, or a member of this fraternity, it might get you ahead. That is the implied allure of these organizations.

Now, it could be totally fictitious, I don't know about that, but nevertheless, that is the implication that people get, and I have been solicited by people who have been Freemasons with the suggestion of, "Why don't you come and join us?", as a young fellow, {4421|4422} you know. So the allure was there, and I didn't know much about it at that time, and I thought, "Well, geez, it might be good in business or whatever. So maybe this is why there are so many lower echelon Freemasons which never, ever get to the higher ranks, and that is my point. And what I said yesterday I repeat today. I know Freemasonic members who are decent people and with whom I have enjoyed a good working relationship for a long time. I don't believe that they, themselves, would be part of a global conspiracy; but nevertheless, if it is so secret, how do we know what the leaders at the top are plotting? Maybe these men are used as gullible fools. I don't know.

Q. You say at page two, referring to the rituals of the secret societies, that they come from the Kabbala, that their contents are Jewish, their goals are Jewish, and their masters are Jewish. What are the goals of Freemasonry?

A. One of them is the universal state. The World Republic.

Q. I thought that was a Zionist goal, you said.

A. Pardon me?

Q. I thought that was a Zionist goal.

A. When did I say that? I didn't say that. What I quoted was, yesterday, in the book, where it says one line only, that they are Jewish from beginning to end. I think I read that into the record yesterday. If you'd like to pass me the book, I will be happy to find it.

Q. Well, excuse me, Mr. Zundel, are {4422|4423} the goals Jewish or Zionist?

A. Oh, that's what you're driving at.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Oh, now I get it. Well, Zionists are only one branch of Jewry, you know? And quite frequently you see an opposition between Zionists and Jews, but quite often there is a conflict of interest.

For example, you read one this morning yourself where you said there was a non-Zionist Jew in this case, Alfred Lillienthal [Lillienthal], agreeing with a Zionist position. So the Jewish people are far too colourful, far too diverse to be fitted into one mo[u]ld you see.

Q. So the Jewish goal that you are referring to there is a world government?

A. Well, David Ben Gurion, giving an interview to Look Magazine in 1958 or '59, stated exactly that, that their goal was a world government with the seat of the government in Jerusalem.

Now, that's exactly right. I was startled myself when I got that. 1958 by David Ben Gurion giving an interview. I didn't introduce it.

Q. Do you think you could file that?

A. No, I didn't — this is not in evidence.

Q. Oh.

A. I am drawing from memory, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. And a world government, I take it, would be contrary to your nationalist views? {4423|4424}

A. You come back to the word "nationalist". This really has gotten to be a bee under your bonnet. Look, Canadian nationalism is fashionable with all kinds of politicians. We had a disastrous economy in this policy, shutting out Americans because we didn't want to have internationalist investment here. Then we wanted to have a restriction on how many Americans can play football here. That is nationalism.

Q. Mr. Zundel, can you answer my question?

A. Repeat it, please.

Q. Whether a world government would be contrary to your nationalist views.

A. Not to my nationalist views. It is contrary to nationalist views, yes.

Q. And are those views you share?

A. I am against world government, yes, as proposed by the proponents.

Q. Are you for any forum?

A. I think that we ought to have a world health organization, which we have already. I think we ought to have a world weather service. I think we ought to have a world organization that regulates aircraft traffic, outer space, stuff like this; but believe in the sovereignty of states, the way nations evolved and so on. I think that much of the problem of today, Mr. Griffiths, is caused by people meddling in other people's affairs too remote from the local scene, causing havoc among many people.

Q. All right. And one of the things, {4424|4425} understand, that you dislike about Zionism you mentioned the other day, is that they have a dual —

A. Loyalty?

Q. — loyalty. That was the word you used.

A. That's right.

Q. And I assume that means one loyalty to the State that they are living in, and another loyalty to Israel.

A. That's right.

Q. Do you have a dual loyalty, Mr. Zundel?

A. I don't. I am a West German citizen living in Canada, have lived here for twenty-five years, and you can consider me living in exile for the moment. And I have never —

Q. And your loyalties, then, are with West Germany, do I understand?

A. West Germany? An occupation State? No. I was born in that geographic location of the Black Forest which happens to be in Germany, and I happen to be living here as a fairly decent citizen for twenty-five years, and I have obeyed the laws of this country for twenty-five years and respected them. You can see my record. I have never been to jail or charged for anything.

Q. And are you working towards getting rid of the occupation government as you've called it of West Germany?

A. I would dearly love to see Europe united without the borders and the minefields and guard {4425|4426} towers and the dogs in Germany and Europe. I think it is unnatural, and one day we will all rue the day that Europe has not a long time ago found some way of evolving together, yes.

Q. And is one of the stumbling blocks to getting ride of the occupation government the Holocaust?

A. I believe it is. I really do.

Q. And I guess another stumbling block would be the Nuremberg Trials.

A. The Holocaust was derived from Nuremberg. I think that Nuremberg was the root of all evil.

Q. Okay. "The International Bankers". you [sic] have told us you don't know too much about it, so I won't ask you anything about that. "International Communism". It says, about half way down the paragraph:

"Few Easterners are aware of the contradiction in terms of a so-called 'Islamic-Communist Revolution', for that would be as absurd as to believe in 'idealistic materialism' or 'divine godlessness'."

A. That's right.

Q. "It is therefore nonsense, but nevertheless believed by many Westerners who accept many aspects of communist materialism so long as they are camouflaged by labels such as 'capitalism', 'equalitarianism', 'liberalism', 'democracy' and 'progressive'." {4426|4427}

Do I understand from that that democracy is a communist concept?

A. Democracy certainly is a materialist concept, and communism is called dialectic materialism, because it really does deny the spirit. And so therefore, anything that is materialist in philosophy, as far as I am concerned, has the potential of being communist.

Q. Well, what do we do, Mr. Zundel? We live in — well, do we live in an egalitarian country now, a democratic country?

A. We are trying to, as Winston Churchill said, I think we are muddling through, Mr. Griffiths. We are far from perfect.

Q. Well, are we safer to get rid of democracy, get rid of egalitarianism?

A. No, nobody says, but we ought to fight for democratic rights which, what I believe this is all about, the right of somebody to differ and to have a different viewpoint. I think this is part of the democratic tradition that is constantly threatened by interest which is as natural all around the world. There is this interest by States and so on to suppress certain opinions.

Now, I think that democracy, if you are talking about plurality, is an interesting thing. If I had the chance, I wouldn't change very much in Canada, believe me. I am quite happy with the system.

Q. Okay. So you disagree, then, with Hitler when he calls egalitarianism a Jewish concept designed to aid Jews, and he doesn't have very many nice {4427|4428} things to say about democracy, neither.

A. Mr. Griffiths, Hitler was a personality. Like all people, a child of his times. He had gone through the war. He was still partly with one foot in Imperial days, and aristocratic days, and there was a terrible upheaval in Europe and he was a reaction to it.

I am Ernst Zundel. I am different. Every time a baby is born, there is a new concept of life. I understand this perfectly. I am not Adolf Hitler, and I think I'd let Hitler take care of himself in the history books if he gets a fair hearing with his ideas.

Q. All right. So my question is whether you disagree with him on his definition that egalitarianism is a Jewish concept as is democracy, designed to assist the Jews in their control over the rest of us.

A. The Jewish intellectual Karl Marx —

Q. No. Do you understand my question?

A. Yes. I am trying to answer it. But maybe, correct me if I am wrong, I think the Jewish intellectual, Karl Marx, for instance, was an egalitarian, but he, too, was a child of his age. We have just gone through the French Revolution which had "liberté, égalité, fraternité." "Egalité", big deal. And I understand, Karl Marx got his ideas from the Hurons, because the[y] lived in longhouses; so there was [sic] many ideas under the Sun, and there will always be people among us that are elitist, aristocrat; there will be poor man and rich man, and as {4428|4429} long as there are possibilities for us to live unfettered without doing harm to society, that will be a good society, and I believe that Canada is trying to be that.

Q. So do you believe what Karl Marx said about egalitarianism, democracy and the control of the Jews?

A. That was a long question.

Q. Do you want me to break it down?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Karl Marx, or Adolf Hitler?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Did I say Karl Marx? I beg your pardon.

Q. Adolf Hitler is what I am talking about. And do you agree with his concept that egalitarianism is something that was started and promoted by Jews to enable them to control the rest of us?

A. I think, Mr. Griffiths, that possibly that was the information that he had available at that time. It might have even been popular to say that at that time. I don't agree with it.

Q. You don't agree with it. That is my question, Mr. Zundel. Do you agree with him or disagree when he also says that democracy is another decadent idea of the Jews to enable them to control the rest of us?

A. Hitler dominated the German scene for over twenty years, gave thousands of speeches.

You know, I have two volumes at home that contain two {4429|4430} thousand pages of Hitler's speeches.

Now, unlike every politician, in election campaigns, as agitation tools, undoubtedly, he did what many people do, frequently in debates, and I wouldn't be surprised even courtrooms, we say things to have a certain effect. And he had what he perceived in Germany in the nineteen twenties as a Jewish problem and that is what he said to address that problem.

Now, am I defending that man what he said in 1923?

Q. I am not asking you to defend him. I am asking you whether you agree with him.

A. No, I don't.

Q. Thank you. Did Hitler, in his analysis — let me just backtrack for a minute. What I am clutching here is an English [sic] copy of "Mein Kampf".

A. I have never seen that one.

Q. And Hitler, in "Mein Kampf" and the growth of his political movement came out of it, and he talks about a great deal about it is, what I should say about "Mein Kampf", came out of the First World War. Is that right?

A. The book?

Q. His ideas. A lot of his —

A. Pre First World War, First World War. Yes.

Q. And he was very much concerned with Germany's guilt or perceived guilt by the Germans for the First World War; is that true?

A. Not by the perceived guilt, but by the stated guilt in the Versailles Treaty. I think {4430|4431} it was Article 221 or 229 where the Germans were forced to sign a clause that they, themselves, solely had started the war. And Winston Churchill and many other writers have pointed out the evil that this particular paragraph in that Treaty has caused, because it condemned Germany to be a pariah for twenty years, and ultimately many writers and historians have related the Second World War directly at the foot of that particular document.

Q. The Versailles Treaty?

A. Especially the war guilt clause.

Q. Did Hitler have anything to say about the relationship between Freemasonry, Zionists or Jewish control of banks, and communism?

A. Did he say things about that?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, yes, he did.

Q. Relationship between —

A. Yes. Like writers of the period, yes. Ludendorff did.

Q. And is, his analysis of the situation similar or dissimilar to yours?

A. I would say that I have the benefit of another fifty years of observing history at work, and having widely travelled, that I am possibly, maybe a little less dogmatic, but nevertheless, there are some truisms in history which don't necessarily change.

Q. Okay.

A. For instance, Zionism wasn't a very big force when Hitler's career started.

Q. But he talked more about Jews than {4431|4432} Zionists, didn't he?

A. In those days. They didn't have human rights in those days, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Now, you conclude "The West, War and Islam" with an appeal for funds to be made available to you and your organization so you can begin a public information campaign immediately. Did you get any money out of this?

A. You know, this is one of the sore points of this trial with me. I got exactly two book orders out of this mail-out that I sent out. One was from an individual in Amman, Jordan, who ordered thirty copies of Exhibit No. 1, and another one was some tape orders from somebody in Tehran.

Q. All right. And was this letter of yours, you are writing this as a businessman trying to promote some business, bring some more money into Samisdat?

A. It would — the effect of it would be that I could naturally print books and make films and stuff like that, but the thought to me was certainly far less mercenary and far more idealistic.

Q. And you've invited — you've indicated that you will waive all copyrights and you invite the receptors of this to pass it along, or to use it as they see fit.

MR. CHRISTIE: If my friend is going to — I must object. If my friend is going to quote the letter, he should do so, but not misrepresent the letter. It doesn't say, "Pass it along". It says, "to quote this appeal in whole or in part". {4432|4433}

Now, that's my objection.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. It was your intention that they quote the appeal in whole or in part, or that they pass along the letter, or in whatever way, spread the news?

A. If they felt inclined to do it. I didn't want to get involved in correspondence back and forth from all far corners of the world. I, at the time, felt there was possibly a war coming. There was no time for lengthy correspondence, and I had a sense of urgency attached to it, and therefore I added that.

Q. All right. Were you also trying to make some contact through this with Arab individuals who had some finances that would assist you in this or any other work that you were doing?

A. You mean, like to finance a film or something like that?

Q. No. Whatever else —

A. If that came about, believe me, after twenty years of nickel and diming myself half to death with $5 and $10 contributions and $4.95 book sales, it would be nice to have somebody to say, "I invest in the film with you and you pay me back over a period of time", or something, and that would have made things easier for me.

Q. That would have been in your mind when you are writing this to Arab countries in particular, and oil countries, I presume. Am I right oil countries?

A. I think it is apparent from the {4433|4434} text that I felt that these people, sitting far from the Western media and the Western populations, that had the expertise to do this for them.

Q. All right.

A. Just like I have read some newspapers like The London Times, The Times of London, which is being exported down to the Middle East — always advertisements in there for people who are interested in obtaining Arab financing for various — I think they call it either seat money, or venture capital. That's it.

Q. So in your plans for final victory, I guess Arabs don't figure very highly?

A. Mr. Griffiths, that is a total misconception that you have obviously in your mind. Maybe you have been reading "Mein Kampf" too long.

Q. No. I have just been reading your material, Mr. Zundel.

A. What I am saying to you is this, that the Aryan concept — remember I said yesterday that Brahmins in India can belong too, Italians, French, and so on?

Q. Christian Jews.

A. In the National Socialist government, in fact, and in the National Socialist Party there were quite a number of National Socialist members as long as they became Christian. This is not a concept, the Aryan concept, that is narrow that we have a slide rule that says, "Now, you have ten shades of blue and therefore you are Aryan", and "You are from Southern Italy and you are not." Now, that does not preclude {4434|4435} that we do not love other people just like I love my only two children and my family, but nevertheless, I don't go around beating up on other parents' children. On the contrary, if there is a child in trouble, would go and help that child, too, because I am a parent. And it is the same with a political concept, and this concept of Aryanism.

Q. Well, I thought we said yesterday that Arabs were Semites, and Semites were not Aryan.

A. Well, there is room in the world for pluralism. These Arabs, at this very moment, inhabit huge parts of the world in North Africa and the Middle East. Only Israel seems to want to deny these people the right to live, because they want real estate. I think there is room for Chinese, there is room for Japanese. There is room for Arabs, there is room for blacks. What are you trying to say to me? That I am running around the world trying to deny other people the space to live?

Q. No.

A. Okay. I don't. It is not my intention at all. To have a certain pride in one's heritage does not preclude or deny the right of others to do the same thing. That is what a multi-cultural policy is all about.

Q. So when you refer to Aryan victory, you are not talking about victory over other so-called races of the world.

A. Of course not. I talk about occupiers. I have my pamphlet in there. You read it this morning. I am talking in a victory, a soul victory {4435|4436} that we free ourselves from the shackles of the lies, the Holocaust, [sic] all the other misconceptions. And I say that we have the media, we have the tools, the technology that we could do it in this generation. We could do it in two or three years, and we could create paradise on earth.

Q. And part of what you were doing in this pamphlet, "The West, War and Islam", was to try and get money so you could do that.

A. Try to prevent — I know that some of the members of the media think that I have these grandiose ideas, and maybe I am guilty of overstating the case; but nevertheless, I felt it my duty to prevent what I thought was a catastrophe that was huge on the horizon, and I sent this to other people with whom I had connections in the past, and people that were decision-makers so I could prevent a tragedy.

Q. And the thing that prompted this was an advertisement that we have on page 4?

A. Absolutely. Coupled with the prevailing mood. Remember what I said to you. And the headline.

Q. And that advertisement upset you?

A. It sure did.

Q. Because it looked like warmongering?

A. Well, number one, once again it put Germany into – and the German history – into a light which I think was totally uncalled for, and that, since there was this, as I said, there was talk of a United States strike force already being in the Gulf of Acapa with troops on board, and Egypt, we had an abortive {4436|4437} attempt of trying to rescue the hostages, that I thought there was war in the air, not unlike the, time of Korea and so on. And so maybe I am guilty of, what can I call it, pan-icking, if you wish. In retrospect it didn't happen, and I am glad it didn't.

Q. Well, Mr. Zundel, my question was whether the advertisement was, in your mind, warmongering by these four Jewish men who put it in the newspapers.

A. Okay. Where is the ad? Let's go through it again.

Q. Can you answer my question about the warmongering?

A. Well, let's refer to it because you specifically referred to the ad. The claim is made that if Europe did not agree with these people's concept of what was happening, that three million Israelis would be killed, and the Third World War would be possible. So I believed that [they] were painting what we call in Germany the devil and the wall, or the devil on the wall. Now, as to the money, I want to come back because you seem to think that I want to become a hireling of Arab interests.

I have no money. The Zionists get from the Canadian Government huge amounts of money. I don't.

Q. And you say here on page 4 that you have included the reproduction of an advertisement of a sort we might place to reach the public via the press. So that warmongering, in that ad, isn't that what you are encouraging the Arabs to do through you? {4437|4438}

A. First of all, an ad of a type, which means an advertisement of this particular type, not of the content, my ad never came to be because these people never send any money or didn't show any interest, so, you know, I can hardly be accused of an ad which I never have written – all it was, to show to these people that there were possibilities that in the Western media where they were not getting a fair shake, I believe, through paid advertisement, that they could make through paid political statements, that they could show their case. And since I have advertising experience, I thought that I could have helped place these ads.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a minute.

Q. And it's your evidence that this was to promote racial harmony, "The West, War and Islam"?

A. Certainly not to disturb it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. No further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's the case for the defence, and I see it's four thirty-five. Do you wish me to address the jury now?

THE COURT: Certainly not. I want to know if you want to re-examine your client.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. I have no further-questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. You can step down, Mr. Zundel. {4438|4439} — The witness stands down.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am calling no reply, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You are calling no reply. Members of the jury, you are free now until Monday morning at nine thirty.

Please don't come to any conclusions. Please keep an open mind. The case is not finished until such time as it passes into your hands and until such time as you have considered it and returned a verdict. Have a good weekend. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 4:35 p.m.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, insofar as Monday is concerned, Mr. Christie, will you be ready to address the jury on Monday?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: You can address it as long as you reasonably require. Do you know how long you may be? And if [you don't know or don't want to say, {4439|4440} please say so.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would be hard-pressed to be accurate, but I would say very unlikely that I would be longer than a day.

THE COURT: All right. Fine. Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I couldn't possibly talk for a day, Your Honour. But Your Honour, there are some questions of law having to do with the charge itself. Different judges, I know, have different practices, and I am wondering whether Your Honour would be at some point inviting counsel's comments prior to the charge.

THE COURT: I usually take the position that counsel know more about their respective side of the case than the judge does. What would you like to see done, if you had your choice?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, there is one element that I would like to have the opportunity to address you on of the four elements that Your Honour has indicated on a number of times that are involved in this charge, and that's the element of whether {4440|4441} or not there is a specific intent required to cause an injury to the public interest.

THE COURT: Number four.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: The thought has crossed my mind. I have no fixed notions on that topic. I'd just as soon not hear it now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. Thank goodness because I am not ready now, Your Honour. I haven't got my material here.

THE COURT: Yes. If you wish to make submissions with respect to that, I will be glad to hear them. If Mr. Christie wishes to do the same thing I will be glad to hear from him.

Are there any questions of law that you would like to put in the absence of the jury to me before you address the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: All right. Well, then, you will undoubtedly be inte[r]ested in hearing what Crown counsel has to say and probably want to respond to it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. {4441|4442}

THE COURT: We will do that Monday morning at nine thirty.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 25, 1985.

VOLUME XX

FEBRUARY 25, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Yes, gentlemen.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Good morning, Your Honour.

As I indicated in the Court last Friday, just before the addresses to the jury, I'd like to have an opportunity to address you on several legal issues. One that I specifically mentioned last Friday was the nature of the intent required for the causing of injury to the public interest.

The second area that I would like to canvass with you and seek your ruling on, Your Honour, is that of judicial notice. I'd like to renew my application for judicial notice. I advised Mr. Christie, after Court – I had forgotten to say that in open Court, {4442|4443} and I advised Mr. Christie after Court that I would be doing that this morning. I am prepared to do that now, subject to Your Honour. I expect to be no more than an hour for the two matters, possibly less.

THE COURT: You will be an hour?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, I think the argument will be an hour.

THE COURT: The total argument?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not just me. I am not going to review again all the law we went through earlier on judicial notice. It is before the Court.

THE COURT: Yes. I will hear you now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

If I could speak first, Your Honour, on judicial notice, and just by way of a very brief review, the authorities, McCormack and Fipson and the other authorities that have already been passed up to Your Honour on the earlier application seem to indicate that there are two circumstances in which it is proper for a judge to take judicial notice of a fact. Those two circumstances are, first that the facts that it is requested you take judicial notice of are notoriously {4443|4444} well-known by all reasonably intelligent people within the community. And second, that those facts are capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources of indisputable accuracy.

The law that I passed up earlier, Your Honour, in the cases, are the same. What has changed, I would suggest, Your Honour, is that at the time of Your Honour's ruling at the end of the Crown's case the defence counsel, Mr. Christie, indicated that by taking judicial notice Your Honour would be precluding the defence from making full answer and defence, and that the defence wished to and intended to call evidence going to the truth of the contents of Exhibit 1 that we are speaking of, the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", that Your Honour, by taking judicial notice, would prevent him from making full answer and defence. As I understood Your Honour's earlier ruling – and I may well have this wrong, Your Honour, but if I have, Your Honour I am sure and Mr. Christie will correct me – Your Honour seemed to indicate that there was an exception, a procedural exception, if I can call it that, to the general rule of judicial notice, {4444|4445} an exception that did not show in the authorities, and this exception was that it should not be – it should not preclude the defence from making full answer and defence when there are issues that the defence perceives as vital to the defence they should call.

Well, Your Honour, at this time the defence is complete. Much of the defence, I would suggest, has gone to whether or not Mr. Zundel has honest belief in the contents of Exhibit 1. If there were no evidence that was called to cast a doubt on the truth of the two areas that I asked Your Honour to take judicial notice of, then full answer and defence would not be prejudiced by Your Honour taking judicial notice, and the procedural objection would no longer be applicable.

The two categories, Your Honour, that I asked you to take judicial notice of were that, first, between the years 1933 and 1945 millions of Jews were annihilated by the deliberate policies of Nazi Germany, and secondly, that the means of annihilation were mass shootings, starvation, privation and gassing. Those are the same two categories that I ask you to take judicial notice of now, Your Honour. {4445|4446}

The authorities indicate, Your Honour, that it is open to a judge to take judicial notice at any stage of the trial, the beginning, the middle or the end, and indeed, in subsequent proceedings, if there are any, before an Appeal Court, it is still open to the Appeal Court to take judicial notice.

So Your Honour, in considering the application, it would be my application now, I would suggest it would be appropriate to look at what evidence has been called by the defence which purports to go to the truth of matters to determine whether there is evidence that can – whether the finding of judicial notice would prevent full answer and defence in light of the nature of the evidence that's been called.

First, Your Honour, was Dr. Faurisson who was qualified as an expert in the Holocaust at large, was not qualified as an expert in the operation and construction of gas chambers. He was specifically asked by the Crown for his comments on the almost million and a half Jews that Dr. Hilberg had indicated were killed by Einsatzgruppen, and he either didn't know or couldn't say anything about Einsatzgruppen. And he said he wasn't an expert in that field. {4446|4447}

THE COURT: He said that was not his speciality. It is part of what he said.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He also, Your Honour, couldn't say anything about the conditions in the ghettos or the conditions in concentration camps. He was concerned with gas chambers, but he was not an expert in that area.

I would suggest that his evidence has very little to say about the truth of the two areas where I am asking Your Honour to take judicial notice. The next witness, Your Honour, that would have any bearing on these two areas was Mr. Christopherson, and his evidence, as I recollect it, was that he visited the Birkenau extermination camp on half a dozen times during the year 1944. Other than that he was in a satellite camp, small satellite camp called Raisko for that year.

His evidence, obviously, Your Honour, cannot go to the whole concentration camp system. He was not in the concentration camp at Birkenau, working there, or a prisoner there, and could not say anything about the workings of that camp for that reason, Your {4447|4448} Honour. And again, I would say that he also cannot speak about mass shootings by Einsatzgruppen, and cannot say anything and did not say anything about ghettos. He had no personal experience in that area.

Next witness, Your Honour, was Dr. Russel Barton, and his evidence, as I recollect it, was that while he didn't feel that there was a deliberate policy that the Germans at Bergen Belsen, and that was the one camp that he could speak to, the Nazis in charge there were criminally negligent in ignoring the needs of some fifty thousand prisoners and may well have resented the prisoners being dumped on them, but did nothing to feed or look after the physical needs of those prisoners, and his testimony was that he had no doubt that millions of Jews died, although that is not based on his expertise, his field of expertise.

The next witness, Your Honour, was Dr. William Lindsey, and he was the chemist and it was his opinion, expert opinion, that the gas chambers could not have operated in the manner in which they said, it is said, that they operated. And he based that on the chemical properties – his opinion – on the chemical properties of hydrogen cyanide. {4448|4449}

In cross-examination, though, Your Honour, Dr. Lindsey indicated that hydrogen cyanide was only very slightly lighter than air, that it would rise very slowly so that the description that Mr. Urstein gave would be consistent with the properties of hydrogen cyanide.

He also testified that hydrogen cyanide was highly soluble in water and that would be consistent with the evidence also of Mr. Urstein that it had been hosed down, and the chamber had been cleaned after the bodies had been removed.

I would suggest there is nothing in his evidence to disprove that there were gas chambers. His testimony was based in part, Your Honour, I would suggest, on his assumption that maximum care would be taken for the people that were removing the bodies and handling the bodies, that when that assumption is changed, that the people removing the bodies were prisoners for whom the Nazis didn't care whether they lived or died. And then much of his evidence becomes [ir]relevant, Your Honour.

Dr. Weber was not an expert, could not testify. Mr. Walendy was an expert in only a very {4449|4450} limited area, and I suggest was not going to the truth of the matters that I have set out to you.

Mr. Botting was also not an expert, and his evidence couldn't go to the truth of the matters that I've asked you to take judicial notice of.

Any other person, Your Honour, who the defence called who was on the scene, if you will, at least peripherally, was Mr. Rudolf [Rudolph] who was the S.D. Officer in Poland and testified that his superior officer had arranged for a tour of the Red Cross at Birkenau in 1941 I think he said was the year. And Mr. Rudolf [sic] himself never left the office, and his superior officer was concerned with routing the Red Cross, take what inference he may from whatever route may have been taken.

That is the extent, I would suggest, Your Honour, of the evidence of the defence on count one going to the truth of the matters contained therein, and I would suggest that that evidence is not sufficient to overcome the enormous weight and documentation of history that I placed before you on my earlier application for judicial notice.

Subject to Your Honour, it would be helpful, I would respectfully submit, – in other cases, if {4450|4451} in your ruling on this point you would be able to indicate whether your ruling was based on the failure of the Crown to establish the two criteria set out in McCormack and others that it was a notorious fact that could be ascertained by easy resource to common sources, or whether it is the procedure or what I have called the procedural exception to permit the defence to make full answer and defence, if that is the basis of your ruling.

Those are my comments, Your Honour, on judicial notice.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: First of all, my friend is asking Your Honour to define what is an indisputable fact. It is difficult to say what is a notorious fact. It is difficult to say what facts are capable of ready determination on the wide scope that my friend seeks Your Honour to make a ruling, but it is not difficult to say that this alleged fact of my learned friend's is not indisputable.

So far, in a free society, we are allowed to dispute many factors. And it is my friend's argument that while we haven't, according to him, proven {4451|4452} our case, well, even if that was not so, that is not our duty and we elected trial by judge and jury and proceeded on the understanding of Your Honour's former ruling which you gave on the 31st of January that the Crown must prove the four elements of the charge, and to grant the motion for judicial notice then would, in effect, be, in the eyes of the public and the jury, would not give the defence full answer and defence, thereby eliminating defence.

On the basis of that ruling we brought witnesses, brought them here from Germany, France, the United States to endeavour to prove our case which it is not our duty to prove, but to raise a reasonable doubt on the part of the jury. That is our only burden of proof, if any; and even if we had not raised any evidence going to the accusations and assertions of Dr. Hilberg and Vrba, it certainly would be open to them to find out whether it is an indisputable fact.

The fact was disputed. The witnesses were called and whatever may be my friend's opinion of their veracity, their probative value or otherwise, it is for the jury to decide; and if that premise is still valid, then we operated under Your Honour's ruling with {4452|4453} the understanding that we had the right to raise the defence of truth. In fact, we are not obliged to prove the truth. The Crown is obliged to prove falseness beyond a reasonable doubt of the accusations or the positions stated in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

To discharge that burden, the Crown seeks now, having allowed us to operate on the presumption and the basis of Your Honour's ruling throughout the trial, relying as we have on the truth proven by our witnesses, now to close that avenue of the defence and prevent it from going to the jury.

At this late hour, if that is the case, then we should be allowed to re-open the case and introduce all sorts of more evidence as to the foundation of my client's belief, because we relied substantially upon the right to prove the truth that was left to us at the end of the Crown's case. We operated on that understanding. We introduced evidence on that understanding, and for that reason, did not prove all the reasonable foundations for my client's belief, did not introduce all the evidence that we would have otherwise produced, because we allege and will argue before the jury that we have the right to {4453|4454} believe that they will decide that we have either proven the truth of our belief, or in the alternative, the Crown has not disproven the truth of that belief, because it was still open to us throughout the whole of the trial to operate under that understanding. And so we did.

At this hour of the trial the Crown says that Your Honour should take away from the jury that aspect of the defence which the defence has, to a substantial extent, relied upon.

It is true Your Honour has disqualified some of the experts alleged by the defence, but by no means has it been proven that the fact as he alleges is an indisputable fact.

Dr. Lindsey disputes my friend's version of the fact. My friend put hypotheticals to him, and at the end of his cross-examination I asked one question in re-examination: Have the hypothetical questions put to you by my learned friend changed your opinion? He said no. Now, it is for the jury to decide what is a valid opinion and what is not.

My friend argues that Mr. Lindsey's evidence was merely probative of whether gas chambers {4454|4455} could have operated in the way alleged. He also gave evidence of colours of bodies who died from asphyxiation from hydrogen cyanide, and that was quite inconsistent with the evidence of Urstein and others, none of whom are described as brick red bodies, and the colour of the effects of Zyklon-B.

It is open to the jury to consider that. It is open to them to say that it is disputing that evidence alleged by the Crown. Surely that should rest with the defence as we have operated on that understanding from the day of January 31st, 1985, when Your Honour made your last ruling on this subject.

We have raised dispute. It is for the jury to decide whether it is a valid dispute. It is not even necessary for us to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the validity of the dispute, but it has been in dispute. Whatever Your Honour may say about the evidence, whatever my friend may say about the evidence, it is still for the jury to decide whether the dispute was a valid one or not.

And as I say, if my friend bases his argument upon the reasoning he put forward, and if he alleges that between 1933 and '45 millions of Jews {4455|4456} were annihilated, I suggest that it is open for the jury to find that he has not proven that point, even now. He has not alleged the annihilation of millions of Jews except in the mere assertion of Dr. Vrba and Hilberg. And he says with a wealth and weight of documentary evidence. Who produced any documentary evidence? What are we relying on for notorious fact? Is that the media, the beliefs held in society? Is that the criterion of the notoriousness of this fact?

I saw no wealth and weight of documentary evidence produced by my friend. Dr. Hilberg talked about a wealth of documents, but he didn't produce a single document. Not one. And as far as documents from Dr. Vrba is concerned, he produced some transparent pieces of plastic that he drew circles on and referred to. I suggest that in this trial evidence has been produced by the defence, and this is a matter of argument for the jury to decide.

The two witnesses the Crown says were called by January 31st have been answered by no less than four recognized experts. To varying degrees, Dr. Faurisson, Dr. Barton, Dr. Lindsey and Udo Walendy were recognized to give opinions, and Dr. Faurisson's {4456|4457} opinion, at the end of the day, is that the figure of dead alleged by "Did Six Million Really Die?" was correct.

It is for the jury to decide whether he is right or wrong, but it is not for my friend to say he did not say that, or that is not an opinion.

My friend can allege, as he does, that Dr. Vrba referred to 1,765,000. If that's proof, the jury can decide that question, but it is not an undisputed figure. Dr. Faurisson did dispute it, gave his reasons, was cross-examined extensively. And for what reason? Why have we been here seven weeks? Why has the defence been allowed to call the proof for the truth of its belief if we are now to have that defence taken away from the jury at this hour?

If such be the case, then of course, the whole of our defence has changed, the whole of our position has been sliced in half, and if we were not allowed to re-open our case with proving the reasonable basis for our belief, half of our defence would be left to the jury after three weeks of evidence.

If it was, in my submission, as it was, not fair and just of the defendant to deny him the {4457|4458} right to prove the truth of his belief by taking it as a proven fact from some inference of notoriety at the time of January 31st, it is all the less so now when he has taken the opportunity, the time, the expense and the difficulty to try and prove his belief. And now my friend wishes to take that from him.

The summarization provided by my friend in the argument of the expert evidence is not my summarization. I don't wish to argue the case in front of Your Honour now. I don't think it should be put in front of the defence to have to justify its position now. I suggest it is open to us that the evidence of the experts is not quite what my friend says it is, and I suggest that having taken all the time and effort to prove what the accused believes to be the truth, then we should be allowed to let that stand before the jury and let them decide whether that is true or not.

I see no better reason now for denying the accused the right to prove the truth of his case than there was on January 31st. In fact, if anything, if the accused has produced any evidence on the subject of the truth or falsity of the belief – and {4458|4459} I say he has produced four witnesses on that subject who were allowed to testify, then it has placed in dispute far more than my friend or anyone else may have thought possible the position of the so-called notorious fact, incapable of dispute, or so accurate and so easily to readily determine that no one should be able to dispute it.

Well, that may be true, but – it may have been true January 31st, but it is for the jury to decide whether it is true today.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: You have my point, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you.

——— {4459|4460}

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: At the conclusion of all of the evidence to be heard in this trial on Friday last, with the defence closing its case and the Crown electing not to call any reply evidence, I had presumed that this morning there would commence the address to the jury by counsel for the accused.

The accused is charged with two counts pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. He is alleged to have published false statements in the form of two booklets. The first count alleges that he published a statement or a booklet entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

The subject matter of the booklet, obviously, is the Holocaust. [sic] Crown counsel, during the course of this trial some weeks ago, moved that I take judicial notice of the occurrence of the Holocaust.

For the reasons given at that time, the motion was I. dismissed. The trial proceeded. Crown counsel now renews his motion that I take judicial notice of the Holocaust. He submits that pursuant to the learned writers in some case law, Phipson and MacCormack on Evidence, the {4460|4461} happening of the Holocaust is so notorious and well-known that it falls into one of the categories upon which a Court of law can take judicial notice.

A further submission is that the facts can be and have been sufficiently and accurately ascertained from indisputably accurate sources; that the criterion for taking judicial notice is complete.

I am asked to, in effect, make a judicial declaration to take judicial notice that between the years 1933 and 1945 millions of Jews were annihilated by Nazi Germany; secondly, that the methods of the annihilation included starvation, shooting, gassing and other methods.

The Crown's position is that my ruling previously made was made on a procedural basis. It included the consideration that to remove from contention between Crown and defence in this trial this element would leave the defence with only that of honesty of belief in the occurrence of the Holocaust. If I had taken that judicial notice, the result, in substantial part, and in a practical way, the defence would have been deprived of full answer and {4461|4462} defence.

Crown counsel points to the various witnesses called on behalf of the defence. It is submitted that their evidence on the issue of whether or not the Holocaust, as Crown counsel described it, occurred, is anaemic, to say the least.

I am reminded that the witness, Faurisson, seemed to concern himself with only one facet of what occurred in Nazi prison camps in the years in question. That facet centred upon whether or not gas chambers were employed to kill people.

Christopherson, a serving soldier in German forces, on his evidence, was restricted to his knowledge of what went on, essentially, in one satellite camp near the Auschwitz complex.

Dr. Barton had a thirty-day experience only with one camp located much further west in Nazi Europe [sic] namely Bergen Belsen. Dr. Lindsey was qualified as a chemist expert. His testimony considered, essentially, the chemical properties and proclivities of hydrogen cyanide, referred to in the evidence as Zyklon-B gas.

The witnesses Walendy and Botting {4462|4463} testified in such a way as to make their evidence concerning the subject with which I now deal irrelevant. The witness Rudolf [Rudolph] testified with respect to one aspect only. That concerned the tour of his German superior officer with the representatives of the Red Cross so far as the routing was concerned in the year 1941.

Not surprisingly, Crown counsel takes the position that this motion is appropriate and should be allowed. It is also not surprising that counsel for the accused takes the position that this motion should not be allowed.

It seems to me that this prosecution commenced with the Crown having the burden of proving certain elements. The accused is not obliged or required to prove anything. Mr. Christie is quite correct in that regard.

The Crown must prove the falsity of Exhibit No. 1 in its essential contents. One only has to look at Exhibit 1 to conclude that what, in effect, it says is that the Holocaust [sic] is a myth perpetrated by Jewish Zionists in order to fraudulently extract money by way of compensation and reparation from West Germany. {4463|4464} The total overall purport, at least in my view of the documents, simply is that the Holocaust did not occur. Crown must prove that it did.

If I allowed this motion at this particular juncture of the trial I would, in effect, be making an indirect ruling or finding requiring defence, in effect, to prove an element of the case that the Crown has to prove, namely, the falsity of a major premise contained within the confines of Exhibit No. 1.

I have no intention of casting any burden directly or indirectly upon the defence in this case. There can be no doubt that all sorts of recognized authorities have stated that the Holocaust occurred. Were I to be trying this case alone, my ruling might be quite different.

I am not trying this case alone. In fact, I am not trying this case at all. The jury is the finder of facts.

The Crown has alleged that the accused published something that was inherently false. The {4464|4465} Crown has the burden of proving the falsity of what it alleges. In the result, and as I repeated before, with some regret, I am dismissing the motion.

The Crown has certainly set out sufficient criteria. My ruling is based, as the Crown puts it, somewhat on procedure, although not entirely on procedure. I have no intention of shifting burdens in a trial in which the burden of proof, at least in so far as it refers to the falsity of the exhibit, remains on the Crown from the beginning to the end of the trial.

Therefore, for those reasons, the motion is dismissed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {4465|4466}

THE COURT: Now, point number four, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. Your Honour has indicated in a number of earlier rulings that there is a subjective test, if I could call it that, to the intent required for the second part of s.177 that the material that is wilfully published must cause an injury to a public interest, and that the accused must intend, when he publishes, that injury to result. And the subject of intention, Your Honour, was mentioned before.

I would like to submit to Your Honour that, in fact, s.177 is objective in its intent in that regard, that the mens rea element of the offence is encompassed by wilfully publishing material that is known to be false, that having done that, having been proved, at some point that the question of what harm, if any, that did to the public interest does not rely on the accused's intent.

THE COURT: It doesn't rely on the mens rea, but it is something the jury must be satisfied with on the total evidence put in. Is that what you are suggesting? {4466|4467}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. It is not unlike an assault causing bodily harm. When an assault is proven, then the level of assault is determined by the degree of injury. You don't have to intend to cause bodily harm when you commit the assault. It often is the assault, the severity of the offence is determined by the level of the injury.

Section 128 of the Criminal Code, Your Honour, grew out of this common law s.177. That's the public mischief section. And indeed, some of the earlier cases around people laying false charges and are very much in keeping with our modern s.128, public mischief.

The intent required, Your Honour, in the public mischief section, I would suggest, is that there be an intent to mislead. And with that intent to mislead, for example s.128(a), a false statement is made. So that I would suggest that, while the wording is different, the concept is the same that you have a knowing falsehood spoken by an accused person.

Now, out of that, the second element of s.128 is that a peace officer has to be caused to {4467|4468} enter upon an investigation. There's no specific mens rea required that when you are making that statement you are making it with the intent of having a police officer enter upon the investigation. I am suggesting that is the same in s.177.

In those sections where that intent is required, that is the intent to cause injury, it is specifically set out within the sections. Now, I have provided Your Honour with a number of sections of the Criminal Code where it is specifically, the intent is specifically set forth. Section 262, defamatory libel, matter published that is likely to injure the reputation or that is designed to insult the person. So it isn't enough that it be defamatory, and that it be libellous, but it also has to have the intention to insult, and that is specifically set out.

Section 281, Your Honour, our Court of Appeal has had occasion to consider in the case of R. vs. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369. In that case, the Court of Appeal was specifically referring to subsection (2) of 281.2, which the Court of Appeal said was subjective, that the term "wilfully promotes hatred", in 281.2 (2) means that the communication must have been {4468|4469} made with the intention of promoting hatred, and that recklessness is not a factor, then, in that offence.

THE COURT: The word "and" is not in s.281, but it is in 177: False and that causes or is likely to cause injury and mischief. I'm sorry to interrupt. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour. Section 281.2 (1), Your Honour, I would suggest, is an objective test, and it's in keeping with what we have in s.177. It sets out that everyone who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred against any group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, is guilty of an offence. So that the offence is the communication in a public place, and the incitement of hatred, Your Honour, is not specifically – I mean the intent to incite hatred is not specifically required in 281.1.

The Court of Appeal has set out, Your Honour, at page 381 of Buzzanga and Duroch, and that is a decision of Mr. Justice Martin – and I have it underlined, Your Honour, the paragraph I am referring to, the sections I am referring to, of that case. I suggest Justice Martin, s.281.2 (1), unlike 281.2 (2) {4469|4470} is restricted to the incitement of hatred by statements in a public place where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace. Although no mental element is expressly mentioned in 281.2 (1) where the communication poses an immediate threat to public order, mens rea is, nonetheless, required since the inclusion of an offence in the Criminal Code must be taken to import mens rea in the absence of a clear intention to dispense with it. The general mens rea which is required and which suffices for most crimes where no mental element is commenced in the commission of a crime is either or reckless, which brings about in law the offence it seeks to prevent, and hence 281.2 (1) is either the intentional or reckless incitement of hatred in the specified circumstances.

It goes on to say that subsection (2), Your Honour, there must be a specific intent to promote hatred. On page 382 of that case there is a judgment cited, Your Honour, R. v. Lemon, R. v. Gay News (1979) 1 All English Reports, page 898, which he indicates is not relevant to a consideration of that section.

I have that piece here, Your Honour. It is a charge of blasphemous libel. There is no good {4470|4471} faith except in the British section dealing with blasphemous libel as there is in s.262. All of the authorities, English authorities, are reviewed in that case, Your Honour, and the Court finds that in order to secure conviction for the case of publishing a blasphemous libel, it is sufficient for the purpose of establishing mens rea for the prosecution to prove intent to publish material which was, in fact, blasphemous.

That is, I suggest, the result if there is no good faith exception and no specific mens rea set out in the section. So it will be sufficient to prove that material was published in our section, Your Honour, that was false that did, in fact, create an injury to the public interest without that specific intention required.

There are a number of other sections of the Criminal Code, Your Honour, wherein the intent both to publish and to refer – I'm sorry, and to cause some injury are both set out in the sections.

Section 330, everyone who, with intent to injure or alarm any person conveys or causes or procures to be conveyed, etcetera, information that {4471|4472} he knows is false is guilty of an indictable offence.

So there has to be the intent to injure set out in that section. And it is clearly and specifically set out.

Section 162, dealing with material that is calculated to injure public morals, there is the mens rea required, again, different from what we have here. The other sections Your Honour has. I am not going to read them all into the record. That is probably unnecessary. I suggest, Your Honour, that there is an argument that can be made to say that s.177 should be subjective, but that the argument is stronger that on the plain wording of the sections, and an analysis of the other sections of the Code, it should be objective.

THE COURT: You mean objective throughout, or are you suggesting that it should be subjective insofar as the likelihood of causing injury?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am just dealing with the part for intent, Your Honour, the likelihood of causing injury. The other, what you might call {4472|4473} related sections, Your Honour, are sections 260, 262, 263, which deal with defamatory libel, blasphemous libel, and each of those other sections have a good faith exception to them.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Which is specifically not included for s.177. In fact, in the re-writing of the Code in the early fifties, in the '53, '54 amendments, this section was moved, was reworded, was moved away from the blasphemous libel and defamatory libel area of the Code, and put into the nuisance area of the Code.

So I would suggest that we might get some assistance, Your Honour, by looking at some of the other sections in that badly-called nuisance section of the Code which includes causing a disturbance. And I would suggest that the mens rea in causing a disturbance in the same section isn't that you have to intend to cause a disturbance, it is that you do the act, and out of that act flows the disturbance, and you have to intend to do the act, but don't have to intend to cause the disturbance. And that's the part of the Code where we find s.177, similar to common {4473|4474} nuisance and thereby endangers the life, safety or health of the public is guilty of an offence. The intent is to commit the nuisance, not to endanger the life or health. That is what comes out of the delict.

So I would suggest, Your Honour, that while there is some argument that can be made based on the other similar sections of defamatory libel, that it should be subjective, that s.177 really is different on its fact in the area of the Criminal Code, and that the argument that it be an objective test is much stronger, for that part, what we call the part four intent.

Those are my submissions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: My first reply is that this s.177 constitutes a limitation to freedom of speech as Your Honour dealt with early in the beginning of the trial which comes within the exceptions to that general principle that there should be freedom of speech, and I suggest, Your Honour, that any section which {4474|4475} restricts the right of free speech should be construed in its narrowest and net broadest sense.

This is, of course, a very new question, I think, to consider, perhaps, but I think a very fundamental one to the whole issue of what the implications are of sections which do limit free speech, and a general principle of some great value to interpretation might be derived if one was to say clearly that any section which puts a restriction on freedom of speech should be construed in its narrowest sense, and net its broadest sense.

My friend contends for the broadest possible interpretation of s.177 to.

include these remarks which one knows to be false, which might be not known to cause injury or mischief to a public interest.

I put it this way. Someone might be convicted if this interpretation is applied, who made a false statement in a joke, but he did not know, himself, that it was likely to cause injury – a joke such as was, I gather, the intent of the person who made a parody of a newspaper in R. v. Kirby which was a case of 1971 C.C.C. (2d) referred to in Martin's at 286. It was that very situation which generally {4475|4476} prevails where people run afoul of this section where the intent was to be funny, however misguided that intent might have been[.]

My understanding of my friend's argument is that if it was known to be false, which it was in Kirby, it was a deliberate parody, if it was known to be false, whether you intend to cause public injury or not, yourself, if objectively it could be seen that it could or would, then your intent as to its meaning to be a joke is irrelevant.

THE COURT: I don't know that Crown counsel means that. He can speak for himself.

My understanding of his argument is that the effect, or the likely effect of whatever is published is false is not part of the wilful mens rea, but still is part of the Crown's case to prove, but not with respect to the wilfulness of the guilty mind.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: That is my understanding. Is that yours?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is that yours, Mr. Griffiths? {4476|4477}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: I interpreted that to mean that subjective intent would not have to apply to the causing or likely to cause injury portion. There would have to be no subjective intent there, and I extrapolated from that to say that one could then impose an objective standard on the likelihood of causing injury and say, well, you may not have intended, by your little prank, to have caused any public harm, but lo and behold, you have. And by an objective standard, therefore, you can be convicted, whether you intended to cause or thought it was likely you thought you would cause mischief or not. And this position would cause intent – this very section might be that humour, misguided humour, perhaps, as was the case in Kirby. It would seem to me to put the broadest interpretation on the section and place in jeopardy those persons who may not have the criminal intent to publish anything to cause harm, but might be creating a parody for another purpose, maybe even humour. It would seem that interpretation would restrict a lot of the other people who would not be caught by the section if their knowledge as to its likelihood of causing or is causing {4477|4478} injury to public mischief was required.

I would ask Your Honour to find that the difference between s.281 (2) (1), which my friend refers to in his argument which he says is the objective test, and I agree, and the difference also between the case of R. vs. Lemon, R. v. Gay News Limited, is that in neither case is mens rea set out in the section. I think you would acknowledge that in 281.2 (1) there is no reference to wilfully or knowingly doing anything.

Now, then, I think my friend is arguing, well, the knowledge aspect, the subjective aspect applies to the falseness, but not to the words likely to cause injury or mischief.

I would suggest that that would be, perhaps, more convincing if the word "and" was substituted with the word "or" when, in fact, it is not so in the section, because the word "knowingly", in my submission, when followed by the word "and" applies to both the false aspect and that likelihood of causing injury or mischief to a public interest. To have included the words "wilfully", on one hand, and "knowingly", on the other, in a section of this kind, {4478|4479} would surely import the subjective test to both aspects of the offence, that of falseness and that of causing injury. Not included in the same way in any way are those words in s.281.2 (1), or in the provisions as to blasphemous libel.

I think with respect to the decision of Buzzanga and Durocher, which my friend referred to, the very operative and important words which he read but which I think have not been emphasized sufficiently were those referred to on page 381 where it says, and I quote, "The general mens rea which is required and which suffices for most crimes", and then I suggest I should emphasize "where no mental element is mentioned in the definition of the crime". And he goes on to say, "is either the intentional or reckless bringing about of the result which the law, in creating the offence, seeks to prevent."

My concern here is that this case, this section, rather, does import the words of a mental element mentioned in the definition of the crime. It imports them twice with obvious Parliamentary intent that they should be effective barriers to the prosecution, or shall we say the conviction more accurately, of those {4479|4480} who, though they may have intended a falsehood, had not intended any injury to a public interest; they having, perhaps, a misguided concept of humour should, in the view of Parliament, not be convicted under the section. If Parliament had intended that persons who had only the intent to be false should be convicted, they might very well have stopped the section at the word "false" and not added any other word to qualify that in any way. They do so because an additional requirement of knowledge, in my submission, is important because they did not wish to include in prosecution under this section such persons as might have intended a falsehood, but might not have intended its consequences.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just briefly, Your Honour.

The dissemination of lies in the community is not something which Parliament wishes to encourage. That is part of what this section arose to. So if you wilfully publish a statement, tale, news that you know is false, then you takes your chances. If that statement causes an injury to a public interest, {4480|4481} then you are guilty. If it does not cause injury to a public interest, then you are not guilty. You take your chances. The reason you take your chances is that Parliament did not want the publishing of lies. This is why this is not a hybrid offence or a summary conviction matter. Certainly, the humorous derision that my friend set forth, there has to be an injury to the public interest. In Kirby there was none. In most situations there would not be. If there is, why should that be treated any differently than any other injury to public interest caused by lies if there is some wilfulness and deliberation involved?

That's all.

THE COURT: Thank you, gentlemen. Since this is a pure question of law, I will have some time to deliberate between now and the time I charge the jury, and unless I hear from you to the contrary, I wouldn't think that this would be something that either one of you is going to mention to the jury, in any event.

Am I correct or incorrect, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have one difficulty {4481|4482} with that, Your Honour, in that I may be speaking of the issue of whether this in any way offends the public interest, but I will not be making any submission that it is false. I would be making a submission that if there was any error on the part of the author of an unknown nature to the accused, that its public value in terms of freedom of discussion would far outweigh any detrimental social effect.

I don't know if that touches on the question.

THE COURT: I don't know that it does. I wouldn't think that you would be asking the jury to make a legal interpretation of the word "and" and its effect insofar as the matter of law is concerned in the sentence. Would you?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: Is there anything further, gentlemen? I am going to take ten minutes now and we will get the jury ready to hear the addresses.

— Short adjournment.

— {4482|4483}

— Jury in 11:03 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, it's my role as counsel to address you now and speak to you about the position of the defence. My first observation is that probably never before in the history of your country have twelve people had to grapple with a more all-encompassing and serious issue than you will have to deal with, and when you have finished your deliberations, in all probability your country will be made different for as long as you and I will live by the decision that you will make here about the most serious issues that confront any citizen in any free society.

You and I have spent seven weeks together with my friend and His Honour examining the evidence in one of the most wide-scope cases in the history of Canadian jurisprudence. And I said at the beginning, and I repeat to you now, that this is a case that never should have been before a court of law in a free society, because it is an issue upon which courts will have no end of difficulty in addressing and dealing with. In my submission, if you have a clear understanding of the role of freedom in a free {4483|4484} society, this may never have to happen again, because a clear indication that we permit and tolerate debate and points of view we may not agree with from a jury of twelve ordinary citizens will be the strongest indication to every politician in this country that we are not subject to the pressures of groups and to dictating ideas and to determining how other people will think and act and speak, unless it contravenes the freedom of others to think and act and speak. I suggest to you now that what you have heard in this seven weeks is a lot more information upon the subject of the book, Did six Million Really Die?, than you or I might ever have thought at first was likely to occur. I suggest we've all learned something in this process. Tolerance, indeed, is one of the things you have learned by hearing another side to a point that we always thought was so clear and so simple there only need be one side; but to everything we know in life, there are two sides, and many more, quite often, and nobody, no matter how well informed or how expert, have all the truth or ever will, and it shouldn't be for the law to determine the extent of debate in a free society. It shouldn't be forced upon judges and courts that they should have to decide what is the truth about some historical belief. It's nobody's fault in this room that we are here. It is the {4484|4485} duty of everyone of us to do our duty as we are, lawyers, judges, jurors, but really it was, indeed – indeed was a wrong political decision to bring before you and I the duty to examine history 40 years old to determine where the truth lies. But having been placed in this position, every one of us has done our duty as best he could as citizens in a free society to examine the evidence, and that will go down in history, I suggest, as a compliment to everyone involved in this process, that we have tried to do our duty in grappling with an impossible question that ought not to have been placed here in the first place. It has been a strain no doubt on you, on me, on my learned friend, on everyone in this courtroom, because it is an impossible legal question. It is a question that never should have been here. But having been placed in this position, we must deal with it and we must deal with it to preserve important values in our society.

The first and most important value is the freedom to debate, the freedom to think, the freedom to speak, and the freedom to disagree. And this prosecution, through nobody's fault here, has already had a very serious effect on those freedoms. If it were to result in a {4485|4486} conviction, I suggest to you that a process of witch-hunting would begin in our society where everyone who had a grievance against everyone else would say, "Uh-huh, you are false, and I'll take you or pressure somebody to take you to court and force you to defend yourself," even though our society says, as it always has, in this and every other charge, the burden's on the Crown, the burden to prove every ingredient is on the Crown, the burden to prove that the thing is false is on the Crown; but where does the accused stand? He's here. He's been here, like you, at his own expense for seven weeks, and whatever may become of this case, he's already paid a very high price for the belief that he had the right to speak what he believed to be the truth.

Who could deny that he believed it to be the truth? In fact, who can prove it wasn't the truth? If this society cherishes freedom as men and women in the past have, then you and I must very clearly state that to be the, predominant concern of every citizen in a free society, that truth can stand on its own. In a free society we need no better protection for my opinion and yours that you should be free to express yourself and I should be free to express mine, and no court need decide who's right or who's wrong. {4486|4487} Is that going to be a danger to you and me? Error, if there is such, in my opinion or yours is best determined when you and I talk freely one to another, and you and I can then debate and hear from each other many sources of information which couldn't be produced in a court of law. How many of our opinions could stand up to seven weeks of scrutiny? How many of anything you have ever written or I've ever written could be analyzed line by line for seven weeks, phrase by phrase, with experts from all over the world, and found to be true. There will be errors in anything you and I believe, and thank God for it; we are none of us perfect. But in the thesis Did Six Million Really Die?, there is a substantial point of view, a reasonable argument founded upon fact, that many will reject, but many are free to reject. Who denies Dr. Hilberg the right to publish his views? Who denies that he should be free to say there was a Hitler order? Not my client; not me; nobody in society denies him that right. Who denies anyone the right to publish their views? Well, it's the position of my client that he's obliged to justify his publication. And I suggest he has. I'd like to refer to something Dr. Hilberg {4487|4488} said in his book, and I asked him about it. He said:

"Basically, we are dealing with two of Hitler's decisions. One order was given in the spring of 1941, during the planning of the invasion of the USSR, it provided that small units of the SS and Police be dispatched to Soviet territory, where they were to move from town to town to kill all Jewish inhabitants on the spot. This method may be called the 'mobile killing operations.' Shortly after the mobile operations had begun in the occupied Soviet territories, Hitler handed down his second order. That decision doomed the rest of European Jewry. Unlike the Russian Jews, who were overtaken by mobile units, the Jewish population of Central, Western, and South Eastern Europe was transported to killing centres." {4488|4489}

Through all the trial and all the arguments and all the discussion, I have yet to see one single piece of evidence of that, of either of those two Hitler orders. If they exist, why can't we see them? No footnote, no identification of source; a statement of very significant fact, without a single supporting document here in that book or there on that stand from a learned and distinguished author.

Am I saying he has no right to his views? Of course not. Am I saying that I should be able to debate his views and disagree with his views? I certainly suggest that ought to be your right, my right, and the right of every thinking person. You see, there is an example, if I was to put Dr. Hilberg or any other person in the position of the accused and say, "All right, justify that", how would he? We all hold opinions which at times we would have a difficult job justifying. But, so what? Is it not possible for people to disagree and be free to disagree when they themselves are not absolutely sure they're right? Have we come to the stage of society where tolerance is so limited that we must prosecute those whose views we find disagreeable?

In this trial, I often wondered and I suggest, so should you, why all this, why? For a little {4489|4490} booklet that published a point of view which some people reject and other people believe. Why? Well, only in the last few hours of this trial did I really begin to see the reason why. It had nothing to do with Did Six Million Really Die?; very little to do with The West, War and Islam, a lot to do with Mr. Zundel and his views. Was he a racist? Was he a lover of Hitler? Was he perhaps a neo-Nazi as so often we've been told? What difference would that really make anyway? Certainly not, but what difference would it make? If it was alleged that he had some views of a Communist nature, so what? We tolerate those views. I had to really find it ironic, and I ask you to think of it the same way, when in a newsletter complaining about what had happened to 2,000 friends and supporters and subscribers of his newsletter, their homes being entered in West Germany with warrants in the middle of the night, many of them old, he was angry and he wrote a letter, so out of 25 years of writing letters they found a sentence which implied some deep anger and the resort to violence. Clearly in the letter it says after trials, but it was so angry that it resorted to violence. Never once has there been a suggestion of any violence from Mr. Zundel {4490|4491} at all. No suggestion he ever owned or had or would have had a gun. None of that is suggested. But you know who he actually quoted and paraphrased? You know, it was the man who said, "All legal power comes out of the barrel of a gun." That was – if you know history, as I think we often do, that was Mao-Tse Tung, a man who was eulogized in the Parliament of Canada upon his death. And yet, Mr. Zundel used it, and is cross-examined as to its deep-seated significance, as if it was some sinister intent.

I began to see, as I suggest you should, that the real reason for this prosecution was his views, which, if any of us are subjected to that kind of scrutiny, will mean that freedom really ceases to have any meaning. You will be free to agree but not free to disagree. That's the kind of society which will result if a conviction can be founded upon a prosecution of this kind.

I suggest you don't have to believe what it says in Did Six Million Really Die?, but you'd probably have good reason to. There's a lot of truth in that pamphlet which deserves to be considered and deserves to be considered by rational men and women all over the world, not because they're academics, not because they have duties, but because they're thinking human beings, like they want to hear {4491|4492} different points of view. What are we, lobotomized idiots that we only have to accept the point of view of the majority, in quotes? Or are we free, should we be free, to think of views that are not majority views?

How do you think change occurs in society? Do you think all – once the whole of society decides, "Oh, we were wrong about the world being flat," and all of a sudden bang, the whole of the world decides, "Oh, it's round now"? Ask Galileo [Galileo] how difficult that was. In his time he was a heretic; he was totally contrary to 99 per cent of the population's opinion; but who was right?

Now, change has to occur in everybody's thinking from time to time. Everybody grows. I've learned something here; you've learned something here; we're all growing. And it's in the process of hearing points of view that we grow. But if we decide that somebody's point of view ought not to be heard because somebody else says it's false, we've terminated all significant discussion, because significant points of view are always regarded as false by somebody, and if they're controversial, my goodness, they create lots of heat, more heat mostly than light. So if we are going to keep for our children and grandchildren {4492|4493} and for the future of our country the possibility of progress and the possibility of exchanging ideas in a free society, we'd better respect the rights of others who honestly believe that they are right, even though we may think they're wrong.

And I don't suggest for one moment that you or I have any right to determine from the evidence before you that Mr. Zundel is wrong. I would say to you that the case is unproven as to falsehood. Unproven. In Scotland there used to be a verdict – you see, we have to decide guilty or not guilty. In Scottish law there was guilty, not guilty, or unproven. Well, you don't have that verdict here, but it's an interesting point by analogy because in the case at bar it hasn't been proven beyond reasonable doubt that there's anything false about Did Six Million Really Die?, not a word. It's opinion. Dr. Hilberg says, "Oh, I think it's all misquotes and half truth and misconceptions." That's his view. I respect his right to his view. But he hasn't proven any of that. He says, "I've read documents for years." What documents did he produce? I didn't see any. Who produced documents, who produced books, who produced maps, who produced photographs? The defendant. He comes before you because he believes what he says is the truth {4493|4494} and he wants to prove it to you. Why else would he waste a hundred thousand of his dollars and seven weeks of his life if that was all there was? It would be short time indeed, but it's far more than that. Why do you think he does all this? Because he believes in the truth of what he says. He believes in it so passionately because he loves his nation. Is that a sin? He didn't say he hated anybody. He didn't say a word against anybody when he was on the stand. He was attacked; he said that he loved his race, he said that much, he did. But he said, "I love my children, but that doesn't mean I hate other people's children." Is there something wrong with that? If our society is to be so scrupulous about what people's opinions are, who among us will be safe? If I or you were to have to reveal all our opinions on the stand, how many of them would stand public scrutiny? How embarrassed would you and I be if some of our views, maybe written sometimes if we write ... If the right decision is made here, seven weeks will have been well spent in that never again will someone have to defend their position in a court of law on a statement of opinion, really.

You don't have to share all Mr. Zundel's {4494|4495} opinions. He has a right to his; you have a right to yours. He's not questioning your right to yours. But there is a power that's questioning his right to his, and you are the only hope of the freedom of citizens to hold views that disagree. And if you can't hold views that disagree in a free society, what is there? There's two things. If you can't have freedom to disagree, then there's either violence or there's silence, neither of which are traditional in our country, neither of which are necessary in the future. Our country has been a peaceful country because we have tolerated points of view with which you and I might not agree, not because we express them or we have some hygienic method of extracting and eliminating bad views. That's never been done before, and it should never be done now, and it should never be done again.

But there is a force in our society that wants that to happen. It has brought this state of you and I standing here or being here for seven weeks, and if there's a means to stop it from carrying on and creating a situation where everybody has to stand before courts and justify themselves to their neighbours, you're that means: "A quick courageous decision to say freedom deserves our support, we'll terminate here an injustice and we'll {4495|4496} certainly indicate that that type of process should not go on elsewhere," as it is already going on and will increase if you do not. So I think, ladies and gentlemen, that you twelve people have more power in your hands for good or evil than any other twelve people I've ever met, and thank God for the right that you should be free today to defend freedom tomorrow, to make freedom a real thing, when you and I have never really known that kind of power before, because we've never been put in this position before. A clear answer from you without doubt, without fear, without malice, will put an end to a process which, if it continues, will lead us to the destruction of all freedom in society.

In his brochure, Did Six Million Really Die?, he presents a thesis, a thesis that men have paid a very high price for believing in. No witness for the Crown needs fear for his job, for his security, for his family, but is that true for the defence? Then why are they here? They are here because they love the truth and believe in what they say, and already I can tell you the prices are being paid. So much for freedom in society, that men and women might have to fight to get into courtrooms to give their evidence, to testify under fear. Well, with the right {4496|4497} decision from you, that fear will be diminished. What little we know as ordinary citizens about Communist societies indicates that where there is an official truth, where there is a state religion, of belief, people become more and more afraid to speak. That should not happen here, and that's because there is what Orwell referred to as an official truth in some societies. Is that what you wish for your society? You will have more power to answer that question today and in the near future than any other twelve people in our society so far, and with a clear answer to that question you will do some service to your descendants in the preservation of their rights.

I don't know how many of you have controversial views. Maybe none. But will your children have none? Would you like them to have the right to their opinions? That's a question you, too, will answer.

The booklet, Did six Million Really Die?, is more important for German people than it is maybe for others, because there is a real guilt, daily inculcated against German people in the media every time they look at the war. You know, most of us are from a background of the Allied side, I think, and so when we have Veterans' Days we love our {4497|4498} country, we love our – people sacrifice for it, we remember them, but what of the Germans? Are they always to bear the label of the villains? You see, for them, of course, they had an interest to look into this question. There are many people in our society who come from that background who desire to know the truth and don't believe everything they have been told. They inquire, they have a motive, they indeed have a reason, more than you and I, perhaps, to inquire, and their views may be in diametric opposition to yours and some others. But if they have some truth, let them tell it. Let them reason, let the public decide whether they are right or wrong. Let not the courts make a decision, let not people be forced to justify themselves in this way, but let the public decide. That's all Mr. Zundel has asked for his views, and that's all that anyone has a right to, I suggest, and it isn't too much of a right for anyone to desire.

The German people have been portrayed for 40 years in the role of the butchers of six million. Oh, I'm aware that in this case there was repeated efforts to distinguish between Germans and Nazis, but is that really the way they're portrayed? Is that distinction always kept? {4498|4499} Is it justified to believe what we have been told so often? You have heard some reasons which prove that the story of six million is not correct. Those reasons are given to you by sincere, honest individuals who have made diligent research.

You have heard the evidence of many witnesses, and I'd like to briefly capsulize some of the significant things about their evidence. You remember Arnold Freedman. He was transported in cattle cars. He constantly smelled smoke in Birkenau and saw it belching from chimneys. I want you to consider a very significant question which occurred to me and has troubled me in this question all along which you should think about. To create belching chimneys, day in and day out, 24 hours a day, seven days a week for weeks on end, one needs coal or coke, large quantities of coal or coke. I've heard all the evidence, as you have, of the process of unloading of the people into the concentration camps, into the dump [trucks, it was said. Why would all those people be unloaded by the helpless prisoners like Dr. Vrba, and the coal be unloaded by the SS? Keep in mind, in the days of 1940 to '44, we didn't have backhoes, right? We didn't have caterpillars unloading {4499|4500} these trucks, coal cars. Everything apparently was done by hand. Well, you know, it makes me very, very interested, to put it mildly, that all this smoke and burning chimneys and flames shooting forth should occur with nobody unloading coke trains. Did you hear anybody say of unloading coke trains? I didn't. You're the judge of the fact. But I ask you to analyze the evidence and tell me if you did – not tell me now, but you will have to decide that.

Dr. Barton talked about brainwashing; you know that? He said the brainwashing happens with people who are told the same thing over and over again. Who has been told in effect in our society more times than this business of six million? Do you want me to test you on the issue of brainwashing? Think for a moment of this question. How many Canadians died in the Second World War? How many Catholics, Mohammedans [sic], British, French or German? How many Jews? Everybody knows the answer to the last question, because we've been told it over and over and over again in a thousand different ways by a thousand different media personalities and means. It indicates that no single fact is more proliferated in our society than that, and so naturally, no significant fact in society will be more {4500|4501} easily accepted, and look what happens to people when they question it. Look what happens. For seven weeks. And what happens if you do in any other part of society? Well, you would question that? You'll be accused of being a neo-Nazi, an anti-Semite, to question it.

To question should never be anti anything. Why should it be? To think is not against anybody. To reason, to question, is the free right of a thinking human being. So I wonder, where do all this – where does all this right to think go if we can't ask the question, where were the coke trains? Where was the coal? The evidence of Mr. Zundel was that 80 pounds of coal is necessary to cremate a human body. I suggest if you look into the evidence you'll see a book on cremation, and the amount of energy to turn a human body into ashes is a morbid subject, of course, but it doesn't change. The laws of physics don't change for the Germans, for the Nazis, for the Jews, or anybody; they're all the same, the laws of physics. Now, 80 pounds of coal or coke, rather, for 1,765,000 people is nearly a hundred and sixty million pounds of coke. Where does this all come from? Nobody bothers to answer that, but they say that Did Six Million Really Die? is false. Well, if Did Six Million Really Die? {4501|4502} is false, which is like saying a question is false, did Six Million Really Die?, question mark, that's false; how is that question false? How is questioning anything false? Except if you take a line by line knit-picking analysis with a legal mind to see if everything is in its proper context, that might be possible. How many scientific theses, how many editorial opinions in this country could stand that scrutiny? Why should the editorial opinions of our writers be any different than Mr. Zundel? How many editorials contain false new every day? How many newspaper stories, how many books, how many movies? What are we doing here? We're crucifying one man's opinion because they say he's not a nice man, when every day in all of our society there's a thousand misquotes, misstatements. Well, what's the difference?

I'll tell you what the difference is. This man has no political power, and big newspapers and big television stations and big radio stations and big politicians do. That's the difference.

When John Turner quotes Brian Mulroney, do you think he does it to approve of him? Vice-versa, do you think they – they quote each other out of context because {4502|4503} they wish to point out inconsistencies of their opponent. But my friend, in his analysis, will no doubt say there are statements in Did Six Million Really Die? that are out of context, that the Red Cross did not say there was no extermination when they wrote their report, but it is true they said there was no extermination during the War, when they were in the camps. He will no doubt say the Red Cross report, which is quoted in Did Six Million Really Die?, refers to seeing shower stalls in Egypt. That's true. But why should their processes of examining camps be any different when it's dealing with civilian internees in Egypt or in Poland, in France or anywhere else? It's an example of the process. It's an example used to show that when the Red Cross visited in September, 1944, which they did, and they said very clearly, "We heard rumours from the British at Teshin (phonetics), but the prisoners themselves said nothing and we could find nothing." Now, you can say, "But there's a reason nonetheless to believe it." What reason? Where's the evidence? They don't produce for you a shred of evidence of a gas chamber, but they say 1,765,000 people died, by going between two buildings, remember Dr. Vrba's evidence? Well, how do you accomplish {4503|4504} that without a gas chamber? What, do they disappear and they're all shot? No, you have to justify the claim that millions died, you have to have gas chambers, and there's no evidence to support them.

Now, we have tried, the defence has tried to show that the alleged gas chambers that you see in Auschwitz today are impossibilities, scientific impossibilities. We have called evidence, witness after witness, to show they have tried to find the bottom of this story, and they have found nothing that makes sense to their experience. That's pretty significant stuff. That's pretty important analyses. Look what Dr. Faurisson has paid for his inquiries. He's been beaten; he's been beaten while he talked; he's been subjected to quite a bit of ridicule; but does anyone deny the sincerity or honesty of his inquiry, or his intelligence or his detailed analysis of what documents there are? I suggest not.

People want the right to ask these questions, and there some people who don't want anyone to have the right to broadcast what they find, and I consider that, I suggest you should, a very suspicious situation. When any group of people want to silence an individual, you'd better {4504|4505} ask why. When benefits from this story? Not just Jewish people, not just the State of Israel, but there are some allied events which might not look quite so good without the story of six million. It might be a little more dubious as to why we bombed Dresden, Hamburg, and demanded unconditional surrender, and had the effort made to so-called try war criminals. If it wasn't for the six million, there is some doubt about the whole process. We might have second thoughts as to whether we were all right and they were all wrong. But is that a bad thing, to examine maybe 40 years later whether we ought to have gone out and slaughtered each other? Maybe it's a good thing, maybe it's beneficial to social tolerance that we should ask these questions. Maybe it's time to do that now. Maybe the way to peace is not through silence and coercion on these matters but through open discussion. How will that change the world? Maybe it will be a better world when we can look at ourselves more honestly in the cold light of reason rather than the heated passions of a war just ended.

That's what revisionism is all about. After the First War there were many revisionists, many people who said, "Well, we really don't have all the answers on our {4505|4506} side." We used propaganda. We told people that Germans killed Belgian babies and boiled cadavers to make soap. That's not a Second World War story at all. And, you know, as a result of that, I suggest world peace and tolerance was better off than it was since the Second World War, since this story has been repeated and expanded and expanded and repeated again and again until it has caused us to be brainwashed. If we want peace, there must be freedom to discuss whether or not the morality was all on one side. That's really the social effect of the booklet, Did Six Million Really Die? You don't have to accept it. To see even that in its value, that it puts some of the things that happened after the Second World War in a different context, that would be a redeeming value in itself, but the booklet has a great deal more. It has truth, a lot of truth. It's for you to decide, for the public, indeed, too, to decide how much truth, measured as they ought to with their right to read everybody else's opinion. Error needs the support of government; truth stands on its own. In fact, what is occurring here is the endeavour to silence one opinion, one side of the argument. "But the world is no more justified in silencing the opinion of one man than that one man would {4506|4507} be if he had the power in silencing all the world." Those aren't my words; they're the words of John Stuart Mill. But they're as true today as when he spoke them.

Do we have to learn the same lessons all over again every generation? Do we never entrench and understand from one generation to the next the right to differ? Do we have to always go over these battles time and again? I guess we do. I guess it's always going to be a struggle to have a different point of view, but I'll tell you, it has always been the history of man that good men and women have valued freedom, sometimes to the extent where they would risk their lives to save it, and if anything could be done to honour the memory of men and women who died in war for the sake of freedom, it would be to recognize that freedom now for someone whose opinions they might not have agreed with, because in time we will know the truth; but nobody knows it all today. If anybody has a duty to admit a fact about ourselves, it's that we don't have all the answers. Anybody who thinks they do, well, then they're already perfect, and I don't know those people.

I would ask that you, having suffered and endured all the boredom and difficulties of this trial, the {4507|4508} forefathers' intolerance of views. Let our society from the date of your verdict be known for the safety with which we tolerate divergent views and opinions when truth is left free to combat error in an open arena of a free society unfettered by the heavy hand of the state. That is a simple statement of principle which has been true for many, many years, and I guess it's necessary for you and I once again to make the little sacrifice that you and I have to be here and fight for that principle all over again. Thank God, no one was really hurt. Thank God that we can do this in a rational context with respect for each other, with understanding, with charity to our many errors, without having to go to war, to discuss controversies. Maybe there's progress, but there won't be if everybody who wishes to bring forward a controversial view will have to do so in a court at their expense. If you convict, that process will only just begin, because in society there are always conflicts and there are always people who would like to put their enemy right there. That's where a lot of people {4508|4509} would like to see somebody they disagree with, right there, and if you convict I can say to you that's a very likely situation, and there are some rather nasty politicians who would like to put their opponents right there, and if we follow down the road that this prosecution will lead, if there was a conviction, there will be no stopping those types of politicians who wish to put their opponents right there. And then where will we be? And don't think that they wouldn't have the power, because they can find that. There's pressure groups today who can find that power. Just ask him.

The book-burnings of the Nazis was wrong, but what's going on here? A book's on trial, two books, if you like, pamphlets, tracts, if you like. But every day in our society people say a lot more controversial, dubious things than are written there. Why are these people so afraid of such a little book? If it was false, would they be afraid? Who has the power to answer what Did Six Million Really Die? says? Every day in the media the answer is obvious, isn't it?

You've heard a witness, Doug Collins; he's been a journalist for 35 years, and he says there's power in {4509|4510} Zionists in the media. Do you really need some proof of that? How many publications today criticize Israel very strenuously? Is that the kind of society you want, where one view is the only legitimate view? Even if it was said, and it's so often said, the smear word of anti-Semitism is so easy to put upon anyone and so difficult to disabuse oneself of once it's labelled onto you; but is criticism of Israel or the point of view of Jews any more evil than the criticism of Americans or the criticism of British or the criticism of French points of view? Why should it be?

It's my submission to you that that may be the basis of the Crown's attack, that the accused has chosen to criticize a very obviously Jewish belief. Now, I don't question the right of any group, Jews, Gentiles, Greeks, whoever, to hold whatever views, but why deny him the same right? And then let the public decide, as every time they will, between who they believe and who they don't believe. The future of the right to hold beliefs is at stake because the truth is never self-evident. There's always going to be a debate about the truth, especially in history. How many believed, as I did when I grew up, that Christopher Columbus discovered America? Well, they don't always agree on that {4510|4511} today. But I suggest if I'd have written that in my test papers in Grades 2, 3 and 4, I'd have failed – or disputed that fact, rather. But what's wrong with the changes of view? They happen all the time. History is controversy, today is controversy, yesterday is controversy, and tomorrow will be controversy, but so what? Nobody is going to be able to write the history of the world until God does. And if anyone man or one group of human – or men and women anywhere think they can tell you what this history of the world is or the history of this trial was, they'd be very presumptuous because we will all have our own views. You'll have yours and I'll have mine, and no doubt they won't agree, so how do you expect that history should agree to hold his view false on a matter that took place 40 years ago, involved millions of people and involved thousands of events? How ridiculous to think that anybody can know the whole story on those things. Dr. Hilberg said he knew it all. He told us – this book, Did Six Million Really Die?, oh, he didn't have very complimentary words to say for it. I don't mind. So what? When I got to the point of saying, now you remember, just take a little part out of the book, you know, "The book, the whole thing is just such a piece of half truths," he'll {4511|4512} say. I said, "What about Wenersturm [Wennerstrum]?", just a little point like that. Wenersturm [sic] had something to do with the I.M.T., the International Military Tribunal, Nuremberg, where this story was enshrined as truth, did Wenersturm [sic] really say that, that which is alleged here? "Yes, he did. Yes, – he did." "Well, but he's all wrong. I don't agree with him," Dr. Hilberg said. Well, that's fine if Dr. Hilberg doesn't agree with Wenersturm [sic]. Wenersturm was there. Wenersturm was a judge. Wenersturm heard the evidence. Wenersturm heard the situation. Wenersturm could be wrong, and Dr. Hilberg could be wrong. So what? And, finally, I remember Dr. Hilberg up there saying, "All right, it's all correct." Do you remember that? I remember those words. You think about that. What it means is this: Dr. Hilberg felt that he disagreed with the book. Well, that's okay. He then went so far as to say that it was all false. What does he mean by "false"? Incorrect? . No, he means that he disagrees with the thesis, that's all it really means, because if you analyze what he says about the facts, he's never been to a camp, never until after he wrote his book and then for a day, with the President's commission as a reward. I don't know what for; {4512|4513} I guess he's popular. So what? I don't blame him being popular and I don't blame him for being unpopular; everybody makes their choices. But do we have to be in a court of law to argue about them? Does that make him false and Dr. Hilberg right?

I'd suggest that what it amounts to, when you come to the bottom line of this question, is that people will always differ, but the danger is that if you silence one point of view you won't get a balanced argument. When I'm through speaking, it will be the last time you will ever hear from me. I'm not allowed to ever speak to you again, I guess, under the Law of Canada; certainly not about this case. But there will be a Crown argument and you will hear his point of view, and no doubt guess that he will take parts of the trial that supports his thesis, it won't be the whole of the evidence, don't expect him to do that; how could he? I can't either, nor really can His Honour. Everyone has a biased view; everyone will inevitably pick and choose in what they believe. That doesn't mean that I'm a liar; doesn't mean my friend's a liar. It means that we will have differences of view. Now, that's the way the world turns. That's the way we live. And thank God that so far we're free to disagree {4513|4514} here, at least, although allegedly he's not free to disagree by publishing this.

Has Dr. Hilberg proved a single thing here to be false? Well, no, he hasn't. He says he has documents. He produces none. He talks about train tickets and schedules. What train tickets and schedules? If we're talking about a criminal case, we should have evidence. There isn't enough evidence here today to convict one person for murdering one person. But they want you to believe that six million died, or millions died, and that this question mark is false. Yeah. Where is the evidence to support one murder by one person? There is no Hitler order; there's an alleged order somewhere by somebody alleged to be heard by somebody else. There's no evidence.

Let's look at the evidence. Dr. Vrba says he's an eye-witness. Dr. Vrba had a little problem here. You have plans, you know, put in by the defence, of crematoria. Now, let's make sure we understand each other. There certainly are crematoria. We all know. But that doesn't mean there's gas chambers to gas people. But the issue, were 1,765,000 or millions gassed, killed by a systematic plan to do so? There's no evidence of that. Dr. Vrba gave {4514|4515} evidence of burning pits. Well, we know these places were no Sunday picnic. We know these places were unjust. Concentration camps are unjust. Deprivation is unjust. The Jews suffered terribly, unjustifiably. The Jews were in concentration camps for war reasons, and war is not justified, really. We had people in concentration camps here. They lost a lot, too. Thank God we didn't lose the war and couldn't feed the people in our concentration camps. What would have happened in our country if the Eastern half had collapsed, the governments had collapsed, the railroads had collapsed, the food system had collapsed, the Western half had collapsed and we had people, Japanese, for example, in concentration camps around Ottawa, who would we feed first, our troops or our prisoners? Thank God, we didn't have to answer that question. The Germans did. And they were hung for answering it the wrong way, I suppose. What else could they do?

Have you any idea what Germany looked like in 1945? It sure didn't look like Toronto. And when the Russians came from the East, do you think they were a nice bunch of fellows like we're told the Allies were? I suggest to you that there is a great deal to be grateful for in this country, and one of the greatest things to be {4515|4516} grateful for is that we have never faced, so far, that kind of desolation when everything you know, everything you trusted, everyone you believed in, your ideals, your neighbours, your friends, your country, your home, was ruined. Thank God, you'll never know that. I hope you'll never know that. But if we are to understand what happened in Germany, we cannot ignore those facts.

Did Dr. Hilberg know that? Was he there? No. Who was? Thies Christopherson was there. We didn't go into that. It's obvious that this is a question that could only be understood really by somebody who was there. Dr. Barton was in a camp shortly after liberation, and like many of us who saw the film "Nazi Concentration Camps", he no doubt was as horrified as you and I had every right to be by that scene. That picture, "Nazi Concentration Camps", was put to you for a reason. It was to persuade you that there were millions of dead people. Well, you saw thousands of bodies, thousands of people who died from privation of war. Only once was there a suggestion of deliberate gassing. That was at Dachau, and I have gone into this with detail as much as you could hope to get, I suggest, in a court, to show that now people don't say there were gasings at Dachau. So {4516|4517} to what happened to that situation? How come the Allies said then there were gasings and now they don't? Well, because of the same hysteria with which we have regarded Auschwitz for 40 years, Auschwitz where no allied could go, Auschwitz where the Russians were, Auschwitz where four million or three million or 2.5 million or 1. – 1,765,000, or 1.1 million from Hilberg, or 900,000 from Reitlinger, were killed, cremated, were what?

There are many reasons to say that this book has not been proven false, that's all. It's never been our burden to have to prove it was true, because our law has always allowed the reasonable doubt to go to the accused. He's presumed innocent. This is presumed to be true until they prove the contrary, and I don't think they have proved the contrary now. How have they? Ninety percent of the quotes in the book are proven and accepted. Ten percent are unproven. That's all.

The allegations of torture, there are in evidence before you the statements of Wennerstrum, the statements of Streicher (phonetics) the statements of others, the result of the Malmedy trial. The Crown says, well, the Malmedy trial is not a Nuremberg trial. The {4517|4518} Malmedy trial took place in Germany shortly after the war. It may not technically be a Nuremberg trial. But do you really think that there is no substance to the suggestion that what took place there by the same allies against the same accused, types of people, is going to be different than what they did at Nuremberg?

You also have in evidence that they didn't even allow the press to talk to the lawyers of the accused, let alone the accused, so how do we know what happened to them? Well, we know because some of them said so, and when they said so, like Streicher, they struck it out of the record. Don't want the world to hear somebody complain about us, and we sure don't want the press to hear what the accused say unless we say the accused can say it. Do you call that freedom? I don't. I call that the attitude of war and victor's justice. It works, obviously. The world believes in your cause, but is it necessary that for all eternity nobody should ever think to the different? Can we now look back with a little less passion, a little less contempt for our adversaries? Could we now maybe look at whether they might have had a point, or do we have to believe forever they should be damned in a silence that we {4518|4519} cannot answer?

THE COURT: We will take a break.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE CLERK: Members of the jury, you may retire.

OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER {4519|4520}

(Reporter's Note: Jury enters 12:25 p.m.)

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

The main problem with the whole extermination thesis is that in the order, in the absence of a plan, in the absence of a budget, in the absence of any physical evidence of extermination, there is an intended belief, shall we say, that millions of people were exterminated without a trace. The difficulty I see from Dr. Hilberg's, in that regard especially, is that where he talks about train tickets he produces – neither does he produce figures. That's why we end up with a specific crime of genocide with a specific weapon of gas chambers with no proof of gas chambers, and no proof of numbers that can be in any way realistic. That's why we end up with figures that fluctuate from twenty-five million in the case of Gerstein, you recall, to three hundred some thousand in the book "Did Six Million Really Die", and what I am saying to you is that nobody, in the face of that lack of evidence, can say that anything particularly is false news, if it was ever news at all. It seems to me it is a view of history, hardly news.

I did miss somebody who is still here, Detective Williams. One thing he brought out in his evidence I wanted to touch on. He wasn't so – he read from Chambers[.] {4520|4521}

We've heard from Dr. Barton that in 1945 there was no cure for typhus. So, here's some of those horrible Nazis telling these people in the concentration camps, "If you don't delouse and typhus breaks out, you are going to be cremated." That's the way he interpreted that. There's a[.]lot of truth to it. If you get typhus, you are liable to die, especially there in close confines. That is not to say I don't believe the Jewish people didn't suffer. I certainly do and so does my client, and so does this booklet. That's not to say we lack compassion for the suffering of these people. It is to say that we are prepared to examine whether there was a plan of deliberate extermination process. There's quite a difference.

If people died from typhus, disease, privation of war, you don't have a situation that much different than you had in the Boer War, except on a larger scale or in the American Civil War where concentration camps for prisoners of war were hell on earth. And that becomes a significant question: why, if there was a plan to exterminate the Jews, was there a delousing program at all?

Why were they told that they should delouse, and why were steps taken to provide the means that they could be protected from that disease?

He said something else about hospitals. Dr. Vrba was very down on the hospital. He said anyone who {4521|4522} where people go, because, frankly, nobody makes an effort to announce their directions to the authorities, and movement of people in wartime is much like Dr. Vrba, over borders, in the middle of the night. And I don't think there is anything wrong with that, but I think it becomes a little difficult to be sure with figures when those things are happening.

So, in respect to Detective Williams' evidence, which he read very carefully, his evidence as to why he didn't read more and formed any more opinions is that he was obeying superior orders from my learned friend and that, I suppose, is quite legitimate, but we, as individuals, ought to read more than just the bare words. We also ought to think about them.

Referring, then, Arnold Friedman's evidence, he, the first survivor witness to be called, said something which, I suggest, is very, very interesting and very true. "They told us," he said, "If we don't delouse and typhus breaks out, we'll all be cremated." There's something very telling in those words. "We were told if we don't delouse". Now, if the plan was to exterminate Jews, why tell them to delouse? Why provide delousing facilities? Why provide anything? Why? He says, "We were told if we don't delouse and typhus breaks out ..." Well, obviously the reason for delousing is to avoid typhus [sic]. "And if it breaks out we'll all be cremated." {4522|4523}

Encyclopedia and he pointed out that where the article says, according to Chambers Encyclopedia, the total number of Jews living in pre-war Europe was six million five hundred thousand, he pointed out that in Chambers Encyclopedia he said there was six million five hundred thousand in Nazi dominated lands in 1939. Those are the exact words. You will find them, because you've got them, because I put them into evidence. That really isn't any different, because Nazi dominated lands that became Nazi dominated after 1939, but they resided by 1939, is the way I understand it, because you couldn't tell what happened after the war began – people moved in all directions, they didn't check with border police every time they crossed the border, and I don't think you can tell me or anybody can be sure where everybody went. That's the big thesis argument.

Well, where are all these people gone? Well, if I was a Jew in Poland and I knew the Jews were coming from the west and I knew the Russians were coming from the east, I'd get to the Russian side and I don't think I'd ask too many people permission. And I think that Jewish people probably did that, and I don't know how many, and I don't think anybody really does.

The last census of any value in Poland, I think Dr. Hilberg said, was 1931, and the rest is rather unpredictable. I suggest in war it is very hard to tell {4523|4524} went there died or probably died. He went there and didn't die. He even had a surgical operation and didn't die. But, Arnold Friedman said there were hospitals and people came back from it. He spoke of a case of an epileptic who went to the hospital and came back. Why, if there's a planned, deliberate intent to exterminate Jews – and this is said in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" – have a hospital at all? Of course, the story is that it's all for medical experiments, hideous medical experiments, such as were demonstrated in the film, "Nazi Concentration Camps", along with the soap story which Dr. Hilberg says is a rumour which originated in the First World War and continued into the Second. But, why, if there was the case of a hospital in Birkenau, would an epileptic go to hospital and come back? Why would Dr. Vrba go to hospital and come back? If the Nazis were as represented to be in the Holocaust, why were they only interested in extracting work and lots of people were coming in to be exterminated immediately, why, when Dr. Vrba is sick, why would he not be exterminated? Not working today? Well, off to the ovens. Really. All these people have survived. I would suggest that some of them have been sick. I'm not suggesting the concentration camps were justified or nice places, but maybe, just maybe, there is a justification for believing that what this booklet says is true. {4524|4525}

He said open flames spewed from the chimneys going on sometimes, day and night. Whether it was fourteen feet high or thirteen feet high he could not tell, but there was – it was in excess of the height of the chimney.

Dr. Lindsay testified that if you had a chimney fire like that, you wouldn't have a chimney. And then, my friend elicited, "Aren't there methods by which you could have special bricks to keep a fire burning like that?" Perhaps. Any evidence of special bricks? No. But you have to have a way to save this thirteen-foot high flame. So we come up with special bricks. But, where do we find the coal to burn like that? Look at the smoke channel in this plan. It is horizontal. Look at the scale. You can read it. You are going to have flames in crematoria, right? And it's a container for a body like there's in downtown Toronto, just the same. And the body is not right in the flames at all.

But you remember Arnold Friedman's evidence. He could tell the difference between skinny people and fat people from the colour of the flames. Honest to goodness. Arnold Friedman is a very nice man. Arnold Friedman has suffered, without question. Arnold Friedman is the kind of person you would like to know. Nothing do I say against Arnold Friedman, except that it's a little bit far-fetched to say that you could tell the colour – from the colour of the flames, the people being cremated. I could understand, {4525|4526} as a young boy, how the stories would go around the camp, and I could well imagine how terrifying it must have been for a young boy to be in a camp like that. I could understand how being separated from his parents would be frightening, it would be horrible, beyond our imagination; but I suggest that when people say things like this, we have to undersand [sic] that when people suffer, and they want to communicate their suffering, they justifiably tend a little bit to exaggerate, because they want us to understand how horrible it was. And I agree that they should be entitled to that. Nobody denies Arnold Friedman or Dr. Vrba, or anybody, to write sort of a historical novel to communicate their suffering. That is justified. But there are other reasons to look at the question not to hurt their feelings, but to look at it realistically and say, as this book says, it's not correct to believe that six million people were exterminated in this way. It's not correct to believe that you can tell nationality of a cremated person by flames shooting from a chimney. That is not correct.

I am not wishing to accuse anybody of being a little bit loose with the facts. Let's realistically consider that that doesn't make sense. Let's not make it a crime, anyway, to disbelieve it. All right? Let's suggest that Mr. Zundel has at least very good reasons for his belief, common sense ones that he wants to believe in. He {4526|4527} wants to understand that his people are not guilty of this crime. He has a motive to look at this. He is interested for the sake of his people, but realistically, is he far off the mark when he says, "I doubt that"?

I am not trying to do anybody any harm by that. When I asked later, he said he was guessing. He said gypsies were loaded into trucks to take them a couple of hundred yards. He also said, looking at the map, they could have gone out of the far side of the camp. Now, listen, ladies and gentlemen, where do you think all the people came from for the satellite camps of Auschwitz? How do they get to the satellite camps?

Vrba – nobody goes to Auschwitz except through the station, so when they have satellite camps they go to the main camp and they are de-loused and then they go on to the satellite camps. What's wrong with that? Why should we necessarily believe that because they come to Auschwitz, and there's allegedly no counting, that they are gassed and cremated? Why do we believe Vrba's statement that he saw one million, seven hundred and sixty-five thousand people go between two buildings and never come back? And then I asked him, "Are you sure?" And he said, "Oh, it could have been in China." That kind of sarcasm is alright if you are dealing with something superficial, but when you are talking about one million, seven hundred and sixty-five {4527|4528} thousand, you are talking pretty close to the population of Toronto.

Now, if I ask you to see these people go between two buildings and you are sure they did, he says, "Oh, yes", now, let us say – and be charitable – that one ought to be free to doubt that and one has grave reasons to doubt it, when the gypsies were loaded into trucks to go to the, allegedly, to the crematorium, by Arnold Friedman, why would they be loaded into trucks to go two hundred yards? Well, my answer is, it's very likely that if you look on the map, the road through, between the crematorium, goes right out of the camp. It's there on the aerial photographs, too, even though Dr. Vrba said, "No, no. It's not there." – Dr. Vrba who took a compass and went around that way in the dark of the night to make sure they weren't there. Well, all I'm saying is nobody denies you the right to believe absolutely and completely the exterminationist thesis, but what the accused asks is the right to disbelieve it.

I've dealt with the question of the different types of people being cremated that Arnold Friedman spoke about. He said he'd seen prisoners, killed prisoners as well. He didn't know how many went through the camp in the nine months he was there. He had no count, not any ability or even a guess at the [sic] numbers. {4528|4529}

I suggest to you that Arnold Friedman, in that respect, is quite right. I suggest to you that there is no particularly good reason why Dr. Vrba's evidence on that point should be any better, because Dr. Vrba now may be a well-established professor, etcetera, but at the time he was nineteen years old – not a great deal different than Arnold Friedman – and Arnold Friedman said, "I don't know how many were there, how many came in, how many went out. I don't know." Well, that's pretty honest. And somebody who says, "I know that it was one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand people and you, you impudent little young man, shouldn't even question that." Let's face the fact. He was a nineteen-year-old man himself at the time. Do you want to tell me he counted one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand people or any people? And I am not saying that even if one Jewish person died, that that wasn't a crime. Of course it was, but we are dealing with an accusation of genocide, a book that questions it and the right to question it. That's all.

I am not suggesting for one moment that that minimizes the suffering, justifies the concentration camps or anything else, but it allows us, I suggest, the right to question even Dr. Vrba, for after all he, too, is not God. If he's going to tell us these things, under oath, I want to know why. Don't you? If somebody tells you the whole population {4529|4530} of Toronto went between two buildings, and disappeared, are you going to say, "Yes, I believe that. I don't question that."

I must accept that because he is a survivor? I have reverence [sic] for their pain and suffering. I am not beyond understanding for that, but if we are dealing with a factual question, why not ask the question? And when you do ask the question, what do you get for answers? Hysteria, emotion, and appeals to emotions, too, justified as they are. But if we are dealing with facts, let's stick to facts.

And Arnold Friedman's view of the facts was more honest than Dr. Vrba's, even if Dr. Vrba is a doctor and Arnold Friedman is just Arnold Friedman.

He also said that sick older people who came into his barracks did so after the selection, and, therefore, were not killed. And then we came to the question of selection. He describes the selection process in referring to selecting professions, even among the older people. Now, why would they select professions? To kill the people? What do you care if you are just killing people? You don't care whether they are doctors, lawyers, tailors, whatever. I suggest the selections he referred to were selections for work. You don't select people by profession for the purpose of killing them, unless it's lawyers, and then there's lots of reasons for doing that. {4530|4531}

Anyway – well, if you are talking about crematorium in Toronto, or crematoria in Auschwitz, he said they are two different things. Well, there maybe is argument that technology is changed and now there's no smoke and what not, but bricks haven't changed that much. Chimneys haven't changed that much, and fifteen-foot flames shooting-out of the chimney day and night don't work in a brick chimney. Twenty-four hours a day, for weeks, he said, they smoked and flames shot out. And he said capable people were brought in, in a couple of days were sent out, obviously to other camps.

Ignatz Fulop was an interesting witness. He, too, was rather difficult to understand sometimes. I suggest to you why. He was transported in cattle trucks and cars. In May of 1944, he was taken to Auschwitz and, when unloaded, said there was no platform. The documents that you have indicates there was a platform, both in Auschwitz and in Auschwitz-Birkenau that date. His account of selections varies with Friedman's testimony, and he saw Kapos club someone to death. He recounted seeing people going into the showers, women separated from the men. I found it interesting. He apparently was looking across the line at some point and got into difficulty there in the showers. Now, I suppose one could say that was just meanness on the part of some guard, but there may have been some question as to why he {4531|4532} was looking at the womens' [sic] part of the showers, for all I know, but he certainly wasn't killed. He was injured. He was beaten, apparently. He said he never saw his father or mother again. Considering all the camps he was through, I suggest there is an understandable reason for that. There is no doubt that many people died in those camps. There is no doubt that older people would have a tougher time in those camps, and there's many instances of people saying that they lost members of their family.

I remember, for example, Dennis Urstein. He said – and this really, I suggest, is where you've got to look a little bit skeptically at this – he said he lost 154 members of his family in the "Holocaust". I said, "Could you name even twenty?" Could you name twenty? I suggest to you if any of us say we lost 154 members of our family, it tends to be a little dubious. How many members of your family do you know and how many generations do you go back? I asked him to name twenty. He didn't get there and he ended up naming someone who died in the U.S.A. six or seven years ago. What it means is that people, because they suffer, tend to want you to understand their suffering and they sometimes exaggerate, that's all.

Ignatz Fulop said – and you can check your recollection against mine – but he said he saw ten people hung {4532|4533} on a single rope before breakfast. Now that, I suggest, in itself, is dubious. He also said that he had a crematorium or incinerator in Toronto and asked if I'd like to come and see it. There's something wrong there. He seemed as if he had something that he wanted to promote. I don't understand. But, when somebody starts coming out with stories that ten men were hung from one rope by a vehicle being pulled in the morning before breakfast, and it seems at; if he said it was a repeated thing, one wonders why one would see such things. Even the ruthless, bestial Germans, of which he described the concentration camp guards, would need a reason. If they were exploiting labour, which everybody else seemed to say they were, why would they do that? I suggest his testimony is dubious. He didn't have anything to say about gas chambers, but it is suggested, in my suggestion to you, an unbalanced mind.

If one wants to advertise a gas or cremation facility in Toronto, it's a strange thing to mention when you are on the stand dealing with the Holocaust. Something strange about that.

Dennis Urstein was another voluntary witness who spoke of the colour of bodies hauled out of gas chambers. Now, Dennis Urstein says he hauled the bodies out of Leichenkeller I, which is an underground mortuary, in Krema II. Now, you can {4533|4534} see on the plan where that is. It may have been Krema III, he said, but I'll tell you something. The two Kremas II and III are identical. No one will deny that. The plans are there. The two Kremas II and III in Birkenau are identical. They are long, underground areas known as Leichenkellers. They are underground because when typhus broke out, bodies, sometimes three or four hundred bodies, would be there, so that they would not affect the rest of the camp. The colour of those bodies, he described as grayish or green, but you heard Dr. Lindsay say that if someone is asphyxiated with Zyklon-B, hydrogen cyanide, their body is brick red. Now, if they were gassed with Zyklon B, why would that not be so?"

There is another question that arises out of Urstein's evidence – now, he is the one who said 154 members of his family, and he couldn't remember twenty – the bodies he said, had no rigor mortis. No rigor mortis. Now, if the bodies were gassed, and then he seemed to imply they were washed and thereby they were safe, but if hydrogen cyanide is, as I suggested, water soluble, then touching water associated with the bodies is associated with hydrogen cyanide [cyanide] poisoning. He survived hauling that many bodies. He alleged the gas chamber, he said, was on ground level.

Now, if you look at the plans, and he is referring to other than the crematoria and he is referring to {4534|4535} the Leichenkeller, he says that it's a closed-in area. That's underground. Nobody can deny that. And if you are hauling bodies, you are not going to forget hauling them upstairs, but he says it was on ground level. I asked him about that several times, and he repeated it several times. This is no minor error, because if he could remember hauling bodies upstairs, it would be hard to forget. Furthermore, he said there were no pillars. Well, look at the plans. If he is talking about Crematorium II or III, and if he is talking about what he says he was talking about, a flat-roofed building, the crematoria is not flat-roofed. The Leichenkeller is, and it is underground with a very small protuberance [protuberance] above the ground. This is where Vrba got himself into a real problem. This is a man who says he is an eye witness. We are supposed to examine that evidence and look at what we know of the facts and see if it conforms. If it doesn't, there's reasons to doubt it.

He says there were no pillars. If you look in the plans, you'll see in the Leichenkeller massive pillars. He said the grounds adjacent to the crematorium were very beautiful, like a retreat. No collection of piles of coke or other fuel to burn large numbers of bodies which, allegedly, were burned in the crematoria.

Now, the story of the exterminations is that {4535|4536} two to three thousand or more bodies a day were handled in these facilities. There has to be an explanation for the figure of one million, seven hundred and sixty-five thousand in two years of Vrba. If there's eighty pounds of coke required for each body, for two thousand bodies – that's what half of what Krema II is supposed to be handling a day, so that's a hundred and sixty thousand pounds of coke a day.

You remember that Vrba said that the railroad spur did not go into Birkenau before he left. Now, where, pray tell, does the whole train come to? Surely you are not going to tell me it comes in trucks, hand-loaded by trucks and off-loaded by trucks. Is that what you want me to believe? Then it has to come on the train. And you remember the dump trucks to pick-up the people and take them to Birkenau? Well, they also have to haul the coal off the coal train, so we also have the story of requiring, for one crematorium, a hundred and sixty thousand pounds of coke a day to cremate two thousand bodies, eighty pounds, a piece. You have no train coming into the camp. You have no backhoes or caterpillars to unload it. You have to have the train coming into the area between the two camps where Vrba went and unloaded the people. They must then be loaded into the trucks. Somebody has to load the coal into {4536|4537} the truck, haul it to the crematorium, and what are you going to do, put it in a bunker, or what are you – going to do with it? You have to dump them on the beautiful grounds. The grounds are beautiful, like a retreat.

We have a very serious question about this. A reason to question. And if there was no evidence from the defence, it would still be a reason to doubt that this story that was put forward by the Crown's witnesses is true, isn't it. We have logic, common sense. We have to think about these things. We are encouraged to do so, but it is such an emotional subject to pick and you are regarded as callous or antisemitic or something terrible if you asked these questions. Now, if somebody doesn't want us to ask these questions, why? Do they want us to believe without questions? Maybe they do.

Now, Dennis Urstein said the colour of the building was bluish-gray when the building was brick. He said there were lots of lights in the alleged gas chamber, which does not fit with the other accounts where it is said to be dark. His evidence comes down to this. You see, he handled dead bodies, and the people were, therefore, gassed. That's as far as I suggest his evidence can go. Logically, if you want to fill-in the blanks and believe that, therefore, they were gassed and say that's proof of the extermination of {4537|4538} six million people, I don't object to you doing so, but I only suggest the accused has a right not to do so, because he wants to exercise the rational facilities of his mind, the critical facilities that Dr. Barton said were not the things you use when you are brainwashed. You don't believe that? You want to believe that six million died? You are welcome. In a free society everybody is welcome, and nine out of ten people are going to believe it, whatever happens here, and I really don't care what people believe.

All I ask you is to give my client the right to exercise his mind, ask questions and publish his belief founded upon reason that this six million story is not true.

The evidence in Urstein's case, in reality, is quite impossible for a gassing as described at the rate of six thousand per day, or three thousand per day, as other sources indicate. This is really incredible evidence. This volunteer really became dubious, and he was rather clowning at times.

Then there was Henry Leader. He was a very quiet-spoken gentleman. He obviously has suffered, been in the camps. He volunteered to testify. He admits that he wonders why, after forty years, he's asked these questions. Well, it would appear he never asked himself those questions, {4538|4539} and he was never asked any questions as far as I am aware. He cannot identify where he was or the location of the alleged gas chamber. Now, that is not to say there wasn't one. If there was evidence, it could be that he forgot. I am not suggesting that he has disproven anything because he can't remember. Don't think for a minute that I am suggesting that, but if we want to rely on his evidence to find a gas chamber, then we've got to know about something that is a gas chamber, because one million seven hundred and sixty-five thousand people don't disappear without some explanation. And if we've got to say they disappeared, and if we have to believe that, then we've got to know why.

He says there were – he describes, again I think he describes "bluish bodies" when gassed people from Zyklon B would be bright red. When asked how he knew they were gassed, he said he didn't pay any attention. I think one of the most beautiful things I will ever remember is my friend asking him, in re-examination, after cross-examination, "Are you sure it wasn't a bath house?" And he said, "No. It could have been." Because I think, honestly, he is trying to be helpful to the Crown. He is trying to do what he thinks is right, and when it comes right down to it, his evidence is not evidence of real knowledge of something. It's the evidence of some other things that are the moral duty to support the cause {4539|4540} they believe in.

In the final analysis, he says the people were going into a building which could have been a bath house. The evidence would not convict a person for murder, let alone support a charge of six million in a mass murder.

Dr. Vrba said the railroad did not go into the camp before he escaped in April 1944. So, therefore, every pound of coke had to be trucked into the camp. He gave his evidence of hearing trucks, meaning a hundred persons per truck. Well, there's going to be an awful lot of coal handling that doesn't seem to have any explanation. He says that people were off-loaded at the Cracow-Warsaw line, two kilometers from Birkenau. He said people like him often off-loaded luggage into dump trucks. Did any of you ever ask who off-loaded the thousands of pounds of coke for the one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand people he swears were cremated immediately from this spur of Birkenau to the crematorium?

He alleges people handled the prisoners, and who handled the coke? We never hear who did that. Perhaps the S.S., because they wore black uniforms. I suggest there is a serious unanswered break in the thesis, especially with facilities for the handling. You need an amount of coke almost equal in mass to the weight of the prisoners. And seeing the photographic evidence from the aerial photographs, you will {4540|4541} not see any evidence of coke at all. You will not see any evidence of lines of prisoners, and if millions of people were forced to go through areas where these guards were supposedly located, how come they are not trampled areas? We see no dump trucks hauling coke. We see no trace of dump trucks around the crematorium referred to by Vrba in the gardens. No evidence for cremation of one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand bodies, and smoking chimneys, day and night. Bodies are not themselves fuel. Bodies don't burn on their own. It is patently ridiculous to suggest that you can cremate such a massive amount of people without coke and fuel which is visible, transported by trains, or by trucks.

Does the accused have to believe such stories as these to avoid prosecution in the future in a so-called "free country"? If so, why should we have a brain at all? Why should we ever think? Because if you have to believe this, without questioning it, we might as well all have frontal lobotomies and forget about thinking for ourselves.

Dr. Vrba wrote a book and to the end of the day with Dr. Vrba, I could not get a clear understanding of whether it was fiction or whether it was fact. In his book he said he saw Himmler there when he was not there. Then I asked him, "Are you sure?" Well, it could have been somebody else. Looked like Himmler. Could have been Himmler. Could {4541|4542} have been an actor. I want to ask about that book. I'd like to produce it. And I believe the book of Vrba is about Exhibit 71, because it becomes almost ridiculous – here is a man who is telling us that, "This is the story of my experience in Auschwitz-Birkenau." He tells us in the first chapter that he is standing beside Rudolph Hoess, and Heinrich Himmler as they peek through an eyehole into the gas chamber in the first gassing in Birkenau, and he hears their conversation. He's got it in his book right there, like here's Rudolph Vrba and there's Heinrich Himmler and Iw there's Commandant Hoess, and they are looking through the window. If it wasn't a serious subject, if this was supposed to be a joke, I suggest we wouldn't have to worry about that because I've read science fiction myself. I've read novels. There's nothing wrong with that. They could have a [lot of meanings. But this man tells us he is a serious writer dealing with a serious subject, and it should be illegal to disbelieve his point of view.

THE COURT: We will do that at 2:15.

(Reporter's Note: Jury retires for luncheon recess @ 1:00 p.m. Upon resumption @ 2:20 p.m. ...)

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. At the break was going to suggest that I read the part of the first[,] {4542|4543}

Now, as I said before, if you wish to believe it, nobody denies you the right to believe it. There is a good reason not to believe it, but my client suggests that he ought to have the right to disbelieve it. There's reason to disbelieve it.

Now, there's another thing Dr. Vrba said which was his occasion of viewing a gassing from Fred Wexler's crematorium shack where he and Fred were drinking coffee. You remember. He gives us to believe he's seen a S.S. man, on the roof of Leichenkeller I, put Zyklon down some openings.

He tells us how the S.S. man placed the can on the roof and he was over there at the time, I recall, placed the can on the roof and then he said, "sportily" – he used the word because he thought it was so unusual for the S.S. – "sportily" pulled himself onto the roof.

Well, if you look at the plans of Leichenkeller I you'll find out that the roof is right above there. And when I brought that out to his attention, it began to shrink. I remember he got out of the witness stand and his explanation began to come down and come down, and finally, in the end, I remember his hands were on the witness box just about the height of his waist, and he was sort of bouncing on his toes explaining how it had really been done. This is the eye witness {4543|4544} who knows so clearly that one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand people were gassed in Auschwitz in two years. Not the whole term of Auschwitz, but the two years that he was there. It was only when he was confronted with the suggestion the building that he alleged where this happened was underground that he began to move his hands down in the witness stand, and by pushing on the witness stand rail he was demonstrating. All this is false. Now, you may believe it if you wish, which everyone has a right to if they wish, but thinking people ought to be able to disbelieve it. My client seeks only the right to disbelieve it.

Now; he says he saw one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand go between two buildings, and he could tell that number of prisoners from each country gassed, and that document is evidence. It comes from the War Refugee Board Report that he helped prepared – incidentally, not long, after the Secretary of Information for the British Government published through the B.B.C. and to all clergy in England the statement about, "We'd like you to be prepared to promote atrocity propaganda, because the Red Army is moving into the east." You check that and you'll find it was shortly before Dr. Vrba escaped that the British Government was telling the people in authority, "We have some jobs for you to do in propaganda. We don't want you to discuss this with other {4544|4545} people, but we are going to begin to be preparing the propaganda shortly." You will see, that is what happened. He says he identified the origin of this people by country. He says a hundred and fifty thousand from France by the sardines that came with them. He said he could identify the country of origin, and I wanted to know why, and I asked him. And I suggest to you that what you heard was three answers that demonstrate the process of a person who hasn't got an answer, searching for one. The first one he comes up with is so ridiculous, he looks down to see if it's washing. It doesn't wash. Sardines, slivovits. He knows they come from different countries and that is why he knows a hundred and fifty thousand from France, and whatever he says for Czechoslovakia or some other countries. Do you want to believe it? Nobody says you can't believe it if you want to believe it, but if the accused says, "I don't believe that", then he has a right, through reason, not to believe it. And if somebody says, then, "Oh, I remember another reason baggage tags", alright, that was what it was.

Now, you tell me how many times you check baggage tags. This is the story of a man who takes them off the train on to the dump truck. He doesn't touch them. And finally, language. And he has a problem there too because it is a hundred and fifty thousand people from France, but it {4545|4546} isn't that they all speak French. It could be Jews from other places, too, and how does he know they are all Jews? It is a question that always troubled my mind. If they came over the drain [train], how does he know they were all Jews? He said they wore the yellow star, but I don't recall any witnesses saying that when they got off the train. Anyway, those problems are reasons for doubting that evidence. These statements about a hundred and fifty thousand people from France would be forgivable if we were just being in a guess-work game, if we were debating in an academic school about how we come to our conclusions.

I am not suggesting that anybody should not be entitled to say what Dr. Vrba says. Of course they can. But if they take the oath and say this is the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, I suggest that is not very honest. He is emphatic, and then goes on to tell us the number of Jews from France, gassed from Auschwitz-Birkenau for a two-year period is a hundred and fifty thousand, when Krasfeld [Klarsfeld] tells us it was seventy-six thousand during the war. Well, what [was] it seventy-six thousand? We can throw these figures around. If we are not trying to prove anything, it doesn't matter and you can prove anything you like, but if a Crown has a duty to prove that this booklet is false, which they should if this is the issue, and I suggest it {4546|4547} is, then they haven't proven it and reasonable people should doubt it. His account about the crematoria is not consistent from his book to the War Refugee Board Report. In the War Refugee Board Report he says nine ovens. He even draws the picture of them, with four apertures [sic] each – three hundred and sixty ovens. In his book he says fifteen. Now, fifteen is correct according to the plans. You can see the plans. Nobody denies those. Fifteen. Now, if it takes an hour and a half to cremate one body, and you've got two thousand people in the gas chamber, in one day, what do you have an hour and a half after you begin cremating? 1985 bodies. Well, how do you get two thousand bodies cremated in twenty-four hours at that rate? Oh, well, they'll tell us, perhaps three or four in one oven, or something to that effect. But those ovens, you can see them, they are not very different from crematorium ovens throughout the world today. The technology of heat reducing the body to ashes hasn't changed and it's tragic to think that people died in the camps, but they did and they died from natural causes and that's admitted.

The people in Wexler's shack weren't alleged to have been gassed. They died. So that's what those crematorium ovens were there for, and I suggest to you if you take a twenty-four hour day and operate them all, you still don't have any opportunity to cremate very many bodies, certainly {4547|4548} not two thousand. And that's the story the Crown seeks to prove and that's a problem if you think about it. Fifteen an hour, for twenty-four hours. Now, what do you do with all those that are there for the next day when there are supposed to be another two thousand a day after that, when there are another two thousand? It's not a funny story at all, but it creates some serious logical problems when you analyse it. And if it was just debate, if we weren't in a Court of law, maybe we shouldn't analyse it, just believe it, go ahead. The world can believe what it likes as far as he is concerned, he'd like to have the right to question and believe what he believes.

When I asked about the difference between the War Refugee Board Report and his book, he said, "What's the difference? Thirty-six, fifteen, what's the difference?" Quite a difference. He tells us that he has a special method of remembering all these numbers – one million seven hundred and sixty-five thousand. I remember my learned friend, in re-examination, asking him, "Could you tell us simply how you remembered or calculated one million, seven hundred and sixty-five thousand?" After I cross-examined him for quite a while, trying to find out the same thing, he still didn't give the answer. He is very vague about all other numbers. Mortality of deaths, working at Buna, five to ten percent, {4548|4549} his cellar at Block IV there were three hundred or more, the wooden ramp, it was five hundred to seven hundred long, he unloaded the cars, the Commando that unloaded the cars with two hundred to three hundred prisoners, eight hundred per car. Then he says there were two thousand per transport. The Arrivees [arrivals] were ten, fifteen, twenty percent were dead or dying on arrival. In Kanada, there were three hundred, four hundred, five hundred working. There were hundreds in the mortuary, the size of which he described to the Court as being the size of the witness box.

This seems strange for someone who then turns around and says, "I swear that one million, seven hundred sixty-five thousand people were gassed while I was there." He said his book was a work of literature and not a document. It is an artistic picture, condensed story, to enable a young person, untrained, to understand. Understand what? The facts? Well, read the book and see if it deals with facts. And you remember when I put to Dr. Vrba some portions of Dr. Vrba's book and some portions of Filip Muller's book and we found that they were identical, although at different times and places the same facts arise, slight variation. He said, "Well, it's so incredible it must be true." Those were his words – "so incredible it must be true". {4549|4550}

Now, I don't find if somebody says that anybody can believe what they like in this world, but if somebody tells me it's so incredible it must be true, my mind says when things are incredible they don't have to be true. In fact, being incredible is not a precondition for being true. It is often a precondition for being untrue.

When I confronted him about the six-meter deep pits, naturally he got a little upset and angry at me because, "Why should you ask me for facts? You don't believe my story?" Well, we are not here to discuss stories if we are dealing with the factual issue and the laws to decide whether one man's view of the truth is right or wrong, then let's deal with facts. And he starts saying, "It could have been four meters. I didn't have a rule. Then why did he say six meters? Because he wanted us to believe that monstrous story. And the whole thing had to be dimensional in order for it to be credible. And that's what a [lot] of people do when they want to exaggerate.

Dr. Hilberg discussed the subject of annihilation. He says he is an empiricist looking at the materials, particularly the small details, and try to come to conclusions from these details about the larger processes and larger issues. He starts from the presumption that it did happen. He never questions that. He asks how it happened, {4550|4551} not why it happened. But, did he ever ask if it happened? That's where the issue, the study, should start from. And his premise is it must have happened because where did all those people go? Well, how does anyone know how many Jews were in Poland in 1939 when the Russians came from one side, the Germans come from another and there is a war on? You tell me they kept track of where people went, you know, the vehicles, the people on the highways, fleeing in all directions? Who knows? Who can say? "Well, I know there were this many Jews in Poland at that time and there's so many returned after the war." I don't suggest to you that there's any way of deciding that issue one way or the other, but I suggest to you that if somebody has got a burden to prove the truth and they rely on information like that, they're asking you to believe more than there is reason to believe.

He talks then, quite frankly, about ball-park figures. Well, how big is a ball-park figure? If we are going to deal with who is telling the truth and who is lying, and if we are going to decide that my client doesn't have a right to his view that this is the truth, then what is a ball-park figure? I guess it depends on where you play ball, but the fact is that that is what he told us about statistics. He says there are hundreds of documents which deal with death dealing operations. So I asked him for one. "Did you see {4551|4552} any?" What one did he produce? He didn't. Not one. He says that the term "final solution" did not mean killing until 1941. You see, until then I guess the term "final solution" meant like the final solution to the unemployment program – solve unemployment. He didn't say it meant killing till 1941. The phrase was not altered. So tell me how, when militaristic people like the Germans are alleged to be, everybody is getting orders to move everything, goods, trains, how does this new meaning come to the term "final solution" without any order in writing? What are these, a bunch of mind readers that all of a sudden a word that meant one thing – deportation – till 1941 has another meaning, and millions of people have to understand this new meaning? Only a few knew. A few knew. But how many people were on the trains? How many people have to arrange the schedules? How many people have to build buildings, and all that sort of thing?

Things don't happen by accident, so where is the plan? He is asked about torture of O[h]lendorf. He says he knows nothing about torture. And I really find it incredible. Fine. Anybody can believe what they like. But when he says that torture is impossible, he said he knows Americans and the Americans wouldn't torture people. That's what he said. Maybe he's right. I don't know. But there certainly was torture involved. with war crimes, trials, and there was torture {4552|4553} involved with those who participated in them.

What Hilberg said about Americans and torture in Malmedy could easily be said by Ernst Zundel about Germans. He said that he didn't think they were people capable – because he knew them, he lived there – of doing the kind of things that are alleged. So Dr. Hilberg is entitled to give his view of Americans. Isn't my client entitled to his view of Germans? He was asked if there were witnesses to gassing. He said not a huge number. A fair number.

Hilberg's admissions about death camps that "One can find them mentioned in the New York Times during the war" supports the thesis of Zundel about war time propaganda and that, I guess, is really what we are dealing with here. Nobody denies there was some, but now we are obliged to believe it was a matter of fact. And anyone who disbelieves is a prosecutor, so it would appear.

Hilberg quotes "Korherr" report at great length, but he doesn't produce it. Where is it? Hilberg, to come to his conclusions, comes to the following things: railroad transports, from specific areas to death camps with a view to establishing the patterns of deportations. The manner of clothing, lost belongings collected, and to find out in some way as to how far it was, what the mentality was, and indeed how it was financed. This is not {4553|4554} proof. This is an enquiry which is quite consistent with the theory of the defence. There were confiscations. There were deportations. There were camps where people were kept. The thing that makes the difference between a concentration camp and a death camp is the gas chamber. There's no suggestion that there was death camps at any other place other than the eastern regions. I mean, the map you have in "Did Six Million Really Die?" is the map in the book, "Six Million Did Die." That map right there, it describes the death camps in the east, the concentration camps in the west. And with the exception of Dachau, they don't suggest gas chambers anywhere.

Why, then should not the accused be entitled to the view that those alleged death camps in the east were much the same as Dachau in the west, presumed to be with gas chambers, presumed to be death camps, but later found not to be? Is he entitled to think like any other normal human being about these questions and come to his own conclusions?

Regarding the number of Jews that escaped to Russia, Hilberg says, now, how do we know how many people did escape to the Soviet Union? We do not know this directly. We have no figures from the U.S.S.R. We have only the data gathered after the war of those Jews who were able to escape who made it back. Why would they all go back? To what – to Poland? To a war-torn country that we know, for example, the {4554|4555} ghetto was totally devastated? We know for a fact that much of Poland was ruined by war, both ways, going east and coming back. Why would they go back? And if they didn't go back, are they all dead? If you get a one way ticket from Amsterdam to New York, are you dead when you get here? There's lots of places people could go in the east. And I suggest to you that if a person who is escaping from Nazi Germany, they'd probably go to the east if they lived in Poland. Why go anywhere else? Would you like to cross Germany? Obviously not.

In the Soviet Union, is there any suggestion that Jews were persecuted at that time? I don't think so. Our fearless ally on the eastern front?

The Stroop report, according to Dr. Hilberg, said 56065 Jewish dead. Very emphatic about that. If you'll look at the documents we filed yesterday from the International rather the Nuremberg Military Tribunal of the Americans, you'll see that it doesn't refer to them as dead at all. It just goes to show you that what amounts to an interpretation placed by an expert isn't always true.

Hilberg's criticism of Rassinier was that he, "Will say thus and thus must have happened and attached figures to his opinion which come out of thin air." This is what Hilberg did during his testimony, not producing one document to prove what he said. And I don't object in Dr. Hilberg having {4555|4556} his view or anyone, but it shows that everybody comes to these subjects with a preconceived idea which they seek to prove what they believe, and so in the end, to themselves, at least, they do.

Dr. Hilberg disagrees with all other writers on the Holocaust, including alleged eye witnesses and Red Cross sources as well as concentration camp authorities.

Nobody agrees with everybody else on the Holocaust, as it is called. His only basis for disagreement on his thesis is pieces of paper he calls documents, and it is not necessary that he agree or that everybody agree on the Holocaust at all.

Hilberg's life work is his book entitled, "The Destruction of European Jews". It's right here – massive, massive, massive work. The important part seemed to be missing, like the Hitler order. That's fine. It's filled with internal contradictions, such as unplanned plans for extermination, thoroughly prepared, ad hoc programs against the Jews Hitler's program of concentration, disbursement [dispersion], expropriation, delousing, disinfection, to wit: extermination. To him that's what it means, as he chooses, without regard to the actual meaning of these words in English or German.

That's his thesis. He is entitled to his thesis. You may believe it if you wish, but the accused asks to disbelieve it. {4556|4557}

Hilberg has admitted his selective views. For example, Gerstein. Now, there is going to be criticism. I am sure my friend will say this book took the Red Cross Report out of context, and it took this out of context, and that out of context. This part doesn't support what the author says in the book he wrote. Well, did Gerstein say what Hilberg says he said? No. Hilberg took out of context the logical parts, he said, of Gerstein's evidence because it was independently corroborated from other sources. If it was, why quote someone that Hilberg called an unbalanced man? If there was some other source, why not use it, because maybe there is no other source in what he says, especially regarding Treblinka and Sobibor and other camps for which there is no evidence at all today?

We are supposed to believe that this is where so and so many people were killed. Nothing proven. Take it as an article of faith. If somebody wishes that as a religion, I have no objection to that as their choice. Anyone may believe what they wish to believe, but if someone says, "I don't believe it and there is no evidence to support it", don't suggest that they are criminals or that they shouldn't be free to publish.

Hilberg, as a scholar, has worked for many years, wrote a book. Now he is writing three books. Now, {4557|4558} if when you write a book it's the whole truth and nothing but the truth, then why write another one? You never have to revise anything. Authors would have written in stone and the history of the world would be established by now, wouldn't need any new histories, wouldn't need research, wouldn't need new books. One book is all we'd need on the Holocaust. Well, he is writing us some more. I wonder if he'll include the subject of torture? Probably not. It's insignificant. To his thesis it is insignificant. It is irrelevant to his thesis, so he will ignore it.

Naturally, everybody approaches every subject with a bias, and everybody comes upon it with the belief that they're right and the other fellow is wrong. How is that different? What has changed in the world? Nothing. The principle admission in Hilberg's work as dubious comes from Hilberg himself who proudly proclaims that he is revising his work in the light of new facts. That's good. So even Dr. Hilberg, expert that he is, acknowledges that he doesn't have all the facts and didn't have all the facts when he wrote this book.

Incidentally, it might be wise for him to go to the camp and do a little research into the theory presented there, to see if it fits with his book, but I guess he hasn't gone back since nineteen, whatever it was, when he went with the President's Commission and maybe that {4558|4559} would help in the research of his book.

Let me deal with Dr. Barton for a moment. He presents the truth to the best of his knowledge. In his article he said – he agrees that what's in this pamphlet was accurate and that it quoted his article. He was there. He is an eye witness. In 1945 he was there and he was as brainwashed as everybody else at the time, saying the Germans deliberately intended the killing of these people shown in the movie, their bodies shown in the movie. He believed all that. And gradually he began to think about it, looked into the kitchen and saw the food for preparation records and changed his mind. The war was a little bit more than most people comprehended would be possible in the way of destruction.

It's my suggestion to you that he treated the subject more scientifically than most people of his time. And just look what happened to him. He dared to say that the Germans didn't mean to kill all those people, and you know they accused him of now, on public television, as you've heard, that he killed fifteen thousand Jews. That's what came out in his evidence, right on an interview on television. He is accused of killing fifteen thousand Jews.

What I suggest to you is that when people disagree with the widely held views of their time, they are attacked viciously [sic] and he was attacked in the media, in the {4559|4560} press and everywhere. Why? What did he do wrong? Well, he dared to say that the Germans were not all bad and the Allies were not all good, and that war itself was the cause of the problem. That's what he dared to say. What has he dared to say? He dared to say that the Allies are not all good. The Germans are not all bad. And that war killed people, but not gassing. So what's the difference? I suppose the difference is Dr. Barton was a witness and the accused is the accused. He said there's no treatment for typhus at the time. He thinks, essentially, that views should be challenged. He agreed that the average person, under conditions of being subject to conditions of massive public propaganda, coupled with fears for their family, destruction of their homes, their property, their value system and the desolation of their country, they may be brainwashed and make confessions. They would not be able to respond independently of their captors.

Well, that was the issue in the whole questioning in the Nuremberg process. You don't have to physically torture somebody. Just take their family and homes from them. Tell them that they could be turned over to the Russians – and many were. How many were? Brainwashing, he said, is when someone suspends their normal critical faculties and accepts views they would otherwise challenge. {4560|4561}

Well, if I heard Dr. Vrba, as a man on the street, telling me the story he told me, not thinking that he was Dr. Vrba, not thinking that he was a survivor who wrote the War Refugee Board Report, I will say, "C'mon. You really expect me to believe it?" But he is Dr. Vrba, he is a survivor, and therefore we have to take it that he must be believed. That, I suggest, is the result of a form of brainwashing. We've all been told so many times about the Holocaust, as it is represented, that we don't examine the extermination thesis for what it is. I mean, if you want to believe that a population the size of Quebec can be eliminated without an order, that's fine. But if you ask, where is the order? Where is the plan? How is this done? Show me – that should be your right. Otherwise we have suspended our critical faculties. We have become subject to the form of brainwashing that he described.

In his first reaction to Belsen he said he was brainwashed, thinking the liberators were the white knights superior to the Germans. Later he saw the cooking facilities and food records and came out of the brainwashed state, questioned the brainwashing. He said it is free speech, vigilance, compassion with justice. If debate is permitted, then brainwashing is not present. {4561|4562}

Now, this booklet presents something for debate. You remember it was quoted in books in Bookman (phon) [Books and Bookmen]. Well, what happened there is it was a tremendous debate, letters to the editor, to the publisher of that column. That's fine. It should have. This doesn't mean it says the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth and the history of the world is carved here forever, but it is a thesis for debate so people can question and come to their own conclusion. Massive hysteria when independent judgment of right and wrong is impaired by constant media repetition.

Is that what you hear quite often in the media, mass hysteria in the Allies, the Elan [sic], the feeling of superiority, the feeling of the victorious army? Why did he testify? Because when you write something, you have a responsibility to support it or withdraw it. I asked him if he was anti-Semitic. He said it is difficult to find out what a semite is. It is reasonable to err. It sounds logical. It sounds like the attitude of a man who has both compassion, justice and a certain amount of wisdom. Why don't we follow that advice? He didn't think Nuremberg was justice. He didn't try to make the fancy distinctions that Dr. Hilberg made. You remember the distinction? Oh, the war guilt clause was different from the business of the aggressive war, and that was different from genocide. Well, [sic] {4562|4563}

Well, the trials were not fair. Guilt by association was established in the Charter of London which, in fact, was made the 8th May 1945, and was an agreement of the Allies and how they were going to prosecute their opponents. The allies who became the judges, the allies who became the prosecutors and the allies who controlled the evidence.

No matter what may be said about Dr. Weber's evidence, he was there and was physically in control with others of the documents that the prosecution was seeking to get evidence from. The defence didn't even know where they were. Now if you have control of that much of the prosecution process, you don't need to worry about defence. Hearsay was used.

Now, there will be an argument as to whether three hundred thousand, one hundred thousand or one hundred and fifty thousand documents were introduced. Nobody has proved how many. Opinions have varied. But I'll tell you one thing you should consider is that some documents were introduced without their evidence being cross-examined. That's for sure. And who would introduce them? The defence? Well, how did the defence find them when the Allies controlled the documents? {4563|4564}

Dr. Barton said that he didn't think that Goering was very wise. Defence lawyers [sic] had a terrible time, a nightmare in presenting the case. He said the judges were Nazi-like and he agreed with Taft's opinion, Senator Taft. The defence and the prosecution were both allowed to file affidavits without witnesses appearing, and threats do play a large part. He said nothing in his opinion has changed in regard to his article, and his opinion is the same today.

Dr. William Brian Lindsay testified that the thesis of World War II should be looked at by a scientist. The basic problem is the vast number of charges in the readings about the Holocaust, the various authorities have different answers. He said some of the primary sources of information about the Holocaust had been silent for thirty years, during which time history has been written. He looked at all the so-called murder camps in his research. He went to Belzec, Sobibor, Chelmno, Birkenau, Monowitz. He put himself in the position of knowing what the accusations are and, as a chemist, decided how reasonable the charges are.

In describing the properties of Zyklon B, the container it came in, the special opener that had to be used, the fact that the gas is lighter than air when it vaporizes, it rises, and the best air would be at the bottom – now, my {4564|4565} friend brought out that well, it's not very much lighter than air and it would rise slowly and he brought out that, perhaps, the crystals may have fallen on the ground, enabled people to believe that the gas would come from the ground first; but that wouldn't explain that people would stay where the gas crystals were and stay there so they would climb above each other. They were scattered in other areas, but that wasn't asked by my friend and that's why, when Mr. Griffiths asked him his questions and I asked him mine, in the end he said he did not think his opinion had changed. The circumstances of speculative nature that might have occurred were not that much different, not that possible that he would alter his opinion.

He refers to the necessity of a venting system. No such thing exists in any of the plans. Look at the plans. That's because it is a Leichenkeller, a mortuary, not a gas chamber. They want to call it a gas chamber? Then produce the evidence. Whatever. Where is it? He concluded that it's impossible that gassings happened as alleged. For millions to have been gassed in four crematoria is impossible with the method described, volume considerations of two thousand persons crammed in it, a space in the size alleged, is impossible. {4565|4566}

He refers to those that are put forward as gas chambers, unsealed rooms, the difficulties of unsealed rooms in comparison to the American gas chamber became obvious. A small container, gas, has many requirements, not necessarily to protect anybody, but because it's necessary because of the quality of the gas itself. If it were otherwise, chemistry would change from time to time and place to place, but it doesn't. The fact is that if there is an allegation of this kind, there has to be a real possibility of it having occurred. Otherwise, we are engaged in fantasy.

He has examined the alleged gas chamber at Auschwitz I. There's no doors between the gas chamber and the crematoria. Vents were not air-tight. The doors are very, very small. The whole thing wouldn't work. And he comes to that conclusion himself.

Now, he communicated this information to Zundel, so why shouldn't Zundel believe him? Why shouldn't it be credible? Who has done more research into the subject? Who has actually made a study into these gas chambers otherwise? And I suppose the Crown will answer that by saying, well, it doesn't matter, it doesn't matter. If there are no gas chambers, we will find some other explanation for the six million. What? What is it – shooting, Einsatzgruppen, {4566|4567} the Stroop Report? It doesn't come to five million, especially when one considers the evidence in reference to the Einsatzgruppen. But we are supposed to believe, anyway. Nobody has to believe it. Nobody is obliged, so far, in this country, to believe those things.

Dr. Lindsay examined the Gerstein statement. He discussed how carbon-monoxide poisoning from a diesel engine is not possible, and yet that is what he says for Sobibor, Treblinka and others, from diesel tank engines, from Russian tank engines. That is the story. Well, if carbon-mon[o]xide is not produced by diesel engines, and that is supposed to be the cause of death. Then we have the stories of eating and drinking after handling the dead bodies. It will be suicidal. Shower baths would be an abysmal [way] to gas people. What story are we dealing with? The same story we had in Dachau, same story altogether. The gas chambers are not showers, and the gas comes from the shower heads and Dachau now has a sign that says nobody was ever gassed here. Lindsay fought for the Allies during the war, and I suggest that he is not really to be regarded as one with an axe to grind.

Dealing with the subject of the evidence of Hans von de Heide, he was a German soldier transported in the same cattle cars that the Auschwitz prisoners were handled in. {4567|4568} He was locked in them for four days, and several of his friends died in them too. He was a prisoner of war. That may have been the war. I suppose from what we can see, what we can hear, from who we know and who we talk to, it wasn't a very pleasant experience for anybody. And I wonder why we should believe that, therefore, six million died and the Jews are exceptionally badly off in this regard. That would seem to indicate that cattle cars were used for more than prisoners, and indeed for prisoners of war. Yet three witnesses, who were called by the defence, Hans Schroeder, Armand Auerswald, Jurgen Neumann, all of German decent, knew Ernst for several years. He lent them books, has a vast library, has studied this subject and is interested in their problems, because of the fact that they suffered from the hysteria type of stereotyping of Germans. They indicate that Zundel was a concerned person who was interested in helping them and their children with this problem. They all said he had a reputation for sincerity and honesty, definitely not a hateful attitude to any group of people. Not once in his evidence on the stand did he indicate hatred for anybody. He was certainly angry about the German government's treatment of two thousand of his friends when there wasn't enough evidence to even charge them. I wonder why? {4568|4569}

How would you feel if the government of the United States, or somewhere where you had friends hauled out of bed in the middle of the night, publicly humiliated them and took anything they get that came from you? How would you feel? What would you think of that government?

Well, I suggest to you that is why he wrote the letter he did – one angry letter that the Crown seeks to use one line out of from twenty-six years of publishing.

Now, I think that the Crown will probably suggest that Tiudal Rudolf [Tiudar Rudolph], who was a translator in the S.D. and a manager at Cracow really wasn't there and just managed an office, but people who were in offices know what goes on in those offices, and he knew that in 1941 there was a Red Cross inspection of the camps. Why isn't that reported now? Why is there no record of that? Well, I'll tell you why. I suggest the Red Cross doesn't wish to get into any more hot water over the question of whether they support the thesis of the exterminationists or whatever others. They don't because they are political, because they need funds from the government. They don't want to get involved and that's why Rene de Grace was so careful to say, "I don't speak for the International Red Cross. I speak for the Canadian Red Cross and, as a result, I don't know what the International Red Cross knows or {4569|4570} doesn't know." That is why the Tracing Service in Arolsen, which is an International Red Cross Agency, doesn't wish, in its report, to be taken as giving all those who have been lost, they are very anxious to avoid the suggestion they have counted them all even though they accumulated all the evidence of missing persons, which I suggest they have accumulated. They didn't want to be involved because it is a hot potato, and you get into a [ ] lot of trouble questioning the Holocaust, as my client is today.

But Theodor Rudolf's [sic] evidence is of someone who was there and was aware that someone from the Red Cross was inspecting the camps. There is no record of that today in the Red Cross reports. Reverend [sic] Ron Marr was a witness here. He said that he has published since 1970 with a circulation of almost a hundred thousand. He published things similar on the bankers to the "West War and Islam". Not any great difference. So what's wrong with what my client said? He doesn't like international financiers running roughshod over people and countries who own money. It won't be long before we'll find out more about international finance, probably in our own experience. But to express opinions on bankers, I don't suppose that's the main reason why Mr. Zundel is here. It may have very little to do with {4570|4571} why Mr. Zundel is here. We'll see in the Crown's submission just what areas he wishes to make the major issue. Again, there's no doubt that every thesis is selective, and the Crown's case is selective.

You take three – well two, really, pieces of publication out of a man's life and you make a big issue out of that. Then you find that if he finds answers to parts of this one, well, you move on to other parts where he might have a bigger problem. And if you find no problem in this, then you move to the "West War and Islam" and see if he can justify himself there. That's the way things are.

What I'd like you to see and understand is that it's really not right to put people through this process, and that was Ron Marr's view if he had an opinion, which he did, and he expressed, it was simply this: every view is controversial. If two people always agree, then one is unnecessary. He frequently writes against censorship and he doesn't think the Courts come up with the truth in these matters, nor can anybody, nor should it be in Court at all.

Re the Jewish question he was asked and he answered that the extremist attitude that Jews can do no right are no more correct and are just as wrong as extremists' attitudes that they can do no wrong. In other words, some people say that the Jews are to blame for everything, and {4571|4572} other people say that Jews are to blame for nothing. And I don't think we should treat Jews differently than we treat anybody else, any other group of people and that's about what Ron Marr said. Why should there be a taboo on discussing Jews in the media, which "West War and Islam" does? Nothing wrong with Jews or Zionists having lots of information on the media, all they can get. But if they do, why shouldn't we be free to talk about them? Why should there be this great taboo on mentioning who owns this paper and that paper? And frankly, everybody who is here has experience in the media and says it's true that probably in the West, Zionists and Jews have tremendous influence in the media. Not so much in Canada, but in the major media of the New York Times, The Washington Post, The N.B.C., etcetera. There is nothing wrong in pointing that out.

And if the Middle East question is a big one, and it is, why shouldn't someone say to the Arabs, "Hey, you'd better get into the business of putting your views across." And that is what the "West War and Islam" does, and Ron Marr said maybe that is a good idea, maybe we should be free to do that. As a publisher he has an obligation that his reports are accurate, but he doesn't believe that this obligation belongs to the State. {4572|4573}

James Keegstra testified primarily to show what happens if you try to question the Holocaust. He is where he is today, not because of his attitude on anything else, but primarily because he dared to say that there's another view on the Holocaust. That's when it got picked-up by the media. That is when the ball got rolling. That is when everybody got up in arms, and if somebody has an opinion on the flatness of the earth, nobody cares. If somebody has an opinion on politics, that's no problem. But if somebody says anything about the Holocaust, that implies they don't believe in it, hook line and sinker, and then they are in big trouble, and that is a bad situation.

It's bad for people who want to discuss it. It is also bad because it denies the possibility to find the truth for everybody. So there's a man who has been a teacher for twenty-one years, who has been the victim, I suggest, of a massive campaign of vilification because he dared to question.

Gerome Brentar has evidence that is valid and useful to you in regard of what other explanation there might be for the disappearance of Jewish persons from central Europe. He said that as a refugee for a Jewish organization, Jewish people were well-organized and had a network and system whereby false identification from {4573|4574} the U.S.S.R. could get them refugee status and on to the United States. Nothing wrong with that either. But I would like to point out, that when he pointed that fact out to you, it does bring to light another explanation for the question as to where are all these Jewish people. Well, I suggest there's a lot of reason why they would want to leave Europe and did.

He mentioned the fact that in the International Refugee Organization, as others have said in regards to Nuremberg, the Jews were extremely prolific because they spoke German to a large extent, many of them being refugees during the time that Hitler came to power. They returned after the war and they were the people who could speak German and English. Nothing wrong with that either, but it does explain how a particular attitude might, very readily, be more supported. It also explains – even Dr. Hilberg, it seems to me, says he was an interrogator with regard to Nuremberg at one point. He was certainly involved with the holding of documents in West Virginia, for example, a selection of documents, I would imagine, from Nuremberg, because he spoke German. Who else left Germany in the thirties? Certainly lots of Jewish people did. {4574|4575}

What Gerome Brentar says about the situation today, in regard to alleged war crimes shows you how much prejudice there is against anyone today in a trial. The accusation becomes sufficient for the proof. Anybody who is accused, like Walus, just the weight of the prejudice, you are already a victim before you are even tried. You are already public enemy number one, like Ernst Zundel is supposed to have been before he ever got to Court. That's the way of public opinion.

Incidentally, what a surprising thing. Anybody could be accused of rape, murder, theft, fraud. I'll bet you they wouldn't get the animosity, the hate that occurs to anybody who questions the Holocaust or anybody who is accused of a war crime in the media. Tell me how many murderers have got the kind of publicity against them as Frank Walus got? He hadn't been tried yet. He was accused of a hideous crime, but it was ridiculous. The man wasn't even in Poland during the war. He was seventeen years old and he is accused of being an Obergruppenführer during the war, murdering Jews. And eleven witnesses come forward and say, yes, he is, and seven of those said they weren't even in Poland during the war. That's justice? Well, that's not very much different than the atmosphere that prevailed in 1945 and that's why it is relevant to the issue today, because in this booklet {4575|4576} it says Nuremberg was probably rife with prejudice. If the prejudice and the hatred is so great today that that type of thing can happen right now, in Chicago and in the United States of America, how much greater do you think the pressure was in 1945 for the same result?

This is forty years later. And who gives Frank Walus anything for what he suffered, or this man? Even if he is acquitted, who will take care to see that he gets justice, other than maybe an acquittal? So, I suppose we are supposed to believe that the United States government is impartial now and was then.

In Reverend [sic] Marr's evidence he indicates three instances – the obstruction of witnesses from Poland to come to the United States to testify, the obstruction of him visiting a witness in Israel who said that he killed Ivan the Terrible who is supposed to be John Demuna (phon) [Demjanjuk] in Chicago in 1943, and the obstruction of the American Consulate in refusing to swear an affidavit in relation to a composite drawing of a man who they knew to be Ivan the Terrible, who was so different from John Demuna [Demjanjuk].

The evidence of Gary Botting is that of an English professor who desired to put forward another view on the Holocaust story. He has presented, or attempted to present, in consideration of the need to tell both sides, {4576|4577} the book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", which is in evidence. I'd like you to look at that book at some stage, if you get a chance, if you are interested. It's right there. I'd like you to consider, for example, the question of the Posen speech. The Crown, I am sure, is going to make great emphasis out of the Posen speech, not that it is ever heard, but it is supposed to be what the Crown says it is.

You have to decide that, but in "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century", it examines the issue of the Posen speech and it gives a clear indication of why the Posen speech is not authentic. You should read that and consider one other thing, that very book, the Government of Canada decided nobody should read it in Canada. Why? Is it obscene? Take a look at it and ask yourselves this question. Is this society free to enable people to think, to analyse this question, if a book like that is supposed to be banned and was prevented from being read by students at our university level? This is not some poor, timid human being in high school, as we were told some are, who could be influenced deleteriously by this book. This is university level. They aren't allowed to have this. Why is that?

If it points out to another direction, then this thesis of the exterminationists, what kind of country does not permit people to read a book like that? Have a look {4577|4578} at it. There's really nothing abusive in it to anybody, but it analyses, point-by-point, this whole question.

Well, the truth is very clear from that, that there is a power in this land that doesn't want you to think about it, doesn't want anybody out here to think about it and has made up the mind of somebody in power that anyone who questions this belief will be prosecuted and publicly humiliated. And that's not the kind of country I want or should any free man or woman want to live in.

Now, our forefathers fought for the right to be free to think and free to speak. Now, what are we doing here? The sacrifices of those who died for freedom are not respected by this legal proceeding. And, Gary Botting and others have paid their price for coming here. You can bet on that. Those same forces that will make this man spend seven weeks in that box will make every witness who comes here pay through the nose for having done so. You can be sure of that. And, anyone who even dares to even support this man's thesis will be labelled. And that's supposed to be a free society? It's all very, very sad. It maybe, if some of those people who are dead, who thought they defended freedom, were alive, we might not be here today. {4578|4579}

Gary Botting said it's a dangerous precedent to do what's going on here. You know what his father is? He is buried in Belsen. That's what he told you. His father. Well, it's dangerous alright. It's dangerous. He dared to write to the Attorney General to question why he couldn't read this book or have the students read it. He has no sympathy with the Nazis. His attitudes were that people should be free to hear both sides of the issue. No, not in Canada. We are not smart enough to even be able to read that book. We are not supposed to be able to read this book. We are not intelligent enough to decide whether we want to believe this or not.

Is this the way that we are supposed to use our brains? The measure of a person's honest enquiry is if a person believes he wants to examine alternative sources, and these are alternative sources. Nobody asks them to be government funded sources, sponsored by anybody. And I remember at one point somebody said, well, these, the research of Dr. Faurisson was not government funded. So what? You mean to tell me you knew that no one should be believed unless they are on a government subsidy, like appointed by the President or something?

If Dr. Faurisson pays through his own efforts for his research, is that an indication he is insincere? Or, {4579|4580} if someone publishes a book like Udo Walendy, being a publisher himself, is this to discredit it, too? Have we come to the stage of 1984 where, unless it's published by Big Brother, it isn't to be believed?

It seems to me that was one of the implications and no doubt would have been one of the arguments derived from the cross-examination of these witnesses. And, in fact, I remember the dramatic gesture performed by my learned friend when he asked the witness [sic] last on the stand, the accused, "Well, who published this? Institute of Historical Review?" Bang. "Who published this? Institute of Historical Review?" Bang. So what? If they are all published by the Institute of Historical Review, so what? Have we come to the stage where there is an official sanction on certain publishers, or do we – is that an ad hominem [sic] argument? No. The old argument of don't look at the contents of the book, just see who publishes it – well, if that is the case, I suppose the official view of history is already established.

Dr. Collins is a journalist for thirty to forty years. He was a soldier during the war. He was captured at Dunkirk. He was in German prisoner of war camps during the war, escaped, was recaptured, escaped, was interned again as faraway as Rumania and went to France and went to Bergen-Belsen even before Dr. Barton. {4580|4581} And one of the things he said about his own experience is, when he saw the troops, coming back, the S.S. release by the Russians, they reminded him of the prisoners in Bergen-Belsen for their condition. I wonder why no one would want to be turned over to the Russians? He says, "Did six million really die", should be available. There isn't an abusive line in it. "I have been more abusive in my columns." He said politicians [sic] aren't entitled to suppress views. This is endemic to all dictatorships.

He talked about "Alice in Wonderland" banned in China. And I wonder where we are. I remembered when my friend was cross-examining my client on the stand, I almost had to pinch myself to find out if I was really in the country I grew up in, because he was asking him, "Do you believe this? Are you a racist? Did you write this?" What are we doing here? Is he on trial for his beliefs? Or is he on trial for this being false? Are we living in a free society or are we not? He said, in the end, I guess, this country likes censorship. And I wonder. You know what? If you will do anything in this world, you will answer that question here. And indeed, this might be the most powerful thing you will do in your life. Certainly the most significant thing. It is a great privilege to be here to speak to you. {4581|4582}

It is a great privilege to practice law, but I don't think there can be a greater privilege than to do what you are going to do – decide whether we like censorship or not. That's a decision you will make. There is not, he said, an expert on the Holocaust. There are many versions. If one died, that's important. If one died, that's a crime. If one Jewish person died, it's a crime. If one person, no matter whether they are Jewish or what they are died, it's a crime. But that is not the issue.

If we are dealing with the issue of genocide, if we are dealing with the issue of this allegation which, indeed, is the most heartless allegation ever made in the world in terms of mass murder that the word "genocide" was created after the Second World War to describe this specific crime – mass murder by gassing, not by work or privation or war, which throughout history is not uncommon, but this specific crime with the specific weapon of gas chambers, if that's the issue, then we have to give freedom to others to put forward their views.

And that's what Doug Collins said. He said it's a point of view. He doesn't agree with it but he upholds its right to be said.

I suggest to you that there is more reason to agree with the point of view expressed here, more reason {4582|4583} than there is to agree with what Hilberg says, more evidence. There's more thought, more provoked provocation of the thinking process. It doesn't deal with train tickets, but it does deal with gas chambers, and the witnesses who have been here have not dealt with train tickets, because I wonder what relevance they have. And the issue is genocide.

When he was asked whether Zundel was being honest, he said what I think we all have to answer in the way of a question: "Can you read his mind? Can you look into his brain?" All you can do is look at the printed word. And you had a chance to hear him. You've had a chance to see him cross-examined about his beliefs and about whether he is this or whether he is that. And he's not perfect. He is not a perfect human being and neither am I, neither are most people I know. So why should he be on the stand in the same position he is for having views that maybe you don't agree with? Why?

OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER {4583|4584}

— Jury in 3:48 p.m.

THE CLERK: The jury are all present.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. Considering the West, War and Islam, I'd like to draw your attention to a significant part of that publication. It says, for the cost of one plane, one rocket, one bullet, we can make a film, a book, or send a letter. That's what he tried to do, change the Arab response to Zionism, to the problems that it leads, from violence to communication. Is that a crime? Is that an intent dangerous to the social, racial harmony of Canada when it was sent in a sealed envelope with a name on it to people in the Middle East? Whether he said things that were right or wrong, being quite aside for the moment, would that itself be a crime to – and would it affect the social and racial harmony of Canada deleteriously, seriously? It would seem to me that all it would ever accomplish, if it could accomplish what it sought to do, would be to convert Arab responses of violence and terrorism into Arab responses of communication with the hope that somebody might bring influence in a political sense to bear on the whole problem of the Middle East. It {4584|4585} would seem a fairly responsible albeit somewhat grandiose hope, maybe a pious hope, at a time when Mr. Zundel perceived, perhaps rightly, perhaps wrongly, that problems in the Middle East were about to erupt in a world war. Most of us would sit back and watch it on television, do nothing about it and hope that somebody else would. Well, Mr. Zundel is not that kind of man. He desired a solution. He thought he could offer one. Now, if that's a crime, we'd better forget about communicating because it would seem to me to communicate an alternative to planes, rockets and bullets in films, books and letters, is a pretty good solution to the problem to the world. It may not solve them, but it sure brings us a lot closer to a solution than silence or violence. And I don't, with the greatest of respect, understand how the Crown can allege that my client is supposed to have upset the racial social tolerance in Canada by sending such letters as he did to people in the Middle East, thousands of miles away. And after all, is it false news? He was directing his mind at that time to an advertisement that could clearly be looked upon as a provocation to war which he included right in the pamphlet itself, and it was put in there by a Masonic {4585|4586} Lodge. He thought, using what lodge he has, that that seemed like an indication of what those people wanted. I suggest he wasn't addressing an Ontario problem, and Mr. Burnett's lodge or any other Ontario lodge. There is apparently quite a difference between European lodges and the British Masonry. One thing that struck me as a profoundly significant thing that doesn't refute the West, War and Islam's assertions is that however innocent all the Masonic oaths and all the Masonic obligations may be, I don't know, but it is amazing that a Masonic oath to secrecy taken prior to such proceedings as these would indeed supersede the obligation to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I wonder what would happen if I told my client to swear an oath of secrecy in regard to some crime on some future occasion, and if the issue was, whether or not he committed the crime, he could allege that he didn't want to talk about it. I doubt it. But my friend raised that kind of question in cross-examination that, well, the poor man had made a previous oath to keep silent about these matters.

Well, it did say something about Satanism in the West, War and Islam with respect to masonry, and {4586|4587} how do you find out about that without knowing what these oaths are? Innocent as they may be, why not answer the question? What is there to hide? It seems to me those are fairly good questions. It would seem to me that if the various churches of the Christian world had taken the stand they have on Masonry, that it shouldn't – and that they would actually excommunicate people for being involved, right or wrong; I'm not here to judge what their views are; that it shouldn't be illegal for my client to say that those organizations, because of secrecy, are Satanic. You know, you don't need to keep secrets about doing good works, and there's not too many secrets that my client seeks to keep. He tells the world everything he knows. Most of the time it wishes, or maybe some of us wish he wouldn't, but he's quite honest about what he says. But the fact of the matter is that he suggested that those who do works in secret may be ought not to, and that if there is good works done, as is alleged, then there need be no secrets. It seems a fairly logical position that you might consider.

The only two publications which he's alleged to have done anything wrong are the West, War and Islam and this one, and this one is 30,000 words, apparently. {4587|4588} I haven't counted them all, but that's what I am told there are here, of which his introduction and his final pages are basically concerned with the question, is this wrong? And when he wasn't sure, he took the chance, published and sent it to who? Hiding something here? No, he sent it to the Attorney General of Ontario, sent to all the Attorney Generals, sent it to the Members of Parliament, and the school teachers, and he even wrote to the Attorney General and said "If you don't think I'm entitled to this, please give me some guidelines."

If this country is going to involve itself in censorship through official channels like the Attorney General of Ontario, then I suggest it owes it to the citizens to tell them where these legal limits to freedom lie, and if it was a suggestion made by the Crown that the accused deliberately provoked a situation damaging to racial and social tolerance, then why did he ask for an answer as to what he's entitled to publish? And why didn't somebody give him an answer if it's – I'll tell you why: because it's politically embarrassing for an Attorney General to identify the real censorship that he's seeking to introduce through fear. It's easier to {4588|4589} prosecute somebody and scare the whole world into keeping quiet, because they don't want to be where he is. Works very well, but it's rather insidious, and I suggest that the best answer to that kind of censorship through fear is to throw out these types of charges until – if they're going to invoke censorship, they'd better write it down and say so and take responsibility for it in the House of Commons and anywhere else. And then the public will know we don't live in a free country any more and they can vote against them, but if they're going to play this kind of political game with censorship by scaring people, by not answering their letters as to what they're entitled to write, the result is self-censorship; it's called, "Everybody keeps their mouth shut." And that's something Doug Collins mentioned, that the result of the controversy surrounding the Holocaust and the danger of questioning it and the fact that you always get a visit from some particular group if you write on it, the result is self-censorship. It's not official censorship, and so we can tell the world that we don't censor people, but you just watch it. You don't write about this and you don't write about that and you keep your mouth shut about this, because {4589|4590} it's safer. I suggest if you have any doubt about that, you take a good look at the Soviet Constitution, and they have glowing phrases about freedom of speech, but it's often limited by, oh, some qualifying words about the security of the State and, well, maybe something close to such reasonable limits as are democratically necessary or something of that kind, and all of a sudden people know better than to say certain things. And they know better than to criticize the government, and they know better than to raise questions about certain issues, and they know better than to talk about the Helsinki Accord or a few other subjects in the Soviet Union, and what's the difference with this question? It seems like political power has some influence in what you're entitled to say and what you're entitled to do, without ever being responsible for censoring publicly through the legal process.

Section 177, it's a very vague way of defining what you can publish. If you're talking about history, what's false? What is false? There's [sic] so many views and so many issues, how can you be sure what you're entitled to say? I suppose the best solution is, as Doug Collins said, on a subject like the Holocaust, to check with {4590|4591} the Canadian Jewish Congress or the B'Nai B'rith as to what you can publish. But I suggest that you could and should send a message to the world and to the rest of society. It's not a message that is intolerant; it is a message of tolerance, decency and understanding, a message to all the sincere young Jewish men and women throughout the world that perhaps they need not feel more persecuted nor the subject of more hate than any other group; that war was not all that it is said to be vis-a-vis themselves; that they might no longer say "Never forgive and never forget", those types of comments; that they may feel no more the victims of suffering than others in war that have also suffered. Maybe that would be a healthy thing to say, beneficial to all. Perhaps. Just perhaps, they, too, should put behind the story of the six-million slaughter which they are being imbued and embittered with. Perhaps their suffering is no worse or any greater than many, many others. So that for the sake of love, peace and understanding, we may not view Jews as extraordinary sufferers and Nazis, which is a thin disguise, in much of our media, for Germans, as some inherently evil beasts. This stereotyping is intolerance. This evil exultation of {4591|4592} hate can only be exorcised in the fresh air of free debate. The Jews and non-Jews may view their differences not as polluted by an exaggerated past, and if the truth is already told, then the expressions in this booklet need not be feared in any way at all, then for the Germans, there must be justice, too. That can only come by freedom to examine truth freely and throw off unnecessary guilt. If the guilt is necessary, then it should be taken. If it is unnecessary, it should be dispensed with, dropping the disproportionate lies of a mass hysteria which certain political forces daily feed; stop seeing Nazis in every criticism of Judaism, or you will suffer from lack of true criticism. No one is absolutely right, not even the Jews, and no one is absolutely wrong, not even the Germans. And on this issue of the "Did six Million Really Die?", it seems like nobody is allowed to question these beliefs. It seems like there's a force that says you should never ever be allowed to question the Holocaust. Jews may see themselves in a better light, and to do this may leave the past behind. Maybe there has been too much dwelling on 40 years of history that may or may not be right. They should be free to hear views which indicate that {4592|4593} instead of "Never again", presuming the worst, and much of this is imbued in people who were never there, two generations later, they should perhaps be free to hear views which indicate that it never happened in the first place. We should consider it might never have been before, rather than never again, to some of the horrible stories circulated. It should be at least open for people to discuss it, and if it isn't, how healthy a society do we have? We should never suspend our critical faculties of reason and skepticism even to the suffering of the Jews on the issue of the Holocaust. This means debate, criticism of the Jewish beliefs on the Holocaust, that as they affect others, and it should be legitimate, for most of all those beliefs is the belief in the Holocaust. Other groups of people are freely criticized every day. You know, when I was thinking about the context of this whole question, it occurred to me there are other atrocity stories, two of which are very famous. One is the Ukrainian Holocaust, or some people dare to call it that, where it is alleged in the thirties, Stalin starved to death five or six million Ukrainian people. Now, if I was to put together all the evidence that contradicted that, that said it was a false belief, and {4593|4594} published that, would that be false news? Or the Armenians say that a million or more of themselves were slaughtered by the Turks at some time in this century, and they keep this as a very important part of their belief. If I was to dispute that and publish the dispute of that, would that be false news? And yet, whatever the truth or falsity of those beliefs may be, they stand on their own. No government sanctions say you must believe this. They are not taught in schools as history. In fact, I recently heard that you can't teach the Ukrainian Holocaust in Manitoba in schools. But, this belief in the Holocaust has become so sacred that nobody can even question it. That is not right. In a free society, no group should have its beliefs imposed by law. We don't have a state religion. We shouldn't have one. We don't have an official history. We shouldn't have one. If this booklet is right, as the accused says it is, it should be freely heard and freely thought about and freely criticized. If it is not, why fear it? If it is false, there is easy access to a million more resources of public persuasion than this booklet ever had. It does not need the government's help in some official repository of truth, however sanctimonious its bureaucratic officials {4594|4595} may be. Let freedom solve the problem of any hatred or intolerance, else by suppression the human spirit, which seeks truth and seeks the ultimate truth of God, will become crippled by its fears to speak its deepest feelings. Only by our face to face meeting, by our being as we really are with all our personal prejudices and suspicions, can we accept our faults, and by airing them without fear, learn to love each other with a true and deeper love than if we never disagreed in the first place.

We have vehement arguments in this courtroom, but I think by my friend's vehement arguments and the promotion thereof I learned deeper respect for him. He fights for what he believes; I fight for what I believe in. Our legal principles we disagree at times, but that's part of the process of understanding, part of the process of debate and reason. It's also part of the process of growth. It's the adversarial system. We practice it here. Why should we not practice it even on the issues of history? We will all benefit when there is a debate in history. We must be free to speak our deep-seated suspicions and I by airing them get the truth and be set free of all our evil and false beliefs. {4595|4596}

Now, if my client has a wrong belief, he honestly does not believe his beliefs are wrong. He believes they are right. But then, let there be a debate. He invites debate. In such conditions as a free society allows debate, health, understanding, will result. Let a few people decide, let the powerful decide, let some bureaucrat decide or even, with the greatest of respect, force the decision upon a judge to decide what are true and false beliefs, it will inevitably have the power to define truth and become to be an absolute power. No one could ever benefit from the results. Violence is the end road, the end of the road for official truth. In a society where people aren't free to think their own views, an official truth prevails; they will eventually resort to violence. You will see that in many dictatorships throughout the world. If you can't express views freely in words, in writing, in print, how do people express them? You can see in the world today how they generally do, and that's very unfortunate.

I said in the beginning, this place, this court, is far too expensive, far too important, to be involved in debates about history. This court and the courts {4596|4597} throughout Canada have rules of evidence which are there to determine disputes of fact, but here we haven't dealt with fact, we've dealt with opinion about history. And with the sincerest efforts on the part of every person of authority here, it is very difficult to have the freedom necessary to conduct a proper debate, and nobody says a debate should occur, but unfortunately the issue has forced us to debate. It shouldn't be here. Free access to the marketplace of ideas does not and cannot take place here. This court was not designed to be a place where the affairs of the world are debated, but where individual conduct is inquired into.

Now, it might be said by my friend that, well, that's all we're here to do. Mr. Christie is going far off the mark, exaggerating the significance of the case. I anticipate some of those types of remarks, but let me suggest to you that if you put in issue a book covering as much of history as this one purports to cover, how do you do that? Now, do you deal with that without debating history? Sure, if it was an act, like an assault or a theft or a murder or a rape, we can deal with that. That's something this court can deal with. But if you've put this kind of thing in a court of law and you ask an accused to say, {4597|4598} well, you prove its truth or the Crown to prove its falsity, we'll be here for weeks, and believe me, we could have gone on longer. I know you think this is long enough, and so do I. But at least to cover it in brief, it took this much time, and it's taken a terrific amount of energy from you, from His Honour, from this Court, from the public purse. For what?

Now, whoever is responsible, and I don't think my friend is, and I don't blame anybody, whoever is responsible for pursuing these kinds of prosecutions, and it is indeed, I suggest, a decision for which somebody is responsible, they should consider what forces are at stake, and what occurs in the court, and consider that it shouldn't happen again, and if you make it clear that this is an improper type of thing to do to a citizen in a free society, by acquitting the accused, we won't do these sorts of things again, I suggest. It would be less likely that those who made this decision in the first place will repeat it. But I can assure you that there is lots of people who would love to have the power to silence different points of view, and it's very easy when you can put people through the kind of thing the accused has been through. I suggest the false {4598|4599} news section may have been intended to deal with a specific allegation of false news like a publication of a sort which briefly stated a fact to be true that was false, but it surely can't be usefully used to deal with a matter of controversy involving history. The Court should not deal with trials of historical issues. This place is too expensive and over regulated by the proper legal rules themselves to permit an adequate discussion of history. For the sake of freedom, I ask you never to forget what is at stake here. You must remember that we have fought for your freedom as well as for that of the accused, that is, the accused stands in the place of anyone who desires to speak their mind. And even if you don't approve or agree with what he says, you must take it as a sacred responsibility not to allow the oppression of someone's honest beliefs.

I want to just finish by reading you a little letter that I got once. It just explains what I mean when I say history is a very complex thing, and it changes from time to time, and it should be free to do so. It's just a little few lines that somebody sent me once. It says, What is the truth? As a child, it said, I was taught that {4599|4600} the Indians were savages. Later on in life I found out that it was the white man who had initiated scalping and the killing of women and children. I was taught in school that Louis Riel was a traitor to his country and thereby executed, and that John A. MacDonald was a hero. Later on in life I was to discover that Louis Riel is regarded by some as a hero defending his people's rights to their land, and the famous Sir John A. had been caught taking bribes from the CPR and resigned in disgrace. He also died an alcoholic. During the Second World War, I was told that Stalin was a good leader who fought on the good side. When I was older I found out that he was responsible for the government imposed starvation of millions of Ukrainians in 1933. In 1941 I was told that Germany was our enemy and Russia was our ally. In 1951 I was told that Germany was our ally and Russia was our enemy. In 1956 I was told that China had slaughtered millions of their own people, it was our enemy, and today I'm told that China is our friend and ally, in a way.

Therefore, when an individual has the integrity to question the credibility of a government imposed view of history, we should listen with an open mind and search for the truth. It would seem to me that truth will be in debate {4600|4601} for a long time. But if we silence one side of any dispute or anyone's view of truth because we think they are wrong, then society as a whole will suffer. An individual will suffer. And you will suffer.

Patrick Henry I think said, "Give me liberty or give me death." And if anything is true, that is true, even though we're not in a state of war. Probably, hopefully, we never will be. But, if you don't have liberty, you have a kind of spiritual death, the death that comes from people who never use their minds. That's a real spiritual death. And if we are to live in a free society where people are alive and have hopes in their lives, then we must have liberty. Nobody was upset by this publication. But we have spent seven weeks, line by line, arguing over 30,000 words, and the other publications, the "West, War and Islam".

With the right verdict, people who brought that into being will not do it again. It will take a lot of courage. There may be some among you who want to convict. I don't know. You will hear from the Crown. They will give you their version of the case. His Honour will charge you on the law, and I'm not supposed to – I could, I suppose, {4601|4602} say something about it, but His Honour will do that. I have simply said that the burden of proof is on the Crown on all the facts. They are supposed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it's false, this and the other thing. There's facts in this, there's mostly opinions in the other. If you want any support for the opinions in the other, the "West, War and Islam", there's books there that support everything he says. What are we going to do about those books if we're going to find him guilty of these opinions? We should start burning all those books, I guess. We won't be far from Nazi Germany if we do that. I think if we're going to allow people to think, we've got to allow them to express their opinions whether we agree with them or not. But it's important that if there's anybody has any doubt about this matter, that those of you who value freedom stand firm in that belief and continue to hold it and don't give in because there is only one hope for freedom in this country, and that's if those people who love it and who lived for it fight for it, stand for it and don't give up.

It's not easy to have put up with seven weeks of a trial. It's not easy to have faced the accusations and listened to all the evidence and to make decisions on {4602|4603} it. But you are the repository of the trust of your country, and in the moment you decide to acquit and stick to that principle, you will give history the best gift your descendants could ever ask: A free country. Thank you.

— The jury retires.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 26, 1985.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1985 – 9:30 A.M.

THE CLERK OF THE COURT: The jury are all present.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Ladies and gentlemen, my task and Mr. Christie's task are almost over and yours is about to begin in earnest [sic]. Shortly you will be entering into the most difficult part of your job. Shortly you will be entering into the most difficult part of your job. His Honour will soon be charging you on what the law is, and he'll be telling you how the law must be applied to the facts as you find them.

His Honour is the sole judge of the law in this case. You must take the law as he gives it to you. He will be defining words for you and be going over the section very carefully that Mr. Zundel is charged under, telling you what the law is with respect to all those matters. You must apply the law as he tells you to apply it, even if you disagree with it. If I make some reference, in the course of my remarks, to the law, I hope that you will bear in mind that His Honour is the final arbitrator of the law, I have nothing to say on the matter and take his remarks not mine. Similarly, you twelve are the sole judges of the facts. It's for you to sift through all the evidence that you heard over the last two months, sift through the exhibits that have been entered here, and decide from that great mass of evidence where the facts are in this case. {4604|4605}

I will be referring to the evidence as we go along in my remarks to you. If your recollection of the evidence is different from mine, be guided by your recollection. You are the judges of the fact, not me. Inevitably, when we have heard so much evidence, I am not, I can assure you, going to be reviewing it all, and there will be points that I leave out that you may well think are important points, and that may be important points. Don't ignore them just because I haven't mentioned them. Of course, as I know you realize by now, what I say to you in my remarks now, just as what Mr. Christie said to you in his remarks yesterday, are not themselves evidence.

You may be wondering how you should go about your job of determining what the facts are in this case. As I indicated, there is a great deal of evidence. Some of it is quite complex; some of it is written down in books and documents and conflicting evidence from various witnesses that you have heard. So how do you make a determination of what the facts are from that evidence? Ladies and gentlemen, I'd suggest that between you all, you have four or five hundred years of human experience, of getting along in a very complex world. You make decisions in your daily lives and your businesses every day about who you are going to believe, {4605|4606} when a story is true or not true. Do you take a cheque from that man or do you ask him for cash? Is he somebody that you can count on or is he somebody that is a cheat? Those are decisions you make every day. You've acquired a great deal of common sense, and it's that common sense that you have both individually and collectively, the twelve of you, that I'd suggest you bring to bear on this problem of determining of, what the facts are.

It's that common sense that I'd suggest you use to sort out the wheat from the chaff to determine if there are any red herrings in this trial, and if there are, what they are.

Our system of criminal justice is supported by two basic ideas, concepts. Without them, our system falls apart. First is the presumption of innocence. A man is presumed innocent in Canada until he's proven guilty. The second pillar is related to the first: that proof of guilt must be proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Fortunately for all of us, the statement of those two principles are so familiar as to almost be a cliché.

This is not a situation where familiarity should breed indifference or contempt. Those two principles are central to fairness in our system of justice. Mr. Zundel is under no obligation to prove his innocence in this Courtroom. {4606|4607} The burden of proof is on me as the Crown Attorney. Throughout this trial, that burden never shifts.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is a legal phrase, and I'm sure His Honour will be defining it for you in much more detail. But, subject to what he says, I would suggest to you that proof beyond a reasonable doubt is a real doubt, it's a doubt that's based on evidence that you find to be reliable evidence. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond any doubt. It doesn't mean proof beyond a shadow of a doubt. We are all going to have some doubts about any events that we're not directly involved with. None of us here can actually climb inside Mr. Zundel's head and see what his honest belief is. We have to infer that belief from what he has written other places, what he said in the witness stand here, from his actions.

The law simply requires you be satisfied to the point where you have no reasonable doubt. If you are not so satisfied, at the end of His Honour's charge, at the end of your deliberations, if you're not so satisfied you must acquit Ernst Zundel. That is your duty, it's your obligation and I would urge you to do that.

Before turning to the issues in this case, I'd like to mention some areas that I submit to you are not issues; they're red herrings, I'd suggest, that I spoke to {4607|4608} to you about before. Freedom of expression, freedom to hold opinions or beliefs on controversial matters, freedom of the press, censorship, are not issues in this case.

Mr. Christie yesterday gave a very stirring and moving address to you about those very vital freedoms. He urged you, with perhaps a small amount of exaggeration, to consider your verdict very carefully, because your verdict was going to affect your children and your children's children. He urged you that, depending on your verdict, a terror would sweep through this land. The government, he indicated, may well be in a position then to trample on those people who hold controversial opinions. Convict Mr. Zundel and 1984 has arrived. I won't repeat it all to you. I couldn't repeat it all to you and do justice to what Mr. Christie said. But I would suggest that those concerns about our freedoms are not concerns that legitimately arise in this prosecution. They have nothing to do with Mr. Zundel's guilt or innocence under the section that he's charged. They have nothing to do with the case that I, on behalf of the people, as the Crown Attorney, have presented.

Section 177 provides that where a man wilfully publishes a statement or a tale that he knows is false, and some mischief or injury to a public interest, in this case {4608|4609} public interest in social and racial tolerance, arises as a result of that deliberate falsehood that's been published, then that man has committed an offence. Nowhere in that section is a controversial belief made illegal.

Mr. Zundel, you or I or anybody else, can hold whatever opinions we choose. We cannot be prosecuted under Section 177. We can have opinions about race; we can have opinions about history; we can have opinions about anything we want, and we can't be prosecuted under Section 177. We can say whatever we want in private conversation and no matter how outrageous our opinions, we cannot be prosecuted under Section 177. Even if those opinions are to the detriment of our society, we cannot be prosecuted under Section 177.

A man can even publish whatever he wants, and if it's true, although unpopular, though controversial, he cannot be prosecuted under Section 177, because truth is a defence. Has [He] has no fear.

Gallileo [Galileo] has no fear. Gallileo [sic] need not fear Section 177. A man can publish falsehoods, and if he has an honest belief in those falsehoods, then he has the full protection of the law. A man can publish falsehoods while knowing they are falsehoods; he can publish deliberate lies; and if there's no harm to the public interest, the public {4609|4610} interest of all Canadians, then he is an innocent man. No prosecution under Section 177 will hold up.

What is it that Section 177 says we cannot do? What is this freedom we're trying to protect? We cannot publish falsehoods, false tales, statements, not opinions, not false opinions but tales or statements which I suggest means facts, while knowing they are false and thereby hurt the public well-being, the well-being and interest of all of us Canadians.

There is the sacred freedom Mr. Christie would have you protect. This is what he spoke to you so passionately about, the freedom to deliberately lie to the detriment of us all and publish those lies.

None of our freedoms in Canada or in any other western country are absolute. They're not unfettered. There are always controls on our freedom. Absolute freedom is another way of talking about absolute tyranny. If I have absolute freedom to do whatever I please, I can shoot you, I can rob you, I can libel you, I can assault you. That's my absolute freedom. It's not justice. It's not the way to run a society. My freedom is your slavery. We put limits on freedom. We say there's some things even in a free society that you can't do. {4610|4611}

Those limits were recognized in this particular area of what you can publish by the defence witnesses. Reverend [sic] Marr, and Christian Enquirer down in Niagara Falls said he put limits on salacious literature. He said libels should be controlled.

Dr. Botting said libels should be controlled. Doug Collins, the reporter, he said libels should be controlled. As a journalist, he said that a publisher should at least try to be accurate; but that's not a legal limit on freedom. The limit of freedom, encompassed by Section 177 is the prevention of the dissemination of lies in which there is no honest belief, lies that hurt our social fabric, our public interest.

There are two sides to every issue, we're told. Matters should be freely debated. That's what Dr. Botting said. But what if one side of the debate is dishonest? What contribution to the search for truth do deliberate and hurtful lies make? So freedom of expression, though fundamental to our culture, is not an absolute freedom. It is freedom to honestly criticize, question. It is not a freedom to pervert the truth to the detriment of others. It does not entitle, I'd suggest, someone to inflame racial animosity within our society by falsehood and deceit. It does not {4611|4612} entitle someone, through lies, to destroy the delicate thread of tolerance that holds our multicultural social fabric together.

Mr. Christie several times mentioned censorship, in particular yesterday, as a corollary to his discussion about freedom of speech. Let's just for a moment think about censorship. Censorship, I'd suggest, is the prevention of the public from seeing a book, movie or some other matter. A pornographic movie is censored and we don't see it, we never see it. The Censorship Board censors it and we never see it.

These exhibits though, 1 and 2, the articles that we're here about, they were seen, they were distributed, they weren't censored from the beginning, they went out into the public forum. What we are not concerned with is not censorship, but a determination of whether Mr. Zundel, in publishing those articles, breached our criminal law.

Mr. Marr made this distinction, or Reverend Marr, rather, made this distinction when I asked him if libel and defamatory libel were things that concerned him, and he answered, as I recorded it, you be guided by your own recollection, but he answered, "Yes, they are, but I am not thinking of those in terms of censorship at all. I am thinking, if a person goes ahead and does it, takes his chances and then pays the cost for having done so, that's {4612|4613} not censorship." Isn't that exactly what we're doing here? So the first non issue, I would suggest, in this trial, is freedom of expression.

There is another. There is a second. The second non issue, I'd suggest, is that somehow this trial is about the Holocaust at large, the Holocaust in the air, in the abstract, and the prosecution of those who deny that the Holocaust occurred. It is not the Holocaust in the abstract that brings us here to this trial, or the denial or Holocaust in the abstract.

As far as the Holocaust is concerned, it's this article, Exhibit 1, that brings us to trial. It's the treatment, the description of the Holocaust, or the non Holocaust, as that says, that brings us here. I've called evidence on behalf of the Crown to try to convince you that that pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", is false and misleading. The witnesses I have called have been directed to specific parts of that evidence in giving their evidence. We are not debating whether four million or six million or eight million Jews died under the tyranny of Nazi Germany. We are not re-fighting World War II.

We are debating whether the statements, tales, contained in this exhibit, are true or false. Nowhere in the pamphlet do you find a discussion of how the gas chambers {4613|4614} worked, or how much coal was needed to burn a body. The Crown called no evidence on that. The Crown's evidence was rooted in that pamphlet, not the Holocaust at large. It called no evidence on other matters, not because evidence is unavailable – and I don't know whether it's available or not – but because it's not matters that are concerned in Exhibit #1.

To that extent, the extent that the Holocaust is dealt with in Exhibit 1, and that extent only, are we concerned with the Holocaust. Now, perhaps that's a fine distinction, but I'd suggest it's nevertheless an important distinction. For example, nowhere in the pamphlet "Dix Six Million Really Die?", and you will obviously have it, I know you've all read it, I'm sure you'll read it again before we're through, but nowhere in that pamphlet does it say that six million Jews were gassed. It's a contention of Mr. Zundel, perhaps, but it is not contained in the pamphlet.

The pamphlet, I would suggest, speaks of many different alleged means of annihilation. It speaks of terrible conditions in the ghettos, such as in the Warsaw ghettos, which he uses as an example. It speaks of mass shootings by the Einsatzgruppen. It speaks of the humane conditions in the concentration camps, to compare them to the stories about the brutality and starvation in the concentration {4614|4615} camps. And, yes, also in the pamphlet there is reference to mass gassings. That's an important part, but it's not the only part of that pamphlet.

These are the many facets of the attempted annihilation of European Jewry that Exhibit 1 deals with and that the Crown has attempted to answer in some detail.

Mr. Christie was distressed, and you may agree with him, at the prospect that I would have you examine line-by-line Exhibit 1 in a narrow, legalistic way to see if there are any fallacies in the pamphlet. Of course, it has to be read; of course, it has to be looked at to see whether it's true or false and looked at carefully, not in a legalistic way, but by you twelve using your common sense finding what you find to have been facts here, because that's what this charge is about: whether the pamphlet – at least a part, whether the pamphlet is true or false. How can we determine that unless we look at the pamphlet?

What of the persecution of others who deny the existence of the Holocaust? Well, I don't know if others have been persecuted for denying the Holocaust, and I'd suggest, in truth, none of us do. We are not here trying Mr. Keegstra, though on his own evidence he was fired from his job not for saying things about the Holocaust per se, but because the curriculum he had been ordered to follow by {4615|4616} his School Board he wasn't following, and you heard some of the various things that Mr. Keegstra was teaching his students. Nor are we here rehearsing Frank Walus' case, the man from Chicago. He was tried in another country, he was tried under another law. His case was dealt with. Mr. Walus acknowledged to you that frequently in Chicago, when a man is arrested on a serious crime, the broadcast media cover the event intensively. He was certainly charged with a serious crime, notwithstanding it was thirty years old, so they covered it intensively; not a Zionist plot, the persecution. He may not like what the media does, but I suggest they do it to everybody.

Nor are we retrying John Demuna (phon) [Demjunjuk], Ivan the Terrible; remember the private investigator who went around Europe seeking witnesses and evidence to be used at the Extradition Hearing of this man. You will also recall, I hope, that the private investigator said that he only got involved in interviewing the witnesses after the hearing, after the witnesses had given their evidence and been cross-examined. Now, he's going back and wants to talk with them again. I'd suggest to you that at the end of a trial it's not too surprising perhaps if people don't want to speak about it in here.

In any event, to speculate that witnesses called for the defence will pay a terrible price for their {4616|4617} testimony, is nothing more than speculation and should form no part of your deliberations. The Holocaust at large and the persecution of those who deny the Holocaust are not issues in this trial.

What are the issues? Back to Section 177. I'd suggest to you there is four things. Now, His Honour will say a great deal more about this, and what I say is subject to His Honour. But I'd suggest to you that there are four things that need to be proven here before Mr. Zündel can be convicted. First, that he wilfully published the articles. ["The West, War and Islam"], "Did Six Million Really Die?", did he publish them and mean to publish them on purpose? Second, are the articles false? Third, did he know they were false at the time that he published them, or did he have an honest belief in their truth? Fourth, having been published, was there some mischief or injury, same thing, caused to the public interest to social and racial tolerance? Each of those questions must be answered for each of the two charges separately.

All right. First, did he publish the articles? Well, he admits he published "Did Six Million Really Die?" in the year that's alleged in the indictment, so I'd suggest you have no trouble with that issue. His Honour will define for you what "publishing" means in law, and hearing his definition {4617|4618} I would ask you to apply it to the facts as you find it to "The West, War and Islam", and I'd suggest that on the evidence, a thousand copies were sent out to many countries, basically Arabic countries, with the rider, the proviso at the end of the article: "We waive all copyrights on this message and invite all Islamic publishers, broadcasters and journalists to quote this appeal in whole or in part." So, permission to distribute it as widely as possible.

You also know that at least one copy of "The West, War and Islam" made it to Canada, because somebody here found out about it and there's a charge comes out of it. You decide on that evidence and the law that His Honour gives you, whether or not that's publishing.

The two pamphlets, as I've already indicated, form two separate charges on the one indictment – "indictment" is just a piece of paper; "indictment" means piece of paper, so don't worry about that – two separate charges, and they should be considered separately by you, so let's look at each one separately now.

First, "Did Six Million Really Die?: The truth at last exposed". What does it say? I'd suggest to you that the thesis, that the sense of that article is that six million Jews did not die, only several hundred thousand Jews died as a result of events in Nazi Germany; that the Holocaust {4618|4619} as we know it, from the media and from history, is a hoax, it's a conspiracy, it's a conspiracy designed to gouge reparations, to gouge money out of West Germany, and it has a couple of other side issues. It also prevents us from discussing problems of race, whatever they are. That's the thesis of the article: conspiracy and a hoax to gouge money out of West Germany. And the article purports to present evidence in support of that thesis.

Each of the Crown witnesses have given evidence of varying aspects of the allegations contained in Exhibit, but the one Crown witness, I would suggest, who could address the broadest number of issues was Dr. Hilberg. It's a while ago now since he testified, but he was qualified as an expert in the Holocaust, and as such, he was entitled to give you his opinion on that topic. Notwithstanding that he's qualified as an expert, you can treat his evidence the same as you treat any other witness' evidence. You can accept some of it or all of it, or none of it, and it's for you to decide how much weight you give his evidence, how authoritative, how good is his evidence.

I'd suggest to you that in answering my questions, and in three long days of cross-examination, Dr. Hilberg repeatedly and consistently showed that he was an expert, that even the smallest details of the Holocaust he had read and {4619|4620} was familiar with literally tens of thousands of Nazi documents. Thousands of them he copied out by hand himself in archives in the pre-xerox era. He read the transcripts, not just of the International Military Tribunal, the first trial or the American Military Tribunal, the second trial. He read the transcripts all the way through the fifties and the sixties and into the seventies, of all the war criminals, and he read the testimony of guards and witnesses at those trials, survivors of those trials.

His credentials and expertise were recognized by two presidents of the United States, by his appointment to the President's Committee on the Holocaust. He has no criminal record. He was and is an eminent and careful scholar. He described himself as a documents man. He wrote nothing as a fact until he had checked it and cross-checked it and checked it again with different documents, and certainly the way that he gave his evidence confirms that. Both his careful and conservative method of research and his obvious command of the documents and material, suggest that great weight should be given to his evidence. Even Dr. Faurisson was high in his praise of Dr. Hilberg, and somewhat wistful in his desire to work with him. {4620|4621}

Mr. Christie criticizes [sic] Dr. Hilberg's evidence and asks you to look at it skeptically, because Dr. Hilberg brought no documents with him to this trial. What assistance would it be to you if Dr. Hilberg came in here with a railroad car full of German documents in the German language? I suggest it wouldn't be any assistance at all. That's why Dr. Hilberg's here. He's read that and he can tell you what their contents are and tell you where it comes from, that there is a document that says these things.

If Dr. Hilberg misrepresented those documents, rest assured that Dr. Faurisson would have told you about it. He didn't.

Dr. Hilberg spoke at some length about Chapter 3, "Population and Emigration", and that's a process whereby he tried to determine how many Jews were dead; the exact numbers could only be kept track of by looking at census figures, population figures before and after the war. He referred to Chambers Encyclopedia which said – the number here is given – "the total number of Jews living in pre-war Europe was six million five hundred thousand". The Chambers Encyclopedia says, excluding Russia, in pre-war, 1939, six and a half million, and he said there's a difference; there are three million Jews living in Russia. In 1940, 1941 Germany was expanding, expanding through Poland, expanding into a large {4621|4622} chunk of Russia, bringing more and more Jews under its control. The rest of that chapter, I'd suggest, Chapter 3, "Population and Emigration" is based on that six and a half million figure that they use here. That's how they do their adding and subtracting, mostly subtracting from. It's false at the beginning so it's false all the way through.

Chapter 4: "The Six Million Documentary Evidence". The chapter deals with Gerstein. It says there's no documentary evidence. Not so, said Dr. Hilberg. There's a wealth of documents. The Nazis intended the deliberate murder of Jews. He referred to the Korherr report, Richard Korherr, the S.S. statistician who kept track of the Jewish population. And as month-by-month went by, the population dwindled as people died.

He referred to the testimony of the Manich (phon) [von Manstein] at Nuremberg, the principals at Nuremberg, the accused. You'll recall I referred Dr. Faurisson to the diary of Hans Frank, who was the Nazi in charge of – the Polish Governor General, and in his diary, not a public document, his diary, Hans Frank was talking about how to kill millions and millions of Jews, and that that was the Nazi policy. You'll recall that he read that, Dr. Faurisson and I, and he said, "Oh, lawyers talk, you know, lawyers talk, that's what it is." A document. The Posen speech, that's the speech that Himmler gave to his {4622|4623} group leaders, that's referred to in here as having "veiled allusions". Attempts to find veiled allusions to genocide in speeches like that of Himmler's to his S.S. Obergruppenfuehrers, in Posen in 1943, are likewise quite hopeless. Veiled allusions. Let's see if I can find that veiled allusion here.

"We have taken from them what wealth they had. I have issued a strict order which S.S. Obergruppenfuehrer Pohl has carried out that this wealth should, as matter of course, be handed over to the Reich without reserve."

"We have taken none of it for ourselves. We had the moral right, we had the duty to our people to destroy this people which wanted to destroy us. But we have not the right to enrich ourselves with so much as a fur, a watch, a mark or a cigarette or anything else, because we exterminated a germ. We want, in the end, to be infected by the German diet, and wherever it may form we will cauterize it."

In an earlier speech he talked about killing women and children, and we all know he said how difficult it is to see a thousand {4623|4624} bodies stacked side-by-side. Veiled allusions. That's a lie.

Is it lawyer talk? Is it lawyer talk to speak of killing people in tens, in concentration camps? These weren't lawyers, we are talking about killing. These are civilians [sic] penned-up in concentration camps and ghettos ready for the slaughter.

Chapter 5, The Nuremberg trials; full of falsehoods, full of falsehoods. Guilt was, assumed from the outset. If it was assumed from the outset, why were people acquitted? Why did they all get the same sentence? Because they didn't. That's the evidence. At Nuremberg, ex post facto legislation was created whereby men were tried for crimes which were only declared crimes after they had been allegedly committed.

You heard Dr. Hilberg make the distinction between a count dealing with a war of aggression, a count dealing with war crimes. War crimes were subject to prosecution long before World War II, but in World War II itself at the London Conference – that's the one I got confused about the other day, the conference in December of 1942, the Allies got up and said, "Germany, we are going to hold you responsible for what happens to the Jews." The war went on another three years. {4624|4625}

Although only two hundred and forty witnesses were called in the course of the trials, no less than three hundred thousand witnessed [sic] were accepted by the Courts as supporting the charges without this evidence being heard under oath; and the implication here is that those three hundred thousand were all vicious Jews who wanted to get back at Nazis.

Well, the evidence of Dr. Hilberg is that in all of the Nuremberg trials, not just the first International Military Tribunal but the American trials that followed, in all of those trials there were forty thousand prosecution documents, a hundred thousand defence documents – the defence simply availed themselves of the same opportunities and those documents included both written documents and written affidavits, so there's no three hundred thousand affidavits put in by the Crown of spurious sources.

Most incredible of all, the pamphlet goes on, perhaps it was the fact that defence lawyers at Nuremberg were not permitted to cross-examine prosecution witnesses. "Name one" I said to Zundel, and he couldn't.

Dr. Hilberg, who read all those transcripts, said there aren't any. Nobody could name one, because there weren't any. It's false, a lie. {4625|4626}

The pamphlet then goes on to refer to Justice Wenersturm [Wennerstrom] and his comments. And what did Justice Wenersturm [sic] do at his trial? He convicted. He handed down, as I think Zundel said, harsh sentences. Does that show up in here? Does that show up in Wenersturm's [sic] criticism of the trial? Should it have? Is it misleading not to have included it?

Torture, confessions under torture.

"Altogether more disturbing, however, were the methods employed to extract statements and 'confessions' at Nuremberg, particularly those from S.S. officers which were used to support the extermination charge."

On the plain reading, wouldn't you expect what follows to be allegations of torture involved with the extermination charge? But it doesn't. What comes next is what we heard described as the Malmédy incident involving American prisoners of war; nothing to do with the extermination charge. Misleading.

We then hear about the Simpson van Roeden [Roden] report that's discussed in here. But is it? What you have in here, masquerading – as the Simpson van Roeden [sic] report, is {4626|4627} newspaper interviews with van Roeden [sic].

Ernst Zundel told you, well, in fact, the report didn't say those things. That was van Roeden [sic] speaking after the report came out, and he later retracted those comments. The Simpson van Roeden [sic] report is not quoted in here. Obviously they knew about it. Why didn't they quote it? Because it didn't serve their purposes. Misleading; it's a lie.

Next few pages, they have a list of various people who are alleged to be tortured and the allegations are in the boldest terms: Wisliceny's statement, Ohlendorf, he was tortured; Oswald Pohl, he was tortured; where's the evidence? Not in here. It's not in the transcripts. Each of those men was tried; each of them gave testimony; none of them complained of torture, not one of them.

In all those transcripts, not a single person complained of torture. Now, surely some of the men testified – well, surely when you're on trial for your life, as these men were, if you were tortured you'd complain about it. It would be pretty important to you to put forth all the defence that you could. They didn't. They weren't. Not even Rudolph Hoess complained of torture. In fact, he said that he was treated very well at Nuremberg and that he was {4627|4628} roughly handled weeks earlier. He testified at Nuremberg for the defence; no complaint of torture. The single allegation of torture seems to come from Julius Streicher, a virulent racist, creative journalist. How do we know he's a racist? Because what was his torture? Kissing a black man's feet. And the Court obviously considered what he said and ordered the remark stricken from the record. Might as well say you've been tortured by being made to eat white bread. It's silly. The allegations are made without a scintilla of evidence.

Whenever the authors of this pamphlet, or indeed, Mr. Zundel, Dr. Faurisson, come upon damaging testimony to their cause, they respond to it by saying it's either forged or comes from torture or its perjured. Nobody is telling the truth but the author, Mr. Zundel. And that's absurd.

Is this a convenient time for a break, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes, certainly. Ten minutes.

— The jury enters. 11:45 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

Exhibit 1 next deals with the Einsatzgruppen, and you remember those are the four battalions, three thousand men each, on the Eastern front, that were charged with the responsibility for shooting Jewish Bolshevik Commissars, I think was the phrase, and the article says that there is no statistical basis for the figures of a million – I think Dr. Hilberg said 1.4 million people shot, mass shootings by that action. The article says no statistical basis for that. Well, I suggest to you that there is evidence before you from – again from Dr. Hilberg that there were daily reports that were sent in to Berlin setting out, in detail, the numbers of Jewish dead, statistically. Those daily reports written by the Nazis ... Dr. Hilberg's evidence is the only evidence you have on that, because Dr.

Faurisson said that, although he was familiar with those things, he'd read them and seen them he didn't care to comment on them until the revision[ists] answer to him had come out, the official version – not exactly an independent thinker, Dr. Faurisson. In any event, Dr. Hilberg's figures on the death by mass shooting of Einsatz-{4629|4630}gruppen is uncontradicted – 1.4 million – and it forms a part, a significant part of the total number of dead from the Holocaust that he attributed at about 5.1 million.

The article here, in dealing with the Einsatzgruppen, makes reference to the book by Reginald Paget on "Manstein", and you have that book here in evidence, and part of it was read to you where Mr. Paget was the defence lawyer for Nazi Manstein, and the book is a review of the trial. No footnotes. No documentation. No scholarly research. But interestingly enough, on the opposite page from the one that Mr. Christie read to you, same volume, there's reference to mass shootings and an order was given that mass shootings were carried out, but he felt the figures were exaggerated. No reference to the statistical reports. Maybe he didn't know about them.

The next section of the pamphlet deals with Auschwitz and Polish Jewry. Auschwitz is described as an industrial centre for labour. In fact, repeatedly throughout this pamphlet, almost from beginning to end, references are made to the concentration camps being just labour camps where people went to work where the labour was used, not death camps. That wasn't the reason why people were brought together at all. But what labour went on in {4630|4631} the little villages of Treblinka, Sobibor, Chelmno, Belzec? None. No labour because there was no industry there.

Dr. Hilberg gave evidence that he studied the train schedules, and the trains went one way, full, to those camps, and returned empty – a one-way ticket to death. That's what that was. Dr. Faurisson says, well, perhaps they were transit camps and the people were taken there and then walked to work. I mean, really. There is no International Committee of the survivors of Treblinka, no International Committee of the survivors of Sobibor or Belzec. If there were such a committee, they could hold their annual meeting at a telephone booth, I suggest. There are virtually no survivors of those camps. Auschwitz did have industry, and you heard that from several witnesses here. It also had well-used facilities for the industry of death by gassing. Why kill people, the pamphlet asks, when you want their labour? Well, only those who were selected for death – and you heard a number of witnesses, including Dr. Vrba, Mr. Urstein, Mr. Fulp, a number of witnesses who described the selection process. You remember there were the elderly, sick, women and the children. They formed one long line. Young, able-bodied men formed one short line. They killed those people whose labour they {4631|4632} didn't need, and kept those people whose labour they did; and when they'd used up those people whose labour they were using, they threw them away and used the next batch to come in. Healthy people were worked to death. They were worked inhumanly hard, on starvation rations, in squalid, filthy conditions, until they died[,] until they died from starvation, they died from suicide on the wires, till they died from the casual and contemptuous brutality of their Nazi guards. Here you have eye witnesses – Dr. Vrba, Arnold Friedman, Henry Leader, Ignatz Fulp, Dennis Urstein, Chester Tomaszewski. These men survived. They told you what went on in those camps. Were all those men lying? Were those men suffering from some group fantasy? The stories gel so nicely, having come from different camps, different times. Was there a moving description of the loss of their friends, their family, the livelihoods? Was that the testimony of liars and crackpots? You saw them. You saw both – heard what they said, the way they said, and you saw the men themselves. I'd suggest to you that each and everyone of those men is worthy of your belief. Their testimony is worthy of your belief. The horrors they suffered were written on their faces. It was enough to turn Chester Tomaszewski's hair white as a young man of {4632|4633} twenty. They were worthy of your belief.

Perhaps this is a suitable place in my address to you to consider the evidence of gas chambers presented by the Crown. It seems to loom large in the defence. Dr. Vrba described for you the pits for burning bodies that he saw on one occasion in December of 1942 when the ground was frozen. You are told that this was marshy ground – that was the evidence of Mr. Christopherson – and that, as such, a pit was impossible to be dug there. It would have filled up with water. But it wasn't impossible to put gas chambers partially underground. You have evidence of the pits, but no evidence of what work was done for the drainage of the area, no evidence because either it wasn't asked, or people didn't know.

There is an exhibit here, Exhibit No. 27. You heard reference many times to aerial photography. And you will have this in your witness room and be able to look at the photographs taken by the Allies during the War. The dates are indicated on here when the photographs were taken. Included in the photographs, photo analysis, reference to pits, to burning. You look at it. You'll see. Have a look at it, too, and see if the ground was marshy, if you can see piles of water around Crematorium IV and V. You're {4633|4634} the judges of the facts here. You look at it. The flames, it is said, burned all the time from the chimneys. Well, that's not the evidence of the Crown. Dr. Vrba said that there were frequent breakdowns in those crematoria. Not all the bodies were burned in the crematoria. They were burned in open pits as well. Mr. Friedman testified that when a new transport came in, a new transport of people, they were taken, led up towards the crematoria, they disappeared up in that area and a couple of hours later there'd be flames and smoke coming out of the crematoria. You go out the back door. Is there a back door to a concentration camp? Dr. Hilberg testified he'd read accounts of citizens from the surrounding area describing the flames from Birkenau. No question there were flames in those chimneys. Dr. Lindsay says – he was the chemist, you recollect that – he said that the chimney would collapse if it was built from the same mortar you would use in your own fireplace. Now, he's probably right, but what an absurd assumption that they would have used the same mortar you would use in your home fireplace for an industrial crematorium, if you can call it that. Dr. Lindsay, I would suggest, also tried to deliberately deceive you in his evidence. He told you that Zyklon B was lighter than air, {4634|4635} that it would go up to the roof, making it safest on the ground in the gas chamber. He told you that exposure to the gas, hydrogen cyanide, in the air, could kill you, even if you didn't breathe it in. It could go through your skin and kill you, even if you had a gas mask on. And finally he said the gas in a water solution would kill you. Those were the three different ways that hydrogen cyanide could kill you, and he spent twelve years studying this, so he knew. But did he tell you the whole truth till he was cross-examined? Did he tell you what was lighter than air was only very slightly lighter than air, that it would rise slowly, that the people closest to the ground would die first as the gas rose? Did he tell you that while you could die from exposure to your skin with hydrogen cyanide gas, that it took seventy-five times as much hydrogen cyanide gas to kill you, exposed to your skin, as what you breathe inside? Reme[m]ber, breathing, lethal, in three minutes, three hundred parts per million; skin, lethal, three minutes, twenty thousand parts per million. The Nazis wouldn't use twenty thousand parts per million in the gas chamber. That would be a waste of gas. And he said he had no idea, this man who spent twelve years researching what the lethal dose of hydrogen cyanide would be in solution, in water. {4635|4636} Highly water soluble. So you can hose it down and be flushed away. But how much hydrogen cyanide, in water, is lethal? They didn't know. He didn't know. He is the expert, but he indicated to you it was lethal, and I suggest he misled you. I'd suggest that, having misled you, you can't accept very much of his evidence.

You have a plan obtained by Dr. Faurisson of 1945 with two of the four crematoria and gas chambers. That will be in evidence and you will have a chance to look at it. We don't know if that's the final plan, or a draft plan, because the crematoria were destroyed by the Nazis before the Russians came in. We don't know. I'd suggest to you that the plan proves nothing today, if there was a gas chamber, or if there wasn't. It's a plan. It exists. But we can't relate that plan to the reality of 1945. I'd suggest that you should prefer the eye witness, Dennis Urstein, when it comes to testimony about gas chambers. He testified about being taken to the gas chamber on one occasion, with about thirty of his fellow prisoners, taken in a door, crematoria. The S.S. officer put on a gas mask, opened the door. Inside there was a stack of bodies welded together, he said. They were wet. They had been hosed down. The strongest were on top. There {4636|4637} were pillars inside. He described them like metal pipes. There were shower heads up above. There was the hum of machinery. I'd suggest to you it is consistent with Dr. Hilberg's testimony that four powerful generators were ordered and delivered to Birkenau for those gas chambers. It is also consistent, and you have it in evidence here, with what Rudolf Hoess says in his autobiography: "The door was opened half an hour after the induction of gas, and the ventilation switched on." I'd suggest to you that Urstein's evidence is worthy of belief. You are asked to view this crematoria as a mortuary. A mortuary. Now, there's two large rooms in each Crematoria I and II shown on the plans – one for undressing, and one for the gas chamber. Both of them are labelled "leichenkeller" – mortuary. One, two. They had two large rooms in Crematoria II and Crematoria III because they were identical, and you got two other crematoria that we don't have the plans for, numbers IV, V and VI. You could stack a lot of bodies into those four crematoria. You could stack thousands of bodies into those four crematoria. Why? Why do they want to stack the bodies there? Why not burn them? That's what the crematoria is for. Or burn them in pits. Why stack them in there? Why stack them in there, as Dr. Vrba said, {4637|4638} when Fred Wexler's mortuary was just as good? Stack the bodies, ten to a stack. You can get a lot in a small space.

Also the evidence of Henry Leader, from Maidanek. He carried the bodies from the gas chamber, the men inside wearing masks, outside onto a cart and pushed the cart to a crematoria. And on a couple of occasions, around the time of the clearance of the Warsaw Ghetto, he took them outside the camp to a ravine where the bodies were burned, because there were too many for the crematoria to handle. Those aren't natural deaths.

Mr. Christie asks, where was the coke? Where was the coke to burn all these bodies? Well, Dr. Vrba was asked that question and he said coke was brought in by the truckload. How much coke does it take to burn a body? You have no evidence of that. What you have is evidence of how much coke Mr. Zundel says he believes it takes to burn a body. There's a difference. Under the two issues, truth and belief, they are separate. What does he base his belief on? A book for funeral directors in a city. Funeral directors who burn bodies one at a time. Is there a difference when you burn bodies en masse? We don't know because we have no evidence of that. Neither do we {4638|4639} have evidence that it would take eighty pounds, forty pounds, or whatever it was, to burn bodies en masse. Did the Nazis care that the prisoners smell burning flesh in the concentration camps? I think not.

Dr. Vrba and Mr. Leader, both saw S.S. men putting Zyklon B [sic] into a gas chamber from the roof. Dr. Vrba described seeing the man climb up, open the tin, pour it in, tap it on the side while wearing his gas mask. Maybe after forty years he can't remember whether the height was five feet or four feet or six feet above the ground to the top of the bunker, but he knew it was above ground, and he knew the man had to climb up. We have pictures here, models, that indicate that it was partially above ground. Somebody would have to climb up on it.

Yes, there were gas chambers, ladies and gentlemen, and that is the evidence in this trial. There is reliable evidence of that before you, and I'd like you to accept it. Having accepted it, put the lie to the allegations here that there were no gas chambers.

Page 18 of the book contains Mr. Christopherson's eye witness account, Thies Christopherson, this time in Auschwitz, only he wasn't in Auschwitz. He was in Raisko. The quotes are accurate. No question he said that. You {4639|4640} saw the man, Christopherson. You heard him testify. You heard what he had to say. I'd suggest he was incredible. With the Nazis or anyone else, with the Allies, do they wander in and out of camps to go blackberry-picking, or take a few days off? I don't know why you would want a few days off. He said conditions were better inside the camp than outside. People were clamouring to get in there – a good diet, work, fresh air? Nonsense. Christopherson and Felderer are both cut from the same cloth – totally unreliable and unbelievable.

The pamphlet next goes on to discuss the Warsaw Ghetto. Dr. Hilberg went into some detail on that section of the pamphlet and pointed out a great many errors within that section. I won't review them all with you. I am sure you remember. It says that the 1931 Jewish population census for Poland places the number of Jews at 2.7 million approximately. He said, no, that was the 1926 census. This man knows what he is talking about. The 1931 census was over three million, that after emigration and flight to the Soviet Union, no more than 1.1 million were under German control. He says that's a lie. How do we know that's a lie? Well, because the S.S. statistician, Richard Kohrer [Korherr], has detailed statistics of how many Jews there were in Poland, {4640|4641} and it wasn't 1.1 million. It was in the neighbourhood of three million. Here is the line:

"As we have seen, transportation to camps is alleged to have ended in 'extermination', but there is absolutely no doubt from the evidence available that it involved only the effective procurement of labour and the prevention of unrest."

Well, we talked about Treblinka and Sobibor and those things. And then there is the discussion of the Stroop report, when 56,065 prisoners were sent to Treblinka, whether that meant they were exterminated or peacefully resettled. You decide that, that lie.

"Some Concentration Camp Memoirs" is the next chapter, and there were a couple of books in there that were referred to at the very beginning of the evidence: "Under Two Dictators" by Colin Cross – I'd suggest that, for example, the book by Margaret Buber, "Under Two Dictators", is referred to as describing, the conditions prevailing in concentration camps as being consistent with meals – white bread, sausage, sweet porridge, dried fruit. The book doesn't say that. There's other quotations from the book to indicate that those were not prevailing conditions during {4641|4642} the time in the camp. We also have under the "Memoirs" section Anne Frank's Diary – a hoax. Mr. Zundel agreed that this section is false, that the reason why this pamphlet calls Anne Frank's Diary a hoax is false is that there was an action, a legal action, in a Court in New York but it wasn't about the Diary, it wasn't about somebody ghostwriting the Diary, it was about a movie script. That's cynical to suggest anything else. The man even quotes from the judgment, so he had to know what it was about – the author, that is. It was false, Mr. Zundel says, well, there's other reasons for thinking that Anne Frank's Diary is true (sic). It's not an issue here. We are not trying Anne Frank's Diary. We are trying this pamphlet.

"The Nature and Condition of War-Time Concentration Camps". The question is asked, rhetorically: "Would it have been possible to destroy and remove all trace of a million people in six months? Could such enormous gatherings of Jews and executions on such a vast scale have been kept secret? These are the kind of questions that the critical, thinking people should ask. And he will soon discover that not only the statistical and documentary evidence given here, but simple logistics combine to discredit the legend of the six million." That is what they say here. Well, it was kept {4642|4643} secret. Where are the plans for Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec? All there exists there today is a level plane, according to Dr. Faurisson, who has been there. Those camps were vacated before the Russian advance and taken apart brick by brick. Why, unless what went on in there was secret? Remember the oath of secrecy that the S.S. guard had to give? There were secrets. Still under "Camp Conditions":

"The Red Cross Report, examined below, demonstrates conclusively that throughout the war the camps were well administered."

That's under "Humane Conditions". It says:

"The working inmates received a daily ration even throughout 1943 and 1944 of not less than 2,750 calories"

– and that's why Ignatz Fuloop, when he emerged from a cattle car, where a hundred and twenty men had entered alive, was the only man to exit. That's why at the end of the War he weighed seventy-three pounds, because of those humane conditions. That is why Chester Tomaszewski is here – “The Road to Golgotha”. It’s a lie.

In support of their allegation of humane conditions they cite S.S. Judge Dr. Konrad Morgen and say, well, this judge was investigating bad things going on {4643|4644} in the camps, and that’s a proof of a fact that the Nazis cared about the people in those camps. Remember, we read part of the evidence that Dr. Morgen gave at the International Military Tribunal where he said that he got wind of extermination camps at Lublin and at Auschwitz and he went to investigate, and the Kommandants of those camps told him about those exterminations and he could not investigate; he was prevented from doing that. How could he charge, he asked, the Head of State, Hitler, who gave the order for those camps? Does that show in here? It does not. That’s misleading. It’s for you to decide. Did Dr. Faurisson tell you the whole truth about Dr. Morgen, or S.S. Judge Morgen, when he quoted from Morgen? No, ladies and gentlemen, he didn’t.

Next we have Dr. Russell Barton. Dr. Barton, I would suggest to you, is an honest man. He described things as he saw them as well as he could. His comments were that he felt the Nazis were criminally negligent, to my recollection. You will be guided by your recollection. The Nazis were criminally negligent, that they had a camp for some three thousand, that fifty or sixty thousand people were moved into that camp, and the leadership, the Nazis, ignored them, didn’t feed them, didn’t care for them, housed {4644|4645} them in the most incredible filth and squalor – guaranteed disease and death. And that’s what they got. He said that he checked the food records and the supplies to see that in 1944 the camps were pretty well maintained. Well, in cross-examination, when I asked Dr. Barton whether, in fact, the camp had been used to fatten up people before sending them to the west in exchange for other prisoners, he said he wasn’t sure about exchanging prisoners. But in fact, people were going from Bergen-Belsen to the west, and they were fattening up. Sure they were well-fed because that is the condition that prevailed throughout the whole of the concentration camps ... That’s not the evidence.

Dr. Barton also gave evidence of what constituted brainwashing, mass hysteria, neither of which, he said, would have a lasting impact. Very short-term mental condition. They certainly would not have lasted into the fifties and sixties, he said, when the Germans were still trying war criminals. People were still getting up and testifying – when I say people, I should say Nazis got up and testified about what went on in those camps.

Dr. Barton concluded by saying that he was not brainwashed, and he believed that millions of Jews died at the hands of the Nazis. He couldn’t say that they were {4645|4646} all deliberately killed. There is no doubt that they were killed.

Now we come to one enormous lie. Take a look at these fake photographs near the picture where it says, “Healthy and cheerful inmates released from Dachau”.

It says:

“The extreme conditions at Belsen applied to very few camps indeed; the great majority escaped the worst difficulties and all their inmates survived in good health.”

You saw the movie, “Nazi Concentration Camps” – not just Bergen-Belsen, not just of Dachau. There were nine, ten camps mentioned there from all over Germany.

You saw the pictures – Ma[u]thausen, Arnstadt (?), Brezeczna (?). Were the people that you saw, the inmates that you saw in that movie in good health? That’s a lie.

— The jury retires. 11:30 a.m..

— Short adjournment.

——— {4646|4647}

— The jury enters. 11:45 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Ladies and gentlemen, the next chapter in Exhibit 1 is on the Red Cross, and together we have looked up in each of the various references here, and I’d suggest that we found things are left out, that the references were misleading, that at least in one case where they said that the Red Cross “found no evidence whatever at the camps in Axis-occupied Europe of a deliberate policy to exterminate the Jews”, that is a deliberate lie. Mr. Zundel admitted that that was false. The truth is contained in those documents, the books. You will have those with you in the jury room as well as photocopies of those areas where Sergeant Luby read from. Mr. Zundel did say that he had an honest belief, however, that what was contained here on the Red Cross was true, and that his honest belief was based on this report, Red Cross, German concentration camps from 1939 to 1945, what’s published in Geneva in 1945, one thin volume. And very clearly, in here, is reference to a three-volume report from 1948. So we are looking at two different things. Consider that when you consider the honesty of his belief. I won’t say any {4647|4648} more about the Red Cross Report other than that in this pamphlet is totally false what’s reported.

The final chapter deals with, “The Truth At Last”, the work of Paul Rassinier. Paul Rassinier, you will recall the evidence of Dr. Faurisson, when he was called a man who had made common cause with the Nazis in the sixties, he sued the man who said that for libel and lost. He was a man who made common cause with the Nazis because work has to be viewed in that light not in the light, I would suggest, that it’s presented here, that he was an anti-Nazi. It’s what it says here.

Dr. Hilberg refers to the fun that Paul Rassinier has with figures, and I’d suggest to you that is certainly how he misrepresented Dr. Hilberg’s own figures. He says he attributes to Dr. Hilberg something over four hundred thousand, I believe, dead. That’s all right. Eight hundred and ninety-six thousand, eight hundred and ninety-two. That’s the figure he gives. Dr. Hilberg says that’s absurd. He never wrote that anywhere. His figure is 5.1 million.

There’s quotations about reparation, compensation with Israel. He said that Germany had to pay to Israel sums which are calculated on six million dead. {4648|4649} Well, even Dr. Faurisson told you that wasn’t true, but that’s represented in here as “The Truth At Last”. “The Truth At Last Exposed” it says on the outside, and the chapter heading, “The Truth At Last: The Work of Paul Rassinier”. Well, it’s not the truth.

In the conclusion, the last page of the article here, reference is made to figures of the International Red Cross, “which put the loss of victims of persecution because of politics, race or religion who died in prisons and concentration camps between 1939 and 1945 at 300,000, not all of whom were Jews, and this figure seems the most accurate assessment.” Well, you heard from Mr. Rene de Grace, of our own Canadian Red Cross, who told you there was a bulletin he received from the International Committee of the Red Cross in the normal course of their business, and that that bulletin says, “Consequently, the International Committee of the Red Cross considers it must make clear that it has never published or even compiled statistics of this kind which are being attributed to it. The work of the ICRC is to help war victims, not to count them. In any case, how could its delegates have obtained data for such statistics? They were able to enter only a few concentration camps, and then only in the final days {4649|4650} of the war.” The figure attributed in the Red Cross is not their figure. It’s a lie. If that figure is based on anything, it would seem that it may be based on the International Tracing Service.

Mr. Zundel said that he had some correspondence with the International Tracing Service. Dr. Faurisson referred to the International Tracing Service – through the revisionist archives – they were twisting the figures, misusing them – but that seems to be their source for saying three hundred thousand died.

Now, Mr. Zundel put into evidence reports in French from the International Tracing Service in Arolsen. Part of that report is translated for you. It’s a 1978 report. The sum of three hundred and sixty-one thousand deaths are indicated here. I will read it to you:

“The number of deaths that occurred in concentration camps and which were registered by other registrar offices amounts to 90,368. This means that all in all 361,652 deaths that have occurred in concentration camps have been registered. This number does not allow for an evaluation of the total number of deaths that have {4650|4651} occurred in the concentration camps. During the War, only a fraction of the deaths that occurred in the concentration camps were registered. Due to the hostilities or due to a deliberate destruction on the part of the SS, only a small portion of these registrations, even, has been retained, and only a small portion of these last-mentioned registrations went to the ITS."

Is that an 'accurate figure? It's a lie. The figure is absurdly different from that given to you by Dr. Hilberg that he checked and re-checked with documents. Three million died in the camps, he said, from starvation, disease, brutality and, yes, gassing. 1.4 million were shot by the Einsatzgruppen, and the remainder died from starvation and the appalling conditions in the Ghettos.

We have gone through each of these chapters. These are all the supports that are being put forward by this author in support of his overall thesis that we talked about at the beginning, that this is a hoax. I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, how could such a conspiracy that gouged reparations out of Germany exist in Wartime {4651|4652} Europe? You'd have to know that the Germans are going to lose the War. Dr. Vrba escaped and submitted his report to his nation, and eventually it found its way into the West in April of 1944, before D-Day. How would you know the Germans are going to lose the War? How would you know the Germans are going to make an offer to open discussions for reparations? How do you know there was going to be a State of Israel? It wasn't established till 1948. How can you guarantee the silence of the supposed six million victims? You never have the so-called survivors ever see the victims again. Families separated forever for thirty pieces of silver. You have to gain the co-operation of governments, because governments would have to be involved in this conspiracy, in this cover-up – and the researchers and archivists like Dr. Hilberg to forge the necessary German documents and, in the process, they'd have to forget to forge the order from Hitler. It is a patent absurdity. It is a patent absurdity. That pamphlet is a web of lies and deceit from beginning to end. Anybody who expends as much time, I would suggest to you, as Ernst Zundel has spent, studied in this matter, would know that.

"Did Six Million Really Die? The Truth At Last Exposed". Well, something was exposed all right, {4652|4653} but it wasn't the truth. The article isn't controversial. It's a fraud. It's a blatant lie posing as the truth. It's cloaked and couched in academic terms with reference to books to make it look like the truth, make it look like a legitimate historical review in order to add credibility to that lie. But when you look at it you can see it as a lie.

So, was Ernst Zundel a casual reader who would look through this and say, "Gee, that looks like the truth to me; I believe that."? Did he believe it? Did he have an honest belief in the contents of that pamphlet? And that is the next part that the Crown has to prove, that Ernst Zundel knew it was false at the time that he published it.

Mr. Zundel has testified at length as to his honest belief in the truth of that article. He told you of his diligent research over twenty-five years consisting of reading, travelling, interviewing people. He said the purpose of that was to get at the truth of this matter. He testified about his pacifism. It is why he left Germany, he said, because they put him in the armed forces. He was a pacifist. He didn't want to do that. He testified to you about racial tolerance. He introduced well over a {4653|4654} hundred exhibits of books and articles and photographs which, he said, he relied on in formulating his honest belief. That wasn't the whole truth, was it? What did he rely on?

Ditlieb Felderer is the mainstay of his belief. There is a mainstay if there ever was one, Mr. Felderer, whose obsession with Auschwitz took him back there many times, some thirty years after Auschwitz had ceased to be a concentration camp. He fed his obsession with thirty thousand slides. You heard his evidence and you heard the filth that he prints and the racist material, and you have that in evidence, too. This man is not a colourful eccentric, Ditlieb Felderer. He is a totally untrustworthy racist witness.

Mr. Zundel relied on Dr. Faurisson. Dr. Faurisson is a frustrated academic who has spent twenty five years concerning himself with disproving the existence of gas chambers. I asked him if even one, even one of the handful of Zunderkommando, [Sonderkommando] that group that worked inside the crematorium, if one of them who survived the Holocaust agreed with the description of a gas chamber. He said no, not one. Who is dealing with fantasy here?

Mr. Zundel relied on Dr. Charles Weber, Dr. {4654|4655} Weber from Tulsa, Oklahoma, who didn't even finish his book. He relied on Dr. Lindsay. We talked about Dr. Lindsay. I suggest he tried to deceive you.

He relied on Udo Walendy, Udo Walendy who can say that documents that support the Holocaust are forged, although he has no qualifications as a document examiner whatsoever. He can say those documents were forged, and that they should not be relied on – they should be ignored – although he was prepared to rely on a newspaper report of a Red Cross Report of concentration camp deaths without ever seeing the actual report. Some researcher. Some historian. This is as pathetic a band of crazies and misfits, frustrated men, as have ever graced a courtroom, I suggest to you. You saw them all. You draw your own conclusions. Yet Mr. Zundel relied on each and everyone of them, and especially, he said, on Mr. Felderer, to establish his honest belief.

I am not suggesting to you for one single minute that Mr. Zundel is of a similar cast of mind. He is a very, very clever man. You saw him testify. You saw, I would suggest, the way in which he evaded answering questions. He is a clever man. He is not the colourful eccentric that Felderer is. He cannot be dismissed as someone who has a {4655|4656} goofy but honest belief. I'd suggest to you that the belief he expressed to you in the truth of Exhibit I is anything but honest. In fact I'd suggest to you he lied about that.

Mr. Christie said something very interesting yesterday and I tried to copy it down as quickly as I could. I hope I have it accurately. I think it bears repeating. He said the measure of a person's honesty is that if a person honestly believes, he will look at alternative sources. In approximately one hundred exhibits that Mr. Zundel introduced I'd suggest there is one alternate source drawn from what has been described as a hundred thousand books on the Holocaust and that's Dr. Vrba's book. Just one. Not a history book, not Raul Hilberg's book. There is not a single historian introduced in a history book, nor is there a single alternate source referred to in all of his evidence except Dr. Hilberg and his book, "Destruction of European Jews". And what did he do with Dr. Hilberg's book? He scanned it for inconsistencies. Is that what somebody who is honestly searching after the truth does, or is that what somebody does who is trying to bolster his own position?

In considering whether or not Mr. Zundel {4656|4657} honestly believed in the truth of Exhibit I I'd suggest that you are entitled to consider his evidence here and his other writings and any motives he may have in lying about his belief. And by that I mean, does he have a motive for denying the Holocaust? What's in it for Mr. Zundel to deny the Holocaust? Is it to his advantage to convince others that the Holocaust never happened? I'd suggest he does have several motives for denying the Holocaust. First, he hates Jews. I'd suggest he is a racist. He is a racist who is a determined defamer of the Jewish people. Not nice to say, but I have to say that. You will have in evidence the book, "The Hitler I've Loved & Why" by Christoff Friedrich, it says on the cover, and that is Mr. Zundel, published by White Power Publications. Look at that book. Look at what it says: "We loved him" – the "him" is Hitler – "because he removed our alien dominators and placed them back among their own kind." "Smiling faces in the Warsaw Ghetto. Jews were happy to be back among their own kind and to live according to their own laws." Open it anywhere. "We loved Hitler because he was a white man." "Inflation, the worst in history: Not 'Made in Germany, – Made in Israel! Germany's banks were owned and controlled by Jews." The racial 'enemy's' strategy: Divide and conquer! He tried {4657|4658} to cloak our body politic with 'choices'. Often, we found as many contending parties as there were candidates. Yet, we were one people with one choice to make: Whether to live or die. We chose life. We chose Adolph Hitler!"

He didn't write the copy. That is what he said. He supplied the pictures. He sold the book. He advertised the book. His publication, "Achtung!

Samisdat Truth Squad” – there’s the ad – “The Hitler We Loved & Why”. “This photo documentary tells the true and surprising story of Germany’s Hitler.”

In assessing a man’s honest belief you have to assess his cast of mind. What kind of a man is he?

Mr. Zundel can be a racist himself, privately, all he wants, but when he publishes the material, if it causes damage to a public interest and he knows that it’s false, then it becomes a concern of all of ours, the whole community, the poison spillover. Secondly, I’d suggest he has a motive, because he is a German living in exile from what he considers to be an occupation government. He has nothing but contempt and abuse for the West German government because it is not the government of the people. It had been a legitimate party of the people for twenty years before the occupying forces came in and it is now outlawed. What is that? {4658|4659} National Socialism. National Socialism – Nazis. He looks forward to a new government along the ideals of our fore-fathers, he says. “Forward Germans – the others have begun their retreat!”, he writes. “Everywhere in the world, Anglo-American style capitalism is on the way out. The old unnatural alliance of yesterday seems to be breaking up. New, natural power blocs, such as China, not based on money, tanks or rockets but on the power of work, threaten to put an end to the old “isms”. Germany’s time has come. At last the ideals of our fathers will be realized all over the world.” What ideals are those? “America’s power has come to an end. The Jewish world conspirators find themselves on the defensive and are only capable of noisy rear-guard action. European communism is shaky. There is ferment in Poland, Romania and in the Soviet Union. We will soon get our chance. We must hold our ground, wait for our turn and strike at the right moment. Do not despair! Nature and time are on our side![]”

Is that pacifist writing? I’d suggest to you that he will do or say whatever is necessary to bring about the change in government that he so desperately wants, while living in exile here in Canada, including distributing justice from the barrel of a gun. Momentary anger. Well, {4659|4660} you decide that. You read that over and remember his testimony today – Friday. What is the major stumbling block to the rehabilitation of National Socialism, of the Nazis? What is the major stumbling block? I’d suggest that it’s the Holocaust. So long as the greatest inhumanity man has ever done to man exists as a historical, accepted fact in the mind of man, the Nazis can never be rehabilitated. He must get rid of it. So he publishes this pamphlet replete with lies in order to get rid of it. He studied this, he says, for twenty-five years. He learned at the knee, figuratively-speaking, of Adrien Arcand. He was his protegee through the sixties for nine years, by his own admission. He studied this matter for twenty-five years. How could he not know that the pamphlet was full of falsehoods? And if he makes a little money while he goes about whitewashing the Nazi regime, well, that’s all gravy. Selling combat belt buckles “to symbolise your support for Aryan man”, selling “The Hitler We Loved & Why”, “Allied War Crimes”. Look at this. These are his mailings, the goods he has for sale. This man is not only clever, he is dangerous. Underneath the dimples I suggest is a ruthless and determined man, and briefly, on Thursday and Friday, during his cross-examination, you saw the true man, the mask slipped. {4660|4661}

Did he believe in the truth of Exhibit No. 1? I’d suggest to you he did not. He wanted to hurt his racial enemies, the Jews, and hasten the day when his exile would be over so he could return to Germany, a new Germany, with the ideals of his forefathers.

Just before I deal with the harm to the public, what this pamphlet does, I’d like to speak to you briefly about Exhibit No. 2, “West, War and Islam”. This pamphlet is written by Zundel himself, and the ideas expressed there are clearly his own, and he reveals himself, I would suggest, through them. When you are considering Mr. Zundel’s honest belief on Exhibit No. 1, one of the sources you might want to look at is Exhibit No. 2.

Doug Collins, the journalist from out west, Mr. Zundel’s own witness, testified that the western media has not purposely miseducated, misinformed those of us here in the west to instil hatred against the Islamic peoples. He is an expert witness. He says it is not true. He says it’s also false that Zionists or Jews control western media. He is an expert witness, He’s travelled all over Canada with different media. Mr. Zundel says in one breath that when he refers to “the west”, he is referring to Europe and North America. In the next breath he says, “Well, when I was {4661|4662} talking about the west about media, I really only meant the United States.” Clearly, the CBC is a government-owned national broadcasting system. The BBC in England – government owned. The Globe and Mail. You have evidence that Kenneth Thomson, a newspaper magnate, Canadian, has newspapers all over the world. He is not Jewish. You have evidence of Robert Murdoch, the Australian newspaper tycoon who owns the Chicago Tribune and the London Times. So that’s false. I’d suggest if we were considering Mr. Zundel’s belief in those matters, if we are considering the truth is to accept the evidence of Mr. Collins, the expert witness.

Secret societies. Staff Sergeant Bassett testified, and he told you that the Rotary, the Lions, Kiwanis and the like are not cover organizations for the masons. That’s direct evidence. Even Mr. Zundel admits there is nothing wrong with Canadian masons. So I guess we are no longer in the west, either. There’s no lies, said Staff Sergeant Bassett, no duplicity, no assassination, no Jewish goals or masters. Indeed, judging from Mr. Zundel’s books, there aren’t even any secrets. Staff Sergeant Bassett is criti[c]ized here for not revealing recognition signals and secret handshakes that he swore on oath not to tell. And what did he swear that oath on? He said he swore {4662|4663} it on the Bible. Now, he swore an oath on the Bible. Doesn’t that bind him? Didn’t it bind him? Didn’t you believe him? What value does he place on an oath? Clearly, he places considerable value on an oath. And when giving evidence under oath, doesn’t that make his evidence that much more credible?

International bankers. You recall Mr. Burnett from the Royal Bank. I am not going to read all his testimony. Certainly he indicated that in his experience – he was general counsel for the Royal Bank and wide experience with international matters – Jews do not control international banking. And he certainly had no difficulty in saying that international bankers do not direct international communism. He had something to say about a lot of things, and I am sure you will recall it.

The article is false. Mr. Zundel, with his files – one file for greedy Jews, and one file for vicious Jews and one file for militant Jews – would have you believe that such a clever man as he believes this to be true. Well, maybe his racism extends that far, or perhaps he is trying to make contact with Arab money to further his campaign on the attack on the Holocaust. Look on Exhibit 2. Interesting. The bottom of the third page, “Important books available {4663|4664} from Samisdat. Prices are in U.S. Dollars & include postage”. They are all books about the Holocaust. He is getting his airing with the Arabs, giving him money for his work – making a movie. So much the better. Nothing ventured, nothing gained. What does he care about the Arabs, really? What does he care about the Arabs? They are not Aryans. They will surely play no part in the final victory. How is Aryan man faring on planet earth? What are his prospects for the future? He does not wish to become enslaved or extinct. What can he do? Ernst Zundel points unerringly to the bright sunlight of Aryan victory and shows us what we can do right now to make certain our final victory. Are those pacifist words? They play no part in the final victory of Aryan men except to help finance him in his battles.

Mr. Zundel stated his reason for publishing this tract was that he wanted to bring peace to the troubled mid-East. It will be a lot easier to believe that stated reason for publishing that if the attacks in Exhibit 2 on Jews were not so virulent. Presumably, the Israelis would read his press releases and they might not find them very calming if he was expressing them in the same terms as he was expressing them in Exhibit 2 about International Zionist conspiracies. I wonder if he was wearing his combat belt {4664|4665} buckle when he was sending out those peaceful messages.

Finally, ladies and gentlemen, the final question has to be answered, and that is whether or not these two articles are harmful to a public interest and social and racial tolerance. With respect to Exhibit 2, "West, War and Islam", it's clear, I would suggest. You read it, make up your own mind. But it's clear that the tract is racist in the extreme. It's the treatment of Jews. Anyone reading this article, believing it to be true – and there are statements there presented as the truth – anyone reading it couldn't help but loathe all Jews. How can we tell a good Jew from an evil Zionist? That clue wasn't given in there. In fact, Jews and Zionists are equated. We'd have to be suspicious of Jews in business, in their social life and in the community. You would see in all Jews world destroyers, conspirators bent on our destruction, bent on poverty, war, chaos, revolution. They are the source of all that's evil. Jews, you'd have to find, manipulate us. So all the evils of the world can be laid at their feet. That's the import of that, if we find – you read it – the statements are true ... Doesn't that create intolerance in the community? If such a group actually existed in our society we wouldn't be writing press releases. We wouldn't {4665|4666} tolerate it. We'd drive the Jews relentlessly from our midst. We would even try to annihilate them. That's the impact of that, of public interest – disharmony.

What about "Did Six Million Really Die?" What harm is there in that publication? No bad words used, as Doug Collins says. So where's the harm? Just a discussion of historical events. What are we doing here? It calls all the victims of the Holocaust and all of the survivors liars, cheats and frauds. If Jews lie about this, you cannot trust them about anything. How can you have tolerance for such a deceitful group as is presented in Exhibit No. 1? You would have contempt for someone who would cash in on his birthright, sell his parents off to Russia so he can collect the reparations. That is what you are being told is done here. You could never have tolerance for them. And how would a Jew feel reading this? How would Arnold Friedman, who lost his parents, feel, his brothers and his sisters? How about Henry Leader, how would he feel, the sole survivor of his entire family? Dennis Urstein who saw his own parents arrive and be selected and taken to the gas chamber, how does Dennis Urstein feel reading this? In calling the racist murder by the Nazis of the Jews an invention, the article denies the Jews the inhuman fate which {4666|4667} they have suffered on account of their origin. Such an article spits on the memories of their loved ones and denies them ever again the personal dignity of their grief. The unbelievable sufferings of the remnants of the survivors, the indescribable grief of those who mourn their dead and the memory of the millions, the millions who were brutally done to death demand that the truth of that era shall ever prevail, not to rub it in the faces of modern Germans – this isn't a case between, really, Germans and Jews; it's a case involving all of us. It's to ensure that we, as a civilization, never go down that terrible road again. Above all, for the memory of those who perished, the anguish of those who survived, for the enlightenment of those to come, the attempted falsification of the truth of that tragic era must not be allowed to go unchallenged. Today it's the Jews who are slandered. Well, it could be the Catholics, the Frenchmen, or the blacks, or me. We can't hide our heads and hope the problem of racism and intolerance in our society will go away. We have to meet the challenge squarely. And where, as I would suggest to you, is the case here, all the elements of a criminal charge are proven beyond a reasonable doubt, we have to have the courage to convict.

I ask you to convict Ernst Zundel on both {4667|4668} counts. Thank you.

OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER {4668|1}

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF ONTARIO

BETWEEN:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

- and -

ERNST ZUNDEL

— CHARGE TO THE JURY —

BEFORE: THE HONOURABLE JUDGE H.R. LOCKE.

APPEARANCES:

P. GRIFFITHS, Esq., for the Crown

D. CHRISTIE, Esq., for the accused.

The County Courthouse,
Toronto, Ontario.
February 26 & 27, 1985. {1|2}

CHARGE TO THE JURY

— The jury enters. 2:25 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, in every criminal trial, evidence is the raw material. From it you base your verdict. Evidence comes to you under oath from the witness stand. It further comes to you in the form of exhibits which are sworn to and then admitted into evidence.

As judges of the facts you hear that evidence and you will read the exhibits, if you wish to do so. From that you and you alone decide what, if anything, you will take and make into a fact. That is why you are judges of the facts. The facts form the basis of your verdict.

You have been in the best position to have seen witnesses as they testified, to have watched their demeanour as they testified, and to have listened carefully, as you have, to every word uttered by any witness who stood in the witness stand. In that way, consciously or not, you have been assessing the weight, if any, that you will accord to the evidence of any witness who has testified throughout the whole trial.

You, as judges, may accept all, part or none of what any witness has had to say. In a {2|3} similar fashion it is open to you to accept all, part or none of any exhibit that has been admitted into this trial. Every accused in this country in every criminal trial, in the past, at the present time, and certainly in the future, is entitled as of right to be tried solely and only upon the evidence that has been led in this courtroom or in any other courtroom at the trial of the offence. You must, therefore, banish from your minds any prejudice for or against the accused, or for or against the Crown.

As judges you must approach your duties and your task with a totally open mind and be prepared to render a verdict only upon the evidence you have heard and nothing else. Please banish from your minds anything that you have heard, read or seen anywhere – in the halls of this building, outside the building, through the media or from any other source.

The indictment reads as follows, Count 1:

"ERNST ZUNDEL stands charged that he, during the year 1980, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto {3|4} in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that he knows is false, namely the article 'The West, War and Islam', and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code."

Count 2:

"ERNST ZUNDEL stands further charged that he, in or about the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely "Did Six Million Really Die?" that he knows is false and that is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code."

There has been reference to the "Did Six Million Really Die?" as count number one, {4|5} and "The West, War and Islam" as count number two. To save much time and words, regardless of how I read them, I intend to refer to "Did Six Million Really Die?" as count number one, and "The West, War and Islam" as number two, because that is the way they came in as exhibits. To constantly harp back to the difference would take up too much time.

The word "indictment" sounds imposing. It should not. An indictment is a piece of paper upon which is written in plain English the charges that Mr. Zundel faces. The word "count" is just another word for a charge, and they are interchangeable. I am the judge of the law. You must accept the law as I give it to you. My duty is to instruct you as to the law. As I said before, I will do the very best I can to help you to apply the law to the facts as you shall find them. If I am wrong in what I say to you or fail to say to you now, rest assured that I can be quickly corrected elsewhere.

When you retire to your jury room please select from your number someone who will chair your deliberations, ask any questions that you may have of the court, and announce your verdict when that time {5|6} arrives. Please also consider the totality of what I say to you now, resist the temptation to zero in on a certain portion of what I am saying.

After you have retired to consider your verdict I will call upon counsel to make comment on what I am saying to you now, or on what I inadvertently may have left out of this charge. Depending on the view that I take of what I hear, I may have to call you back to correct something I inadvertently said, or to add something, that I inadvertently did not say. In the result, you can see the importance of considering everything I say, and not just part.

I am entitled, if I wish to do so, to make comment upon the evidence that has been led here. You have already heard from each counsel, both for the Crown and for the defence, as to the view that each suggests you take of the evidence that you have heard. In a similar fashion, I have the same right if I choose to exercise it.

Let me say this to you, however. If what you heard from either counsel for the accused or counsel for the Crown in their respective closing addresses is acceptable to you, then you are perfectly {6|7} free to accept it and to act upon it. You are equally free to reject all or part of what each of counsel for the accused and for the Crown has said to you. In a similar fashion, exactly the same thing applies to me. You may accept my views of the evidence as to what I say about it or not as you shall decide.

If you should disagree with what counsel have said to you or with what I may say to you concerning the evidence, then not only do you have a perfect right to disagree, indeed you are duty bound to follow your own view of the evidence, not mine and not counsel's.

You are in great reality the supreme judges of the facts. I am not a judge of the facts and counsel are not. You are. You have each been very attentive over the last seven weeks to the evidence that has been led.

Members of the jury, under no circumstances are you, as jurors, permitted to consider the question of punishment or sentence in the event of a conviction. That matter is not within the realm of your responsibility. You must not consider that at all. Your responsibility, according to the oath that you have {7|8} each taken, is to render a verdict on the evidence that you heard in this courtroom concerning the two charges that Mr. Zundel faces.

Your verdict must be an individual verdict. In order to return a verdict it is necessary that each of the twelve of you agree to that verdict. You do have the right to disagree. I should say to you that it is the hope of all here present that you do not disagree.

In all criminal cases, including this case, the accused is presumed to be innocent until the Crown has proven him guilty on each count. It is not for the accused to prove innocence. It is for the Crown to prove guilt.

The burden is upon the Crown to prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. That burden starts at the beginning of the trial. It remains throughout the whole of the trial. That burden never shifts away from the Crown. It remains upon the Crown from the beginning until the end of the trial.

If the Crown fails to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, or if there is a reasonable doubt about that, then you are obliged, as a matter of {8|9} law, to return a verdict of not guilty with respect to either or both counts as you shall decide.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt, members of the jury, does not mean proof beyond any possible or imaginary doubt. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is when each one of you, as jurors, is assured of the guilt of the accused upon the evidence that you have heard. It is that degree of proof which convinces each one of you that the Crown has satisfied your conscience, and as conscientious [sic] jurors you each feel duty bound to act upon it.

Let me say that again. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond any possible or imaginary doubt. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is when each of you, as jurors, feels assured of the guilt of the accused according to the evidence that you each have heard. It is that degree of proof which convinces each of you that the Crown has satisfied your conscience, and as conscientious [sic] jurors you feel duty bound to act upon it.

In the course of your deliberations you will be reviewing evidence; you will be discussing the evidence. In that process, consciously or not, you {9|10} will be drawing inferences. An inference is the same thing as a deduction. Those two words are interchangeable. You may draw an inference from the evidence that you have heard or make a deduction, if you will agree to do so. If, on all the facts, you agree, then you can make that inference, draw the deduction, or the other way around.

On the other hand, if it is not an agreed inference among all of you or each of you, then you do not draw the inference, you do not make the deduction; you go on to consider the other evidence that has been led throughout the whole of the trial. That is the method by which most human beings go about making decisions on what they have heard under oath. I am sure that is what you will follow.

In this case, as in most criminal cases, the Crown is obliged to prove, again beyond a reasonable doubt, an important ingredient known as intent. The Latin for "intent" is "mens rea". When that is translated back into English it means simply a guilty mind. That is the simple English meaning.

The Crown must prove that in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial {10|11} District of York, in or about the year 1981, Ernst Zundel, the accused, with that guilty mind amounting to a crime, published the two articles: Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam".

If the Crown has failed to prove that intent on the evidence you have heard, or if there is any reasonable doubt about that, then you will please return a verdict of not guilty at that very moment. That will be so because you will have found that the Crown has failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt, the standard that I have given, that criminal intent. If you find a reasonable doubt, you will still return that verdict about either or both counts, as you shall decide.

It is quite impossible to cut off the top of a person's head to peer inside to see what, if any, intent existed at the time. That cannot be done. It is, therefore, a matter of necessity that you have regard to all of the surrounding evidence and circumstances that you have heard over the last seven weeks in order to conclude whether or not that intent existed. That is the method by which you are obliged to proceed. {11|12}

You may proceed, if I can be of assistance to you, on an inference of common sense. That inference is this: What a person does is usually what that person intends. A person intends, usually, the natural consequences of his or her acts. When you are weighing the evidence, I respectfully suggest to you that you bear that common sense inference in mind, when you apply it to all of the evidence and when you consider all of the evidence, as I am sure you will.

I repeat that you may believe everything a witness has said. You may totally disbelieve everything a witness has said. You may accept parts of what a witness says and reject others. That is within your jurisdiction; it is within your power. That is really how one goes about arriving at a verdict.

When you are discussing the evidence of any witness, please bear in mind that small discrepancies appear in testimony. They are unimportant usually. Falsehoods, of course, are very, very serious. Here are but some questions that you might ask yourselves during the course of your deliberations:

Did the witness have a full opportunity of learning the truth in the circumstances as the witness {12|13} testified?

Does the witness have a motive or a reason for favouring one side or the other?

Does the witness have an interest in the outcome of this case?

What is the state of memory of the witness?

What is your view of the demeanour and the way the witness testified?

One of the counsel pointed out, quite correctly, that in this country, every day, we all have to make decisions. We make them at home; we make them in the car; we make them at the office; we make them on a host of subjects. Those decisions are based on common sense. If they were not, you would not be here. All you are asked to do, members of the jury, in this case, is to use your God-given common sense and to apply it to the evidence that you have heard throughout the whole of this case.

The two charges that face Mr. Zundel are contained in the Criminal Code. The Criminal Code is a statute passed by the Parliament of Canada. It codifies our criminal law. That Code applies to every {13|14} citizen in this country, every person in this country from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Certainly it applies in this Province.

Section 177 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

"Everyone who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence".

You should know, members of the jury, that this offence is placed in the Criminal Code right after s.176. Section 176 is the first section that covers people who are charged with being a common nuisance. That is where s. 177 resides on the hierarchy of crime as contained in the Criminal Code.

The Canadian Parliament placed that section in the Criminal Code for a reason. The purpose is to discourage those who deliberately and intentionally disseminate, by publishing, false news or statements into the community at large, thereby intending the actual or the likely result of creating community unrest. {14|15}

The Canadian community daily abounds with rumours, stories and gossip of every conceivable stripe. Some is based on fact; some is not. From a multitude of sources there comes a daily avalanche of stories, opinions, rumours, pure gossip, learned fact, some true and some less so. This has occurred for so long and with such repetition that almost automatically most pass unnoticed and unchallenged in our free society.

There comes a rare occasion, however, when the criminal justice system in Canada examines what has been written or said. The purpose is to investigate whether what has been published amounts to a crime against the community as a whole according to the Criminal Code. That, members of the jury, is why you are here.

There is nothing in the wording of s.177 that I perceive that in any way prohibits freedom of speech. That section, as I view it, is not intended to prohibit either back-fence gossip about who did what and with whom, or to stifle vigorous dissent on legitimate issues on the affairs of Canadian citizens who strive to improve the quality of life in an imperfect world.

On the other hand, the law recognizes {15|16} that nobody has the unbridled right to say anything one feels like saying and put it under the heading of free speech. No one, for example, has the right to yell, "Fire", in a crowded movie theatre when there is no fire.

This section, quite properly, is designed to eliminate from the Canadian community the evil of false statements and news published for the purpose of creating mischief in the form of social unrest stirred up by racial intolerance. This section seeks to avoid acts or publications which create community unrest that are held to be so by juries of this country as you are.

The Crown must prove a number of elements. All must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. There is no burden on the accused to prove a thing. The burden of proof remains upon the Crown from the beginning to the end of the trial. If, at the end of the evidence, the addresses of counsel and my charge you each conclude that the Crown has failed to prove each element that it must prove, which I will mention in a moment, or if you are left in reasonable doubt, then you must return a verdict of not guilty with {16|17} respect to either or both counts in this indictment.

On the other hand, if after you have considered the total evidence, the addresses of counsel and my charge, you conclude that the Crown has proven the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, you may return a verdict of guilty to either or both of the two counts, again as you each shall decide.

Primarily, the Crown must prove that Ernst Zundel published "The West, War and Islam", and "Did Six Million Really Die?". Secondly, the Crown must prove that the contents of each of the two exhibits, in their essentials, are false – that is to say, essentially untrue.

The Crown must further prove that the accused wilfully published each exhibit, if you find that he did, and that at the time he published, he knew the essential contents of each to be false – that is to say, essentially untrue.

To reach a verdict with respect to each count you must carefully examine all of the evidence and apply that evidence separately as you shall decide to each of the two counts.

To publish is to announce. To {17|18} publish is to print and offer for sale, especially in the form of a book, magazine, article or essay. To publish is to make something known for all to see.

Mr. Zundel, through counsel, has admitted that he published Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?". He has admitted writing "The West, War and Islam". He has not specifically admitted publishing "The West, War and Islam". You will decide whether or not the Crown has proven that he did.

While it is for you and no one else to say, it seems to me that you should have little difficulty in finding that Mr. Zundel published both exhibits. That is especially so when you consider the evidence, as I recall it – and it is your recall, members of the jury, and not mine, that is all important – as I recall the evidence Mr. Zundel admitted that he published or that he wrote and sent about twelve hundred copies of "The West, War and Islam" to the Middle East.

In your perusal of that document, if you will look at the bottom, you will see what appears to me, at least, to be a solicitation for money, the offer for sale of other writings, a signature which purports to be Ernst Zundel, and an address, "Samisdat {18|19} Publishers Ltd., 206 Carlton Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada", and a telephone number.

The Crown, however, must prove that. If you find that the Crown has not proved that publication of "The West, War and Islam", then at that very point you return a verdict of not guilty, because the Crown will have failed to prove the first leg of the requirement.

The Crown must prove the wilful publication of each exhibit. To publish something wilfully is to publish it freely, voluntarily, intending the result of one's intentional design. A wilful act of publishing, in the criminal sense, may be described as making something known intentionally, knowingly and purposely without justification or excuse.

The wilful act of doing something is distinguished from an act done carelessly [sic], thoughtlessly or accidentally. The Criminal Code has something to say about the word "wilfully". I will read s.386, in part:

"Everyone who causes the occurrence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his {19|20} duty to do, knowing that the act or omission will probably cause the occurrence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Part, wilfully to have caused the occurrence of the event."

I will read that again:

"Everyone who causes the occurrence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his duty to do, knowing that the act the or omission will probably cause occurrence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Part, wilfully to have caused the occurrence of the event."

A wilful act, members of the jury, is done by design without regard for the rights of others, in a reckless manner, with a disregard for the consequences, and with indifference to the natural and {20|21} probably consequences.

The word "mischief" has long been used in our law. Mischief is something meaning an evil or a danger to the general community. Mischief is a harm or an injury. Mischief is something which is designed to cause annoyance or distress to others.

The Crown represents the total community at large. The Crown does not represent one segment of the community. Mr. Griffiths, in his capacity as Crown counsel here does not represent one group; he represents the total community in the same way that a counsel for the accused represents the accused and is duty-bound, as an officer of this Court, to ensure that the accused obtains a fair trial according to law.

To tolerate means to put up with, to permit, to let be without interference. Tolerance is a willingness to bear with others, especially with those whose views differ from one's own. "To tolerate" is "to forbear".

When the indictment accompanies you to your jury room you will see that the last two lines of it read as follows:

"... and the said article is likely {21|22} to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code."

On the total evidence led throughout the whole of the trial from the beginning to the end, you each must be satisfied that the Crown has proven that the actual result, or the likely or probably result, either one but not both, of each publication is community unrest stirred up by racial intolerance on the part of some segments of the community at large.

Again, when I refer to the community at large, I mean the Canadian community at large containing people of all racial and religious persuasions.

It is not sufficient that either or both Exhibits 1 and 2 be merely ill-advised, stupid, in bad taste, bigoted or disagreeable. The Crown must prove on the evidence led throughout the whole trial that Mr. Zundel, at the time he published either or both of the two exhibits, did not have an honest belief in the essential truth of each.

I hasten to point out, members of the jury, that because a person says that he or she {22|23} possessed an honest belief in the truth of something does not necessarily make it so. Regard must be had by each of you, as jurors in this case, to what really, if anything, formed the basis of the honest belief of the essential parts of each exhibit, on the evidence that has been heard, that Mr. Zundel said he had.

This trial has consumed seven weeks. Before I proceed to indicate part of what this trial had to say in seven weeks, I think it is time you had an adjournment. Ten minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:00 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:30 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, as I was about to say just prior to the break, this trial has consumed seven weeks. In that time you have heard questions put and answers given by witnesses concerning the circumstances of how prisoners were transported to concentration camps. {23|24}

There has been much evidence on the daily life as it was seen by some who were there in those camps. You have heard questions and answers concerning the location and the number of crematoria chimneys, the existence and location in certain camps of gas chambers, whether they existed at all, and whether they were used to delouse clothing or to kill people, or both.

There has been evidence as to the location and the use put to rail sidings at Auschwitz Birkenau. You have heard evidence concerning the regularity of the arrival of trains, whether they carried prisoners, how many prisoners they carried.

There has been evidence concerning the selection process, if one existed, of those people who were taken from the trains, what happened to their possessions and clothing, what happened to the people themselves.

The type of smoke, if any, emanating from crematoria chimneys, its smell, its density has been the subject of much evidence. You have heard evidence concerning the use of hydrogen cyanide, known as Zyklon-B gas, and whether it was employed to kill {24|25} people or to delouse clothing and at what camps that occurred.

You have heard evidence concerning the existence of Einsatzgruppen, said to have been German S.S. units sent out into the field in regiments or battalions to kill people as the German Army advanced easterly into Russia.

Whether a verbal or written order ever existed, and if it did, was it ever given by Hitler, Himmler or some other high Nazi official to exterminate Jews has been the subject of much comment in the evidence.

You have heard questions put and answers given to all of these subjects and others that I do not repeat here. Please, for the moment, put aside the mountain of evidence that you have heard on these and other subjects. Focus your attention, if you will, for a moment on one or two truths about criminal trials in Canada.

A criminal trial is merely an investigation conducted according to certain fixed rules. The object is to decide whether or not the {25|26} accused, charged with certain specific offences, has been proven guilty by the Crown in any criminal case to have committed some, all or none of the offences with which an accused person stands charged.

I do not make those rules. I have the sworn obligation, however, to enforce them. Those rules have been created by our Parliament and by our common law over literally hundreds of years. Society protects itself in that way.

The rules of trial include the Crown being required to lead evidence to prove guilt of an accused. The same rules provide the defence with an opportunity to test the strength of the Crown's case through cross-examination. The defence has the right to call witnesses, if it decides to do so. All of these things have come to pass in this trial.

From the evidence tested by cross-examination each of you, as jurors, will find facts upon which your verdict will be based. Freedom of speech is not an issue that you are asked to decide in this trial. Our criminal courts do not exist for the purpose of conducting philosophical debates on how Canadians should be educated, what subjects should be {26|27} taught or not taught in our schools. These matters are decided in Parliament: they are decided in provincial legislatures, and they are decided by various provincial school boards.

Criminal trials are not platforms for the purpose of spreading the gospel which one side or the other holds dear to its heart. Your duty, members of the jury, is to decide whether or not, on all of the evidence that you have heard, Mr. Zundel wilfully published false statements knowing them to be false [sic] when he published them, if you find that he did.

There is evidence from witnesses who related how they, themselves, at least through their own eyes, were prosecuted and hounded by authorities in the United States, and perhaps elsewhere. This is not relevant to whether Mr. Zundel has been proven guilty of mischief for the reasons that I have just set out.

A witness testified of having been relieved of a teaching position in another province in Canada. Yet another witness who teaches feels frustrated by reason of being unable, or not being {27|28} permitted to teach from a book seized by the Minister of National Revenue for Canada.

Undoubtedly, those persons feel themselves legitimately aggrieved. That type of evidence is of little assistance to you, however, in deciding the issues that the Crown must prove here. Whether a witness likes or dislikes a trial being conducted is an opinion that any person in a democratic country has the right to say. It is, however, of little assistance when it comes right down to whether or not the Crown has discharged the burden of proof incumbent upon it in a case such as this.

A gentleman came here and related an experience of how he came to be a prisoner-of-war when, in the German Armed Forces, he was captured and sent to Canada after the outbreak of War in 1939.

This trial does not concern itself with what occurred to serving servicemen who were captured by the enemy in World War II on either side. This trial relates to what, if anything, happened to Jewish civilians who,

it is said, were rounded up, placed on trains and transported to concentration camps in Europe during World War II. {28|29}

While it is for you, members of the jury, it seems to me that the basic issues regarding both of these exhibits are clear:

Upon the total evidence led in this trial, are you each satisfied that the evidence discloses that Mr. Zundel published both exhibits; if he did, when he did so, he did it in a wilful manner as I have defined that word; and that he had, at the time he published, no honest belief in the essential truth of each.

If you conclude that the answer to any of these questions is no, or if you are left in any reasonable doubt concerning any of those questions, you will return a verdict of not guilty to either or both counts as you shall decide.

If, however, you conclude that the Crown has proven on the total evidence that the answer is yes to those questions, then you must go on to decide whether or not, on the same standard of proof, on the total evidence led, you are each satisfied that either or both exhibits would likely produce mischief in the form of racial intolerance in the Canadian community. {29|30}

You may conclude, if you decide to do so, that such mischief was likely, even if it did not come to pass. That is so because the section contains the word "likely".

The Crown is not required to prove that each and every portion of each statement made and published in each exhibit is false. The Crown need only prove that the essential elements of each are false.

The Crown is not required to prove that the danger to community unrest did, in fact, occur. However, the Crown is indeed required to prove, on the same standard, on the total evidence called, that such a danger would be likely, or the probable result.

I turn now to the issue of falsity. Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", contains thirty pages of the printed word. While it is for you to say and no one else, it seems to me that the introduction on page 4, and the paragraph under the heading, "Imaginary Slaughter", on page 26, summarize what is contained in the words and pictures within the other twenty some odd pages. {30|31}

Those two paragraphs read as follows:

"In the following chapters the author has, he believes, brought together irrefutable evidence that the allegation that 6 million Jews died during the Second World War, as a direct result of official German policy of extermination, is utterly unfounded."

And the next sentence:

"A great deal of careful research into this question, however, has now convinced me beyond any doubt that the allegation is not merely an exaggeration but an invention of post-war propaganda."

Again, it is for you and no one else to say, but it seems to me that the basic core of Exhibit 1 is that six million Jews did not die in the Second World War as a direct result of official German policy of extermination.

The exhibit goes on to say that the {31|32} intended extermination of Jews is an unfounded myth;

it is a brazen lie propagated by Zionists in order to collect money from Germany by way of compensation. The contents of the exhibit, if you agree, make it open to you to come to the conclusion that there was no Nazi German policy to exterminate the Jews of Europe; the myth of the dead six million is the creation of Jewish Zionists and others led at one time by one Goldman and one Ben Gurion in order to extract money in false compensation claims from the alleged victims, all from Germany.

Exhibit No. 2, "The West, War and Islam" contains the following paragraphs:

Under the heading of "The International Zionists":

"The leadership of the West is heavily influenced and often dominated by a small minority of this alien political persuasion. Political and religious Zionism play a disproportionately large role in the West because of Zionists' domination of the mass media of information, {32|33} education and entertainment, the banking system, the secret societies and the world communist conspiracy. Zionists are aided and abetted by millions of brainwashed Christians who suffer from the previously mentioned distortions about the Islamic World and its peoples, whom they believe mistakenly to be 'bad'."

"Ever since 1945, the Zionists and their hirelings have used this self-serving myth as a tool for the deception of the Western Christian masses."

Under the heading of "The International Secret Societies":

"Unknown to most people of the Islamic World is the tremendous power and influence exercised by Freemasonry and all its cover organizations like the Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions, etc. Most Western decision-makers, {33|34} politicians, economists and military officers are either members of a secret society or are dominated by such members. Any educated Moslem can recognise immediately the identity of Freemasonry with that of its secretive organisational predecessor, the Assassins. This is the same Satanic structure which we detect in Freemasonry: lies, secrecy, duplicity, infiltration and where necessary, assassination. That most Freemasons are unaware of the directors and direction of their secret organisation does not preclude their blind, unthinking support of this organisation and their obedience to its directives. The orientation and rituals of these secret societies of the West come directly from the Kabbala of the Babylonian Talmud. Their content is Jewish, their goals are Jewish and {34|35} their masters are Jewish. This explains the consistent support of Freemasonry for the goals and machinations of international Jewry, which also explains the Freemasons' consistent role in directing the advance of world crime, corruption, poverty, war, revolution, collapse and chaos from their high-ranking positions in the Western political, economic and military establishments. On behalf of the Zionists, the Gentile members of these secret societies have spread these plagues not only in the West, but throughout the entire world in which Western influence exists."

"The International Bankers":

"These men are the focal point for the dark forces arrayed against all mankind, for their control of the world's wealth directs and determines largely what is done or not done in {35|36} the world and whether what is done is good or evil. Judging from the state of the world today, there can be no doubt what these evil men are doing with the vast wealth we have put at their disposal. While the world bankers act in perfect harmony with the Talmud, they act in perfect defiance of the Koran, for their wealth is based on usury and thereby is acquired without honest, productive work. The Islamic nations are vulnerable to blackmail by the bankers who can devalue the money derived from oil earnings with the stroke of a pen, and who can bribe and browbeat governments into freezing or seizing Islamic assets. But the foremost evil concocted and directed by "the international bankers is international communism."

Members of the jury, you will have {36|37} in your possession copies of Exhibit 1 and 2. Those portions that I have read seem to me to catch the substance of the contents and the message of each. That is, of course, for you to say and not for me.

The total evidence in this trial contains two divisions: The larger one relates to count one, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and the smaller one relates to "The West, War and Islam".

Both of these divisions include the evidence of witnesses who testified in person. Both include evidence of documents, photographs, maps, sketches, complete books and reports from books, and other evidence that I have not and do not intend to mention.

Whether testimony or evidence comes to you via the written word or the spoken word of a witness who testifies in person, you must treat all of that evidence just the same. Always remember that you may accept all, part or none of it, as you decide.

Trials usually concern themselves with the testimony of witnesses who stand in the witness box, are examined and then cross-examined under oath. Each relates what he heard, saw, smelled, or felt by {37|38} one or more of the human senses of sight, smell, touch and hearing. Their testimony, if you accept it, tends to prove a fact in issue in a direct manner.

In this trial much of this type of evidence has been called. The testimony of Mr. Friedman, Dr. Vrba, Ignaz Fulop, Chester Tomaszewski, [Tomaszewski] Mr. Urstein, Mr. Christopherson, Dr. Lindsey the the [sic] accused himself are all but examples of evidence coming from witnesses who testified in person. Their evidence succeeds or not on the basis of what each said in the witness stand under oath.

Other witnesses introduced evidence in the form of the printed word. The contents of documents are now exhibits. They include, again, books, maps, photographs, sketches of many kinds. The subjects contained in those exhibits are all part of one or more issues that you will be asked to decide.

The paper exhibits, to varying degrees, concern themselves with the truth or the falsity of the contents of Exhibits 1 and 2. The way that each one of you, as jurors, however, proceeds to go about considering the contents of those exhibits is vitally important. I will return to that subject in a {38|39} moment. In the meantime let me, if I may, say a word about Exhibit No. 2, "The West, War and Islam".

Mr. Burnett swore that he was and is a banker. There is evidence in Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam", which makes reference to Masons and bankers. Each witness who testified in regard to count two gave evidence dealing with Masons and bankers, the objective of Masonry and the objectives of the banking business, the principles and objectives of each.

That evidence concerns whether or not Masons and bankers are Assassins and conspirators with Jewish Zionists, bent on destroying or enslaving Islamic peoples of this world. That evidence is before you. I am sure that you will consider it and examine it. It seems to me that you should have little difficulty with it.

Your duty is to decide whether or not, with respect to count number two, the accused published "The West, War and Islam". If you find that he did not, or if you are left in reasonable doubt, you will please acquit him on count number two. If you find that the Crown has proven that he did, you will {39|40} then go on to decide whether or not the contents of Exhibit 2 are essentially false as proven by the Crown; and then, if you find the accused published "The West, War and Islam", whether he knew at the time that he did so that its contents were false and that he wilfully published it with that knowledge.

The Crown must also prove, on all of the evidence, that the contents of "The West, War and Islam" would likely result in mischief to the community as I have already described that term.

Members of the jury, when I use the word "likely" in relation to counts one and two, I mean, in all probability. "Likely" means just that – in all probability.

On Thursday last, as I recall it, Mr. Zundel testified on his own behalf. Let me say at this point that you should treat the evidence of Mr. Zundel no differently than you treat the evidence of any other witness who testified throughout the whole of this trial. You can accept all, part or none of what any witness says who testified in the whole trial. That includes the evidence given by the accused. You can believe everything a witness says, part of what a {40|41} witness says, none of what a witness says.

In that regard there has been some evidence given by the accused himself that he was charged with some type of an offence in Germany. There is evidence that he was not convicted of that charge. In fact, as I recall his evidence, he indicated that that charge was not proceeded with.

You will please totally ignore the fact that he was charged. Certainly somebody being charged with something is no evidence at all. You will please ignore it and in no way directly or indirectly hold the fact that he was charged in any way against the interests of this accused.

You have heard evidence from other witnesses such as Mr. Felderer, as I recall the evidence – again, it is your recall and not mine – and Mr. Christopherson that each had sustained certain convictions not in this country.

Members of the jury, you can employ that evidence solely and only to weigh and test the credibility that you accord, if any, that you will give to the evidence of Mr. Felderer and Mr. Christopherson. That evidence of their convictions is to be employed by {41|42} you for that purpose and for that purpose only.

With respect to Mr. Zundel's testimony, as I recall his evidence he said that he has done some research on Freemasonry, but that subject was somewhat peripheral with him. He said it was something of a hobby of his, in the same way as flying saucers was a hobby of his. It became a hobby.

He wrote about it when he became angry at seeing an advertisement in the German newspaper picturing a cartoon in the likeness of Hitler, Von Robbentrop [Ribbentrop], Hitler's Foreign Minister, Yasser Arafat and Neville Chamberlain, a Prime Minister of Great Britain.

They were pictured in a stance in an anti-war message which referred to six million Jews in the hope, in essence, that Europe would not be dragged into another tragic war by reason of American intervention, with America being obliged to, in the words as I understood them of Mr. Zundel, of having to face the dangers of war in the Middle East alone.

Mr. Zundel became angered by that advertisement that he said was inserted in German newspapers by four German Freemasons who were named and {42|43} who, as I recall the evidence, were also Jewish, saying it was unfair to compare Arafat to Hitler. The accused therefore decided to inform certain Arabs and Moslems in the Far East about the other side of the matter.

He mailed Exhibit 2, as he said, to about a thousand or twelve hundred people in the Middle East, including Pakistan. He then, as I understood his evidence, took the position that he considered himself sufficiently important that he really thought he could diffuse what he referred to as an inflamed political situation in the Middle East. His words, as I recorded them, were, "If they would help me financially, I was willing to be a vehicle for this."

Mr. Zundel said that he thought the world was drifting towards war in the Middle East. He thought those in the Middle East were getting only the Zionist side from German newspapers and German Masons who put the advertisement in the German newspapers. He thought that uninitiated readers could not really comprehend what was going on.

In the result, he wrote Exhibit 2. He wrote it quickly. He had to use sparse language due to airmail restrictions. He then said that Europe has a {43|44} long tradition of writing about the world of Masons. That is how Exhibit 2 came into existence.

Members of the jury, following the definition I have given you of "publishing", as I say, you should have little difficulty in finding that Mr. Zundel published Exhibit No. 2.

Mr. Zundel then proceeded to identify a number of books, periodicals and other writings upon which he said he based his belief that what he wrote about in Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam", was an honest writing. He referred to a number of books.

Among those referred to by Mr. Christie to the accused was a book on Freemasonry as it concerns the Vatican. You will find as an exhibit a Masonic medal. There is the book on the subject of how Jews controlled the media. By that he meant the ownership of such American newspapers based in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. He identified a book that states that the Catholics are not allowed by their Church to join, to become Masons. He then identified other writings to the effect that Masons are linked to Satan, communism, and how certain Freemasons promote communism. {44|45}

He has compiled a file on Freemasonry from books, magazines that he has collected over the years, including transcripts of talks from the British Broadcasting Corporation. He said that these books show that bankers in the United States helped finance the Russian revolution.

Another book he has read convinced him that one can even buy justice. By that I took it that one can even bribe judges.

He said bankers are congenial people, they co-operate with one another all over the world; without Western money the Bolshevik Revolution could never have proceeded.

He testified regarding Exhibit 2. He gave his own views on how bankers in the West, including Canadian bankers, as I understood, conspired with Jews and Zionists to put down Islamic people and the Arab world.

On the other hand, members of the jury, let me say this. All of the contents of the books and periodicals that he identified, you must not take those books and periodicals and the content thereof as proof of the truth of their content. You did not hear {45|46} that evidence for that purpose. That evidence, all these last approximate hundred exhibits, was led, and you were permitted to hear it and to consult it in your jury room if you wish to do so, so that you will be in a better position to give to the direct evidence that the accused gave concerning his honest belief in what he has read the weight, if any, that you feel should be accorded to his belief.

The Crown must prove, on the total evidence, that Mr. Zundel had no honest belief in the truth of the contents of Exhibit 2. The weight that you accord the evidence pertaining to the honest belief, if any, that you find existed is important. It is a vital issue you must decide. Therefore, the basis of that belief are these various reference books and the writings of other authors that have been referred to.

Remember, please, that there is no burden on the accused to prove anything. The Crown has to prove that he did not have an honest belief in the content of Exhibit 2 and, indeed, the contents of Exhibit No. 1. It is for you to decide on the total evidence whether Mr. Zundel wilfully published Exhibit 2 knowing the essential-truth of it to be false at the {46|47} time he published it, if you find that he did.

The bulk of the evidence called over the past weeks relates to Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?". You should have no difficulty in concluding that the six million referred to Jews, in the main, who lived in Europe [sic] between 1933 and 1945. The place in which the question of their death occurred is all across Europe, from the English channel to Poland and south to the Turkish border. The time period is really between the years 1939 to 1945. The event is World War II.

At the risk of being repetitious, remind you that you must treat the evidence of expert witnesses no differently than you would treat the evidence of an ordinary witness. You may accept all, part or none of what any witness, including experts, have had to say in this trial.

A number of expert witnesses testified. One was a psychiatrist; one was a chemist; several were writers. Dr. Hilberg and Dr. Faurisson were qualified to give their opinions as historians. Those witnesses gave by far the largest volume of evidence of all of the experts. That is so because the issue of the proof {47|48} of the truth or the falsity of Exhibit No. 1 involves an event of history.

Most trials hear expert testimony on narrow subjects related in the main to other issues in those trials. For example, one who examines firearms and ballistics involving bullets and the like is permitted to give his or her opinion as to whether certain bullets came from a certain gun.

In this trial, however, the broad issue is not really scientific in nature. It involves an event of World War II. Consequently, historians were only permitted to testify and give their opinions within the borders of their expertise in respect of that field of history.

I remind you again that the opinions of experts are only opinions. You may accept all, part or none of those opinion's as you shall decide.

You have heard opinions on a number of subjects including the number of Jewish prisoners actually killed by different methods in all Nazi camps, whether or not gas chambers were used to do some of it, none of it or a lot of it, whether typhus or other diseases constituted the main cause of death rather than {48|49} other causes, whether victims were deliberately starved to death, worked to death by conscious Nazi German policy decision, whether they were hanged, shot, exposed to the elements and left to die, tortured, or none of these things, or whether the strain of Allied bombardment on two fronts near the end of the War prevented adequate service to prisoners, and whether that was made to appear a deliberate policy of genocide propaganda.

In great detail, Dr. Hilberg and Dr. Faurisson gave their experiences in respect to certain authors, historian writers and other persons on the subject of the Holocaust, genocide, and what occurred, if anything, in the prison camps in particular.

Each was examined and cross-examined as to what particular camp, in his opinion, was or was not an extermination camp or merely a holding camp, a working camp or a transit camp. Each was examined and cross-examined upon the fairness of various trials that occurred involving accused Nazi war criminals at Nuremberg, and at other trials involving the lesser Nazis at the same location on different occasions.

Dr. Hilberg and Dr. Faurisson, and {49|50} indeed a number of other witnesses who testified at this trial, were questioned about the mental stability of certain Nazi war criminals including one Hoess, one Frank, the Nazi Governor-General of Poland during the War, one Gerstein, and others. The personal diary of Frank became the subject of much cross-examination. Both Dr. Hilberg and Dr. Faurisson gave their respective opinions on these subjects and on many other subjects that I do not intend to repeat here.

Members of the jury, let me make it clear to you that as jurors you are not required to decide anything about the truth regarding what occurred at the trial of Nazis forty years ago at Nuremberg. You are not bound, nor are you asked to decide, whether the Nuremberg trials were fair or unfair, or whether the Nuremberg American trials were fair or unfair. Neither are you required nor should you decide the issues in this case on the basis of what authors of books or any other witness who testified here thought about any of these subjects.

You are, however, being asked to assess the weight, if any, that you will give to the opinions of such witnesses who testified at this trial, {50|51} including Dr. Hilberg, Dr. Faurisson, Dr. Lindsey, Dr. Barton. To a large extent, each based his opinion on what occurred at Nuremberg and elsewhere on the basis of documents and on the basis of information contained within the confines of books that have been written on these subjects since 1945, and even before that.

All of the questions put to these witnesses as experts on the many subjects that I have mentioned, which themselves do not directly involve the issues in this trial, were put to those witnesses so that you, as jurors, would be in a better position to decide the weight, if any, that you will accord to the evidence of those experts who testified; because it is all of these books and periodicals and information, the acquired knowledge of the experts which forms the basis, if any, that you will decide exists to give or not give a great deal of credibility, some credibility or no credibility at all.

When this trial commenced, at the request of counsel – a normal request of counsel, I might add – I made an order that all witnesses for both Crown and the defence be excluded from the Court. {51|52} That order included that those persons excluded not speak to one another concerning their evidence until after all had testified and each had testified at this trial.

Such an order is commonly made on a regular basis in our courts. The object is to ensure, if possible, that witnesses do not get together with one another and tailor their testimony to be given to what has already gone on in the courtroom by way of evidence. If that occurs, distortions could result.

You should be aware that counsel for the accused elected to have Dr. Faurisson remain in court throughout most of the evidence of the Crown's case and before Dr. Faurisson himself testified as a witness on behalf of the defence. Mr. Tiudal, Mr. Rudolf [Tiudar Rudolph], Mr. Felderer and Mr. Newmann [Neumann], the accused's secretary, all remained in the courtroom, as I understood their evidence, for varying periods of time during the course of Crown's case and before each testified as a witness on behalf of the defence.

By reason of that having occurred, it is open to you to take into consideration the fact that these witnesses remained in court in these circumstances, {52|53} if you wish to do so. It is up to you to decide what, if any, weight you will accord the evidence of these witnesses. You will decide whether or not their having remained in the courtroom affects the credibility of each or not by reason of that order having been breached.

In that process you will please consider the explanation, if any, that was offered by each when that subject was canvassed, if you find that it was, during the examination in-chief or the cross-examination.

Members of the jury, when you retire to consider your verdict and to consider the evidence you might well ask, where does one begin. To answer that question, please consider asking yourselves another question. That question is, "What is this trial really all about?"

To be of assistance in that regard, and only to be of assistance, it is always for you to say and no one else, it would seem to me that this trial is about an event which is said to have occurred during World War II which a number of people refer to as the Holocaust.

The Crown's position on the evidence is that the Holocaust occurred by reason of Nazi Germany {53|54} having deliberately embarked upon a plan to slaughter the Jews of Europe. That plan was embarked upon as the Second World War proceeded. It became a plan when other avenues approached failed by reason of war.

The Crown suggests that the evidence you have heard discloses that millions of Jews, as well as others, perished in extermination camps established by the Nazis in Germany during World War II. There is evidence which, if you accept it, discloses that they were killed by the German S.S. on orders from their Nazi superiors. They were killed not just by one method, but by a number of methods including shooting, hanging, gassing, deliberate starvation, exposure to the elements, deliberate overwork and slave labour. That, the Crown says, is the Holocaust.

The defence, on the other hand, takes the position that the Holocaust [sic] is a hoax and a myth; it is a fraudulent trick. The defence takes the position that there is neither truth nor proof that anyone was gassed in any camp in any of the German-occupied territories or in Germany.

Further, six million Jews did not die at the hands of the Nazis; gas chambers may have been {54|55} used to delouse clothing, but not to kill people. Zyklon-B may have been used as the agent for the delousing of the clothing and the buildings in various locations, but it was never used to kill people.

There was no policy on behalf of the Nazis or anyone else in Germany to exterminate Jews. No written order from Hitler or Himmler or from other high Nazi officials has ever been proven to have either existed or to have been given for the purpose that the Crown alleges. Jews may individually have been brutalized; they may have suffered; many were even killed at the hands of their guards in these camps. However tragic that is, this also occurred to non-Jews. Further, there has been no proof in this trial of organized genocide. There has been no proof of deliberate starvation and no proof of any of the other methods that the Crown alleges.

The defence takes the position that the myth of the Holocaust has been employed by Zionists and others to improperly enrich the State of Israel and other claimants, and to humiliate the German nation by the unjustified extraction of large sums of money by way of compensation and reparation. {55|56}

Those, members of the jury, are the two sides of this case, the position for the Crown and the defence as I see it. I hasten to point out, it is only as I see it. You may see it in an entirely different way. If you do, please ignore what I have just said and follow your own views as to what the issues are.

In order to prove the falsity of Exhibit 1 in its essentials Mr. Griffiths has led evidence on which he submits that death camps existed at places where intentional genocide of the Jews of Europe was carried out.

In that regard, some but not all of the evidence the Crown has led is as follows:

Each of five men, all in their sixties, have testified that each was a survivor of a Nazi camp. Mr. Friedman swore that he was at Birkenau. Rudolf Vrba swore that he was at Auschwitz-Birkenau. Chester Tomaszewski [sic] swore that he was at Mauthausen-Gusen [Gusen]. Dennis Urstein swore that he was at Buchenwald. Henry Leader said that he was at Maidanek.

Each testified as to what he saw or heard and felt at each of those camps. Each described what they saw occur at these camps. {56|57}

In addition, you saw the United States Army film entitled, "Nazi Concentration Camps". That film, on the evidence of one of the custodians of the American National Archives in Washington, has been held in the Archives since 1945. That film depicts the liberation of a number of these camps by the Allied Armies as they moved through in 1945.

There are many exhibits, including the Auschwitz Album, Exhibit 29. The Crown submits that in the cumulative effect of the evidence that is called, the Crown has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the contents of Exhibit 1 are false.

In order to prove that the accused knew the contents of Exhibit 1 were false and he deliberately, wilfully published that Exhibit notwithstanding, the Crown points in his address, which I will cover at a later stage, to the reasons why the accused, from the Crown's view, at least, knew the contents to be false.

The defence, on the other hand, does not admit the falsity of Exhibit 1 save in narrow locations. The defence says the Crown has failed to prove that the contents of Exhibit 1 are essentially false. The defence submits that Mr. Zundel, having {57|58} corresponded with many people in many parts of the world, accumulated much information on the subject of what is said to be the Holocaust. He has gathered that information together, and has used it, published it after he read it, and he honestly believed it, both before and at the time he made the publication.

The defence takes the position that there are serious, honest questions concerning whether gas chambers existed to kill Jews, whether there was a deliberate policy on the part of Nazi Germany to exterminate Jews, whether there existed a plot by Zionists to extract money from Germany to enrich Israel, and that this resulted in the hoax of the six million.

The defence further says that Mr. Zundel holds all of these things as honest beliefs. In the result, after having spoken about and having seen the information acquired by people such as Mr. Felderer from Sweden, Mr. Christopherson from Germany, Dr. Lindsey, the chemist from Texas, Iowa, and Dr. Faurisson from France, to name only a few, the Crown has failed to prove that the accused did not have an honest belief in what he published in Exhibit 1. The defence therefore submits that counts one and two should {58|59} be dismissed.

Members of the jury, it is four thirty. I will not keep you much longer. I have, perhaps, another ten or fifteen minutes to impart to you today. We will adjourn for ten minutes.

— The jury retires. 4:30 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns 4:45 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, a word, if I may, again on the subject of exhibits. Exhibits are very important in this case. I hope I have been able to impart to you the use to which you may, and the use to which you may not put exhibits, and the reasons therefore.

The first division of exhibits, if I may use that term, includes Exhibits 1 and 2. It also includes extracts from a book entitled, "Under Two Dictators". There is a map of Birkenau. There are sketches and maps of Auschwitz. There are aerial photo-{59|60}graphs, I believe, of Auschwitz. I am sure you will look at Exhibits 21 and 22 with care. You will find a sketch of a sorting barrack where the evidence, if you accept it, discloses that clothing was separated and divided. There is a plan of Birkenau. There is a sketch of how prisoners are said to have lined up outside barracks. There is a drawing of a gas chamber.

You will see included in these exhibits the three volumes of the International Red Cross report. There is the film.

A word about the film. That film has connected with it affidavits. Those affidavits, if you accept their contents – and it is solely up to you and no one else – indicate where the film has been and for how long. The affidavits in a very real sense, if you accept what they say, constitute a certain pedigree which you may find faulty, of no use at all, or you may accept it in full, as you shall decide.

The film has connected with it the voice of a narrator. In addition to the voice of the narrator you will find the transcript of what the narrator said. I am sure it is perfectly obvious to each one of you that the narration, or the narrator, {60|61} was dubbed in after the film was made. That becomes somewhat important in that regard. Please remember that the narration itself is useless unless each one of you, as jurors, having looked at the film, agrees that the narration is compatible with the events that are being viewed on the film when the viewer looks at it. If you find that the narration is compatible with what you see on the film, then you may employ all, part or none of the narration, as you shall decide. If, however, you find it is incompatible, or if you are left in any doubt about it, then it becomes hearsay and you will please ignore it.

Exhibit 29 is entitled, "Auschwitz Album". It is a book. It contains pictures of many people of all ages doing a number of things. It contains what purports to be a close-up overhead photograph of a ramp where trains come in. It depicts men in uniform. It depicts children, women and men of all ages who, apparently, on some of the evidence that at least I heard, are said to look as if they had just gotten off part of a train, the carriage.

This book was first referred to by the defence. It was referred to by the defence on more {61|62} than one occasion. I believe it has also been referred to by the Crown. Interestingly enough, neither Crown nor defence, as I recall the evidence, have in any way been critical of Exhibit 29. If you look at Exhibit 29, "The Auschwitz Album", you may well find that it will be of assistance to you.

As I say, the first forty-six or so, perhaps a little more, exhibits relate to the issue of the truth or the falsity, essentially, of Exhibits 1 and 2. They relate to the issue of whether or not Mr. Zundel has been proven to have wilfully published these exhibits knowing the essential contents of each to be false.

There is a second division of exhibits. They came into evidence in about the last ten days of the trial. Almost everyone of them, as I recall it, is either a book or an extract from a book or a magazine. The majority, about a hundred in all, relate to Exhibit 1. Some of them deal with "The West, War and Islam". Those books are by many authors who all have differing opinions and who have all written, while on the same subject, from different slants or angles. For the most part, as I understand it, they {62|63} relate to the issue of whether or not the accused, if you find that he published Exhibit 1, as he admits he has, and subject to your finding that he published Exhibit 2, had an honest belief in the truth of the essential elements of each of Exhibits 1 and 2.

All these books and all of these exhibits are new evidence. They contain, as I say, a myriad of opinions. They have been admitted into evidence so that if you, as jurors, wish to do so, you may employ them in whole or in part, as you shall decide, to conclude the weight, if any, that you will place on the evidence that you heard from the accused as to whether or not the Crown has proven that Mr. Zundel did not have an honest belief in the essential truth of Exhibits 1 and 2.

Another way I may be of assistance to you, if you agree, and if you agree with what I am about to say, is to provide you with what I think – and it is only what I think, please remember; it is what you think that is all important not what I think, but I hope to provide you with what I consider to be a definition of the word "Holocaust".

I can do no better than to read to {63|64} you from page 122 of the Complete Oxford Dictionary Supplement, 1976 that definition. The word is defined as follows:

"Holocaust", "frequently applied to the mass murder of Jews by the Nazis in the war 1939 to 1945".

You are free to accept that definition or to reject it, as you shall decide.

You alone, members of the jury, will decide whether or not the evidence discloses that Mr. Zundel relied on these books, the opinions of the authors, and other sources containing opinions, in order to acquire the honest belief that the Holocaust is a myth and a hoax, and to acquire the honest belief that Zionists, aided by Christians and Western bankers, have conspired to put down financially and to hold in bondage the Islamic people.

On the other hand it is for you alone to decide whether or not the total evidence discloses that the Crown has proven that all of these sources have been used merely as a reason to confirm beliefs already long since held without the necessity of having to refer to the books or the authors or to the other sources in {64|65} order to acquire the belief.

That is, members of the jury, the point at which we should call it a day. please be ready tomorrow morning at nine thirty. It is my hope that I will be finished, subject to anything I might have to call you back for, by lunchtime.

Please do not discuss this case with anyone beyond your number.

Please keep an open mind. The case is not in your hands and will not be until then. Please do not permit anyone to speak to you directly or indirectly concerning this case or any of the persons involved in it on either side.

Have a good evening. Tomorrow morning, nine thirty. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 5:00 p.m.

FEBRUARY 27, 1985

— Upon resuming.

— Discussion – counsel agree exhibit list to be given to the jury.

— The jury enters. 9:45 a.m.

THE COURT: The first witness to testify in this trial, members of the jury, was Sergeant Williams.

Sergeant Williams is a Metropolitan Toronto Police Officer who was asked by Crown counsel to read certain portions of one or two books. He then read portions of one or two books from the witness stand.

The first book was entitled, "Under Two Dictators". That appears to be the story by Margarete Buber of her experiences in a camp that she named as Ravensbrück. The reason, as I see it, that the portion of the book was put in was to contrast life as she saw it in that camp in Germany in the very early years, and the progress as to what happened insofar as people being gassed was concerned as the years went on. She remained in there as time went on.

There is a contrast, if you read the {66|67} book, of life, food, accommodation, how it changed as time went on. In cross-examination Sergeant Williams indicated that she did not, herself, see any gassing. He was referred back to Exhibit 1 and asked to read a paragraph. Part of the paragraph that he read is as follows:

"In his recent book Adolf Hitler (London, 1973), Colin Cross, who brings more intelligence than is usual to many problems of this period, observes astutely that 'The Shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe and murdering them, in a time of desperate war emergency, was useless from any rational point of view'."

That is an excerpt from Exhibit 1 at page 22. It is there. You have read it. If you have not read it, I am sure you will.

When you compare and contrast that excerpt with what appears in various locations in the book, "Under Two Dictators", you will note, I think, a difference. The issue is whether or not you find that {67|68} the excerpt on page 22, that murdering Jews was useless from a rational point of view, which comes at page 307 of the reference, is a truthful statement.

In cross-examination Sergeant Williams stated that he did not read the two books from beginning to end; he was not asked. He was asked to read the passages referred to, and he did.

He was shown page 186 of the book. He agreed that it gives a glowing description of what a nice place the camp looked like from the outside. At page 190 he was shown the reference of the author having been given bread, sausage, lard, and dried fruit on her first day at Ravensbrück.

He was then asked to read a reference from page 304 as to the number of dead persons that appear in the few days during that period of time. It mentions that there was a typhus epidemic that had broken out. There is a description of how S.S. men took forty women away on trucks. They were driven off, and mobile gas chambers are mentioned. Sergeant Williams was then asked about "The West, War and Islam". In some detail he described his membership in a Masonic order. He stated that there {68|69} were very few words, signs or symbols that are secret in his lodge. He explained his membership in the Masons. He denied that Masons had been involved in any conspiracy that he knew anything about. He knows nothing about a suggested scandal in Italy which involved, apparently, Masons. He knew nothing about a Masonic calendar. He was not familiar with a book called, "The Brotherhood".

He was then asked to read a certain portion of "The West, War and Islam", which he did. He said that when he became a police officer he swore an oath to uphold the law of the land, and further, not to disclose any information concerning police matters that came into his possession, and to protect life.

He said that there are secrets he is obliged to keep. He knows of no conflict between his membership in this Masonic order and his duties as a police officer.

The next witness was Arnold Friedman. He swore that he now lives in Toronto. He was born in the Carpathian Mountains in Europe. That is now part of Russia. Before that it was part of the Czechoslovakia and Hungary. He described that he was a member of a Jewish family, and that there were about fifty to sixty Jewish families in his village. He then described how he was rounded up by the police authorities and kept near the village in a large brick kiln.

He described his attempts to escape and his finally being put back in the kiln. He was then loaded on to a train with others. He described it as a cattle car. The cattle car was boarded up and they were provided with a gallon of water in a big container, with one half of a metal drum to be used as a latrine. The doors were closed, kept closed and not opened until a week later when the train arrived at Birkenau.

The occupants were ordered out. There was much yelling and screaming. Some were looking for lost children and parents. Gunshots were fired. S.S. troops were present. The occupants of the train were separated in three groups. First there were those capable of working; second there were those that were too old to work; and in the third there was a separation of men and women in rows of five. Under the supervision of the S.S., the selection process began. The three groups began to fill. He was put into one group and marched to a building where he was told to undress, to leave his clothes where they were. He was ordered to shower. He was disinfected. His head and pubic areas were shaved. He was given a blue and white prison uniform consisting of a jacket and pants, and later on wooden shoes.

They were lined up again in rows of five, surrounded by S.S. and marched to a camp barrack. He places the time at April or May of the year, his age sixteen. There were twelve inmates per tier or per bed which was separated from the next bed up by about three feet. He remained in Birkenau until December of 1944, when he was transferred to Auschwitz, about three to five kilometers distant.

He described the constant smell of what he said was burning flesh emanating from smoke stacks in the crematoria at Birkenau. At night he said you could see the flames above the fires which were coloured red and yellow rising, as I have recorded it, to one or two meters above the chimneys.

Life in the camp was described as starting at 6:00 a.m., and after attending a latrine barrack, returning to his own barrack and lining up for inspection. The S.S. came to count the prisoners including the dead bodies accumulated at night. The prisoners who had died were lined up and then removed by wagon after the count had been completed.

It was not until he arrived at Auschwitz that he was given a tattooed [sic] number, B14515. Up to December 1944 he did not have a number. He described breakfast consisting of mulberry tea or ersatz coffee, and a portion of bread. The number of deaths overnight varied. The number of persons dying in his barrack would be between five and ten people, but some nights nobody died.

His camp barrack was surrounded by electric wire and a perimeter outside of which there were six concrete guard posts. At one time, when he was in what he referred to as "D" Camp, he was separated by distance from the crematoria by what I have recorded as a cottage.

There was a railroad which stopped some distance down from the crematoria, over which distance he saw a lot of people walk to the crematoria. He described these people as elderly, young children, and mothers with children. He saw them walk to the crematoria. He did not see them ever return. He said they never came out.

He described how in "A" Camp he could see gypsies and a group of Czechoslovakian Jewish people who he saw until the middle of the month of July, until one night, in the middle of the night, he saw the whole area light up, and he saw persons, yelling and screaming, being loaded onto trucks when were then driven to the crematoria. The next day other young people moved into "A" Camp.

He described the distance of about three to four hundred feet over which he saw these things happen. He said the trucks drove into a knoll of birch trees. It was very noisy that night. He did not see the trucks return. He did not see the whole of the crematoria area; he could only see the outline of the low-slung roof.

Mr. Friedman then testified concerning three incidents while he was at Birkenau. Before they occurred there were five barracks containing children of between the ages of twelve to fifteen, about a thousand people. The population changed. People would leave and others would replace them.

Around Rosh Hashana, in July or August, his barrack inmates were ordered outside and lined up in rows of five. The day was sunny. At about noon hour somebody he described as Dr. Mengele and a couple of S.S. appeared. He said the children were ordered to strip to the waist. He described how, through a process of selection, the skinny and the sickly in the barracks were singled out and separated from the others. He never saw them again. The group which had been marked off had been replaced by new children in his barrack.

On the second occasion, which was a fasting day religiously oriented, the same Mengele appeared again. The same procedure was gone through. More were selected and marched off. He didn't see them again. The original five barracks were now down to three barracks.

Some days later they were lined up again and marched to a clearing where camp guards were there. This was a football field. The S.S. soldiers proceeded to march children under a piece of wood between the two goal posts. Those selected were kept aside. Friedman, being short in stature, saw what was occurring and kept on moving backwards in the line he was in. He ran to the sturdier, healthy-looking group and stood on two bricks in an attempt to reach the height of those with whom he was standing. He was caught for this and beaten. The group that was selected was marched off, put in a barrack, and later he took water to them.

At this time the whole camp was confined to barracks while the selection process occurred and those selected were marched off. They were now down to two barracks.

Five days later, another Jewish holiday, the final selection was made. All were ordered out, in mid-afternoon, by the S.S. who had drawn guns and dogs. Before that happened, the final selection was made in one of the barrack rooms. Those who were able to jump over a barrel were marched to Auschwitz; those who were not were marched away and he never saw them again. This was the one remaining barrack room that marched to Auschwitz.

He described how he shinnied up the pole to look out before he left Birkenau from the top window of his barrack. He said there was a sudden alarm raised. Shooting was heard. Soldiers were running and vehicles were driving at speed toward the area of the crematorium. After this incident the smoke coming from the crematorium chimney became minimal. The whole operation of the crematorium, he used the words "became downgraded". Trainloads with people stopped arriving. After October of 1944 the normal death rate inside the camp kept on. Bodies were collected in wagons of those that died overnight. He described the forced march to Auschwitz which occurred in cold weather. He saw bodies of the preceding women's group who had fallen by the wayside and died.

In cross-examination he identified a map of Birkenau that did not look too familiar to him because he only remembered what he saw from inside his hut. He was in Birkenau for a total of nine months. He was able to remember certain things. He was able to trace his location on Exhibit 8, a map.

He traced his route when he got off the train to the point where he was told to undress and have a shower, and where the men and women were segregated and the mothers with children were kept in a separate group. The showers, he said, were real water; there was no gas. They marched out the other end of the shower building and never saw their clothes again. He said their clothes were confiscated along with their belongings.

He then traced his route to Camp "A" where he was incarcerated. The women's camp was "C". He may have been in Camp "A" for two weeks. He then went to "B" or "C". A month later he was in "D" where he spent five or six months. It was impossible to get out of Camp "D", although it was possible to go from barrack to barrack within it.

He said that there were no showers after the first shower, but the head lice were controlled by each prisoner assisting the other in searching out and eliminating head lice. Prisoners' clothing was taken, cleaned and returned. He was not sick in the camp, nor was he forced to work except on one occasion when he helped unload a trainload of potatoes. He did not work as he was not regarded as an adult.

He did not see at any time what actually occurred in the crematorium. He could only {77|78} see the smoke stack and the outline of the roof. He agreed that in the general geographical large area surrounding the camp there were mines and factories. He did not see the road that the group of selected children took when they were taken out of the camp.. He was sure that a birch grove was in the area of KIV and KV Crematoria.

There were times when the wind blew the smoke away, and other times when the smoke permeated the whole camp from the crematoria chimneys. He did not see anyone who had died of typhus. He did see dead bodies routinely that were collected on the wagons.

I have copied his words when he was asked in cross-examination a number of questions to which he replied that the prisoners were told that if they did not delouse themselves they would be cremated. His words that I copied down were, "We would be gassed." So the word "cremation" and the words "we would be gassed" all appear in my notes in the same reply.

He said having been through the City of Buffalo in the United States, and through the City of Hamilton, Ontario, and smelling the smells from the steel factories there, the smells that he smelled at {78|79} Birkenau coming from the crematoria chimneys were different from the smells emanating from the smoke stacks at Hamilton and Buffalo.

The night march they took included the barking of dogs, the yelling of guards, and gunshots. He recalled again when cross-examined that the gypsies were loaded into trucks and taken two hundred yards. He did not see what happened, but he heard the sounds of the unloading of trucks at the crematorium. He agreed he had never seen anyone gassed or burned.

He did see people shot as they fell out of line on the march. The dogs were trained to tear each person apart that was shot. He was present on occasion when someone would be killed for no reason.

He described as the price of surviving another day what he was required to do. He described the rumours that always went through the camp. He then described how he was taken from Auschwitz and loaded into coal trains and taken to Dachau.

The same delousing procedure there occurred. Anyone who looked weak was taken away, eliminated from the presence of other prisoners and not {79|80} seen again. He did not know where the sewage went at the camps he was in. He did see sewage removed in one camp in large drums. He was then shown Exhibit 29, the "Auschwitz Album". He then identified the unloading area and various scenes on pages 22, 26, 27, 29, 33, 37, 38, 39, 41, 44, and 45. He agreed that no smoke was visible to him in these photographs which, in part, he said, depicted the prisoners arriving and having their baggage confiscated, and showing the mothers and children being herded into a group.

Page 41 shows haze but no smoke. Page 44 and 45, he said it looks as if the prisoners had just gotten off the train and were receiving the message to separate. When cross-examined on his not seeing smoke, his reply was that he saw what he saw and that he smelled what he smelled.

He received $300 from Germany. It was compensation for his nine-month internment. He couldn't recall which colour of the flames denoted a fat person or a skinny person.

Roy Bassett was the next witness. He is a staff sergeant with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department. For the past twenty-two years he {80|81} has been a Mason. He was a Master of the Grand Lodge. He has passed through all the phases of Masonry to that position. He describes the Masons as a fraternal organization open to any male person over the age of twenty-one years who is not an atheist.

One becomes a Mason by applying for membership in writing. After a committee screens the application, the applicant is either accepted or refused. Membership votes on the applications by secret ballot.

He knows of no world organization of Masons. He pays fees of $50 to $75 a year to support his group. Membership is not secret. Members wear Masonic rings. His Lodge meets eighteen times a year and it contains about two hundred and fifty members.

He said he did not belong to the Lions' Club or the Rotary Club, and he knows of no ties between Masons and those clubs. He said it is not a secret society. Books on Masonry are freely available to the public.

He was then referred to page 2 of Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam", where it refers to Masons as being part of a Satanic structure. That reference you will find, members of the jury. I will {81|82} not belabour you by reading it to you.

Sergeant Bassett swore that no Mason that he knows of worships Satan. He said there are no lies in Masonry. There is no duplicity, no infiltration. Masons do not assassinate; they do not infiltrate anything. Assassination is not a policy of Masonry. He denied directing War [sic], poverty, revolution and collapse and he does not know of any persons who are Masons that advocate that.

He said it would be ridiculous to think Masonry has anything to do with world government by Zionist masters. He again said that it is not a secret society. When he was cross-examined, he said he was not aware that Catholics are forbidden to be Masons. He understands that some Catholics are Masons[.]

He agreed that he could be ignorant of things about Masonry that he has not been told about. He was unaware of the alleged condemnation by the Catholic Church of Masonry. He agreed that Masonry is symbolic.

He was asked about what was suggested was the All Seeing Eye on the American one-dollar-bill. As I recall his evidence, he had not been aware of what {82|83} was on the American one-dollar-bill in that particular regard. He was asked about a number of books and shown a number of books by defence counsel. The witness, as I recall his evidence, said he had not read any of the books and did not recognize anything that he was shown.

He said he met a German Mason on one occasion. He did not recollect or know anything about what any alleged police scandals concerning Masons were all about in England. He has not seen an article about the Masons and the KGB written in the Toronto Star and the Globe and Mail. He did not know anything about Napoleon Bonaparte having been involved in any way with Masonry, or the French Revolution having a Masonic connection. He did not recollect a speech made by Benjamin D'Israeli in 1876.

He agreed that there was a lot about Masonry he did not know. He did not know anything about an Italian who hanged himself who was supposed to be a Mason, the hanging having happened under a bridge in England. He said the object of Masonry was to do good to others and to make good men better.

He knew nothing about advertisements {83|84} in newspapers in Germany allegedly being placed by Masons in that country. He said there is nothing Satanic about Masons and they are not assassins.

The next witness was Ignaz Fulop. He swore he was born in Hungary in 1926. He had never seen or met Mr. Zundel. He is Jewish by faith. He lived with his mother, his father and his sisters who were all arrested along with him in the ghetto and taken to Auschwitz in 1944 in the month of April.

They were taken there in what he said was a cattle car on a train. They were all in the same cattle car on that train. That, he said, took three days. The door of the car was opened once.

You will recall, perhaps, Dr. Vrba's evidence when he said that, at least as I recall it, in 1944 Hungarian Jews were anticipated coming to that camp.

Mr. Fulop said they arrived between 5:00 and 6:00 p.m. The doors of the car were opened and screams were heard for them to all get out. They all jumped off the car. Their luggage was left inside. The men were separated from the women. Everyone was lined up in rows of five. He said the selection then {84|85} started.

He saw a blind man with a hysterical daughter clubbed to death by the kapos at the order of an S.S. German soldier. There were S.S. all over. The kapos did the dirty work, he said.

He was in the same line as his father when he started. He described the German that he later heard was Dr. Mengele point his walking stick at Mr. Fulop. Fulop was directed to go to the right; his father, mother and sisters went to the left. Those who went to the right were young and looked strong. He never saw his mother and father again.

He then related how they walked to a huge hall and were ordered to strip but to keep their shoes, belt and eye glasses. He walked into a building, immersed their shoes into a tub of liquid, took a shower and came out the other door. That is where he said he took the worst beating of his life. He said that in the same room where everyone was naked he saw women on one side of a red line, the men on the other. He was, he said, screaming at his sister and asked her a question. He was then beaten by a kapo and the rifle butt of an S.S. soldier. He saw boots on one of the persons who {85|86} beat him, and one did not wear boots.

He crawled back into the line with the rest of the people in his group. They were issued striped clothes, pants and a jacket. They were marched to the gates and wound up in Camp "C" where he slept. At that time it was a gypsy camp.

He was then approached by an S.S. soldier who gave him an instrument for measuring the thickness of steel. He was then later taken to a location where he was put to work building V2 rockets. He was there two months. He does not have a tattoo. He was then later taken to another camp.

He was referred to page 17, column one on Exhibit 1, the number of people registered in camp. He said there were no people registered there. No questions were asked when he was taken out of Auschwitz or when he was put in.

All three hundred people went to Auschwitz when there was a bombing raid. He assisted in the building of a crematorium. He remained in that camp until September or October of 1944. He was then taken to Dora at about the time of the Yom Kippur. The Germans did not give him {86|87} food. They told him to fast because it was Yom Kippur. Thereafter he was taken to another camp containing about twenty thousand prisoners including Italians, Poles and Ukrainians.

At Dora he worked on the V2 rocket down the inside of a mountain. He worked seven days a week in twelve-hour shifts. He was fed once a day at 5:00 a.m. – two cups of hot water, a small amount of potato and white bread. If someone refused to work, that prisoner would be hanged, shot, tied to a post in cold weather under running water which put ice on the body which produced death.

In April of 1945 he was moved to Bergen-Belsen. He was liberated on the 22nd of April, 1945. He described the train ride in the cattle cars, each containing, he said, one hundred and twenty persons. He was the only one of that car that survived that trip. He weighed seventy-two pounds when he was liberated.

Members of the jury, you will recall Dr. Vrba's evidence. He mentioned the influx of prisoners from the East into Bergen-Belsen. I will come to his evidence in due course. You will recall the {87|88} evidence of Thies Christopherson who testified on behalf of the defence. He also said – I think it was Mr. Christopherson; I could be wrong; but one of the defence witnesses, perhaps it was the interpreter, said that he was also, as a German soldier, put in a cattle car and transported with thirty people in his car.

In cross-examination, when asked, Mr. Fulop said that at Auschwitz he did not see smoke; he saw flames coming from the chimney at night from the crematorium. Heat flames and ordinary flames are two different things, he said. When asked if he had ever seen a gas chamber, his reply was that anyone who had seen a gas chamber would not be around to testify.

He saw Dr. Mengele only once when he was standing on an orange crate. Everyone said that is who it was. He described one trainload of people with a hundred and twenty persons crammed into a boxcar. He said that ten thousand people were moved by train – simple arithmetic. Members of the jury, if I am correct, arithmetic or mathematics was never my forte, but if one divides a hundred and twenty into ten thousand, that {88|89} would be the number of boxcars that would be on one given train. If you ever counted boxcars, especially when we were all younger, standing at the gates of the CPR or the CNR, you will decide for yourselves whether the number of boxcars is reasonable, unreasonable or just about right.

He described witnessing the hanging of ten to twelve prisoners at one time with a piece of rope so arranged that ten or twelve nooses were created and a truck driven by soldiers hauled the ten or twelve prisoners up to be hanged at one time into the air at the end of the ten or twelve nooses. He said no days passed that such an act did not occur. It occurred usually in the morning after roll call, (appel[]), before everyone went to work. Most of the murdered persons were Ukrainians.

He took clothes from dead bodies to clothe himself. He rolled the clothes from the bodies onto his feet because it was warmer than wooden shoes would have been. He did not see any crematoria in Dora.

Dr. Raul Hilberg was born in 1926, in Austria. He came to the United States in 1939. He served in the U.S. Army in 1944. He obtained his {89|90} Bachelor of Arts in political science, his Doctorate in public law and government. He presently teaches at the University of Vermont as a fulltime professor.

Commencing in 1948 to the present he has devoted himself substantially to the subject he teaches, the Holocaust. He wrote a book, "The Destruction of the European Jews". His methods of acquiring knowledge include his close study of public records of the German Civil Service 1933 to 1945, his study of Nazi German records during the Second World War, including records of the S.S.

He has read all twenty volumes of the Nuremberg Trials. In the pre-Xerox age he copied thousands of documents. He has studied railroad tables, census figures and all documents kept in the ordinary course of business by the civil service in Germany, Poland and other European countries during the period of time in question.

His further methods of study included looking at details and documents, reading evidence and witnesses in other trials, and crosschecking the content of one document as against another, which he says very often produces a relationship between {90|91} two apparently unrelated documents.

As examples of his methods, he has studied railroad transportation to death camps, as he termed them, to see if there was a pattern. He has studied the German collection of clothing of the Jews and other belongings confiscated from them.

He has read Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?". He found it, as I copied his evidence, to be a concoction, a contradiction, a half truth in places, and quite untrue and highly biased in others.

Page 7 of Exhibit on the subject of population and emigration, concerning the figure of six and a half million Jews living in the whole of Europe, Dr. Hilberg gave his opinion based on his research and the sources he studied, including census statistics of certain countries, ghetto figures, Gestapo figures. Making allowances for margins of error, he estimated that nine and a half million Jews lived in Europe prior to World War II.

Poland, he said, and the Soviet Union reported over six million alone. He agreed that allowances must be made for errors in census figures which {91|92} he said, at times, depending on various countries, are unreliable.

He said that the Germans gave a definition of someone who was a Jew as a person with four grandparents who were Jewish. He employed that formula to calculate his figures.

European borders of Nazi-dominated Europe increased in size as Germany overran and controlled more and more countries on the continient of Europe.

On page 10 of Exhibit 1, concerning the reference to the absence of evidence of a single document existing which proves the Germans intended to or did carry out deliberate mass murder of Jews, Dr. Hilberg swore that this was untrue. He said indeed there are hundreds of documents in existence to that effect. There are documents prepared by Germans themselves reporting to senior German officers and officeholders that, as the German Army crossed into Russia, a squad of military personnel accompanied the advancing Army for the purpose of killing Jewish persons and others.

There are reports back on a daily basis of how many were killed. These are contained in {92|93} documents taken at the Nuremberg trials or documents produced in connection with the Nuremberg Trials. Those documents are available, are still on microfilm in the United States in the State of Virginia where captured German documents are presently stored and located.

To the reference on page 13 of Exhibit 1 regarding the heading, "The Case of the Einsatzgruppen" or the action groups, Dr. Hilberg stated that he did not agree with this reference. He has seen documents indicating that mobile German units were operated for the purpose of shooting people on a mass scale. The figure mentioned of thirty-four thousand commissars is grossly exaggerated, but parts of the statement are partially correct.

He said the words "the final solution" is a phrase of old usage. Initially, in 1941, it referred to the German desire to deport Jews. Thereafter, as the War progressed, the meaning of the words "final solution" changed to mean something quite different. Dr. Hilberg regarded the work of Reitlinger, as he said, conservative, tending to be sceptical to underplay the number of Jews that perished. {93|94} There are statements, he said, made by commanders of these German units who reported back to their seniors which state in records the number of persons who were killed in the field by these killing units.

With respect to the Nuremberg Trials, he said that you have to make a differentiation between the Nuremberg Trial, which he said was a trial to try the very top Nazis in Germany in 1945, and the Nuremberg American Trials which were employed to try different accused persons on other different occasions and involving different judicial personnel.

He said that the allegation on page 12 in column one that the rules of evidence at the Nuremberg Trials were disregarded is quite wrong. The documents, exhibits and affidavits were recorded. He called the figures published in Exhibit 1 excessive and incorrect insofar as the number of exhibits were concerned. He said that the defence lawyers were permitted to see defence documents, and the defence was permitted to cross-examine prosecution witnesses.

Dr. Hilberg said he has seen such testimony of these cross-examinations. He said the majority of witnesses at Nuremberg were not Jews, {94|95} although many Jews did testify as did a lot of Germans called for the prosecution and called for the defence.

He said the account in Exhibit 1 that there was torture of German accused is wrong. Regarding page 13, the Ohlendorf trial, Dr. Hilberg said that it is inconceivable that in 1937 or 1948 prisoners would have been tortured. He has never seen any document in this trial where the defence alleged such torture.

Concerning page 13, the Oswald Pohl trial, he said Pohl was a high-ranking S.S. Officer who was in command of a number of camps. He was in charge of utilizing slave labour, in charge of financial operations and financial matters of the camps. On the documentation that Dr. Hilberg has seen containing Pohl's signatures, those documents deal with the construction budgets of concentration camps, the death rates in those camps, Auschwitz in particular.

Pohl controlled twenty camps with other satellites around. He was an accountant by background. The alleged torture as mentioned by Senator McCarthy of Pohl when he was questioned is never mentioned in any of the documents that Dr. Hilberg has seen. {95|96}

Regarding Chapter 5, "Legal Principles Ignored" and the words in Exhibit 1, "Should anyone be misled that Jews were proved exterminated", the witness said that at the Nuremberg Trials some were acquitted, some were convicted, some were exonerated, some were sentenced to very heavy sentences, especially if they had been involved with the S.S., and others were given more lenient sentences.

Regarding another portion of Exhibit 1, there is a statement to the effect that no authentic eye witness has ever been produced with respect to the gas chambers. Dr. Hilberg was of the opinion that that is incorrect. Persons have been produced.

He said that death camps are sometimes synonymous with concentration camps. He looked for systematic killings in the number of tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, before he would characterize such a facility as a death camp.

With respect to the Warsaw Ghetto passage at page 18 he stated that it was incorrect. The reference was to the "endless list of newly-discovered death camps". Dr. Hilberg stated it was not an endless list, and it was not newly-discovered; it was not as {96|97} mysterious as indicated in the paragraph. The discovery is new in the sense that in 1960 German trials brought it out, but knowledge of these camps was known long before then.

He said that his sources that he has researched in the making of his statement concerning the Warsaw Ghetto and others included a report by a statistician employed by the S.S., a document with the German Secret Police, the Kohrerr [Korherr] Report, in 1942. He said it was known how many people were under German control at various periods of time, and the Germans published these figures, the death figures.

Dr. Hilberg took in consideration that the words used in reports, "peaceful resettlement", meant that prisoners were taken from ghettos but were not resettled; they were taken and disposed of in these camps. He used the words, "We see a controlled process of reduction by shooting, by gassing in Poland with the result that the pre-war population of 3,350,000 as of September 1939, the death toll attributed to the Holocaust, is closer to three million in Poland alone by its pre-war boundary".

He said that Treblinka was a pure {97|98} killing facility, Sobibor was a pure death camp; Chelmno was a death camp. Some of these camps had very small work facilities, but they were used exclusively for killing. He was referred to the words on page 19 of Exhibit 1, "After six months of peaceful evacuation, when only about 60,000 Jews remained in the residential ghetto, the Germans met with an armed rebellion on 18th January, 1943." He was asked by Crown counsel whether there were any documents that he had seen indicating where Jews were taken during that evacuation.

He replied, "Yes", and he referred to a report of an S.S. officer of high rank with the name of Stroop who had made a long report indicating clearly where the Jews went in 1942. Three hundred thousand were transported to Treblinka, a death camp, Dr. Hilberg said. The population in the ghetto in 1942, sixty or seventy thousand were left, and half of them were registered, the other half were not registered. The registered inmates were used for production. In January six or seven thousand more were deported.

Following that deportation yet another action began which Dr. Hilberg said was an action to {98|99} liquidate the ghetto entirely. He was referred to Exhibit 1 at the top of page 19, to the words, "Stubborn resistance by the Jewish Combat Organisation in the face of impossible odds led to an estimated 12,000 Jewish casualties, the majority by remaining in burning buildings and dug-outs."

The witness said that the whole passage concerning the resettling of the ghetto was a complete falsehood. It converts figures of dead into figures of presumably living people. The only correct statement in the entire passage at the first top paragraph at page 19 appears on the Exhibit when it says that the assault began on the 19th of April.

He then said he studied railroad schedules in Germany during the war, among other things. They caused him to conclude that concentration camps were located where areas of high concentration of Jewish people lived. That was so because the Gestapo had to pay third-class one way for each person transported to a camp; the longer the trip, the heavier the bill. It was in the interests of deporting agencies to make the trips as short as possible and to locate the death camps where Jewish population was the most dense. Personal {99|100} belongings that were confiscated were used to defray the cost of the one-way transportation third-class ticket.

On page 28 at the top right-hand paragraph, he was referred to the words, "One of the many merits of Rassinier's work is exploding the myth of unique German 'wickedness'; and he reveals with devastating force how historical truth has been obliterated in an impenetrable fog of partisan propaganda."

Dr. Hilberg, when asked, said that that was a fabrication, and that figures were taken from that reference out of what he said was thin air.

Page 30, Exhibit he was referred to the words, "Contrary to the figure of over 9 million Jews in German-occupied territory put forward at the Nuremberg and Eichmann trials, it has already been established that after extensive emigration, approximately 3 million were living in Europe, excluding the Soviet Union."

Dr. Hilberg stated that the report of Kohrerr [Korherr], the S.S. statistician, was packed with figures and bears no resemblance to the figures quoted on page of Exhibit 1 at all.

In cross-examination he said that he {100|101} has not produce [sic] any documents at this trial because he was not asked to bring any. The fact that the Holocaust happened, he said, has been confirmed over and over again.

He was then questioned closely on the subject of gas chambers and why he has not visited the camps himself in person. He said it was not necessary to make those visits. He described one camp. He said there were three parts to the camp known as Auschwitz, and in one of those areas there is located a reconstructed gas chamber. He knew it was there.

In Birkenau he said two gas chambers were built in 1942. They were temporary structures. After they were used, the bodies were taken from them and buried. In 1943, after four massive extensive structures were built and labelled "crematoria", he said they really were gas chambers, in his opinion.

He was then shown documents from the Nuremberg Trials, the Stroop report concerning the 56,065 "annihilated". Dr. Hilberg then had a long exchange with Mr. Christie on the meaning of that word in German. Mr. Christie suggested that it meant casualties, or something other than 56,065 people being killed. Dr. Hilberg, on {101|102} the other hand, was of the view that the word meant annihilated in the sense that it meant killed.

He, in his evidence, especially in cross-examination, repeated examples of the language contained in German documents employing words and phrases which were, in his opinion, accepted by all who read them as conveying the meaning that, on their face, it would not necessarily convey.

As an example, he said the word "relocate" meant "to kill"; the words "taken prisoner" really meant "to be shot or starved to death"; the word "resettle" means "to be taken to a death camp to die there"; "relocate" means "to liquidate". In the witness' opinion, these are the true meanings of the words that were actually used in the documents and in Exhibit 1.

He said a peaceful evacuation as described in the Stroop report really means that the Polish survivors of the ghetto were either shot by the Germans on the spot, or sent to be gassed. He said the plans of the ovens at Birkenau are available in the Birkenau Museum.

He agreed that the monument to the {102|103} Jewish dead at Birkenau is greatly exaggerated. When pressed, it was his opinion that an order came down from Hitler to exterminate Jews. It was a verbal order.

He was cross-examined extensively on this subject. He referred, as an authority, to Field Marshall Hoetti's account of that verbal order.

Members of the jury, if you conclude that an order came down and that there was an organized Nazi plan to exterminate the Jews of Europe, you will have to decide for yourselves whether or not it is likely that such an order is put in writing. You will have to decide whether or not you find that gas chambers were the sole method of killing, if there was any killing, or one of many methods of killing, whether or not it would be likely that gas chambers would be left intact as the retreat occurred as the Russian Army came West and the German Armies retreated and prisoners were constantly moved out, as Mr. Fulop was, from an Eastern camp into Bergen-Belsen which is located much further West.

Dr. Hilberg said that there is no written document that he knows of signed by Hitler or Himmler to the effect that Jews were to be killed. He {103|104} then said that Himmler, in 1944, gave an order that the "Jewish problem" had been solved and that the death camps should be dismantled. The order has not been produced directly, but it existed, in Dr. Hilberg's opinion, by reason of the testimony or evidence of persons that he named who testified later after the War.

He said he weighed this evidence with other sources and formed this opinion. He did not agree that in the early nineteen forties and in about that era the Jews were considered to be Communists.

He again was cross-examined about figures and the number of Jews, by census, that existed. He said the figures were taken as Germany was quickly increasing the size of its border and as the borders of other countries was changing. He then made the observation that anyone who was in a camp and died of typhus was a victim of a Holocaust because that person was there only because he was Jewish.

Dr. Hilberg said that Maidanek used carbon monoxide to kill prisoners. He stated that he did not use or employ certain portions of the Gerstein statement because they were unreliable for a number of {104|105} reasons, one of which was Gerstein's mental health from time to time; parts were supported by independent evidence, parts were not. He did not employ what he felt to be the unreliable portions.

He was extensively cross-examined on a number of documents which he pointed out he never used as a basis for any of his conclusions. He stated he was not a chemist and could only state that he had seen aerial photographs and documents regarding poisonous chemicals being employed by the Germans.

He was then asked if there was in existence a single scientific report concerning the alleged use by Germans of cyanide gas pellets and the like to exterminate Jews. Defence counsel suggested that there were no such documents.

The witness wanted to know, first of all, the meaning of "scientific", but then stated that there were numerous German documents showing that gas was being delivered. He denied the suggestions that the gas was delivered in order, solely, to fumigate clothing and buildings. He said that Auschwitz was an administrative centre for that area. He said it is unlikely {105|106} that the German hierarchy would create scientific documents or other types of documents containing the formula and label those documents as being capable of being employed to kill people.

He denied the suggestion put to him that the Nuremberg Trials were biased. He was then asked about a facility for gassing people at Mau-thausen. He said that it was there. It was camouflaged to look like a bathhouse.

He was then cross-examined about the opinions of other writers, as I recall his evidence, especially one Yehuda Bauer, that that writing occurred at a point earlier in time, as there has since been other information provided which might change that opinion. He was then again cross-examined by Mr. Christie concerning the map on page 17 showing death camps.

Members of the jury, I have held your attention some time. I do not want to press my luck any further. We will take ten minutes.

— The jury retires. 10:50 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

—— {106|107}

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 11:20 a.m.

THE COURT: Dr. Hilberg, members of the jury, as I recall his evidence, stated that the plans had seen the documents and other writings which has caused him to form the opinion that while the plans do not show ventilators at Birkenau, they existed.

He pointed out that the workers in the gas chambers wore gas masks when they were dragging out the bodies. Hair from the head of the corpses and the teeth containing gold were then removed by different squads of camp workers, and yet others then took the bodies to be burned.

You will recall the evidence of Dr. Faurisson who agreed only to the point that the gold was removed from the teeth of the dead bodies.

Dr. Hilberg has not been able to confirm the account given by one Nazi accused, high-ranking officer, that prisoners smoked and ate as this {107|108} process of removing the bodies to be burned was in progress. Dr. Hilberg was then cross-examined about his use of the statements of various Nazi accused, high-ranking officers who were captured and who gave statements. I am sure that that is fresh in your minds. He said that he did not believe that soap was made from human fat, at least on a regular basis.

He mentioned a Luther memorandum. [sic] There was a summary of policy commencing in 1939 when it was written. It was written at a time when death camps and gas chambers had just started to be built and to operate. Luther, in the Foreign Office, will be some months behind information that was coming in from the field.

He was again cross-examined on whether or not there was an order from Hitler to exterminate Jews. He said that as far as his opinion was concerned, there is no doubt that Hitler gave an order to exterminate Jews. The controversy arises as to whether that order was in writing at one time or not.

He said the word "annihilate" is not mentioned. The words "final solution" were always used {108|109} to a certain point by the Nazis during the War in reference to Jews. It then became unadvisable, by reason of the repetitious use of those words. The words "final solution" and other phraseology replaced those words.

Finally, when he was referred to page 30 under the heading, "Imaginary Slaughter", Dr. Hilberg said that the linkage of the combination of all of the statements contained in Exhibit 1 makes that portion of Exhibit 1 objectionable because it implies that all or the majority of the claims being made were for money against West Germany. He said that that, of course, pre-supposes that any plot that existed, existed during the War when it was by no means clear that the Germans would lose the War.

Rudolf Vrba was the next witness. He testified at great length. He was born in Czechoslovakia. He lived there until 1939. He lived in a German-controlled area. He was deported in 1942 to a concentration camp at Maidanek. He stayed there two weeks. In June of that year he was put in a railroad [sic] car, taken to Auschwitz. He arrived there on June 30, 1942. He remained there until April of 1944 when he said he {109|110} escaped and returned to Czechoslovakia.

He again, as other witnesses did, described a typical working day of being aroused at 3:00 a.m., marched to a train. After being counted three times, he was then moved to a place where he was unloaded and marched three more kilometers to a building site where work would start at 8:00 a.m. One litre of soup or some tea for five persons was provided for five persons for one meal. The local water was contaminated. S.S. guards on both sides would march the line of prisoners to work.

He said that very often the S.S. had a practice when one was working in a perimeter outside of the camp that the hat of a Jewish prisoner would be removed and thrown away. The prisoner whose hat was thrown away would be told to run for the hat. If he failed to do that, he would be beaten. If he ran for the hat, he would be shot. Chester Tomaszewski had something to say on that subject, that practice.

At the end of two months, due to an outbreak of typhus in a section of Auschwitz, Dr. Vrba I was able to escape the work gang he was on by reason of that outbreak of typhus. He was deloused again, {110|111} stripped naked, his clothes were taken. He then described how he went through a hole in a wall into the former women's barracks. He was now in Block IV.

He was assigned new work. That was called the Kanada kommando. He hastens to say that "Kanada" is spelled "K-A-N-A-D-A". That was a group of slave labourers.

The group was divided into two sections. One worked by day and the other one worked at night. He then outlined on a screen here the location of the camp, a rough diagram of the camp. He filled in the areas of the guard towers, railroad lines, railroad spurs. He described how various prisoners were taken each day to work in the ammunition [sic] factories connected with the complex. He described the guard towers where no fencing occurred, but where prisoners at night were taken back into the actual camps that were guarded and the electrically-powered wires were turned on.

He was ordered by the S.S. to do various parts of work and labour. He said the two camps were separated, Birkenau and Auschwitz, by a railroad line of the main line between Vienna and Krakow. {111|112} Off that railroad line he drew a spur line. Beside the spur line he drew a ramp that he said was about five hundred meters long and twelve or so meters wide.

Have a look at Exhibit 29, members of the jury, and see what you see there in connection with the ramp.

He said fifty railroad cattle cars could be brought into the siding by a locomotive leading up to the ramp. Beside that ramp there abutted the siding. He worked from the 20th of August until April 7th, 1944, about eight months, 240 days, he said, at the job on the ramp.

He would be marched there on occasion two or three times a day or at night. He went out over that period of time over a hundred times. He described how the detachment of guards would arrive and surround the whole area and the ramp, the railroad spur and the road, so that when the locomotive pulled in with the cattle cars containing the prisoners, all would be surrounded by S.S. guards.

A group of non-commissioned S.S. officers would then appear. They had silver buttons on their uniforms. They carried sticks or bamboo canes. {112|113} They were followed by S.S. officers wearing gold braid, white gloves and black uniforms carrying nothing in their hands. The train was then brought to the ramp. Keys were exchanged between the train crew and the S.S.

He then described the process by which the occupants of the cars were taken off the cars. He also described the separation process where all people were separated and put in one line. Young men and young women were separated and put into separate groups on the ramp. Anyone who tried to bring out luggage from the cars were assaulted by the S.S. with their canes.

He said Mengele was present and would select by a flick of a finger as to what young women and young men would be ordered to go in one direction, while others were sent to join the line-up of mothers, children and old people. He said five to twenty-five per cent of the young men were chosen to work. Up to seventy-five per cent of the other line were women, children and older people.

If any of the prisoners of which he was one said anything to any of the occupants of the train, they would be shot. He said the prisoners were {113|114} then ordered, his group, to run, enter and open the cattle cars and throw out the lame, the sick and the dead from the cars. They were then ordered on the run to throw out the baggage. They were then ordered to clean out all of the blood, the feces, and the urine from the cars so that no trace would be left that those cars had been occupied by humans. Those that could not stand or were sick or unable to move were literally thrown into the trucks.

He then described the process of how the various trucks on the ramp carrying people would head towards Birkenau following a small green truck with a red cross on it. He said that that small truck with the red cross on it carried canisters of gas. He helped load that little truck on occasion with canisters of gas. He would stand in line and be one of the prisoners who would help transfer the gas from Auschwitz to the truck which then went over to Birkenau.

He said the gas was held in a special house. He stood in a line of prisoners passing gallon-canisters of gas from the house to the van. He described the process of the clothing.

After a whole ramp had been cleared {114|115} the clothing was taken over, as I recall it, in Auschwitz and separated into grades of clothing – first grade, second grade, third grade. That was done by prisoners, both men and women. It was done on blankets. His job was to help remove human clothing which had been piled up to the ceiling in a crematorium. He looked into the burning pits around that crematorium which were still radiating heat and saw fragments of bones which had been partially burned. He saw the partially burned heads of children lying in the bottom of the pits.

On Exhibit 1, he pointed to the area of Birkenau "A", where the women lived, and "B" where the men lived. He pointed to the areas of the map which he said did not exist in January of 1943 as built-up locations.

Over that six-month period from January of 1943 onward he saw many truckloads of people coming from the ramp separating Birkenau and Auschwitz. He traced the route the trucks took from the point where he saw them and where he was permitted to walk up and down the road-way separating the barracks where he lived.

He identified the mortuary in the camp which held bodies {115|116} of people who died in the camp compound. He was frequently there to visit with Fred Wetzler, his friend, who was in charge of the mortuary.

From that location, through a window facing the crematorium, he viewed three hundred to four hundred people at a time in the yard of the mortuary, a distance of fifty to sixty yards away, as those persons were unloaded from the trucks bringing them in from the ramp. He said they were the women, the sick and the old and the children.

The crematorium had long bunkers covered on the top. The bunkers were three or four in number. There were openings on the roof of the bunkers, three or four in number, covered by wooden or metal lids. He said he then observed a German sanitation corporal – he used the German rank; I am using the English rank – leisurely don a mask, then take the gas canisters, open them and remove the lids from the top of the bunker ventilators and place the top of the contents of the canisters into the vents, then go to the next vents and do the same thing. For each he would drop in one canister, sometimes two. He put the empty canisters by the edge of the bunker, and when they were {116|117} empty he would retrieve them, remove his mask and walk away to disappear.

He described how the bodies of the mortuary were bundled together in groups of ten bodies each, making counting by the S.S. easier. The bodies would be stacked into groups of ten in the mortuary, and at midnight they would be loaded by other prisoners on a truck and taken to the crematorium to be burned.

Prisoners who could not stand for roll call who were almost dead but still alive were sometimes killed by the Kapos' stick or by other methods.

In June of 1943, being unable to escape where he worked on the ramp with trains coming in, he got a change of jobs. He had now survived at Auschwitz for a year. He became a block scribe. He said all prisoners wore triangle patches on their clothing for identification. A red patch meant that the prisoner was a political prisoner. A green patch meant he was a criminal. A violet patch meant he was a pacifist or a Jehovah's Witness. A black patch indicated the prisoner was anti-social. Purple indicated homosexuality, and a double triangle in the form of the Star of David, either red or yellow, indicated the {117|118} prisoner was a Jew. He said by far the majority of the prisoners were Jews in Birkenau and Auschwitz.

When he became a scribe, he had more physical freedom to move around. He said when transport trains containing people came in, the same process occurred with the trucks of people going to the crematoria. He emphasized that the lorries carrying the people to what he said were the gas chambers would be heard by him going by day and night. It was by that method that he counted and estimated the numbers of people who he saw enter but never come out of the crematoria. He described his escape. He said that there was no road going away from the camp in the area of the crematoria. When he arrived in Czechoslovakia he separately gave his story, as did Wetzler. He anticipated that, from what he had heard in the camp, that building was going on in Auschwitz in order to accommodate the oncoming influx of Hungarian Jews.

Hw said that all of those that left the ramp in lorries en route to cremation were not registered. {118|119}

He was referred to page 17 of Exhibit 1. He replied that the description given by one Christopherson, when compared to the description that he saw in the camp, could not be compared. There was no comparison. He said that the description of Christopherson was a cynical, complete lie.

He branded as another complete cynical lie the contents on page 24 of Exhibit 1 where it stated that humane conditions existed in the camp and the rations were not less than 2,750 calories a day in 1943 and regular care to the sick was given.

Dr. Vrba said that he was not a part of any conspiracy to deceive anyone concerning conditions that existed at Auschwitz. He is not a member of any political party or any organized religious group. He has no affiliation except with that of the University of British Columbia and two other universities.

In cross-examination he agreed that he was the author of the book, "I Cannot Forgive". That book was published in 1964. He made it clear that he would not say that all of the contents of that book were technically, absolutely true.

Mr. Christie cross-examined him closely {119|120} on the subject as to the truthfulness of the contents of the book. Dr. Vrba said that it was intended to be a literary creation which would greatly condense within its covers what otherwise would have required many volumes and footnotes to complete. It is a book written in a style of an artistic event; it is an artistic depiction of what life was like in the camp.

The defence has submitted to you that Dr. Vrba certainly took poetic licence, if I can use that term, in writing the book, and that he did the same thing with respect to his evidence in his testimony before you.

Members of the jury, as I have already said, I hope enough times, it is the weight that you each attach to the evidence of any witness that is all important. You will please bear in mind Mr. Christie's cross-examination of this witness in that regard and in other regards when you are attaching that weight.

Dr. Vrba was questioned on what he said was Heinrich Himmler's inspection of the camp. It was suggested to him that that did not occur. He may not have known what Himmler looked like in those days. {120|121}

You will have to decide whether there is a validity in that argument or not, members of the jury.

He testified, when he was cross-examined, that he was age nineteen at the time that all this happened. He was in a sufficiently desperate situation where he still harboured false hopes that the higher German political figures were not aware of what was happening at this camp, and that when Himmler arrived at the camp, it was a celebrated arrival because he thought that Himmler would see what was happening and put a stop to it. He said he was still that naive at that time.

He would not agree with the cross-examiner as to when certain barracks were finished or not finished in the Kanada section of Auschwitz. He was cross-examined for quite some time as to why the burning pits would function in marshy ground. He replied that with two hundred to three hundred slave labourers, and he being part of them, he was not consulted about any of these things. He said the pits might have appeared bigger to him than they really were, when he was asked precisely about what their dimensions {121|122} were; he could only give an estimate of what the dimensions of the pits were.

He was asked about Exhibit 21, the map of Birkenau. He marked a circle where the mortuary was located as of the 8th of June, 1943. When asked to repeat what he saw the S.S. man doing when the canisters were dumped, he denied that the bunker where the gas was put in was a mortuary. He said that the crematorium needed no mortuary because only three hundred to four hundred people a day died in Birkenau, and the bodies of the dead could be accommodated in Wetzler's mortuary.

He said he was one of the exceptions who survived. He denied the suggestion put to him that he was being untruthful when he stated that the height of the bunker where the S.S. man put in the canister was sufficiently high that the sanitation corporal had to reach up and to climb on the bunker. In other words, the height of the building out of the ground was very much the subject of a difference of opinion between Mr. Christie and the witness.

Dr. Vrba said in his book he did not intend to quote words verbatim that people used. {122|123} Rather, he was attempting to employ those words and phrases that others in the camp were using at the time, generally speaking.

He said when he escaped in April of 1944 he knew the camp was preparing to receive Hungarian Jews; he said about a million. That proved, he said, to be correct. Four hundred thousand Hungarian Jews came in, in that area, to that camp at that time. His figures, he said, agree with those of Hoess simply because the Hoess figures and the Vrba figures were accurate insofar as the truth of the numbers who were killed is concerned.

Exhibits 22 and 23 are rough drawings that he made in the camp in 1944. He made one of those drawings from memory. Exhibit 23 is a more elaborate map of Auschwitz that he made with some changes. The bathhouse is not shown at a different place on each of the two drawings, as was suggested, he said.

You will decide that, members of the jury.

One drawing was made with engineering assistance. The other was made from memory.

He said he was actually in the crema-{123|124}toria at Kanada in November of 1942 when he was ordered to go there to collect the clothes from people who he said had been gassed. He said the building had been used as a garage. It contained two doors. He collected the clothes from the chamber, although he acknowledged that people usually undressed before they entered.

He did not agree that Exhibit 25 was in any way inconsistent with what he had written in his book containing the ability of ovens to burn up to twelve thousand people a day.

When he was asked whether it was possible that three thousand children were born at Auschwitz, he stated that at one time, over a six-month period, in order to placate the citizens of Czechoslovakia who became worried about the fate of those who had been deported, a large number of women, children and men all arrived and were placed into one barrack where they lived for six months. He said he looked at their registration cards and the words "special treatment after six months' quarantine" was on their card. At the end of the six months he said they were taken out and gassed, but in the meantime people kept arriving at the rail siding and were {124|125} transported.

Mr. Christie asked Dr. Vrba this question: "Can you tell us of one single instance where you saw one Jew gassed?" The witness replied that he saw all these people enter the crematoria. He watched them go in and not come out.

I do not think there is any problem, members of the jury, with you concluding that he saw what he saw, if you accept that; but he did not see anyone actually gassed.

His figures were 1,765,000 people who perished. He replied in answer to another question that in addition many who were selected to work at the ramp in Auschwitz were taken away after a while and worked elsewhere in the countryside.

He would not agree with Mr. Christie that any map or diagram that he was shown indicated any road leading out of Auschwitz-Birkenau from the other end. He said that typhus victims were burned along with people who were being gassed.

He was then cross-examined closely on the number of ovens, the number of crematoria, and the number of openings in each crematoria. He repeated {125|126} that the sketch he was shown is a result of what he had heard from others who had built the crematoria. That appeared in the Refugee Board Report that he made after the War was over.

He was again shown the aerial photograph of Auschwitz and denied that there was a roadway existing leading north of the crematoria.

He repeated that the object of the Nazis was to keep all of this secret: the gassings and the killings at Auschwitz and Birkenau were to be kept secret. He repeated that no unregistered prisoners left Auschwitz once they arrived.

He Has shown Exhibits 22 and 23. The former, he said, was drawn from his memory. He was then closely questioned as to the apparent differences in the location of the gas chambers which were called a bath or a shower. He said that he drew the sketch from his memory. Between the time that he escaped and the time that the new Exhibit 23 was created, 27 new barracks appeared and were under construction. Either the bathhouse was shifted to another location, or else he did not place it precisely where it was placed when he was making the drawing from his {126|127} memory.

He said that Zyklon-B was used for killing people and also used for fumigating buildings and clothing. He said that Christopherson's account was absurd. His words were, "If Christopherson was in Auschwitz, he could not honestly hold such beliefs in truth."

Chester Tomaszewski is now aged sixty-one. He is a Rumanian Catholic. He is a Christian. He was a political prisoner and was arrested by the Germans in 1940. He was transferred to Dachau. He remained there for six to seven weeks. He was then transferred to Mauthausen-Gussen. There he remained in Gussen until the 15th of May, 1945.

He described the treatment that he and other prisoners received at the camp, the daily routine basis which started at 5:00 a.m. Sanitary conditions were non-existent. There were no toilets. Washing was done at the end of a water pipe which also contained the drinking water. He described the routine of having to be obliged to take their hats off as the Germans forced them to do in deference to the German guards. He {127|128} described how on some nights an average of two to three hundred prisoners died overnight. The bodies had to be carried out to roll call, which he called "appel". Sick people who could not stand had to be assisted out.

After the roll call, working groups were formed, and up to a thousand prisoners went to dig up earth and pull rocks on a mountain from stone quarries. He saw a lot of men die. He carried a lot of them to a place where they were burned.

Every Sunday the heads of all prisoners would be shaved in the morning. He described how on successive Sundays the two or three hundred Jewish prisoner who originally were in the camp were shot and killed by Germans by a process under which the Jewish prisoners would be ordered out of the line of guards to pick up stones. As soon as they disobeyed the order, because you could not move out of the line, they would be shot. He called the road to the stone quarry the Golgotha Way.

The victims that first died were the Jews, and then they were followed by others. This happened for three Sundays until all Jews were gone. {128|129} Jews would be assigned to clean latrines and carry the human waste of the pit in a large barrel suspended between two poles. For the first two or three months not many died because their bodies could withstand the strain. As fall came on, he watched prisoners physically deteriorate until they became skin and bone. As they were beaten at work and lost strength, they died.

The number of deaths increased. He branded the camp as an extermination camp. He said there was always a glow over the crematoria. The wounds of the prisoners never healed. The camp always smelled bad. These were his words.

The hospital barracks were a one-way street to the crematoria. Once you went to the invalid block the food rations were cut and you could starve.

He described an incident, how on February of 1945 a transport came in with Hungarian Jews who were kept standing through the night on the appel square. They were barefoot and dressed in rags.

He described the meagre small amounts of food that they were given. None of his family ever {129|130} returned to Poland. Most of them were killed when they were arrested. He was never in Mauthausen; he was only in Gussen. His fingernails were repaired in the camp hospital. They were pulled out, no anaesthetic. He estimated that two hundred a day was not an exaggeration.

The normal capacity of the camp was twelve thousand. Often it contained eighteen thousand. Poles received red triangles on their clothes, Spanish blue, the German criminals green. The Jews got the Star of David.

He said that the order of the camp was that the prisoners, including himself, would be gassed if the camp was to be captured. He said by 1943 things had improved somewhat. In 1944 Red Cross parcels were even allowed into the camp. Slave labour was harder to come by. People who could not stand on the parade ground all night sometimes threw themselves on the electric wire and died.

Dennis Urstein is now sixty one. He was born in Austria. In 1938 he lived in Vienna. He was arrested when Hitler marched into Austria. He was incarcerated for two years in his former schoolhouse. {130|131}

He was then released. He was re-arrested in Belgium, I believe. He was sent to a prison camp where he stayed until 1942. In that year he then went to Auschwitz where he remained until 1944.

He described the selection process of the ramp as being a very casual process where one line moved to the left, and he moved to the right. After he announced that he was a tailor, he was marched into the camp. His job was to sew uniform numbers on uniforms which matched with the tattoo [sic] numbers of prisoners.

One of his jobs then was to meet trains coming in and to get the people off the trains quickly, to throw their baggage out to be confiscated. He saw his mother and father get off the train. He saw them taken away in trucks. He never saw them again.

On the ramp he said you could see two crematoriums with one smoke stack. There was a doctor there, Mengele.

He said that in late February he had gone in from work and was lined up with prisoners in his barrack outside in fives before entering the barrack for the night. He was then ordered by some S.S. Germans to get into rows of five. He was included. A truck came {131|132} along, the same type that used to transport the dead bodies, and he was driven to the crematorium. He thought that he was going to die, but that did not occur.

When they arrived in front of the building that he described as the gas chamber, there were three S.S. men present. He noticed silver piping on their uniform. He said they were polite. He saw trees and flowers and shrubs in the area.

Standing at attention after being ordered off the truck, he saw an S.S. man put on a gas mask, then heard from the inside of a building outside of which he was standing a humming sound coming through the door of the building. He and twenty-nine others stood there. To his left he said he saw the crematorium. The door to the gas chamber was large, wooden. It was held shut by what he described as wing nuts.

He was then given a hook with a handle on it. The hook and handle was about three feet long. The door of the chamber was then opened and this witness said he saw a lot of bodies. The bodies were naked. They included men, women and children. They were entangled with one another as if they had all {132|133} recently been trying to get on top of one another. The strongest were on top. The children were at the bottom.

The order was, "Get these Jew bastards out." He said that there was a lot of water around inside the chamber. He said he estimated there were six to seven hundred bodies, forty per cent of which were children up to ten, eleven and twelve years old.

As he walked in the chamber there was a corridor, a step or two. He then began to remove the bodies. The floor of the chamber was at ground level. He did not know if there was a basement in the building. There were scratch marks on the bodies. The smell was strong as the bladders and bowels had let go. The bodies were quite wet. The bodies had blood at the nose and a trace of foam at the corner of the mouth. There was a smell in the chamber he described like pickles or mustard. When the bodies had been removed and stacked on top of one another on a head-to-foot basis, he was ordered, with others, to wash out the chamber. He said there were no columns holding up the ceiling of the chamber that he saw. Every twelve inches he saw a {133|134} a shower fixture on the ceiling. There were no windows although there was a window in one of the doors in the chamber. He noticed a lot of steel piping going to the ceiling with wire mesh, piping.

They were ordered outside on to the trucks and taken to the barracks.

The whole process took about three hours. This was the only time that he did this type of work.

During his stay in that camp, opening a suitcase confiscated from one of the people taken from the transport, he saw a picture and a birth certificate of a relative of his. He made it clear that after May of 1943 he was not in the Kanada section of that camp. He was fixing roofs.

The gas chamber from the outside wall had a very large door. It did not look like a gas chamber from the outside. He drew Exhibit 28 as his recall of the chamber as he recalls it now.

He expressed anger and resentment at having to be here. He said he was trucked to Crematoria No. III, and he did not know how far it was. The chimneys of the crematorium looked squat and wide. He said he saw beautiful trees and shrubs and even flowers. {134|135}

It was impossible for him to describe details because he did not look for details when he was there. His words, as I recall them, were, "The things I saw I saw and that's all I can say."

He was not interested in the direction of the sun. He was interested only in living through the next hour. He was asked a question: "How do you know they were gassed?" His reply was: "You see the selection. People aren't shot. The Nazis have a way to put them away. It's like the Humane Society gassing cats; they don't shoot them, they gas them."

He said in 1944, in the summer, he left Auschwitz by the cattle car, people packed in each car very tightly. Some died en route. They were packed in so tightly that those who died could not fall.

Henry Leader was born in Poland in 1919. He lived there until 1939. He was then arrested and taken away. He never saw his family again.

Able-bodied people were taken to a room in the concentration camp where he was taken. They were stripped, their belongings taken away, their hair was shaved. They were disinfected, showered, provided {135|136} with striped clothes, given a number and put in a barrack. His number was 1697.

From December 1941 to June of 1943 he was in Maidanek camp. People ranged in age from fifteen to fifty. He was first put to work digging trenches. He was then assigned to a transport gang, eight people to a van. They handled baggage of persons coming into the camp.

He described how he was assigned to work at a gas chamber carrying bodies from the gas chamber a distance of three hundred and fifty yards to a crematorium by means of a van pulled by eight prisoners. The van held about twenty-five human bodies. There were three vans in total. The bodies were naked and were the last remains of men, women and children.

At one point, in March, a large transport containing families of White Russians, men, women and children, were all brought into the crematorium. They were overloaded to the point where the overflow had to be taken to a pit where, over layers of wood, bodies were stacked and then burned. These pits were about a kilometer away from the camp.

He described how he was working on a {136|137} road gang beside a crematorium. He was digging ditches next to it. He was surrounded with a wire fence, but he could see through the wire. From that position he was able to look through the fence to see, on a daily basis, the transports coming in.

He saw six or seven trucks loaded with people on one day, three trucks the next. One day, one truck containing a hundred young people moved to the area of the crematorium. The truck entered the crematorium gate, and half an hour later it came out empty.

After a day's operation there would be a truckload of clothing leave the area. Then you would see the people that had come in on the trucks walk through the doors of what he said was a gas chamber and not come out.

On the 5th of January, as the Red Army advanced, he was transported to Mauthausen by cattle car, sealed, for six days. The doors were never opened. No food was provided. Thirty to fifty per cent of the prisoners died en route.

After two weeks in Mauthausen they were transported to Gussen [Gusen] for two and a half weeks. Then they were taken to, I believe, Theresien [Terezin] to work {137|138} in an ammunition factory. In April of 1945 the Red Army advanced. As a result they were taken to Czechoslovakia on a thirteen-day march in which thirty-five to forty per cent of those prisoners died on the march. If a prisoner fell out of line and could not march any more, he was shot.

He received $3,500 from the German Government for compensation. He now receives a monthly pension of $230. He is not part of any conspiracy or attempt to get people to believe that millions of Jews died when they did not.

John Burnett is the senior vice-president of The Royal Bank of Canada. He testified on Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam". He travels extensively and meets representatives of other banks over the world.

He swore that the Canadian law requires that the maximum number of shareholders owning shares in a Canadian bank cannot exceed ten per cent in anyone person or corporation; Percentage ownership by foreigners cannot exceed twenty-five per cent.

Worldwide, the bank's operation consists of borrowing of money at various rates of interest from {138|139} others and lending that money to yet others, persons and corporations, at higher rates of interest. The difference is the profit. The ability of the borrower to repay is the prime concern.

There is no international banking agreement or conspiracy, he said, to direct loans for evil purposes. The wealth of the bank is not based on usury, if usury means excessive interest rates being charged. It is not the policy of the bank or any other Canadian bank that he knows of to bribe other governments or to seize Islamic assets.

He agreed that loans in foreign currencies do not require banks to keep reserves. He denied that if loans go into default in other countries, lending activities in Canada are adversely affected. It is in the interest of the bank to lend monies, he said, to make sure that those who borrow it prosper so that more money can be repaid and more loans in the future can be made.

He said the international monetary fund is part of the United Nations. It lays down terms and conditions concerning the devaluation of currencies, and it sets conditions on the making of loans. To suggest {139|140} that any government of Canada would come in to support a defaulted loan to help a bank is unrealistic.

He said mid-East oil was consumed not by small countries totally or exclusively, but rather by large countries like America, France, Germany, the United States, Japan. He said that recycled Middle East dollars made by Middle East countries who have oil amounted to so much money, in fact, that it had to be recycled carefully and with great problems in order to get it back into circulation.

Rene Degrace, [de Grace] from the International Red Cross Society in Canada, testified. He gave his employer's duties and he read into the record contents of a Bulletin dated the 1st of February, 1978. What he read into the record is as follows:

"Consequently, the ICRC considers that it must make clear the fact that it has never published or even compiled statistics of this kind which are being attributed to it. The work of the ICRC is to help war victims, not count them. In any case, how could its delegates have {140|141} obtained data for such statistics? They were able to enter only a few concentration camps, and then only in the final days of the war. Everything the ICRC tried to do for the inmates of those camps and what it finally managed to do is related in its report entitled, 'The Work of the ICRC For Civilian Detainees in German Concentration Camps from 1939 to 1945' (available in English, French and German)."

Members of the jury, the final Crown witness that I will mention was Mr. William T. Murphy. He was an archivist with the National Archives in the United States. He is stationed in Washington, the National Archives there. This is a federal agency required by American law, he said, to keep records and other documents.

The National Archives makes available to members of the public a number of records that it contains. Included in that is a film on Nazi Concentration Camps. The Archives received this film in its eighty {141|142} thousand feet entirety first in 1946. Later on, from another source in 1956.

These films, like everything else in the Archives, are public documents and are always available to the public. The films of the Nazi Concentration Camps could be purchased and are purchased from the Archives. It is available in sixteen and twenty-five millimeter video tapes.

In addition to the film, the Archives in Washington contain film footage of World War II, World War I and other film records of national interest.

Mr. Murphy has no personal knowledge of World War II but he has studied the films on that subject. The film that was shown to you, Exhibit 32, he swore, is a six-thousand-foot portion of the eighty thousand footage on the film.

He said that he recognized the film and that it is a copy from the original that was placed in the Archives. He identified the documents that accompanied the film. That film will be available to you to look at if you wish to do so during the course of your deliberations.

Members of the jury, this has taken a {142|143} little longer than I thought. I think it is now time that we took another ten minutes. I will then call you back and I will be a little while this afternoon. However, it is necessary, in a trial of this length, that I go into the evidence a little more deeply than otherwise would. We will take ten minutes.

— The jury retires. 12:15 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 12:35 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, Robert Faurisson was the first witness to testify on behalf of the defence.

Through graphs and other documents, as well as his own evidence, Dr. Faurisson was asked and gave his opinion that the figures and investigations and the research that he has done, along with other writers whose opinion he values, his conclusion is that a far lesser number of Jews perished during the years 1939 to {143|144} 1945 than the prosecution witnesses have said perished.

Dr. Faurisson, generally speaking, was of the firm view that there was no organized gassing. There was no gassing at all of any German-held prisoners, be that prisoner Jew or non-Jew.

He relied upon a number of sources. Some of those sources included the Red Cross Tracing Service figures. In Dr. Faurisson's opinion, when the Allied Armies relieved Dachau, Bergen-Belsen and other camps there might have been the first impression that the sad state of the prisoners had existed over that five-year period from 1939, whereas in Dr. Faurisson's opinion that was not the case at all from the documentation and the sources with which he is familiar.

He said that there was a breakdown in food transport, rail transport, and road transport towards the end of the War. That was all caused by the saturation bombing by the Allied aircraft which prohibited the transfer of people, food and communication of all kind resulting in chaos occurring in the camps where these prisoners were being held.

Germany was overrun on both sides, which resulted in temporary but very extreme hardship to {144|145} these prisoners some of whom, he said, died. It also caused the outbreak of epidemics, including typhus, that took away a great number of these prisoners.

He stated that the reliance upon the confessions by captured Nazi war criminals was not a safe basis upon which to come to a conclusion that there was a determined German policy to exterminate Jews in Europe.

He pointed to a number of those captured Nazis who, under arrest, gave confessions. Dr. Faurisson was of the opinion that they were given strictly and only so that those persons could save themselves; they were not, therefore, truthful or accurate or both.

He said that at the Dachau camp today there is a sign in five languages, including English, over the door of a room which says that there was a gas chamber disguised as a shower room that was never used.

He said there are confessions of Germans charged with war crimes. The International War Crimes Tribunals said that there was a gas chamber at Ravensbrück. However, Dr. Faurisson's research indicates that there was no gas chamber at Ravensbrück. His words on this subject and other allied subjects were, "We don't {145|146} know why it has been decided officially that there is a sudden reversal of historians from the time that they said no gas chambers existed to the present where the opposite view is the case."

He was then asked by Mr. Christie about Exhibit 1 and whether or not he has considered whatever evidence exists that six million Jews died in these camps. Dr. Faurisson replied that if he tried to find evidence that a gas chamber existed, there is not the slightest proof that there is one gas chamber that ever existed in Auschwitz or Birkenau.

He said that it was impossible to sustain the belief that six million Jews died in gas chambers. He said that the evidence at Auschwitz, at least, is that there is no sign of a gas chamber. He said the gas chamber charge is a fraud. Stories coming out of Germany at the end of the Second World War indicated first that prisoners were killed by electrocution. That was later changed to stories saying that they died by mass gassings. At other times there were allegations that steam was used to kill prisoners.

When asked, he said that in all of the camps, between two hundred and three hundred fifty {146|147} thousand people were killed. He based these figures on the Red Cross Tracing Service. He was then shown Exhibit 26, the War Refugee Board Report stating that 1,765,000 Jews were gassed, of which a hundred and fifty [thousand] French Jews were included. Dr. Faurisson replied that the figures were not accurate. He did not agree with them. One reason was that the total of Jews deported from France in total only included seventy-five thousand.

He said Nuremberg, however, accepted the higher figure. He quoted Serge Klarsfeld, an author who gave figures. He quoted Vrba's figures of, I believe, 1,065,000. In summary, he said all of these figures are not to be believed because no one has ever told how their particular estimates were arrived at.

Dr. Faurisson was of the view that six million being the number of Jews killed was the figure contained in an affidavit not apparently used at the trial of Nazi war criminals. He said that the War Refugee Board Report, the Hoess confession and the Kurt Gerstein confession were the basis in support of the six million number.

The War Refugee Board Report cannot be believed because it contains information which is {147|148} impossible for anyone to accept. The Hoess confession, he said, concerning two and a half million persons being gassed in the camp, is unrealistic and not to be believed because logistically speaking, in effect, that could not occur.

Faurisson said that he was of the view that in order to kill all these people, there must necessarily have been an order in writing coming down from Hitler or a very high Nazi official. It could not be a verbal order because, he said, everything else in Germany was so minutely covered with paperwork right down to the servicing of the dogs at the Auschwitz camp. All that had been in writing.

He said the Germans put everything in writing, with many signatures, even to the number of prisoners who died, how they had died at a certain time; people had to witness all that. It is very surprising that an order to kill millions of Jews, therefore, would not be in writing.

The Gerstein confession is suspect because Gerstein made it under pressure at a time when he had been under arrest, and if he had not made it, the suggestion from Dr. Faurisson is that the person under {148|149} arrest, Gerstein, would have been turned over to the Russians. In any event, Gerstein's description of people being packed into gas chambers, twenty-eight people per square meter, is exaggerated and not to be believed. He was of the view that the Gerstein confession was used by Dr. Hilberg because Dr. Hilberg badly needed that confession to buttress his own view that gassing did occur to eliminate Jews.

Dr. Faurisson pointed out that the Red Cross did not say anything in its report about gas chambers, did not mention death camps during the course of the War. After the War in Germany the expression "extermination camp" was used in Red Cross Reports. He then stated in his opinion Exhibit 1 is accurate in that there was no genocide and no gas chambers.

He has published to this effect in France. He said genocide is an accusation against the German nation; it is not true. That is the reason he gives. He said he did not believe in the existence of gas chambers. In a recent law suit in which he was involved in France he instructed his lawyer to make his accusers bring even one witness to say that gas chambers existed. Dr. Faurisson said that no one came forward. {149|150} He does not believe that Mr. Urstein saw what Mr. Urstein said he saw. He does not believe that the other witnesses who testified for the Crown gave accurate evidence with respect to gas chambers, because from what Dr. Faurisson has seen in looking at the maps and plans of the prison itself, it would be impossible that gas chambers could have existed at Auschwitz.

He then stated that at the end of the War there were some bodies supposed to have been found in a hospital which, after testing, it was proven that gas had not been used upon them. He said the Red Cross at Auschwitz in September of 1944 spoke to the commandant. The report emanating as a result of that, meeting shows that the Gestapo officers were polite to the Red Cross representative, but that they were reticent to describe what apparently occurred in fear of giving any information.

The "shower room" was mentioned in the report, but the report said it was impossible to prove it because the commandant of the camp said nothing. The report then went on to say, "As we leave Auschwitz, we have the feeling there is a well-grounded mystery."

He said that Hans Frank, the German commander of Poland, was astonished to hear there were {150|151} gas chambers and extermination camps.

The book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century" written by Butz, Dr. Faurisson said he agreed totally with its contents and he would like to have written it; he has great respect for its author. He mentioned Sir Hartley Shawcross, who was a prosecutor at Nuremberg, who said that six million Jews were wiped out in Germany during the War. However the six million, insofar as accuracy is concerned, is overstated. He then said, and I hope I have quoted him correctly, "We have in Germany a few who wrote books containing our views."

He then described how he, himself, was attacked, beaten up and subjected to hardship as a result of the views that he has that the Holocaust did not happen and that certainly no gassings occurred.

He said he found the accused greedy for knowledge and information. Mr. Zundel, he said, constantly asked for information concerning gas chambers. Dr. Faurisson provided that information as best he could.

He said the reason that Hoess, Hoettl and Gerstein were so co-operative in giving their confessions concerning the existence of gas chambers in Germany, he repeated, was that they were afraid that if {151|152} they did not, they would be turned over to the Russians or sent to the Russian area at that time, which was not desirable. He then stated that the existence of the question of gas chambers as covered by the Press and court cases is what he termed as a "sacred cow".

He mentioned a trial where the question was not asked in a court proceeding involving some war crimes in Europe. He criticized many German trials stating that they were not fairly held, that the Western allies told West Germany what to do as the Russians told East Germany what to do.

He gave as an example one story of what allegedly occurred in a gas chamber where he said there were nine untruths in the story concerning children being given towels and soap and joyfully entering a room to be gassed, the room containing false shower heads. One by one, Dr. Faurisson counted the nine untruths that he said existed in that story.

He said that false stories about gas chambers, by reason of their repetition, are coming to be believed. Stories of gas chambers, he said, are individually inconsistent. Every week there is a new story. {152|153}

He said the term "final solution" is territorial in nature. It was used by Reinhard Heydrich, Chief of Police under Himmler, at one time, referring to Jews who were going to be sent eastward and not to be killed, but merely put in camps and displaced. He said the term has been used by others to mean the killing of Jews, but only recently. It is now changing back and it is unclear what the word means.

When he was cross-examined he was asked about the Einsatzgruppen. As I recorded his evidence he made it clear that he specialized only in what he considers to be the core of the Holocaust, namely, the existence or non-existence of gas chambers. He has considered the reports of the Einsatzgruppen's acts, but that is not his specialty. He did not want to go into the subject of numbers in that regard.

He agreed that he had seen the reports of that source reporting the number of dead to Nazi superiors, but he does not remember what the reports contained. He was reminded that he was an expert on the Holocaust. In reply to that he said he was waiting for the real studies on the subject to emerge.

He had no estimate of how many Jews {153|154} died in the ghettos. He had not done that work. He was going to do it, but he has not gotten around to it.

He was then referred to Exhibit page 24, under the heading of "Humane Conditions". He was referred to the words, "Occasionally there was brutality, but such cases were immediately scrutinized by S.S. Judge Dr. Konrad Morgen of the Reich Criminal Police Office, whose job was to investigate irregularities at the various camps".

When asked, Dr. Faurisson agreed that this judge was an S.S. Judge and was the same person upon whom Dr. Faurisson had relied for the information concerning the death figures which he had used. This is the same judge who discussed extermination at the Maidanek camp.

He was then referred to the International Military Tribunal, Volume XX, page 492. That passage concerns the trial of one Wirth, a commander of a camp. Morgen quoted the same judge in that regard that Hitler ordered him to carry out the destruction of Jews. With a small detachment of Jews who were given much freedom and indulgences, yet other Jews were recruited to build yet [more] concentration camps. This was all in connection with a {154|155} Jewish wedding that Judge Morgen at that time was investigating.

Dr. Faurisson, as I recall his evidence, agreed that this was the same incident which described how the trains full of deportees came into the camps, taken off the cars and told they were going to be resettled, but first they had to be stripped of their clothes to be disinfected. They were given claim checks for the clothes while they went into the room which they thought were shower rooms, but in reality were gas chambers.

Dr. Faurisson then spoke in rather deprecating terms of Morgen. Faurisson said Morgen could not be believed in this particular story. He said that there were rumours of gas chambers that started after the War and cannot be supported.

He further went on to say that regarding the camps in the East which were taken over by the Russians, his words were, "We hear nothing about those camps. We have not even been given a plan. They may have been transit camps."

He said there were rumours of gas being used at Belzec. That emerged in the trial of Frank, Governor General of Poland. Dr. Faurisson said that Frank {155|156} took the responsibility and confessed to having exterminated the Jews by using gas in order to save his inferior-in-rank confreres.

Dr. Faurisson said he has not spoken to too many of the survivors, if any, of these camps. He was more interested in what was written that in what people tell him. He put the total deaths of all persons, as I have recorded [sic] his figures, at a top figure of three hundred and fifty thousand.

He agreed that a lot of his information has come from the International Tracing Service where he said there were forty million cards on file.

He seemed to be aware that in 1942, at the London Conference, the Allies had threatened Nazis in Germany that they would be prosecuted if extermination of Jews was not stopped.

He did not expect that railroads would go into such transit camps as Treblinka and Sobibor. He said railroads, if they go into camps, go both ways. This was so because people could come in by railroad [sic], but they could certainly come out by railroad or by other means.

Crown counsel put this suggestion to {156|157} him: "I suggest that the extermination description was consistent in all of the Hoess statements. Was there any significant difference?"

Dr. Faurisson answered: "It's the same vague story. You cannot know the number of gas chambers or their locations."

He said that because there is no evidence that he has heard from any survivor of any systematic approach to starve prisoners in these camps and work them till they died, he did not believe this occurred. He was asked what he thought the gas chamber at Dachau was used for. His reply was, "When I go to Dachau, I see they could not have used it for a gas chamber. It was never finished."

When asked what he thought the room in Dachau was used for, he said it might have been used as a shower room. He said, "I don't know about the ventilation systems. It's like a motel room."

He was then referred to page 11 of Exhibit 1 under the heading of, "Twisted Words and Groundless Assumptions". He was referred to the words about the lack of complete documentary evidence to support {157|158} the existence of an extermination plan has led to the habit of reinterpreting the documents that do survive. He was asked if there was not some evidence of genocide.

He replied, "It is not evidence of genocide because Himmler is speaking to German soldiers and is using war-like talk. They all know it's war-like talk, and everyone who is a soldier in wartime speaks like that."

He did appear to agree, members of the jury, that Hitler did sign a mercy-killing order from a euthanasia point of view for the incurably sick. He said it was odd that there were no documents from the Eastern [sic] camps as to the plans of those camps.

He did agree that the Eastern camps did exist and were called by Himmler as transit camps

I see now, members of the Jury, that it is one o'clock. We will adjourn till two fifteen.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, when Dr. Faurisson was being cross-examined, he observed, in reply to Crown counsel's question, that on previous occasions he has been asked questions by people who say they have lost members of their family during this period of history; he is asked questions as to what happened to the members of their family.

Dr. Faurisson replied that he said to these people that he will provide them with a stamp and ask them to write to him with the name of all of their families who have been lost. He would try to trace those missing persons and let the questioner know. As I recorded his evidence, he said he has never received an answer from any of these people who have put questions like that to him.

Regarding the evidence of Henry Leader, he said that if Mr. Leader would provide him with a list of the members of the family that have been lost, he would check.

In concluding his evidence, Dr. Faurisson branded compensation claims made against Germany {159|160} as a gigantic fraud. He seemed to place a good deal of blame on one Goldman and one Ben Gurion who, he said, were Zionists or members of the Jewish Congress responsible for causing the West German Government of the day to improperly make an extraordinary and very heavy settlement with Israel.

He said that by the words "imaginary slaughter" that were used on page 30 of Exhibit 1 he meant a planned extermination. He said that in his opinion, on what investigations he has done, there was no Holocaust.

He concluded by saying that the Holocaust is a fantastic lie; it is a much bigger lie than those lies that were made against Germany emanating from World War I. In the lie of the Holocaust, as he termed it, he even mentioned that Pope Pius was somehow involved in it.

Dr. Barton is a psychiatrist. He lives in Rochester, New York. He was born in England and took his training there. As a medical student at the age of twenty-two in April 1945 he and a number of other medical students, [sic] he testified, were sent by the World Health Organization into Bergen Belsen. As I {160|161} interpreted his evidence, it was rescue mission to assist the sad state of the inmates of that camp. He was there for a period of thirty days. Bergen Belsen was the only camp that he saw at that time. When he entered the camp with other students he gave a graphic description of what he smelled, what he saw and the absolutely horrific conditions that existed in the camp.

He said it was in a frightful state. There were dead bodies lying around. An air of hopelessness pervaded the whole area. Unwashed and starving people were suffering in great abundance. There was no running water in the camp. The inmates were vomiting. Certain diets were tried without success – in fact, in cases with fatal results.

In the end, at least five thousand of the nine thousand inmates, prisoners who were hospitalized, died. He thought initially what had occurred was what he had heard and accepted as the cause, namely, the planned massacre of these people. However, after making certain investigations and looking at certain records that he found in the camp, looking at the kitchen equipment including large stainless steel vats for cooking {161|162} and things like that, he began to rethink the situation.

He eventually came to the conclusion that this was not planned extermination at all. Rather, it was a condition caused by perhaps more than one cause, but the main one, as I understood his evidence to be, was the fact that this camp was constructed to accommodate a comparatively-speaking small number of inmates; there had been, before his arrival an influx of other prisoners in the figures of fifty to sixty thousand arrivals. They were mainly Jews who arrived from the East as a result of the Russian advance into Germany going west.

In the result, the administrators of Bergen Belsen, according to the evidence of Dr. Barton, were quite unable to cope with this huge influx of new prisoners. So they just gave up and were unable to feed them or care for them.

Typhus, tuberculosis, scurvy and malnutrition increased. It was the overcrowding problem that he viewed when he arrived.

He then went on to say in his evidence as I have recorded it that Bergen Belsen was a camp containing people who were there, in part at least, in {162|163} order to be exchanged by the Germans in return for money or money's worth. Their freedom was bartered for money, in other words.

He said that some inmates, as a result, were well-fed while others starved. He said a certain tyranny existed among the inmates themselves. As a result, there was a good deal of violence and lawlessness in the camp.

The camp was handed over to the Allies before the end of the War was formally pronounced. It was feared by Himmler that typhus would get out of the camp and affect the whole of Germany.

He was then asked by defence counsel to define the term "brainwashing". He gave as an example of what he referred to as brainwashing the Church of Scientology. He then described the process of brain washing whereby certain members of certain groups go through a process of constant repetition, threat, suggestion and promise where rewards are offered over and over again until such time as the subject is brainwashed and comes to temporarily or sometimes longer I believe in the idea that is inculcated into that person's mind. {163|164}

He said those who have a sense of humour or have an independent frame of thought are usually culled from that group first because they are not susceptible to being brainwashed. He was of the opinion that debate or free speech in an open society is essential to counteract brainwashing.

He said that while he does not believe that the deaths that he saw in Bergen Belsen were the result of intentional starvation of inmates, murder starvation and oppression did exist in that camp.

When he was cross-examined he reiterated that he found the conditions he described as having been due to the influx of people. He said again that this was a camp where people could be held in exchange for money. He agreed that the more healthy they appeared, the more money they would be worth.

He agreed that when prisoners came into the camp by train it was possible to bring in food to feed them on the same train that was employed to transport prisoners there in the first place.

He also said that Hitler's Nazi Germany hooked the German people to the tenets of Nazism by giving certain members of the population property {164|165} that Nazis had confiscated from other persons. He did not agree that all of the Nazis at Nuremberg were brainwashed. He described Goering as an evil example of one, who could never be brainwashed.

Thies Christopherson was the next witness. He lives in Germany in the district of Schleswig-Holstein. He is aged sixty-seven. He served as an officer in the German Army in the Second World War.

He served for part of that time after he was wounded in 1939, the Blietzkrieg [Blitzkrieg] started and the Maginot Line was breached in France, by going first of all to Russia and then he was posted to a camp in the Auschwitz complex.

He said he only heard after the War about allegations of wholesale massacre of Jews at Auschwitz. He did not believe these stories. He said they were absolutely impossible to believe. When he heard those stories he branded them as having emanated as a result of propaganda.

He spoke to inmates of Auschwitz and rumours went around concerning gassing. He said he never saw the slightest evidence of any mass gassing at Auschwitz. He never smelled burning flesh. The air in Auschwitz was {165|166} very clean. He never saw the flames coming from any of the chimneys, crematoria, but people told him about this.

He heard about this first from his housemaid who was also a prisoner. She told him. He said he then took his bicycle and went to find places, but he could not find any evidence regarding cremation or anything about these rumours.

He understood that at the time about a hundred and forty to two hundred thousand people were in the Auschwitz area. He was told there was a crematorium at Auschwitz. He was not restricted in travelling through the camp.

He held a special rank as an officer with the letter "Z" attached to it. Inmates who were detailed to him to work came from Birkenau, and they were sent into the fields to work each day on rubber plants and he sent them out. He listened to their complaints. He tried to help these people, but always in an acceptable and straightforward manner.

He heard no stories from the inmates about mass gassings. When he heard stories he reported them to his superior officer first. He then described the camp as being a place where religious services were held {166|167} in special rooms set up for the religious requirement of all the denominations.

He said there was a cinema or movie theatre van that arrived in camp periodically. Workers under his charge went back to Birkenau every night. He got to know them on a first name basis by calling them Miss or Mrs. with some of them. He said that labour was not compulsory. One did not have to work if one did not want to.

He said around Birkenau there was a swamp with bushes and trees with some high ground some distance away, but if one dug a hole six meters square by six meters deep, it would fill up with water. One million people could not have passed through Birkenau; that would have been impossible.

He then said that in the beginning some of the inmates who worked under his jurisdiction at Birkenau seemed to appear to be physically weak, but after they had been working for a couple of weeks, they had regained their strength.

When he was cross-examined he admitted that he has been convicted of defamation against the State in Germany. He received a jail sentence. {167|168}

He said he never saw a crematorium at Birkenau, but he said he knew that one existed. He marked the Kanada location as to where he went on one of the exhibits with the initials "TC". He was never at Crematoriums IV or V, but he did mark where he was at Krema III.

He was then referred to page 18 of Exhibit and page 37 of his book written in German, where the following words appear: "After the War, Christopherson came to hear of a building with gigantic chimneys near the main camp."

He said that these were supposed to be the crematoria, but when he left Auschwitz in 1944, he had not seen the buildings there. He said that those words referred to the main camp and not to Birkenau.

He was then reminded by Crown counsel that he had just said in evidence that he had seen a crematorium itself. He replied that he was never inside the crematorium; that is what he meant; but he agreed he saw it from the outside.

He said that at midday prisoners received a hot meal of soup with meat in it, and occasionally they brought sandwiches from Birkenau to {168|169} eat in the field.

He said the Red Cross was in the camp in the summer, and all he saw was the red cross on the white vehicles. He did not speak to any representatives.

He said the publisher of the German version of Exhibit 1 is someone who is now serving a long jail term in Germany as a result of a bombing incident.

He said again that there was a room for religious services in Birkenau. Then he appeared to change his mind and said no, that that room was in the camp at Raisco [Rajsko] where he was located.

He said that celebrations of thanksgiving were held in camp, and they were very large performances. The prisoners provided the decorations and the orchestra. He then agreed with the cross-examiner that what the prisoners were doing was serving the Germans. The prisoners were waiters and the like.

He then said that prisoners could leave and go on leave, go away from the camp and come back, take a little holiday; they were replaced by another person until the prisoner who got out came back. {169|170} That was the evidence of Christopherson.

Dr. Lindsey is a chemist. He has been employed for many years with a large chemical firm. He works in the field of polymers, working with polyesters and things like that at the moment. His firm packages food.

He has always been interested in history and has attempted to apply his knowledge of chemistry to history. He was qualified as an expert in chemistry.

He has read a number of books including a book by Dr. Hilberg. He has also read material on the subject of the Nuremberg Trial. He became involved in researching the alleged war crimes in Poland. He has read Exhibit 1 written by Harwood. He read the Gerstein document and other documents.

In his studies he has researched Zyklon-B gas and its connection, if any, with inmates of concentration camps. He said that the subject was first stated to have occurred in a Polish investigation and at the trial regarding two German S.S. men. He looked at the accusations made in that trial and others.

He visited a number of camps, including {170|171} Auschwitz, Dachau, Maidanek, Mauthausen, Birkenau, Belzec, Chelmno, Sobibor and Lublin. He acknowledge[d] that people who support the fact that the Holocaust occurred outnumber those who doubt that it did.

On Zyklon-B gas, he said Zyklon-B is a trade name. It has been a product in existence for a long time. It is a deadly poison employed to kill animals, insects and vermin. It is very deadly.

He said Zyklon-B is produced with an agent to hold the gas stable and to convert it into a gaseous substance at a later time. He said once the content of the can of Zyklon-B is opened, all of the contents must be used.

Hydrogen cyanide, he said, is lighter than air. When it vaporizes it rises to the top of a room. He said it is unlikely that it was used, because if people climbed over one another to get to the highest point, if the gas rises, that would be unlikely.

He said that in his travels in Europe to look at German camps he saw crematoriums three times. He looked at aerial photographs. He then replied in answer to a question that with Zyklon-B, heat is required to vaporize it. {171|172}

When asked about evidence of witnesses who saw flames going many feet above the top of a chimney, he stated that high heat drains the mortar of its moisture and causes the mortar holding the bricks to disintegrate, thereby destroying the chimney.

He concluded that mass gassings in these camps did not occur. He has been forced to conclude this opinion and find that it was impossible that mass gassings happened in the manner that has been described. 2.5 million people could not have been gassed in crematoriums II, III, IV and V at Auschwitz-Birkenau.

The crematorium in Auschwitz is really an old ammunition magazine from the First World War. It would be impossible to use it as a gas chamber to kill people in the way it was alleged that this all occurred because it would require more hours to do it in a day than exist in a day.

The effect of the volume of gas escaping would make it difficult for anyone to work with the dead bodies. He concluded by saying that nobody was wilfully killed or intentionally killed by the Germans through the use of Zyklon-B. He has communicated this information to Mr. Zundel on more than one occasion. {172|172a}

This witness is a member of the Institute of Historical Review in California. He said that there was a great deal of interest in that organization in this subject.

He said gas masks are of little value unless you walk in and out of a chamber very quickly. Diesel engines take too long to produce the deadly gas to kill people.

He was then asked about the words used by the commentator on the film where the reference was made to the clothes of persons being hung up while they went into the gas chamber which produced the gas through pipes.

He said that when he looked, the camps involved do not have a gas chamber. When he was cross-examined he agreed that his knowledge of Zyklon-B comes from documents he has read and not from his personal experience with the substance.

He agreed that hydrogen chloride is a chemical some people can smell and others cannot. He then agreed that the Germans were going to use this substance as a gas to turn against opposing military forces, but the gas is so dangerous that they did not do it. {172a|173}

He said the dispute then arose over the warning that had to be put on each canister, and whether it should be left off the canister entirely. He said eventually it was taken off. He agreed that hydrogen cyanide boils at a temperature of seventy degrees fahrenheit.

When asked, he agreed that this gas is just a little bit lighter than air. If it were introduced into a room, it would rise slowly with those at the bottom being affected first. Those at the bottom, the children, he agreed, would be affected first. It would therefore have been likely that children would have been dead at the bottom with the adults on top.

He also agreed that the level of concentration of the gas in the air must reach a certain stage of density before death can occur through the skin. Hydrogen cyanide does not have an effect on a human body if the dose is sufficiently low. As long as the dose is not lethal, death does not follow.

He said coke is usually what is burned in blast furnaces. A lot of chimneys are built with special liners. He was asked whether he would be surprised if the liners were not put into chimneys at these {173|174} camps. He did say that the inmates built those chimneys to the best of his information.

He agreed that more hydrogen cyanide is required to kill bugs and cold-blooded creatures than it does to kill warm-blooded creatures like human beings.

Ditlieb Felderer was the next witness. He swore that one time he was a Jehovah's Witness. He is no longer a member of that religious persuasion. At one time he was a strong believer that the Jews were gassed by the Nazis during World War II; he then came to realize that Zionists were using the Holocaust for their own propaganda purposes.

He made inquiries. As a result he calls himself a revisionist. His words were, "We get together about whether there were gas chambers."

Over the last thirty years he has been to Birkenau twenty-seven to thirty times. He has seen the interior of every building there, including the kitchens and the theatre at Auschwitz, and he photographed a swimming pool at Auschwitz, between 1978 and the early nineteen eighties. He also photographed a theatre. In all, he has taken thirty thousand pictures.

He has crawled inside the smoke channel {174|175} of the crematoria at Auschwitz and says that the channel does not go straight [sic] up, but stops at a pile of bricks inside it. The doors on Krema I, he said, are fakes; the ovens are fakes.

At Birkenau and in Crematorium II he was not allowed in any of the buildings around that area, but he made ingenious efforts to get into those buildings and succeeded. He examined the openings of the vents on top of the building known as the sauna. He said obviously somebody used a sledge hammer to open it up.

He searched for drainage in the building and searched for the blue colour that he said must be left by Zyklon-B on the bricks if that gas is used. He has photographs, he says, of the fake doors and the fake people in the artificial Krema ovens.

He used these photographs, including that of a swimming pool and a theatre, to explain what he calls the ridiculous suppositions of those who say people were gassed at Birkenau and Auschwitz. He thinks it is vital that people be shown this is a hoax. He is of the view that all hoaxes should be shown to people, especially historical hoaxes. He branded the Holocaust {175|176} as a historical hoax.

He calls his slides and the show he puts on with them, "The hoax of Auschwitz". He said, as I understood his evidence, that the inmates of Auschwitz swam in the pool; they had a banquet hall. He said the springboard apparatus on the pool is still there; he even described that there is a grotesque figure that takes water in and out, some figure on the water faucet.

He circled the Block 25 location of what he called the secret museum on one of the exhibits. He said that the museum contains a showcase including compositions made by inmates, including the Auschwitz Waltz. There are copies of letters to the outside, and very peaceful paintings done by inmates are in this museum. He says it is a secret museum.

He then described the banquet rooms for inmates where they used to dance to an orchestra. He described the sauna as a huge room, basement full of water that could not possibly have been used as a gas chamber.

He said he uses all of this information and he uses satire to expose hoaxes. He said he is a {176|177} person who has had trouble all his life. He then identified quite voluntarily another hoax, namely the Indians of North America. He said it was really the other way around, that it was the white people who scalped the Indians in North America in order to collect money. He called this another hoax that "we have encountered"

In cross-examination he agreed he was not an archeologist nor a forester, not a person who has studied forestry. He knows something about building because he has built a lot of Kingdom Halls. He said that the football field that was at Auschwitz has been moved and taken right out by the people who run the camp as a tourist attraction at the present time.

He said there are a number of authors that he quotes as his authority for saying that there was a hospital at Auschwitz for the prisoners. It is those same authorities that he quotes for the support of his view that there was a dance hall at Auschwitz for the prisoners. He said all of these pieces of information come from other authors.

He agreed that he was ejected from this courtroom last week for distributing pamphlets challenging {177|178} Dr. Hilberg to a debate. A sample of that pamphlet is Exhibit 41.

Members of the jury, that pamphlet is an exhibit here so that you may be permitted to assess the weight, if any, that you will accord to the evidence of Mr. Felderer. It is not here to prove the truth of its contents. You should only employ it in the way that I have stated and in no other way.

Mr. Felderer said he was convicted in Sweden for spreading material that he said Zionists did not like. He was then shown a number of documents which he recognized. He said he distributed Exhibit 42, which is a cartoon which shows a figure of what appears to be a male person in caricature, and underneath the words, "I was gassed six times, no, ten times," etcetera.

He used the words to Mr. Griffiths in cross-examination in the following way. He said, "We published this flyer. Like Voltaire, we use satire. Satire should be used. The flyer was written by me."

He used another phrase, "Our flyers are smuggled into communist countries". He then read back from the back of what is now Exhibit No. 43. I am sure you will read that. That is to be used, members {178|179} of the jury, by you in the same way as the other exhibit.

He agreed that he prints material and distributes that material under the name of "Jewish Information". He does that because at one time he was expelled from a Jewish Synagogue which he alleged was prosecuting him.

He said, "We have Zionist information, Jehovah Witness information, Catholic information because the Catholics say they believe in saints." He then said, "We try to be friends with everybody."

He said in conclusion that the so-called Holocaust experts avoid debates. He wanted to debate with Dr. Hilberg because, he said, Dr. Hilberg is a hoax and he wanted a confrontation in order to prove this.

He distributes millions of pieces of literature around the world and uses satire to expose what he considers to be a hoax. He does not like to be lied to or fooled.

Members of the jury, there then followed a number of witnesses. Hans Schroeder was one. Mr. Auerswald was another. Jurgen Newmann [Neumann] was the third. {179|180} Frank Walus was a fourth. Mr. Zundel's son was yet another. Those witnesses all testified essentially to the fact that each has known the accused, Mr. Zundel, for varying periods of time. Each spoke in complimentary terms of the character of Mr. Zundel as being a person who had a good reputation, at least in the community that each witness was aware. Each found the accused to be helpful and trustworthy.

That evidence is admissible, members of the jury, so that you can employ it if you accept it, when you consider the credibility, if any, that you will accord to the evidence of Mr. Zundel when he testified. That evidence is admissible in that regard if you choose to accept it. You can accept all of it, part of it or none of it in the same way that you accept the evidence of any witness.

Douglas Collins testified as a witness on behalf of the defence. As I recall his testimony, he said that he read Exhibit No. 2 and did not agree with it, but it was a point of view. He said he read Exhibit 1 and did not agree with all of it, but he agreed with some of it and it was a point of view.

Mr. Walendy is German by nationality. {180|181} He is a writer. He has published a number of books on his own behalf which he has written, and books on behalf of others. He is a trained journalist. He wrote the book, "Europe in Flames".

He has been corresponding over the past several years with Mr. Zundel. He has supplied Mr. Zundel with information concerning the Holocaust. He made it clear that he does not believe that the Holocaust ever occurred. He said that the Allies in World War II did not know about any alleged persecution of the Jews until the end of the War and there have been many stories written on the subject.

The stories, he said, became enmeshed with one another, and while separately, they were uncoordinated in that they all came together with their contradictions; they produced an unclear and improbable, fanciful result.

He related, in support, the trial of a German engineer from the Farben Industrial Complex in Germany who was tried, as I understood the evidence, for complicity of the deaths of prisoners in these camps because the engineer was instrumental in the design or installation or both of the equipment in order to carry {181|182} out what was alleged to have been gassing.

The witness said that there has been much research in progress since the end of World War II in this particular area, and that many writers have written on the subject and on the number of Jews that were supposed to have perished, with the result that the numbers vary from fifteen thousand to six million.

Mr. Walendy says he owns and runs a book-selling service, as he said the accused does. He was mildly critical of Mr. Zundel for having written on such subjects as flying saucers, but he said generally speaking, Mr. Zundel's writings are accepted with acclaim by the critics in Germany.

Mr. Walendy then made a very careful statement that there is no evidence that any Jew died as a result of being gassed in Germany. In his opinion, the six million figure included the number who may have been shot in Poland or other territories by the Einsatzgruppen, shot as partisans, or who died as servicemen with various armed forces.

He pointed out that no order of Hitler, Himmler or Heydrich to murder Jews has ever been turned up. He seemed to be of the view that the Western Jews {182|183} and Russian Jews have worked together to the detriment of the Balkan countries in the nineteen thirties. As a result of their having destroyed the intelligence of the Baltic States, when the Germans invaded these countries, many Jews were badly treated, but that bad treatment cannot be laid at the door of Hitler or Himmler. They were shot due to local anger and resentment, or they were mistreated in that way.

He agreed that he was on the editorial board of the Board of Historical Review along with Dr. Faurisson. Dr. Walendy has been a speaker in California. He knows Drs. Weber and Lindsey. He knows Mr. Felderer. They have all been involved with the Board of Historical Review.

He was then asked and he agreed that it seemed that Himmler at one time tried to get ownership, trusteeship of the land on which Auschwitz was located. He reiterated that the British and Americans had no knowledge of what went on in the camps until after the War.

He said that while he has never printed Exhibit 1, he had the publishing rights for all of Germany for that exhibit, which he does not now {183|184} publish because so many people get upset.

Ernst Zundel, the accused, testified on his own behalf. He was born in the Black Forest area of Germany in 1939. As a very young child he recalls the Allied bombing of his area and the effects of the results it had on not only himself, but members of his family.

He described the hardships as the War against Germany came to an end. After the currency reform in 1948, the ruined Germany came to life, the country began to prosper. His education, however, was hampered in that, he said, the textbooks he was given to read at school were censored, and the programme of de-Nazification which was started by the Allies, which included Canadians, British and Americans, continued [sic] for quite some time.

It was only at a later stage that Mr. Zundel discovered that the history that he was learning in school was one-sided. He went to a trade school and became a commercial artist. He then began to work and met people of all kinds and of all backgrounds. He came to disbelieve everything he had learned about history in school up to that time. {184|185}

At this time, the West German government was in the process of creating its own defence force. Mr. Zundel did not want to be a soldier. He even thought of leaving West Germany and going to East Germany. However he learned of a Canadian advertisement for immigrants, he applied and was accepted to this country.

He arrived here and immediately got a job paying him a very good salary in the field of graphic art. He was a photo retoucher. He married and was making sufficient monies that he and his wife were able to travel three months a year by taking trips. This provided him with the opportunity and, as he said, the excuse to meet various authors, persons of that type. He came to Canada because Canada had no army.

In seeking out authors, he was seeking for a way to get rid of the North American perception of Germans. He did not like watching such programmes as Hogan's Heroes and The Rat Patrol on television. He decided to go into in-depth research in order to change that image in the eyes of others who were not German.

The first thing that he learned was that the Allies were heroes with clay feet, as he said. He discovered that the white-skinned Canadians put others {185|186} in camps during the War. The Germans, he discovered, were also regarded as having a bad public image that he wanted to negate. It was a stereotype he wanted to change.

He engaged in letter-writing campaigns. He wrote to Canadian authorities to complain about this negative stereotype. He even ran for public political office. In 1977 and 1979 he began to concentrate on the Holocaust as an interest. He described it as an interest that became overwhelming. The guilt feelings that all Germans had, including himself, bothered him. He had the feeling that most Germans would not kill Jews.

He then began to doubt that the Germans [sic] killed six million Jews, that this was not true. The people he interviewed had something to say in that regard that would be of assistance. He spoke to a lot of people on the subject for a long time.

He spoke to physicians who treated Hitler. He became convinced that there was something that was not right about the Holocaust. Every time you turned on the television you saw Nazi flags and other things that were negative of the Germans. They showed {186|187} the Germans to be cowards, butchers and the Colonel Klinks of this world. Books that were being sold were on the subject of Nazi war criminals. He began to read.

He then described how comic books for children were sold in millions in the United States all showing the Germans as killers. That disturbed him. He had read enough.

He mentioned in his evidence that the Japanese were badly treated in a racial manner in Canada in camps during the War. He said if you read one Holocaust story, you have read them all because they are all the same. He said, "It becomes one big blob; the same story."

He became involved with other members of the German community. He became, as he described it, their ombudsman. He said, "We Germans have forgiven the Allies for the bombing raids during the War and for the treatment of prisoners." He said the biggest offenders were the comic books that have been put into circulation in the United States.

He described Dr. Vrba's book as one containing much artistic liberty. He began to describe the research that he has done. In this regard he was shown and he identified twenty-five or thirty books in {187|188} the English language. He was shown an almost equal number of books in the German language. Those in the English language are now exhibits. Some of the authors of those books he met and spoke with. He had correspondence with others. Yet others are unknown to him personally. In some cases he obtained affidavits from these persons.

Mr. Zundel's object always was to find out whether or not, and to confirm, as I understood his evidence, that there were no gas chambers employed in any of the German camps that killed prisoners, especially Jews.

He obtained affidavits that the apparatus installed allegedly for killing people in Auschwitz was installed by the Russians after the War so that it could be displayed for propaganda purposes.

He collaborated with Dr. Faurisson on the subject of Zyklon-B to show what kind of buildings would be needed, and with that he analogized American gas chambers used in the United States to kill civilian persons convicted of serious criminal offences.

When asked by Mr. Christie, he called the Holocaust a historical lie, in the same way as Dr. {188|189} Faurisson called it a historical lie. Mr. Zundel is of the view that between seven and eight hundred thousand Jews died in the Second World War in total.

He interviewed one Dr. App, who is now dead. He consulted an engineer about the gas chambers. He interviewed a Dr. Martin of Denver, Colorado, also a member of the Institute of Historical Review.

Mr. Zundel, in reading all these books, concluded that it would be physically impossible from a scientific point of view for Jews to be killed in gas chambers and Nazi prison camps. It would be impossible to kill them in the numbers that it is said they were killed by gassing, and then to send the bodies out and to accommodate those bodies in the crematoria that were there.

He has relied on Mr. Felderer's photographs taken of these camps. He said there was a swimming pool at Auschwitz that he saw in Felderer's photographs. There was a theatre for inmates to act out plays. He said there was a photo of a fencing match going on. Food served to the inmates was as good as any meal you can get in a cafeteria. {189|190}

He could not locate on the Auschwitz map Dr. Vrba's mortuary that Vrba swore existed, presided over by Mr. Wetzler. He has employed a lot of people to do research for him. He wanted to write on the subject concerning the Holocaust and did six million really die. He could not bring himself to do it because the subject was so distasteful.

He then read Exhibit No. 1. He thought it was a short version. He thought it was a vehicle that people could read and that he could sell. He imported them from England to start with. They arrived badly packaged. He then found an American source and decided to market Exhibit No. 1 by publishing the same.

He said if he was going to be closed down for hate literature, he would proceed with this book, Exhibit 1. His words, as I have recorded them, were, "If this was hate literature, I would have to publish it quickly."

He agreed that he overlooked some portions concerning the accuracy and truthfulness of the exhibit, but it was his opinion that it was ninety-nine per cent true.

He related then how he has been threatened {190|191} by the R.C.M.P., how he has been harassed by the Holocaust Association and the Jewish Defence League. He mentioned a certain television commentator who was fired for calling Israel an inappropriate nasty name.

He then said that there was a terror loose in the land for people to criticize the Holocaust. He described how he said his house has been bombed.

Mr. Zundel then testified that he hopes, after he has successfully completed his mission concerning the Holocaust, to then overturn the Nuremberg Trials.

He said that Dr. Vrba's claim of the number of Jews killed in Auschwitz is outrageous. The height of the buildings where the so-called gas chambers are located is barely above the ground in reality and was built in such a way that it would be impossible to accommodate the number of victims, and that was plain.

He called the film produced by the American Army when they liberated the camps sad. It was sad that Germans would be in charge of people in this condition. He said the producers of the film were blaming the Germans, but the Germans were as much victims of the War as the people who were in the camp. {191|192}

Members of the jury, I am sure that when you recall what you saw on the film, you will recall having seen German civilians being brought from the nearby towns to view what went on in the camps. I am sure you will recall what those civilians looked like and you will compare what those civilians looked like insofar as the health of their bodies was concerned with what you observed and the health of the bodies of the inmates who were seen inside that camp. That is for you to decide.

Exhibit 94 is a book that Mr. Zundel produced which lists a number of Jews who have become prominent in America. He swore that the author of the book seems to be proud of the fact that these people are Jews.

He refers to Jews being in charge of such powerful media outlets as the Washington Post newspaper, the New York Times, the Columbia Broadcasting Corporation. He even mentioned Paul Godfrey of Toronto who is now a publisher of the Toronto Sun.

Mr. Zundel was of the opinion that six million Jews could not have been killed in these camps because there was not enough coal or wood to do the job {192|193} for the bodies, nor were the furnaces large enough to accommodate all of the victims.

He said the Holocaust is a macabre, vicious joke. It is a con game on the people who go to Auschwitz out of respect of those they think died there.

He said that Dennis Urstein's evidence was, in essence, false. Urstein was not where he said he was. The building where Urstein said he removed bodies was below ground, yet Urstein said that was not so.

He then quoted various pieces of literature as to the very number of Jews that were killed from a very low number up to six million or more. Mr. Zundel takes the position that this is all a myth, with one story being added to another until all of the stories are rolled up together and a totally false picture emerges.

He repeated on more than one occasion during his testimony that the terrible death number reported in the German concentration camps were due to disease rather than gassing or deliberate German organized mistreatment and genocide.

He said that the Allied Wartime {193|194} diplomacy injected much propaganda into all of these things that have emerged in this trial with the purpose of distracting public attention at the end of the War from what the communist armies might do in Europe to the countries which they overran. They decided, instead, to concentrate on alleged Nazi atrocities to remove the public consciousness from the threat of the Russians over to allegations of atrocity on the part of the Nazis.

He said that Himmler's speech at Posen is suspect. It may have been a speech, in any event, that normal men give when they talk war talk; that is the kind of a speech and talk that ordinary men not being involved in War would never use in different circumstances. It is no different than the type of war talk that leaders on the Allied side employed.

He then proceeded to quote from books written by President Roosevelt's son and other prominent Americans who thought that Nuremberg's justice left a great deal to be desired, that the trials that alleged Nazi war criminals received at Nuremberg was not up to the usual American standard of justice.

He gave his reasons as to why he thought the Nuremberg Trials were not fair to the defence, even {194|195} to the lower ranks of the S.S. They were labelled as criminals who Mr. Zundel thought should not have been there.

We will now adjourn for ten minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:25 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:45 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, Mr. Zundel identified Exhibits 156 through 168. These are all books and periodicals on the subject of Freemasonry. He said in answer to questions put by counsel that some of the subjects covered by these books he has read, he has formed an honest belief on what he has read as to their contents; others confirm a belief he had.

He stated that with respect to the contents of Exhibit No. 2 and the relationship of secret societies with Jewish connections, he repeated that Freemasonry was the cause of the French Revolution. He described how Freemasonry came to North America and the Christian relationships to secret societies.

He said the Roman Catholic Church does {195|196} not want its members to be Masons or join the memberships that he has named. He mentioned somebody in the United States that came to his death as a result of implications of Freemasonry. He said that George Washington overthrew the Government of Great Britain in the United States, that he was a Mason, and that Newsweek, in June of 1981, described an Italian scandal with a lodge, presumably Masonic, that is supposed to have defrauded the Italian State of much money.

Mr. Zundel said there is great ignorance in North America about Freemasonry. Europeans deal with the subject all the time in their writings. His desire is to alert people in North America that there is a secret society which is powerful and which has international connections.

He identified the New Catholic Encyclopaedia as one of the sources for his honest beliefs.

He said that when he used the words in Exhibit 2, "vicious, militant and greedy persons who call themselves Jews", he was referring to people who have threatened him, assaulted him, demonstrated around his house and made threatening telephone calls. These {196|197} people he believes to be members of an organization called the Jewish Defence League.

He was cross-examined. He agreed that he is one and the same person as the Christof who is named on the book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why". He supplied the photographs that went into that book. He did not write the copy that appears under the photographs. Someone else did that. He supplied the photographs to George Deaks who owns the American White Power Publication Company. Free of charge, Mr. Deaks advertised "The Hitler We Loved & Why" as a favour to Mr. Zundel.

Mr. Zundel said that he, unbeknownst to himself, was named as a director on the board of White Power, but when he found out, he demanded that his name be taken off the board.

He looked at the book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why" and did not seem to see much wrong with its contents. At page 21, for example, he agreed that he supplied that photograph. He said that the copy of the words under it are acceptable to him. The copy under the photograph on page 32 would not have been written by him in the way it appears.

He agreed that he has contributed an {197|198} article to White Power, but he contributed that article under a name other than his own. He advertises certain cassette tapes and other types of tapes for sale.

For example, Tape 41 contains instructions on how to fool radio stations and the media by talking about unidentified flying objects, or UFOs, and then to use that as a wedge to discuss [sic] such subjects as Jewish problems and the Holocaust.

By using the words "Battle for Aryan men", he meant marches and advocating political action. He was asked regarding Tape No. 50, if the white race was in good shape. As I understood his reply he said it was not, because Jews control the newspapers.

He said that Aryans are Caucasians. If a person who is Jewish abandons his being Jewish, he can become an Aryan. By an Aryan victory, he meant freeing ourselves from lies. He said that we are allowing ourselves to be conquered by communists and Zionists.

When asked what he meant by the words, "All we need is truth", he then mentioned an analogy of a pickpocket being loose in a hall containing a thousand people. Even if no one touched the pickpocket, that {198|199} pickpocket was a danger to all until he was caught and eliminated from the room or taken out of the room.

He said that Mr. Friedman lied about the height of the flames coming out of the chimney at Birkenau, and that he could not smell burning flesh.

The book, "The Hitler We Loved & Why", is sold by him for money. It is one of the many books that he sells.

He was asked about Exhibit No. 2. He said he did not single out any Canadian banks. The reference has always been to American banks and American newspapers such as the Washington Post, the New York Times and papers in Los Angeles.

He said that banks have money, that wealth is power and power is influence. He is not an expert in the banking field. He did not delve into banking with as much thoroughness as he did the Holocaust legend, as he calls it.

Near the end of his evidence, members of the jury, I have written down what I thought Mr. Zundel said concerning his reference to all of these books. His words were, as I recorded them, "All of this only confirms what I already knew when I wrote 'The West, {199|200} War and Islam'."

He identified an article he wrote for Samisdat in 1980 directed to the people of Germany. One of the titles is "Samisdat Struggle Tips". At the bottom there is a note with the words that, "Germany's time has come. The Jews are only capable of rearguard action. At last the ideals of our fathers would be realized all over the world."

When asked what he meant by "ideals", he said hard work, frugality and honesty.

Harwood, who appears to be the author of Exhibit 1, Mr. Zundel said really is not named Harwood at all, apparently. Rather, the name of the author is one Verral[?]. Mr. Zundel found this out in 1982 or 1983. Mr. Varrel [sic] has since retired and will not attend this trial.

At page 4, under the heading of "Racial Problems Suppressed", Mr. Zundel appears to agree that the Zionists threaten the survival of the race itself if they continue doing what he said they are doing now. He then related how he met the French Canadian Arcand who was a member of the Canadian National Socialist Party, the symbol of which was a beaver over a swastika surrounded {200|201} by maple leaves.

Mr. Zundel said that the platform of the party was for Jews to be deported from Canada. He wrote letters of introduction so the accused could meet various people in Great Britain[.]

Page 6, on the detention of enemy aliens, Mr. Zundel said he agreed that in Germany, from 1933 onward, the Jews were disenfranchised. Their passports were stamped with a "J". They were not citizens anymore as of 1935. No Jew could practise law except in a Jewish court. No Jew could teach except in a Jewish school. Jews could not hold public office.

He agreed that Eichmann offered to free a million Jews in return for military equipment in 1944. That was refused by the Allies. He said he wished the British had gone for the "truck deal", because many of the Jews who died at the end of the War would be with us today.

He was aware of the London Conference in 1942 when the Allies warned of the consequences of the mistreatment of Jews in Europe. To that he said the Allies were preparing a propaganda campaign and had {201|202} no knowledge of what was going on, if anything, in the camps in Nazi Germany.

He said, with regard to "Confessions Under Torture", he agreed that under this heading extermination is discussed rather than what would logically follow.

He knows of no German documents that the Einsatzgruppen killed hundreds and thousands of Jews. He said all documents in Allied hands are suspect. The numbers quoted killed by the Einsatzgruppen are exaggerated.

With regard to Exhibit 2 he said that when he referred to the West, he means the entire Western culture. The CBC, the BBC and others frequently are employed to put down Islamic people. Some of these stations are controlled by Zionists.

He said Exhibit 2 was sent to twelve hundred people. He repeated that this was at a time of agitation for war in the Middle East. He thought he could do something to calm things down.

Regarding the phrase employed, "The brainwashed Christians of the West", he says he has three files on vicious Jews, greedy Jews and militant Jews, and {202|203} a third file. When asked if the Council of Christians and Jews is part of a Zionist conspiracy, he answered affirmatively.

In 1981 he said to his German supporters that justice will be meted out to their tormentors. His quotation, "From the barrel of a gun" was something taken from Mao Tse Tung. He admitted having written, "While we have been dealing with these traitors for years, they may as well know that everyone of them has long been recorded, and all of them, every single one of them, will be made accountable this time."

When asked if that would be from the barrel of a gun, he replied, "That would only occur after proper Court proceedings had occurred."

Members of the jury, what I have gone through today, by way of a review of the evidence, is only a very small part of the evidence that was heard in the last seven weeks. If I went over all of the evidence, we would be here for another seven weeks, and I have no intention that that should occur.

It is your recall of the evidence and not mine that is all important. If what I have repeated does not accord with your recall of the evidence, then {203|204} you are duty bound to follow your own recall and to totally disregard mine.

What I have attempted to do here is to put back into your consciousness, evidence that took place in this courtroom a long time ago in part. I hope that I have succeeded.

I should also say to you that your duty is to listen to all of the evidence and not just part of it. Merely because I have not repeated all of the evidence does not mean that what I have not repeated is unimportant. It is very important.

All evidence is important. I know you have listened to it all with great care. I only wished to emphasize that your duty is to listen to all of the evidence and not just part of it. You have done that, and with those mild admonitions I now turn to summarize some of the positions of counsel in this trial.

Again I repeat that what I am about to say now is only a portion of what each counsel has submitted to you. Their addresses have been very recently given. The contents of each, I am sure, are fresh in your mind. {204|205}

Some, but not necessarily all of what Mr. Christie had to say to you, is as follows:

He submits that in Exhibit 1 there is justification in law and fact for Mr. Zundel having published, "Did Six Million Really Die?" He reminds you there is no evidence of the existence of an order from Hitler or Himmler or anyone else, if one ever did exist, even verbally, to the effect that the Jews of Europe should be exterminated. There is no order to the Einsatzgruppen or to anyone else to that effect.

The words "out of the barrel of a gun" which were written by the accused were written at a point when the accused was angry. In any event, they constitute a quotation from a leader of China of some years ago.

There is no proof beyond a reasonable doubt on all of the evidence that the contents of either Exhibit 1 or Exhibit 2 are false. The Crown has failed to prove that. At the very least, there is a reasonable doubt to which the accused is entitled.

You are reminded that the accused has spent a hundred thousand dollars or more in defending himself. He has brought to court all of these books {205|206} because he honestly believes in their contents. He employed their contents as well as other sources to arrive at that honest belief.

It is submitted to you that the Germans are entitled to find out the truth. The Germans have been portrayed as butchers of six million people, which is a false portrayal. The six million story is incorrect and it is untrue.

The witness, Arnold Friedman, did not really see chimneys belching with smoke. That is because there was a total absence of sufficient supplies, if any, of coal or coke. There is not a line of evidence that the S.S. ever unloaded coal trucks, coal trains. There is no evidence that coke trains were unloaded by anybody. Certainly it would not be the S.S. or the Germans that did it, but the prisoners.

You are asked, in submission, to remember that to supply enough coke at the rate of eighty pounds of coke to cremate one body, you would need a hundred and six million pounds of coke. That is a great deal of that substance. There is no evidence that any supply such as that existed or was used to fuel the ovens to cremate all these people. {206|207}

It is significant that no prisoner in any of the camps said anything to a Red Cross representative.

You are reminded that Dr. Faurisson has been assaulted and ridiculed for what Mr. Christie submits were his sincere beliefs on this subject.

Exhibit 1 merely puts into perspective from a different point of view and from a different perspective what the writer of Exhibit 1 thought occurred insofar as the Holocaust is concerned in all of its facets. You are reminded that there are nasty politicians in this country who would put their opponents down through court trials.

The prosecution did not bring evidence in the form of maps or plans of crematoria. There is nothing put in by the Crown in that regard with respect to gas chambers, what they looked like, and where they were located specifically as a plan.

Mr. Christie states that certainly Jews suffered as a number of others did in World War II on both sides. They were placed in camps, as he says, for War reasons. They may well have been individually mistreated, but there is no proof that they were {207|208} intentionally annihilated as a matter of German policy.

You are reminded that Germany near 1945 and in 1945 was a country in the process of collapse. The country was in ruins as a result of bombing and the invasion by the Russians on the East and the Allies on the West.

Dr. Hilberg, it is submitted, has not been to any of these camps. Christopherson was in one. Dr. Barton has visited; Felderer has visited; Dr. Hilberg has not.

The film alleging the showing of the gas chamber at Dachau is misleading in that even now responsible opinion is held that there were no gassings at Dachau.

Exhibit 1 is at least ninety per cent proven to be true; only ten per cent is untrue, but the ten per cent is technically untrue and not essentially misleading or intentionally misleading.

It is submitted to you that no plans, no evidence of a budget to kill all these people has been shown. There is merely a belief expressed by some people that millions died. There is no realistic proof of the numbers. {208|209}

Mr. Christie asked the rhetorical question, "Where have all these people gone?" He submits to you that the answer as, as the two armies came together and had Germany between them, many people or many Jews crossed borders surreptitiously and secretly. As a result they became lost insofar as the ascertaining of their numbers and where certain racial groups had been at any given time during those momentous five years.

It is submitted to you that disease such as typhus carried away far more Jews than anyone would admit. Mr. Christie [sic] takes the position that there is a difference between people being gassed and people who die of diseases such as typhus, starvation and other causes.

Mr. Friedman, you are reminded, spoke of being hospitalized. Vrba had an operation. Yet they both say that if you go to the hospital in a camp, you do not come out.

Members of the jury, while it is for you to say and not for me, as I recall the operation that Vrba said he had, he bribed another doctor who was also himself an inmate to perform that operation without {209|210} official sanction.

It is submitted to you that Mr. Friedman could not really tell the difference between people being cremated and those that were not. His evidence was termed as fantasy. It is unlikely, it is submitted by Mr. Christie, that the gypsies would be loaded in trucks and be taken only two or three hundred yards to be gassed. It is far more likely that they were transferred to another camp.

You are asked this question: Why should Vrba's views on numbers be any different than Mr. Friedman's? The evidence of the selection by Mr. Friedman is faulty. You are asked, why would older people be selected if killing was the purpose, when their skill may have been required for matters other than work?

Mr. Fulop's evidence, Mr. Christie points out that he was beaten; he was not killed. The reason he was beaten was, he should not have been looking at naked women. His evidence about seeing ten people hung up on a single rope is dubious. His testimony is dubious.

Mr. Christie submits that Mr. Fulop {210|211} has an unbalanced mind, and Mr. Urstein's evidence is untrue because he said that from what he saw the gas chamber was at ground level, whereas the pictures that have been produced and the evidence that has been led at this trial would show that that chamber was, for the most part, below ground.

It is pointed out to you that where would the trains be that supposedly carried all the coal? Mr. Urstein's evidence was wrong concerning the colour of the bodies. They should have been red according to the evidence of the chemist. That was not the colour of the dead bodies that Mr. Urstein said.

With respect to the evidence of Henry Leader, it is pointed out that he could not identify the location of the gas chamber. His evidence cannot be relied upon for that and other reasons.

You are reminded that Dr. Vrba's evidence concerned the unloading of people, but there is not a line of evidence as to who unloaded the coke. Mr. Christie submits to you that there really must be an order in writing. There must be evidence of an order having been given in writing for {211|212} the death of the Jews, otherwise the evidence that they were killed by design will not stand up.

It is submitted to you that the difference between a concentration camp and a death camp comes at the point where a gas chamber exists or not. It is submitted to you that merely because survivors have testified that they are survivors does not make their evidence credible.

You are reminded of the evidence of Mr. von der Heide who also was transported in a cattle car at the end of the War when he was a serving soldier after the War had finished.

Insofar as "The West, War and Islam" is concerned, Mr. Christie submits to you that it is not a crime to send this to the Middle East. It would harm no one in Canada. It was an honest attempt, at least through the eyes of the accused, at solving what was perceived by Mr. Zundel to have been a serious political problem existing at the time. You are asked this question: How could this be racial intolerance when its recipients are thousands of miles away?

Mr. Christie submits that there is a difference, apparently, between British Masonic lodges {212|213} and European Masonry.

For all of the reasons that he gave, including what I have repeated and for a number of submissions I have not repeated, it is Mr. Christie's submission that both of these counts should be dismissed because they have not been proven, and that Mr. Zundel who does not have to prove anything, has disclosed an honest belief in the truth of the contents.

Counsel for the Crown branded as red herrings the defence submission concerning the freedom of expression, censorship and freedom of the press. He submits to you these are not the issues.

Mr. Griffiths says that a man can publish what he wants; if it is true, he cannot be prosecuted. Section 177 says that we cannot publish a false statement knowing that it is false thereby injuring or causing a likely injury to society. Nobody is allowed to deliberately lie and endanger the community at large. People are not entitled to inflame our society by deceit.

He then submits to you that the content of Exhibit 1, piece by piece, which he covered, consists in its totality as a web or a series of lies. Nowhere in {213|214} Exhibit 1 does it say that six million Jews were gassed. The pamphlet speaks of shootings, humane conditions in camps, the truth at last exposed.

What does it say, asks Mr. Griffiths? He said the central thought is that six million did not die; only several hundred thousand died; it is a conspiracy to gouge money from West Germany; it purports to present evidence in support.

On the other hand, Dr. Hilberg presented the widest range of subjects touching on this issue. It is suggested to you that his evidence was consistent; it shows that he has read thousands of Nazi documents. He has read transcripts through all of the War including the Nuremberg War Trials. He has testified about the testimony of guards and others, witnesses who testified there.

Dr. Hilberg has no criminal record. He wrote nothing untrue. A great weight should be given to his evidence. He did not bring documents because documents in the German language would do no good. He has read all of the documents. He has read Dr. Faurisson.

Chapter 3 concerns the number of Jews {214|215} who died. The Encyclopaedia Britannica [sic] was employed. The numbers were submitted to you by Mr. Griffiths.

Chapter 4, Dr. Hilberg said that there are many documents to show that many Jews were killed, such as the Kohrer [Korherr] Report and the Hans Frank Diary.

It is not war talk when Himmler made the Posen speech stating that Jews and Jewish women and children would be killed so that revenge could not be taken by the offspring. Himmler's speech is not a veiled illusion. When you see that in one of the exhibits, it speaks of killing women and children. Warriors do not talk of killing people penned in ghettos.

Chapter 5, Crown counsel submits that as early as 1942, at the London Conference, there is plenty of proof before you that the Allies said that Germany would be held responsible for its mistreatment of Jews.

Dr. Hilberg said that in all of the Nuremberg Trials, tens of thousands of defence documents were employed by both Crown and defence.

Under the heading, "Confessions Under Torture", that is misleading because the heading is "Confessions Under Torture", yet there follows underneath {215|216} it another subject entirely.

He points to the Simpson/van Roeder [Roden] Report mentioned in Exhibit No. 1. It will appear that the report is being used. It is not used at all; it is Van Roeden's [Roden] interview that is used, which is misleading.

It is submitted that people appear to be tortured, but there is no detail or indication of torture itself. You are reminded that nobody at the Nuremberg Trials complained of torture. Rudolf Hoess himself did not complain of torture. The sole exception was Julius Streicher, who the Crown said was a racist and a journalist, that his allegations of torture consisted of his being told to kiss the feet of a black man, and if he was thirsty he could drink from the toilet.

It is submitted to you that when Mr. Zundel and Dr. Faurisson are faced with some of these principles, they resort to saying that the document was forged, or it is untrue, or that torture occurred.

It is submitted to you that there was no torture of any of the accused Nazis at Nuremberg.

Dr. Faurisson, with respect to the Einsatzgruppen, was evasive and would not comment on the reports that Dr. Hilberg said that the Berlin Nazi {216|217} authorities received every day of the people who were killed by the Einsatzgruppen, shot in the field as the German Armies moved eastward into Russia.

Dr. Vrba described pits where gassed human bodies were burned. It is submitted that this was marshy ground. You are then reminded that it was still possible to put a building of a crematoria partially under that marshy ground. You are asked to look at the aerial photos with reference to pits, and to look at the reference on those photos to see whether that ground was as marshy as it is said it was.

Dr. Vrba did not say that the trains came in day and night. It is submitted to you that Dr. Vrba said that when the trains did come in, two hours later the smoke started up in the chimneys.

Dr. Lindsey, it is submitted to you, was likely correct when he said that ordinary mortar in chimneys breaks down, but what an absurd assumption it is to assume that ordinary mortar was used in the chimneys of crematoria in Auschwitz.

Mr. Griffiths submits to you that Dr. Lindsey tried to deceive you regarding hydrogen cyanide; he failed to say it was just slightly lighter than air, {217|218} and he failed to say, until he was cross-examined, that it would take far more gas to kill through the skin than through the lungs.

Dr. Faurisson's plan of these camps obtained in 1945 proves nothing today. It cannot be related to the chambers before 1945, and the gas chambers, it is admitted, were dismantled. It is submitted that what exists on the ground today cannot be compared to what may have existed and what the Crown said may have existed as gas chambers which were taken apart brick by brick and dismantled as the Russians moved west.

Henry Leader, in the submission of the Crown, did say that gas masks were worn when the bodies were being taken from the gas chambers.

There is no evidence as to how much coke it takes to burn a body. You have Mr. Zundel's belief only as to what it takes.

For all of the reasons given, including Judge Konrad Morgen, the S.S. Judge who, at Nuremberg, stated that he could not possibly charge Hitler and Himmler who were his superiors with any offences, and yet that statement is not included in Exhibit 1, the total cumulative effect of Exhibit 1 is that the total {218|219} exhibit is deceptive; it is designed to be deceptive. Anyone reading it could not possibly do anything else but believe it if they were uninitiated and not knowledgeable. He calls Jews cheats and persons who unjustly allegedly robbed the Germans. The same applies for count number two.

It is submitted to you that this accused is not some sort of a harmless eccentric. Mr. Zundel is dangerous. He does not fall under the same category, in the submission of the Crown, as Mr. Felderer and others who testified. The accused could not possibly have an honest belief in the truth of either one of the two exhibits. For that reason, your verdict should be guilty with respect to both counts in the indictment.

Members of the jury, that is but some of the submissions of both counsel.

There are really two issues. Did the Holocaust occur? Speaking only for myself, and it is for you to say and no one else, it would seem that the evidence before you is overwhelming that it did.

Insofar as the issue of the honesty of the belief, it is not necessary that I make any comment on that. {219|220}

There is no such thing as a right verdict or a wrong verdict or a correct verdict. The only verdict that you are required to return in this trial is a true verdict according to the evidence that you have heard under oath at this trial.

You have no duty, members of the jury, by your verdict, of sending a message to anybody. Your duty is to render a verdict solely and only upon the evidence that you have heard according to the law that I have given to you.

Whether a Minister of the Crown in right of Canada is correct or incorrect in refusing admittance of a book from the United States into Canada is of no concern to you; it has no issue in this trial. You can rest assured that whatever true verdict you return, the face of this country will be no different tomorrow than it is today.

You have a serious obligation to ensure that Mr. Zundel receives a fair trial according to law. You have an equally serious duty to the community that you represent. The case now passes into your hands.

You are free to retire and consider {220|221} your verdict as soon as the deputies have been sworn in to that effect.

— Deputies sworn.

— The jury retires to deliberate their verdict.

OBJECTIONS TO JURY CHARGE

THE COURT: Gentlemen, if as and when I have approval of the exhibit list, I want it sent in to the jury.

should go in until the time the jury should commence their deliberations.

THE COURT: I will hear your objections.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now?

THE COURT: Now.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Well, first of all, this particular section of the Criminal Code has not been associated in a form of way with the use of the words in racial and social tolerance. As a result it is my submission that that is a matter of fact which also has to be decided upon by the jury.

In doing so, it was my submission, during my argument, that the values of our society and freedom of speech are relative to factors in what is, in effect, necessary for racial and social tolerance, {222|223} and it was certainly the argument of the Crown that that was irrelevant, but I didn't think that, as a matter of law, Your Honour should decide that freedom is not an aspect of social and racial tolerance, or that somehow they are totally unrelated or that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that we have now is of no consequence in the process of deciding whether it is a value in our society, even apart from the social and racial tolerance that, perhaps, we are in the middle of. It is something of value because that is a part of s.177, which imports or is in the section, not a judgment value about social and racial tolerance.

One of two situations could occur in relation to the issue of free speech. It could also be a paramount value to racial and social tolerance. In fact, it could be of greater consequence separate and apart from the issue of truth itself. It could be of greater value to society than the issue or the concern about racial and social tolerance.

It is only because of an article of somebody by the name of Scott in the Canadian Bar Review that the words have ever been, in the past, associated with s.177, those words being racial and social tolerance. {223|224}

Now, it is my submission, and it was in my address part of my submission that racial and social tolerance is imposed without adequate freedom of speech, and that freedom of speech, separate and apart from the issue of truth, still is beneficial to racial and social tolerance, that it is far more important that freedom exists so that social and racial tolerance will continue than that we stifle such things that are in issue here, the articles 1 and 2, items 1 and 2.

It is certainly my submission that to have told the jury that freedom is not in issue, as my friend did, is his right, and it is his argument, but it is not, in my understanding, in the previous observations of either s.177 or jurisprudence in the matter, it is not established as a matter of law that the value of social and racial tolerance supersede other values, or that freedom is not a part of that value, that it is not a value they can consider as being a part of necessarily the use and development of racial and social tolerance.

It was certainly my argument that it should be considered as part of the process of considering whether an offence exists to cause damage to racial or {224|225} social tolerance or not; but it seems as if in Your Honour's address at the very beginning you told the jury that there is nothing relevant about the argument that I raised about freedom.

You also said that the definition of "wilfull" [sic] should be the one used in s.386. Well, that refers specifically to Part 9, and Part 9 is a part of the Criminal Code which deals with the use of very dangerous items, which has been held to mean that "wilfully" includes recklessly, regarding those items, and I think with good cause. Fire is an article to which recklessness can be deemed wilfulness as fire is referred to in the negligent use of it in 390, which is Part 9. S.387 is in Part 9, and it deals with attacking internationally protected figures. Recklessness is not a defence in those circumstances. It deals with such things in Part 9 as false fire alarm; it uses the word "wilfully" then. And then recklessness is not a defence, because wilfulness implies recklessness as that s.386(1) indicates.

Section 394, which is the wilful prevention of the saving of a vessel, is recognized. Of course, these are things that are an obvious different {225|226} situation from the use of words, in that they are actions that are obviously dangerous in themselves, and then recklessness amounts to wilfulness [sic].

Posters or boundary markers, these are quite different aspects in the criminal law than the section concerning the use of words, and there are only two sections concerning word crime in the whole Criminal Law, and they are s.281 and s.177, and it is my submission that those two sections have been dealt with in the jurisprudence of the country pertaining to what degree of wilfulness is required.

It was dealt with specifically in the case of R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher vis-a-vis s.281(2). In that case the Court of Appeal of Ontario decided that "wilful" in this subsection means with the intention of promoting hatred and does not include recklessness."

So that, as Your Honour pointed out, s.177 is in the nuisance provisions of the Criminal Code. It is a crime committed by words alone, and it cannot be committed by recklessness alone, if the principle of Buzzanga and Durocher apply.

I see no reason why we should apply the higher standard of wilfulness to the promotion of {226|227} falsehood by words. They seem, with the greatest respect, to be of a very similar character, in that it is not a thing that is primarily and visibly and prima facie dangerous to speak words.

That is the case with such things as are included in Part 9. Part 9's definition for "wilfulness" includes recklessness, because the things in Part 9 are inherently dangerous in themselves, patently obviously dangerous in themselves – fire, fire alarm, impeding the rescue of a vessel. Recklessness, then, is tantamount to wilfulness; but as far as our so-far developed jurisprudence in the use of words is concerned, wilfulness is not recklessness, and to have employed the definition in s.386 is to ignore the definition which says, "Everyone who causes the occurrence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his duty to do", to do nothing, that omission, knowing that the act or omission will probably cause the occurrence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not shall be deemed" – and then it says "for the purposes of this Part", for the sake of emphasis, as they define it as being for the purposes of this Part, and this Part is Part 9, not every part of the Criminal Code, surely. And the {227|228} definition of wilfulness is understandable because it is not the nuisance section. It is not the word crime that is referred to as being wilful because it is reckless. It's a word crime. False news is alleged because the intent to do the act must be specifically to cause the damage referred to in the section or else, I suggest, we are interpreting law to prohibit, in the broadest possible terms, the communication of words, not in the narrowest terms. And in the principles of that, the interpretations of "wilfulness" have been specifically disapproved of in this court, in this Province, by the Court of Appeal in the case of Buzzanga and Durocher.

So I say to you that the definition of "wilful" that Your Honour put forward was an inappropriate definition for the sake of a charge under s.177.

Your Honour, I think I understood you to say the evidence of Botting and Collins would not have been relevant with regard to the mischief issue. It was my argument, intention and understanding that the evidence of those who said that the publication did not cause damage to society in racial and social tolerance would be relevant because they did say that the publication {228|229} in question had value for editorial purposes in contrasting it with other points of view. Likewise with Collins.

It is my submission that we should not have taken from the jury consideration of those pieces of evidence in considering what racial and public tolerance this publication has. In effect, they provided some indication of the redeeming social value of these publications in themselves without, in those circumstances, going to decide the truth or falsity of the issue, because they didn't necessarily say they agreed with that, but it produces a process of reasoning. It is part of the process of education and information however there may be disagreement about it. And it was part of my submission, a large part of my submission, probably three quarters or a half of my submission, that those pieces of evidence supersede the considerations of whether those items are true or false.

Now, at one stage Your Honour said that the witness, Faurisson, had been in court and that it should be considered as to whether he can be believed because he had been in court. Well, surely, Your Honour, many expert witnesses are in court to hear the proceeding of other witnesses. It is not as if there was some {229|230} failure to disclose his presence or denial of such in the course of the proceedings. He was here.

I quite understand the reference to the evidence of Rudolph, Felderer or Newman in that regard. They gave their explanation, and Your Honour considered they should be considered for that explanation, but to say that in respect of Faurisson, in my respectful submission, is to draw attention to something as if it had been some reason for disbelief when, in the terms of an expert witness, it is frequently done.

Now, I heard Your Honour's summation of Friedman's evidence and reference there made to two meters, whereas in the evidence in the transcript I've searched the matter and it is already transcribed, and he clearly said fourteen feet, and later, larger than the chimney itself.

In the summation of the evidence of Friedman it was quite clear that Your Honour, I recall saying, hearing Your Honour say that the jury should consider that the evidence of Fulop, I think, where he said ten thousand people in cars and a hundred and twenty per car, that they should compare that evidence with their experience in watching cars go by on the CP or {230|231} CNR line. I suggest that is to do what so often throughout the trial I have been told would be quite improper in respect to showing the evidence of slides of Auschwitz or Birkenau taken now, namely, to use experience derived in the nineteen seventies or eighties for the consideration of issues arising in 1941.

THE COURT: Well, I was thinking of my own self in the early nineteen thirties.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think probably the times are somewhat different in terms of how many cars on a train, but I would say it is different in terms of the number of cars being able, in those days, to be carried in mountainous or other terrain. It is hard to say that the same conditions prevailed here as there, even then, or certainly now. It didn't seem clear to me whether Your Honour meant that the evidence of their comparison should be taken at some time ago.

Of course, it was of great concern to me that there was no reference to, in the summary of evidence, several things in the cross-examination pertaining to points where the witness, for example Hilberg, had clearly indicated that parts of the testimony, for example, in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" of {231|232} Wennerstrum where he eventually acknowledged that that had been Wennerstrum's view, none of that had ever been referred to. And my understanding also is there is an error in respect to, I think, a fairly significant error in the recount of the evidence of Vrba where Your Honour mentioned that Vrba had said there is a ramp between Auschwitz and Birkenau that was five hundred – four hundred to five hundred feet long, and that the ramp could be seen in the Auschwitz Album.

It's my recollection of the evidence of Vrba certainly that he said there was no rail spur into Auschwitz-Birkenau till after he left, and that photographs of the ramp in Auschwitz-Birkenau, in fact it's got nothing to do with the ramp he said existed on the Warsaw to Krakow line in the middle between Birkenau and Auschwitz. Those are two different places. And yet it was my understanding, from Your Honour's charge, that the jury should look at the Auschwitz Album to see if it conforms with the evidence of Vrba about what he saw on the ramp.

Now, mention was made in-chief of the depth of the pits, although there was some mention in cross. It was my recollection that Vrba mentioned the {232|233} depth of the pits of six by six by six meters when he gave his evidence in-chief. The explanation of Vrba's evidence about seeing Himmler ignored, I think, the important fact that Himmler was supposed to have been seen by Vrba twice, and therefore there was little reason to not recognize him, as said in the book on occasion.

I recorded the summation of Your Honour in Urstein and Leader and I couldn't find any reference to anything brought out in cross-examination, especially about the colours of the bodies alleged by those two.

It's my submission, of course, in respect to the whole of the charge, that by placing in the words "in racial and social tolerance", the Crown has elected to import into the whole proceedings a value judgment on what are the values of society, that they have chosen to do by the indictment, and having chosen to do it, they have introduced a possibility for the defence to dispute that whatever was done, true or false, has a deleterious effect on social and racial tolerance.

It could be and was the argument of the defence, hopefully forcefully put forward, that the {233|234} issue of freedom of speech is central to the whole case, because regardless of what is the truth, falsity, correctness or error of the articles published, the value of freedom to communicate in this way, with the type of evidence that is before the Court, far supersedes any damage that could have been done to racial and social tolerance by such publication.

It is certainly my submission that to decide the right to read and to speak is less significant than that which is expressed by the words "racial and social tolerance". It is a value judgment the jury could make, but it is a value judgment to be open to the jury to consider, and I certainly tried to I put forward another value judgment on what is in the interests of racial and social tolerance, another value judgment on what are the values of societies in these values.

It isn't a clear-cut principle that racial and social tolerance is automatically the central issue of the case excluding the issues of freedom of speech that are peripheral, so to speak. It is certainly the case that to import these words into the charge, without any previous body of jurisprudence, to establish that {234|235} that is prima facie more important than freedom to discuss issues, and that it has no bearing on the freedom to discuss issues is, I think, it may be that Your Honour wishes to adopt my friend's argument. My friend's argument may be a good argument. I say that it is my understanding that it may be a good argument that can be countered by the argument that freedom cannot be subjected to the criterion that it's only such freedom as is limited by those things that produce good for racial and social tolerance.

So far, in our law, nothing has ever been written to say that, neither in a case that I am aware of, nor in any statute that exists. And so to have automatically given to the jury the charge that "You must put out of your minds this talk about the freedom issue because the issue is whether it affects racial or social tolerance" is, in my belief, to constitute a judgment to the exclusion of an issue of importance to the defence.

The article of Dr. Scott was, as far as I am aware, the only even theoretical writing on the subject, and it speculated at that time, now to have been proven true, that courts would eventually have {235|236} to consider that racial and social tolerance was a part of the public interest.

No doubt, it is a part of public interest. I am not disputing that. But is it the paramount part, first of all, and is it such a significant issue that it excludes the consideration of any others in the process of deciding what is in the public interest? Because it is essentially the public interest that is the gravamen of the offence, not this peripheral allegation that social and racial tolerance is so important.

The public interest may, in fact, be more adversely affected by destroying freedom than it is beneficially affected by racial and social tolerance. So in my opinion the jury has to consider what is really in the public interest: preventing such writing as there is, or protecting what such freedom as there may be? And it does introduce a broader issue, I concede, a much broader issue, but it seems, with the greatest of respect, the whole issue doesn't have just a narrow focus to it. Just because the Crown puts those words in about racial and social tolerance does not, with respect, I would try to communicate, mean that we must {236|237} accept that definition as the public interest or a public interest.

If it is a public interest, it is certainly not the only public interest. And because the Crown alleges that it is a public interest, it certainly doesn't preclude the consideration of the other public interests that may be greater.

In fact, then, it would be my respectful submission that the jury can consider whether to place such emphasis on that so-called public interest is true at all. Is it a public interest? They should be entitled to think of that and to decide for themselves whether it is a public interest. The mere avoidance of it by the Crown's inclusion of the indictment does not establish it as a public interest. Nobody, so far, has introduced any evidence on that at all, I suppose; therefore it becomes an argument, and my friend's argument is well-made on the point, but I hoped that mine might also be considered.

I would submit that the jury has to decide if, by protecting racial and social tolerance in the way alleged by the Crown through the prohibition of {237|238} these opinions, putting aside, for the moment, the issue of whether it is true or false, a greater public interest is protected, or that further, by stopping such publications, assuming they find it to be false, that racial and social tolerance would be affected at all.

That, I suggest, is something that should be left to them to decide, for it hasn't, so far, been made clear that the issue of fact created by the addition of words to define a public interest can automatically be taken from the jury. And to say racial or social tolerance is an ingredient of the charge, as I suggest it is, is to acknowledge the defence position on racial and social tolerance that freedom is a necessary ingredient to that, and that controversy in history is also a necessary ingredient to racial and social tolerance and should be open to the jury to consider.

It was the argument of the defence, of course, that there being no expert in what is to the best interests of society, and I heard none, there's opinions that say – for example I called a journalist of years' experience and asked him, "Why is it useful to you?", and I called a professor, "Why is this type of publication of social value in your opinion?" And he gave his opinion. {238|239} But I got the very distinctive impression that Your Honour felt that his opinion on that issue was irrelevant – that is not to say that he is not a historian – in deciding the truth or falsity. But it is my submission that he tried to, and I think he gave some evidence to show that his view of his profession in this society was that it was a value greater than any detriment that might have occurred to racial and social tolerance.

So I thought the jury might be allowed the chance to consider that, because surely my argument was that it was more damaging to social and racial tolerance to preclude opinions in this circumstance.

In summarizing the evidence of Faurisson and his criticism of the three pillars of what he said were the exterminationist thesis, no mention was made that Gerstein was dead, and in summarizing the Red Cross Report, no mention was made that, well, I recall Your Honour saying that the commandant said nothing, if I recall correctly.

The essence of the whole issue about Dachau, and there were false stories of gassings in Dachau involving those so-called nine untruths, the story that Faurisson used as an example about false {239|240} stories of the gas chamber, the significance of it all is that it was in Dachau where everyone now seems to concede there was no gas chambers. That was one of the main arguments that the defence raised through Dr. Faurisson that we have reason to doubt the existence of gas chambers from both the experts we produced and from the fact that the stories, explicit stories of specific numbers of children gassed on a specific day, using specific methods sworn to by witnesses, eye witnesses, had to be all completely false. That was the significance of the false story.

Well, it's quite obvious that Your Honour felt that the argument pertaining to the issue of the inability to feed the prisoners at the end of the War was that Your Honour felt that the civilian population had been fed at the end of the War. I suggest that there is no way that a jury can know, nor should they be asked to speculate as to how many people were represented by the visitors' film as, to how they were fed, what the circumstances were.

I suggest you invite the jury to say that somehow, because they were well-fed people in a film made after the fact, that therefore the German {240|241} population could have fed the prisoners in Bergen Belsen or other camps is to invite a speculation that I suggest should not be undertaken, because for one thing there is no answer able to be presented by the defence on a narrative that we are not allowed to cross-examine.

There was a grave area, I thought, of incorrect understanding on the issue of whether Felderer thought there was gas chambers on the bottom of the sauna in the summation of his evidence. I suggest that there is a confusion arising here, because Your Honour seems to indicate that the building known as the sauna was where Felderer said that sledge hammers had been used to make vents, and the basement being full of water couldn't be used for gas chamber.

Felderer gave evidence of the sauna, identified its location on the map and gave his understanding of what he saw in Leichenkeller I of Krema II where he took many pictures. They were totally different buildings, and I would think that that misunderstanding should be cleared up.

Your Honour described Felderer as being convicted of spreading material the Zionists didn't like. He said he was convicted of race hate, under the {241|242} race hate laws.

THE COURT: He also said that he was convicted of spreading material which the Zionists didn't like, because I did not get that out of my head. I got it right from him and I wrote it in my book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, in regard to Walus, whose evidence was totally ignored, as I recall – well, you referred to him as a character witness. There was certainly a significant reason why the defence called Walus. It wasn't just as a character witness, but as a victim of Zionist propaganda and mass hysteria about war crimes, that he mentioned Simon Wiesenthal, and Your Honour asked him about him, and he mentioned that that person had raised a totally false allegation.

In fact, he gave in example a demonstration – I can't think of a better word – for the process by which people become ostracized, alienated and victimized before they are even even tried, which is typical of those situations where Holocaust allegations are made. He risked what he has risked to come and testify that eleven persons, several of whom had never been in Poland themselves, eleven persons identified him. It is certainly my submission that that shows that those {242|243} who say this happened, and eye witnesses say this and that about people and things, when it comes to the Holocaust, tend to get so convinced of the need to prosecute wickedness that they ignore facts, and I thought that was a part of the theory of the defence that we were entitled to bring out; but unfortunately, in Your Honour's charge it was indicated that Walus was another character witness.

No mention was made at all of Botting or Weber and Weber's evidence as to having custody of documents necessary for the preparation of prosecution at Nuremberg and inaccessibility of those documents to defence, which is also part of the defence case. Whether he is an expert or not, his firsthand eye witness observations of those facts were relevant to the defence and were totally ignored in the summation that I heard of the evidence.

Likewise with Brentar, no mention at all is made of the fact that he is involved in trying to help someone charged with an alleged war crime, and the difficulties placed in his way by the officials of the day is a significant argument on behalf of the defence, nothing of which was mentioned. No mention, either, was {243|244} made of Gary Botting.

Well, these people are brought at great time and expense over great expanse for the defence to bring to the jury to indicate reasons why people have the right to dispute the truth of the allegations that are made with the same kind of fervour against Walus as they were made in 1945 against others.

In the summation yesterday it was suggested that the jury need not, or ought not to take the statement of the accused that he had an honest belief at face value, but they should look further to determine its foundation. They may, if they wish, take it at face value. I suggest they should not be told that they cannot, or imply that they cannot take it at face value.

I was concerned also about this statement that the fact that the Attorney General may or may not have responded is of no consequence to the case. The letter to the Attorney General is, in my submission, a great indication of the desire of the accused to comply with the law. That letter was sent prior to the charge being laid seeking directions, and it is of consequence that the law enforcement officer of the province decides not to respond to a request for information about what {244|245} may or may not be published. That certainly would go to the sincerity and honesty of the accused's belief. To be told that they are not entitled to look at that, it would be, in my submission, to deny the accused the right to say, as he did, that he tried to comply with the law by getting directions from the very person who is entrusted by the Government of the province with its administration. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. You didn't mention Sergeant Luby, Your Honour, in your review.

Your Honour, we've had seven weeks of evidence. I think that —

THE COURT: Do you have any objections yourself to the charge?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: I don't need to hear from you with respect to any reply, because I don't intend to call the jury in.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I'm sorry, there is one thing. It isn't something that the {245|246} jury has to be called back now for, but some point at the end of this trial they should be given a warning that the deliberations should be kept to themselves. There has been so much publicity.

THE COURT: I intend to do that at the end, but I can do it now.

There are three questions that the jury have sent. The first is, "Please provide the index of exhibits." The second is, "Please provide a transcript of the complete trial up to the summations and the judge's charge." And the third is, "please provide a transcript of counsel's summation and the judge's charge when available."

What I propose to do is, subject to what I hear from defence and from the Crown, I propose to provide them immediately with an index of the exhibits.

Secondly, I propose to provide them with the transcript of counsel's summation to the jury, Mr. Christie's and Mr. Griffiths', because they exist. I do not propose to provide them with a transcript of the whole trial proceedings because I am going to tell them that that would take far longer than is reasonable.

Now, are there any objections to what {246|247} I intend to do? Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury, please.
—— {247|248}

FURTHER CHARGE TO THE JURY

— The jury enters. 5:10 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, have you selected someone to preside over your deliberations? Thank you.

I have three pieces of paper. All three are undated. I gather they are in your writing and signature.

The first one reads, "please provide a transcript of the full trial up to counsel's summation and the judge's charge."

You are nodding in the affirmative.

The second one reads, "Please provide a transcript of counsel's summation and judge's charge when available."

The third one reads, "Please provide the index of the exhibits."

Are those the questions, sir?

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: The index of the exhibits will be provided immediately.

The transcript of counsel's summation can be provided quickly. It exists. Our reporter has worked very hard on that. I might ask her to see if she can run off some copies and have them delivered to you. {248|249} My charge and a transcript of the complete trial will be, for all practical purposes, incapable of fulfilling simply because to transcribe the trial proceedings that started on or about the 7th of January of this year until now I would have to think will take some months.

Insofar as my charge is concerned, I would think that that would take a good many days at a min[jim]um.

Madam Reporter, do you agree? Nod or shake your head. You are nodding.

So for the others the answer is yes, and they will be fulfilled quickly. Is there anything else? Thank you. You can retire.

— The jury retires. 5:15 p.m.

— The hearing adjourns pending jury deliberations.

— Upon resuming. {249|250}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I have a question from the jury, in writing. It is dated February 27, 1985. The text reads, "May we please have a restatement of the judge's charge re the legal interpretation of s.177."

What I propose to do, subject to the comment of both counsel, is that I read s.177 to them from the Criminal Code. I then propose to re-charge the jury along the lines that I charged them before from the notes that I have prepared. In deference to counsel for the accused and his objection I may omit the definition of "wilful" pursuant to s.383 of the Criminal Code, but otherwise I propose to re-instruct them with respect to what I said before.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Defence?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. It wouldn't be any help to give them a copy of the section, is it?

THE COURT: They have not asked for it.

Secondly, I propose, again subject {250|251} to the comment of counsel, to indicate to the jury that I am somewhat concerned about the fact that they have been working hard, as we all have. They have had three full days of a good deal of listening. That, in my respectful view, is work. I propose to suggest to them that they break it off now, it being virtually 8:00 p.m., and that they resume at nine-thirty tomorrow morning when it will be more fresh in the brain department.

Is there any objection to that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The re-charge at the moment?

THE COURT: No. I propose to recharge them now, but then break off till the morning.

—— {251|252}

— The jury enters. 7:35 p.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I have in my hand a note that is dated February 27, 1985, which says, "May we please have a restatement of the judge's charge re the legal interpretation of section 177. (Signed) Norman Carrier". Is that the request, sir?

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY: Yes, it is, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. We will file that with the others.

— EXHIBIT "E" Question from the jury.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, section 177 of the Criminal Code reads as follows: "Everyone who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence"

That is the relevant section.

As I indicated to you earlier, members {252|253} of the jury, the Canadian Parliament placed that section into the Criminal Code for a reason. The purpose is to discourage those who deliberately and intentionally disseminate, by publishing, false news or statements into the community at large, thereby intending the actual or the likely result of creating community unrest.

The Canadian community daily abounds with rumours, stories and gossip of every stripe. Some is based on fact; some is not. From a multitude of sources there comes a daily avalanche of stories, opinions, rumours, pure gossip, learned fact, some true and some less so.

This has occurred for so long and with such repetition that almost automatically most passes unnoticed and unchallenged in our free society.

There comes a rare occasion, however, when the criminal justice system in Canada examines what has been written or said. The purpose is to investigate [sic] whether what has been published amounts to a crime against the community as a whole according to the Criminal Code.

That, members of the jury, is why you are here. There is nothing in the wording of s.177 that I perceive which in any way prohibits freedom of speech. {253|254}

This section, as I view it, is not intended to prohibit either back-fence gossip about who did what and with whom, nor to stifle vigorous dissent on the issues and affairs of Canadian citizens who strive to improve the quality of life in an imperfect world.

On the other hand, the law recognizes that nobody has the unbridled right to say anything one feels like saying and put it under the heading of free speech.

No one, for example, has the right to yell, "Fire", in a crowded movie theatre when there is no fire.

This section, quite properly, is designed to eliminate from the Canadian community the evil of false statements, and news published for the purpose of creating mischief in the form of social unrest stirred up by racial intolerance. This section seeks to avoid acts which create community unrest.

The Crown must prove a number of elements. All must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. There is no burden upon the accused to prove anything. The burden of proof remains upon the Crown from the {254|255} beginning to the end of the trial.

If, at the end of all of the evidence, the addresses of counsel and my charge you each conclude that the Crown has failed to prove each element that I will mention in a moment, or if you are left in reasonable doubt, then you must return a verdict of not guilty with respect to either or both counts in this indictment.

On the other hand, if, after you have considered the total evidence, the addresses of counsel and my charge, you conclude that the Crown has proved the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, then you may return a verdict of guilty to either or both counts, as you shall decide.

Primarily, the Crown must prove that Ernst Zundel published "The West, War and Islam" and "Did Six Million Really Die?". Secondly, the Crown must prove that the contents of each exhibit, in its essentials, are false – that is to say, essentially untrue.

The Crown must prove that the accused wilfully published each exhibit, if you find that he did, and that at the time he published he knew the essential contents of each to be false. To reach a verdict with respect to each {255|256} count you must carefully examine all of the evidence and apply it as you shall decide, separately, to each of the two counts.

To publish something is to make it known. To publish is to announce. To publish is to print and offer for sale, especially in the form of a book, magazine, article or essay. To publish is to make something known for all to see.

The accused has admitted the publication of Exhibit "Did Six Million Really Die?". He has admitted writing "The West, War and Islam". He did not specifically admit publishing "The West, War and Islam".

You will decide whether or not the Crown has proven that he did.

While it is for you and no one else to say, it seems to me that you should [sic] have little difficulty in finding Mr. Zundel published both exhibits.

If you will look at the bottom of the eight or ten lines of "The West, War and Islam" you will see a signature, which appears to be Ernst Zundel's; you will see an address, 206 Carlton Street, and a telephone number. You will see that at the bottom of that exhibit there is an offer or a release so that it can be reproduced {256|257} and taken up and disseminated by others; you will see there a request or an offer to receive money in return for having sent that publication out. You should have no difficulty in concluding proof of publication.

The Crown must prove wilful publication of each exhibit. To publish something wilfully is to publish it freely and voluntarily, and intending the results of one's intentional design.

A wilful act of publishing, in the criminal sense, may be described as making something known intentionally, knowingly and purposely without justifiable excuse. It is a wilful act of doing something, as distinguished from an act done carelessly, thoughtlessly or accidentally.

A wilful act is done by design, without regard for the rights of others, in a reckless manner, with a disregard for the consequences and with indifference to the natural and probable consequences.

The word "mischief" [sic] has long been used in our law. "Mischief" is something meaning an evil or a danger to the general community. "Mischief" is a harm or an injury. "Mischief" is something which is designed to cause annoyance or distress to others. {257|258}

To tolerate means to put up with, to permit, to let be without interference. Tolerance is a willingness to bear with others, especially with those whose views differ from one's own. To tolerate is to forebear.

On the total evidence led throughout the whole of the trial from the beginning to the end, you must each be satisfied that the Crown has proven that the actual result, or the likely or probable result of each publication is community unrest stirred up by racial intolerance on the part of some segments of the community at large.

When I refer to the community at large, I mean the total community at large, not just a segment of it. It contains, and I refer to people of all racial and religious persuasion.

It is not sufficient that either or both Exhibits 1 and 2 be ill-advised, stupid, in bad taste, intolerant, bigoted or disagreeable. The Crown must prove on the evidence led throughout the whole of the trial that Mr. Zundel, at the time he published either or both exhibits, if you find that he did, did not have an honest belief in the essential truth of each. {258|259}

I hasten to point out that merely because a person says that he or she possessed an honest belief in the truth of something does not necessarily make it so. Regard must be had by each of you, as jurors, to what really, if anything, formed a basis of the honest belief in the essential parts of each exhibit.

I then went on to explain to you, members of the jury, how you should employ certain of the exhibits that went in with relation to each count. I am not entirely sure that that is part of what you want me to repeat. If it is, please write again and I will be glad to have you back and do that.

As a judge I do the very best I can to answer questions from jurors, but I do not purport to put upon them by repeating things that they do not ask for.

So that we can understand one another that way, then, I do not intend to repeat anything more except to say this to you, and what I am about to say to you now, at this time, is what I said to you this morning.

I said that while it is for you and no one else to say, it seems to me that the basic issues regarding both exhibits are clear. The issues are these: {259|260}

Upon the total evidence led in this trial, are each of you satisfied that the evidence discloses that Mr. Zundel published both exhibits? If he did, when he published both did he publish them in a wilful manner as I have described it with no honest belief in the essential truth of each?

If you conclude that the answer to any of these questions is no, or if you are left in reasonable doubt concerning any, you will return a verdict of not guilty with regard to either or both counts in the indictment, as you shall decide.

If, however, your answer is yes to those questions, then you must go on to decide whether or not, on the same standard of proof, upon the total evidence led, you are satisfied that either or both exhibits would likely produce mischief in the form of racial intolerance on the part of certain segments of the Canadian community at large.

That is what I indicated to you this morning. I hope that that answers the question. If it does not, please let me know.

In the meantime, members of the jury, I have discussed with counsel the fact that you have been {260|261} very patient and very attentive. You have done a lot of listening for the last three days. It is now ten after eight in the evening.

I pointed out to counsel, and they both agreed, that listening is work. With that you might agree.

I am not in any way being mandatory here. The case is up to you. It is in your hands. However, I thought you might want to retire this evening to a hotel. I am sure that you are as tired as we all are and that you might wish to start fresh in the morning at nine thirty.

Does that seem to meet with your approval?

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you very much. Then you are free to retire until tomorrow morning at nine-thirty, when you will please be back in your jury room.

The transcripts of the addresses of counsel are partially prepared. The machinery that is available at the moment will not produce all of them. It has produced some of them. I have decided that when {261|262} we get all twelve copies, you will get them and we do not want to hand them out piecemeal.

Have a good evening. Thank you very much.

— The jury retires. 8:12 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to February 27, 1985.

FEBRUARY 27, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming

— The jury enters. 3:10 p.m.

THE REGISTRAR: Would the Foreman please stand?

Members of the jury, have you agreed upon your verdict? How say you, do you find the accused at bar, Ernst Zundel, guilty or not guilty to count one, "The West, War and Islam"?

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY: Not guilty.

THE REGISTRAR: Count two, "Did Six Million Really Die?", guilty or not guilty? {262|263}

THE FOREMAN OF THE JURY: Guilty.

THE REGISTRAR: Members of the jury, hearken to your verdict as the Court hath recorded it: You find the accused, Ernst Zundel, not guilty, count one; guilty, count two. So say you all.

THE COURT: Do you wish the jury polled, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, please, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Poll the jury, please.

THE REGISTRAR: Members of the jury, as I call your names, please answer "Agree", if you agree with the verdict, or "Disagree", if you disagree.

— Jury polled — all agreed.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I wish to thank you very much for having taken from your personal lives, as a duty in a democratic society, seven weeks in order to listen with the care that you have employed in this case, and the attention you have paid to the evidence.

You have performed your duties with what is always expected of jurors, with dedication on {263|264} behalf of the Court and on behalf of the community. Thank you very much.

In letting you go now back to your own personal lives, I should say this to you, that your deliberations are secret. As a matter of law, they should be kept secret. Under no circumstances are you permitted to reveal to anyone what occurred within the confines of your jury room during your deliberations. That is the law. Please resist the temptation to disclose anything that went on to anybody, however enticing that temptation may be, and however persistent others may be in putting questions to you. That is the way our system of justice survives in this country.

Thank you very much. You are now free to go.

— The jury retires.

Certified correct to the best of my skill and ability.

SENTENCING PROCEEDING

BEFORE: The Honourable Judge H.R. Locke and a Jury

APPEARANCES:

P. Griffiths, Esq. For the Crown

D. Christie, Esq. For the Accused

The District Courthouse
Toronto, Ontario
February 28, 1985.
March 25, 1985. {1|2}

SUBMISSIONS ON SENTENCE

MR. GRIFFITHS: Subject to Your Honour, Mr. Christie and I are prepared to proceed now for sentencing.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. My client wishes to be sentenced now. You've heard all the evidence and no doubt have made up your mind what you consider an appropriate sentence.

THE COURT: No, I have not.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have nothing further to add to what has already been said, because Your Honour has had ample opportunity to hear both the accused, his character witnesses, and the story of his life for a considerable period of time.

THE COURT: That's true.

MR. CHRISTIE: And I therefore conclude that there is nothing to which I could add with any assistance to Your Honour, and therefore we wish to be sentenced today.

Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, in mitigation of sentence for Mr. Zündel, he is a first offender and has no criminal record. He has never been in trouble with the law before. I agree with Mr. Christie that we have substantial evidence as to his stability and roots in the community and {2|3} his industriousness in his field as a graphic artist. Those are all matters that I commend to Your Honour to consider in mitigation of sentence.

Your Honour, in aggravation in matters that I submit you should take into consideration in aggravation of sentence, there is first the pain that this material has caused within the community. I am prepared, if Your Honour wishes, to call evidence to that effect. I think that the interest, the concern and the pain in the community have been evident every day throughout the last two months. The community, I would suggest, Your Honour, needs protection from Mr. Zündel and others like minded. And when I say "the community", Your Honour, I am not talking about the Jewish community or the German community. I am talking about our Canadian community. It's especially important, I'd suggest, in Canada, where our multi-cultural mosaic is at the very heart of our national identity, that material of this nature be discouraged and that the distributors of material of this nature be discouraged.

General deterrence, Your Honour, I would respectfully submit, could form a significant part of your sentence. There is a profit motive involved here as well. Mr. Zündel is not just distributing the material, he is distributing {3|4} it for money and making money out of, as the jury found, selling material of a racial and social disharmony in our community, and I would suggest that is a significant aggravating factor.

In effect, Your Honour, while this is a matter that concerns all of us in the community, a substantial portion of our Toronto community and Canadian community has been put on trial during the course of this proceeding and there has been pain, dissension and disharmony within our community as a result.

I would suggest to Your Honour that, for the deterrence of Mr. Zündel and for the deterrence of others who would disseminate hate material or material sowing dissension in our community, there should be a substantial period of incarceration. I would suggest that such a period of incarceration be followed by a period of probation for three years, the terms of that probation being that Mr. Zündel no longer publish or distribute material that calls the Holocaust a hoax.

Those are my submissions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no reply.

THE COURT: Stand up. Say it again. {4|5}

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no reply, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Now you can sit down.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: (To the accused) You can be seated, sir. What are the conditions of the bail?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Zündel, Your Honour, was brought before the Court initially by way of summons, so he was on his own bail.

THE COURT: Thank you. I do not propose to pass sentence now. I propose to pass it at a point in time within the latter part of the month of March. I invite counsel for the accused to let me have his convenience from and including the 25th of March for the passing of sentence. In the meantime, whether either side asks for it or not, I want a pre-sentence report. I should say that I intend to order that this accused be kept in custody until the date of sentence unless he posts bail in terms to be discussed at this time, and set.

I invite counsel for the accused to make submissions with respect to fair and proper terms of bail, taking into consideration the fact that this accused's status has changed and he is now a convicted person. In the event {5|6} that I receive no assistance, as I have received no assistance on the very difficult matter of sentence from Mr. Christie, I shall be obliged to rely upon counsel for the Crown and upon my own experience.

Mr. Christie, are you prepared to co-operate to that point?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am always prepared to co-operate, Your Honour. I just don't know what else I could have said to you.

THE COURT: Well, you might have thought twice before you accused me of having concluded the sentence before I heard submissions. That was uncalled for and unfair.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, if I may speak to the subject of bail...

THE COURT: Yes, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have only to say that there is no suggestion whatsoever that Mr. Zündel has failed to appear at each of the thirty-eight or so days of this trial, or at any other time. That he is a well-established member of the community I think is conceded, and there is, I suggest, no reason to think that he will either disregard an order of this Court or fail to appear at any time. That, I think, is a matter of well-established record. In the face {6|7} of that and no previous record, I am sure Your Honour will make whatever is the appropriate disposition.

THE COURT: What is your convenience with respect to a return date?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am, at the time of the 27th of March, committed to the Supreme Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta and will be from that date probably until the end of June.

THE COURT: How about the 25th and the 26th?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, if the date was unavailable for me, I am sure Mr. Zündel can arrange other counsel and I am sure he will do so.

THE COURT: The trial, Mr. Christie, is not finished and ended until sentence is passed. I will expect your presence. You will please tell me when you can be here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, sir, it will mean that I will have to come back, which I will have to do, then.

THE COURT: You will. There is a matter that you and I will be discussing at that time, in addition to the matter of the gratuitous insult that you just offered to me now. That will all be discussed at the end of the trial, and not now. What is your convenience? {7|8}

MR. CHRISTIE: My convenience is to meet your convenience, sir.

Whatever it is you may say, and I will arrange my time between now and the 25th of March.

THE COURT: Thank you. The accused will be held in custody until he is released. $1,000 with deposit on the following conditions, and there is only one.

He will not, between now and the time of sentence on the 25th of March, 1985, directly or indirectly, write or publish anything on the subject of the Holocaust. If he is not prepared to abide by that condition, he will remain in custody.

He will be sentenced on the 25th of March. I will expect a pre-sentence report before that time.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to March 25, 1985, at ten o'clock.

MARCH 25, 1985

THE COURT: Good morning.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Good morning, Your Honour. The matter of Ernst Zundel for sentencing this morning, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, has your client read the pre-sentence report?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Are there any submissions on the report, or are there any other submissions?

MR. CHRISTIE: My client has read the pre-sentence report and takes no issue with it. I have some other submissions.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would it be Your Honour's wish that I make them now, or may I have the Crown's position on that, or —

THE COURT: I am flexible. What is your position?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I am taking no different position than I did on the last day we were in court. My submissions will be precisely the same. {9|10}

THE COURT: All right, I will hear from Crown first, on the understanding that if the Crown wishes the right of reply, he can have it. Does that sound fair to you, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought, since I wasn't going to be calling any evidence, I would be in that position. I am satisfied, if my friend has no alterations from his position, that I can address that, if that please Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

First of all, Your Honour, the Crown seeks a jail sentence for a first offence under a section where no precedent exists for incarceration at all. It is my understanding there is no case in Canada where a person has been incarcerated for publishing their opinions found later to be false.

I am instructed to say, further, that the accused maintains his earlier evidence, and stands on what he indicated to be his honest belief.

The Crown says that — and I quote — there is pain that this material has caused within this community, and that this has resulted from the trial, {10|11} proceedings at trial. My friend says this is a matter which concerns all of us in the community, and the Canadian community has been put on trial during the course of these proceedings.

I would point out that in the course of any proceeding where an accused pleads not guilty and raises a defence, the community has regarded it as the right of an accused to do so, and in that sense the community has been itself put on trial, so to speak, by the denial of the accused.

It would be, in my submission, wrong to suggest that because the accused availed himself of his right to plead not guilty, and thereby a trial resulted, and thereby, from the trial, pain, dissension and disharmony in the community resulted, that it be attributed to and used as a form of speech to sentence that the community has been put on trial by the trial itself.

It would be my submission that it is still the right of the accused to plead his case, to lead his evidence, and to argue his case as he be-

liev[e]s the truth to be, and in doing so, the community has put him on trial and he should not be blamed for the consequences of a trial over which he had no control {11|12}

The Crown seeks a substantial period of incarceration. As I said, without any precedent in Canadian history for incarceration under this section, they are indeed asking for more than justice requires. They suggest that a period of incarceration be followed by a period of probation for three years. I point out that that's the maximum period of probation that I am aware exists under s.664(2) (b); in other words, the Crown seeks, for a first offence, the highest penalty that one can pay, I think, which is jail, and the longest period of probation which can be given under the law — three years. In my submission, that is excessive.

It is, in my submission, necessary to consider that the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", is not as broad a book as some people have described it. It doesn't deny persecution of Jews. It doesn't deny death of Jews in the hundreds of thousands. It doesn't deny crematoria. It doesn't deny the programme of forced labour. It doesn't deny death due to malnutrition and typhus and other diseases. It only denies the figure of six million, the gas chambers, and the planning that is attributed in the crime of genocide. {12|13}

It hasn't been mentioned in the report provided by the probation officer what sentence is recommended. I can certainly sympathize with the probation officer in not being able to do so, there being no precedent under this section that would seem appropriate.

What, in essence, I say is true is that the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is a historical point of view which does not really suit or come within the ambit of the section as it was intended.

The accused, since the conviction, has been publicly vilified from Vancouver, where I am aware he has been referred to as a perverted monster, to other parts of the country, where he has been similarly vilified. For a man who has no previous record and has been a law-abiding citizen, has been a loving husband and father, as is portrayed in the pre-sentence report, who is a man with values and beliefs very strongly held, it would seem that the disapprobation and vilification expressed from coast to coast would be part of a punishment, and a fairly serious one.

My friend's submission about public injury and the public interest, in which he said he speaks for the community as a whole, is questionable, I suggest. {13|14} Prior to the trial he mentions no injury to a public interest. In the trial itself there was no evidence of prior injury to a public interest.

It was interesting to observe that when my friend speaks of representing a public interest, it seemed there were persons in court throughout the trial with whom he consulted from time to time who later appeared as representatives of the Canadian Jewish Congress at a press conference immediately after the conviction. It would seem to indicate that a public interest can be narrowly defined, if my friend's submission holds. It would seem it can be defined as narrowly as the group that made public statements on the subject after the conviction.

I suggest that the crime of false-news is a very common occurrence. It is not a rare thing. It's a rare thing to be prosecuted, but it is not an uncommon thing that false statements are made every day through the media, and often by the media, sometimes quoting others in the media. How we define public interest, then, is difficult to decide. I would like to point out that the accused asked for guidelines to the Attorney General of Ontario prior to its prosecution for what he might be {14|15} free to publish. I think in evidence is a letter which he wrote on the 10th of November, 1983, to the Attorney General, in which he said, and, I quote:

"I would like to suggest and request that your committee of lawyers supply me with their guidelines and criteria on hate content so that I may apply them to my writings in advance of publication. Similarly, these guidelines should be available to all writers, educators, media representatives, etc., so that everyone in the community can know exactly what the rules are in Ontario. I make this request solely in the interests of insuring greater community harmony, the lessening of inter-ethnic tensions and misunderstandings and for the relief of current anxieties and uncertainties on the subject of hate literature.”

– to which he received no reply.

In effect, he asked for what information he could get as to what he could publish. He received no {15|16} reply from the same people who later, in the same month, decided to prosecute him.

I suggest that the public interest broadly defined beyond that of those people who took the occasion as an opportunity to hold a press conference to announce their support of the conviction would have to recognize that punishment for presenting views which courts find to be false ought not to be severe, because the implications upon others who have opinions that could be challenged will be extensive.

I would like to give an example of what frequently occurs as an example of the common nature of false news, things that are said every day that come within that definition. And I quote, for example, in regard to this trial itself, so that I need not prove my point beyond the evidence that is already before you, in the Ottawa Citizen of March 2nd, 1985, where it is published for the world to read, that Mr. Alan Borgway (ph) said: You have the word theory being used to describe crematoria regarded for forty years as fact. It becomes a theory.

There was no suggestion in the trial of a theory of a crematoria. And that is published for all the world to see. The crematoria is an admitted fact {16|17} in the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?”, always was. It was admitted by the accused under oath. It was never denied. And I am not asking that anyone consider what was said to be subject to prosecution, because of course, someone other than myself, perhaps the Attorney General, defines, and later if a judge and jury defines, the court defines what is in the public interest.

I suggest that if my friend’s request for incarceration is appropriate, that those who take the opportunity that exists in a free society to express themselves will do so in a far more circumspect manner, I’m sure. Maybe that is what the Crown seeks, but I suggest that it really ill-becomes the Crown to demand jail for a first offence of publishing something which, prior to the trial, they don’t demonstrate had a great effect on society.

Endeavouring to find examples of situations where people were punished for what they wrote or what they said in Canada is quite difficult, because there are very few instances of such punishment, but I would like to point out, by way of analogy, that in the United States, where a man was convicted of teaching that God did not exist and that man evolved from apes, in the State of Tennessee, he was fined, I think, $200. He was not sent to jail. But {17|18} the Crown here asks Your Honour to sentence the accused to jail.

I would think that with the mass media of communication able to do the magnificent job of presenting the established and correct point of view from coast to coast, with massive ridicule for Mr. Zundel, that we should feel more secure today than the world felt from the errors of opinion of John Scopes, and, therefore, we should not need the more severe penalties [sic] of jail, sixty years later, for someone who denied the numbers and the existence of gas chambers, or a plan in an event, forty years ago in Europe. I wonder why the Crown should think that more serious, more dangerous to society than someone denying the existence of God, or that man was created by God.

It would be opportune to point out that the world did not suffer terribly from someone – and it’s done every day – denying the existence of God. It would seem that the Crown seeks to make it more dangerous, considering it more damaging to society to deny the allegations of certain people about events forty years ago in Europe.

I would ask Your Honour to consider {18|19} that in our more tolerant society, jail is not necessary for non-violent errors of opinion that may – and Your Honour can decide how much affects the public interest. And it’s also true in the Scopes trial the defence put forward the defence of truth of Mr. Scopes’s view, and ridiculed the views of the prosecution and they lost. In other words, he was found to be wrong in his views.

It’s interesting also to consider those who, in history, have been wrong in their views and what has happened to them and what has happened to their views. The only part of the world where people do, generally, go to jail for publishing their views today, I think, to a large extent, would be communist countries. They are often convicted there of publishing false views against the government or against the appropriate authority or un-Soviet activity, for example, but their views don’t and they are often referred to, as Samisdat Publishers, publishers who publish without official sanction, secretly often.

I hope Your Honour will see it appropriate and proper to measure our progress from the nineteen twenties with a confidence in the odd citizen to make decisions and not be affected by erroneous or false views {19|20} that we don’t need to incarcerate the person who has them to protect society.

In considering the massive ability of our society as it is currently technically able to present what can be viewed as the correct opinion, does society need so much protection from those whose views it regards as erroneous that they should be incarcerated?

The probation order sought by the Crown – is very obscure. It supports the maximum dimension of time. It speaks of the Holocaust as if that was a precise, definite word. I suppose it includes every story told by Jewish persons respecting their suffering in the Second World War. I don’t know if it applies to non-Jewish persons; according to Dr. Hilberg it did not; but some people say the Second World War itself could be viewed as a Holocaust, but I suppose it’s not the Holocaust. But it seems difficult for us, with ordinary intelligence, to perceive the precise meaning of that word, and therefore it becomes a dangerous prohibition to indicate to an accused that he may not publish about a subject the definition of which is rather obscure.

Therefore, if the court desires to impose a term of probation, I would ask that the term be {20|21} defined, and perhaps Your Honour has already done that in the trial. I don’t know that that answers some of my concerns, and perhaps not.

What if Mr. Zundel finds some new information or evidence to support his view that gas chambers were, indeed, an invention of Zionists? May he not write about that? If he wishes to write about his trial would the Crown deny him that right, because the trial might involve the Holocaust? May he not speak about that? May he not speak about that? May he not publish about that? It seems, then, he is silenced from putting forward what his views are about the trial.

Another thing that Crown said which I would like to take issue with is the suggestion that he published this book, “Did Six Million Really Die?”, for money. I am instructed that he published and paid for the printing of approximately ten thousand copies of this book, and sold about one per cent – far less than five hundred. He gave them all away. He gave them to lawyers, to members of Parliament, to teachers, to those in positions of authority, because he thought they should consider the point of view and they should decide. As it says in his introduction, he puts it forward for their {21|22} consideration. He did not make money publishing this in any way. If anything, he accomplished for himself, it was the satisfaction of a missionary zeal to put forward a point of view in which he fervently believes.

So I suggest money is not a motive for Mr. Zundel’s publication, and the Crown, in the absence of evidence of that, should have enquired of us, and I am sure we would have been delighted to tell the Crown just exactly what the financial situation was. This booklet did not make Mr. Zundel any money. The printing of ten thousand copies would, I am informed, cost a good deal more than any money he ever derived from the sale of approximately one per cent of the issues.

Many people have written books about other trials, and will, no doubt, about this trial; but if a probation order was imposed that Mr. Zundel might not speak about the Holocaust, would that include his inability to publish a reply to those that have written about him? He is, after all, a publisher who earns his money by writing and publishing.

I ask Your Honour to consider whether the Crown’s request for a probation order would place such reasonable limits as should be put upon a citizen in a free {22|23} society which would be ordinarily acceptable in a free and democratic society.

It would seem that if the broad definition sought by the Crown is imposed, that people might write about the accused, but he might not write about himself, nor about what he might believe. He might not publish because the trial involved his views on the subject the Crown emphatically and categorically calls the Holocaust, and says he ought not to write about.

He is well aware, from this trial, of the costs to him of publishing anything that will get him into jeopardy, but what does the Holocaust mean? Does it mean he may not speak about the things he believes and says in this trial?

It would seem the definition of the Holocaust is precisely what anyone who believes in it says it means, and that is very difficult for anyone to know in advance. We can read dictionaries, and they say some general things; but if it means that no one may publish, or he, rather, may not publish about what happened to Jews in the Second World War, it would seem to affect his right to publish about his own trial, and that would affect his right to freedom of expression {23|24}

The Crown's essential submission is that we must bring in punishment to silence people like Mr. Zundel for what he has said. I say to Your Honour that is not the way to bring about racial or social harmony. The power exists in the media to put forward the appropriate and proper views, and they generally do, and they, of course, are subject to discipline if they don't, through their many goals and bodies and the CRTC and other sources. To punish with jail people like Mr. Zundel will bring about intolerance, bitterness, resentment and other like things; and that is not in the public interest, because Mr. Zundel and others do believe what they say they believe, and I suggest that trials in courts on what is the historic truth will not likely convince them that they are wrong, nor will punishment upon those whose views they share.

Society is quite secure against erroneous opinions, because our freedom gives us the power to answer with magnificent duplications and repetition of views that are correct.

The accused is certainly a man who pays a high price for his beliefs. He was portrayed by my learned friend as having sympathies with certain political {24|25} ideals that our society deems wrong, I gather, from my friend's submission; but I would like to point out that among those persons in the past who have been categorized in that same way would be included Socrates, Jesus Christ, Galileo, Copernicus, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Pasternak, Luther, Emil Zola, Archbishop Makarios, and Cardinal Mindszenti, all of whom, at times, were incarcerated for their views. But I would like to point out – not that my client is necessarily as worthy as any of those – but that putting people in jail has been shown to be a notoriously bad way to stop anyone's opinion. There are gentler, kinder, more effective ways with reason, and with education, with the exchange of ideas, with discussions in society, debates, forums. And Mr. Zundel is not a man who objects to debate. In fact, he participates when he can.

In the Soviet Union, at the present time, people like Sheranski and Zakaroff have done nothing that I am aware of of any violent nature, but their views are wrong, apparently. Certainly it does no particular good to society to incarcerate people whose views are wrong. And I might point out that those people I mentioned had been, in the past, and those at present, were convicted {25|26} before competent courts in the country of their day. And now the prosecution here seeks for a first offender what I suggest is wrong – jail, and asks for severe restrictions on his right to publish, which is his livelihood.

Your Honour will decide what is right and appropriate for society, but I point out that society does not need jail to succeed in putting forward correct views, and it seems as if jail had very little consequences for ideas, as those examples from the past would indicate; ideas seem to slip between the bars, and seldom are prevented from communication, often with greater success.

As I say, in the Scopes case where someone denied the existence of God and preached that man was descended from apes, a fine of $200 was imposed in the nineteen twenties. The penalty that Your Honour will impose will decide whether, in fact, we are more secure than the State of Tennessee in Scopes, by virtue of what Mr. Zundel has published in error, than they were in that day or not.

I would point out that in the introduction to "Did Six Million Really Die?" the accused clearly indicates that he puts the book forward for discussion. He believes in it. But I point out that, as the pre-{26|27} sentence report says, he doesn't demand that people agree with him, only that they consider his opinion. That point was made by the writer of the pre-sentence report in respect not only to his family, but it would seem, from the observations made by that rather sensitive report, that Mr. Zundel doesn't come across as a person who demands that everyone believe what he believes.

I would ask that Your Honour consider that we do tolerate with less than danger to our society many opinions. I point out that, for example, on December 2nd, 1978, in the Toronto Star, on page P6, a Rubin Slonin (ph) wrote that the killing of Jews was a myth and the crucifix is a myth, and the central myth in Christianity concerns anti-Jewish bias. No one should prosecute him. No one did. But if they had, I would suggest that society would not need protection with his incarceration.

It would seem to be a fairly strong statement to say the killing of Jesus [Jesus] is a myth, albeit a sacred myth. Some Christians may be offended by that; the crucifix is a myth – some Christians may be offended by that. That we tolerate.

It was only yesterday that I read that certain bishops think we should expunge parts of the New {27|28} Testament because they create problems. Revisionism is not new. It will go on. To protect against bad revisionism we need not prohibit all revisionism, and we need not punish those whom we find to have erred in that regard by putting them in jail. They are not the malicious, perverted monsters that the media have portrayed, and they are not in need of incarceration to correct their erroneous opinions. Indeed, Mr. Zundel is all the more convinced, after this trial, that what he published was correct.

In conclusion, my client has been and intends to continue to be a law-abiding citizen. He intends, wherever possible, to consult with the authorities as to what he may or may not publish. In short, he is not the dangerous man that he's portrayed to be in my friend's submission or many of the things that have been said about him. In fact, he is, I say to Your Honour, far more truly portrayed in the pre-sentence report and by those who took the stand in his defence as a kindly man with a sense of humour, but with good will, and someone who believes in speaking the truth, no matter what it costs. Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {28|29}

Your Honour, as I indicated at the outset, my submission to you as to sentence is the same now as it was some three weeks ago, that there should be a substantial period of incarceration followed by a period of three years' probation with terms that I will go into in a moment – the same terms as before.

I would respectfully suggest, Your Honour, that at this juncture in time we are beyond the stage of talking about somebody with an honest belief in views who is being persecuted because of that honest belief. We are beyond the stage of talking about incarcerating people whose views are wrong, because the jury has made a finding here – if I am understanding Mr. Christie's able submissions this morning – that Mr. Zundel did not have those honest beliefs; he deliberately lied. That is why we are here.

We are not talking about any legitimate school of historical revisionism or punishing those who honestly err with jail. We are talking about somebody who deliberately lied, published those lies to the public at large, to the detriment of the public interest. I would respectfully suggest, Your Honour, that the pain in the community that I referred {29|30} to some three weeks ago, the anguish in the Canadian community has been indicated repeatedly over the last three weeks in columns in newspaper articles, phone-in radio shows, television programmes. This is an issue for the entire Canadian community, not for the Canadian Jewish Congress alone, or any other particular group alone.

My comments at that time, as well, Your Honour, were directed – if I wasn't clear I will try to make it clearer now – to the pain caused to a particular segment of the community: namely, the Jewish segment of the community in particular; that much as a rape victim in days gone by, before the Criminal Code was amended, was often more on trial than an accused in the nature of the cross-examination, the ordeal the victim was put through in testifying, that is the kind of ordeal the Jewish community was put through in this trial.

I agree with my friend, it is not what this trial has done, it is what the article has done as well, and I think, with respect, Your Honour, my comments on that I made to the jury, and I don't feel the need to repeat them now. I would indicate, however, that in that {30|31} pamphlet tract, "Did Six Million Really Die?", there is an appeal by Mr. Zundel for contributions to a legal defence fund at the time that it was published. There is certainly a clear awareness by Mr. Zundel that he is quite probably breaking the law in publishing it. No news to him. He took that chance and published it.

Following this lengthy and turbulent trial, Mr. Zundel was widely quoted as saying that it was worth it – he had a million dollars' worth of publicity. Maybe that was bravado by Mr. Zundel and he is now more concerned, at the hour of his sentencing, than with the nature of the publicity and the notoriety that he received.

There's been no expression of remorse or sadness from Mr. Zundel, and that's a factor that I invite Your Honour to take into account in considering specific deterrence of Mr. Zundel, and in considering rehabilitation. It is a factor for Your Honour on sentencing.

The third factor on sentencing, Your Honour, is general deterrence, and certainly within the last eighteen months the Attorney General of this province, then the Honourable Roy McMurtry, felt strongly {31|32} enough about the incidence of this type of material that a special division was formed, a special project in the Ontario Provincial Police, called Project H, for the control of material of this nature. So it is a problem in the community. And that is something that I would invite Your Honour to address in sentence.

Mr. Christie raises, once again, the letter that Mr. Zundel wrote, apparently, to Mr. McMurtry on November 10th of 1983 asking for guidelines prior to his prosecution. Well, it was prior to his prosecution all right, and after litigation – publication of his material. Guidelines at that point would have had no effect on this prosecution.

Your Honour, the Criminal Code provides, s.663, for Your Honour to make a probation order, and one of the matters that you can direct yourself to in making a probation order under s.663(2) (h) is preventing a repetition by the accused of the same offence, or the commission of other offences. That, really, Your Honour, is what my submission on the last day with respect to a probation order was directed to.

Mr. Zundel, I think, has made it clear that this is an abiding interest of his, to publish material {32|33} of this nature. It is certainly clear in the pre-sentence report that it is an abiding interest of his, and I would suggest that it is appropriate, in considering rehabilitation, and specific deterrence, that he be prevented from committing a further offence of a similar nature. That is why I make the recommendation for the probation order that I do.

I agree with Mr. Christie that on the last day I was not precise enough in my terms, and I would suggest that it is appropriate that the matter be precisely defined as well as we can so that Mr. Zundel understands well what it is that he is, in my submission, to be asked not to do.

I suggest that a probation order should contain a term, that Mr. Zundel personally, or through any company that he owns or controls, such as Samisdat Publishing, be prohibited from publishing, writing, distributing or speaking publicly on the subject of the attempted annihilation of European Jewry, known as the Holocaust.

I would further suggest, Your Honour, that a recommendation should accompany, if there is a period of incarceration imposed by Your Honour, there {33|34} would, as I understand, be a lapse in time between the time that Mr. Zundel would be released from jail until such time as the end of sentence and the probation order took effect, and I would ask that there be a recommendation that any such order, if there is such an order, restricting that area that he can publish in, be included in any parole order.

Probation orders, Your Honour, are a restriction on the freedoms of individuals, freedom of association with others, often with a criminal record, their freedom of movement. Sometimes they can be kept out of a certain area of the city, or told to remain within the city.

Curfew is a very common item in a probation order, and surely, following a conviction, that is part of the sentencing process, is the restriction of individuals' freedoms, either wholly, through incarceration, or in part, through a probation order, and I suggest there is nothing inappropriate about that.

Subject to Your Honour, those would be my submissions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. {34|35}

My friend reiterates his position respecting pain in the Canadian community, which I would point out again he acknowledged the result of the trial. It's not evident, from anything my friend has said, that there was some pre-existing pain prior to the trial that the Canadian community was affected by.

I am well aware, as, no doubt, everyone is, of the anxiety by many editorial writers who disapprove of everything Mr. Zundel represents; but nonetheless they feel that it is dangerous to have prosecuted him for giving him either a platform, or affecting freedom of speech. I read editorials to that effect in almost every newspaper in Canada.

However, that is not Mr. Zundel's fault that he was put on trial, or that he had the temerity to raise, in his own defence, his opinions.

My friend says there is no expression of remorse or sadness. Well, my client maintains his honest belief, and I suggest that what was written and what he said, if he believes it, and he says he does, cannot justify remorse or sadness any more than someone who conscientiously [sic] believes an opinion which courts may find to be wrong can justify in their own conscience, {35|36} saying, "I'm sorry I believe this", or, "I'm sorry I say this or said this." And what the Attorney General feels about other people and their actions is not really known. The fact that he establishes a project called H, which I assume stands for "Hate", is not the responsibility of my client, is not an indication of anything besides a decision of an officer of the government. It doesn't signify that there is some raising [rising] demon of hate in the community that needs to have general deterrence applied. Not one instance of any action, or anything specific is mentioned in the way of this new perceived danger to the community of Canada.

I was quite surprised to hear the new definition of the Holocaust as the attempted annihilation of European Jewry, not specifying when, not specifying where, not specifying how; any attempted annihilation of European Jewry is now the Holocaust. I was hopeful of some precise definition so my client will say, "Well, I don't agree with the restrictions, but I can certainly understand it, and I know now where I must and must not publish." The attempted annihilation of European Jewry as the Holocaust has no time, no date, does not even come within the Second World War, I guess, goes anywhere. {36|37} Every time I hear a definition of the Holocaust, it's different. I suppose that we must now accept the proposition that anything that denies attempted annihilation of European Jewry would be forbidden, whether or not it be in the Second World War or at any other time.

I agree that what my friend says is true about the daily restrictions of freedom of individuals after they have committed a crime. A crime such as publishing is not a crime like other crimes. It's not the crime of rape. There is no analogy to the crime of rape. It is not a vicious, violent, physical act. It is not an act of theft or deprivation of property. It is, in fact, the utterance of words. And I tried to point out to my friend, and I tried to make him aware of the fact that those persons in the past who, by words alone and not deeds, had committed offences against their society and were, therefore, punished, the punishment was not effective – not because it wasn't the best of desires, perhaps, to the people seeking the punishment, but the words and the utterances of words, and even their publication, is not a crime like other crimes that we can say, we will apply all the same old rules because it affects everyone's right to communicate and it must be, {37|38} therefore, dealt with as a special type of offence. To apply the same routine restrictions to people's rights to communicate as one applies to their rights to go near beer parlors where drugs are trafficked, or to deal with them as if they have committed violent offences or other types of offences is not to perceive the difference between a person's expression of opinion, however false or wrong, and any other kind of criminal behaviour.

I suggest it's a dangerous precedent not to maintain that distinction, not to be alive to the implications for all of us who do nothing wrong, steal nothing from anyone, but who say things from time to time that others might not agree with. We are not dealing with an area of offence that has not got broad and over-whelming implications for freedoms of speech, and that must be kept in mind, because in my submission it is very important.

Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. {38|39}

REASONS FOR SENTENCE

THE COURT: Ernst Zundel is age forty-six. He has no dependants. He has no criminal record. He describes himself as a publisher. In reality he is a neo-Nazi propagandist. He is a citizen of the Republic of West Germany. He emigrated to Canada in 1958. He has lived here ever since. He has apparently never applied for Canadian citizenship. He is a commercial artist by trade. I draw the inference that since his arrival in this country he has acquired substantial material wealth.

On February 28th, 1985, after a long trial, a jury that he helped select returned a verdict of guilty upon Mr. Zundel. The jury found that he wilfully published a false statement contrary to the Criminal Code.

The subject of the statement was the Holocaust. Mr. Zundel published a tract entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?". The six million were the Jews of Europe slaughtered in death camps by German Nazis during World War II. The tract claims that the Holocaust never happened, that it is a Zionist fraudulent plot perpetrated by Jews in order to dishonestly extract money in reparations from Germany.

On the jury's verdict I now formally register the conviction. I ordered a pre-sentence report. I did so because counsel for the accused, at the time of the verdict, deliberately elected to be of no assistance to this {39|40} court on the difficult matter of sentence. This morning, however, Mr. Christie has been of substantial assistance to the Court in his submissions with respect to the matter of sentence.

Mr. Zundel and his entourage of followers and adherents should all know that the sentence to be imposed upon him by this Court, in part, is intended to reflect the views of the total Canadian community and not just any specific group of that community. Mr. Zundel should also know that he is perfectly free to believe and to practise anything he so chooses, provided he does not break Canadian laws.

He has chosen as a propaganda speciality the perpetuation of the "big lie" in the tradition of the now deceased sub-human monsters Adolf Hitler and Joseph Goebbels. The subject of the lie he has chosen is the Holocaust. The lie itself is that the Holocaust never occurred.

One is hard-pressed to contemplate a subject more likely to propagate the evil of public unrest fueled by racial intolerance in the Canadian community than to claim that the Holocaust is a fraudulent myth.

In this accused, there is not the slightest indication of either regret or remorse that he deliberately published this lie. This is the lie the jury found, obviously {40|41} that he published. He displays a total absence of contrition.

The pre-sentence report quotes him as intending to continue the pursuit of his notions about the Holocaust.

From the evidence and the submissions of counsel, the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the hope of Mr. Zundel's rehabilitation barely exists. Unfortunately, his stated visions of revived Aryan Nazi grandeur combine with his robust ego to prevent his civilized behaviour in our Canadian multi-cultural society. In addition, the aging process might have cemented his notions to the point where any moderation in his conduct and obsessive views is unlikely.

His wilful publication of this scurrilous document has deeply offended decent people of all racial origins. In addition, Mr. Zundel has slandered the memory of innocent murdered human beings. Many relatives and descendants of the slaughtered millions live in the Canadian community. They should be permitted to live within the peace, order and stable government that this country provides without the crude, unacceptable intrusions of Mr. Zundel and those of his ilk.

He published a blatant racist diatribe. When he did so, he knew the subject matter to be essentially false. With the unmistakable instinct of the street disturber, {41|42} he also knew that the publication would likely foment the evil of racial intolerance within our community. He published not for the purpose of honest public debate; rather he published with the fixed intention of destabilizing the Canadian community. He has created his elaborate propaganda apparatus all by himself. He is well-endowed with both logistical and financial support which emanates from several obvious sources.

Mr. Zundel is a danger to the community. The sentence to be imposed must, of necessity, emphasize deterrence to other like-minded racists and others from committing similar crimes. In addition, it is to be hoped that the sentence to be imposed will deter Mr. Zundel himself from further criminal conduct in the Canadian community in which he has elected to live, to feed upon, but not to formally join.

He will go to jail for fifteen months. In addition, he will be placed on probation for three years. The conditions are as follows:

1. He will obey all of the statutory conditions.
  2. He will remain within the jurisdiction {42|43} of the court.
  3. He will report to the probation officer forthwith upon his release.
  4. He will not publish in writing or by speaking in public by word of mouth, directly or indirectly, in his name or in any other name, corporate or personal, anything on the subject of the Holocaust or on any subject related directly or indirectly to the Holocaust [sic].
  5. I recommend that these conditions be made conditions of parole which I am quite satisfied he will quickly receive.
- That is the sentence. Remove the accused.

Certified correct to the best of my skill and ability.

HOLOCAUST HANDBOOKS

This ambitious, growing series addresses various aspects of the “Holocaust” of the WWII era. Most of them are based on decades of research from archives all over the world. They are heavily referenced. In contrast to most other works on this issue, the tomes of this series approach its topic with profound academic scrutiny and a critical attitude. Any Holocaust researcher ignoring this series will remain oblivious to some of the most important research in the field. These books are designed to both convince the common reader as well as academics. The following books have appeared so far, or are about to be released. Compare hardcopy and eBook prices at www.findbookprices.com.

SECTION ONE:

General Overviews of the Holocaust

The First Holocaust. The Surprising Origin of the Six-Million Figure. By Don Heddesheimer. This compact but substantive study documents propaganda spread prior to, during and after the FIRST World War that claimed East European Jewry was on the brink of annihilation. The magic number of suffering and dying Jews was 6 million back then as well. The book details how these Jewish fundraising operations in America raised vast sums in the name of feeding suffering Polish and Russian Jews but actually funneled much of the money to Zionist and Communist groups. 5th ed., 200 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#6)

Lectures on the Holocaust. Controversial Issues Cross Examined. By Germar Rudolf. This book first explains why “the Holocaust” is an important topic, and that it is well to keep an open mind about it. It then tells how many mainstream scholars expressed doubts and subsequently fell from grace. Next, the physical traces and documents about the various claimed crime scenes and murder weapons are discussed. After that, the reliability of witness testimony is examined. Finally, the author lobbies for a free exchange of ideas about this topic. This book gives the most-comprehensive and up-to-date overview of the critical research into the Holocaust. With its dialog style, it is pleasant to read, and it can even be used as an encyclopedic compendium. 3rd ed., 596 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#15)

Breaking the Spell. The Holocaust, Myth & Reality. By Nicholas Kollerstrom. In 1941, British Intelligence analysts cracked the German “Enigma” code. Hence, in 1942 and 1943, encrypted radio communications between German concentration camps and the Berlin headquarters were decrypted. The intercepted data

Pictured above are all of the scientific studies that comprise the series Holocaust Handbooks published thus far or are about to be released. More volumes and new editions are constantly in the works. Check www.HolocaustHandbooks.com for updates.

refutes the orthodox “Holocaust” narrative. It reveals that the Germans were desperate to reduce the death rate in their labor camps, which was caused by catastrophic typhus epidemics. Dr. Kollerstrom, a science historian, has taken these intercepts and a wide array of mostly unchallenged corroborating evidence to show that “witness statements” supporting the human gas chamber narrative clearly clash with the available scientific data. Kollerstrom concludes that the history of the Nazi “Holocaust” has been written by the victors with ulterior motives. It is distorted, exaggerated and largely wrong. With a foreword by Prof. Dr. James Fetzer. 5th ed., 282 pages, b&w ill., bibl., index. (#31) the winner of the current state of the debate. 4th ed., 342 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#32)

The Hoax of the Twentieth Century. The Case against the Presumed Extermination of European Jewry. By Arthur R. Butz. The first writer to analyze the entire Holocaust complex in a precise scientific manner. This book exhibits the overwhelming force of arguments accumulated by the mid-1970s. Butz's two main arguments are: 1. All major entities hostile to Germany must have known what was happening to the Jews under German authority. They acted during the war as if no mass slaughter was occurring. 2. All the evidence adduced to proof any mass slaughter has a dual interpretation, while only the innocuous one can be proven to be correct. This book continues to be a major historical reference work, frequently cited by prominent personalities. This edition has numerous supplements with new information gathered over the last 35 years. 4th ed., 524 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#7)

Dissecting the Holocaust. The Growing Critique of 'Truth' and 'Memory.' Edited by Germar Rudolf. Dissecting the Holocaust applies state-of-the-art scientific technique and classic methods of detection to investigate the alleged murder of millions of Jews by Germans during World War II. In 22 contributions—each of some 30 pages—the 17 authors dissect generally accepted paradigms of the "Holocaust." It reads as exciting as a crime novel: so many lies, forgeries and deceptions by politicians, historians and scientists are proven. This is the intellectual adventure of the 21st century. Be part of it! 3rd ed., 635 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#1)

The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry. By Walter N. Sanning. Six Million Jews died in the Holocaust. Sanning did not take that number at face value, but thoroughly explored European population developments and shifts mainly caused by emigration as well as deportations and evacuations conducted by both Nazis and the Soviets, among other things. The book is based mainly on Jewish, Zionist and mainstream sources. It concludes that a sizeable share of the Jews found missing during local censuses after the Second World War, which were so far counted as "Holocaust victims," had either emigrated (mainly to Israel or the U.S.) or had been deported by Stalin to Siberian labor camps. 2nd ed., foreword by A.R. Butz, epilogue by Germar Rudolf containing important updates; 224 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography (#29).

Air Photo Evidence: World War Two Photos of Alleged Mass Murder Sites Analyzed. By Germar Rudolf (editor). During World War Two both German and Allied reconnaissance aircraft took countless air photos of places of tactical and strategic interest in Europe. These photos are prime evidence for the investigation of the Holocaust. Air photos of locations like Auschwitz, Majdanek, Treblinka, Babi Yar etc. permit an insight into what did or did not happen there. The author has unearthed many pertinent photos and has thoroughly analyzed them. This book is full of air photo reproductions and schematic drawings explaining them. According to the author, these images refute many of the atrocity claims made by witnesses in connection with events in the German sphere of influence. 5th edition; with a contribution by Carlo Mattogno. 168 pages, 8.5"×11", b&w illustrations, bibliography, index (#27).

The Leuchter Reports: Critical Edition. By Fred Leuchter, Robert Faurisson and Germar Rudolf. Between 1988 and 1991, U.S. expert on execution technologies Fred Leuchter wrote four detailed reports addressing whether the Third Reich operated homicidal gas chambers. The first report on Auschwitz and Majdanek became world famous. Based on chemical analyses and various technical arguments, Leuchter concluded that the locations investigated "could not have then been, or now be, utilized or seriously considered to function as execution gas chambers." The second report deals with gas-chamber claims for the camps Dachau, Mauthausen and Hartheim, while the third reviews design criteria and operation procedures of execution gas chambers in the U.S. The fourth report reviews Pressac's 1989 tome Auschwitz. 4th ed., 252 pages, b&w illustrations. (#16)

The Giant with Feet of Clay: Raul Hilberg and His Standard Work on the Holocaust. By Jürgen Graf. Raul Hilberg's major work The Destruction of European Jewry is an orthodox standard work on the Holocaust. But what evidence does Hilberg provide to back his thesis that there was a German plan to exterminate Jews, carried out mainly in gas chambers? Jürgen Graf applies the methods of critical analysis to Hilberg's evidence and examines the results in light of modern historiography. The results of Graf's critical analysis are devastating for Hilberg.

2nd, corrected edition, 139 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#3)

Jewish Emigration from the Third Reich. By Ingrid Weckert. Current historical writings about the Third Reich claim state it was difficult for Jews to flee from Nazi persecution. The truth is that Jewish emigration was welcomed by the German authorities. Emigration was not some kind of wild flight, but rather a lawfully determined and regulated matter. Weckert's booklet elucidates the emigration process in law and policy. She shows that German and Jewish authorities worked closely together. Jews interested in emigrating received detailed advice and offers of help from both sides. 2nd ed., 130 pages, index. (#12)

Inside the Gas Chambers: The Extermination of Mainstream Holocaust Historiography. By Carlo Mattogno. Neither increased media propaganda or political pressure nor judicial persecution can stifle revisionism. Hence, in early 2011, the Holocaust Orthodoxy published a 400 pp. book (in German) claiming to refute "revisionist propaganda," trying again to prove "once and for all" that there were homicidal gas chambers at the camps of Dachau, Natzweiler, Sachsenhausen, Mauthausen, Ravensbrück, Neuengamme, Stutthof... you name them. Mattogno shows with his detailed analysis of this work of propaganda that mainstream Holocaust hagiography is beating around the bush rather than addressing revisionist research results. He exposes their myths, distortions and lies. 2nd ed., 280 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#25)

SECTION TWO: Specific non-Auschwitz Studies

Treblinka: Extermination Camp or Transit Camp? By Carlo Mattogno and Jürgen Graf. It is alleged that at Treblinka in East Poland between 700,000 and 3,000,000 persons were murdered in 1942 and 1943. The weapons used were said to have been stationary and/or mobile gas chambers, fast-acting or slow-acting poison gas, unslaked lime, superheated steam, electricity, diesel exhaust fumes etc. Holocaust historians alleged that bodies were piled as high as multi-storied buildings and burned without a trace, using little or no fuel at all. Graf and Mattogno have now analyzed the origins, logic and technical feasibility of the official version of Treblinka. On the basis of numerous documents they reveal Treblinka's true identity as a mere transit camp. 2nd ed., 372 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#8)

Belzec in Propaganda, Testimonies, Archeological Research and History. By Carlo Mattogno. Witnesses report that between 600,000 and 3 million Jews were murdered in the Belzec camp, located in Poland. Various murder weapons are claimed to have been used: diesel gas; unslaked lime in trains; high voltage; vacuum chambers; etc. The corpses were incinerated on huge pyres without leaving a trace. For those who know the stories about Treblinka this sounds familiar. Thus the author has restricted this study to the aspects which are new compared to Treblinka. In contrast to Treblinka, forensic drillings and excavations were performed at Belzec, the results of which are critically reviewed. 142 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#9)

Sobibor: Holocaust Propaganda and Reality. By Jürgen Graf, Thomas Kues and Carlo Mattogno. Between 25,000 and 2 million Jews are said to have been killed in gas chambers in the Sobibór camp in Poland. The corpses were allegedly buried in mass graves and later incinerated on pyres. This book investigates these claims and shows that they are based on the selective use of contradictory eyewitness testimony. Archeological surveys of the camp in 2000-2001 are analyzed, with fatal results for the extermination camp hypothesis. The book also documents the general National Socialist policy toward Jews, which never included a genocidal "final solution." 442 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#19)

The "Extermination Camps" of "Aktion Reinhardt". By Jürgen Graf, Thomas Kues and Carlo Mattogno. In late 2011, several members of the exterminationist Holocaust Controversies blog posted a study online which claims to refute three of our authors' monographs on the camps Belzec, Sobibor and Treblinka (see previous three entries). This tome is their point-by-point response, which makes "mincemeat" out of the bloggers' attempt at refutation. Caution: The two volumes of this work are an intellectual overkill for most people. They are recommended only for collectors, connoisseurs and professionals. These two books require familiarity with the above-mentioned books, of which they are a comprehensive update and expansion. 2nd ed., two volumes, total of 1396 pages, illustrations, bibliography. (#28)

Chelmno: A Camp in History & Propaganda. By Carlo Mattogno. At Chelmno, huge masses of Jewish prisoners are said to have been gassed in “gas vans” or shot (claims vary from 10,000 to 1.3 million victims). This study covers the subject from every angle, undermining the orthodox claims about the camp with an overwhelmingly effective body of evidence. Eyewitness statements, gas wagons as extermination weapons, forensics reports and excavations, German documents—all come under Mattogno’s scrutiny. Here are the uncensored facts about Chelmno, not the propaganda. 2nd ed., 188 pages, indexed, illustrated, bibliography. (#23)

The Gas Vans: A Critical Investigation. By Santiago Alvarez and Pierre Marais. It is alleged that the Nazis used mobile gas chambers to exterminate 700,000 people. Up until 2011, no thorough monograph had appeared on the topic. Santiago Alvarez has remedied the situation. Are witness statements reliable? Are documents genuine? Where are the murder weapons? Could they have operated as claimed? Where are the corpses? In order to get to the truth of the matter, Alvarez has scrutinized all known wartime documents and photos about this topic; he has analyzed a huge amount of witness statements as published in the literature and as presented in more than 30 trials held over the decades in Germany, Poland and Israel; and he has examined the claims made in the pertinent mainstream literature. The result of his research is mind-boggling. Note: This book and Mattogno’s book on Chelmno were edited in parallel to make sure they are consistent and not repetitive. 398 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#26)

The Einsatzgruppen in the Occupied Eastern Territories: Genesis, Missions and Actions. By C. Mattogno. Before invading the Soviet Union, the German authorities set up special units meant to secure the area behind the German front. Orthodox historians claim that these units called Einsatzgruppen primarily engaged in rounding up and mass-murdering Jews. This study sheds a critical light into this topic by reviewing all the pertinent sources as well as material traces. It reveals on the one hand that original war-time documents do not fully support the orthodox genocidal narrative, and on the other that most post-“liberation” sources such as testimonies and forensic reports are steeped in Soviet atrocity propaganda and are thus utterly unreliable. In addition, material traces of the claimed massacres are rare due to an attitude of collusion by governments and Jewish lobby groups. 830 pp., b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#39)

Concentration Camp Majdanek. A Historical and Technical Study. By Carlo Mattogno and Jürgen Graf. At war’s end, the Soviets claimed that up to two million Jews were murdered at the Majdanek Camp in seven gas chambers. Over the decades, however, the Majdanek Museum reduced the death toll three times to currently 78,000, and admitted that there were “only” two gas chambers. By exhaustively researching primary sources, the authors expertly dissect and repudiate the myth of homicidal gas chambers at that camp. They also critically investigated the legend of mass executions of Jews in tank trenches and prove them groundless. Again they have produced a standard work of methodical investigation which authentic historiography cannot ignore. 3rd ed., 358 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#5)

Concentration Camp Stutthof and Its Function in National Socialist Jewish Policy. By Carlo Mattogno and Jürgen Graf. Orthodox historians claim that the Stutthof Camp served as a “make-shift” extermination camp in 1944. Based mainly on archival resources, this study thoroughly debunks this view and shows that Stutthof was in fact a center for the organization of German forced labor toward the end of World War II. 4th ed., 170 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#4)

SECTION THREE: Auschwitz Studies

The Making of the Auschwitz Myth: Auschwitz in British Intercepts, Polish Underground Reports and Post-war Testimonies (1941-1947). By Carlo Mattogno. Using messages sent by the Polish underground to London, SS radio messages sent to and from Auschwitz that were intercepted and decrypted by the British, and a plethora of witness statements made during the war and in the immediate postwar period, the author shows how exactly the myth of mass murder in Auschwitz gas chambers was created, and how it was turned subsequently into “history” by intellectually corrupt scholars who cherry-picked claims that fit into their agenda and ignored or actively covered up literally thousands of lies of “witnesses” to make their narrative look credible. Ca. 300 pp., b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (Scheduled for mid-2020; #41)

The Real Case of Auschwitz: Robert van Pelt's Evidence from the Irving Trial Critically Reviewed. By Carlo Mattogno. Prof. Robert van Pelt is considered one of the best mainstream experts on Auschwitz. He became famous when appearing as an expert during the London libel trial of David Irving against Deborah Lipstadt. From it resulted a book titled The Case for Auschwitz, in which van Pelt laid out his case for the existence of homicidal gas chambers at that camp. This book is a scholarly response to Prof. van Pelt—and Jean-Claude Pressac, upon whose books van Pelt's study is largely based. Mattogno lists all the evidence van Pelt adduces, and shows one by one that van Pelt misrepresented and misinterpreted each single one of them. This is a book of prime political and scholarly importance to those looking for the truth about Auschwitz. 3rd ed., 692 pages, b&w illustrations, glossary, bibliography, index. (#22)

Auschwitz: Plain Facts: A Response to Jean-Claude Pressac. Edited by Germar Rudolf, with contributions by Serge Thion, Robert Faurisson and Carlo Mattogno. French pharmacist Jean-Claude Pressac tried to refute revisionist findings with the “technical” method. For this he was praised by the mainstream, and they proclaimed victory over the “revisionists.” In his book, Pressac's works and claims are shown to be unscientific in nature, as he never substantiate what he claims, and historically false, because he systematically misrepresents, misinterprets and misunderstands German wartime documents. 2nd ed., 226 pages, b&w illustrations, glossary bibliography, index. (#14)

Auschwitz: Technique and Operation of the Gas Chambers: An Introduction and Update. By Germar Rudolf. Pressac's 1989 oversize book of the same title was a trail blazer. Its many document reproductions are still valuable, but after decades of additional research, Pressac's annotations are outdated. This book summarizes the most pertinent research results on Auschwitz gained during the past 30 years. With many references to Pressac's epic tome, it serves as an update and correction to it, whether you own an original hard copy of it, read it online, borrow it from a library, purchase a reprint, or are just interested in such a summary in general. 144 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography. (#42)

The Chemistry of Auschwitz: The Technology and Toxicology of Zyklon B and the Gas Chambers – A Crime Scene Investigation. By Germar Rudolf. This study documents forensic research on Auschwitz, where material traces and their interpretation reign supreme. Most of the claimed crime scenes – the claimed homicidal gas chambers – are still accessible to forensic examination to some degree. This book addresses questions such as: What did these gas chambers look like? How did they operate? In addition, the infamous Zyklon B can also be examined. What exactly was it? How does it kill? Does it leave traces in masonry that can be found still today? The author also discusses in depth similar forensic research conducted by other authors. 3rd ed., 442 pages, more than 120 color and almost 100 b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#2)

Auschwitz Lies: Legends, Lies and Prejudices on the Holocaust. By C. Mattogno and G. Rudolf. The fallacious research and alleged “refutation” of Revisionist scholars by French biochemist G. Wellers (attacking Leuchter's famous report), Polish chemist Dr. J. Markiewicz and U.S. chemist Dr. Richard Green (taking on Rudolf's chemical research), Dr. John Zimmerman (tackling Mattogno on cremation issues), Michael Shermer and Alex Grobman (trying to prove it all), as well as researchers Keren, McCarthy and Mazal (how turned cracks into architectural features), are exposed for what they are: blatant and easily exposed political lies created to ostracize dissident historians. 3rd ed., 398 pages, b&w illustrations, index. (#18)

Auschwitz: The Central Construction Office. By C. Mattogno. Based upon mostly unpublished German wartime documents, this study describes the history, organization, tasks and procedures of the one office which was responsible for the planning and construction of the Auschwitz camp complex, including the crematories which are said to have contained the “gas chambers.” 2nd ed., 188 pages, b&w illustrations, glossary, index. (#13)

Garrison and Headquarters Orders of the Auschwitz Camp. By C. Mattogno. A large number of all the orders ever issued by the various commanders of the infamous Auschwitz camp have been preserved. They reveal the true nature of the camp with all its daily events. There is not a trace in these orders pointing at anything sinister going on in this camp. Quite to the contrary, many orders are in clear and insurmountable contradiction to claims that prisoners were mass murdered. This is a selection of the most pertinent of these orders together with comments putting them into their proper historical context. (Scheduled for late 2020; #34)

Special Treatment in Auschwitz: Origin and Meaning of a Term. By C. Mattogno. When appearing in German wartime documents, terms like “special treatment,” “special action,” and others have been interpreted as code words for mass murder. But that is not always true. This study focuses on documents about Auschwitz, showing that, while “special” had many different meanings, not a single one meant “execution.” Hence the practice of deciphering an alleged “code language” by assigning homicidal meaning to harmless documents – a key component of mainstream historiography – is untenable. 2nd ed., 166 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#10)

Healthcare at Auschwitz. By C. Mattogno. In extension of the above study on Special Treatment in Auschwitz, this study proves the extent to which the German authorities at Auschwitz tried to provide health care for the inmates. Part 1 of this book analyzes the inmates’ living conditions and the various sanitary and medical measures implemented. Part 2 explores what happened to registered inmates who were “selected” or subject to “special treatment” while disabled or sick. This study shows that a lot was tried to cure these inmates, especially under the aegis of Garrison Physician Dr. Wirths. Part 3 is dedicated to Dr. this very Wirths. His reality refutes the current stereotype of SS officers. 398 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#33)

Debunking the Bunkers of Auschwitz: Black Propaganda vs. History. By Carlo Mattogno. The bunkers at Auschwitz, two former farmhouses just outside the camp’s perimeter, are claimed to have been the first homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz specifically equipped for this purpose. With the help of original German wartime files as well as revealing air photos taken by Allied reconnaissance aircraft in 1944, this study shows that these homicidal “bunkers” never existed, how the rumors about them evolved as black propaganda created by resistance groups in the camp, and how this propaganda was transformed into a false reality. 2nd ed., 292 pages, b&w ill., bibliography, index. (#11)

Auschwitz: The First Gassing. Rumor and Reality. By C. Mattogno. The first gassing in Auschwitz is claimed to have occurred on Sept. 3, 1941, in a basement room. The accounts reporting it are the archetypes for all later gassing accounts. This study analyzes all available sources about this alleged event. It shows that these sources contradict each other in location, date, victims etc, rendering it impossible to extract a consistent story. Original wartime documents inflict a final blow to this legend and prove without a shadow of a doubt that this legendary event never happened. 3rd ed., 190 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#20)

Auschwitz: Crematorium I and the Alleged Homicidal Gassings. By C. Mattogno. The morgue of Crematorium I in Auschwitz is said to be the first homicidal gas chamber there. This study investigates all statements by witnesses and analyzes hundreds of wartime documents to accurately write a history of that building. Where witnesses speak of gassings, they are either very vague or, if specific, contradict one another and are refuted by documented and material facts. The author also exposes the fraudulent attempts of mainstream historians to convert the witnesses’ black propaganda into “truth” by means of selective quotes, omissions, and distortions. Mattogno proves that this building’s morgue was never a homicidal gas chamber, nor could it have worked as such. 2nd ed., 152 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#21)

Auschwitz: Open Air Incinerations. By C. Mattogno. In spring and summer of 1944, 400,000 Hungarian Jews were deported to Auschwitz and allegedly murdered there in gas chambers. The Auschwitz crematoria are said to have been unable to cope with so many corpses. Therefore, every single day thousands of corpses are claimed to have been incinerated on huge pyres lit in deep trenches. The sky over Auschwitz was covered in thick smoke. This is what some witnesses want us to believe. This book examines the many testimonies regarding these incinerations and establishes whether these claims were even possible. Using air photos, physical evidence and wartime documents, the author shows that these claims are fiction. A new Appendix contains 3 papers on groundwater levels and cattle mass burnings. 2nd ed., 202 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#17)

The Cremation Furnaces of Auschwitz. By Carlo Mattogno & Franco Deana. An exhaustive study of the history and technology of cremation in general and of the cremation furnaces of Auschwitz in particular. On a vast base of technical literature, extant wartime documents and material traces, the authors can establish the true nature and capacity of the Auschwitz cremation furnaces. They show that these devices were inferior make-shift versions of what was usually produced, and that their capacity to cremate corpses was lower than normal, too. 3 vols., 1198 pages, b&w and color illustrations (vols 2 & 3), bibliography, index, glossary. (#24)

Curated Lies: The Auschwitz Museum's Misrepresentations, Distortions and Deceptions. By Carlo Mattogno. Revisionist research results have put the Polish Auschwitz Museum under pressure to answer this challenge. They've answered. This book analyzes their answer and reveals the appallingly mendacious attitude of the Auschwitz Museum authorities when presenting documents from their archives. 248 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#38)

Deliveries of Coke, Wood and Zyklon B to Auschwitz: Neither Proof Nor Trace for the Holocaust. By Carlo Mattogno. Researchers from the Auschwitz Museum tried to prove the reality of mass extermination by pointing to documents about deliveries of wood and coke as well as Zyklon B to the Auschwitz Camp. If put into the actual historical and technical context, however, these documents prove the exact opposite of what these orthodox researchers claim. Ca. 250 pages, b&w illust., bibl., index. (Scheduled for 2021; #40)

SECTION FOUR: Witness Critique

Holocaust High Priest: Elie Wiesel, Night, the Memory Cult, and the Rise of Revisionism. By Warren B. Routledge. The first unauthorized biography of Wiesel exposes both his personal deceptions and the whole myth of "the six million." It shows how Zionist control has allowed Wiesel and his fellow extremists to force leaders of many nations, the U.N. and even popes to genuflect before Wiesel as symbolic acts of subordination to World Jewry, while at the same time forcing school children to submit to Holocaust brainwashing. 468 pages, b&w illust., bibliography, index. (#30)

Auschwitz: Eyewitness Reports and Perpetrator Confessions. By Jürgen Graf. The traditional narrative of what transpired at the infamous Auschwitz Camp during WWII rests almost exclusively on witness testimony. This study critically scrutinizes the 30 most important of them by checking them for internal coherence, and by comparing them with one another as well as with other evidence such as wartime documents, air photos, forensic research results, and material traces. The result is devastating for the traditional narrative. 372 pages, b&w illust., bibl., index. (#36)

Commandant of Auschwitz: Rudolf Höss, His Torture and His Forced Confessions. By Carlo Mattogno & Rudolf Höss. From 1940 to 1943, Rudolf Höss was the commandant of the infamous Auschwitz Camp. After the war, he was captured by the British. In the following 13 months until his execution, he made 85 depositions of various kinds in which he confessed his involvement in the "Holocaust." This study first reveals how the British tortured him to extract various "confessions." Next, all of Höss's depositions are analyzed by checking his claims for internal consistency and comparing them with established historical facts. The results are eye-opening... 2nd ed., 402 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#35)

An Auschwitz Doctor's Eyewitness Account: The Tall Tales of Dr. Mengele's Assistant Analyzed. By Miklos Nyiszli & Carlo Mattogno. Nyiszli, a Hungarian physician, ended up at Auschwitz in 1944 as Dr. Mengele's assistant. After the war he wrote a book and several other writings describing what he claimed to have experienced. To this day some traditional historians take his accounts seriously, while others reject them as grotesque lies and exaggerations. This study presents and analyzes Nyiszli's writings and skillfully separates truth from fabulous fabrication. 484 pages, b&w illustrations, bibliography, index. (#37)

Thomas Dalton, The Holocaust: An Introduction

The Holocaust was perhaps the greatest crime of the 20th century. Six million Jews, we are told, died by gassing, shooting, and deprivation. But: Where did the six million figure come from? How, exactly, did the gas chambers work? Why do we have so little physical evidence from major death camps? Why haven't we found even a fraction of the six million bodies, or their ashes? Why has there been so much media suppression and governmental censorship on this topic? In a sense, the Holocaust is the greatest murder mystery in history. It is a topic of greatest importance for the present day. Let's explore the evidence, and see where it leads.

Carlo Mattogno, Auschwitz: A Three-Quarter Century of

Propaganda: Origins, Development and Decline of the "Gas Chamber" Propaganda Lie

During the war, wild rumors were circulating about Auschwitz: that the Germans were testing new war gases; that inmates were murdered in electrocution chambers, with gas showers or pneumatic hammer systems; that living people were sent on conveyor belts directly into cremation furnaces; that oils, grease and soap were made of the mass-murder victims. Nothing of it was true. When the Soviets captured Auschwitz in early 1945, they reported that 4 million inmates were killed on electrocution conveyor belts discharging their load directly into furnaces. That wasn't true either. After the war, "witnesses" and "experts" repeated these things and added more fantasies: mass murder with gas bombs, gas chambers made of canvas; carts driving living people into furnaces; that the crematoria of Auschwitz could have cremated 400 million victims... Again, none of it was true. This book gives an overview of the many rumors, myths and lies about Auschwitz which mainstream historians today reject as untrue. It then explains by which ridiculous methods some claims about Auschwitz were accepted as true and turned into "history," although they are just as untrue.

Wilhelm Stäglich, Auschwitz: A Judge Looks at the Evidence

Auschwitz is the epicenter of the Holocaust, where more people are said to have been murdered than anywhere else. At this detention camp the industrialized Nazi mass murder is said to have reached its demonic pinnacle. This narrative is based on a wide range of evidence, the most important of which was presented during two trials: the International Military Tribunal of 1945/46, and the German Auschwitz Trial of 1963-1965 in Frankfurt.

The late Wilhelm Stäglich, until the mid-1970s a German judge, has so far been the only legal expert to critically analyze this evidence. His research reveals the incredibly scandalous way in which the Allied victors and later the German judicial authorities bent and broke the law in order to come to politically foregone conclusions. Stäglich also exposes the shockingly superficial way in which historians are dealing with the many incongruities and discrepancies of the historical record.

Gerard Menuhin: Tell the Truth & Shame the Devil

A prominent Jew from a famous family says the "Holocaust" is a wartime propaganda myth which has turned into an extortion racket. Far from bearing the sole guilt for starting WWII as alleged at Nuremberg (for which many of the surviving German leaders were hanged) Germany is mostly innocent in this respect and made numerous attempts to avoid and later to end the confrontation. During the 1930s Germany was confronted by a powerful Jewish-dominated world plutocracy out to destroy it... Yes, a prominent Jew says all this. Accept it or reject it, but be sure to read it and judge for yourself!

The author is the son of the great American-born violinist Yehudi Menuhin, who, though from a long line of rabbinical ancestors, fiercely criticized the foreign policy of the state of Israel and its repression of the Palestinians in the Holy Land.

Robert H. Countess, Christian Lindtner, Germar Rudolf (eds.),

Exactitude: Festschrift for Prof. Dr. Robert Faurisson

On January 25, 1929, a man was born who probably deserves the title of the most courageous intellectual of the 20th century and the beginning of the 21st century: Robert Faurisson. With bravery and steadfastness, he challenged the dark forces of historical and political fraud with his unrelenting exposure of their lies and hoaxes surrounding the orthodox Holocaust narrative. This book describes and celebrates the man, who passed away on October 21, 2018, and his work dedicated to accuracy and marked by insubmission.

Cyrus Cox, Auschwitz – Forensically Examined

It is amazing what modern forensic crime-scene investigations can find out. This is also true for the Holocaust. There are many big tomes about this, such as Rudolf's 400+ page book on the Chemistry of Auschwitz, or Mattogno's 1200-page work on the crematoria of Auschwitz. But who reads those doorstops? Here is a booklet that condenses the most-important findings of Auschwitz forensics into a nutshell, quick and easy to read. In the first section, the forensic investigations conducted so far are reviewed. In the second section, the most-important results of these studies are summarized, making them accessible to everyone. The main arguments focus on two topics. The first centers around the poison allegedly used at Auschwitz for mass murder: Zyklon B. Did it leave any traces in masonry where it was used? Can it be detected to this day? The second topic deals with mass cremations. Did the crematoria of Auschwitz have the claimed huge capacity claimed for them? Do air photos taken during the war confirm witness statements on huge smoking pyres? Find the answers to these questions in this booklet, together with many references to source material and further reading. The third section reports on how the establishment has reacted to these research results.

Steffen Werner, The Second Babylonian Captivity: The Fate of the Jews in Eastern Europe since 1941

"But if they were not murdered, where did the six million deported Jews end up?" This is a standard objection to the revisionist thesis that the Jews were not killed in extermination camps. It demands a well-founded response. While researching an entirely different topic, Steffen Werner accidentally stumbled upon the most-peculiar demographic data of Byelorussia. Years of research subsequently revealed more and more evidence which eventually allowed him to substantiate a breathtaking and sensational proposition: The Third Reich did indeed deport many of the Jews of Europe to Eastern Europe in order to settle them there "in the swamp." This book, first published in German in 1990, was the first well-founded work showing what really happened to the Jews deported to the East by the National Socialists, how they have fared since, and who, what and where they are "now" (1990). It provides context and purpose for hitherto-obscure and seemingly arbitrary historical events and quite obviates all need for paranormal events such as genocide, gas chambers, and all their attendant horrors. With a preface by Germar Rudolf with references to more-recent research results in this field of study confirming Werner's thesis.

Germar Rudolf, Holocaust Skepticism: 20 Questions and Answers about Holocaust Revisionism

This 15-page brochure introduces the novice to the concept of Holocaust revisionism, and answers 20 tough questions, among them: What does Holocaust revisionism claim? Why should I take Holocaust revisionism more seriously than the claim that the earth is flat? How about the testimonies by survivors and confessions by perpetrators? What about the pictures of corpse piles in the camps? Why does it matter how many Jews were killed by the Nazis, since even 1,000 would have been too many? ... Glossy full-color brochure. Germar Rudolf, Bungled: "Denying the Holocaust" How Deborah Lipstadt Botched Her Attempt to Demonstrate the Growing Assault on Truth and Memory

With her book Denying the Holocaust, Deborah Lipstadt tried to show the flawed methods and extremist motives of "Holocaust deniers." This book demonstrates that Dr. Lipstadt clearly has neither understood the principles of science and scholarship, nor has she any clue about the historical topics she is writing about. She misquotes, mistranslates, misrepresents, misinterprets, and makes a plethora of wild claims without backing them up with anything. Rather than dealing thoroughly with factual arguments, Lipstadt's book is full of ad hominem attacks on her opponents. It is an exercise in anti-intellectual pseudo-scientific arguments, an exhibition of ideological radicalism that rejects anything which contradicts its preset conclusions. F for FAIL

Carolus Magnus, Bungled: "Denying History". How Michael Shermer and Alex Grobman Botched Their Attempt to Refute Those Who Say the Holocaust Never Happened

Skeptic Magazine editor Michael Shermer and Alex Grobman from the Simon Wiesenthal Center wrote a book in 2000 which they claim is "a thorough and thoughtful answer to all the claims of the Holocaust deniers." In 2009, a new "updated" edition appeared with the same ambitious goal. In the meantime, revisionists had published some 10,000 pages of archival and forensic research results. Would their updated edition indeed answer all the revisionist claims? In fact, Shermer and Grobman completely ignored the vast amount of recent scholarly studies and piled up a heap of falsifications, contortions, omissions, and fallacious interpretations of the evidence. Finally, what the authors claim to have demolished is not revisionism but a ridiculous parody of it. They ignored the known unreliability of their cherry-picked selection of evidence, utilizing unverified and incestuous sources, and obscuring the massive body of research and all the evidence that dooms their project to failure. F for FAIL

Carolus Magnus, Bungled: "Debunking Holocaust Denial Theories". How James and Lance Morcan Botched Their Attempt to Affirm the Historicity of the Nazi Genocide

The novelists and movie-makers James and Lance Morcan have produced a book "to end [Holocaust] denial once and for all." To do this, "no stone was left unturned" to verify historical assertions by presenting "a wide array of sources" meant "to shut down the debate deniers wish to create. One by one, the various arguments Holocaust deniers use to try to discredit wartime records are carefully scrutinized and then systematically disproven." It's a lie. First, the Morcans completely ignored the vast amount of recent scholarly studies published by revisionists; they didn't even identify them. Instead, they engaged in shadowboxing, creating some imaginary, bogus "revisionist" scarecrow which they then tore to pieces. In addition, their knowledge even of their own side's source material was dismal, and the way they backed up their misleading or false claims was pitifully inadequate. F for FAIL.

Joachim Hoffmann, *Stalin's War of Extermination 1941-1945

A German government historian documents Stalin's murderous war against the German army and the German people. Based on the author's lifelong study of German and Russian military records, this book reveals the Red Army's grisly record of atrocities against soldiers and civilians, as ordered by Stalin. Since the 1920s, Stalin planned to invade Western Europe to initiate the "World Revolution." He prepared an attack which was unparalleled in history. The Germans noticed Stalin's aggressive intentions, but they underestimated the strength of the Red Army. What unfolded was the most-cruel war in history. This book shows how Stalin and his Bolshevik henchman used unimaginable violence and atrocities to break any resistance in the Red Army and to force their unwilling soldiers to fight against the Germans. The book explains how Soviet propagandists incited their soldiers to unlimited hatred against everything German, and he gives the reader a short but extremely unpleasant glimpse into what happened when these Soviet soldiers finally reached German soil in 1945: A gigantic wave of looting, arson, rape, torture, and mass murder...

Udo Walendy, Who Started World War II: Truth for a War-Torn World

For seven decades, mainstream historians have insisted that Germany was the main, if not the sole culprit for unleashing World War II in Europe. In the present book this myth is refuted. There is available to the public today a great number of documents on the foreign policies of the Great Powers before September 1939 as well as a wealth of literature in the form of memoirs of the persons directly involved in the decisions that led to the outbreak of World War II. Together, they made possible Walendy's present mosaic-like reconstruction of the events before the outbreak of the war in 1939. This book has been published only after an intensive study of sources, taking the greatest care to minimize speculation and inference. The present edition has been translated completely anew from the German original and has been slightly revised.

Germar Rudolf: Resistance is Obligatory!

In 2005 Rudolf, a peaceful dissident and publisher of revisionist literature, was kidnapped by the U.S. government and deported to Germany. There the local lackey regime staged a show trial against him for his historical writings. Rudolf was not permitted to defend his historical opinions, as the German penal law prohibits this. Yet he defended himself anyway: 7 days long Rudolf held a speech in the court room, during which he proved systematically that only the revisionists are scholarly in their attitude, whereas the Holocaust orthodoxy is merely pseudo-scientific. He then explained in detail why it is everyone's obligation to resist, without violence, a government which throws peaceful dissident into dungeons. When Rudolf tried to publish his public defence speech as a book from his prison cell, the public prosecutor initiated a new criminal investigation against him. After his probation time ended in 2011, he dared publish this speech anyway...

Germar Rudolf, Hunting Germar Rudolf: Essays on a Modern-Day Witch Hunt

German-born revisionist activist, author and publisher Germar Rudolf describes which events made him convert from a Holocaust believer to a Holocaust skeptic, quickly rising to a leading personality within the revisionist movement. This in turn unleashed a tsunami of persecution against him: loss of his job, denied PhD exam, destruction of his family, driven into exile, slandered by the mass media, literally hunted, caught, put on a show trial where filing motions to introduce evidence is illegal under the threat of further prosecution, and finally locked up in prison for years for nothing else than his peaceful yet controversial scholarly writings. In several essays, Rudolf takes the reader on a journey through an absurd world of government and societal persecution which most of us could never even fathom actually exists....

Germar Rudolf, The Day Amazon Murdered History

Amazon is the world's biggest book retailer. They dominate the U.S. and several foreign markets. Pursuant to the 1998 declaration of Amazon's founder Jeff Bezos to offer "the good, the bad and the ugly," customers once could buy every book that was in print and was legal to sell. However, in early 2017, a series of anonymous bomb threats against Jewish community centers occurred in the U.S., fueling a campaign by Jewish groups to coax Amazon into banning revisionist writings, false portraying them as anti-Semitic. On March 6, 2017, Amazon caved in and banned more than 100 books with dissenting viewpoints on the Holocaust. In April 2017, an Israeli Jew was arrested for having placed the fake bomb threats, a paid "service" he had offered for years. But that did not change Amazon's mind. Its stores remain closed for history books Jewish lobby groups disapprove of. This book accompanies the documentary of the same title. Both reveal how revisionist publications had become so powerfully convincing that the powers that be resorted to what looks like a dirty false-flag operation in order to get these books banned from Amazon...

Thomas Dalton, Hitler on the Jews

That Adolf Hitler spoke out against the Jews is beyond obvious. But of the thousands of books and articles written on Hitler, virtually none quotes Hitler's exact words on the Jews. The reason for this is clear: Those in positions of influence have incentives to present a simplistic picture of Hitler as a blood-thirsty tyrant. However, Hitler's take on the Jews is far more complex and sophisticated. In this book, for the first time, you can make up your own mind by reading nearly every idea that Hitler put forth about the Jews, in considerable detail and in full context. This is the first book ever to compile his remarks on the Jews. As you will discover, Hitler's analysis of the Jews, though hostile, is erudite, detailed, and – surprise, surprise – largely aligns with events of recent decades. There are many lessons here for the modern-day world to learn.

Thomas Dalton, Goebbels on the Jews

From the age of 26 until his death in 1945, Joseph Goebbels kept a near-daily diary. From it, we get a detailed look at the attitudes of one of the highest-ranking men in Nazi Germany. Goebbels shared Hitler's dislike of the Jews, and likewise wanted them totally removed from the Reich territory. Ultimately, Goebbels and others sought to remove the Jews completely from the Eurasian land mass—perhaps to the island of Madagascar. This would be the “final solution” to the Jewish Question. Nowhere in the diary does Goebbels discuss any Hitler order to kill the Jews, nor is there any reference to extermination camps, gas chambers, or any methods of systematic mass-murder. Goebbels acknowledges that Jews did indeed die by the thousands; but the range and scope of killings evidently fall far short of the claimed figure of 6 million. This book contains, for the first time, every significant diary entry relating to the Jews or Jewish policy. Also included are partial or full citations of 10 major essays by Goebbels on the Jews.

Thomas Dalton, The Jewish Hand in the World Wars

For many centuries, Jews have had a negative reputation in many countries. The reasons given are plentiful, but less well known is their involvement in war. When we examine the causal factors for war, and look at its primary beneficiaries, we repeatedly find a Jewish presence. Throughout history, Jews have played an exceptionally active role in promoting and inciting war. With their long-notorious influence in government, we find recurrent instances of Jews promoting hardline stances, being uncompromising, and actively inciting people to hatred. Jewish misanthropy, rooted in Old Testament mandates, and combined with a ruthless materialism, has led them, time and again, to instigate warfare if it served their larger interests. This fact explains much about the present-day world. In this book, Thomas Dalton examines in detail the Jewish hand in the two world wars. Along the way, he dissects Jewish motives and Jewish strategies for maximizing gain amidst warfare, reaching back centuries.

Thomas Dalton, Eternal Strangers: Critical Views of Jews and Judaism Through the Ages

It is common knowledge that Jews have been disliked for centuries—sometimes loathed, sometimes hated. But why? The standard reply is that anti-Semitism is a “disease” that, for some strange reason, has afflicted non-Jews for ages. But this makes little sense. Nor can it be an “irrational” reaction. Such things must have real, physical causal factors. Our best hope for understanding this recurrent ‘anti-Semitism’ is to study the history: to look at the actual words written by prominent critics of the Jews, in context, and with an eye to any common patterns that might emerge. Such a study reveals strikingly consistent observations: Jews are seen as pernicious, conniving, shifty liars; they harbor a deep-seated hatred of humanity; they are at once foolish and arrogant; they are socially disruptive and rebellious; they are ruthless exploiters and parasites; they are master criminals—the list goes on.

The persistence of such comments is remarkable and strongly suggests that the cause for such animosity resides in the Jews themselves—in their attitudes, their values, their ethnic traits and their beliefs. It is hard to come to any other conclusion than that Jews are inclined toward actions that trigger a revulsion in non-Jews. Jews have always been, and will always be, eternal strangers. Given this fact, we have a difficult path forward. One lesson of history is that Jews will not change; if anything, they will become better at hiding their real motives and intents. Under such conditions, many great thinkers have come to the conclusion that Jews must be separated from the rest of humanity. Eternal Strangers is a profoundly important book. It addresses the modern-day “Jewish problem” in all its depth—something which is arguably at the root of many of the world’s social, political and economic problems. The matter is urgent; we haven’t a moment to lose.

The Queen versus Zündel: The First Zündel Trial: The Transcript

In the early 1980s, Ernst Zündel, a German immigrant living in Toronto, was indicted for allegedly spreading “false news” by selling copies of Richard Hardwood’s brochure Did Six Million Really Die?, which challenged the accuracy of the orthodox Holocaust narrative. When the case went to court in 1985, so-called Holocaust experts and “eyewitnesses” of the alleged homicidal gas chambers at Auschwitz were cross-examined for the first time in history by a competent and skeptical legal team. The results were absolutely devastating for the Holocaust orthodoxy. Even the prosecutor, who had summoned these witnesses to bolster the mainstream Holocaust narrative, became at times annoyed by their incompetence and mendacity. For decades, these mind-boggling trial transcripts were hidden from public view. Now, for the first time, they have been published in print in this new book – unabridged and unedited.

Barbara Kulaszka (ed.), The Second Zündel Trial: Excerpts from the Transcript

In 1988, German-Canadian Ernst Zündel was for on trial a second time for allegedly spreading “false news” about the Holocaust. Zündel staged a magnificent defense in an attempt to prove that revisionist concepts of “the Holocaust” are essentially correct. Although many of the key players have since passed away, including Zündel, this historic trial keeps having an impact. It inspired major research efforts as expounded in the series Holocaust Handbooks. In contrast to the First Zündel Trial of 1985, the second trial had a much greater impact internationally, mainly due to the Leuchter Report, the first independent forensic research performed on Auschwitz, which was endorsed on the witness stand by British bestselling historian David Irving. The present book features the essential contents of this landmark trial with all the gripping, at-times-dramatic details. When Amazon.com decided to ban this 1992 book on a landmark trial about the “Holocaust”, we decided to put it back in print, lest censorship prevail...

Gerard Menuhin: Lies & Gravy: Landmarks in Human Decay – Two Plays

A long time ago, in a galaxy far, far away, the hallucination of global supremacy was born. Few paid it any attention. After centuries of interference, when the end is in sight, we’re more inclined to take it seriously. But now, we have only a few years of comparative freedom left before serfdom submerges us all. So it’s time to summarize our fall and to name the guilty, or, as some have it, to spot the loony. Sometimes the message is so dire that the only way to get it across is with humor – to act out our predicament and its causes. No amount of expert testimony can match the power of spectacle. Here, at times through the grotesque violence typical of Grand Guignol, at times through the milder but no-less-horrifying conspiracies of men incited by a congenital disorder to fulfill their drive for world domination, are a few of the most-telling stages in their crusade against humanity, and their consequences, as imagined by the author.

We wonder whether these two consecutive plays will ever be performed onstage...
