Editor's Remarks

Thirty-five years have passed since the first trial of Ernst Zündel ended in Canada. Many of the key defense players have since passed away, among them Ernst Zündel himself (†2017) and his spiritus rector Prof. Dr. Robert Faurisson (†2018), who was the mastermind behind both Zündel trial defenses, as well as Zündel's defense counsels Douglas Christie (†2013) and his assistant and later wife Barbara Kulaszka (†2017). Nevertheless, this historic trial, together with the second trial of Zündel of 1988, keeps having an impact as if they had happened just yesterday.

The First Zündel Trial of 1985 was extensively and largely factually covered by the Canadian media, and to a much-lesser extent also by the U.S. media, all of which drew a lot of attention to the Holocaust-revisionist cause. It was a misstep the mainstream media did not repeat in later such trials, neither the Second Zündel Trial nor David Irving's UK libel case against Deborah Lipstadt in 2000. Though media coverage was still considerable, it was thenceforward heavily biased in favor of the Holocaust orthodoxy.

Instead of retelling the tale of how it all came about and unfolded in the courtroom, we have included in this volume, as an introduction, an article written by the mastermind behind the two Zündel Trials, the late Dr. Robert Faurisson.

* * *

The present book contains the complete and unedited transcript of the First Zündel Trial. We received a scanned file of that transcript several years ago from Barbara Kulaszka, who was reluctant to share it with us, fearing that it might violate someone's copyright if the transcript got published. How a publicly accessible transcript of a public trial could be protected by any kind of copyright is beyond me. Anyway, we OCR-processed the document and posted it online, where it has been accessible for years.

Making this document accessible as a book required a long-lasting, tedious cleaning up of the messy OCR output. The bulk of this work was done by our volunteer Katana, to whom I would like to express my sincere gratitude. During that clean-up process and the subsequent editing of the result, we inevitably stumbled over a number of misspellings and other flaws in the original transcript. Our software's auto-correct function tried repeatedly to "improve" the text, but whenever we caught it doing that, we reversed it. Instead of correcting the text as such, we have tried to preserve it as it is in the original, only adding in [brackets] any corrections or missing words, punctuation, etc. which we thought ought to be there. On occasion, when a vowel in a German word should have been an umlaut but wasn't, we added that umlaut in brackets.

In many cases, the original transcript has quotations formatted with large indentation and with quotation marks starting every single line. Preserving this format would have inflated the volume of the present book unacceptably, so we chose to render these quotations by using simple italics instead, with only one quotation mark each at the start and the end of the quotation. Wherever words are underlined in the original, we tried to underline them in the present book as well.

In order to enable quoting the page numbers of the original transcript, we have inserted a separator | at each original page break, surrounded by braces, with the page number of the text prior to it given on the left, and the text after it given on the right. For instance, {89|90} separates the text of page 89 to the left of it from the text on page 90 to the right.

The original transcript has a few pagination flaws, such as repeated page numbers (pp. 1947, 2450, 3457, 4212f.; Charge to Jury, p. 172). In that case, the repeated page number has an "a" attached (in some cases already in the original). Moreover, there seems to be at least one page missing between pages 3113 and 3114, because page 3114 starts with an incomplete sentence that is not a continuation of page 3113. Judging by the quotation with which page 3113 ends – it deals with the alleged homicidal gas chamber at Dachau – and the topic dealt with on page 3114 – Krematorium II at Auschwitz – it is even possible that more text is missing than fits on just one page. We don't know whether that is a flaw in the original transcript or in the copy Mrs. Kulaszka had in her possession.

This book has no index. Creating one would have been very time-consuming, hence prohibitively expensive. However, this shortcoming can be remedied easily by downloading the freely available PDF file of this book, which can be searched for any term. It is posted at the same location where a scanned copy of the original transcript can also be found: www.codoh.com/library/document/3355/.

May this book help the open-minded reader and researcher to get closer to an accurate depiction of what really happened during the events collectively referred to as the "Holocaust."

The Zündel Trials (1985 and 1988)

By Robert Faurisson

On May 13, 1988, Ernst Zündel was sentenced by Judge Ronald Thomas of the District Court of Ontario, in Toronto, to nine months in prison for having distributed a Revisionist booklet that is now 14 years old: Did Six Million Really Die?

Ernst Zündel lives in Toronto where, up until a few years ago, he worked as a graphic artist and advertising man. He is now 49 years old. A native of Germany, he has kept his German citizenship. His life has known serious upsets from the day when, in about 1981, he began to distribute Did Six Million Really Die?, a Revisionist booklet by Richard Harwood. The booklet was first published in 1974 in Great Britain where, a year later, it was the focus of a lengthy controversy in the literary journal Books and Bookmen. At the instigation of the Jewish community of South Africa, it was later banned in that country.

In Canada, during an earlier trial in 1985, Zündel had been sentenced to 15 months in prison. That sentence was thrown out in 1987. A new trial began on January 18, 1988. I participated in the preparations for it and in the unfolding of those judicial proceedings. I devoted thousands of hours to the defense of Ernst Zündel.

François Duprat: A Precursor

In 1967, François Duprat published an article on "The Mystery of the Gas Chambers" (Défense de l'Occident, June 1967, pp. 30-33). He later became interested in the Harwood booklet and became actively involved in its distribution. On March 18, 1978, he was killed by assassins armed with weapons too complex not to belong to an intelligence service. Responsibility for the assassination was claimed by a "Remembrance Commando" and by a "Jewish Revolutionary Group" (Le Monde, March 23, 1978, p. 7). Patrice Chairouff had published Duprat's home address in the Dossier Néo-Nazisme. He justified the assassination in the pages of Le Monde (April 26, 1978, p. 9) by citing the victim's Revisionism: "François Duprat is responsible. There are some responsibilities that kill." In Le Droit de vivre, the publication of the LICRA (International League Against Racism and Anti-Semitism), Jean Pierre-Bloch expressed an ambiguous position: he criticized the crime but, at the same time, he let it be understood that he had no pity for those who, inspired by the victim, would start out on the Revisionist path (Le Monde, May 7-8, 1978).

Pierre Vianson-Ponté

Eight months before Duprat's assassination, journalist Pierre Vianson-Ponté had launched a virulent attack against the Harwood pamphlet. His chronicle was entitled:

"Le Mensonge" (The Lie), (Le Monde, July 17-18, 1978, p. 13). It was reprinted with an approving commentary in Le Droit de vivre. Six months after the assassination, Vianson-Ponté took up the attack once more in "Le Mensonge" (suite) (The Lie – Continued) (Le Monde, September 34, 1978, p. 9). He passed over the assassination of Duprat in silence, made public the names and home towns of three Revisionist readers, and called for legal repression against Revisionism.

Sabina Citron Versus Ernst Zündel

In 1984, Sabina Citron, head of the Holocaust Remembrance Association, stirred up violent demonstrations against Ernst Zündel in Canada. An attack was made on Zündel's home. The Canadian postal service, treating Revisionism the way it treats pornography, refused him all service and all right to receive mail. Zündel only recovered his postal rights after a year of judicial procedures. In the meantime, his business has failed. At the instigation of Sabina Citron, the Attorney General of Ontario filed a complaint against Zündel for publishing a "false statement, tale or news." The charge was based on the following reasoning: the defendant had abused his right to freedom of expression; by distributing the Harwood pamphlet, he was spreading information that he knew was false; in fact, he could not fail to be aware that the "genocide of the Jews" and the "gas chambers" were an established fact. Zündel was also charged with publishing an allegedly "false" letter, which he had written himself.

The First Trial (1985)

The first trial lasted seven weeks. The jury found Zündel not guilty regarding the letter he had himself written but guilty of distributing the Harwood booklet. He was sentenced by Judge Hugh Locke to 15 months in prison. The German consulate in Toronto confiscated his passport and the West German government prepared a deportation action against him. In Germany itself, West German authorities had already carried out a series of large-scale police raids on the houses of all his German correspondents. In 1987, the United States forbade him entry to its territory. But in spite of all that, Zündel had won a media victory: day after day, for seven weeks, the entire English-speaking Canadian media covered the trial, with its spectacular revelations. The public learned that the Revisionists had first class documentation and arguments, while the Exterminationists were in desperate straits.

Their Expert: Raul Hilberg

The prosecution expert in the first trial was Raul Hilberg, an American professor of Jewish descent and author of the standard reference work, The Destruction of the European Jews (1961), which Paul Rassinier discussed in Le Drame des Juifs européens (The Drama of the European Jews). Hilberg began his testimony by explaining, without interruption, his theory about the extermination of the Jews. He was then cross-examined by Zündel's lawyer, Douglas Christie, who was assisted by Keltie Zubko and myself. Right from the start it was clear that Hilberg, who was the world's leading authority on the Holocaust, had never examined a single concentration camp, not even Auschwitz. He had still not examined any camp in 1985 when he announced the imminent appearance of a new edition of his main work in three volumes, revised, corrected and augmented. Although he did visit Auschwitz in 1979 for a single day as part of a ceremonial appearance, he did not bother to examine either the buildings or the archives. In his entire life he has never seen a "gas chamber," either in its original condition or in ruins. (For a historian, even ruins can tell tales). On the stand he was forced to admit that there had never been a plan, a central organization, a budget or supervision for what he called the policy of the extermination of the Jews. He also had to admit that since 1945 the Allies have never carried out an expert study of "the weapon of the crime," that is to say of a homicidal gas chamber. No autopsy report has established that even one inmate was ever killed by poison gas.

Hilberg said that Hitler gave orders for the extermination of the Jews, and that Himmler gave an order to halt the extermination on November 25, 1944 (such detail!). But Hilberg could not produce these orders. The defense asked him if he still maintained the existence of the Hitler orders in the new edition of his book. He dared to answer yes. He thereby lied and even committed perjury. In the new edition of his work (with a preface dated September 1984), Hilberg systematically deleted any mention of an order by Hitler. (In this regard, see the review by Christopher Browning, "The Revised Hilberg," Simon Wiesenthal Center Annual, 1986, p. 294). When he was asked by the defense to explain how the Germans had been able to carry out an undertaking as enormous as the extermination of millions of Jews without any kind of plan, without any central agency, without any blueprint or budget, Hilberg replied that in the various Nazi agencies there had been "an incredible meeting of minds, a consensus mind-reading by a far-flung bureaucracy."

Witness Arnold Friedman

The prosecution counted on the testimony of "survivors." These "survivors" were chosen with care. They were supposed to testify that they had seen, with their own eyes, preparations for and the carrying out of homicidal gassings. Since the war, in a series of trials like those at Nuremberg (1945-46), Jerusalem (1961), or Frankfurt (1963-65), such witnesses have never been lacking. However, as I have often noted, no lawyer for the defense had ever had the courage or the competence necessary to cross-examine these witnesses on the gassings themselves.

For the first time, in Toronto in 1985, one lawyer, Douglas Christie, dared to ask for explanations. He did it with the help of topographical maps and building plans as well as scholarly documentation on both the properties of the gases supposedly used and also on the capacities for cremation, whether carried out in crematory ovens or on pyres. Not one of these witnesses stood the test, and especially not Arnold Friedman. Despairing of his case, he ended by confessing that he had indeed been at Auschwitz-Birkenau (where he never had to work except once, unloading potatoes), but that, as regards gassings, he had relied on what others had told him.

Witness Rudolf Vrba

Witness Rudolf Vrba was internationally known. A Slovak Jew imprisoned at Auschwitz and at Birkenau, he said that he had escaped from the camp in April 1944 with Fred Wetzler. After getting back to Slovakia, he dictated a report about Auschwitz and Birkenau, and on their crematories and "gas chambers."

With help from Jewish organizations in Slovakia, Hungary and Switzerland, his report reached Washington, where it served as the basis for the U.S. Government's famous "War Refugee Board Report," published in November 1944. Since then every Allied organization charged with the prosecution of "war crimes" and every Allied prosecutor in a trial of "war criminals" has had available this official version of the history of those camps.

Vrba later became a British citizen and published his autobiography under the title of I Cannot Forgive. This book published in 1964, was actually written by Alan Bestic, who, in his preface, testified to the "considerable care [by Rudolf Vrba] for each detail" and to the "meticulous and almost fanatic respect he revealed for accuracy." On November 30, 1964, Vrba testified at the Frankfurt Auschwitz trial. Then he settled in Canada and became a Canadian citizen. He has been featured in various films about Auschwitz, particularly Shoah by Claude Lanzmann. Everything went well for him until the day at the Zündel trial in 1985 when he was cross-examined mercilessly. He was then shown to be an impostor. It was revealed that he had completely made up the number and location of the "gas chambers" and the crematories in his famous 1944 report. His 1964 book opened with a purported January 1943 visit by Himmler to Birkenau to inaugurate a new crematorium with "gas chamber." Actually, the last visit by Himmler to Auschwitz took place in July of 1942, and in January 1943 the first of the new crematories was still far from finished.

Thanks, apparently, to some special gift of memory (that he called "special mnemonic principles" or "special mnemonic method") and to a real talent for being everywhere at once, Vrba had calculated that in the space of 25 months (April 1942 to April 1944) the Germans had "gassed"

1,765,000 Jews at Birkenau alone, including 150,000 Jews from France. But in 1978, Serge Klarsfeld, in his Memorial to the Deportation of the Jews from France, had been forced to conclude that, for the entire length of the war, the Germans had deported a total of 75,721 Jews from France to all their concentration camps. The gravest aspect of this is that the figure of 1,765,000 Jews “gassed” at Birkenau had also been used in a document (L-022) at the main Nuremberg trial. Attacked on all sides by Zündel’s lawyer, the impostor had no other recourse than to invoke, in Latin, the “licentia poetarum,” or “poetic license,” in other words, the right to engage in fiction. His book has just been published in France (1987); this edition is presented as a book by “Rudolf Vrba with Alan Bestic.” It no longer includes the enthusiastic preface by Alan Bestic, and the short introduction by Émile Copfermann notes that “with the approval of Rudolf Vrba the two appendices from the English edition have been removed.” Nothing is said about the fact that those two appendices had also caused Vrba serious problems in 1985 at the Toronto trial.

The Second Zündel Trial (1988)

In January 1987, a five-judge appeals court decided to throw out the 1985 verdict against Ernst Zündel for some very basic reasons: Judge Hugh Locke had not allowed the defense any influence in the jury selection process and the jury had been misled by the judge on the very meaning of the trial. As for me, I have attended many trials in my life, including some carried out in France during the period of the “Purge” at the end and after World War II. Never have I encountered a judge so partial, autocratic and violent as Judge Hugh Locke. Anglo-Saxon law offers many more guarantees than French law but it only takes one man to pervert the best of systems. Judge Locke was such a man.

The second trial began on January 18, 1988, under the direction of Judge Ronald Thomas, who is a friend, it seems, of Judge Locke. Judge Thomas was often angry and was frankly hostile to the defense, but he had more finesse than his predecessor. The ruling by the five-judge appeal court also inhibited him somewhat. Judge Hugh Locke had imposed numerous restrictions on free expression by the witnesses and experts for the defense. For example, he forbade me to use any of the photos I had taken at Auschwitz. I had no right to use arguments of a chemical, cartographical, or architectural nature (even though I had been the first person in the world to publish the plans for the Auschwitz and Birkenau crematories). I was not allowed to talk about either the American gas chambers or the aerial reconnaissance photos of Auschwitz and Birkenau. Even the testimony of the eminent chemist William Lindsey was cut short. Judge Ronald Thomas did allow the defense more freedom, but at the outset of the trial, he made a decision, at the request of the prosecution, that would tie the hands of the jury.

Judge Thomas’s Judicial Notice

In Anglo-Saxon law, everything must be proved except for certain absolutely indisputable evidence (“The capital of Great Britain is London,” “day follows night”... ) The judge can take “judicial notice” of that kind of evidence at the request of one or the other of the contending parties;

Prosecuting Attorney John Pearson asked the judge to take judicial notice of the Holocaust. That term then has to be defined. It is likely that, had it not been for the intervention of the defense, the judge could have defined the Holocaust as it might have been defined in 1945/46. At that time, the “genocide of the Jews” (the word “Holocaust” was not used) could have been defined as “the ordered and planned destruction of six million Jews, in particular by the use of gas chambers.”

The problem for the prosecution was that the defense advised the judge that, since 1945/46, there have been profound changes in the understanding of Exterminationist historians about the extermination of the Jews. First of all, they no longer talk about an extermination but about an attempted extermination. They have also finally admitted that “in spite of the most scholarly research” (Raymond Aron, Sorbonne Convention, 2 July 1982), no one has found any trace of an order to exterminate the Jews. More recently, there has been a dispute between the “intentionalists” and the “functionalists.” Both agree that they have no proof of any intent to exterminate, but “intentionalist” historians nevertheless believe that one must assume the existence of that intent, while “functionalist” historians believe that the extermination was the result of individual initiatives, localized and anarchic: in a sense, the activity created the organization! Finally, the figure of six million was declared to be “symbolic” and there have been many disagreements about the “problem of the gas chambers.”

Obviously surprised by this flood of information, Judge Ronald Thomas decided to be prudent and, after a delay for reflection, decided on the following definition; the Holocaust, he said, was “the extermination and/or mass-murder of Jews” by National Socialism. His definition is remarkable for more than one reason. We no longer find any trace of an extermination order, or a plan, or “gas chambers,” or six million Jews or even millions of Jews. This definition is so void of all substance that it no longer corresponds to anything real. One cannot understand the meaning of “mass-murder of Jews.” (The judge carefully avoided saying “of the Jews.”) This strange definition is itself a sign of the progress achieved by Historical Revisionism since 1945.

Raul Hilberg Refuses to Appear Again

One misfortune awaited Prosecutor John Pearson: Raul Hilberg, in spite of repeated requests, refused to appear again. The defense, having heard rumors of an exchange of correspondence between Pearson and Hilberg, demanded and got the publication of the letters they exchanged and in particular of a “confidential” letter by Hilberg which did not hide the fact that he had some bitter memories of his cross-examination in 1985. He feared being questioned again by Douglas Christie on the same points. To quote the exact words of his confidential letter, Hilberg wrote that he feared “every attempt to entrap me by pointing out any seeming contradiction, however trivial the subject might be, between my earlier testimony and an answer that I might give in 1988.” In fact, as I have already mentioned, Hilberg had committed perjury and he may have feared being charged with that crime.

Christopher Browning, Prosecution Witness

In place of Hilberg there came his friend Christopher Browning, an American professor who specializes in the Holocaust. Admitted as an expert witness (and paid for several days at the rate of $150 per hour by the Canadian taxpayer), Browning tried to prove that the Harwood pamphlet was a tissue of lies and that the attempt to exterminate the Jews was a scientifically established fact. He had cause to regret the experience. During cross-examination, the defense used his own arguments to destroy him. In the course of those days, people saw the tall and naive professor, who had strutted while he stood testifying, seated, shrunken in size, behind the witness stand like a schoolboy caught in a mistake. With a faint and submissive voice, he ended up acknowledging that the trial had definitely taught him something about historical research.

Following the example of Raul Hilberg, Browning had not examined any concentration camps. He had not visited any facility with “gas chambers.” He had never thought of asking for an expert study of the “weapon of the crime.” In his writings he had made much of homicidal “gas vans,” but he was not able to refer to any authentic photograph, any plan, any technical study, or any expert study. He was not aware that German words like “Gaswagen,” “Spezialwagen,” “Entlausungswagen” (delousing van) could have perfectly innocent meanings. His technical understanding was nil. He had never examined the wartime aerial reconnaissance photos of Auschwitz. He was unaware of all the tortures undergone by Germans, such as Rudolf Hoss, who had spoken of gassings. He knew nothing of the doubts expressed about some of Himmler’s speeches or about the Goebbels diary.

A great follower of the trials of war criminals, Browning had only questioned the prosecutors, never the defense lawyers. His ignorance of the transcript of the Nuremberg trial was disconcerting. He had not even read what Hans Frank, former Governor General of Poland, had said before the Nuremberg tribunal about his “diary” and about “the extermination of the Jews.” That was inexcusable! As a matter of fact, Browning claimed to have found irrefutable proof of the existence of a policy of exterminating the Jews in the Frank diary. He had discovered one incriminating sentence. He did not know that Frank had given the Tribunal an explanation of that kind of sentence, chosen beforehand from the hundreds of thousands of sentences in a personnel and administrative journal of 11,560 pages. Furthermore, Frank had spontaneously turned over his “diary” to the Americans when they came to arrest him. The sincerity of the former Governor General is so obvious to anyone who reads his deposition that Christopher Browning, invited to hear the content, did not raise the least objection. One last humiliation awaited him.

For the sake of his thesis, he invoked a passage from the well-known “protocol” of the Wannsee conference (20 January 1942). He had made his own translation of the passage, a translation that was seriously in error. At that point, his thesis collapsed. Finally, his own personal explanation of a “policy of the extermination of the Jews” was the same as Hilberg’s. Everything was explained by the “nod” of Adolf Hitler. In other words, the Führer of the German people did not need to give any written or even spoken order for the extermination of the Jews. It was enough for him to give a “nod” at the beginning of the operation and, for the rest, a series of “signals.” And that was understood!

Charles Biedermann

The other expert called by the prosecution (who had taken the stand before Browning) was Charles Biedermann, a Swiss citizen, a delegate of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and, most importantly, the director of the International Tracing Service (ITS) in Arolsen, West Germany. The ITS has an unbelievable wealth of information about the fate of individual victims of National Socialism and, in particular, of former concentration camp inmates. I believe that it is at Arolsen that one could determine the real number of Jews who died during the war.

The prosecution did not benefit from this expert’s testimony. On the contrary, the defense scored numerous points on cross-examination. Biedermann recognized that the ICRC had never found any proof of the existence of homicidal gas chambers in the German camps. The visit by one of its delegates to Auschwitz in September 1944 had done no more than conclude the existence of a rumor on that subject. To his embarrassment, the expert was obliged to admit that he was wrong in attributing to the National Socialists the expression “extermination camps.” He had not noticed that this was a term coined by the Allies.

Biedermann said that he was not familiar with the ICRC reports on the atrocities undergone by the Germans just before and just after the end of the war. In particular, he knew nothing about the terrible treatment of many German prisoners. It would seem that the ICRC had nothing about the massive deportations of German minorities from the east, nothing on the horrors of the total collapse of Germany at the very end of the war, nothing about summary executions and, in particular, the massacre by rifle, machine gun, shovels and pickaxes, of 520 German soldiers and officers who had surrendered to the Americans at Dachau on April 29, 1945 (even though Victor Maurer, ICRC delegate, was apparently there).

The International Tracing Service included among those “persecuted” by the Nazis even indisputably criminal prisoners in the concentration camps. He relied on the information supplied by a Communist organization, the "Auschwitz State Museum." Beginning in 1978, in order to prevent all Revisionist research, the International Tracing Service closed its doors to historians and researchers, except for those bearing a special authorization from one of the ten governments (including that of Israel) which oversee the activity of the International Tracing Service. Henceforth the Tracing Service was forbidden to calculate and publish, as it had done until then, statistical evaluations of the number of dead in the various camps. The annual activity reports could no longer be made available to the public, except for their first third, which had been of no interest to researchers.

Biedermann confirmed a news story that had filtered out in 1964 at the Frankfurt trial: at the time of liberation of Auschwitz, the Soviets and the Poles had discovered the death register of that complex of 39 camps and sub-camps. The register consisted of 38 or 39 volumes. The Soviets keep 36 or 37 of those volumes in Moscow while the Poles keep two or three other volumes at the "Auschwitz State Museum," a copy of which they have furnished to the International Tracing Service in Arolsen. But neither the Soviets nor the Poles nor the International Tracing Service authorize research in these volumes. Biedermann did not even want to reveal the number of dead counted in the two or three volumes of which the ITS has a copy. It is clear that, if the content of the death register of Auschwitz were made public, it would be the end of the myth of the millions of deaths in the camp.

No "Survivor" Witnesses for the Prosecution

The judge asked the prosecutor if he would call any "survivors" to the witness stand. The prosecutor answered no. The experience of 1985 had been too embarrassing. The cross examination had been devastating. It is regrettable that at the trial of Klaus Barbie in France in 1987 and at the trial of John Demjanjuk in Israel in 1987-1988, no defense lawyer has followed Douglas Christie's example in the first Zündel trial (1985): Christie had shown that by carefully questioning witnesses about the gassing process itself, one could destroy the very foundation of the "extermination camp" myth.

The Witnesses and Experts for the Defense

Most of the witnesses and experts for the defense were as precise and concrete as people like Hilberg or Browning had been imprecise and metaphysical. The Swede Ditlieb Felderer showed about 380 slides of Auschwitz and of the other camps in Poland. The American, Mark Weber, whose knowledge of the documents is impressive, engaged in clarifications of several aspects of the Holocaust, in particular the Einsatzgruppen.<sup>1</sup> The German Tiudar Rudolph dealt with the Lodz ghetto and visits by the ICRC delegates at the end of 1941 to Auschwitz, Majdanek and other camps.

Thies Christophersen had been in charge of an agricultural research enterprise in the Auschwitz region in 1944. He visited the Birkenau camp several times to requisition personnel there and never noticed the horrors usually described. On the witness stand he repeated point by point what he had written about the camp, starting in 1973 with a 19-page report (Kritik, Nr. 23, pp. 14-32). The Austrian-born Canadian Maria Van Herwaarden was interned at Birkenau starting in 1942. She saw nothing, either close up or from a distance, that resembled mass murder, although she confirmed that many of the inmates had died of typhus. The American Bradley Smith, a member of a "Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust," spoke about his experience in more than 100 question-and-answer interviews on American radio and television on the Holocaust issue.

The Austrian Emil Lachout commented on the famous "Muller Document," which, since December 1987, has thrown the Austrian authorities into disarray. The document, dated October 1, 1948, revealed that even then, Allied commissions of inquiry had already rejected the stories of homicidal "gassings" in a whole series of camps, including Dachau, Ravensbrück, Struthof (Natzweiler), Stutthof (Danzig), Sachsenhausen, and Mauthausen (Austria). The document specifically confirms that confessions of Germans had been extorted by torture and that testimonies by former inmates were false.

Dr. Russell Barton recounted his horrified discovery of the camp at Bergen-Belsen at the time of liberation. Until that moment he had believed in a deliberate program of extermination. Then he noted the fact that, in an apocalyptic Germany, the piles of corpses and the walking skeletons were the result of the frightful conditions of an overcrowded camp, ravaged by epidemics, and almost entirely deprived of medicine, food, and water because of Allied bombings.

The German Udo Walendy outlined the many forgeries he had discovered, in wartime atrocity photographs and other documents, either altered or forged by a team headed by a British propagandist called Sefton Delmer. J.G. Burg, a Jew who lives in Munich, told of his experiences in the war and confirmed that there had never been any policy for the extermination of the Jews by the Nazis.

Academics like the Chinese professor Dr. K.T. Fann, a Marxist, and Dr. Gary Botting, who lost his teaching position at Red Deer College (Alberta) as a result of testifying at the Zündel trial in 1985, testified that the Harwood booklet was essentially a work of opinion, and hence not subject to legal prohibition. Jürgen Neumann, a close associate and friend of Zündel, testified as to Zündel's state of minds when the booklet first was published. Ernst Neilsen testified on the obstacles he encountered at the University of Toronto to open research on the Holocaust. Ivan Lagacé, history of Revisionism; and the concessions made year after year by the Exterminationists to the Revisionist viewpoint.

<sup>1</sup> Weber also clarified the meaning of the term "Final Solution" (emigration or deportation, but never extermination of Jews): the testimony of Judge Konrad Morgen; the tortures of Rudolf Höss and Oswald Pohl; the true director of the crematory at Calgary, demonstrated the practical impossibility of the numbers alleged by Hilberg to have been cremated at Auschwitz.

For my part, I appeared as an expert witness for nearly six days. I concentrated particularly on my investigations of the American gas chambers. I recalled that Zyklon B is essentially hydrocyanic acid and that it is with this gas that certain American penitentiaries execute those who have been condemned to death.

In 1945 the Allies should have asked specialists on American gas chambers to examine the buildings, at Auschwitz and elsewhere, which were supposed to have been used to gas millions of people. Since 1977, I have had the following idea: when one deals with a vast historical problem like that of the reality or the legend of the Holocaust, one must strive to get to the core of the problem; In this case the central problem is Auschwitz and the core of that problem is a space of 275 square meters: the 65 square meters of the "gas chamber" of crematorium I at Auschwitz and, at Birkenau, the 210 square meters of the "gas chamber" of crematorium II. In 1988, my idea remained the same: let us have expert studies of those 275 square meters and we will have an answer to the vast problem of the Holocaust! I showed the jury my photos of the gas chamber at the Maryland State Penitentiary in Baltimore as well as my plans for the Auschwitz gas chambers and I underlined the physical and chemical impossibilities of the latter ones.

A Sensational Turn of Events: The Leuchter Report

Ernst Zündel, in possession of the correspondence I had exchanged in 1977-78 with the six American penitentiaries outfitted with gas chambers, gave attorney Barbara Kulaszka the job of getting in touch with the chief wardens of those penitentiaries in order to see if one of them would agree to appear in court to explain how a real gas chamber operates. Bill Armontrout, chief warden of the penitentiary at Jefferson City (Missouri), agreed to testify and in doing so pointed out that no one in the USA was more knowledgeable about the functioning of gas chambers than Fred A. Leuchter, an engineer from Boston. I went to visit Leuchter on February 3 and 4, 1988. I found that he had never asked himself any questions about the "gas chambers" in the German camps. He had simply believed in their existence. After I began to show him my files, he became aware of the chemical and physical impossibility of the German "gassings" and he agreed to examine our documents in Toronto.

After that, at Zündel's expense, he left for Poland with a secretary (his wife), a draftsman, a video-cameraman and an interpreter. He came back and drew up a 192-page report (including appendices). He also brought back 32 samples taken, on the one hand, from the crematories of Auschwitz and Birkenau at the site of the homicidal "gassings" and, on the other hand, in a disinfection gas chamber at Birkenau. His conclusion was simple: there had never been any homicidal gassings at Auschwitz, Birkenau, or Majdanek.

On April 20 and 21, 1988, Fred Leuchter appeared on the witness stand in the Toronto courtroom. He told the story of his investigation and presented his conclusions. I am convinced that during those two days I was an eyewitness to the death of the gas chamber myth, a myth which, in my opinion, had entered its dead throes at the Sorbonne colloquium on "Nazi Germany and the Extermination of the Jews" (June 29 to July 2, 1982), where the organizers themselves began to grasp that there was no proof of the existence of the gas chambers.

In the Toronto courtroom emotions were intense, in particular among the friends of Sabina Citron. Ernst Zündel's friends were also moved, but for a different reason: they were witnessing the veil of the great swindle being torn away. As for me, I felt both relief and melancholy: relief because a thesis that I had defended for so many years was at last fully confirmed, and melancholy because I had fathered the idea in the first place. I had even, with the clumsiness of a man of letters, presented physical, chemical, topographical and architectural arguments which I now saw summed up by a scientist who was astonishingly precise and thorough.

Would people one day remember the skepticism I had encountered, even from other Revisionists? Just before Fred Leuchter, Bill Armontrout had been on the witness stand, where he confirmed, in every detail, what I had said to the jury about the extreme difficulties of a homicidal gassing (not to be confused with a suicidal or accidental gassing). Ken Wilson, a specialist in aerial photographs, had shown that the homicidal "gas chambers" of Auschwitz and Birkenau did not have gas evacuation chimneys, which would have been indispensable. He also showed that I had been right in accusing Serge Klarsfeld and Jean-Claude Pressac of falsifying the map of Birkenau in the Auschwitz Album (Seuil Publishers, 1983, p. 42). Those authors, in order to make the reader believe that groups of Jewish women and children surprised by the photographer between crematories II and III could not go any farther and were thus going to end up in the "gas chambers" and those crematories, had simply eliminated from the map the path which, in reality, led up to the "Zentralsauna," a large shower facility (located beyond the zone of the crematories), where those women and children were actually going.

James Roth, director of a laboratory in Massachusetts, then testified on the analysis of the 32 samples, the origin of which he was unaware of: all the samples taken in the homicidal "gas chambers" contained a quantity of cyanide which was either unmeasurable or infinitesimal, while the sample from the disinfection gas chamber, taken for comparison's sake, contained an enormous amount of cyanide (the infinitesimal quantity detected in the former case can be explained by the fact that the supposed homicidal gas chambers were in fact morgues for preserving bodies; such morgues could have been occasionally disinfected with Zyklon B).

David Irving

The British historian David Irving enjoys great prestige. Zündel thought of asking him to testify, but there was a problem: Irving was only partly a Revisionist. The thesis that he defended, for example, in Hitler's War (New York, The Viking Press, 1977) can be summed up as follows: Hitler never gave an order for the extermination of the Jews; at least up to the end of 1943 he was kept in ignorance of that extermination; only Himmler and a group of about 70 or so persons were aware of it; in October 1944 Himmler, who wanted to get into the good graces of the Allies, gave an order to cease the extermination of the Jews.

I had met Irving in Los Angeles in September of 1983 at the annual convention of the Institute for Historical Review, where I challenged him by asking several questions about proof to support his thesis. Then I published an article entitled "A Challenge to David Irving" in The Journal of Historical Review (Winter 1984, pp. 289-305; and Spring 1985, p. 8 and 122). I tried to convince this brilliant historian that logically he could no longer be satisfied with a semi-Revisionist position. To begin with, I challenged him to produce Himmler's order to stop the extermination, an order which never actually existed. Later on, I learned from various sources that Irving was undergoing a change that moved him in the direction of Revisionism.

In 1988, Zündel became convinced that the British historian was only waiting for a decisive event to take a final step in our direction. After arriving in Toronto, David Irving discovered in rapid succession the Leuchter report and an impressive number of documents that Zündel, his friends and I had accumulated over the course of several years. The last reservations or the last misunderstandings melted away in the course of a meeting. He agreed to testify on the stand. In the opinion of those who were present at the two trials (1985 and 1988), no single testimony, except that of Fred Leuchter, caused such a sensation. For more than three days, David Irving, engaging in a sort of public confession, took back all that he had said about the extermination of the Jews and without reservation adopted the Revisionist position. With courage and honesty, he showed how an historian can be brought to revise profoundly his views on the history of the Second World War.

The Zündel Story

Ernst Zündel had promised that his trial would be "the trial of the Nuremberg Trial" or "the Stalingrad of the 'exterminationists.'" The unfolding of those two long trials proved him right, even though the jury, "instructed" by the judge to consider the Holocaust as an established fact "which no reasonable person can doubt," finally found him guilty. Zündel has already won. It remains for him to make it known to Canada and to the entire world. The media black-out of the 1988 trial was almost complete. Jewish organizations campaigned vigorously for such a blackout, and even went so far as to say that they did not want an impartial account of the trial. They did not want any account of it at all. The paradox is that the only publication which reported relatively honestly about the trial was The Canadian Jewish News.

Ernst Zündel and the Leuchter report have left a profound mark on history; both will be remembered for many years to come.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF ONTARIO BETWEEN:
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
— and —
ERNST ZUNDEL

BEFORE: The Honourable Judge H.R. Locke and a Jury

APPEARANCES:

P. Griffiths, Esq. For the Crown
D. Christie, Esq. For the Accused

The Court House
361 University Ave.
Toronto, Ontario
January 7, 1985 et seq.{1|2}

VOLUME I

JANUARY 7, 1985

MR. GRIFFITHS: The matter of Ernst Zundel, Your Honour. Please come forward.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, my name is Douglas Christie, and I represent Mr. Zundel. I advised my friend by letter on several occasions, and I think it comes as no surprise to him, that at the beginning of these proceedings I intended to raise a Charter argument.

I have written, on December 6th, to the Attorney General for Canada and the Attorney General for Ontario to advise him of my intentions to raise a very simple argument, which was s.2 of the Charter of Rights, the fundamental freedoms expressed therein in relation to s.177. I gather from my learned friend that he has no objection to my raising that argument.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's quite correct, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: And I further have had communication with the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, who advised me that he did not particularly wish to be involved, and I think he was in communication with my learned friend as well with respect to this matter.

I intend to speak for about fifteen minutes on that very briefly. Then I propose to make a motion {2|3} with respect to the impanelling of the jury, which will raise some evidence which goes to show why I should be entitled to challenge for cause to try to establish the basis of my challenge, and in view of the evidence that I will lead, it will take approximately an hour and a half. Then I intend to, if I may, mention a couple of other matters, one being that in respect to an expert witness my friend has decided not to call, that I would be either asking for production of that witness at the end of Crown's case, or asking for commission to take his evidence. That, of course, is simply to put the Crown on notice.

Finally, I would be prepared to admit all the facts in the case to get directly to the point, and that, of course, I just intend to advise you of this now so that I can tell you that in respect to the brochure which is the subject of, I think, most of the contention, the brochure being called, "Did Six Million Really Die?", that Mr. Zundel will be admitting publishing that.

In respect to the letter entitled, "The West, War and Islam", Mr. Zundel will be admitting that he wrote that, that he sent it to certain specific people. So I think the only issue, then, is does that constitute publication. I don't think there are any other facts that {3|4} I can assist you by admitting.

The proof of the falsehood, I think, of the subject matter, then falls to the Crown, and of course we can answer that, as we are prepared to do. And I would be making one other point to assist in explaining my position, I hope, Your Honour, that I will be taking a position in respect to the expert, or purported expert on history, Dr. Hilberg, that in respect to history it is not a subject upon which expert evidence can substitute for evidence of fact. We cannot, in my submission, at least, take expert testimony as to what happened in history because, of course, that is hearsay, as to the facts in the matter, but that would be my position.

Finally, My Lord – Your Honour, my friend indicated that he proposed to call a policeman to prove that my client published the articles, and I think I can assist by removing the necessity for that by admitting, as I have, the facts as I understand them, and as I am instructed to admit them, the publication of, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and the simple statement the author of "The West, War and Islam". So I hope that will obviate the necessity for a voir dire on that matter, at least, and I will leave that to my friend. {4|5}

I can explain, too, that my friend advised me that he wanted a witness to read the entire booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" to the jury. I hope that will not be really necessary, because first of all it will come up repeatedly, and my client will come up to the stand. So I hope that will assist my friend to speed matters up. That is my objective. And if I have explained myself simply and clearly, I would like to begin with the brief Charter argument.

THE COURT: Yes, you have. The only thing I have in my mind before I call on Crown for reply, he might have one or two things, first of all, before you commence your argument with respect to the Charter, that the accused might be arraigned – not plead, but arraigned.

MR. CHRISTIE: I see. Yes.

THE COURT: Secondly, would he like to take his coat off and be more comfortable?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. There is a question that, in the course of things, many things will arise in the course of the trial. I am well aware of the position we take, but as things develop, I wonder if it will be possible for my client to sit beside me to discuss things in the course of the case, or do you wish him to sit in the accused's box? {5|6}

THE COURT: I think for the moment he should stay where he is, but as the evidence unfolds, if it does, in such a way that you reasonably require his presence at the table, that bridge can be crossed, and certainly I don't intend to be inflexible along those lines when the time comes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I appreciate my friend's admissions. I would still intend to lead certain statements to be made by Mr. Zundel, Your Honour. More than those admissions that are made are obtained within those statements, and if that causes a problem, I am prepared to handle them in voir dire.

I am obliged to my friend for his candour, and with respect to the other matters in the trial, I am sure that we will have an opportunity to address those as they arise one by one. I am prepared for a Charter argument, Your Honour, as my friend has correctly pointed out.

THE COURT: You agree with respect to my suggestion concerning the arraignment?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. I do.

THE COURT: Arraign the accused. — {6|7}

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: ERNST ZUNDEL, you stand charged that you did, during the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that you know is false, namely the article, "The West, War and Islam", and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code.

(2) You stand further charged that you did, in or about the year 1981 at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely, "Did Six Million Really Die?", that you know is false and that is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code.

THE COURT: You can be seated, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, just one other matter I did neglect. Sergeant Ron Williams will be assisting me at the counsel table and during the trial, and I have introduced him to the Court.

THE COURT: Is there any objection to that?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I have no objection {7|8} to Mr. Williams being of assistance to my learned friend. I anticipate, at times during the trial, there will be a similar request from my part to have experts during the course of the development of certain matters.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to raise the issue which came as somewhat of a surprise to me. As I was entering the Courthouse, some people were beaten among people that I was with, and I think that that is a very difficult situation to put upon accused persons when they enter the Courthouse. I am sure Your Honour would agree with that, and I know that the authorities have done their best to prevent that from happening, but I would like to put it on the record that some people were beaten as we entered this Courthouse.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I assure Mr. Christie that I share his concern in that regard. I would just like to advise the Court that four people were arrested who were involved in that matter this morning.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, this trial will proceed in a dignified and orderly manner according to the law. If there is any deviation from that, it will be handled quickly by me within the precincts of this Courtroom. {8|9}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you kindly, Your Honour. I think, then, I will just briefly embark on what I hope will be a very short Charter argument.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I refer to the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights, Article 19, which says:

"Everyone shall have the right to freedom of opinion and expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinion without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media, and regardless of frontiers".

To the principle, the Government of Canada, I believe, has subscribed. That, of course, was well before the Charter. The Charter probably has enshrined what rights we had previously, one of which is now articulated to be:

"Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms: freedom of conscience and religion; freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication."

That is the section of the Charter to which {9|10} I simply refer. Section 177 existed long before the Charter, and I suppose it's true to say that the section has roots that go well before the United Nations Declarations of Human Rights as well, but very simply put, it sounds as if it should be a legitimate restriction upon freedom of speech, but it has implications, in effect. It goes far beyond what, in my submission, as a reasonable limit upon freedom of speech.

There are many cases, of course, in which people might use freedom of speech to the disadvantage of others – might be critical, might create disagreements – but if we are to enshrine freedom of speech only insofar as it is popular, I wonder if we have enshrined freedom of speech at all.

I have heard, of course, being involved in the argument of the same matter in relation to s.178, the position of the Crown to be – in the Keegstra case, for instance – that, well, there must be limits on freedom of speech, and reasonable limits exist by virtue of being in the Criminal Code. My answer to that is, the Criminal Code, and each section of it, must now be tested in relation to the fundamental principles that are supposedly enshrined above the law as it previously was. It is true, of course, that {10|11} these laws that set out the right of freedom of speech are subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. My simple position is that it falls to the Crown to have to demonstrate why s.177 is a reasonable limit that can be demonstrably justified, and I submit so by the Crown, in this our free and democratic society.

Looking at the section:

"Everyone who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years."

This section, in my respectful submission, is so ill-defined that it creates an inability to know in advance what one is free to say. Who can know with any specificity what is in the public interest? I suppose the answer then comes, they can find out in Courts; but if people's right to speak is limited by a law which has as its criteria or reference point a public interest which is never defined, the degree of apprehension and fear that the {11|12} general public will acquire as a result of having seen Mr. Zundel and others face the situation he's in will produce a great apprehension and fear of speaking out on controversial matters. That is not to say that anything someone says is necessarily polite or necessarily what everyone or anyone might agree with, but it is my submission that unless the law allows criticism of what even may be perceived as the public interest in a Court of law, no one can be free to speak their mind, because they do not know what will be circumscribed.

May I point out another result of this section, and I say it is obviously a limited freedom of speech. How is anyone able to know in advance so that they may not commit a crime that what they say or publish is likely to cause injury or mischief? Well, in view of the fact that most people would rather not wind up in a Court of law, I would suggest that if this section is free to stand, most people will keep quiet about controversial matters. It is true that the Court in the Keegstra case held that there was a reasonable limit against promoting hate, but this Court is unfortunately, by this section, put in the position of having to decide on what is false news.

Now, truth and falsity have been in {12|13} controversy both on matters of fact and history for a long, long time, and what I suggest happens by this section is that Courts, through this section, will be put in an absolutely impossible position of having to decide what is true or false about something that happened forty years ago in which there's differences of opinion even today, and it is my submission the section is not really legally enforceable. It is a confusing, imprecise and vague limit on freedom of speech which, because it is as I described it, will create a great deal of fear, as I indicated, because people don't like to end up in Court having to justify what they say.

Now, it's true, my friend may reply, well, if they don't prove it, or don't publish it wilfully, or if they can show that it isn't false, or even if the Crown can't prove that it is false, they will be acquitted, and so their freedom of speech is still available to them; but it's not the inevitability of conviction that is dangerous, it is the prosecution, in this section, whenever you speak out to the distaste of this group of people.

How many newspaper publishers, how many book publishers will be caught by this section if it becomes widely used? And it's a very rarely used section, I concede that; but it will become more popular as time goes on and {13|14} people begin to see that if they don't like what somebody publishes, if they can say that it's false without anybody objecting, or if someone can get a charge laid, there will be a prosecution to which the accused has every right to apply, and has the benefit or protection of the law, and I don't hesitate to agree, but they will, nonetheless, be prosecuted.

It's my submission that if we are to have a real sense of freedom of speech and a confidence that we need not fear what we speak, what we believe, or whether we believe matters not at all, that when we speak we do not breach any section of the law, that if it happens to be questionable as to whether what we say is true or false, we can still speak – and many of the controversial issues of our time are disputes as to what is truth and what is falsity – the Court should not be put in a position of having to decide on the truth or falsity of the statements of citizens on all manners of subjects, and included among those such as we are today, dealing with something that is supposed to have happened approximately forty years ago.

In my submission, it is an abuse of the Court's process, in fact, to bring the matter into a Court of law as we are now, and to rehash history, and to deal with {14|15} it as if the truth of any particular matter that long ago, that widespread, can be dealt with by this Court or, really, any Court.

I think I've said all I wish to about freedom of speech, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Your Honour, my friend started off by quoting s.19 – Article 19 of the International Covenant, and in fact Article 19 is divided into three parts, and he quoted to you from the second part:

"Everyone shall have the right to freedom of opinion and expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinion without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media, and regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print in the form of art or through any other media of its choice." {15|16}

Part 3 of Article 19, Your Honour, modifies that as follows:

"The exercise of the rights provided for in paragraph 2 of this Article carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may, therefore, be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary

(a) for the respect of the rights or reputation of others;

(b) for the protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals."

Article 20, Your Honour, of that International Covenant, goes on in two parts to provide, Part 1:

"Any propaganda for war shall be prohibited by law."

Part 2:

"Any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence shall be prohibited by law." {16|17}

That International Covenant, Your Honour, clearly recognizes that there are limits to the freedom of speech.

As my friend rightly indicated, the matter of Keegstra, which was of a very similar nature, was argued before Mr. Justice Quigley in Alberta – the case of R. v. Keegstra, which is still unreported. In that case, Your Honour, a pre-trial motion was brought before the Justice to deal with Charter issues and certain other pre-trial matters. Mr. Justice Quigley, in a judgment that runs some thirty-eight pages, passionately, at times, and eloquently and, I would submit, correctly analyzes the state of our law with respect to these matters. It deals, Your Honour, more specifically with s.281.1 of the Code dealing with hate propaganda. However, since this is a motion, Your Honour, brought at this stage of the trial to declare s.177, as it reads in the Code, unconstitutional, I would suggest that before it can be declared unconstitutional, all the various uses to which that section can be put must also be improper, or unconstitutional.

One of the uses to which that section can be put is before Your Honour today – a matter where the publishing of certain material is such that the public {17|18} interest and social tolerance between groups is adversely affected – very similar to the hate propaganda section, this particular charge, which is one of the charges that can be properly laid, one of the fact situations that can be properly brought within the terms of s.177.

Your Honour, I commend the reasoning of Mr. Justice Quigley to you. He divides the problem into two parts. Now, the first part of his judgment deals with the question of whether there is any limit to freedom of expression by s.281.1. Before deciding whether the limit is reasonable and proper, he considers whether, in fact, it constitutes any limit, and in that regard he considers and reviews the cases of Reference Re Alberta Legislation from 1938, page 5 of his decision, and the National Citizens Coalition under the Charter. He reviews as an authority The Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada that, as Your Honour may recall, was chaired by Dean Maxwell Cohen of McGill Law School back in the sixties and had people on the committee such as the former Prime Minister, the former Justice Minister, now His Honour Judge MacGuigan. His Honour also considers certain cases from the United States.

We now have a Charter, and quite properly, look to it not to be bound, but for some guidance of how that {18|19} jurisdiction deals with this matter, and in particular, the case of Beauharnais v. The State of Illinois, which is found on page 12 of his judgment, certain experts from it going to page 13. That decision indicates that libellous utterances are not within the area of constitutionally protected free speech.

Well, I would suggest to Your Honour that lies are not within the area. Knowing falsehoods that cause damage to a public interest are also not within that area of constitutionally protected free speech. Mr. Justice Quigley goes on to examine the preamble of the Bill of Rights, and the specific words of the Charter of Rights, and finds that, in fact, the law as it existed in Canada at the time that the Charter of Rights was put into effect was being confirmed by the Charter of Rights, and the law as it existed in Canada, and certainly as it existed in the International Covenant, is the law well of the as international community of democracies, and is such that there are limits to the freedom of speech.

There are ab initio, from the beginning, absolute freedom of speech, absolute freedom in anything, and for one man who imports absolute slavery for another man – to protect us all there are some limits that are required, limits {19|20} that come within that basic definition of freedom of expression, without having reference to s.1 of the Charter.

Mr. Justice Quigley indicates that he finds that the hate propaganda section comes within those limits – I'm sorry, is something that deals with expressions that are excluded from the phrase "freedom of expression". He indicated that if he was wrong in that regard, he went on to consider whether or not it was a limit that was reasonable in a free and democratic society under s.1 of the Charter. He indicated that there are three areas to be considered when looking at s.1. First of all, whether it was a matter proscribed by law – it is a limit proscribed by law. We know it is in s.177. That is the limit proscribed by law; so that is the criteria. Whether it is a reasonable limit demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. If Your Honour holds that s.177 does limit freedom of expression, then the onus would be on me, the Crown, to satisfy you that s.1 should apply, since I am raising that issue.

There have been a number of court decisions in Canada where some consideration has been taken of what a reasonable limit is. Chief Justice Evans of our Supreme Court in Re Federal Republic of Germany v. Rauca and this is cited at page 25 of the Quigley judgment, {20|21} reported at 1983, 141 D.L.R. (3d) – I'm sorry, Volume 141 D.L.R. (3d) page 412, at 423, says as follows:

"The phrase 'reasonable limits' in section 1 imports an objective test of validity. It is the Judge who must determine whether the 'limit' as found in legislation is reasonable or unreasonable. The question is not whether the Judge agrees with the limitation but whether he considers that there is a rational basis for it – a basis that would be regarded as being within the bounds of reason by fair minded people accustomed to the norms of a free and democratic society. This is the crucible in which the concept of reasonableness must be tested."

The judgment goes on to also look at some factors as to reasonableness, at page 27, as a guideline for a court to consider.

THE COURT: Are we looking at —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, not Mr. Justice Evans, Your Honour. sorry. It's Quigley's. And {21|22} that is the objective or rational basis for the limitation, rationality of it, the extent to the limitation which is to be balanced against its rationality and the laws and practices in other jurisdictions generally regarded as free and democratic societies for comparison.

We have already considered the international community for comparison which suggests that that is a proper limit. As to its rationality, Your Honour, I'd suggest that it would not be entirely rational to permit, not false news to be published, but influences that the publisher knows is false at the time of publishing. These are wilful, deliberate lies being published that cause a mischief to a public interest.

There is a very helpful article, Your Honour – at least, I found it helpful – in the Canadian Bar Review, Volume 30, at page 37, entitled, "Publishing false news", written about 1952 by Professor F.R. Scott from the University of McGill, Montreal, where Professor Scott analyzes the false news section, gives some of the history of that section, and indicates some of what he expects to be the possible future of the section, and I would rely on that article, Your Honour, as an indicator of the rationality of this section. The page numbers are chopped off. Page 44, {22|23} Your Honour, just towards – there is a long paragraph in the middle of the page down, and the last couple of sentences in that paragraph, starting at Footnote No. 30, the inclusion of the word "tale" as well as "news" suggests that something more than stories of current events are intended. To take a specific example, the publication of the protocols of the elders of Zion by someone knowing the fact that they are forgery, would clearly be the publication of a false tale. It cannot be considered news, for the book purports to tell what happened at a secret meeting of Zionists.

Page 47, Your Honour, including the paragraph that Professor Scott writes, he says one final question of more immediate importance deserves consideration. 'Would s.136 make illegal false and libellous statements about a race or group of persons? It has been pointed out already that these publications can constitute a criminal libel known to the law apart from s.136. There seems no reason to suppose that they might not also be the crime of false news and mischief to the public interest for the maintenance of rational and religious harmony in Canada. Attacks on races or religious groups taking the form of extreme opinion and comment only would not be within the scope of the section. {23|24}

And that seems to be the concern of Mr. Christie, that people would be worried about extreme opinions; but if the attack concerns statements of fact known to be false, all the elements of the crime would seem to exist, and that is really the rationality, Your Honour, of the section and, indeed, of this prosecution, that this isn't just an unpopular opinion.

It's not Crown's position that this is an unpopular opinion, but it is an opinion that is presented as truth when it is false, and it is known to be false by the publisher. That is not enough. Not only must it be wilfully published, but it must also cause some damage to the public interest.

I would respectfully suggest, Your Honour, that the criteria set out as to what is a reasonable limit are met, that there is a rationality, that those various elements of the offence that I have just referred to indicate proportionality. It is not every false statement that comes within this section, and it is a law such as one would expect to find in a free and democratic society, as indicated by the International Covenant and the restrictions that are placed by the International Community on the freedom of expression. {24|25}

MR. CHRISTIE: Brief reply, Your Honour. I submit that my friend says this is a reasonable limit such as is ordinarily acceptable in a free and democratic society, but I point out the distinction in the Keegstra case was that the Crown demonstrated to the satisfaction of His Lordship, Mr. Justice Quigley, that in other jurisdictions including England, Australia, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Greece, India, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and four States of the United States of America, similar legislation existed.

My friend, I would submit, has not demonstrated one such instance in respect to the allegation of a publication of false tale or news, whether wilfully or knowingly, or likely to cause injuries or otherwise. I suggest that that is a fairly significant distinction.

I point out further that, as I said earlier, my friend – I think Crown, in the Keegstra case and here, has taken the position by quoting from articles previous to the Charter that nothing has changed, that the Charter has not made any significant difference in respect to the matter of what is a lawful limit to freedom of speech, because they quote Professor Scott as if it was today. That was 1952, I believe, a long time ago. Now, if our law has {25|26} not changed as a result of the Charter, my friend is right, but if I am right that the Charter has given us certain freedoms, then I don't think the Article of 1952 is a helpful or binding criterion.

Now, my friend referred to the various points that Mr. Justice Quigley considered – rationality being one – and in his analysis of rationality he did point out that hatred, per se, was something that was identifiable in a sense. However, that judgment stands. No one can say that truth or falsity is somehow identifiable a priori until we go to Court and find out what the jury decides is the truth.

My submission is, too, that it is not the danger of conviction that imposes silence on the citizens of a country. It is the fear of prosecution, and it may very well be legitimate to prosecute those that promote hate. That is not the issue. Mr. Justice Quigley dealt with that issue. The issue is publishing something false.

My friend says it must be true that every possible application of the section would be unconstitutional. There may be some people who constitutionally could be prosecuted under the section; but there are many who, though they might be acquitted in the end, who will be {26|27} dissuaded from speaking out in such a manner that is far beyond the proportion of damage that can ever be done from a truth being told.

Let our constitution be a safety from which error of opinion can be tolerated when freedom of expression can be free. In other words, if someone tells a lie, there's lots of freedom in society for the truth tellers, because they have every right to speak, as everybody else, and in a free and democratic society, in the proper debate that takes place on issues every day; and if the State imposes a limit on that freedom, it creates, in my submission, far more damage to freedom of speech than any falsehood ever could.

THE COURT: Thank you, gentlemen. It will take more than a few minutes for me to read thirty-eight pages of Mr. Justice Quigley's reasons and the other material referred.

I have in mind, it now being eleven o'clock, I have in mind that the earliest I can come to any conclusions on this motion would be two-thirty this afternoon. Is that convenient? {27|28}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. It certainly is. I was of a mind to suggest – and I don't know if this is a practical suggestion, that I could proceed with a motion which I intended to try and raise, and Your Honour could reserve on that point to such time as Your Honour felt you wished to decide.

THE COURT: What is the motion all about?

MR. CHRISTIE: The motion is to put before you evidence that would bring me within the ambit of the cases pertaining to challenge for cause, specifically the R. v. Hubert case which, I think, the Ontario Court of Appeal has enunciated what my rights are.

I think I certainly agree with my friend, I believe, who is involved in that case. That was a definitive position on law, but the Supreme Court of Canada has ratified that. It is a very helpful case for trial judges.

I wanted to put before you evidence of pre-trial publicity in newscasts against my client – fairly extensive. I also wanted to place before you what may be, in fact, a rather novel issue of whether I ought to be entitled to raise questions pertaining to the prejudice of particular groups against my client. That would involve {28|29} evidence that the issue that is to be debated in this Article, the essential thesis of, “Did Six Million Really Die?”, for instance, is a matter upon which certain groups in society would find it very difficult to be objective, because it involves them.

Now, if that was Anglicans or Catholics or any groups whatsoever, it wouldn't matter to me whether it was religion or any group, if it was a group whose essential interest is at stake, I think it would be difficult for them to be objective as to the issues in question. So where there's a high degree of publicity against my client's interests, and against the position taken in the Article, it would demonstrate that we should be entitled to challenge for cause those who have firmly fixed opinions of which it will be difficult for them to disabuse their mind.

I would like to lay before you evidence that shows that the issue has been, from one point of view, extensively presented in the media and that, therefore, I would hope to be able to argue that there is reason to believe that those people, maybe many, maybe few, but I think most, have a very firmly fixed idea on the matter. So I should be entitled to ask of the prospective juror, “Can you look objectively on this issue and decide this case on the {29|30} evidence in Court, putting from your mind all the opinions you may have acquired from what I will show you exists in the media?” That is the second part of my motion.

So I will be producing evidence pertaining to my client in the media, and evidence of very negative views of the position taken in the Article. That's what I would like to do. And to enable me to do that, I have video tapes of newscasts, and I have them here. I have the television set and the player. I would call my client and ask him to explain, “What is this?”, “What took place here?”. I would then show you certain media presentations of the very issue in this Article that are very strongly against the position taken in this Article, and I would ask you to find, then, that – I have fourteen copies for my friend and the jury: he said he didn't have more than one and I agreed to produce fourteen copies so that Your Honour can have one, my friend, and the jury. I would like to produce evidence that we must try – it will be difficult to find, and we must try to hope to find a jury that will be prepared to put out of its mind what the media has often presented on this issue. Very fairly, that is what I would like to put before you. {30|31}

THE COURT: Have you compiled the questions that, if you are permitted to do so, you are prepared to put to every juror?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I have, Your Honour, and I have attempted to work out an agreement with my friend, and we came close to agreement, but my friend takes the view that my questions are not ones that he can agree to, and I should be able to give them to you and maybe you can look at them while taking a break, and I can have this set up to enable me to produce the evidence that I propose, then I can give you all the questions that I would be endeavouring to ask of prospective jurors.

THE COURT: Just before you sit down, Mr. Christie, you should know that my manner in conducting jury trials is, I hope, well-known. I am in the usual habit, when the jury panel at large is convened in this courtroom, occupying most, if not all, of the seats contained herein, to say to the panel at large in any criminal case, not necessarily just the one at bar, but in anyone where a jury is going to be selected, pretty well all of the essential elements of what you have submitted here. I can, if you wish – and I don't know that you do at the moment – but I might – I can indicate in more specific detail to the jury panel at {31|32} large, and the fact is that I have found that many prospective jurors, in certain types of cases, are winnowed out without having the use of the challenge at that stage. I have not had problems of other counsel for the defence or for the Crown in that regard. If objection is taken, of course, I would not do it, but you should know that in advance, now, so that that may have some effect on your thoughts as we proceed along these lines.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. I had precisely phrased questions which I had hoped Your Honour would ask the general panel, that they would excuse themselves if they held these particular views. I think that was the procedure which was followed by His Lordship – his name, I'm sorry, escapes me – in the Morgentaler case, that certain questions were asked generally of the panel. I have the transcript of proceedings.

THE COURT: Associate Chief Justice Parker.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have the transcript as best I could of the proceedings in that case, and I hope to follow the similar procedure, if I can give that to Your Honour now.

THE COURT: I should add that very {32|33} often it is the view of counsel that, subject to what I say, the somewhat tedious and long process of challenge for cause is avoided, and in addition to that, judicial rulings on the basis of R. v. Hubert becomes unnecessary.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I can see that potentially prejudiced people can excuse themselves without going through a person-by-person examination. I think that highly preferable [sic], although I think there are some questions which I should ask that must be addressed by each person which, regrettably, might lead to some duplication; but I have prepared two categories of questions – one that I would like Your Honour to address to the panel as a whole, the second category of questions I would like to ask each prospective juror, and then, of course, I have four peremptory challenges.

I have provided these to my friend by letter of January 2nd, so he knows what questions I propose to ask. So if I may, I will give you these, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You have seen them, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have, Your Honour. I have no objection.

MR. CHRISTIE: And then, if Your Honour {33|34} could assist me with your views of the matter, perhaps, after I have shown what I propose to show – is that expeditious?

MR. CHRISTIE: So I will provide these, which are the proposed questions I would like to ask.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just so I am clear, I don't object to Your Honour seeing the proposed questions. I do object to the proposed questions.

THE COURT: Oh, I know you do.

MR. CHRISTIE: So if this would be, then, appropriate, Your Honour, that I might set up this information, and I will be —

THE COURT: Before you do that, I will hear Mr. Griffiths, not necessarily on any substantive matter contained in the questions, but with respect to what you've just heard from Mr. Christie.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I was aware that Mr. Christie was intending to proceed in that manner, Your Honour. I had no objection if he wishes to produce some material for Your Honour to see on the issue of pre-trial publicity. As I read R. v. Hubert, that is a matter that is discretionary, at the discretion of the trial judge. You {34|35} can require to see that material or not. That is up to you whether you do or not. And I really take no position on it one way or the other. I will have some very extensive comments on the questions to be asked, Your Honour, and I don't agree with them, although I can say to Your Honour that questions seven and eight in category two, I think, are the closest to the type of questions that were being asked in the Morgentaler case. Question seven is re-worded so that, “Have you, because of any beliefs or opinions you may have, or because of what you have heard, read or seen in the media, formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused?”, and then Question 8, whether, “In spite of that, can you form a verdict based solely on the evidence that you hear in the Courtroom?”

THE COURT: I have not read any of these questions, of course. Is there any question that asks a prospective juror whether he or she has read anything about this case in the media?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. Questions one through six generally deal with areas where people would have beliefs or particular prejudices. Some of the beliefs are historical, some of them are religious.

I take the position that all of one through {35|36} six are improper.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to defer argument upon the matter until we are able to put evidence before Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I cannot come to any conclusion until I have heard all of the submissions, so that subject to that, you can proceed as you shall see fit with respect to setting up any of this equipment. In the meantime, I will read what material I have been provided with.

Does twelve o'clock sound reasonable to you?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. To proceed with this motion.

THE COURT: Yes.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I didn't want to get into this subject, but I am forced to now. As {36|37} we were coming in this morning, we were all assaulted by a mob – that is, the accused and I – and we were carrying a television set; it was a different one. A new one came in at twelve o'clock. We haven't had a chance to set this one up, but it just indicates, I hope, the effect of the assault upon us, that that television set was broken. So we replaced it, but that is why we can't proceed immediately with what I promised three quarters of an hour ago. I think it indicates the difficulty I am facing. When we were assaulted like that, things happen. I don't mind nearly being hit by flying objects. I don't nearly mind being punished and people snickering, but I don't think it's funny.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I didn't snicker.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't suggest my friend was snickering, but I heard snickering. Now, in order not to waste time, I want to do something else, and do this at lunchtime. I have my client ready to give you the clippings and other things, but I will proceed with him. May I do that?

THE COURT: Yes

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I may, Mr. Christie, just before calling your client, I would like to speak to another matter.

— Other matter spoken to. {37|38}

THE COURT: You may proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. Thank you.

What I propose to do then, Your Honour, is to lead evidence from the accused as to media coverage, both tape-recorded radio coverage, and newspaper coverage. So I'd like to be able to call the accused to testify where this comes from, please, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes. I propose that, no plea having been taken, this is a voir dire prior to trial.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Do you disagree with that?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, Your Honour, I don't, but I think it's a matter of record, of course.

THE COURT: Certainly it is a matter of record. This is a court of record, and the record is in the person of our reporter, who will take down everything that is being said. I have never done it quite that way before, because on a motion such as this, no evidence ever having been called to my knowledge, I am unaware of any other precedent. That is the way I propose to do it. Otherwise, we will become involved in legal entanglements which, in my respectful view, will do nothing but waste the taxpayers' {38|39} time and money.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That was the procedure that was attempted to be followed in R. v. Hubbard, Your Honour, a doctor having been sworn before a plea, prior to arraignment before a plea.

THE COURT: Swear him on a voir dire.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, sworn on voir dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Mr. Zundel, I believe the first file of newspaper clippings you have pertains to publicity about yourself. Is that correct, sir?

A. That's right.

Q. Could you begin by indicating and filing for Madam Registrar the first article pertaining to yourself, identifying it as to its source and date?

A. It's an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail, October 7, 1983. It is headlined, "Canada called a hub of neo-Nazi literature".

Q. Could you proceed to read any parts referable [sic] to yourself, please, sir?

A. It's the entire article.

Q. Read it, please.

A. Dated, "Ottawa (Canadian press)": {39|40}

"Canada has become the biggest exporter of anti-Semitism to West Germany because of inadequate controls on hate literature in this country, a parliamentary committee was told yesterday. The Canadian Jewish Congress told the Commons committee on racism that the literature, which is also distributed in Canada, originates from Ernst Zundel of Toronto, under the corporate name Samisdat or Concerned Parents of German Descent. This literature, which Congress officials said has caused considerable concern in West Germany, denies that Nazis killed millions of Jews during the Second World War. Mr. Zundel was prohibited by Canada post from disseminating such literature in 1981, but the ban was lifted a year ago. 'Canada has earned the unenviable reputation in the Federal Republic of Germany as the major source of neo-Nazi materials entering that country,' a Congress brief said."

The article then goes on and talks about other individuals, churches and so on.

Q. Yes. I think you read that which is referable [sic] to you. Is that right?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can that be filed? {40|41}

THE COURT: Have you read it, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, but I have no objection.

THE COURT: Exhibit A on the voir dire.

— EXHIBIT "A" (Voir Dire) Newspaper article from Globe and Mail dated October 7, 1983.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Were you, or have you ever been convicted of purveying literature?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Were you accused of such a thing in West Germany?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Were you convicted?

A. No. I was cleared in two levels of two courts in Germany.

Q. In Canada were you ever accused of disseminating hate literature?

A. By the media, yes, but not the Court.

Q. Were you charged with hate literature?

A. By the Postal Tribunal, that I asked —

Q. And what happened?

A. I won my case, and it was reinstituted.

Q. Were you allowed to read the reasons for judgment?

A. No.

Q. Have you asked for them?

A. I have asked the Postmaster, Canada Post. I asked Pierre Trudeau, when he was Prime Minister, {41|42} and I have been refused.

Q. You have not seen the reasons for judgment?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you have another article in your possession?

A. I do. It is an article which appeared in the Toronto Sun.

Q. Date, please.

A. Monday, March 30, page 27. It's headlined —

THE COURT: March 30, what year?

THE WITNESS: 1981. It's headlined, "City man link to Nazis". And the sub-headline reads, "Raids Reveal Right-Wing Network". I'm afraid the type is too small. I can't read that. It's in reduction.

Q. Yes. Proceed to the next article. We will file that, please.

THE COURT: Exhibit B.

THE WITNESS: There is another article on the same piece.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

A. And it's again an article appearing in the Toronto Sun, March 25th, 1981, and again it's headlined, "Metro man branded a Nazi", and sub-headlined, "His Pamphlets Nabbed In W. German Raids". And again, the type is too small. I can't read it.

MR. CHRISTIE: If that can be filed, Your Honour, which is, I believe, B, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Exhibit B, yes. {42|43}

— EXHIBIT "B" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper articles from Toronto Sun dated March 30, 1981 and March 25, 1981, respectively.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Next title, the date, name and place of publication, and the year.

A. I have an article from the Globe and Mail, Wednesday, June 15, 1983, headlined, "Merchants of tracts should be charged, Liberal tells Tories". It's an article by John Cruickshank.

Q. Are you mentioned in it?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Read the part that refers to you, please.

A. "The Ontario Government should prosecute two merchants of 'vicious anti-semitic' tracts who are giving the province the reputation as a national centre for hate literature, Liberal Leader David Peterson says. In the Legislature yesterday, Mr. Peterson called on the Government to consider prosecuting Ron Gostick of Plesherton, Ont., who runs an organization calling itself the Canadian League of Rights, and Ernst Zundel of Toronto and his company, Samisdat Publishing Ltd. The Liberal leader told the Legislature that Mr. Zundel's company has been called 'one of the world's big purveyors of Nazi propaganda.' Attorney-General Roy McMurtry said his {43|44} ministry was monitoring the publications of Mr. Zundel's Samisdat Publishing. 'If we have evidence upon which we have a reasonable chance of a successful prosecution of Mr. Zundel, who we do believe to be behind a lot of the very vicious type of material that has been disseminated, we will certainly encourage the laying of charges and there will be a vigorous prosecution,' Mr. McMurtry said."

Q. Thank you. Is that all?

A. It goes on about other individuals.

MR. CHRISTIE: Exhibit C, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit C.

— EXHIBIT "C" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from Globe and Mail dated Monday, June 15, 1983.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The next item, the date and the publisher, please.

A. It's the Toronto Sun, Wednesday, June 15, 1983.

Q. Headlined?

A. Headlined, "Ontario Called: Home of hate lit". There is a picture of David Peterson.

Q. Does it refer to you?

A. Yes, it does, and he says:

"Some of the most vicious hate literature produced in the world is coming from {44|45} Ontario, Liberal Leader David Peterson charged yesterday.

In the Legislature, Peterson named Ernst Zundel of Toronto, who owns Samisdat Publishing Ltd., and Ron Gostick of Flesherston, head of a group called the Canadian League of Rights, as two people who should be prosecuted under the hate literature provisions of the Criminal Code.

Peterson described Zundel as 'one of the world's big purveyors of Nazi propaganda' and he said Gostick distributes hate literature across Canada.

Attorney-General Roy McMurtry agreed with Peterson's assessment of Zundel. McMurtry said that in Zundel's case, as in others, 'if we have evidence upon which we have a reasonable chance of a successful prosecution... we will certainly encourage the laying of charges and there will be very vigorous prosecution.'

But McMurtry rejected a call from Peterson to prosecute distributors. He said if the prosecution failed, it would 'only serve as an encouragement to other like-minded people, other lunatics but very dangerous lunatics, who want to attack the relatively {45|46} fragile social fabric of our community by engaging in this type of activity.' Last night, Zundel said 'Peterson's a typical political hack. He's just trying to get funds for the Liberal party.'

Zundel, 44, who maintains that the massacre of six million Jews in the Holocaust of World War II did not take place, added: 'I don't hate Jews. I work with them. There are some Jews I would not go near with a 10-foot pole, but others like.'"

Q. And is that an accurate and truthful representation of the facts as you know them?

A. As far as my quotes that I have said are concerned? Yes. As far as the rest, I don't publish hate literature.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be Exhibit D?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT "D" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from The Toronto

Sun dated Wednesday, June 15, 1983.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The next item, please, Mr. Zundel.

A. The next article appeared on page 14 in the Ottawa Citizen, Tuesday, February 23, 1982.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. The date again, please? {46|47}

THE WITNESS: Tuesday, February 23rd, 1982, headlined, "Anti-Semitic publisher fights mail service cutoff". And it's written by Regina Hickl-Szabo, Citizen staff writer.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What paper is that?

A. It is The Ottawa Citizen.

Q. Thank you. And the reference to you, please?

A. It's again the entire article, I'm afraid.

Q. Then could you read it?

A. "A German-born publisher armed with a copy of Hitler's 'Mein Kampf' and a stack of other anti-Semitic tomes launched a fight Monday to force the post office to keep delivering his mail.

Postmaster-General André Ouellet cut off mail service for Ernst Zundel's Toronto-based company Nov. 13 on the grounds it contravened parts of the Canada Post Corporation Act.

Zundel, owner of Samisdat Publishers, was in Ottawa to appeal his case before a government-appointed review board. Postal legislation allows the minister in charge of the post office to suspend mail service to a company if the mail deliberately promotes hatred against an identifiable group, or if the mail incites race hatred that could lead to a disturbance of the peace. {47|48}

The order to halt Zundel's service followed an inquiry by a team of post office investigators that lasted nearly a year.

Zundel is expected to testify Wednesday. Although Zundel is the author of the anti-Jewish and anti-Communist leaflets the government objects to, the order to stop using the mail is being directed at his firm.

Zundel's lawyer, Lynn McGaw, told the board her client's business has suffered because of the government order and he should be allowed once again to use the mail to send out his writings. 'He does not intend to promote hatred against anyone, McGaw said. His position has been to fairly, actively combat the stereotype of the German people as a group.'

In one of his leaflets, Zundel calls Jews 'vicious,' 'greedy,' and 'militant people.'

In another tract, he asserts that Jewish businessmen control the media and over the years have used their influence to 'inflame (Westerners) with a 'murderous hatred' for Germans.

Rene Jean Ravault, a communications professor from the University of Quebec in Montreal, testified against Zundel. {48|49} Ravault said '...It is quite possible that the content of these documents makes some frustrated readers believe that violent actions and discriminatory behaviour against members of this ethnic religious group (Jews) could be legitimized...'

Ian Scott, a lawyer for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, argued on Zundel's behalf that it is against the law for the government to deny a company or person mail service without first proving that person was breaking the law. Scott underlined, however, neither he nor other members of his association was taking a stand on the content of Zundel's publications."

MR. CHRISTIE: I believe that is Exhibit F, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: I thought it was E.

MR. CHRISTIE: My apologies.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, just in passing, I am referring to Exhibit B. I am afraid the aging process makes it impossible for me to read the reduced writing.

MR. CHRISTIE: I understand.

THE COURT: If you and Crown counsel can get together and agree on a method by which the reduction can be increased, I'd be grateful, but not now.

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Thank you, Your Honour. I believe we can produce the originals. At least, that is my {49|50} understanding. My client indicates he can produce the originals, so we will.

— EXHIBIT "E" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from The Citizen, Ottawa, Tuesday, February 23, 1982.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Next article, please, Mr. Zundel —

A. It's from the California Daily Courier, Wednesday, December 7, 1983, and it's headlined —

Q. I don't think we need that. That is not in Ontario. Go to anything in Ontario.

A. It's an article from the Ottawa Citizen, Saturday, June 2nd, 1984, page 15, "MacGuigan plans tough laws on hate literature", an article by Jim Coyle of the Canadian Press:

"Federal Justice Minister Mark MacGuigan announced proposed amendments to the Criminal Code on Friday that he says will make it easier to convict purveyors of hate literature.

As he spoke, a man who claims the Holocaust was a hoax taunted him from the audience.

MacGuigan told a news conference the amendments would delete the word 'willfully' from current legislation on the promotion of hatred (relieving the Crown of the responsibility to prove intent); shift the onus of proof to the accused to defend his actions; and eliminate the {50|51} requirement that a provincial attorney general consent before a prosecution for disseminating hate literature can be launched.

At the very least, MacGuigan said hate literature may be driven underground and accorded status as 'wrong, shameful' rather than a matter which 'is in any way countenanced by the majority of people in Canada.'

Legislation is prepared and will be introduced if a deal can be worked out with the opposition parties for its quick passage, he said, but it 'may or may not' be introduced if they indicate it will not be received as consensus legislation.

The changes 'will make the law more effective while at the same time not posing any additional threats to civil liberties,' he said.

Ernst Zundel, a German citizen and Toronto resident charged with spreading false information about the Nazi destruction of European Jewry, sat in the audience wearing the same blue construction helmet he has donned to prevent injury from opponents when he shows up for court.

Zundel, 44, who told reporters later he believes the Holocaust was 'absolutely, {51|52} totally' an exaggeration, said he is the person for whom the amendments were written and asked MacGuigan whether he classifies Jews as a race or religion and how the move affects 'people who question the Holocaust.'

MacGuigan told the man 'you flatter yourself if you think this legislation was intended for you, but to the extent that the shoe fits I hope that you will wear it.'

Zundel, described in court as a major worldwide distributor of Nazi propaganda, operates Samisdat Publishers and was charged in connection with two articles published in 1983 entitled 'Did Six Million Really Die?' and 'The West, War and Islam'. He is to appear in provincial court June 13."

The rest has to do with other matters.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit?

THE COURT: Exhibit F.

— EXHIBIT "F" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from The Citizen, Ottawa, Saturday, June 2, 1984.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are there any others that are referable [sic] to you personally, Mr. Zundel?

A. Yes, there are.

Q. Please read the next one out. {52|53}

A. This is from the Vancouver Province.

Q. You are not producing the one from the Vancouver Province.

A. No, I am not.

Q. Thank you very much.

A. This is from The Oshawa Times, Oshawa, Ontario, Thursday, October 12, 1978. It has a photograph on it showing some demonstrators demonstrating against The Boys from Brazil, and it quotes an interview with me, and I quote the headline, "The Boys From Brazil... depicts cloning of Hitler", sub-headline, "Protest went very well: Zundel":

"Although a demonstration against a movie depicting the cloning of Hitler failed to dissuade anyone from attending the film Wednesday, organizers consider the protest a success.

Ernst Zundel, spokesman for Concerned Parents of German Descent, said last night's demonstration against the movie The Boys From Brazil 'went very well' and pickets generally were favourably received by persons attending the showing at the Oshawa Centre cinema.

Headline, "Police Called":

"Zundel said his group was not hassled or interfered with in any way by moviegoers. However, their protest had to be cut short when Oshawa Centre management called police to remove pickets from the premises. 'The theatre manager complained to the shopping mall manager and he called {53|54} police,' said Zundel. 'The police were understanding, but we were not interested in getting involved in legal, complications, so we cut it short.'

During the time the 10 demonstrators marched around the theatre they distributed literature and made people aware of their position.

The film, starring Gregory Peck, Sir Laurence Olivier and James Mason, is based on a novel by Ira Levin and depicts the cloning of the former German dictator. It is set in modern-day Brazil.

Zundel's group previously demonstrated against the movie in Toronto and Hamilton."

New headline, "Others, Too":

"They claim it and similar motion pictures such as Marathon Man and Holocaust are part of a growing trend to portray Germans as monsters and history's villains.

Zundel, a 39-year-old businessman who emigrated to Canada in 1958, said pickets talked to several people who proved quite receptive and were not aware of the group's feelings. 'There were many young people who could not find it in their hearts and heads {54|55} to come to grips with it; no one ever talked to them about it.'

Zundel said the group's aim is not to stop people from viewing the film, but to present all sides. More demonstrations are planned in Toronto and one at the movie distributor's office in Burlington. Also taking part in the Oshawa demonstration was mayoralty candidate Rudi Maeder, who has received hate mail recently because of his German background."

MR. CHRISTIE: That would be Exhibit G, I believe.

— EXHIBIT "G" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from The Oshawa Times, Thursday, October 12, 1978.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Is that the extent of the coverage you wish to put in?

A. There are a spate of letters to the local media, I think.

Q. You mean letters to the editor from people.

A. That's right.

Q. You or anyone that you know?

A. About me.

Q. About you?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. If they are referable [sic] to you, please read them and give the date, the publication {55|56} and the year.

THE COURT: Just before we do that, as a matter of housekeeping, are those documents all on one sheet, photostated, or are they individual?

THE WITNESS: I believe they are individual. In some cases they are duplicated. THE COURT: We will proceed. The ones that refer to Mr. Zundel.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

Q. please read the ones that refer to you, Mr. Zundel.

A. I'm afraid the date is cut off from the copy machine. It says, "Tuesday, May 2nd". It must be '77, but I am not sure of the date.

Q. We will proceed with something more recent, Mr. Zundel, if there is something more recent.

A. Toronto Star, Monday, November 23rd, 1981. It's an article in bold headline entitled, "Nazi, KKK hate literature brings appeal for McMurtry to act". It's by Michael McAteer, Toronto Star, and it says:

"Attorney-General Roy McMurtry is being pressed by a Jewish organization to prosecute a Toronto-based organization and the Ku Klux Klan for disseminating hate literature."

The literature was described yesterday by a spokesman for the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association as an incitement to hatred, violence and genocide. Sabina Citron, a founding member of the remembrance association, said it {56|57} hopes to meet with McMurtry within two weeks.

McMurtry confirmed at a public meeting sponsored by the Toronto Zionist Council that he would meet with association representatives. He did not elaborate."

Sub-headline, "To 45 countries":

"Citron told The Star that the Toronto based Concerned Parents of German Descent, headed by Ernest Zundel, has been sending anti-Jewish literature to 45 countries. She said her association has asked Canada's postmaster-general, Andre Ouellet, to revoke Zundel's postal privileges."

In a telephone interview yesterday, Zundel told The Star he is appealing a postal ban put on him by the postmaster general. He said he was visited by a postal inspector and told that someone in Vienna had lodged a complaint against him.

Zundel denied ever inciting violence or calling for the extermination of Jews. He said that, while he has sold and distributed Nazi literature, He did so to raise money for his organization. Zundel said that in his writings he has never called for the 're-Nazification' of Germany, or the renaissance of Nazism. {57|58} Zundel said 'every time the Zionists need a bogey man' they attack him and his organization. Citron said the association wants the Klan prosecuted because it has been distributing in Metro an anti-Jewish booklet..."

and so on. The rest doesn't refer to me.

Q. Do you take issue with the truth of those statements?

A. I certainly do.

Q. And was anything done to rectify those statements by you?

A. I appealed my postal ban and won my case.

Q. In respect to any other statement in that article, was there anything that you took issue with?

A. I don't send out anti-semitic or anti-Jewish literature. Never did. And where that question came from, whether I called for the re-Nazification of Germany, is completely new to me. I have never asked for that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit H.

— EXHIBIT "H" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Toronto Star, Monday, November 23, 1981.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Is there anything else there, Mr. Zundel, that you would like to introduce? {58|59}

A. There is an advertisement in the Canadian Jewish News, Thursday, May 28, 1981, page 9. It is headlined, "Neo-Nazism In Canada":

"Why is Canada the export centre for Nazi propaganda?

Why can hatemongers freely spread the lie that there was no Holocaust? Why do war criminals go unpunished?

RALLY

To protest racism and hatemongering

Allan Gardens

Carleton at Sherbourne Street

Sun., May 31, 2:00 p.m.

Speakers:

Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut

Hon. Bruce McCaffrey, MPP

Bob Rae, MP"

New headline:

"Value Your Freedom — Come En Masse! Carleton cars to Jarvis St. Buses available from Earl Bales Park 1:00 sharp (Sheppard and Bathurst)."

And the sponsors of the ad were Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith, Jewish Student Network, Jewish War Veterans, Bergen-Belsen Association.

Q. Why does this relate to you, sir?

A. Because this ad produced a disturbance and a mass demonstration outside my home.

Q. Where is your home in relation to the rally? {59|60}

A. It is just around the corner.

Q. How did they get to your home?

A. In a long march.

Q. How many people?

A. Between one thousand five hundred and two thousand.

Q. What did they do?

A. Shouted obscenities, death threats, bomb threats, arson threats.

Q. Against who?

A. Against me.

Q. Why?

A. My postal case was pending at the time, and they thought that I should not be given the postal privileges back, and I am the publisher of hate literature — just the summary of news literature which had the same line.

Q. Did you hear that on videotape?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And that is one of the tapes you are prepared to show the Court?

A. Yes, I could.

THE COURT: What day in January of 1981?

THE WITNESS: No. This was May 28, 1981.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, have you other paper articles that you would like to introduce to demonstrate the publicity against yourself?

A. Yes. I have one here from the Globe and Mail.

Q. Date?

A. Tuesday, December 6th, 1983. {60|61}

Q. By whom was it written?

A. By Michael Tenzon.

Q. What does it say about you?

A. It is headlined, "Hate literature factory in a congenial setting", and it shows me in the picture with a copy of Macleans magazine showing a swastika.

Q. Was this in your home?

A. Yes.

Q. So they showed you as the origin of hate literature?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Is the article of May 21, 1981, to be an exhibit?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Exhibit I.

— EXHIBIT "I" on voir dire: Photocopy of advertisement in The Canadian Jewish

News, Thursday, May 28, 1981.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you proceed to say what the Globe and Mail article says about you?

A. It starts by saying:

"Portly, balding Ernst Zundel looks the congenial guy-next-door as he pads about his comfortable and cluttered Victorian home in downtown Toronto. So why does the 44-year-old commercial artist not leave his

'bunker' without a bullet-proof vest and bodyguards?

'Some people want to kill me.'

Some call Mr. Zundel a hate-monger; he {61|62} sees himself as 'a deeply involved activist.' His detractors say Mr. Zundel's activism involves the dissemination of hate literature.

In fact, Mr. Zundel is accused of running a highly productive propaganda factory, the products of which – anti-Semitic and neo-Nazi hate literature – are distributed across the world. He is head of his own successful advertising firm that he operates from his home, but works only half-time at that. The rest of the time, Mr. Zundel is in his basement grinding out pamphlets on his printing press, making movies, holding meetings, giving lectures.

His long marriage to 'a wonderful French-Canadian girl' failed eight years ago because of his activities. His 'apolitical' wife was afraid of death threats to her and her family, he says.

On May 31, 1981, a large demonstration made up of five Jewish groups met in Toronto and marched on Mr. Zundel's home. They called him a Nazi and hatemonger; 'They were saying they wanted me dead.'

On June 14, 1983, Ontario Liberal Leader David Peterson said in the Legislature: 'Mr. Ernst Zundel and his company, {62|63} Samisdat Publishing Ltd., have been described as one of the worlds biggest purveyors of Nazi propaganda.' Ontario Attorney-General Roy McMurtry told the House: 'We are, of course, aware of Mr. Zundel's activities... If we have a reasonable chance of a successful prosecution of Mr. Zundel, whom we do believe to be behind a lot of the very vicious material that has been disseminated, we will certainly encourage the laying of charges...'

Famed Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal wrote in 1980 to Canada's Solicitor-General, Robert Kaplan: 'As you know, Europe is swept by an anti-Jewish, neo-nazistic wave. We are deluged with publications... that call up race hatred and neo-nazism. Right now we came across leaflets and circular letters that are dispatched in Toronto, Ontario. The sender is a certain Ernst Zundel ...'

A recent brief by the Canadian Jewish Congress to a Commons committee on racism said that, because of Mr. Zundel, Canada has become the biggest exporter of anti-Semitic literature to West Germany.

Even some who despise what Mr. Zundel does feel reticent about commenting on {63|64} his activities, because of the publicity it gives him.

'Mr. Zundel is a peripheral character who is venting his anti-Semitic sentiments,' says Alan Borovoy, of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. 'He would probably have trouble filling a telephone booth with his constituency.' Nevertheless, Mr. Borovoy's organization intervened just before the Canadian Post Office revoked Mr. Zundel's mailing privileges in 1981. The civil liberties group argued that despite Mr. Zundel's message, a Cabinet minister, under the Post Office Act, should not be able to remove mail privileges.

Inviting Mr. Zundel to discuss his views in the popular media 'is a fatuous exercise. It puts a person in a forum of legitimate debate which conveys the impression that his is a legitimate point of view,' Mr. Borovoy says.

In Mr. Zundel's basement is a scale model of the Auschwitz concentration camp. It has one oven.

Auschwitz – where millions of Jews were gassed – had only one oven, Mr. Zundel insists. It had no gas chambers, and no Jews were exterminated there.

Mr. Zundel says he is not an anti-Semite {64|65} not a racist, not a Nazi.

Others feel differently.

'The man is a propagandist in the worst possible sense,' says Sabina Citron, spokesman for The Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association.

In 1981, Mrs. Citron's group had Mr. Zundel's mailing privileges revoked, but after a year a federal review board ruled he could not be denied use of the mails.

Mrs. Citron says Mr. Zundel's propaganda distorts the fact of the Holocaust by denying it.

Mr. Zundel's pamphlets declare:

'Nobody was gassed in any German concentration camp – no Jews, no gypsies, no murderers, no Communists, etc., nobody...' 'The Holocaust is a hoax, a money-making Zionist hoax...' 'The Six Million Story is a swindle, a Big Lie...'

Mr. Zundel estimates that each year he sends 'tens of thousands of letters' to dozens of countries, concentrating on West Germany and the United States. His mailings go to 'decision-makers,' historians, government prosecutors, politicians, and to high school and university students.

Last week he mailed copies of the book, {65|66} Allied War Crimes, to each of the 550 members of the West German Parliament. The name of his firm, Samisdat, is a Russian word meaning 'self-published by the author in the underground,' he says.

Mr. Zundel also sells Nazi art. One of his brochures reads: 'Send for your copy now, Nazi secret weapons art posters. Large, beautiful illustrations of Nazi secret weapons suitable for framing.'

Why does Ernst Zundel spend half his working life reworking history, fighting Zionists and mailing out his views?

'The absolute God's honest truth is that it was a reaction to the incessant anti-German propaganda stereotyping the Germans,' he says.

Mr. Zundel was born in a village in the Black Forest region of Germany. He is the son of a lumberjack who served as a medic during the Second World War."

Q. That was in the Globe and Mail, was it?

A. Yes. I am not quite finished. Just about through.

"He is the son of a lumberjack who served as a medic during the Second World War. The family had lived on the same farm for 300 years." {66|67}

Q. Mr. Zundel —

A. It's not quite finished.

"He says his father was a pacifist, like himself, and that both his parents were apolitical. He says he has a sister who is a Christian missionary in Africa, and a brother who is a lawyer in the United States.

Mr. Zundel came to Canada at the age of 18 as a commercial artist. He chose Canada because he knew the country did not have peacetime conscription. When he came, he held no strong anti-Zionist views and was politically naive, he says. 'I think I knew only one Jew when I was growing up.' He remains a German citizen because of the pride he feels as a German.

He says the 'most powerful impact' on his becoming an anti-Zionist was men's adventure magazines of the 1950s and 1960s. But he says he was never able to associate Zionists directly with publication of such articles. He tried: 'I used to work at Simpsons Sears (his first job in Toronto as an artist) and a fellow would bring in these magazines during lunch break. The stories mentioned German cruelty...

I said, this is ridiculous. I knew German soldiers in our village, my {67|68} father and his brother were ones and they never talked about stories like this.'

Mr. Zundel says that he hits at Zionism because Zionists hit at Germany.

Mr. Zundel's activities are financed by private donations, estimated by the West German Government at about $50,000 a year. He refuses to say who donates the money, but claims it is 'many individuals.'

Mr. Zundel believes Adolph Hitler was a great man. 'I admire him. I think he was a completely misunderstood political genius. Look, I am not a neo-Nazi. If I wanted to be a Nazi, I would be a real one. I am not intending to set up any Nazi parties in this country, otherwise I would have had 25 years to do it. Nazism is only tied to the personality and the moustache of Adolph Hitler. There are not enough Germans today who could walk half a mile down the block without tripping over their fat beer bellies.'

End of quote.

Q. Is that an accurate representation of what you said?

A. Quite close. It is one of the best articles that has ever been written about me. {68|69}

Q. It was fairly widely distributed, I suppose?

A. It was indeed. National Geographic and the Globe and Mail, yes.

Q. Were the references made to you by other people in that article correct, and did you agree with those?

A. It was just standard Zionist rhetoric. I've gotten used to that.

Q. Have you any other article, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit J.

— EXHIBIT "J" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Globe and Mail, Tuesday, December 6, 1983.

THE WITNESS: I have an article from the Canadian Jewish Congress, and another one from the Ottawa Citizen on the same page.

Q. Well, how is the Canadian Jewish Congress — where was it published?

A. In Toronto.

Q. In what newspaper?

A. The Canadian Jewish News is the flagship publication for it in Canada.

Q. So —

THE COURT: There will be no more of that. One sound, and whoever makes it, leaves. Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. {69|70}

Q. Could you read what that article says, please?

A. It must have been —

THE COURT: May I have the date, please?

THE WITNESS: Your Honour, the date is missing on this copy. It was in December '82.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Of '82. Carry on.

A. It comments on the postal ban. "Ban on Zundel's mail is lifted, CJC is critical of board's decision". Toronto.

"The Canadian Jewish Congress last week condemned as 'deplorable' the lifting of Canada's year-long ban on the mailing privileges of Ernest Zundel, Toronto-based publisher of doubtful literature. Zundel, who operates as Samisdat Publishers Ltd. out of 206 Carlton Street in Toronto and also out of a postal box number in Buffalo, is the author of a book titled The Hitler We Loved And Why and has admitted in his autobiography published in Germany that he advocated the 'truths' he learned from Adrian Arcand, the late leader of Canada's Nazi movement in the 1930s. Following complaints made in the West German Bundestag that Zundel was responsible for Nazi propaganda being mailed to Germany, Canada Post issued an interim prohibitory order in November, 1981, prohibiting Zundel use of the mail. {70|71} However, a 3-man board of review recently heard his appeal and Postmaster-General Andre Ouellet signed an order revoking the ban, based on their recommendation. Ben Kayfetz, executive director of the National Joint Community Relations Committee of the Canadian Jewish Congress, told the CJN he considers that decision 'deplorable as it permits a known propagandist to proceed with his offensive attacks with impunity.' Kayfetz said he particularly found 'appalling' this statement in the adjudication of the board of review: 'The board believes that what is before it is a much larger problem or struggle between two peoples, i.e. the Germans and the Jews, and is reluctant to recommend to the minister that the interruption of mail services be continued.' Kayfetz said this revealed that the board had no real understanding of the issues involved. 'It assumes that attacks on a religious or ethnic group are the concern of that group alone and no one else's,' he said. 'It disregards the lessons of World War II and the impact of Hitlerism whose 50th anniversary is coming at {71|72} the end of January.' Kayfetz said he 'found it passing strange' that Zundel should disavow being a Nazi, and yet for years has been distributing Concerned Parents of German Descent. Kayfetz said this is a book promoting the thesis that there was no Holocaust and that the entire 'story was concocted by the Zionists for the purpose of extracting money from Germany.'"

End of quote. And the next article is from the Ottawa Citizen, December 11, 1982, headlined, "Anti-Zionist regains right to mail service". It is

by Michael Prentice:

"Canada Post has been told it had no right to stop delivering a Toronto man's mail because it believed he was sending hate literature. The landmark case has ended in victory for 43-year-old Ernst Zundel, a fierce critic of the state of Israel. Zundel, who runs a small publishing and advertising business, had his mail service cut off in November, 1981, on grounds he was using the mails to spread anti-Jewish propaganda. Following a five-day hearing early this year, a post office review board decided Canada Post erred in refusing to deliver Zundel's mail. {72|73} Postmaster-general André Ouellet, who appointed the board, has accepted its decision and ordered Canada Post to restore mail service to him, post office officials said Friday. The decision to restore Zundel's mail service has 'appalled' the Canadian Jewish Congress, said Ben Kayfetz, national director of community relations for the Jewish organization. In his fight to have his mail restored, Zundel had the support of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, which argued Canada Post had no right to deny mail service to anyone who hadn't been convicted of a crime. Zundel estimates the post office spent well over $100,000 in investigating him and hiring lawyers to argue its case. He said Ouellet 'apparently felt called upon to represent narrow, Zionist sectarian interests in this matter, rather than the human rights of the public at large.' The 43-year-old, who came to Canada from Germany when he was 18, is an avowed opponent of Israel, but denies he is anti-Jewish. 'I don't think any group in society ought to be beyond scrutiny or question,' he says." {73|74}

Q. Other than the reference in that first article you read to the judgment of the postal tribunal, have you ever heard anything other than that?

A. The only thing that I have ever heard about my — the verdict in my case, was what I read in this article in the Canadian Jewish News.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: Exhibit K.

— EXHIBIT "K" on the voir dire: Photocopy of two newspaper articles: Canadian Jewish News, December 1982, and the Ottawa Citizen, December 11, 1982.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Anything in 1983 or '84?

A. Yes, I have. I have, yes.

Q. Please proceed.

A. It's an article in the Toronto Sun. The title page has a picture of me being trapped in a taxi outside the Courthouse, and it's headlined, "JDL fracas spills onto street", and the caption of the photograph reads, "Demonstrators chase taxi carrying accused".

THE COURT: The date, please.

THE WITNESS: January 17th, 1984. The caption reads: "A Jewish Defence League member pounded his fist against the cab carrying publisher Ernst Zundel yesterday while others spat on it and shouted. A Metro cop held back one woman from the taxi door {74|75} outside the Old City Hall courthouse".

And inside, another article with a picture of me going up the Courthouse step, and it is headlined, "Accused publisher".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The date?

A. Toronto Sun, Tuesday, January 17, 1984. The photograph is captioned: "Hard Hat and bulletproof vest were worn to court yesterday by publisher Ernst Zundel, accused of spreading false information about the murder of Jews in Hitler's Germany. A fracas between his security men and militant Jewish Defence Leaguers was broken up by Metro Police." Then a sub-headline, underlined, "Death Threats Alleged", and there is a bold lead line, "Courthouse clash". The article is by Sara-Jane Bourgon, Staff Writer:

"Violence erupted at the Old City Hall courthouse yesterday as publisher Ernst Zundel appeared on a charge of spreading false news about the Holocaust. Shouting 'Prosecute Nazis now' and 'Never again,' about 30 Jewish Defence League members clashed with Zundel's security men on the steps of the courthouse.

Zundel, wearing a hard hat and bulletproof vest, said he carried a tape recorder to monitor death threats. The fracas was broken up by police, {75|76} but the confrontation moved inside where angry words were exchanged between the two groups.

In the packed courtroom, Judge William Ross remanded Zundel to February 6 to set a date for trial, but he said the specifics of the allegation must be provided to the defence by January 31.

Zundel, 44, of Carlton Street, operates Samisdat Publishers, which distributes material worldwide claiming fewer Jews were killed in the Holocaust than is documented.

The charge was laid by Sabina Citron, 55, founder of the Toronto-based Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association. Citron's lawyer, Bob McGee, said he would be assisting the Crown attorney in presenting the case. Volumes of material have already been given to the prosecutor, court was told.

Defence lawyer Lauren Marshall said her client must fight through a mob every time he comes to court.

In a trembling voice, Marshall said she and her client and their families are harassed daily and have received death threats.

Later she told reporters one caller told her seven-year-old, 'If your mommy goes to court, she'll be killed.' {76|77}

About 10 uniformed police ushered Zundel from the courtroom to a side door, where he jumped into a cab. One of his supporters was chased by demonstrators and punched."

Q. Anything more recent?

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be exhibited, please, I'm sorry?

THE COURT: Exhibit L.

EXHIBIT "L" on voir dire: Photocopies of articles from The Toronto Sun dated Tuesday, January 17, 1984.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Proceed with a more recent article.

A. An article from The Toronto Sun, Monday, September 10, 1984, and it's sub-headlined, "Man Charged Under Hate Law", underlined, "Pipe bomb a warning?":

"Metro Police are investigating the bombing of a garage at the home of a man accused of saying there was no Holocaust.

Toronto publisher Ernst Zundel, 44, of Carlton Street, is to stand trial in York County Court January 7 on two charges of publishing false news causing mischief to the public interest of social and racial tolerance.

Police said about $3,000 damage was caused at 4:20 a.m. yesterday when what's believed to have been a pipe bomb exploded near Zundel's two-car garage, {77|78} at the rear of his home.

The bomb destroyed the garage door and damaged Zundel's luxury car, as well as three cars parked 15 feet away in a neighbor's drive.

Bomb fragments also pierced a house next door and a fence separating the properties.

Metro Police bomb squad has seized evidence.

Zundel said yesterday he spent a 'sleepless night' after the blast but he was grateful for the security devices installed around his Victorian-style home.

He has installed outdoor video cameras, search lights, barbed-wire fences and has around-the-clock security guards.

'Everybody laughed at me when I was preparing for this,' Zundel said. 'They said I had a bunker mentality. But I know what I'm up against... and they're afraid of the outcome of the trial.'

The bomb was to signal to me to watch it but I won't back down,' Zundel said. 'I expect there will be some arrogant, snickering calls to me in the next few weeks.'

Zundel, who operates Samisdat Publishers, could face up to two years in jail in {78|79} connection with the publication of two flyers entitled 'West, War and Islam' and 'Did Six Million Really Die?'"

Q. Do you have a luxury car?

A. It's a medium-sized Chrysler Le Baron.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, that is like beauty – it is all in the eyes of the beholder. What is your next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was your garage bombed?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Tell us whether you did receive any threatening phone calls such as you indicated.

A. I certainly did.

Q. Did you keep tape-recordings of them?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And do you have those tape-recordings here today?

A. Not the one pertaining to the bomb, no. Just other death threats and so on.

Q. I see. You turned over the tape-recordings of any reference to a bomb to the police, did you?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Were you referred to in the National Evening News?

A. Many times, yes.

Q. I have a tape-recording of an interview on the 27th of the eleventh month, 1981. I would like to play this and ask you if you can identify this as an interview or comment about yourself. Or, excuse me, are there any other news articles you wish to introduce? {79|80}

A. Just the last one.

MR. CHRISTIE: My apologies, I am getting ahead of myself. May the last article be marked as an exhibit?

THE COURT: Exhibit M.

— EXHIBIT "M" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from The Toronto Sun, Monday, September 10, 1984.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You have one more. Please give the date and the publication.

A. It is a publication put out by the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association of 788 Marlee Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, and underneath the address it gives a place where you send charitable cheque donations to.

Q. And how is this published, sir?

A. It was published by the Canadian Association. One can find it at their headquarters on displays, and it specifically mentions me in saying, under the headline "Stopped" —

Q. Excuse me, how do you know this to be distributed, and how is this distributed?

THE COURT: That is a good question.

THE WITNESS: Because other German people and other ethnics have brought this thing to me.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Where did they get it?

A. I have no idea.

Q. So you've received this from a number of sources? {80|81}

A. That's right.

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge as to how this particular publication was ever distributed?

A. It is on display, lying somewhere at 788 Marlee Avenue, where visitors can pick it up.

Q. At the Holocaust Remembrance Association headquarters; is that it?

A. That's right. It is headlined, "Hate Propaganda" "Is anything being done?" "Yes!" "These are the Facts:" And they mention under a new headline called, "Stopped":

"the mailing of vicious hate propaganda to 45,000 addresses in 47 countries including Arab countries – by Ernst Zundel, a Neo-Nazi in Toronto. The Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association is now pressing legal action against Zundel."

The rest pertains to other people.

Q. So this is something available to others who visit that centre, to your knowledge?

A. Certainly.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit?

THE COURT: For what it's worth, yes.

— EXHIBIT "N" on voir dire: Photocopy of Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association leaflet.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Any other publications pertaining to the publicity? {81|82}

A. About myself?

Q. Yes.

A. I didn't bring all of them. There's many.

Q. There are many more?

A. Yes, there are.

Q. Now, I'd like to deal with matters pertaining to you directly of an audible nature. That is the tape-recordings.

THE COURT: We will do that at two-thirty.

— Discussion concerning release of jury panel at large for the day.

THE COURT: They can be released until tomorrow morning. The only statement I have to make is this – that this Court considers that a fair trial does not necessarily commence within the confines of a courtroom. Certainly fairness begins there, but it begins well in advance of an accused entering a courtroom.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, if I may, before Mr. Zundel resumes testifying, there are several members of the Press today, not all of them are from Ontario, and they have asked me to request of Your Honour a clarification {82|83} of the material that you heard so far this morning, whether or not it can be reported upon.

We are in the stage of a voir dire. I should say, Your Honour, that I take the position that in light of defence contention that because of pre-trial publicity a challenge for cause is necessary, to report on that prior to the selection of the jury simply compounds that problem, and I am going to suggest that there be a ban until, at least, the jury is selected, or the end of the trial, whatever Your Honour indicates.

THE COURT: What is my authority?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think s.442, Your Honour. We are also on a voir dire, Your Honour, which are matters traditionally, not in camera, but in the absence of jury are matters not to be published. The section doesn't help Your Honour. It talks about exclusion, and that is not what I am asking for.

I think the authority, Your Honour, is the fact that it is a voir dire, and not the trial proper. These are proceedings being taken in the absence of a jury and may be prejudicial if they are heard by a jury prior to the case being heard and, as in any other voir dire, all matters can be reported upon at the end of the trial.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, my general tendency in regards to these matters is that they should be public. I can see my friend's concern, and I think it is a legitimate one, and I agreed with him when we began today, but I had a second more to think about it, and I feel, frankly, that no greater prejudice can be done, really, if any, than has already been done. {83|84}

So I take a neutral position on the matter, and I leave it to Your Honour's discretion.

THE COURT: Any reply to that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, it's a problem. The question was raised by the reporters. I don't take a strong position one way or the other. My concern is that the trial be properly conducted. I know, Your Honour, Mr. Christie's concern is the same. I will leave it in Your Honour's hands.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I am not prepared to make any further order or clarification one way or the other. I have said what I said, and I intend saying nothing further at this time.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I proceed, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes, you certainly may.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I asked you earlier about a news broadcast, CBC National News, on the 27th of November, 1981. I now produce and show to you a tape. Is this a tape of such a broadcast?

A. Yes, it is.

THE COURT: What is the date, please?

THE WITNESS: The 27th of November, 1981.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Was this a national broadcast?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Was it an interview with you? {84|85}

A. The broadcast was based so it alleges [on] a one hour and fifteen minute press conference, and it's a wild distortion of virtually everything that I said.

— Discussion concerning courtroom location of equipment.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will put it in the machine and play it.

Q. Do you know how long this interview is?

A. Approximately five minutes.

Q. About five minutes. Thank you. You can tell me right away if I've got this right, will you, please?

— Tape recorded proceedings.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I believe that was The National?

A. That's right.

Q. That was the CBC National News on that date?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you think of that report, Mr. Zundel? Was there anything false about it?

A. The report had very little to do with the press conference that was called with the specific purpose of talking about alleged Nazi War Criminals in Canada, throughout the case in particular at the time – it was before Helmut Rauca was extradited to Europe, and I had produced —

Q. Mr. Zundel, in that tape it said you {85|86} readily admitted being a hate merchant, or something to that effect. Did you say that?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Were there any other statements in there that you can take issue with that you can recall?

A. There's so little truth in it.

Q. So little truth in it. Did you take issue with it, with the CBC?

A. I certainly did.

Q. What happened?

A. The usual stone wall answers by the CBC whenever you complain about something like that. There is nobody in authority, nobody responsible, and the claim is usually that this is the side effect of having a free press in Canada, and we have to bear it. When I pointed out that the Radio and Television Commission was established to have very firm guidelines, we never get anywhere near these people.

Q. So do you think that was a fair and objective report?

A. Completely distorted. It did not raise itself to the purpose of the press conference.

Q. I am now going to play – you are going to play this tape. Is this a tape that you have made of threats upon you?

THE COURT: This is a separate tape, is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: The last tape, madam clerk, will be Exhibit O.

— EXHIBIT "O" on voir dire: Tape Recording of CBC – The National – broadcast November 27, 1981. {86|87}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you recognize that tape?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who made it?

A. I did.

Q. Where?

A. In my office, my shop.

Q. By what means?

A. By...

Q. Tape recording of phone calls. Right?

A. Right.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I play that, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: You do have knowledge of its contents?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I do, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What's it about?

MR. CHRISTIE: It involves threats about Mr. Zundel by certain members of a group.

THE COURT: I want to know the date he made it, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

Q. Could you tell us what date?

A. It is a collection of death threats, bomb threats and hate calls spreading over a period of about a year in 1981, and some previous to that. I made it for the purposes of turning it over to the Metropolitan Police and the Attorney General's Office to explain to them, in accompanying letters, what our problem was.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, if I am going {87|88} to attach weight, and I must consider doing that, as part of my duty, I would have to know more than what year it was made, because the witness indicated, as I understand his reply, that it's a compilation, a potpourri of a number of individual conversations, I assume, put upon one tape from others.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: If that's the case, then 1981 may have been the time that it was compiled, but 1981 may or may not have been the time that the conversations occurred.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think they should be identified as to the date they occurred, then, Your Honour.

THE COURT: That would be helpful.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell us between what days or, rather, months, perhaps, and what year these conversations took place?

A. I couldn't recall, but they are tapes available with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force of whom I signed an official intercept, and they have these tapes in custody.

Q. What year did these conversations occur?

A. These ones? 1980, beginning of 1980, '81.

Q. These conversations occurred in 1980 and '81?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I, Your Honour? Perhaps they may have no weight. I don't know.

THE COURT: Yes. I think they are {88|89} admissible.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

— Tape recorded proceedings.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you explain what that noise is on the tape?

A. This lady kept calling me night after night after one o'clock, and sometimes she would make fifteen, twenty phone calls, and a man would also come on an extension call and, with the radio, blast this music into the telephone. I tried to talk her down, but she wouldn't be reasoned with.

THE COURT: Before you play it on, I want to know how long this tape will be, and whether or not you propose to put in as exhibits further tapes along these lines.

MR. CHRISTIE: It is virtually over.

THE COURT: Where does it lead?

MR. CHRISTIE: It shows an animosity of a particular group against Mr. Zundel — the group that I would like to have excused from the jury because they have been involved in this controversy.

THE COURT: What group is that?

MR. CHRISTIE: The group that identify themselves with the Jewish Defence League. There will be evidence on the video tapes. I would be asking that Jewish people generally, in view of the controversy involved in the booklet, be excused. This is simply to demonstrate that, unfortunately —

THE COURT: Are these voices that I am {89|90} hearing — I presume that one of the voices I am hearing is your client, your witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Are these other voices other than those of your client, are they identified?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not in all cases, no. In fact, I haven't heard anyone identify themselves in any way.

THE COURT: And how is the exclusion of, as you say, Jewish people from being prospective jurors — what is the evidentiary nexus?

MR. CHRISTIE: That's correct, Your Honour, there is none, unless the accused can identify, in some way, some of the callers, and I was going to ask him about that.

THE COURT: Then you can continue.

— Tape recorded proceedings.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would be arguing the relevance of that in relation to animosity in the community and the German feeling, of which this accused happens to be, rightly or wrongly, a representative. If I could file that as an exhibit.

— EXHIBIT "P" on voir dire: Tape recording of telephone conversations.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would now like to show the video tape of the news coverage on the video machine, please, Your Honour. I need the help of a gentleman to make {90|91} it operate, if I may.

THE COURT: Yes. Do you have one in mind?

MR. CHRISTIE: He is right here, Your Honour. He operates this machine.

THE COURT: Tell me, is it one continuous newscast, or —

MR. CHRISTIE: No, Your Honour. It is a collection of the news coverage and events surrounding Mr. Zundel's house, and it starts with the march on Mr. Zundel's house which took place in 1981, and the footage of that is the first thing that I think you will see. I would, perhaps, stop the tape to have the accused identify what is being shown.

THE COURT: As long as you lay the basis either before, as you go, or at the end, as you proceed.

— Video tape proceedings.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you describe, as we go along, what this is, Mr. Zundel?

A. It is a demonstration that resulted from the Canadian Jewish News, May 28, 1981, that advertisement that called for a mass rally. And this is the result. After the mass rally agitational speeches were over in Allan Gardens, these people marched to my house.

Q. How do you know they were agitational speeches?

A. Because I had the speeches recorded. I was picked out as the target of the march.

Q. And this is the tape recording of that rally? {91|92}

A. It is a video tape recording of that, yes, of the end of the march.

Q. So after the rally they marched on your house.

A. That's right.

Q. Could you describe what is to the right of the iron fence?

A. Some of my friends opposing the demonstrators. They are there to help me protect my building, and we were carrying signs.

Q. Where is your building in this picture?

A. On the right hand side of this dark area. There is the white building in the picture.

Q. How long were these people in front of your house?

A. From the beginning to the end. One and a half to two hours.

Q. What were they saying while they were there?

A. Chanting, "We want Zundel. We want Zundel. We want Zundel dead. Kill him. Kill him. Burn him down. Bomb him."

Q. Did you say how many people were there?

A. Fifteen hundred; according to some other people, two thousand.

MR. CHRISTIE: I won't have the sound up for these sounds, Your Honour, but I will have it up for the news broadcast.

Q. And the police were there to protect {92|93} you; is that right?

A. Yes. I had found out about the meeting and phoned them and was grateful for the help.

Q. Had you done anything visibly at this time to incite this gathering outside your home?

A. No. This was as a result of the publicity received, due to the postal dispute.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Excuse me for interrupting. I would like you to tell us which publications in that story you, yourself, published.

A. None.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Are there dates on these?

MR. CHRISTIE: There are dates on the stories in the news, Your Honour. They are indicated at the beginning of the story.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you identify where this took place?

A. Outside the City Hall Courthouse, December 28, 1983.

Q. Thank you.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Who are the people demonstrating there? {93|94}

A. Members of the Jewish Defence League.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Was this on the day that you were supposed to go to Court?
 A. That's right.
 Q. Did you arrive there?
 A. After I was knocked down on the Courthouse steps, spat at.
 Q. Did it show here?
 A. No, it never made any ...
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Do you recognize the person there in the right centre of the picture?
 A. Mair Halevi, the leader of the Jewish Defence League.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Where are you in this picture? How can we identify you?
 A. I am the man behind Sergeant Bowerman.
 Q. Are you wearing a hat?
 A. Yes, I am.
 Q. Thank you.
 — Further video tape proceedings. {94|95}
 Q. I just want to ask you one question. Do you say the Holocaust never happened?
 A. Not in that many words, no.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Did you ever say that?
 A. Never in my entire life. Never said it. Never thought it.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. By the way, is it your contention, or the contention of the booklet that 3.5 million died in the Holocaust?
 A. It is not the intention of the booklet, but I have heard the figure mentioned, yes.
 Q. Is that a true statement? Have you been charged with distributing hate literature before?
 A. In Canada, no. In Germany, yes, and I won my case in two court levels.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. These films that follow are taken from outside of your window in your house?
 A. No. From inside the house with our own video camera.
 Q. Do you recognize any of the people on the street?
 A. Yes, I do. {95|96}
 Q. Who are they?
 A. Some of them were in court this morning.
 Q. Some of them were in court this morning?
 A. That's right. They are the ones that were assaulting me as I was coming in here.
 Q. Right. Since there is no audible sound, can you tell us what happened here?
 A. For a number of days – well, for a number of days there was people standing outside my house, and shouting of threats.
 Q. Did you have a tape-recording device underneath where they were standing?
 A. We had a camera directly on the mike – a mike directly on the camera, excuse me.
 Q. And the sounds picked up were of the people on the street an —
 A. And they were being filmed and recorded, yes.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. There is a sign on a pole there. What does the sign say?
 A. I couldn't see it. If you could re-wind it, I can...
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 THE WITNESS: Belzec. Six Million. {96|97}
 Q. Who is the person going across the street?
 A. She was a Jewish girl that came from my advertising agency to pick up a job, and she was trapped in our building for three quarters of an hour before police arrived to rescue her, because members of the Jewish Defence League said that they had a court order to inspect all parcels and material leaving my building. So finally police came and escorted her to the door.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Who was walking by when they shouted, "Nazi"?
 A. It was my nephew's wife, their child, and my nephew. And they said they had a court order, and they called they were going to get them.

 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Did you hear that? What was it?
 A. "I dance the Horra on your grave", and then he goes obscenities.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. What did that gesture signify?
 A. To cut my throat.
 — Further video tape proceedings. {97|98}
 Q. Is that somebody you know that lives in your neighbourhood?
 A. No. These are passersby, and they get accosted and they point and say, "Look. There's a Nazi living there."
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. See the person gesturing down to the right hand corner of the picture? What direction is he gesturing in?
 A. The entrance to my home. It is Mair Halevi.
 Q. And who is he?
 A. The leader of the Jewish Defence League.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 — Short adjournment.
 — Upon resuming.
 MR. CHRISTIE: If I can proceed, Your Honour.
 THE COURT: Yes. How long does this take?
 MR. CHRISTIE: I think it's only fifteen or twenty minutes more, but I can't swear to that.
 THE COURT: Go ahead. {98|99}
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: These people that are standing on the street, do you recognize them?
 A. I've got to know some of them visually, yes.
 Q. Are they promoting or putting their signs toward the street as well?
 A. Irregularly.
 Q. What's the light shining in your window, and what time of day was it?
 A. It was after midnight and it's known to video people that you can burn the tube by a powerful light shining into a lense – you destroy the image in the camera.
 Q. And that was what time of night?
 A. After midnight. It went on twenty-four hours, but this is after midnight.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. What's that sound from?
 A. I have a wrought iron gate at the entrance to my place, and they kept banging it constantly.
 Q. What time of night would that be?
 A. It was in the night. It went on twenty-four hours. It went on many times.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. What was that remark? Do you know {99|100} what it was?
 A. A Nazi remark.
 Q. Pay attention and tell me.
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 THE WITNESS: I think he said, "Nazi swine".
 — Further video tape proceedings.
 Q. Did you ever complain about this to the police?
 A. I'm not one to run to the authorities. I usually realize that they have their hands full to do. I did make one or two calls. Ultimately I ran down to the station myself to speak to the ranking police officer when it got out of hand.
 Q. What did you ask him to do?
 A. I said that I am willing to swear out a kind of a nuisance or a trespassing charge, and I was told they are perfectly within their rights – they are not causing a nuisance.
 Q. Did you ask or approach the Jewish community in any way to ask them – officially – to ask them to intercede, or ask these people to stop?
 A. For many years I have been trying to do that. I did not get anywhere.

— Further video tape proceedings. {100|101}

Q. Did you get hit on this occasion?

A. Yes, I did. Over the head.

Q. How?

A. With demonstrators' signposts. Twice. You can see it later on in the newscasts.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Do you know the date of this broadcast?

A. In the evening of January 16th.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Is that the issue in this case?

A. No.

Q. Does that have anything to do with this case?

A. No.

Q. Did you publish that book?

A. I did not.

Q. Thank you.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Do you know who that man is that was knocked down in the corner?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is an elderly pensioner who came to watch the proceedings. {101|102}

Q. Is he a friend of yours?

A. Only an acquaintance.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Could you tell me who is lying on the ground in these photographs?

A. He is an associate of mine who was there as my advisor.

Q. Who was that?

A. His name is Thomson (ph). He is not in this room.

Q. And what happened to him when he was on the ground?

A. Due to a mix-up with the police officials inside the Courthouse —
THE COURT: Just a moment. Turn it off. Set it a little back. I want to know what was going to emanate from the witness. I want to know if it is from his own knowledge, now that he is under oath. If it is what he was told, I don't want to hear it. In other words, if it is hearsay, it is not admissible.

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

Q. Do you recognize

A. Yes. He went to Court with my evidence in the attache case. He carried my attache case with him.

Q. All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: I apologize for any hearsay.

— Further video tape proceedings. {102|103}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you ask around to see if any of your people had suggested bringing canes?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you at any time suggest bringing canes?

A. Absolutely not. I would not permit anything like that amongst my friends.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. What's this broadcast, please?

A. CBC National News.

Q. When?

A. January 16th.

Q. Thank you.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Why did you wave like that on that occasion?

A. These people had been terrorizing me for weeks, and always calling me with the single slogan, "Nazi. Nazi. Nazi", day and night, and when I went there again I heard again, "Nazi. Nazi. Nazi". Once I got down and got back on my feet, I thought the only way I could show defiance to those people that might hurt me psychically but not physically was to raise my hand and show them I was on my feet.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this the 28th of December, or the 16th of January?

THE WITNESS: Oh, excuse me. This is {103|104} the 28th. You're right, Mr. Griffiths. This is the 28th.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Is this still part of the same national news broadcast?

A. Yes.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Are any of the organizations depicted so far associated with you in any way?

A. Absolutely not.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Have you in any way been associated with such publications yourself?

A. Absolutely not.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Are you in any way associated with that organization?

A. None.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Are you charged with or associated with distributing white power telephone messages? {104|105}

A. Absolutely not.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. See the canes in this photograph?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How many people carried canes?

A. Possibly a dozen.

Q. Thank you.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Did you arrange the bus the people are getting into?

A. Yes. I leased the bus from the TTC, because we had been waylaid the last time with taxis — pounding on the roof and so on — so I was afraid somebody might get hurt, so I leased the bus.

— Further video tape proceedings.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Mr. Christie. Was all this on the news-cast?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. This is a video tape...

Q. ...is it not, Mr. Zundel, at your request?

A. That's right.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry if I did not make that clear.

— Further video tape proceedings. {105|106}

THE COURT: Turn it over for a moment, please, that last picture. I didn't seem to recognize the area. It seems to me that it might have been around the Canadian National Exhibition, but I am not sure.

I'd like you to ask the witness, if you will, whether the tape that I just saw (a) is taken around that area, or an area other than at the Old City Hall; (b) where.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will run it back, if I may, Your Honour. That portion, sir?

THE COURT: Yes. And take it along from there.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mr. Zundel, can you tell His Honour where that is?

A. Yes. Your Honour, we were going towards New City Hall on Bay Street, turning right on Bay Street.

THE COURT: Thank you. I recognize it now.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'll see if I can go forward to where we were, Your Honour.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you recognize the person that had the glasses knocked off?

A. It was Mair Halevi.

Q. And who knocked them off?

A. This I don't know, but the man in the foreground is Sergeant Maywood.

— Further video tape proceedings. {106|107}

Q. Now, this is a film that was made by someone other than a news broadcast, is that right?

A. That's right. Our own teams.

Q. Who is the person in the centre?

A. Mair Halevi, the leader of the Jewish Defence League.

— Further video tape proceedings.

Q. Is that picture referable [sic] to your case, the word "Hate" on it?

A. I don't think so.

— Further video tape proceedings.

THE COURT: Date, please.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell us the date?

A. I think it is September 9, if I am not mistaken.

THE COURT: Of 1984?

THE WITNESS: 1984.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

— Further video tape proceedings.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is the extent of the tape, Your Honour, if I may propose to adjourn now.

THE COURT: Step down, Mr. Zundel.

— The witness stands down

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 8, 1985.

—{107|108}

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Please Your Honour, yesterday I showed the video tape of publicity. If I may file that as an exhibit in this motion.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

EXHIBIT "Q" on voir dire: Video tape made by the defence.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I would like to call my client to explain what he did to try and correct some of the publicity that we will be submitting was erroneously pertaining to alleged hate charges by informing the media of precisely what he was facing.

I will be introducing evidence of letters written to every media outlet to correct the impression repeatedly indicated in the video tape that he was being charged with hate propaganda. So for that reason, I would like to recall him to the stand.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, do you take issue with any of this?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I don't really see how that is relevant, Your Honour. R. v. Hubert talks about widespread publicity. We are really at the stage of laying a foundation.

Mr. Christie has been challenging for cause. Mr. Zundel's correspondence on the issue, unless it was made public, I don't think is relevant. {108|109}

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me. My purpose, Your Honour – and I appreciate my friend's concern – is not public correspondence, but I will endeavour to correct false allegations made about him in the media that he was facing charges under a different section, and it was written by his lawyer, and I can explain, basically, what it said.

THE COURT: You haven't seen this?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I haven't.

THE COURT: Perhaps, would you like to show it to Mr. Griffiths?

MR. CHRISTIE: And just file it. Yes.

THE COURT: I will reserve on the relevancy aspect, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: These letters, I may explain, are written to every newspaper, radio and television from Mr. Zundel's lawyer advising that at certain stages prior to this proceeding public statements were being made that indicated hatred as the substance of the charge, and I think I can argue fairly substantially that that information was conveyed on a video tape on a number of occasions as specified.

So the letters basically indicate long ago, in fact, the 14th of October, 1984, that this concern was of interest to Mr. Zundel, and he instructed his lawyer to write to all the media, and if my friend has no objection —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no objection, Your Honour. I do question the relevancy of it. There's no tapes that postdate that.

THE COURT: I will look at it and I will leave this proposition with you, gentlemen. If you agree with it, then that is what I will do; if not, I will {109|110} hear your submissions.

I will look at it and, in the event that, in my view, it is relevant, I will consider it. In the event that I think it is irrelevant, I will say so and not consider it. Fair enough?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: I also intend to lead evidence that the commission of hate offence is still being made. In fact, it was made last night, and it was on the television news last night, and I have a tape of that, too. So therefore, I tender on the record, for the record, letters to CBC-TV News, The Globe and Mail, to the attention of Cameron Smith, Managing Editor, to Barbara Amiel, Editor of the Toronto Sun, Global-TV News Director, News Director CITY-TV, CKEY-Radio News, News Director CFRB Radio, CHIN-Radio News, The Jewish Times, the Editor of The Toronto Jewish Press, and to the Editor of the Globe and Mail again.

These are copies for my friend. So I think that's all I have to file.

THE COURT: Thank you kindly.

MR. CHRISTIE: The letter speaks for itself. I don't think I have to read it.

I also have registered date receipts showing that they were sent on the date specified. I haven't had time to show them to my friend.

MR. GRIFFITHS: On the same ground, Your Honour, I have no objection to them going in.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT "R" on voir dire: Copies of letter dated October 14, 1984, sent to various media. {110|111}

— EXHIBIT "S" on voir dire: Registered date receipts.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, I would like to call my client, Your Honour, on the issue of his attempts to bridge the gaps between himself and the Jewish community in respect to media allegations against him, letters that he wrote. I would like to introduce those as evidence of a continuing dispute between a particular group of people and the accused, in view of the fact that I am suggesting that that group should not properly be involved in trying the issue, unless my friend objects.

THE COURT: You take the position that the Jewish Defence League should have no part in the jury —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, it would be that I would stand aside any member of the Jewish Defence League. However, in the Morgentaler case members who belonged to the Right to Life Organization were not automatically excluded from that jury, were not disenfranchised by reason of their membership, nor were Catholics or other people who hold religious beliefs about abortion.

MR. CHRISTIE: All I am trying to do now is establish my right to question the prospective jurors on their potential prejudice, and I am not asking that my challenge be ruled upon now in any way, just for the right to challenge. And I suppose I am laying a foundation for the suggestion that potential prejudice exists sufficient to enable me to ask questions pertaining to that matter.

THE COURT: The evidence that you propose to lead from the witness essentially would be what?

MR. CHRISTIE: Communications that he undertook to attempt to rectify media representations of {111|112} himself as a Nazi, where he disseminated the verbatim transcript of the judgment of the District Court of Stuttgart which cleared him of charges of dissemination of hate literature, and he sent that, together with the clippings, to various members of the Jewish community and to the Ethnic Squad, the Rabbis and leaders of the Jewish community of Canada, and to the media as well.

So that he was attempting to rectify the impression that had been left in the media.

THE COURT: How does his attempt to rectify the perception in the eyes of the persons that you and the organizations that you just mentioned — how does that in any way further your position with respect to whether or not you should be permitted to, pursuant to R. v. Hubbard, be permitted to ask the questions that you propose to ask of these various jurors as to whether they adhere to any such organization?

MR. CHRISTIE: If I can show a potential prejudice in the organization against the accused such that they are unprepared to accept invitations to discuss the matter of what had been previously printed of a false nature against the accused in an open and free discussion, I think I can demonstrate that members of those particular groups seem to bear illwill towards the accused and, therefore, seem ill-suited to be dispassionate and impartial jurors.

THE COURT: By reason of their refusal to talk with them.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think I can show more than that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What more can you show?

MR. CHRISTIE: I can show publication {112|113} of what, in effect, is one side of the issue, one side of the story by him, and the refusal to correct, with the proper legal judgment, or with the proper information, in fact, false information disseminated about the accused where he was "branded a Nazi". He responded by sending the transcript or information from the court which acquitted him of that charge. This was in an attempt to rectify the impression left that, I think, was probably false.

THE COURT: So that your position has two elements. The first is, they wouldn't meet him.

MR. CHRISTIE: Correct.

THE COURT: And the second is what you just mentioned. They take the position that they want him charged.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, and left the impression that his conviction, or his charge, still stood. And so I am trying to rectify that by showing that the proper attempt to balance that impression was not made.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, if this is, as I understand it, laying the groundwork not on the basis of publicity but laying the groundwork to show some animus of all the people that are Jewish against Mr. Zundel, I would suggest that that doesn't begin to do that, that it's not proper according to the cases, that the fact that the press made some indication or expressed some opinion as to Mr. Zundel and he sent around material to correct that so it doesn't lead one to the only conclusion that all Jews should be excluded from the panel or to be called to the book. You saw evidence right here, Your Honour, of a Jewish girl that was in delivering goods to Mr. Zundel who was being {113|114} kept inside by members purporting to be from the Jewish Defence League out on the sidewalk. Not all Jews are biased here, Your Honour. I don't think any evidence could be called to establish that, certainly not the evidence my friend proposes to call. It's not relevant to the issue at hand.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it could only be decided whether it was relevant after the evidence was heard, I think. My friend may be right that I may not be able to demonstrate any such proposition, but I hardly agree with the proposition that I shouldn't be allowed to try.

THE COURT: I am very dubious about the relevancy of what you are about to propose, but I think I should exercise my judicial discretion.

However dubious I may be in your favour, you may call the evidence. I am not interested in having a trial before the trial commences. I am getting to the point where I think that we should get on with the administration of justice and not become like a number of American courts, which I don't propose this Court will ever resemble, where we spend weeks trying to pick a jury. That will not occur if I can possibly help it in this country.

So that having said that, call your witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

ERNST ZÜNDEL, previously sworn

{114|115}

Q. I'd like, now, to play the tape of a video recording of the broadcast last night.

— Video tape proceedings.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, I haven't started at the beginning, and I would like to do that, Your Honour.

— Video tape proceedings.

Q. Could you tell His Honour what this broadcast is of?

A. Of the news last night.

Q. What station?

A. I can't identify yet. The station wasn't mentioned.

Q. Oh, I see.

— Further video tape proceedings.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to re-wind that and play the last part again and ask the accused if he has ever been convicted of distributing hate literature.

THE COURT: He already said he has not.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. That's right.

— Further video tape proceedings. {115|116}

Q. Mr. Zundel, did you hear reference in that to hate as being a substance of the charge?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Have you tried to tell the media that that is not a substance?

A. Every person responsible for every major media outlet, especially in this City and Province, were sent letters specifying the charges from my Attorney, and instructions. They had ample time to acquaint themselves with them. They obviously chose to ignore them.

Q. I now produce and show to you an article dated January 7, 1985, in the Toronto Star, a copy of which I am now giving to my friend, which indicates, "Disturbance outside hate literature trial". Did you see that published in the Toronto Star yesterday?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Were they one of the outlets that you advised about the difference between section 177 and hate literature?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: May that be the next exhibit?

THE COURT: Exhibit T.

— EXHIBIT "T" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Toronto Star, Monday, January 7, 1985.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you a copy of the Globe and Mail, Monday, January 7, {116|117} and that is also publicity referable [sic] to you?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Is there any reference to hatred in there?

A. May I take a moment to read it?

Q. Have you looked at it? Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I won't file that, Your Honour. If you wish me to file it, I will file it. My friend indicates he would like me to file it. I will file this exhibit then, if I may. THE COURT: Exhibit U.

— EXHIBIT "U" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Globe and Mail, Monday, January 7, 1985.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you an article from the Globe and Mail, Tuesday, January 8. And that is referable [sic] to your case as well?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And there's no reference in there to hatred, either, is there?

A. No.

Q. Thank you very much. And which newspaper, to your knowledge, has the largest circulation in Toronto?

A. The Toronto Star.

Q. Thank you.

— EXHIBIT "V" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Globe and Mail, Tuesday, January 8, 1985. {117|118}

Q. I'd like to produce and show to you an article published in the Toronto Star on January 8, on page A11. Have you seen that article?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And do you know if it refers to hate?

A. The headline has been changed.

Q. The headline has been changed from the 7th to the 8th, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Instead of referring to hate, it now refers to, "Fight breaks out at start of trial of man who says Holocaust was a hoax". Is that right?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Exhibit W.

— EXHIBIT "W" on voir dire: Photocopy of newspaper article from the Toronto Star, Tuesday, January 8, 1985.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And have you ever said that the Holocaust was a hoax?

A. This is verbal shorthand.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to file an article of January 2nd of the New York Times which is indicating – and I am giving my friend a copy – which is indicating that there will be shown very soon on a station in the area a particularly offensive movie, if I may. That will only be for later reference.

THE COURT: Why do you want to file it now? {118|119}

MR. CHRISTIE: Because it will be part of my argument, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You mean something that may occur in the future is part of your argument in the present?

MR. CHRISTIE: It may happen Monday – Of course, it will happen in the course of this trial. That is what concerns me. The movie will be shown.

THE COURT: Yes, but when the jury is selected, it will be indicated clearly by me, Mr. Christie, what their duties will be, and I remind other counsel, and I respectfully remind you, that jurors are not stupid, and jurors are quite able to follow the reasonable instructions of the bench and, in my experience, of counsel.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. Just for the record, I would like also to file, to show to the witness and file a transcript of the judgment translated by him, and he can swear to its truth, of the Court in Germany that acquitted him of any charge.

THE COURT: Is that a matter of contest?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No problem if my friend wants to file it, but the evidence has been given four times.

THE COURT: Why do I want to see that? I think everyone agrees that he was acquitted.

MR. CHRISTIE: Very well, Your Honour. Those are my questions to the witness.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I just have a couple of questions, Mr. Zundel. In addition to the material that you've shown here, is it fair to say that you've appeared on a number of opinion programmes on television to state your case that six million Jews did not die in the Second World War?

A. Very, very few.

Q. So the answer is yes, but not many?

A. I can only name one, and that's the Tom Charrington Show with Mrs. Sabina Citron, the lady who laid the charge initially, where she told Mr. Charrington that she had, in fact, laid the charge. So whether it was concocted to give the excuse that I have appeared on opinion programmes, I don't know.

Q. But you have appeared on that programme.

A. On that one.

Q. And is it fair to say that you also were granted interviews on quite a number of occasions here, and invited people to your home to show them the process and tell your side of the story?

A. I have made the media welcome in my place. Unfortunately, we have seen, by the results, that the media have been very biased.

Q. All right. And is it fair to say, in fact, that you have welcomed whatever publicity, whether positive or negative, that puts your ideas before a large number of people?

A. No, Mr. Griffiths. I welcome, naturally, that my views be represented properly.

Q. Yes. {120|121}

A. But if I have a choice of being totally censored and blacked out or having only partially my viewpoint reported, I take the second.

Q. You take the second.

A. That's right.

Q. And is that what we saw here, was the second option, that you are telling your story as well as you can?

A. I can tell it better, but it was reported worse.

Q. All right. That's fair. That's fair. And in fact, one of the exhibits we had was quite a lengthy interview that you granted – I think it was Exhibit J – that was in the Globe and Mail, December 6, 1983, and that you granted that interview.

A. I did, yes.

Q. On the video, in addition to various items, some of which arose out of press conferences that you called...

A. Yes.

Q. ...and some of which arose out of other matters through the years – the postal authorities there was a fairly extensive tape of rowdy – or a group of people outside of your house. I think you said fifteen hundred to two thousand people.

A. That's right.

Q. There was nothing in the advertisement from the Jewish Jews, Exhibit I, indicating that this would be a rally about you, or going to your home. Is that right?

A. Nothing in the advertisement, but {121|122} the speakers specifically mentioned my name and asked the crowd, after the speeches were over, to march on my house, and it was by one of the organizers of the meeting. I have that speech on tape.

Q. All right. And at your house I believe that we saw on the picture that there were a number of individuals who are not Jewish, who I think you said were friends of yours that were on the front yard confronting the crowd. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Were you expecting the crowd to come over that day? Is that why you had some friends over?

A. I knew there was a meeting held at Allen Gardens, and I surmised, certainly, that based on past experience and past rallies in Allen Gardens, that these people were going to come and demonstrate in front of my house.

Q. All right. Now, the people that you said were your friends that were in front of the house seemed to be holding placards and we couldn't read on the film what their placards said. What do their placards say?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. Were the placards hanging from the house?

A. Certainly were.

Q. And what did they say?

A. "Six million Jews did not die." "The Holocaust is a hoax", one said, and "Call Ernst Zundel for further information", stating my telephone number.

Q. And did you put that up specifically for the purpose of the rally that day? {122|123}

A. No, for the purpose of informing the media who gave me a virtual boycott, to give me an opportunity, since I was going to be slandered again, to inform the citizens of this City what my viewpoints were.

Q. And you were anxious to do that. Did you think that would be provocative to the crowd that was going to be there?

A. If the crowd hadn't chosen to come, it wouldn't have provoked them.

Q. That doesn't answer my question, Mr. Zundel.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it does, Your Honour. The question was, was it to provoke the crowd, and he said they wouldn't be provoked unless they came to see the signs.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, you may rephrase the question, if you wish to do so.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Zundel, do you think your signs and the pickets and the people that were holding the signs outside the house had any influence on the crowd outside your house?

A. That crowd was so agitated by the speakers, the speeches which I have on tape, that when they came to my place they were so unruly that they broke a promise to the authorities to stay on the other side, broke through police barriers and could only be restrained from coming to my place by force. And I had agreed with the police before, that as soon as the media had taken opposite my viewpoint, I would personally rip down those large signs that you refer to, remove the picket signs, and I did. {123|124}

Q. As soon as what?

A. As soon as the media had removed those signs and the signs on the wall.

Q. So you wanted the media to show that?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And to show the crowd in front of your house?

A. I had no control over that. I wanted to use an occasion where my name was going to be slandered that I also should have an opportunity to show my side of the story.

Q. All right. On the video tape, Exhibit Q, and again that's the one that has all these newscasts on it, my recollection is there was an article from City Pulse News – and I regretfully didn't get the date – but it was the third article where it was announced that a good deal of the world hate literature was published from here, showed a picture of the house, and also publications.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And there was one particular publication you were asked about twice by Mr. Christie, as I recollect...

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. ...which was a little pamphlet called, "The Best of Both Worlds".

A. That's right.

Q. And on each occasion you were asked if you published that, and you said no. Did you write that?

A. No, I did not. {124|125}

Q. You did not write that.

A. No.

Q. Was it written by a man by the name of Christof Friedrich?

A. That was the name that appeared under the article, yes.

Q. And that was a pen name that you used?

A. That I have used for some flying saucer books.

Q. That is the only thing you have used that for?

A. That's right.

Q. Is that your middle two names – Ernst Christof Friedrich Zundel?

A. Yeah.

Q. Thank you, Mr. Zundel. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to complete my motion by filing —

THE COURT: Do you have any questions in re-examination?

MR. CHRISTIE: None. I apologize.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Zundel. You can step down.

— The witness stands down.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to complete my motion by filing the two articles that are the subject {125|126} – the substance of the alleged charge, or the charge, rather.

THE COURT: They can be one exhibit.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Exhibit X.

— EXHIBIT "X" on voir dire: Pamphlets entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?" and "West, War and Islam", respectively.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I make a brief submission, please?

THE COURT: You may not only make a brief submission, you may make any submission that you may wish to make.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. I have placed before you all the evidence which, I submit, indicates that the accused is a controversial person against whom a great deal of publicity of a very negative nature has been created. My friend may argue that some of that is my client's fault. His alternative to that publicity may very well have been silence, but he chose to avail himself of the opportunity to communicate his views. Whether it's his fault or not, that there is publicity, and whether or not the publicity is negative as I allege, or {126|127} neutral as my friend may allege, it cannot be denied that he is a controversial person. I am not here to say who is at fault for the publicity, if anyone is at fault, but I am here to say that where a controversial person is in issue, and the truth of the statements that he made is in issue, certain circumstances prevail because of their controversial personality.

My friend, I think, is prepared to accept a proposition that I ask in the form of two questions, and that is, "Are you impartial between the Crown and the accused, and if not, can you decide the case on the evidence before the Court alone?" – two very technical and very proper questions, I concede; but I think to really get to the substance of the matter, I should be allowed to ask more than that. I should be entitled to ask the questions that I have laid before Your Honour and that I have provided to my friend, because the issue in this case is the truth or falsity of an article, one being, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and the other being, "The West, War and Islam".

These articles' controversial views are expressed – the issue in the first article is, did six million Jewish persons die. In such a question, I {127|128} would submit that if it were, did six million Catholics, Protestants, or any other group, it would be important for any member of that group not to sit in issue on the fact of whether the statement is true or false. And it is not to say that this is a discrimination on any basis of race or religion to say that a member of any group whose position is in issue should not be the judge in their own cause. This equally applies to the issue of free masons, because in "The West, War and Islam" allegations are made about free masons, whatever they are, whomever they may be, and I am not authority, but my friend may reply, yes, Mr. Christie is correct that the issue is very important to Jews and very critical of free masons, and perhaps it can be taken as critical of Jews, is in issue; but how do we define or identify such groups?

Well, I don't think we have to for the purposes of the question that I propose to ask. If a person wishes to identify themselves with such a group, I am prepared to accept their honest answer and to be guided by that. If they wish to say that, "I have loyalty to this group", which I think it would be fair to say if you are a member of it, then properly and fairly you should be excused, and that is not to say that the group is right or wrong, but {128|129} only to say that they should not be judge in an issue where their position is the subject matter of the inquiry.

I would say the same of any group in this country or any other country, that none of us are qualified to be the judge on any particular cause. Now, that is my submission on the substance of any question relating to any of the Jewish persuasion or Freemasons being allowed to sit — THE COURT: What in the world is a Freemason?

MR. CHRISTIE: There is a clear answer. A Freemason is a member of a masonic order, and I am sure that in the course of the trial that will be indicated. I have many authorities I could put before you of what a free mason is, but a Freemason knows what a Freemason is. I am not a Freemason, so I can't give you an authoritative answer except from a secondary source, but I can say there are free masons of which I am aware from reading, and I can say that they are a very tightknit group of people who practise certain secrets, and they do exist, and I have read many books about them, some by masons, some not by masons. One gentleman right here could answer {129|130} that question, I'm sure, the gentleman I spoke to earlier, who is sitting with my learned friend, and he has told me about this; but the answer to the question, "What is a Freemason?" is not for me to answer. I simply say that when the issue is, as I expressed, that in "The West, War and Islam" allegations are made against freemasons, they are also made against international Zionists and also made against Jews, and if the issue is to be tried fairly on whether those allegations are true, then members of those groups should not sit as judges of the fact of whether they are true or not. That is not to be taken as criticism of Jews or Freemasons from me or from anyone else, but it should be —

THE COURT: Excuse me for a minute. There is some electronic noise periodically occurring. If any of these proceedings are being recorded on tape, they will cease and desist, and the equipment will be removed from the courtroom now. Any alarms or things of that nature on watches or other things will be put in such a position that they don't disturb the proceedings to the Court.

Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. {130|131}

I hope I have expressed myself simply to the point that when an issue of fact arises in the trial that involves the honour, shall we say, or beliefs of a group, whatever the group may be – and free masons I don't think are a religion – the group should not sit in judgment and should be excused.

I am not asking for a favourable jury. I am not trying to accomplish a favourable jury by saying that those that are involved in the issues of fact should not judge the facts. I am simply asking for an impartial jury who are not involved in the facts themselves.

Now, I must say that's why I would like to exclude those people who are, in my submission, involved in the facts by being members of groups that truth or falsity of their views being the issue.

Respecting Mr. Zundel himself, I have tried to put before you some substantial evidence that there is prejudice against him by virtue of the fact that it has been repeatedly said falsely – I should say by false news – that he is facing hate charges. Now, there is a section that the media knows quite well, because they are not stupid, either involving hate – and they keep – even after Mr. Zundel provides from a lawyer a letter with fairly {131|132} clear indication that there is a distinction between s.177 and hate charges, they persist in publishing false statements about him.

I am not here to seek any remedy against them. I am here to ask that when my client is being tried on a charge involving false news, that I be entitled to ask the jurors questions whether they have formed negative opinions about him from the erroneous, shall we say, media coverage.

I submit that it really should be fair for me to ask questions of these prospective jurors. I realize that it causes delays, and I don't like delays any more than anyone else, because we have a substantive matter to try and let's get on with it, I quite agree with that position, but in this particular, rather unusual case, I ask for the privilege to ask more questions about impartiality. They are the basic issue, I quite concede that, and I wish I could have found the process by which, for example, in the Morgentaler case the transcripts of the jury selection which I tried to provide – they don't help me at all. I have tried diligently to find out how we should proceed if we do what I request. I concede that our country has not dealt with this issue in great {132|133} detail, perhaps, and I'd like to hear Your Honour's views, and the jurisprudence of our country will benefit from some guidance at this stage, because it appears likely that these controversial questions are going to proceed if we are going to proceed with cases of this nature, and I should be grateful for guidance in respect to what Your Honour will say, because I will face the same problem in another province when I am confronted with a jury in another rather controversial case.

For these reasons, I would like to put before you some substantive issues to support my contention. I am sure my friend will put forward his views, and I would ask that we be able to find out from Your Honour what questions I may put, if any.

I think my friend concedes I should be able to put some. I am asking for more latitude than two. I have asked for what I have written down, and in one instance I thought, in the course of the evidence, that it might be proper to ask one more, and that is, "Whether you have any abiding prejudices against German people because of the publicity that has been circulated about them".

I have not, in fact, gone so far as to put before you many of the negative stereotypes about German {133|134} people, because I think we have gone, perhaps, as long as we ought to in this regard, but I would now submit that there has been, over the last forty years, substantial negative media coverage about German people, and I'd like to find a jury that didn't have a deep-seated hatred of Germans, or a deep-seated hatred or prejudice against either of the parties that will be, shall we say, disputants in this rather complex issue.

This is not a simple matter of did somebody do something. It's a very complex matter of what happened forty years ago, and if the parties who, shall we say, were involved in a dispute at the time are going to be still imbued with deep-seated views derived from that time, I'm afraid impartiality will be rather difficult. So I am asking for the right to question these prospective jurors with somewhat more latitude than has been indicated by my friend, and I hope to be allowed to ask the questions that I have submitted to Your Honour. Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {134|135} If I can deal first with those matters set out in category one by Mr. Christie, he is suggesting that Your Honour excuse anyone from the panel who is (1) a Jewish person or is employed by Jewish persons or is a close friend or relative of a Jewish person.

Your Honour, I will deal with the cases in a moment, but quite frankly, what is a Jewish person? Are we talking about a race? Are we talking about a religion? Are we talking about a cultural heritage? Are we talking about a linguistic heritage? What is a Jewish person?

Your Honour is being asked to define it by using the same definition Adolph Hitler used. I don't know, Your Honour, but that is the first thing we are being asked to consider here; and being asked to consider that, Your Honour, you are being asked to disenfranchise, in essence, one vast segment of our citizenship from performing their rights, obligations and duties as citizens – that is, sitting on a jury. It is an ancient right and one not to be taken away lightly. I know of no case in Canada where it's ever been done before.

My friend has quite candidly admitted that – and I would agree with him – there is no case, Your Honour. If Your Honour were to feel that a Jewish person {135|136} – any Jewish person – could not try this case fairly and honestly, notwithstanding what that person said or what the triers of fact may say on any challenge, then you are asked also to exclude somebody who is employed by Jewish persons. What if he hates his employer, Your Honour? It's silly. Or somebody – what about somebody who is an employee of Jewish persons, or as a close friend or relative of a Jewish person?

I will come back to the case law in a moment, Your Honour, but in essence I suggest what you are being asked to do is to disenfranchise a whole segment of our community, and the cases indicate quite clearly that that is improper and should not be done.

The same comments apply, Your Honour, to the second group that are being asked to be excused from the panel – anyone who is a Freemason, or is employed by a Freemason, or is a close friend or relative of a Freemason.

Well, Your Honour asked the question, what is a Freemason? A "mason" is more commonly used as a short form today, but as Mr. Christie pointed out, to some extent it's a group that, while they might wear a lapel pin, they don't advertise themselves widely. How do you know if you know a Freemason, or are employed by a Freemason, unless {136|137} you ask about him? And if a juror finds out, at the end of three weeks, is he disqualified? I ask Your Honour that that is something that disenfranchises a whole section of our population for no reason, and there has been not one iota of evidence that all Jewish people or free masons in particular are biased against Mr. Zundel such that they can't give him an impartial trial.

The questions themselves, Your Honour – and again, I will deal with them by way of comment and then get to the cases – the first question that is suggested, "Can you consider and will your mind allow consideration of the question of whether there were gas chambers in Germany for the extermination of Jews? Yes or No"; question 2, "Can you impartially consider the question of gas chambers and the Holocaust and remove from your mind the massive publicity of it to decide the case on the evidence put before you in this case and only on such evidence?"; and question 4 – I will come back to 3 in a moment, Your Honour – "Do you believe the Holocaust happened as depicted by the media, and would you be able to remove that idea from your mind and consider the question solely on the evidence presented in Court?" – I'd suggest that each of those three questions, Your Honour, deal with matters of history that are taught in {137|138} public school or high school and university, that are the subject matter of thousands of books by some very distinguished authors, that as such, Your Honour, they are as true as who won the Second World War, or who is the Prime Minister of Canada and, as such, it would be open to Your Honour, I would suggest, to take judicial notice. It has been done before in a court of law in California in 1981. I do not have the case here, although I expect it is coming in the next day. It is a ruling in the case of Mermelstein v. The Institute of Historical Review.

In that case the Institute of Historical Review offered, I believe it was a $50,000 reward – somebody here can correct me if I'm wrong –

$50,000 reward to anybody who could prove that there were gas chambers in Germany. Mr. Mermelstein came forward, offered his proofs, the proofs were not accepted by the Institute, and he sued the Institute, I believe, for $1.7 million to recover his losses. That lawsuit is still going in the States. However, the preliminary matters in that lawsuit, in 1981 Judge Thomas Henderson of the Superior Court of California took judicial notice of the fact of the Holocaust. It will be open to Your Honour as well.

Your Honour, the case of R. v. Hubert, {138|139} of course; is the leading case and I commend it to you.

THE COURT: I have it here.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir. There are two other cases that I will commend to you.

THE COURT: Mr. Justice Osler.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, I have that, Your Honour. Thank you. Mr. Justice Osler, in the case of R. v. Crosby, cited at 49 C.C.C. (2d) at page 255, a decision of our Ontario Supreme Court, and R. v. Racco, No. 2, Your Honour, at 23 C.C.C. (2d) page 205, a decision of...

THE COURT: Judge Graburn.

MR. GRIFFITHS: ...Judge Graburn, Your Honour, yes. And I have one other case that I will put to you, Your Honour, although I don't know whether I have copies, but I will be pleased to send out my copy. It is R. v. Salvador, et al, 1981, 59 C.C.C. (2d) page 521.

If I can deal with those in order, R. v. Hubert, a unanimous decision that was, I believe, appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, was refused. So that can be taken to be the law of Canada. At page...

THE COURT: 289.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Page 289, halfway down: {139|140}

"There is another broad principle involved. There is an initial presumption that a juror not disqualified by the statute under which he is selected, will perform his duties in accordance with his oath."

That is the presumption that every juror is entitled to. A little further on:

"Challenge for cause is not for the purpose of finding out what kind of juror that person called is likely to be his personality, beliefs, prejudices, likes or dislikes."

Page 290, at the top:

"The challenge must never be used by counsel as a means of indoctrinating the jury panel to the proposed defence or otherwise attempting to influence the result of the eventual trial. In this regard we respectfully adopt the views of Mr. Justice Seaton in R. v. Makow, supra, page 518."

As he puts it, an accused is entitled {140|141} to an indifferent jury, not a favourable one.

Also cited with approval is the practice direction for jurors issued by Lord Chief Justice Widgery, also on page 290, three quarters of the way down [down]:

"It is contrary to established practice for jurors to be excused on more general ground such as race, religion or political beliefs or occupation."

That is what we are being asked to do, Your Honour. That is contrary to law, as I understand it.

R. v. Hubert goes on to indicate, page 291, about three quarters of the way down, that even the holding of a tentative opinion about it does not make partial a juror sworn to render a true verdict according to the evidence. R. v. Makow was again cited with approval, and I won't read the whole citation – I know Your Honour is familiar with it – but today's juror is intelligent and well able to judge a case on the merits of the courtroom, rather than merits outside the courtroom.

Your Honour, R. v. Crosby that I have given you a copy of, Mr. Justice Osler in that case was asked to exclude black people from a jury, and he indicates at page 256: {141|142}

"It seems to me that, in the absence of any notorious episode in a community of the type I have mentioned, to permit challenges of this kind to go forward simply on the ground that man is prejudiced and that black and white may frequently be prejudiced against each other is to admit to a weakness in our nation and in our community which I do not propose to acknowledge."

I would respectfully suggest that Your Honour not acknowledge a purported weakness. There has been no evidence of anything that would amount to a widespread, notorious incident in the community.

R. v. Racco, No. 2, there were questions that were suggested in that case going to the Italian heritage of the accused. "Do you have any prejudices against Italians?" was suggested: "Do you know any Italians?" "Do you fraternize or are you friends with any Italians?", etcetera. All those were disallowed by His Honour, leaving only the more general question about evaluating police officers' evidence, making no reference to race, religion, nor beliefs. {142|143}

Finally, Your Honour, in the case of R. v. Salvador, et al – and I will pass this up to you in just a moment – it is a decision of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court Appeal Division. There was a challenge for cause that was made. It was the case of drug importation. The questions that were proposed to be asked were, amongst others, Question Number 5, "Do you have any fixed notions regarding drugs?". That was the proposed question. And the judge there said, of course, everyone has fixed notions about drugs; in this day and age it is hard not to have a fixed notion about drugs; the only question is whether "You are prepared to try the case on the evidence before the Court". That's the R. v. Salvador case.

On Question No. 3, if I can return to it, then, in the second category, "Do you believe that Jews of today are God's chosen people and are especially favoured by God?" – Your Honour, it's in the Christian's Old Testament as well as in the Torah that Jews are God's chosen people, certainly in the Old Testament. Are we going to eliminate all questions as well as all Jews who may have read their Bible recently?

THE COURT: What about atheists and agnostics? {143|144}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, they are coming next, because in the article, "The West, War and Islam" – and I am not sure whether, Your Honour, I passed you up a copy of that or not, for your consideration – four groups are being attacked in that article, Your Honour, and it said that those four together form an unholy conspiracy for all that is evil in the world today. Those four groups, Your Honour, are the International Zionists, first, and they are defined not only as International Zionists, but also, about three quarters of the way down the page, under the paragraph, "International Zionists":

"Just as mistakenly, the brainwashed Christians of the West have been led to believe that vicious, greedy and militant people who call themselves 'Jews' are 'good', because the Christian Bible mentions 'Jews' as 'God's Chosen People'. Ever since 1945, the Zionists and their hirelings have used this self-serving myth as a tool for the deception of the Western Christian masses."

That is what we are getting at in this {144|145} question, Your Honour, which is totally improper. If we are going to exclude Freemasons and Jews, Your Honour, I would suggest that also mentioned in the article under, "International Secret Societies", it says:

"Freemasonry and all its cover organisations like the Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions, etc."

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't ask for the challenge of Kiwanis, Rotary and Lions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand, but it is the same rationale, Your Honour. So are communists, international bankers – anybody who works for a bank we can't have.

I suggest that the proper questions, Your Honour, if there is to be a challenge for cause – and that is for Your Honour to decide, is on questions number 7 and 8: "Have you, because of any beliefs or opinions you may have or because of what you have heard, read or seen in the media, formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused?"; and then, "Despite any beliefs or opinions, would you be able to set aside any belief or opinions and reach a verdict of guilty or not guilty solely on the evidence and the law you receive in this courtroom?" {145|146}

That is the nature of the question that was approved by Chief Associate Parker in Morgentaler.

There was no exclusion of Catholics from the Morgentaler jury, no exclusion from the Right to Life organization, no exclusion, indeed, of Hasidic Jews who believe that abortion is wrong, or anyone – quite a number of other religious groups who hold strong religious and moral beliefs. None of them are excluded ab initia, Your Honour.

That will be my submission.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you have the last word.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. First of all, Your Honour, I did not ask for any outrageous proposition such as my friend suggested of defining Jews according to the categories of Adolph Hitler or any other category. I have asked that those who consider themselves Jews be excused, not because of their status or religion, but because the very issue in the case is, did six million really die, and we are not talking about apples, we are talking about Jews. Therefore, that is a very core issue to the case and that is why I asked for that. {146|147}

THE COURT: Is that the issue?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that the only issue?

MR. CHRISTIE: It will be a major issue. Well, there's two pamphlets, So I have to deal with both of them, but surely the first one is coming first, and I have to deal with it, and I don't know how to define which is major and which is minor: and whether it is true or false is the issue and the Crown has to prove that it's false. They also have to prove that my client knew it was false, and also have to prove that my client intended to create mischief to a public interest by telling what he knew to be false. So I suggest that to determine whether the statements in that brochure are true or false is a major issue in the case. So we are not talking about apples; we are talking about did six million Jews really die.

I am asking that it is not the case such as might occur when a Jew or a gentile or any group, or a Kiwani or somebody else is charged with an offence. I am not asking that members of that group or some other group be opposed, but when an issue – and my friend did not address this – involves the very beliefs of a group, what {147|148} ever that group is, my friend should not excuse them.

My friend did not seem to notice that by agreement with the Crown, a group were disenfranchised in the case of Morgentaler, and I quote from the little bit of information I have, and that group my friend may consider worthy of being on a jury, as do I. The group is any person on a trial who is related to a police officer, or anybody employed in a law enforcement agency, or any friend of a person employed in a law enforcement agency. Well, I followed that verbatim except that I went from police officers to Jews, and from Jews to free masons, because they happen to be Jews involved in the case. I don't think police officers, as a group, are more worthy to be disenfranchised than anybody else; but if a group happens to be involved very closely in the issue of fact to be tried, yes, they are not qualified – I don't care who they are – to judge their own cause.

I go on. Why did I chose those questions for general excuse rather than general exclusion, or shall we say that I ask Your Honour to excuse them, because in the Morgentaler case the second question was, "Any person who is personally acquainted with or related to the accused, please raise your hand", and they would be excused. The {148|149} Crown agreed to that. "Is there anyone who speaks or understands English but has difficulty understanding it fully?"

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am content with that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I didn't hear you say that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, Mr. Christie.

I am content with number three and four of your exclusions.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, that is in addition to my friend's agreement, but it comes as a surprise, because it seems to imply that I seek to exclude just with the definition of Adolph Hitler, and I did not suggest that; but I am suggesting free masons because they are accused of doing wrong and should not be judging the cause, that's all.

Similarly in respect to the question in the first brochure. My friend alluded to and thought we should take judicial notice of the Holocaust. I don't know what he means, because I don't know how to define the Holocaust, but I don't think we should take judicial notice of all the facts referred to in the brochure. I hope we are going to be looking at the case with an open mind.

I am not asking to have the jury excluded {149|150} on the second category of questions because they happen to fit within the category. I don't decide that. The triers will decide that. I may argue that these people, because they answer in this way, are not qualified to be jurors, but I don't decide that. All I am asking is the right to ask a question. My friend won't even accede to that. He said I shouldn't be able to ask that question.

THE COURT: Which question is that?

MR. CHRISTIE: The second category of question, with the exception of the one he agreed to.

Now, if the triers are as sensible as he says they are, then – because I am unable to demonstrate bias – then they will be accepted and I fail; but they should be asked the question. That is the first question to be decided by Your Honour.

He says that history taught in public schools and universities establishes the Holocaust as a fact. I don't know whether to agree or disagree, but that is not that I should be asked that I shouldn't ask the question whether they have firmly fixed opinions that they can't remove on the Holocaust. I am not asking that they agree with me. I am asking, "If you have firmly fixed opinions that you cannot put aside and hear the case on the {150|151} evidence, please, Mr. or Mrs. Trier of this jury, please excuse them". And if the trier says, "Mr. Christie, these are impartial, whether you like it or not", then they be on the jury. That's all.

He says thousands of books by distinguished authors decide the case. Well, maybe they do, but that is not for the jury to decide, and I am asking for the right to get an impartial jury that hasn't made up its mind already. I am not asking that the jury decide who won the Second World War, or what the Holocaust is. That is not what I asked to be allowed to question of any prospective juror. I think we should have confidence in the impartiality of the trier, and Your Honour, if I go beyond the realm of what is beyond the issue of impartiality, Your Honour will stop me; but I don't like to start a process of inquiry with a restriction on my right to question. I am surely not going to go on too long about it, because if I do, you will stop me. So my friend can, at any stage, if I ask a question that he considers improper. All I am fighting for, now, is a right to ask eight questions.

THE COURT: Nine.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. I guess the first three are verbatim with the exception of what I consider {151|152} to be an appropriate amendment from the Morgentaler agreement of counsel to excuse police officers, law enforcement agencies or friends of such persons. Maybe that wasn't right, I don't know, but I am asking for the same privilege.

Then, when I went on to my further questions, I am sure you will concede that I followed very closely the allowed questions in Morgentaler, but this is a little more complicated than even the Morgentaler case, because we are trying, here, the issue of truth or falsity of a brochure that, rightly or wrongly, has many, many, many facts, and I am asking a question that goes a little deeper than, "Do you have any religious, moral or other beliefs relating to abortion such to acquit regardless of the law or the evidence?"

Well, abortion is not the issue alone in the case. It is a much more complicated series of questions. Now, what am I supposed to do – not be allowed to ask them whether they have fixed opinion on the pamphlet and its subject? My friend says, yes, don't allow Mr. Christie to go beyond these two questions. Well, if those two questions are the only questions, I am sure it will be very brief, but I don't know that it would be very fair, because I can't find out if there is prejudice in order {152|153} demonstrate it to a potential trier. I wish with all my heart that we could get right to the issue of a case, dispense with all this talk, and get to the issue of proving the fact of truth or falsity; but if we had ideal people who were impartial in this world who didn't have fixed opinions on these very controversial issues, I wouldn't argue the point; but unfortunately, we do have firmly fixed prejudices in our society.

My friend refers very aptly to R. v. Crosby, but he ignored a part that I think is relevant, and I will read it. Mr. Justice Osler said:

"From time to time something in the nature of a cause celebre arises in a given community which indicates that passions are running high and that hate and prejudice regarding one or other segments of the community is rampant in the community."

I don't know because I don't live here, that people are, as you could have seen, Your Honour, that we were attacked on the way to the Courthouse, every day. Maybe it happens more often than I know, but I have shown before Your Honour substantive proof that this man, rightly {153|154} or wrongly, has a focal point – and now the Crown will say it's his fault, anyway, because he says things other people don't like – the focal point of some very high passions; and I am asking that if people have those high passions because they belong to members of groups, now, what groups, you might say? "Is Mr. Christie creating an illusion of a group that doesn't have high passions? Well, Your Honour, the people who held the sign of the Jewish Defence League didn't say by anyone in authority that, "We of the Jewish community don't agree with that". Everyone is free to disassociate themselves from violence. If someone says, "The Jewish community is doing this", the German community says, "We disassociate ourselves from our action" – no such word is produced anywhere that I know of. I looked hard and everywhere for it. So does this group have high passions? Are they qualified to be objective?

Now, I don't know, because maybe passions run high here more than they do where I come from, but surely the type of attack that you can see in these video tapes is high passion that demonstrates this group that calls itself the Jewish Defence League somehow or another is attached to, we can – where associative signs are in that group – perhaps we can have a right to say that the {154|155} group appears to have an interest.

And Mr. Justice Osler says, it seems to me, that "in the absence of any notorious episode in the community of the type I have mentioned" – what type had he mentioned? The type of passions running high, and hate and prejudice and a cause celebre.

Well, I don't know many cases that have had as much media celebration as this one, for some reason. Then he says it's a little different than just trying someone who has to be black or white or yellow or whatever other colour. That is not the case here. We are trying a very difficult issue, a very complex issue. I wish it was a simple issue, but it isn't, and it is going to involve people who are going to come to us with the prejudice that exists in our community, and I feel that I should be entitled to ask about those prejudices in order that a trier of fact may say yeah or nay to our argument that they have these deep-seated beliefs. And as I say, we should trust the impartiality of these triers and allow something more extensive in the way of questions than what should be pro forma questions that my friend accedes to.

I realize it is a difficult decision. I am glad that, for once, we will have some kind of pronouncement {155|156} on these questions. I am well aware my friend is right that it seldom arises that an argument comes so early, and it does seem to, but I am sure Your Honour will agree that it is an important issue, and I am sure Your Honour will address it with the appropriate degree of concern as you have been very patient in hearing me. I appreciate it.

My friend was very kind to enable me to overcome a difficulty that I had the other day when I raised my Charter argument. My authorities were somewhere between Calgary and here, and they arrived just as I finished. My friend has allowed me, and I have prepared copies for him, and prepared copies of what is really the argument in the Keegstra case, which may be totally irrelevant. I can't see the differences. If it is, Your Honour will just disregard it; but it has many authorities that tend to deal with these issues. And I also have the National Citizens' Coalition case which upheld the Charter. For that reason, I give my friend a copy.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think you did already.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. I will leave that with Your Honour, but I will try, somehow, to incorporate that information in my argument. Thank you very much for hearing me, Your {156|157} Honour.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, am I correct in taking it that all submissions have been made that are going to be made with respect to the motion, as it were, concerning what questions may be put to a prospective juror, if any, by way of a challenge for cause, and the Charter argument that was put yesterday? Is there anything further on either one?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not from me.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I won't if he won't, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. We've agreed.

THE COURT: It is now eleven-thirty. I hope to be in a position to give either or both rulings at two-thirty. I want to give it some thought. There is a great deal that I have to read between now and then. If I am not ready, I will let you know.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour, but I forgot to file this video of the news reports from last night, if I may.

THE COURT: Thank you for reminding me. I should have thought of that myself. That will be Exhibit Y. {157|158} — EXHIBIT "Y" on voir dire: Video tape of news broadcasts.

— Discussions regarding adjournment.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 9, 1985, at twelve o'clock.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: The accused stands charged with two counts of wilfully publishing a statement or tale that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest, contrary to s.177 of the Criminal Code. That section reads as follows:

"Everyone who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence."

Counsel for the accused challenges the validity of s.177 on the grounds that its provisions are inconsistent with s.2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 2(b) states:

"Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(b) Freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication."

Counsel for the accused essentially contends the Charter guarantees an absolute right to express any view, and should not be limited to those views that are popular. Furthermore, he submits that the wording of s.177 {159|160} is vague, imprecise and confusing. In the result, the submission is that it is unclear to ordinary Canadians as to what behaviour will be found to contravene this section.

I am of the opinion that freedom of expression as guaranteed by s.2(b) of the Charter is not absolute. This is also the view expressed by Professor Clare Beckton in the article, "Freedom of Expression found in Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Commentary (1982)", edited by W.S. Tarnopolsky, as he then was, and G.A. Beaudoin, at page 76:

"At the same time, freedom of expression is not absolute. In defining its ambit, principles must be evolved to reconcile the rights of different individuals and groups to free expression. Further, the rights of freedom of expression must be reconciled with other valued individual and societal interests, such as the right to privacy, the right to a fair trial and the nation's right to security against hostile forces."

In the recent decision of R. v. Keegstra, Mr. Justice Quigley of the Alberta Queen's Bench found that {160|161} s.281.2 of the Criminal Code did not contravene s.2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 281.2 provides as follows:

"(1) Everyone who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, is guilty of

(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years; or

(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Everyone who, by communicating statements, other than in private conversation, wilfully promotes hatred against any identifiable group is guilty of

(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years; or
(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) (a) if he establishes that the state-ments communicated were true;

(b) if, in good faith, he expressed or attempted to establish by argument an opinion upon a religious subject;

(c) if the statements were relevant to any subject of public interest, the discussion of which was for the public benefit, and if on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true; or

(d) if, in good faith, he intended to point out, for the purpose of removal, matters producing or tending to produce feelings of hatred towards an identifiable group in Canada.

(4) Where a person is convicted of an offence under section 281.1 or subsection (1) or (2) of this section, anything by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed, upon such conviction, may, in addition to any other punishment imposed, be ordered by the presiding magistrate or judge to be forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which that person is convicted, for disposal as the Attorney General may direct."

"Identifiable group" has the same meaning as it has in s.281.1.

A "public place" includes any place to which the public have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied.

"Statements" includes words spoken or written or recorded electronically or electromagnetically or otherwise, and gestures, signs or other visible representations.

His Lordship concluded at page 22 with the following passage:

"In my opinion, the words 'freedom of expression' as used in Section 2(b) of the Charter does not mean an absolute freedom permitting an unbridled right of speech or expression. In particular, I hold that section 281. 2 (2) of the Criminal Code does not infringe upon the freedom of expression granted by section 2(b) of the Charter." {163|164}

In support of this conclusion His Lordship, in part, relied upon two pre Bill of Rights decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada. In Switzman v. Elbling (1957) S.C.R. 285; 7 D.L.R. (2d) 337, the Supreme Court of Canada declared Quebec's "Padlock Act", which made it illegal to propagate communism or bolshevism as ultra vires the provincial government. Mr. Justice Rand accepted that freedom of expression was limited when he said at page 305:

"For the past century and a half in both the United Kingdom and Canada, there has been a steady removal of restraints on this freedom, stopping only at perimeters where the foundation of the freedom itself is threatened. Apart from sedition, obscene writings and criminal libels, the public law leaves the literary, discursive and polemic use of language, in the broadest sense, free."

In Reference Re Alberta Legislation (1938) S.C.R. 100 at page 133, Mr. Justice Duff had the following to say:

"The right of public discussion is, of course, subject to legal restrictions; {164|165} those based upon considerations of decency and public order, and others conceived for the protection of various private and public interests with which, for example, the laws of defamation and sedition are concerned. In a word, freedom of discussion means, to quote the words of Lord Wright in James v. Commonwealth (1), 'freedom governed by law'."

In Boucher v. R. (1951) 99 C.C.C., a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada not referred to in Keegstra, Chief Justice Rinfret made the following comment on the restriction of free speech:

"I would not like to leave this appeal, however, without stating that to interpret freedom as licence is a dangerous fallacy. Obviously pure criticism, or expression of opinion, however severe or extreme, is, I might almost say, to be invited. But, as was said elsewhere, 'there must be a point where restriction on individual freedom of expression is justified and required on the grounds of {165|166} reason, or on the ground of the democratic process and the necessities of the present situation'. It should not be understood from this Court – the Court of last resort in criminal matters in Canada – that persons subject to Canadian jurisdiction 'can insist on their alleged unrestricted right to say what they please and when they please, utterly irrespective of the evil results which are often inevitable'."

In the United States, Mr. Justice Quigley observes in Keegstra, freedom of speech is not absolute. Restrictions are permitted in cases of obscenity or libelous and insulting words. As the cases note, "such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas and are of slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality." See for example: Chaplinsky v. The State of New Hampshire 315 U.S. 568 (1942); Roth v. The United States 354 U.S. 476 (1957); Beauharnais v. Illinois 343 U.S. 250 (1952).

I also note that Article 19 of the {166|167} International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which Canada has agreed to comply with, places limits on freedom of expression. In my opinion, the intended purpose of both s.177 and s.281.2 is the same. Those sections seek to prohibit the wilful promotion of ideas that are designed to cause injury or mischief to a public interest, or to promote hatred. The conclusion reached in Keegstra should, therefore, be applied in the case at bar and s.177 should be found to be valid legislation.

I am also of the view that s.177 is not vague or imprecise. The section applies only to statements that are known to be false and that cause or are likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest. A "well-intentioned citizen" could consider the criteria established by the section and determine whether his or her behaviour is unlawful. (See R. v. Reed, (1983) 8 C.C.C. (3d) 153 (B. C. Co. Ct. ); 10 C.C.C. (3d) 573 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Red Hot Video Ltd., (1984) 11 C.C.C. (3d) 389 (B.C. Co. Ct.)). If the above conclusion is found to be incorrect and s.177 is held by a Court senior to this to prima facie infringe the guaranteed fundamental right of freedom of expression, I must consider whether the denial or limit is a reasonable one, a demonstrably {167|168} clear point of view, and justified in a free and democratic society pursuant to s.1 of the Charter. That section states:

"The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society."

The burden of proof lies with the party claiming the benefit of the section. In this case, the onus is on the Crown. I refer to Southam Inc. v. The Queen, (No.1) (1983) 3 C.C.C. (3d) 515 (Ont. C.A.).

Section 1 can be broken down as follows:

(a) Is s.177 a reasonable limit?

(b) Is it prescribed by law?

(c) Can it be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society?

In Re Federal Republic of Germany And Rauca, (1983) 141 D.L.R. (3d) 412 Chief Justice Evans stated as follows at page 423:

"The phrase 'reasonable limits' in s.1 imports an objective test of validity. It is the judge who must determine {168|169} whether a 'limit' as found in legislation is reasonable or unreasonable. The question is not whether the judge agrees with the limitation but whether he considers that there is a rational basis for it – a basis that would be regarded as being within the bounds of reason by fair-minded people accustomed to the norms of a free and democratic society. This is the crucible in which the concept of reasonableness must be tested."

In determining whether legislation limiting a fundamental freedom is reasonable, the Court must consider three factors: rationality, proportionality, and comparison to other free and democratic societies.

The rational basis for the legislation is to control the mischief and injury caused by the spreading of false information. Ordinary Canadians would, I think, find the dissemination of this type of material offensive. Furthermore, recent history has shown the danger of permitting an unlimited right to freedom of expression.

The limitation imposed by s.177 of the {169|170} of the Code has a very minimal effect on the overall right of freedom of expression. It limits only those expressions that are wilfully published by a person who knows they are false, and that are statements that cause or are likely to cause injury. I am aware that no evidence was led by the Crown of similar legislation in other jurisdictions of free and democratic societies. However, as the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of Re Southam Inc. noted:

"...the court must come back, ultimately, having derived whatever assistance can be secured from the experience of other free and democratic societies, to the facts of our own free and democratic society to answer the question whether the limit imposed on the particular guaranteed freedom has been demonstrably justified as a reasonable one, having balanced the perceived purpose and objectives of the limiting legislation, in light of all relevant considerations, against the freedom or right allegedly infringed."

Returning to the situation in Canada, I {170|171} would conclude that the limitation imposed by s.177 on freedom of expression as guaranteed by s.2(b) of the Charter is reasonable, is prescribed by law, and is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

This motion is, therefore, dismissed.

I turn now to my ruling with respect to the right of this accused to challenge for cause.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: The indictment charges Mr. Zundel with two criminal offences pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. The indictment reads as follows:

"1. ERNST ZUNDEL stands charged that he, during the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that he knows is false, namely the article, 'The West, War, and Islam', and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code.

2. ERNST ZUNDEL stands further charged that he, in or about the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely 'Did Six Million Really Die?', that he knows is false and that is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code."

After arraignment, before plea, and in the absence of any member of the jury panel at large, defence {172|173} counsel has requested that I permit prospective jurors yet to be called to be challenged for cause. He seeks leave to ask each prospective juror the following questions:

1. Can you consider and will your mind allow consideration of the question of whether there were gas chambers in Germany for the extermination of Jews? Yes or no.
2. Can you impartially consider the question of gas chambers and the Holocaust and remove from your mind the massive publicity of it to decide the case on the evidence put before you in this Court and only on such evidence? Yes or no.
3. Do you believe that the Jews of today are God's chosen people or especially favoured by God? Yes or no.
4. Do you believe the Holocaust happened as depicted by the media, and would you be able to remove that idea from your mind and consider the question solely on the evidence presented in {173|174} court? Yes or no.
5. Do you have any moral, religious or other beliefs relating to Jews or the Holocaust such that you would convict or acquit regardless of the law or evidence? Yes or no.
6. Do you have any moral, religious or other beliefs relating to Freemasons such that you would convict or acquit regardless of the law or evidence? Yes or no.
7. Have you, because of religious or moral beliefs, or because of what you have heard, read or seen in the media, formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused? Yes or no.
8. Despite any beliefs or opinions, would you be able to set aside those beliefs or opinions and reach a verdict of guilty or not guilty solely on the evidence and the law you receive in this courtroom? Yes or no. {174|175}

9. Do you have any abiding prejudices against German people?

That last question, I might state, came to me during the course of argument. The words, "Yes or No" were not put to me by conscious decision. I deliberately put them there now.

In addition to the nine questions I have just set out, counsel for the accused has requested, in opening remarks to the jury panel at large before the jury panel is chosen, that I excuse anyone from the jury panel who:

- (1) is a Jewish person or is employed by Jewish persons or is a close relative of a Jewish person;
- (2) is a Freemason or is employed by a Freemason or is a close friend or relative of a Freemason;
- (3) is personally acquainted with the accused in such a way that he favours or dislikes the accused so much that he would be unable, through prejudice, to look impartially upon the accused or judge his guilt or {175|176} innocence solely on the evidence in court,
- (4) speaks or understands some English, but has difficulty understanding it fully.

As I understand it, Crown counsel and defence counsel may well have come close to agreement that subject to my order, questions 7 and 8 might be permitted, but they have been totally unable to agree with respect to the balance of the questions that I have just read.

In support of his motion Mr. Christie, with leave of the Court, proposed to call viva voce evidence in the person of the accused for the purpose of laying evidentiary groundwork designed to support his request that all these questions be granted by the Court. Mr. Zundel testified and was cross-examined. Twenty-three or more exhibits on the motion and so marked are received by the Court. In the main, those exhibits consisted of photostatic copies of print media publications which appeared in daily newspapers of wide circulation. Those newspapers include the Toronto Sun, the Toronto Star, and the Globe and Mail, all in their various editions. In addition, I saw, through video tape, a series {176|177} of television news broadcasts emanating from such stations as CFTO, CBC, Global, Channel 11, and others, all having a wide viewing audience within the southern Ontario region. I viewed various news reports concerning this accused and his clash, sometimes very often physically, with members of what is said to have been the Jewish Defence League. Those scenes depict physical violence being perpetrated upon and by the accused on others with much profanity involved. In these confrontations the accused and his followers wore various colours of hard hats and bullet-proof vests. Members of what is said to be the Jewish Defence League carried canes, placards and the like. The publications commenced, as I have heard, in 1981 and 1982 and continued with periodic regularity up to and including the commencement of this trial.

It is not difficult to observe on the tapes that Mr. Zundel and his followers and those adherents to the Jewish Defence League have not been strangers to one another for quite some time. Each group accepts and understands that when they intentionally confront one another, physical violence will be the expected result. On almost each occasion of violent confrontation I viewed on tape the accused wore the distinguishing blue hat of the group {177|178} commander. His subordinates, wearing yellow hats, were all depicted in disciplined tactical wedge formation making the approach to the courthouse. Their opponents, commanded and led with equal discipline, sometimes armed with thick wooden clubs masquerading as walking sticks, and usually with stout wooden shafts supporting paper placards, shouted slogans in unison, demonstrated with their placards, and then proceeded to attack the accused and his followers.

The tapes disclosed that the accused always appeared calm, smiling, well-dressed and coherent. He has, on the tapes, time for the appropriate quotation in clear language for the press. Near the end of each confrontation he gives to the cameras what anyone over the age of forty-five knows to be the authentic Nazi salute. In yet another exhibit the accused has created composite films with sound of several occasions when the Jewish Defence League has been picketing his house after demonstrating in a nearby park employing placards, threatening the accused within the home with physical gestures of violence and verbal profanity.

Cross-examination disclosed that on at least one of those occasions the films did not disclose the existence of provocative banners slung against the outside walls of Mr. Zundel's home. Those banners, I heard, displayed for {178|179} all to see the written message that the Holocaust was a hoax and six million Jews did not die in it, or words to that effect.

Mr. Zundel is depicted in yet other tapes showing members of the media the extent of his publishing activities, the publications he has produced from the printing machinery he employs for that purpose.

This evidence was led by the defence in support of the position that no person of Jewish persuasion should be permitted to sit as a juror in this trial. With surprising candor, Mr. Christie submits that no person should be permitted to sit in judgment of his own case. With equally surprising candor, he attempts to employ that principle in this trial by equating persons of a certain religious persuasion, and being members of a certain group, sitting in judgment of "their own case". With that proposition I strongly disagree. He carries that submission even further by stating that if the issue here had concerned whether or not six million Roman Catholics or Protestants and not Jews perished in a certain period of history as a result of a certain alleged Holocaust, that present members of either group should not be selected as jurors to sit in judgment had the subject matter concerned them as members of that group. Mr. Christie further submits that the evidence contained in all {179|180} of these exhibits discloses wide dissemination of the material contained therein. These publications are repetitive and, in the opinion of the accused, are often erroneous, one-sided and unfair. These are but some of the submissions made by Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused.

Counsel for the Crown takes the position that, following the principles set out in the case of R. v. Hubbert, 29 C.C.C. (2d) 279, all of the questions, with the possible exceptions of question numbers 8 and 9, are inappropriate and should not be permitted.

Without question, much of the evidence discloses that there has been a heavy, persistent and recent dissemination of the subject matter of this case to the public at large. Exhibit "H", for example, is an article quoting the Attorney General of Ontario being apparently pressed by a Jewish organization to prosecute the accused. In the same article there is reference to the Klu Klux Klan and mention of the accused by name as being a member of a Toronto based organization which appears to be called Concerned Parents of German Descent. Exhibits "I" and "K" appear to be advertisements promoting an anti-Nazi rally to be held in a park in Toronto on the 31st of May, 1981.

I have noted in Mr. Zundel's evidence {180|181} that, in his view, his attempts to rectify what he termed deliberate errors and misrepresentations made by members of the media in what they wrote and said, and to whom he granted interviews, have failed. The accused has sworn that he was erroneously referred to in Exhibit "O" as "a Hitler lover", and under a mailing ban by the Canada Post Office, both of which, he said, were untrue. Exhibit "P" is a tape created by the accused wherein harassing and profane telephone calls are made to his home. Those calls threaten him with death, mutilation, castration and the like.

Mr. Christie submits that the accused has been tried, in effect, by the media. Therefore, without selective elimination from the jury of those citizens of Jewish background, or persons who he calls Freemasons who are referred to in an exhibit as being "assassins" who support Zionism, the accused will not be accorded a totally impartial jury to try this case.

As I observed recently in the case of R. v. Kenneth Brian Deyarmond in making a similar ruling on the same subject with which I now deal, I do not, for one moment, believe that prospective jurors generally do not read and recall certain strongly publicized events involving notoriety and controversy. It would be quite impossible to {181|182} select twelve jurors about whom one could be sure that none had heard about these charges against Mr. Zundel. That, in my respectful view, however, does not necessarily make a juror unfit to serve. Jurors are not stupid. They read newspapers. They watch television. They speak with their friends. Rarely, if ever, have jurors, over the past many decades, failed to dispense criminal justice with an even hand between the State and the accused. That is so when the cases they have decided contained elements of far greater notoriety and controversy than does the case at bar. Mr. Justice Osler, in the case of R. v. Crosby, 49 C.C.C. (2d) 255, had the following, in part, to say on this subject:

"I think it is a matter of common knowledge that throughout society there are many people who hold particular prejudiced views about other segments of society. These segments may be of racial, religious, or some other composition and in the present decade or even throughout the past 25 years it has become obvious that the population of our country is composed of persons of very many racial origins and is no {182|183} longer to any degree homogeneous."

In my respectful view, what I have seen and heard of the evidence in the case at bar does not lead me to conclude that, in our society, generally speaking, at present, passions are running high, and that hate and prejudice regarding one or more particular segments of the community is rampant. There is not present the "notorious episode" in the community as mentioned by Mr. Justice Osler in the Crosby case. Were I to permit Mr. Christie to put any of these questions to any prospective juror I would, in effect, be disenfranchising a substantial segment of our society in this community from the right and duty to sit as a juror in a court of criminal jurisdiction in a democratic country. I have no intention of doing that. That is so because the evidence I heard, along with the submissions, totally fails to disclose any valid reason for my doing so. Whether or not these stories and news flashes emanating from the media are true or false, or whether they were Mr. Zundel's deliberate creation, is not the point.

In exercising my judicial discretion and refusing the defence permission to ask any of these questions I bear in mind the principles of R. v. Hubbert where, at page 289 and thereafter, the following quotations are made by {183|184} the Ontario Court of Appeal:

"Some broad principles respecting criminal trials by jury must be reconciled in dealing with challenge for cause. The elemental principle is that every accused person is entitled to a fair trial. This must include the empanelling of a jury that will be impartial between the state and the accused. As with all trials, justice must be seen to be done, and even the appearance of partiality is to be avoided."

There is another broad principle involved. There is an initial presumption that a juror not disqualified by the statute under which he is selected, will perform his duties in accordance with his oath. (We recognize the competence and importance of female jurors. We will use 'he' and 'his' throughout these reasons for convenience only.)

It is important to consider the purpose of challenge for cause. It is to eliminate {184|185} from the jury as sworn those persons who come within the five categories listed in 5.567(1) of the Code, and save as to a juror whose name is not on the panel, to require that the truth of the challenge be decided by two triers chosen from the prospective juror's peers.

Challenge for cause is not for the purpose of finding out what kind of juror that person called is likely to be – his personality, beliefs, prejudices, likes or dislikes.

The challenge must never be used by counsel as a means of indoctrinating the jury panel to the proposed defence or otherwise attempting to influence the result of the eventual trial. In this regard we respectfully adopt the views of Mr. Justice Seaton in R. v. Makow, supra, page 518. The challenge for cause should not be used deliberately as an aid to counsel in deciding whether to exercise the right {185|186} of peremptory challenge, although indirectly a proper challenge and the trial of its truth may have that effect. The next principle requiring enunciation is that the trial Judge has a wide discretion and must be firmly in control of the challenge process. We believe that from time to time, and in various parts of the Province, the process has been abused by counsel. The influence of American practices in some States has crossed the border – and sometimes not in the actual form of the prescribed practices, but as they are thought to be by Canadian imitators.”

I conclude with the observation that the evidence I have heard and read shows that the accused, perhaps through his own deliberate acts, has attracted much publicity and notoriety upon himself. His positions on sensitive, emotion-provoking subjects certainly achieved that result, in my view. That alone, however, should not compel the exercise of my judicial discretion to permit any of these questions to be put. Each and every proposed question, I find, offends {186|187} the principles set out in R. v. Hubbert. There is no evidentiary connection between the attracted notoriety and the reasonable prospect that any prospective juror, regardless of his or her racial origin or religious belief, or for any other reason, would be unable to impartially return a verdict in this trial based solely and only upon the evidence led thereat.

Associate Chief Justice Parker permitted a challenge for cause in a recent trial involving Dr. Morgentaler. I observe, however, that the subject of abortion being dealt with in that case can hardly be compared with an event of history said to have occurred in Europe forty years ago, and which constitutes a subject in the case at bar.

Mr. Zundel elected trial by jury. No one forced him to elect that mode of trial. He has an absolute right to be tried by a jury of his peers. Having so elected, the public notoriety he has attracted to himself does not, of itself, in the absence of anything further, entitle him to use any of these questions to challenge his prospective jurors for cause in order to tailor his own jury to suit him. The application is dismissed. I fully intend to make what I consider to be appropriate comments concerning {187|188} the duty of the prospective jurors when the jury panel at large is assembled in this courtroom.

That will occur at two o'clock.

— Submissions by Mr. Griffiths concerning calling of witnesses starting on the 10th instead of the 9th.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not taking a position with respect to what my friend has to say. It is up to him what he does with his case, but I was going to ask Your Honour to make clear that in your remark made in the course of your deliberations on the Charter, or your reasons on the Charter, you were not specifically making any reference to the facts of this case, although I did notice at one point you said something that seemed to indicate your view on that matter.

THE COURT: I did not give my personal view. I gave an assessment of the evidence in connection with that particular element of the ruling which required me to do so as to the view that might be taken by an ordinary Canadian.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. But I was asking Your Honour to, perhaps, clarify for the benefit of anyone {188|189} who will be reporting this to the public, that you weren't making comments on the facts of the case so much as on the section of the Code itself.

THE COURT: Precisely. I certainly was not – it is not within my province to make personal comments, as a judge, on any of the evidence that I have heard in connection with this motion. It was merely fulfilling what I consider to be an obligation on my part in connection with making a ruling of law.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you. I don't think I have anything else, Your Honour, to say.

THE COURT: Thank you. Is two o'clock convenient, gentlemen?

— Discussion concerning adjournment.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to 2:15 p.m.

— Upon the hearing resuming.

— The jury panel at large enters. 2:15 p.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Good afternoon, Your Honour. The matter, Your Honour, of Ernst Zundel. {189|190}

THE COURT: You are prepared to proceed?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Prepared to proceed, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I appear for the accused.

THE COURT: Thank you. Arraign the accused, please.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: The accused please stand.

ERNST ZUNDEL, you stand charged that you did, during the year 1981 at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that you know is false, namely, the article, "The West, War and Islam", and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest and social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code.

(2) You stand further charged that you did, in or about the year 1981 at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely, "Did Six Million Really Die?", that you know is false and that is likely to cause {190|191} mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code.

ERNST ZUNDEL, upon this indictment, how do you plead, guilty or not guilty to count one?

THE ACCUSED: Not guilty.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Count two?

THE ACCUSED: Not guilty.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Members of the jury panel at large, in a few moments twelve of your number will be selected to become judges of the facts in this case. The process by which you will be selected is very old. The names of each one of you are contained on a card; the card resides in the drum which you see at the right-hand side of our Clerk. When the process begins, at random, names from the drum will be selected and then, thereafter begins the interesting and age-old process by which a jury in a criminal case is selected.

The process through which you are all now passing, and through which twelve of your number will pass, to a much greater degree, is a very important process in a democratic country such as this. Everyone of our Courts from coast to coast in this country have the sole object of {191|192} ensuring that in every criminal trial fairness and the appearance of fairness prevails throughout a trial.

It is, therefore, very important that the twelve who are selected realize what a very important process it is. Long after this case and every other case has been decided it is absolutely vital that to the public at large a fair trial has been held.

When I use the words "fair trial", I mean fairness to the accused person who is on trial, and I also mean fairness to the community represented by the Crown. When I say to you that twelve of your number will be selected as judges, I mean precisely that – the twelve who are selected will be the judges of all of the facts in this case. When I refer to facts, I mean evidence. When I say the word "evidence", I mean the testimony that flows from the mouth of each witness as that witness testifies in that witness stand.

The function of a Judge is multi-fold. A Judge must come to every case totally free of any prejudice in favour of or against the accused who is on trial. The juror must come to the case totally ignorant of all of the facts that will unfold through evidence as the trial proceeds. The juror must come to the case totally free of any prejudice {192|193} in favour of or against the Crown.

A criminal trial is, in essence, the unarmed combat and contest between Crown and defence. It must be conducted fairly and it must be conducted according to the law, and only that. Each juror must be prepared to find a verdict solely and only upon the evidence that is led throughout the trial and nothing else.

With those characteristics in mind, I can say to you that over the last hundred years or more in this country fair trials have almost invariably occurred. The juror must be in such a position as to understand every word that is said in the evidence. That, essentially, means that because this trial will be conducted in the English language, that the person who must be the judge of the facts – namely, each juror – must understand and be fluent in that language.

In addition to that, the juror must be in a position to see each witness as that witness testifies. The object is to observe the witness and to thereafter be able to measure or weigh the evidence that each witness gives. That simply means that each juror must have normal good eyesight in order to make that visual assessment.

A juror must hear every word that falls {193|194} from the lips of every witness. In the result, the hearing of every juror must be normal and adequate to the task. If, therefore, amongst those of you who are present there is a problem with respect to the fluency in the English language, a problem with respect to one's hearing or eye-sight, in order to ensure a fair trial would you please so indicate that disability, if any, if, as and when your name is called and you come to the book to be sworn.

I am told that this trial will last something close to three weeks. I am well aware of the fact that at no little financial and time inconvenience you find yourselves listening to these words in this courtroom whereas you have, each of you, other serious and pressing responsibilities elsewhere. In the event that, for reasons which you will be asked to explain, find yourselves unable, by reason of very serious problems – and I emphasize the words very serious problems – unable to serve your country for that extra week, then you will please indicate if, as and when your name is called from the card that is selected at random and you come to the book to be sworn.

If there is any prospective juror here who is a member of, or who is related by blood or marriage to anyone else who is a member of any group or organization {194|195} which uses violent confrontation in public places in support of or in opposition to the ideas of other groups, and if by the reason of that membership or your relationship you feel that you would be unable to judge and act as a judge or as a juror who, as a judge, impartially, and solely and only upon the evidence that you have heard, then you will please so indicate in the same manner as I have already indicated.

If there is anything that you have heard, seen or read about this case that would prevent you from impartially deciding a verdict solely and only upon the evidence led in this courtroom, then of course you don't come to the case free of preconceived notions or prejudice, and you will please so indicate.

Notwithstanding anything I have said, if there is any member of your number who is a prospective juror whose present views concerning the guilt or innocence of this accused are so strongly fixed that an impartial assessment of the evidence heard only in this trial would be impossible or difficult, if the answer to this question or to any of the other questions I have posed is yes, if your name is called please indicate that when you come to the book to be sworn.

This case has attracted a good deal of publicity. I am sure that you will each bear that in mind, {195|196} and I am sure that you will do your duty according to the oath that you will take, notwithstanding anything that you may have seen, heard or read in this case.

I am equally confident that the jury selected in this case will act in a fair, unbiased manner and will decide this case solely and only upon the evidence that is led throughout the whole of the trial from the beginning to the end.

— Whereupon 12 members are selected from the jury panel at large and duly sworn.

— The jury panel at large retires. 3:30 p.m.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE: Members of the jury, look upon the accused. He stands indicted by the name of ERNST ZÜNDEL, and that he did, during the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that he knows is false, namely, the article, "The West, War and Islam", and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to {196|197} the Criminal Code.

(2) He stands further charged that he did, in or about the year 1981 at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely, "Did Six Million Really Die?" that he knows is false, and that is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code. Upon this indictment he has been arraigned. Upon his arraignment he has pleaded not guilty, and for his trial he has put himself upon his country, which country you are. Your charge, therefore, is to enquire whether he be guilty or not guilty, and hearken to the evidence.

OPENING INSTRUCTIONS TO THE JURY

THE COURT: Members of the jury, as I indicated when you were sitting elsewhere, twelve of you have been selected to be the judges of the facts in this trial. At the risk of repetition, I should say that when I refer to the word "facts", I mean solely and only the evidence that you will hear from that witness stand, from witnesses who have been sworn under oath to tell the truth.

Facts in evidence can also be taken from exhibits which, when sworn to under oath, may be admitted at this trial. I repeat again that as judges, you are precisely that.

There are thirteen judges in this courtroom – twelve of you and myself. Our functions, however, are very different. My function is to preside over the trial, to make any rulings of law that may arise during the course of the trial, and to supervise the trial generally speaking to ensure that a fair trial and the appearance of a fair trial is had.

Your function is to listen to all of the evidence, to hear the addresses of counsel when they come, and then after that to hear my charge as to the law. That is so because you must accept the law as I give it to you. Your duty is to then retire and consider a verdict. {198|199}

Judges quickly learn that the first virtue is patience. You will be doing a good deal of listening. You will be doing a good deal of watching.

All criminal cases are akin to a jigsaw puzzle. The last piece does not fall into place until near the end of any trial; the picture does not become clear until such time as the last piece does fall into place. It is, therefore, absolutely vital that you keep an open mind and come to no conclusions as to the guilt or the non-guilt of the accused until such time as you have heard every word of evidence that you are going to hear, and until such time as you have heard the addresses of each counsel and my charge. Only then will you be in a position to retire and, according to the oath that you have just taken, consider a verdict according to the evidence, and the evidence only, that you have heard.

That witness stand is located halfway between where I sit and where you sit. It is put there for a purpose. The purpose is to permit you the best view of each witness as that witness testifies. It is vital that you have that view so that you can see what the witness says as he or she is saying it, hear what the witness says, and be in a position to weigh the evidence and accord it some {199|200} weight, full weight or no weight at all.

That is the method by which you go about your duties. You are finders of fact. Nothing becomes a fact until each one of you, as jurors, makes it so.

The accused on trial is represented by Mr. Christie. Mr. Christie sits at the counsel table to my right. His duties, as an Officer of this Court, consist, generally speaking, in part if not in whole, in representing his client. He ensures that the accused has a fair trial according to law.

In practical terms that essentially means that when Mr. Griffiths, for the Crown, who sits at the same counsel table opposite me, calls his witness to the witness stand to testify, Mr. Griffiths will ask some questions. They will give answers. Their answers constitute evidence. It is from that evidence that you may or not, as you shall each decide, draw facts. It is the facts that you find that are employed by you in reaching your verdict.

Mr. Griffiths will examine each one of his witnesses, as we say, in chief. When he has concluded, Mr. Christie, if he wishes to do so, has the absolute right to cross-examine each witness. His purpose will be to test {200|201} the credibility of each witness in order to permit you a better opportunity to decide what weight, if any, you will accord the evidence of each of the Crown witnesses.

When Mr. Griffiths, for the Crown, has called all of the evidence that he intends to call on behalf of the crown, the defence, if it chooses to do so, may or may not lead evidence of its own. If it chooses to do so, and it is within the absolute right of the defence to make that decision, then those witnesses will be examined in-chief by the defence. Mr. Griffiths will have the opportunity of examining each of those witnesses for the same purpose.

When all of the evidence that you are going to hear throughout the whole of the trial has been led, each counsel, in turn, will then sum up by addressing you, as jurors, with regard to each side of the case. When that has been concluded, I will then deliver to you my charge as to the law. As I say, you must accept the law as I give it to you. Rest assured that if I am wrong in what I say to you about the law, or if I am wrong in failing to say something to you that I should have said, I can be quickly corrected elsewhere.

It will only be at that point that you will have all of the evidence and the whole picture, and you {201|202} will then be in a position, then and only then, to render a proper verdict according to the law.

As I say, fairness is the hallmark of any trial. The appearance of fairness is equally important. You will be doing a good deal of listening, as I say, and a good deal of sitting. So that you can govern your personal lives around this trial, we will commence at ten o'clock in the morning. There will be a break at about eleven thirty. Coffee, tea, soft drinks will be served to you as jurors. We will break at one o'clock. We will resume at either two fifteen or two thirty, depending on circumstances, and we will rise at four thirty or perhaps a little later, again depending on how the evidence is going.

Those hours may sound to you like very soft hours. Members of the jury, I can only reply by saying this: Wait until the end of the first day when you have been sitting all day listening and concentrating, and I think you will find that those hours are quite sufficient for one day.

You will become acquainted with your jury room quickly enough. You should know that it is not luxuriously appointed. I will not keep you in that jury room for any longer than I can possibly avoid. {202|203}

You should also know that during the course of any criminal trial jurors are asked to leave the courtroom and to go to the jury room so that counsel and I can decide legal problems in your absence.

Those legal problems usually concern the admissibility or the non-admissibility of evidence. They could, however, concern anything. Rest assured that you will hear every line and every word of evidence that you are entitled by law to hear. Rest also assured that you will not hear one line of evidence that you are not entitled to hear. That is the reason that you are asked to leave. Please do not feel offended if that is the case. That is the way our trials are conducted in this system.

If, during the course of this trial, within this building and elsewhere, you pass counsel, witnesses, the accused or anybody else and they do not speak to you, do not feel offended. Please understand that you should not speak to them under any conditions. They are not being impolite and they are not ignoring you. It is part of their duty not to speak to you. If anyone should try to speak to you in this building or anywhere else concerning this case, even {203|204} remotely concerning this case, my order to you is to report it forthwith at the earliest opportunity to the Deputy, who will report it to me. You can understand that I will deal with it very, very quickly.

Nobody is to speak to you about this case. It is a mistake for you to discuss it very much, if at all, among yourselves – although I do not say that you cannot do that because we are all human – before you retire to consider your verdict; but it is improper to discuss it with anybody else before it is over. Indeed, that is the way we function; that is the method by which we strive to maintain fairness and its appearance in the trial.

Again, when I say "fairness", I mean fairness to the accused who is on trial, and fairness to the community represented by Crown counsel.

I do not believe that there is anything further that I have to say to you except that, in due course, Mr. Griffiths, counsel for the Crown, is permitted to give you an opening address. He will be the first to advise you that what he says to you is not evidence and should not be taken by you as evidence. His purpose is to let you know what the Crown's case is all about and how he hopes to prove it. That is permitted so that you can get a better notion {204|205} as to what the case is all about originally, so that you will be better able to follow the evidence.

You are not given notebooks or expected to take notes. The reason is simple. As judges of the facts your duties are far better spent assessing the evidence that you hear. You will see counsel taking copious notes. You will see me doing the same thing. We have a reporter who takes down every word that is uttered in this courtroom during the course of the trial. You can, therefore, see that there is no lack of note-taking, or information at your disposal for you to resort to that when the time comes, if you wish to do so.

I have been advised by counsel prior to your arrival that due to other matters no evidence is to be called today. I don't know that you will be overly disappointed about that. I have one or two matters from a month or two ago that I must attend to early tomorrow morning. I am, therefore, going to ask you to become slightly acquainted with the interior portions of your jury room so that you will know where to go.

You are excused now and you are free to go until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. I would be grateful if you will be ready to go at all times at ten o'clock, {205|206} even if you become somewhat frustrated when you are not called at ten o'clock. I will explain reasons as we go along. However, if you could be there at five to ten, that will be fine.

Thank you. please do not discuss the case, keep an open mind, have a good evening.

— The jury retires. 3:50 p.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, just one preliminary matter that should be discussed in the absence of the jury – and Mr. Christie and I have discussed this before, but I thought we should raise it with you. I do know what Your Honour's general policy or position is on the jury taking notes, and Your Honour just expressed it to the jury.

I am going to be requesting, Your Honour, that the jury be permitted, not to take notes, but that each one of the twelve jurors be permitted to have one each of the two articles that are under attack by the prosecution.

THE COURT: To take home or to be handed in at the end of each day? {206|207}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am suggesting it be handed in at the end of each day. I will be going into specifics – I believe Mr. Christie will be as well during the course of the cross-examination – on the matters that are raised in this pamphlet. Some of the wording is thick, and I think it may be of assistance if the jury can read along and look at that section that I am asking questions about on the two pamphlets.

So I am going to be requesting that they each be permitted to have a copy to be handed out each morning and handed in each afternoon.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I indicated earlier that I would provide the copies, and my intention was that they would thereby obviate the necessity of doing what my friend suggested he might have to do in having his witness, Mr. Williams, read the book to them at the beginning of the case.

I think it is a good idea for them to read it to themselves.

THE COURT: That is a merciful position that you both take.

MR. CHRISTIE: I hope it is practical {207|208} and sensible. It is also my position that if they want to take it home and read it, that should be open to them, because they are not going to get much chance to read it when they are here, provided that they were told, as of course they have already been told, not to consider evidence from outside the courtroom. I think they can be trusted to read it at their leisure.

Now, that is my position. It may be —

THE COURT: It makes sense, but I will not permit it for this reason, that knowing a little bit about human nature —

MR. CHRISTIE: They will want to check the source.

THE COURT: It will become a subject of comment around the kitchen table. That will not be permitted.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am worried about independent research, also, by members of the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Those are also two independent concerns. I certainly defer to what Your Honour feels in regard to the matter. They were attempted practical solutions to the problem.

THE COURT: I appreciate your motives, {208|209} and I would like to say — I would like to agree with you, but I would be most imprudent if I did that.

MR. CHRISTIE: The other thing, Your Honour, I wanted to raise — now, I intend, as I indicated from the outset, to admit the publication of this, that is, “Did Six Million Really Die?” and to admit that the accused authored, “The West, War and Islam” and that he sent it to a specific recipient on a number of occasions. I hoped, thereby, to obviate a necessity to avoid the issue.

My friend indicated he wished to lead evidence in a voir dire to prove another aspect, and I want only to ask my friend, if it is polite, convenient and appropriate —

MR. GRIFFITHS: All of those things. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: — if he would be so kind if he would articulate what he wishes to prove by the voir dire, because I hope, if my client's middle names are Christof Friedrich, I can admit that, too, and may obviate the necessity for the voir dire as a while. Then we will just get to the evidence.

Now, that's why I asked the question. If my friend will be so kind as to put on record his objections {209|210} — if I need time to consider it overnight, I will do so and advise you by morning, or perhaps I can advise now, if it is simple enough, and then we start with the evidence tomorrow.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie. I think, Your Honour, Mr. Christie and I obviously have been talking about this and exchanging notes back and forth about this particular issue, and I think that, really, we can come to an agreement as to an agreed statement of facts for part of this matter.

I would be content with an admission by Mr. Christie, on behalf of Mr. Zundel, with respect to count one that Mr. Zundel was the author of a pamphlet, “The West, War and Islam”, that the article was distributed some time in the year 1981, which is the date set out in the indictment. With respect to the article, “Did Six Million Really Die? Truth At Last Exposed”, which is the subject of count number two, I will be content with an admission that Mr. Zundel published the article and wrote a foreword and postscript to that article and distributed it in Canada in 1983.

Finally, Your Honour, that the name, Christof Friedrich, the two middle names, are pen names occasionally used by Mr. Zundel, which I believe was admitted {210|211} in the course of the voir dire.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can agree with everything my friend said with this qualification. “The West, War and Islam”, when he said distributed, he can add the words, “to certain specific people”, because that is my instructions, and then the issue becomes, does that constitute —

THE COURT: Publication.

MR. CHRISTIE: — publication.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am satisfied.

THE COURT: So you gentlemen are ad idem on the matters that Mr. Griffiths has discussed? Those are admissions of fact; if that is the case, I presume the voir dire fades into —

MR. GRIFFITHS: There will be no voir dire.

THE COURT: Yes. Anything else?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't think that there is anything else that I can expedite. I would be able now to provide, if you wish, unmarked true copies of the two articles and file them as exhibits. Well, perhaps —

THE COURT: You had better wait until the jury gets back and do that at that time. {211|212}

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would be, if I may, Mr. Christie, through my first witness, be putting in exhibits of one copy of each, and at that point, perhaps —

THE COURT: Well, you gentlemen can work out whatever the format is. Is there anything else? I have a matter, but I do not want to interrupt your train of thought.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. That was the principal matter that I wished to address.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, is there anything from you?

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

MR. GRIFFITHS: There will be other matters.

THE COURT: I am sure there will. I am not anticipating anything specifically, but I thought that you gentlemen might be kind enough to permit me to make a slight anticipation by looking at the 41st Edition of Archibald, page 4-262, and the second edition of MacWilliams, page 637. The subject is “Judicial Notice”

MR. CHRISTIE: When would Your Honour like to deal with that matter? {212|213}

THE COURT: At your convenience. I don't know that it is going to become a matter. All I am asking you to do now is to have a look to see what, if anything, is worthwhile looking at there. That is all I am saying on that subject.

MR. CHRISTIE: That, I am sure, will be a hotly debated and strenuously argued item, if it arises.

THE COURT: I don't disagree with that at all.

Thank you, gentlemen.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 10, 1985.

— VOLUME II follows — {213|214}

VOLUME II

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I spoke with Mr. Christie, Your Honour, before you came in, and I think just before we have the jury, there is something that should be discussed in the absence of the jury, and rather than doing it after I address them, it is better to do it now.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend gives me the opportunity, and I appreciate the chance, to say that my friend proposes, I understand, through his witness, Mr. Williams, seated to his left, to introduce books into evidence.

Now, this is the beginning of a procedure which I would be very anxious to be circumspect about, the procedure being the introduction of books to prove, possibly, two different things. Books as original evidence of what is printed in the books I cannot object to, but books as evidence to the truth of their contents I would object to.

My friend advises me that he intends to introduce what I can see from here to be three books under the Criminal Code —

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is not going in.

MR. CHRISTIE: I hope we won't be {214|215} proceeding to prove things in a way of introducing books. Now, I am prepared to meet that if it occurs, because I suspected it might be something the Crown might want to do because I don't know what evidence of so many of these issues can be produced other than books; but it is a very serious objection to this whole matter.

I can accept the proposition that books can be introduced as original evidence of what is in the book. For example, my friend is going to say the article in question, “Did Six Million Really Die?” refers to a page and it does so incorrectly, erroneously, or out of context. I don't argue with that; it is quite admissible; but if he is trying to, at any stage, produce books to prove the truth of the statements in books, then I think we embark on an area of law that would be, indeed, novel, not to make a pun; but it would be original, perhaps. And I would object to it because — I am prepared to bring all sorts of books of my own, but we are going to get into a battle of books which, if need be, we will, but I would object to it.

And so I hope that my remarks are of some assistance to clarify my position, and I am sure my friend anticipated, I hope that he will confirm, that he is introducing these only for the purposes of proving what {215|216} is in the book, not to prove its truth.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I quite agree with Mr. Christie, Your Honour. I have no intention of pitting my library against his library. There are a number of books, and it's the Crown's position, as Mr. Christie has fairly pointed out, that are quoted out of context, statements attributed to authors that are later disavowed by the author in the same source.

My purpose here, Your Honour, is to prove that one of two articles – my purpose in both articles, but this particular one, is false. My purpose is not to re-fight World War II. My purpose is to focus on this article which cites certain sources of information, and I propose to examine some, by no means all, of those sources and see whether they are quoted in context in that article.

I have made photocopies, Your Honour, of pages that I am going to be looking at. I am – it is my intention to put in the photocopy, to have the book here in court because that is the best evidence – and surely my friend can object and say there are other parts in the book that weren't put in. The book is here. I don't mean to introduce the book as an exhibit. I can't do that; but only {216|217} photocopies of certain pages that refute material in the Crown's position that is contained within the article cited from those same books, if I have made that clear.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, that having been said, I want to make clear that my position will be that, in respect to proof of the reasonableness of a belief such as my client has, that if we can prove the truth of the statements in the book from other sources, or sources that give justification for reasonable belief and its truth, I will be introducing those books to prove not the truth of the contents of the books, but the reasonable basis for my client's belief.

THE COURT: You mean reasonableness of the belief, or honesty of the belief?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would have to take the view that we will eventually, or the jury will ultimately consider whether a belief is honestly held. I think that means whether he holds it and, secondly, to do so they will have to consider whether it's a reasonably held belief.

So I want to alert my friend to the fact that when I produce books, that will be my purpose in producing them, and through various sources.

THE COURT: I'm sorry to interrupt. {217|218} Is there anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not on that point.

THE COURT: All right. Having heard what the Crown proposes, do you object, or – I will not ask you if you consent, but do you have any comment on it?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I think that we have expressed on the record the important distinction between proof of the truth of the contents, and proof for the purposes of contradiction.

THE COURT: I thoroughly agree with the position that you take, and that Mr. Griffiths takes. We are all ad idem.

MR. CHRISTIE: Very well. Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I am sure, Mr. Griffiths, that at the appropriate time he will make that clear to the jury in some way. If he doesn't, I will.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. The other point my friend made in saying that he will introduce photocopies, he means, obviously, of some sections; and I can quite understand why he will not introduce the book, but I would ask and insist, I hope, that I be entitled to have it for cross-examination to make sure that he hasn't taken it out —{218|219}

THE COURT: You mean the book? Certainly.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is why I said for those purposes that it is here, so you can cross-examine.

MR. CHRISTIE: So for the purposes of cross-examination I will see the full extent of it.

Does Your Honour wish to re-affirm in the presence of the jury our understanding and agreement on facts which I will endeavour to make and which I think we did reach yesterday? Unfortunately, there is no transcript, through no one's fault, and therefore we have to repeat that; and we have the copies available now. I don't want to enter them unless Your Honour feels they are permissible.

I would, in the process of, perhaps, admission of facts, file them, and I have thirteen copies of each, unmarked. I can affirm and I hereby confirm that these are true copies of the matter in issue.

THE COURT: I think that the way it should proceed is simply this. The jury will be called in. Our Clerk will go through the formalities of ensuring – polling them on the first day that they are here, that they are properly here. I will then ask counsel whether or not they agree that the jury is present and properly constituted. {219|220} Mr. Griffiths can then open. After that I will ask for any admissions, and at that stage you can respond or not, as you shall choose, and Mr. Griffiths can do the same. Is that agreeable to you?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that agreeable to you?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Done. Is there anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: May I ask that my client, in the course of cross-examination, be allowed to sit beside me as this is, indeed, a complicated case? Facts, issues and many circumstances arise. I am quite prepared to deal with the entire matter, but I do request that I be allowed to speak with him without the necessity of running back and forth to the —

THE COURT: Cross-examination?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I leave that in Your Honour's hands.

THE COURT: I don't see anything wrong with that at the moment, and I am sure it will work out to {220|221} your satisfaction. Let me reserve on it till I can catch a flavour of what is going to happen.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 11:10 a.m.

— The jury is polled. Counsel content.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour and ladies and gentlemen of the jury, as His Honour indicated to you yesterday, I am given an opportunity to address you at this time to try to paint, in broad strokes, what I expect the evidence will be for the Crown in this trial.

As His Honour also warned you, I am the first to tell you that what I tell you now is not evidence itself. It is only what I expect will be the evidence.

As we all know from our own experience, people often say rather more or less than what we expect. Nobody would be more surprised than I if everybody said {221|222} exactly what I expected in the course of this trial.

The evidence that you will have to consider will come from the witness box and from exhibits, and there will be exhibits in this case.

I expect that the Crown's case, my witness that I will be calling, will take about ten days – totally different from a television show where you have the total picture in an hour. I can only give you the picture piece by piece through each witness and each exhibit that comes in.

Of necessity, because of scheduling and what-have-you, some witnesses will be called out of order. So to help you to know where those pieces fit in the jigsaw puzzle, I am giving you the overall picture now of what I expect you will hear; otherwise you will be putting together the jigsaw puzzle without the picture on the cover, and that will be very difficult.

Could I see the indictment, please, Madam Clerk?

You have heard Mr. Zundel arraigned, enter his plea, and you have heard the charges read a couple of times, but if you could bear with me, if I can read them one more time and make some comments on them, Mr. Zundel {222|223} stands charged that he, during the year 1981, at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale that he knows is false, namely, the article, "West, War and Islam", and the said article is likely to cause mischief to the public interest and social and racial tolerance. That is the first count.

In the second count the wording is exactly the same, only instead of the article, "The West, War and Islam", it is, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

It will be my obligation to call evidence on the various parts or elements of that charge that Mr. Zundel was the person who published the statement or tale, that the statement is false that's contained in those articles, that he knew it was false, and that that article, or those articles are likely to cause some injury – mischief and injury to a social interest, public interest and social and racial tolerance. And all those are the elements that I will be calling some evidence during the course of this trial.

You will have an opportunity to examine those articles very closely over the next ten days and we will be referring to them fairly minutely. One is quite {223|224} brief, being only three pages – two and a half pages; and the other is quite long – it's about thirty pages and in small print. So we will be entering both of those.

This trial is not to re-fight the Second World War. This trial is to prove the truth or – I'm sorry, the falsity, from the Crown's point of view, of these two articles.

I will be calling a number of witnesses. There will be about twelve, I expect, that will be called on behalf of the Crown over the next ten days or so.

With respect to count one, "The West, War and Islam", I expect that you will – I am looking at the pamphlet – you will have an opportunity to see that it talks about a conspiracy between international Zionists, international secret societies, international bankers and international communism, that those four groups are joined in an unholy alliance that is to the detriment of us all; and the impact of the article which is addressed to Arabic peoples is to request funds so that a publicity or media campaign can be undertaken to right the misapprehension we, in Canada and in the West, have.

In talking about those four groups – international Zionists, secret societies, Masons, bankers {224|225} and communism, there are descriptions given during the course of the article of each of those groups, and the role that each of them are playing in the downfall of Western civilization.

I expect I will be calling and attempt to prove the falsity of some of the statements indicated there in the overall thesis there a representative of the Royal Bank of Canada, who is a senior officer of that bank, on the subject of international banking, and I will also be calling a Staff Sergeant from the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force, who is a Mason and will comment on the things that are said in here about Masons.

Count two, "Did Six Million Really Die? Truth At Last Exposed", I will be calling evidence as to some articles that are quoted, and in my contention you ultimately will be the judges of the facts.

It is my argument that they were misquoted in this, the sources in support of the thesis that six million did not die, six million Jews did not die in the Second World War.

I will also be calling a number of survivors of concentration camps from the Second World War who will describe for you their experiences and their {225|226} observations – what they saw. There will be, I expect, four survivors called, two of whom were – actually three of whom were in Auschwitz for various periods of time and broken out, one gentleman who was in Mauthausen, the concentration camp in Austria for some five years, and another gentleman who was in a number of different camps, including Auschwitz and Bergen-Belsen that was liberated at the end of the War.

I will also be calling a Professor by the name of Raul Hilberg, whose name is in this pamphlet. He is a Jewish statistician, and there is a number attributed to Dr. Hilberg of 896,892 as the number of people that were Jews that were killed in the Second World War, and I expect Dr. Hilberg will testify and say that that is not a number that he ever wrote. And there will be a number of other witnesses that will be called as well. I won't tell you about it now, but you will hear about it as we go along.

I just would like to caution you that when books are referred to during the course of the evidence – and there will be some books, as I've indicated, that are quoted with approval, or certain sections of the book quoted with approval in this article – that I will bringing to see whether what is said in "Did Six Million Really Die?" corresponds to what is said on the books. And in bringing {226|227} those books into court I cannot, and I do not, rely on them for the truth of what is contained in those books. I simply bring them in to show you that what is contained in those books is different from what this article says is contained in those books.

Again, coming back to the truth or falsity of the articles, which is the main contention, the main issue in the trial – and there are other issues as well – whether there was a belief by Mr. Zundel in the truth of the matters that are set out here, or whether he knew that the matters were false.

Those are all matters that we will get to at the end of the trial, but I think with that, as I said, broad stroke, it will give you some idea of what the evidence will be. It won't necessarily be in the order that I've indicated to you here, because witnesses are coming in from various parts of the country, and we may call some evidence on article one, and some evidence on article two, and back and forth. Sorry about that. I will expect it will be happening, some jumping about.

Thank you very much for your attention.

Your Honour, those are my opening remarks.

———{227|228}

THE COURT: Thank you.

Members of the jury, in most of these trials, and pursuant to the Criminal Code, counsel may admit certain elements that do not require formal proof. Let me assure you that saves much time and much of the taxpayer's money. Quite properly, there are a number of things that are not the subject of contest between the Crown and the defence in this case.

I will, in a few moments, call upon counsel to indicate in your presence, for the record and to the Court, what matters are not in contest and may, therefore, be admitted as facts in the case.

As you have just heard, there are several issues here that are very much the subject of contest between the Crown and the defence. Those matters ultimately will pass into your hands for your decision, but the ones that are not in contest we will hear about now, and you may, subject to what I hear – and I am pretty sure I will hear what I expect – you may accept what is admitted as facts.

In either order, gentlemen, either Mr. Christie can go first, or —

MR. CHRISTIE: As I indicated, Your Honour, I am prepared to admit as a fact that the accused {228|229} published this article, "Did Six Million Really Die", and I hereby tender what I believe to be thirteen true, authentic copies of this article which I hope will be of use to the jury.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I further admit that the accused is the author of "The West, War and Islam", that he distributed it to a specific number of persons, and that is my admission with respect to that, and I have an additional thirteen copies of that, one for each member of the jury and one for Your Honour.

I further would like to admit as a fact, as my friend requested, that the accused has occasionally published under the pen name of Christof Friedrich.

Those are my admissions of fact, and I do not wish to have it deemed that I agree with the facts as stated in the contents in any other way.

THE COURT: Yes. Thank you very much. Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie. Mr. Christie, I appreciate your assistance in that matter, and that will be on consent, Your Honour, under s.582 of the Criminal Code. {229|230}

THE COURT: Very well. These thirteen copies will be Exhibit No. 1, and the second group will be Exhibit No. 2.

— EXHIBIT NO. 1: 13 Copies of pamphlet entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

— EXHIBIT NO. 2: 13 Copies of pamphlet entitled, "The West, War and Islam".

THE COURT: Members of the jury, the copies of both of those writings will be distributed to you, as I understand it, quite quickly. They will be referred to, I presume, during the course of the evidence that is going to be called. At the end of each day they will be collected and kept by the Court until the following day. I do not think there is anything else.

Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Can I have Your Honour's indulgence for just one moment?

THE COURT: Yes, you certainly may.

MR. CHRISTIE: My friend asked me whether we should seek an order for the exclusion of witnesses, and with the exception of expert witnesses, for which I will {230|231} be asking for the exception of those witnesses to hear the evidence of others —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Content, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Do you want any exceptions to that, other...

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry. Sergeant Williams will be my first witness, and...

THE COURT: So ordered. The order is also with the exception of other expert witnesses that the defence may intend to call who he may want to hear the testimony of others as they testify.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. It just occurred to me, I have a witness — there is a witness who is a translator from the Polish language to the English language. Now, I don't know whether you should really consider that person a witness or not. I just asked that person —

THE COURT: Translators do not testify on behalf of one side or the other. My understanding is that they translate one language to another. If that is not the case, tell me now, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, your Honour, for that indication. {231|232}

THE COURT: That, of course, is subject to my ruling with respect to the propriety of any translator who may or may not be an appropriate person to hear the translations of questions. I will hear about that in due course.

— Order given for the exclusion of witnesses with exceptions as noted.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I call Sergeant Ron Williams, Your Honour.

RONALD FREDERICK WILLIAMS, sworn

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will just distribute to the jurors, Your Honour, the one copy each of what I believe is Exhibit No. 1 — "Did Six Million Really Die? The Truth At Last Exposed".

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I understand that you are a Sergeant in the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. And how long have you been on the force? {232|233}

A. Just about twenty-three years.

Q. And you are one of the investigating officers in charge of this case; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have occasion to go to the library with respect to this matter?

A. Yes, sir. On a number of occasions.

Q. All right. If I could refer initially to page 22 of Exhibit 1...

THE COURT: That is the red document, is it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. "Did Six Million Really Die?"

Q. I will give you a copy as well, Sergeant, and there are two columns on each of the pages. At the bottom of column one, if I can call the outside column on page 22, the past paragraph starts, "Occasionally, books by former concentration camp inmates..."

Do you see that there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you read that paragraph, please?

A. Your Honour, ladies and gentlemen of the jury:

"Occasionally, books by former concentration camp inmates appear which present a totally different picture of the conditions prevailing in them. Such is 'Under Two Dictators' (London, 1950) by Margarete Buber. She was a German-Jewish woman who had experienced {233|234} several years in the brutal and primitive conditions of a Russian prison camp before being sent to Ravensbrück, the German camp for women detainees, in August 1940. She noted that she was the only Jewish person in her contingent of deportees from Russia who was not straight away released by the Gestapo. Her book presents a striking contrast between the camps of Soviet Russia and Germany; compared to the squalor, disorder and starvation of the Russian camp, she found Ravensbrück to be clean, civilised and well-administered. Regular baths and clean linen seemed a luxury after her earlier experiences, and her first meal of white bread, sausage, sweet porridge and dried fruit prompted her to inquire of another camp inmate whether August 3rd, 1940 was some sort of holiday or special occasion. She observed, too, that the barracks at Ravensbrück were remarkably spacious compared to the crowded mud hut of the Soviet camp. In the final months of 1945, she experienced the progressive decline of camp conditions, the causes of which we shall examine later."

Shall I go on, Mr. Griffiths?

Q. No. That's far enough. Thank you. {234|235}

A. Your Honour:

"In the winter of 1941-2 the extermination of prisoners by gas began in Ravensbrück."

Q. All right. That's far enough. I am showing to you a photocopy. Can you tell me whether that's the same?

A. Yes, sir. That is a photocopy of the page that I am reading from.

Q. And the particular passage that you marked, or that you read, is that marked on that photocopy?

A. Yes, it is, sir.

Q. How is it marked?

A. It is marked by a check mark, and it's also the second paragraph on the page.

Q. There's some additional information in ink on that photocopy.

A. At the top of it it says, "Under Two Dictators", which has been written in pen.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I ask that that be Exhibit 3A. There are a number of other passages. Perhaps I can keep them all together in that book, if I may, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO. 3A: Photocopy of excerpt from book entitled, "Under Two Dictators", page 208.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 211, please, Sergeant.

A. Yes, sir. {235|236}

Q. The fourth paragraph that begins, "During the whole year 1940..."

A. Yes.

A. Would you read that paragraph, please?

A. "During the whole year 1940 only forty-seven prisoners died in Ravensbrück. In later years the mortality rate of 'natural deaths' was about eighty a day, not counting those who were sent to the gas chambers, and more than half had been beaten, starved or frozen to death in the punishment cells. The prisoners who worked in the sickbay had to fetch the corpses from the cells. They often found them frozen to the floor or mummified from starvation."

Q. Thank you. And again I am showing to you a photocopy. Can you compare that to the book and tell me whether that's a true copy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any additions on the photocopy?

A. There is a check mark beside the fourth paragraph where I commenced reading, sir.

Q. Just so that everybody is clear, could you write, "Under Two Dictators" at the top, please?

A. And I might add, Your Honour, when I wrote "Under Two Dictators", the actual book that I am reading from does not have "Under Two Dictators" at the top {236|237} of the page.

THE COURT: What is the title of the book?

THE WITNESS: That is the title of the book.

THE COURT: "Under Two Dictators".

MR. GRIFFITHS: If that could be 3B, Your Honour, the photocopy as described by the Sergeant.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 3B: Photocopy of excerpt from book "Under Two Dictators" — page 211.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: If you could turn, next, please, Sergeant, to page 243. Sorry, 242. Have you found it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the bottom of the page, the very last paragraph that commences, "During 1940 and 1941..."

A. I see that, sir.

Q. Could you read it, please?

A. Your Honour, ladies and gentlemen:

"During 1940 and 1941 many transports of Polish women were brought into Ravensbrueck. It seemed almost as though Hitler had determined to wipe out the Polish people altogether. All sections of the population and all ages were represented. A rumour arose from somewhere that many of these women were under sentence of death, and {237|238} that a whole transport had been sent from Warsaw to Ravensbrueck for the sole purpose of execution. In the spring of 1942 ten of these Polish women were called out and taken to the Punishment Block. Shortly before the evening roll-call the camp street was cleared and all prisoners ordered back to their huts. Prisoners working in the kitchen and the medical post saw these ten women led across the camp square barefooted and in long frocks without belts, looking like mediaeval penitents. As they went out of the camp gates, they turned and waved cheerfully, perhaps in the hope that some of their friends who had been left behind could see them.

Shortly afterwards the evening siren howled for the roll-call. It was about six o'clock. We stood there in our thousands and waited as usual. Everything was silent, and then suddenly from the other side of the camp wall sounded a rattle of shots, followed a second or two later by several single shots. We did not need to be told what had happened. The first executions had taken place in Ravensbrueck. Opposite us stood the women of the Polish Block, and I could see their {238|239} lips moving in silent prayer. Behind the wall the pines caught the evening sun as usual and gradually the host of crows settled down again on the roof of the Kommandantur.

The faces of the women around me had changed. We knew that a new and terrible period had opened up for Camp Ravensbrueck and our hearts were heavy with dread.

That was only the beginning. From then on executions frequently took place on the other side of the camp wall whilst we were drawn up and waiting in silence, our nerves charged, our ears strained for the volley. Sometimes there would be screams, and in our minds we pictured the scenes taking place just out of our sight."

Q. Thank you. I am showing to you a photocopy of pages 242 and 243, or what purports to be a photocopy. Can you tell us if it's accurate?

A. Yes, sir. That is a true copy of what I just read.

Q. All right. And again we have written, "Under Two Dictators" at the top of the page.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you reading from more than one page?

A. I was reading from page 242 and 243.

Q. And there are a number of check {239|240} marks that are on the photocopy. Are they to be found on the book as well?

A. They are consistent with the book, yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That will be Exhibit 3C, please, Your Honour.

THE COURT: 3C.

— EXHIBIT NO. 3C: Photocopy of excerpt from book, "Under Two Dictators", pages 242 and 243.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And finally, would you turn, please, to page 304.

A. I have that, sir.

Q. The first full paragraph on that page commencing with the words, "In 1944 a second crematorium..."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you read that paragraph, please?

A. "In 1944 a second crematorium was built on the other side of the

Bunkers, and the black, stinking smoke which belched out of the two chimneys became one of the ordinary features of the Ravensbrueck scene. The prisoners were on familiar terms with the idea of death, and it played a big role in their witticisms. 'There goes poor So-and-so' was a constant joke when there was a sudden belch of smoke, and the overseers and S.S. men were fond {240|241} of telling us that the only way we should ever leave Ravensbrueck would be 'up the chimney.'"

Q. Thank you. And again I am showing to you a photocopy. Can you tell us if that is an accurate copy of the book?

A. Yes, sir. That is the page I just read from.

Q. And is the paragraph that you read marked on the photocopy?

A. It is marked on the photocopy with a check mark, and at the top is the words, "Under Two Dictators".

Q. Thank you. 3D, please, Your Honour.

EXHIBIT NO. 3D: Photocopy of excerpt from book, "Under Two Dictators", page 304.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Still on page 22 of Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?", there is a chapter heading, and it says, "The Nature & Condition of War-Time Concentration Camps". Would you read the first several sentences there, starting with, "In his recent book..."?

A. Your Honour:

"In his recent book 'Adolf Hitler' (London, 1973), Colin Cross, who brings more intelligence than is usual to many problems of this period, observes astutely that 'The shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe and murdering them, in a time of desperate {241|242} war emergency, was useless from any rational point of view'..."

— it was taken from page 307 —

"Quite so, and at this point we may well question the likelihood of this irrationalism, and whether it was even possible."

Q. Okay. If I can just stop you there, did you have occasion to attend at the library and look for "Adolf Hitler" by Colin Cross?

A. Yes, sir. I did. This was obtained from the Toronto Reference Library.

Q. And can you tell us, please, whether that is a 1973 London edition of that book?

A. Yes. Inside one of the leaves it says, "Copyright 1973 by Colin Cross". First printed 1973. Second impression 1973. Published by Hodder & Stoughton (ph), London, Sidney, Auckland, Toronto.

Q. Could you turn to page 303 of that book, please?

A. I have page 303.

Q. About a third of the way down there is a paragraph that begins, "It was with the attack on the Soviet Union..."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you see that? Could you read that, please?

A. Your Honour:

"It was with the attack on the Soviet Union in 1941 that Hitler's policy switched decisively to mass murder. {242|243} Exactly when he made up his mind on this is not clear but, in all probability, he saw the destruction of 'Bolshevism' and the destruction of Jewry as related operations to be carried out simultaneously. The two things were inextricably mingled in his mind; to him, 'Jew' and 'Bolshevik' were almost interchangeable words. Interestingly, though, he did not regard the mass killing of Jews as a policy proudly to be proclaimed from the house-tops. It was something to be done, so far as possible, in secret, without involving German public opinion or, in particular, the morale of his fighting troops. Hitler was not closely involved with the details of the mass killings, although it is a fair assumption that he discussed them on occasion with Himmler who, through the S.S., actually carried them out."

Q. All right. I am going to stop you there, please. And again, I am showing you a photocopy of a page number 303. Can you compare that with what you just read and tell me if it's an accurate copy?

A. Yes, sir. It is.

Q. Are there any additions made on that photocopy?

A. There are a few strokes with pen on the sides and the check mark where I concluded my reading. {243|244}

Q. All right. And at the top of the page?

A. "Adolph Hitler by Colin Cross".

Q. That is written in ink, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could that be Exhibit No. 4A, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: 4A.

— EXHIBIT NO. 4A: Photocopy of excerpt from book "Adolf Hitler" by Colin Cross, page 303.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Would you turn to page 304, now, of that book?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Towards the top of the page there is one long paragraph, the sentence that begins, "But even the most cursory examination..."

A. Yes, sir. I have that.

Q. Would you read that, please?

A. Your Honour, ladies and gentlemen:

"But even the most cursory examination of the facts points to the extreme probability that Hitler was not only aware of the policy but was its active instigator, no matter how much or how little he knew of the practical details. To state less would be to underrate him as a practical politician. In all matters Hitler preferred to {244|245} act verbally rather than in writing and the Jewish 'final solution' was a particularly delicate matter. While it is true that Hitler was good at delegating authority this only applied in areas that did not interest him. He was passionately interested in the Jewish question and it is virtually impossible to suppose any major decision being made upon it in the Third Reich without his initiative."

Q. All right. And at the bottom of the page there is a new paragraph that begins, "The first phase..."

A. "The first phase of the extermination policy was linked directly to the Russian campaign. Four special 'action groups' (Einsatzgruppen), ..." — and that is in brackets...

Q. Einsatzgruppen.

A. Right.

Q. Go ahead.

A. "...each of some 750 men, mostly S.S. members, were formed to operate behind the German front line to destroy political resistance. They were specifically charged with the duty of shooting Communist Party officials and, somewhat more vaguely, with shooting 'Jews'. In 1941-2 they liquidated about half a million in both categories, on occasion rounding up whole Jewish {245|246} communities and shooting them, men, women and children."

Q. Thank you. I am showing you a photocopy. Can you tell us if that is an accurate copy of what you just read?

A. Yes, sir. It is.

Q. Page 304. Are there any additions to that?

A. There is some underlining on the photocopy and some bracket points in pen, and at the top it reads, "Adolf Hitler by Colin Cross".

MR. GRIFFITHS: If that could be...

THE COURT: Exhibit 4B.

— EXHIBIT NO. 4B: Photocopy of excerpt from book, "Adolf Hitler" by Colin Cross, page 304.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And finally, with respect to Mr. Cross, would you look at page 306, please.

A. I have 306.

Q. There is a paragraph two-thirds of the way down that says, "It is impossible..."

A. Yes, sir.

"It is impossible to arrive at a firm total of how many were murdered in the holocaust of 1941-4. The first estimates, after World War II, put it at eight million, this has later been reduced to six million and then to five million. Of these a high proportion died through {246|247} general maltreatment rather than straightforward murder. But, and this was a fundamental of Hitler's policy, the numbers of men, women and children who were herded into gas chambers and murdered simply for being Jews did run into millions."

Q. Thank you. I am showing you a photocopy of page 306.

A. Yes, sir. It is.

Q. Are there any additions to it?

A. Just brackets written in pen where I read.

Q. Did you write, "Adolf Hitler By Colin Cross" across the top as well?

A. I've written, "Adolf Hitler By Colin Cross" across the top.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Exhibit 4C, please, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO. 4C: Photocopy of excerpt from book "Adolf Hitler" by Colin Cross, page 306.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. We will then go back to our Exhibit No. 1, then, and page number 26, column one. It's in a section entitled, "Fake Photographs". It starts on page 25 and continues on to page 26, and there is a long paragraph just before Chapter 9 which begins, "An excellent work..."

A. Yes. {247|248}

Q. Would you read that paragraph, please, and we will all understand that your German is a little rusty.

A. Thank you, sir. Your Honour, ladies and gentlemen:

"An excellent work on the fake atrocity photographs pertaining to the Myth of the Six Million is Dr. Udo Walendy's 'Bild 'Dokumente' für die Geschichtsschreibung?' (Vlotho/Weser, 1973), and from numerous examples cited we illustrate one on this page. The origin of the first photograph is unknown, but the second is a photomontage. Close examination reveals immediately that the standing figures have been taken from the first photograph, and a heap of corpses superimposed in front of them. The fence has been removed, and an entirely new horror 'photograph' created. This blatant forgery appears on page 341 of R. Schnabel's book on the S.S., 'Macht ohne Moral: eine Dokumentation über die SS' (Frankfurt, 1957), with the caption 'Mauthausen'. (Walendy cites eighteen other examples of forgery in Schnabel's book). The same photograph appeared in the 'Proceedings of the International Military Tribunal', Vol. XXX, p.421, likewise purporting to {248|249} illustrate Mauthausen camp."

Q. All right. That's far enough.

A. Thank you, sir.

Q. I am showing to you a blue volume. It says, "International Military Tribunal Nuremberg" on the cover.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us, please, what volume that is?

A. This is Volume XXX, indicating roman numerals for thirty. Published Nuremberg 1948. In the inner leaf it reads "14th of November, 1945 to 1st of October 1946" published at Nuremberg, Germany, 1948.

Q. Would you turn, please, to page 421 of Volume XXX of the International Military Tribunal. Is there a photograph?

A. Yes, sir. There is.

Q. All right. Can you tell us whether there is a photograph that appears to be a copy of the photograph shown at the top of the page, or the larger one that is held out to be a fake in this article?

A. It illustrates to me, just without close examination, it illustrates the top photograph on page 26 of Exhibit 1.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is my friend tendering the record of the Nuremberg Tribunal as evidence here, or is this to be taken to show the jury something that is not in evidence?

THE COURT: I don't know. Ask him.

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to know before he does it in future. {249|250}

THE COURT: I will decide these things. You have your duties; I have mine. Your duty is to make —

MR. CHRISTIE: ...objections.

THE COURT: You make your objections. I will make the decision.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have made the objection.

THE COURT: I have it. Just sit down.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am just asking for your ruling.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I am not intending to introduce the forty-two volumes of the International Military Tribunal in Nuremberg and the exhibits and transcripts contained therein. There is a photograph that is on page 26, and the paragraph that was just read by the Sergeant, Your Honour, the clear implication was —

MR. CHRISTIE: Well —

THE COURT: Just a moment. I will hear you next.

MR. GRIFFITHS: There are two photographs that are referred to, one which is said to be a fake, the other true; and it may well be it isn't clear, or there is an implication in the article – it is for the jury to find – that the fake one is the one that was in the International Military Tribunal proceedings. I have a copy of the volume.

The only thing that is on the page is that one photograph which I was showing to the jury. I have a photocopy of that photograph which it was my intention to {250|251} then introduce as an exhibit, Your Honour, not the volume itself.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if my friend had indicated that he intended to file the photocopy, I wouldn't have needed to object.

THE COURT: Perhaps counsel can liaise with one another a little more closely than, perhaps, has occurred up to the moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no idea that that was going to occur.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Proceed.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, I am showing to you, Sergeant, what appears to be a photocopy. It's not the finest copy, but can you tell us whether that reasonably accurately copies the photograph that is in the book?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I would ask Your Honour that that be Exhibit No. 5, that photocopy as described by the Sergeant.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 5: Photocopy of photograph from Volume XXX of the International Military Tribunal in Nuremberg.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no further questions of the Sergeant. {251|252}

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie?

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Did you make an effort to read the contents of Margarete Buber's book?

A. Totally, sir?

Q. The general question was asked, yes, that's the meaning.

A. No, sir. I have not read the entire book.

Q. Have you made an endeavour to see whether you may not have taken something slightly out of context in the parts you quoted?

A. I believe I was instructed to read certain portions.

Q. So you weren't asked to read whether the portions you were reading were contextual or not.

A. I was just following the instructions of Mr. Griffiths, sir.

Q. It's my understanding – are you purporting to say that this portion that you have read accurately reflects the content of the book?

A. I am not in a position to judge on that, sir.

Q. So you don't really know what's in the rest of the book as to whether it supports the article or not; is that right?

A. No, sir, I don't. {252|253}

Q. You made no effort to look in the rest of the book to see if it might support the portion of the Exhibit 1 that you have read?

A. That's the first time I've read those portions, was this morning in the witness box, sir.

Q. So you have never even read the portions before?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you are not able, then, to say whether they are in context or whether there is anything in the rest of the book that refers to the article at all.

A. No, sir.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And you have, I gather, no recollection of reading the rest of the book by Colin Cross to see if the part quoted in the article was really there or not; is that your situation?

A. The part quoted from Exhibit 1, sir?

Q. No. I think we referred to the Colin Cross book, if I am not mistaken, as Exhibit 4, the portions that I have been told about were page 303 of that book. You read part of that and you read part of page 404, and part of page, 306 and part of page 304.

Did you, at any time, read any other parts of the book to ascertain if, in fact, there was a reference to the quoted portion in the article Exhibit 1?

A. No. They were the portions referred to in Exhibit 1. And that's the portion that I just read.

Q. Yes. So you made no effort to find out if the book actually said what the article says it said on some other page.

A. No, sir. I didn't. {253|254}

Q. You, I gather, have no particular way of knowing which of the two interpretations my learned friend indicated were open to the paragraph pertaining to the pictures as the correct one. Is that correct?

A. Do I know what picture is authentic and which is not? Is that your meaning?

Q. No. My friend indicated to you that you thought the paragraph you'd read from the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"...

A. Yes...

Q. ...was possibly open to two interpretations – one that the book referred to in 1957 had produced a fake, and the other that the Nuremberg record had a fake.

Can you understand which of those two meanings necessarily applies?

A. I really don't understand your question, Mr. Christie.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Could you re-read article Exhibit 1 that referred to the photographic evidence you are talking about?

A. There is a sentence which commences, "Close examination..."; would that be – which portion would you like me to read?

Q. Well, you did refer to the article in respect of photographs, and I am asking you to repeat what you said there.

A. Leaving out the extensive title in German...

"...and from the numerous examples cited we illustrate one on this page. {254|255} The origin of the first photograph is unknown, but the second is a photomontage. Close examination reveals —"

Q. If you could just stop there.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of the origin of the photograph in Volume XXX of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg?

A. No, of course not, sir.

Q. So it could very well be true that it was unknown in origin.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know whether it refers to Mauthausen or not?

A. I have no idea.

Q. You didn't check that fact.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the picture that is indicated below the one that you have seen in Volume XXX of the IMT Tribunal transcript is actually in the book that that article says it's in?

A. The book below it, the picture below?

Q. The picture below.

A. Yes.

Q. The one that's alleged to be a fake, the larger one.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you check the book, "Macht Ohne Moral" that is referred to as being printed, I think you said, in 1957? {255|256}

A. Just a moment. Frankfurt 1957.

Q. Did you check that book to see if that photograph is depicted there?

A. No, sir. I didn't.

Q. So it could be true that that photograph is depicted there, for all you know?

A. Certainly.

Q. And it would certainly appear to your eyes, I suppose, that the large photograph in Exhibit 1 on page 26 appears to be part of the smaller photograph and part of something else; doesn't it?

A. I would think there is an obvious super-imposition there.

Q. So it could be true that the reference to the book that was published in 1957 actually does include a fake photograph.

A. It could.

Q. You've never read that book?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never made a search for it in the library or anywhere else.

A. No, sir.

Q. Because nobody asked you to.

A. That's correct.

Q. And you weren't interested.

A. Oh, certainly I was interested, sir.

Q. Did you think it might be appropriate in the interests of fairness to check that point? You might not be taking it in the proper context; did that occur to you before you swore under oath?

A. Repeat your question, Mr. Christie. {256|257}

Q. Well, before you took your stand to answer questions about what you had found...

A. Yes.

Q. ...did it occur to you that you should check the context and the reference in that article, Exhibit 1, to see if, perhaps, it was true, or did you just follow instructions from Mr. Griffiths?

A. No. We have been involved very extensively with this for the past seven months, and —

Q. I am not asking you how long you have been involved. Did you check to see if article one was true as respects the book published in 1957?

A. I could not locate the book in 1957, sir.

Q. Thank you. Now, if I am not mistaken, the only quote of Colin Cross in the article that is Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" is a sentence; isn't it?

A. Yes. It was a paragraph, yes.

Q. No. The only quote of Colin Cross is a sentence long; is it not?

A. In Exhibit No. 1?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. So he quotes Colin Cross for one sentence. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. He doesn't quote the part you read in court at all, does he?

A. No. It just refers to the page numbers and the quotation. {257|258}

Q. Yes, the one quotation, which is — would you please read it?

A. Would you give me where the page is again, please, Mr. Christie?

Q. Well, you have it in your hand. You have read it once before. You found it. Please find it again.

A. Bear with me for a moment.

Q. I think if you look at page 26, column one, that puts you in touch with the evidence you gave about, "An excellent work on the fake atrocity...", if that helps you locate it in relation to that. If you will look at page 22 of Exhibit 1, I think that might be where you made reference to it.

To get to the point, I will quote it to you as I think you quoted it to me:

"The shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe was useless".

Is that a close approximation of what you said? Please correct me.

A. That was one of the quotations that I read, yes.

Q. All right. please read the whole quotation of Colin Cross in Exhibit 1, the one sentence that is quoted.

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps if we can take the lunch break, the witness can find the part, Your Honour. I have tried to be as much assistance as I could.

THE COURT: Witness, have you found page 22?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. {258|259}

THE COURT: Have you found number 8?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. I do.

THE COURT: Well, what I believe defence counsel wishes you to do is to read the quotation, "The shuffling...". Would you please do that?

A. "The shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe and murdering them, in a time of desperate war emergency, was useless from any rational point of view".

And that was illustrated on page 307.

"Quite so, and at this point we may well question —

THE COURT: That's the end of the quotation.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could he stop there?

Q. The end of the quotation was followed by the words, "Quite so"; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So the quotation just said:

"The shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe and murdering them, in a time of desperate war emergency, was useless from any rational point of view".

Did you look for that in the book at all?

A. On page 307 of the book?

Q. Maybe not on page 307, but in the book.

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't. So if the page number {259|260} is wrong, it could be in the book without your knowledge. Right?

A. Yes, it could.

Q. So you'd be innocent of the knowledge of its being there. You wouldn't be saying that you are not sure it is there at all, would you?

A. That's correct.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, in view of the fact that I wasn't aware until this morning that this would be the first witness, I have evidence that I would like to put to the witness which can only be obtained — I see it is twelve twenty-seven —

THE COURT: That's no problem.

Members of the jury, we will take a bit of an early lunch hour for the reasons you've heard. Would you please be back in your jury room at five minutes to two.

— The jury retires. 12:27 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I am having the exhibits, the books collected from the jury room. They will be returned to our Clerk, if that is satisfactory. If not, we will call the jury back and have them give them up here. What is your pleasure?

MR. CHRISTIE: My pleasure is to indicate, Your Honour, that I'm sorry if I in any way interjected in an inappropriate manner. I am afraid in various provinces we do things a little differently, and it may take me time to get used to the way Your Honour does things. I certainly intend to try quickly to learn that.

THE COURT: That will not be a problem. {260|261} The best way to do it is to stand up and catch my eye. I take the position in any trial over which I preside that unless there is a very strong reason, counsel for both sides or for any side should not be interrupted. It is a favourite tactic that I hated when I practised, and I won't permit it to go on. I don't think it is a tactic on your part. I think your motives are sincere; but that is my reasoning, and it is why I became peremptory with you. I will do the same thing with Crown counsel if he tried it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I realize Your Honour is very fair in that respect, and I appreciate your letting me know. I will endeavour to understand and follow that advice.

THE COURT: Do you wish your client to sit beside you during this cross-examination? What he should do, subject to your comments, is this, that when the cross-examination occurs, he can sit beside you. When the examination-in-chief is going on, he can return to the dock.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: And that is subject to change as time goes on and as we get accustomed to one another.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

— Luncheon adjournment.

———{261|262}

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: Anything before we start?

MR. CHRISTIE: I want to point out that Dr. Robert Faurisson is sitting behind me, and he may be a potential expert at a later stage.

THE COURT: Yes. I think we covered that this morning. He is welcome to be where he is.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no objection.

THE COURT: All right. Bring in the jury.

— The jury enters. 2:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much.

Q. Witness, this morning you read parts of Margarete Buber's book, "Under Two Dictators", which seems to bely the portion of the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?" where it said:

"...she found Ravensbrück to be clean, civilised and well-administered. Regular baths and clean linen seemed a luxury after her earlier experiences, and her first meal of white bread, sausage, sweet porridge and dried fruit prompted her to inquire of another camp inmate whether August 3rd, 1940 was some sort of holiday or special occasion."

Do you recall reading that from this {262|263} exhibit?

A. Yes, sir. I do.

Q. Do you agree that the portions of her book that you read certainly seemed to indicate that that was not true? Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It certainly seemed to indicate that those words were not part of her book. Correct?

A. That's the impression I drew.

Q. Yes, I quite agree, sir; but that's only because that is what you were told to read. Correct?

A. Yes. I have been on the instructions of Mr. Griffiths entirely.

Q. I appreciate that. I now ask you to look at what I understand to be a copy — and it may be a different edition — of "Under Two Dictators" by Margarete Buber, and therefore the page numbers may be incorrect; but it's London, Victor Gollancz, 1949, and I quote from page 187 and ask that you read along with me when I say:

"I was astonished at what I saw: neat plots of grass with beds in which flowers were blooming. A road leading away from the entrance square was lined with young trees, and before the wooden huts which extended away on either side were more flower beds. The square and the street were obviously most carefully kept and even the gravel paths had been freshly raked over. To the left of us, towards the watchtower, there was a large timber barracks {263|264} painted white, and next to it was a great aviary as though in a zoological gardens. Peacocks were strutting slowly around and monkeys sprang from branch to branch, whilst a parrot was squawking something that sounded like 'Mother.'

Opposite this aviary, on the other side of the entrance square, was a big, well-kept lawn with silver firs which partly hid the only building in the camp which was built with stone, as far as we could see. This, we had very good cause to learn later, was the camp prison; in its basement were the notorious Bunkers — it was the inner sanctum of hell. From outside everything looked beautiful — more like a neat holiday camp than a concentration camp."

Am I reading correctly, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you read that before?

A. Not that edition, sir.

Q. All right. Not that edition. Now:

"A diffused sun shone over the camp. Apart from us one might have thought the place was deserted; no one was in sight. And there was no sound but the squawking of the parrot and the regular shouts of our guard. But whilst we were waiting a column of prisoners {264|265} came by and I saw German camp inmates for the first time. They marched in orderly ranks. Each woman wore a clean white kerchief bound round her head and fastened at the back, a broad striped dress and a dark-blue apron."

Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Reading on, from the next page —

THE COURT: That's page number...

MR. CHRISTIE: 187, Your Honour.

Q. And perhaps we should go back to page 186. Will you read with me, at the bottom paragraph:

"We lined up in fives in front of a newly-painted wooden hut before which was a neat garden plot. A woman guard with jack boots, a field-grey skirt and tunic and a sort of forage cap set at an angle over one ear stood watching us, shouting from time to time: 'Quiet! Hands by the side. Stand to attention!'"

Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. Now, I've read entirely from the last paragraph from 186 to the last paragraph on 187. Is that correct, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thank you. Turning the page to 188, and I'd like you to confirm that I am reading correctly from there:

"And what astonished me most — they sang. {265|266} Some marching song or the other. And all the while the dogs bayed and growled and the guards bawled out orders."

"Everything at Ravensbrueck was done with typical Prussian thoroughness. A prisoner was passed from hand to hand until every detail was complete and she had become a permanent inmate, registered, photographed, listed and uniformed."

Correct? Am I reading right?

A. Yes, sir. You are.

Q. "After we had gone through all this, we were taken to the washroom, which was fitted with showers. We had to undress and wash ourselves under the showers, and all our things were taken away."

Am I reading correctly, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "The attendants here were in white."

I will skip over the rest of that paragraph, and I read the next paragraph:

"After our clothing had been taken away, the long-feared procedure of looking for head lice began. This was carried out by two prisoners whose lilac triangles showed them to be Bible Students."

Is that correct? {266|267}

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "She would give a woman a sickly-sweet smile and beckon her to take a seat, then she would search her head with extreme care, and if she found the least sign of lice or nits, off would come the wretched woman's hair."

Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Reading on to the next paragraph on page 189:

"At least there was hot water and soap and a towel for each woman."

Correct?

A. Of what you are reading, sir, correct.

Q. Do you want me to read more if you think I am reading out of context?

"This procedure was supervised by a prisoner attendant, whose loud shouting and bullying was in no way different from that of the guards. When it was all over we were left sitting around the room on benches, naked and shivering with cold, waiting for the next procedure. It was the medical examination, and a pitiful travesty it was."

Do I read that correctly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

"'Why are you here?' he asked when my turn came. {267|268}

'Political,' I replied.

'I see,' he said. 'The usual Bolshevik shrew. Get back to the ranks,'"

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know, have you read the book, did you find whether she had been in a Soviet prison camp?

A. Yes, it did mention that in the other edition.

Q. Okay; I am reading now from page 190, which is the very essence...

MR. CHRISTIE: ...I'd like the jury to take this section out and read it, please, Your Honour, with me, the part that was quoted by the Crown. I see they don't have their copy. May I give it to them? I want this to be correct.

I'd like the jury, if I may, to look at page 22, the paragraph at the top right hand part of the page. I'll now place in front of the witness what I believe to be a true copy of the book referred to this morning quoted in

"Did Six Million Really Die?", I will point out to him, the top right hand side of page 22, top column, top of the column...

Q: ...Do you see what I am referring to, witness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it says here that:

"Her book presents a striking contrast between the camps of Soviet Russia and Germany; compared to the squalor, disorder and starvation of the Russian {268|269} camp, she found Ravensbrück to be clean, civilised and well-administered."

From there to the bottom of that paragraph – do you understand?

A. Yes. I read that this morning.

Q. You read that this morning. And you didn't find anything referred to that in her book, did you?

A. No.

Q. All right. I am now going to read you from page 190. Let's make sure that we get this straight. She says regular baths, in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", seemed a luxury after her earlier experiences, and her first meal of white bread, sausage, sweet porridge and dried fruit prompted her to inquire of another camp inmate whether August 3rd, 1940, was some sort of holiday or some other special occasion.

"She observed, too, that the barracks at Ravensbrück were remarkably spacious compared to the crowded mud hut of the Soviet camp."

A. Right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And the last sentence, as well.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: "In the final months of 1945, she experienced the progressive decline of camp conditions, the causes of which we shall examine later."

Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Page 190 of the edition I have, will {269|270} you read along with me? What does that say, sir? Read it. I would like you to read the underlined portion.

A. Your Honour:

"My first German camp meal consisted of a sort of sweet porridge with stewed dried fruit. But in addition each of [us] received a large piece of white bread, a piece of sausage, a portion of margarine and a portion of lard. I turned to one of the old hands:

'Is there an inspection or something, or is this some sort of special occasion?'

She shook her head and looked at me to see, I think, if I looked quite right in the head.

'Do you always get as much to eat as this, then?' I went on.

'Well, yes, but it isn't as much as all that, is it?'

'No,' I replied, 'but I thought perhaps...' And left it at that. Anyone who has been in a Russian concentration camp has quite different views about what constitutes quality and quantity in foodstuffs."

Q. Thank you very much. Now, do you agree with me that what you just read seems very close to the exact words located on the paragraph that I mentioned at the upper right hand corner of page 22?

A. It is very consistent, Mr. Christie, {270|271} yes.

Q. It appears, though, that when you looked at the portions that the prosecutor asked you to look at, you couldn't find anything that even came close. Right?

A. No, sir. That's correct.

Q. It seemed to imply quite the contrary, did it not? Because you were thinking, not just reading, weren't you?

A. Yes, I was absorbing.

Q. And it seemed quite clear that what you were reading was so inconsistent with what that booklet represented, didn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I have shown you what I propose later to put into evidence which was a verbatim, very close to verbatim, if not verbatim, repetition of what's in that paragraph. Correct?

A. Yes. The bread —

Q. The bread, the sweet porridge, the stewed dried fruit, the margarine, the white bread, the sausage — correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Portion of lard — all referred to. Right, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if I had left, or if you had only left the impression with the jury that you left this morning, wouldn't that have been false news, sir?

A. Yes. It would have been different than Exhibit 1.

Q. Yes. Did you, in examining the {271|272} book which you got, consider it your duty to make sure that you found out if maybe in the book there was what the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" said there was?

A. Under the instructions of Mr. Griffiths, sir, I was not aware that there was another edition such as you have photocopies of there. I'm sorry.

Q. Are we sure now it is a different edition? I'm not.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am reading along as Mr. Christie was in the 1950 edition, and it's identical. There is no issue as to that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Fine.

Q. Then I assume that you just happened to miss this part, sir.

A. There was no instruction to read that part, sir.

Q. Well, let's put it this way. In fairness to you, I don't think there was any instruction to look throughout the book. Right?

A. No. That would be correct.

Q. And if the page number happened to be wrong, you were just looking at that page, and if it wasn't there, it wasn't there. Right?

A. That would be correct.

Q. I am going to turn over to page 192. I am going to ask you to listen while I read, and check me if I'm wrong and I am not reading correctly when I say that the first paragraph says, "The newcomers". Now, if you read the book, you'd know that was her. Right? {272|273}

A. Yes.

Q. She is a newcomer to Ravensbrück. She says:

"The newcomers received two woollen blankets and a white sheet, a pillow case and a long blue-and-white striped nightdress. And then we had to learn 'bed-building,' which is a typically Prussian piece of chicanery. All the huts had two wings, an 'A' wing and a 'B' wing. Each wing had a dayroom and a dormitory. Originally built to hold 100 prisoners, each wing held 250 in 1940, and later on the number was even increased to 500. In addition each hut had a wash-room with basins and foot baths, a lavatory, and an office for the S.S. Block Leader, which, however, she occupied only for a short time mornings and evenings. During the rest of the day it was the privilege of the Block Senior to use this room, which was more like an ordinary living-room."

Is that correct? Am I reading right?

A. Yes, sir, you are.

Q. Now, this seems to indicate that the living conditions in the camp got pretty crowded later on in the War. Would you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. In 1940 it seems it was far less — {273|274} in fact, half of what there was later. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any idea why in the War these people ended up in the concentration camps?

A. More entered the camp, I would imagine.

Q. Why?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I am not sure if this witness is qualified to answer that question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, maybe not. He can say so.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you ever think about it?

A. About...

Q. Why more people would end up in these concentration camps toward the end of the War, as the War got closer to Germany. Did you ever try to find out why more people were in Ravensbrück and why the conditions were deteriorating then?

A. No, sir.

Q. Okay. And I will read you this last paragraph, page 192, the middle of the page:

"The Ravensbrueck hut seemed a palace to me after the wretched clay huts of Birma."

Now, Birma, do you know what that means? That's, I suggest to you, that is part of a reference to the Karaganda facilities. I will read the rest of it:

"And the equipment: a proper lavatory, a wash-room with proper basins, tables, stools and lockers! {274|275} There was not a table or a stool for any of the prisoners throughout the whole of Karaganda. And then there were the rows of neat, double-tiered beds, and every prisoner had her own bed and her own straw sack to sleep on."

Am I reading that correctly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It seems to be quite different from what you read this morning about rumours of death and gas chambers. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It seems quite contradictory, doesn't it?

A. It does.

Q. Yeah. If you only read part of it you'd think more of the gas chamber, wouldn't you? Would you agree?

A. I would only think of the gas chamber.

Q. Yeah. Okay. Thank you. We had better leave that there. There is one other point I want to check with you in case we don't know and can't find out where Karaganda was. Looking at the front of the book, look at the table of contents, it says, "Author's Preface, Part I". What does it say?

A. It says, "Part 1. Soviet Concentration Camp, Karaganda".

Q. And what does it say, Part II?

A. "Nazi Concentration Camp, Ravensbrueck" {275|276}

Q. So she was in Karaganda and in Ravensbrück, in Germany, and she found Ravensbrück quite a lot better.

A. It would appear by that version, sir.

Q. And if what I read to you is accurately read, and if it isn't taken out of context, it would appear that conditions got worse towards the end of the War.

A. It would appear.

Q. Right. Now, you said – you quoted parts of this brochure that seemed to imply that she saw or knew of gas chambers. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have the book with you?

A. Not in the witness stand I don't.

Q. Sorry. I will get it for you.

A. Thank you.

Q. Now, I've got my copy here, and this is the one you were referring to, and I'd ask you to turn to page 304, and let's start at the paragraph, if I've got the same edition as you, that says, "We haven't had..." Do you have that paragraph?

A. Yes, sir. I see it.

Q. Could you read from there to the end of the word "purposes"?

A. "We haven't had so many extra dead during the past few days, have we?" I asked. She shook her head. 'Perhaps there's a new epidemic of typhus.' We had a terrible suspicion, but it was not until we managed to speak with one of the new Block Seniors that it was confirmed. About forty women {276|277} had been picked out by Winkelmann, and S.S. overseers had written their camp numbers on their bare arms with indelible pencil. When lorries came to take them away, the women already suspected what was to happen to them and they screamed and struggled and refused to go. A company of S.S. men had been necessary to force them in by violence."

Q. Had you read that before?

A. Not this paragraph.

Q. Carry on, then.

A. "Then the lorries had driven off to the crematoria. I don't know to this day whether there was a gas chamber in Ravensbrueck or whether the women had been despatched in the mobile gas chambers which were available for such purposes."

Q. So she says, "I don't know to this day whether there was a gas chamber in Ravensbrueck or whether the women had been despatched in the mobile gas chambers which had been available for such purposes." Right?

A. Yes.

Q. She doesn't seem to indicate there whether she saw any gas chambers or mobile gas vans at all, does she?

A. No.

Q. But naturally, she wrote this after the War, and by that time there were stories all over Europe {277|278} about gas chambers. Do you agree?

THE COURT: Are you in a position to answer that?

MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe not. I assume more than I should from the witness.

Q. Maybe you don't know that.

A. I certainly don't.

Q. How old are you?

A. Forty-six.

Q. Thank you. So you have no idea whether it was common that rumours went around about gas chambers?

A. Not at seven years old, sir.

Q. No. Having quoted to the jury the portion of the book that you did, did it come as a surprise to you, the part that I've read, that it is actually verbatim with "Did Six Million Really Die?"?

A. Yes. It's inconsistent with the belching smoke that I read this morning.

Q. And here she says she never even knew if there was a gas chamber in Ravensbrück in another part of her book. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. It sounds almost incredible, doesn't it?

THE COURT: That will be for the jury to decide.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you see many books on the Holocaust in your experience?

A. Have I?

Q. Yes. {278|279}

A. No, I have not.

Q. Do you agree that it is quite a popular topic? Sad and gruesome as it is, it seems to be talked about an awful lot, doesn't it?

A. Generally, counsel?

Q. Yeah. On the television, and it's quite a controversial item, even in court cases these days, isn't it?

A. Recently, yes. I can't speak generally.

Q. Now, you referred to the book by Colin Cross, and it's my understanding that you said you couldn't find the part, I guess, about the shuffling of millions of Jews around Europe and murdering them, in a time of desperate war emergency, was useless from any rational point of view. You said you couldn't find that at 307.

A. Yes, that is at 307, sir.

Q. It is.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the point that I gather is being made somehow by what you've read – and I hope that you are thinking about this – is that that is somehow out of context. Right? Is that the —

A. That particular sentence?

Q. Yeah.

A. Well, I don't know whether it's out of context or not, sir.

Q. Well, you read this morning the paragraph on page 27.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file the copy? And it's a photocopy, I concede, but I don't have the {279|280} original. I think we've checked it. It seems to bear out. This is the "Under Two Dictators" by Margarete Buber, translated by Edward Fitzgerald. I think it is the same edition my friend filed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have it other than what my friend was reading, but I was following along in the 1950 edition, and it seems accurate to me as my friend was reading it. I have no objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: It will be the next exhibit.

— EXHIBIT NO. 6: Photocopy of excerpted pages from book, "Under Two Dictators".

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a copy for my friend of what I have entered.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you agree, now, sir, that respecting page 22 and the paragraph at the bottom of the left hand side in the upper right hand side, that certainly in the book "Under Two Dictators" it indicates the words precisely as they are printed in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"?

A. You just took the copy that I had here, Mr. Christie.

Q. Oh, I see. Well, we have gone over it once, but don't you recall that we checked the words almost verbatim?

A. Yes, they were consistent with what we talked about.

Q. So now we agree that respecting that {280|281} paragraph that begins at the bottom of page 22 and goes to the top right hand column of page 22, that was truly and accurately reported and quoted.

A. Yes. It was consistent with the book.

Q. With the book. Although when we heard from you this morning, not one word that was consistent between those two books was mentioned. Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. And that's because you just read what you were told to read. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. Let's go to page 26 and the paragraph second from the top. I have taken your book again.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have one extra copy. Perhaps it could be left up there for all the witnesses.

MR. CHRISTIE: This is Exhibit 1 my friend has got?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. It's from the preliminary.

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, it's Exhibit 1 on the preliminary.

Q. Now, let's go to page 25, and that paragraph that you read this morning:

"An excellent work on the fake atrocity photographs pertaining to the Myth of the Six Million is Dr. Udo Walendy's 'Bild 'Dokumente' für die...' – well, it's there..."

A. I couldn't pronounce it either, Mr. Christie. {281|282}

Q. We will have to work on that. I now produce and show to you a book by Udo Walendy, "Forged War Crimes Malign the German Nation". Do you see that? Would you just page through there and see if the photograph on page 46 is analyzed in that work? It shouldn't take you too long. There's not very many photographs there.

A. There is a similarity here on page 74 that I have located.

Q. Thank you. So I think it's correct to say, is it not, if we look at the photograph on page 26, that indeed, whether the statements in this book are correct or not.

A. Is this what you are referring to?

Q. Yes.

A. They do analyze the two photos that are depicted on page 26. Right.

Q. It deals with those two photographs. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it does show in this booklet the photograph in the lower half of the page. Right – the lower half of Exhibit 1? And at the right hand side which is page 75 of this book it does show the same photograph that is on the top of the page 26 in Exhibit 1. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Just show the jury that book, if we may, so they see —

THE COURT: You can do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I?

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The two photographs {282|283} on page 74 and 75 are the same two photographs as indicated in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?". Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So any quotes in this book by Udo Walendy that I won't try to pronounce is at least accurate this far that he has the same book, the same author and the same photographs. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this comes from:

"An excellent work on the fake atrocity photographs pertaining to the Myth of the Six Million is Dr. Udo Walendy's 'Bild 'Dokumente' für die Geschichtsschreibung?' ..., and from the numerous examples cited we illustrate one on this page."

Right? I am reading from Exhibit 1, the book in the jury's hands. That's true, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. We now know that's true.

A. Yes.

Q. "The origin of the first photograph is unknown."

Now, let's see if that's true. Now, my friend produced to you Volume XXX of the International Military Tribunal. Right? I don't remember what page. Can you help me?

A. 421.

Q. And I guess it's 421, and here is the book. Now, is that correct? That's the same photograph as on page 74, or is it faked? {283|284}

A. That is faked, sir.

Q. Well, you are counting things in the background.

A. I am trying to see the support.

Q. Does it look the same?

A. It looks consistent, yes.

Q. All right. Now, do you know the origin of this photograph?

A. This?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. So to you, at least, the origin is unknown.

A. Of course.

Q. Did you ever look in this book to see what the origin was?

A. No.

Q. So the origin of this photograph is unknown to us today. If my friend has other evidence, that may be, but to you it's unknown. Is that correct?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. So far as you know it is true that the origin of that photograph is unknown. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. But the second, he says, is a montage. Right? He says that in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. A photo montage, yes.

Q. Now, does he deal with this issue at page 74 and 75 of the Udo Walendy book? Please read under the photograph that he says is the montage, or read anything {284|285} there you like. Read the whole page. I don't want to take it out of context. Starting on wherever you like.

A. I presume you wish me to read this portion here.

Q. Sure.

A. It's entitled, "Roll Call", and it's under the top picture that we see on page 26. "On the picture on page 74...", referring to this book, "Forged War Crimes Malign the German Nation",... the wooden fence was taken away, the corpses put in front and the new picture was passed as an 'original photo'. An enlargement shows that this 'roll call' has been drawn. The dark shaded man in the middle contradicts the colouring of the other men. There is contradictory lighting. The wooden poles should run conically together. The opposite is the case. The anatomy is wrong in many cases. Look at the enlarged section chest, nipples, arms, knees."

Q. Okay. Now that book, then, is saying that the so-called original is a fake. Correct?

A. No, sir. It draws your attention, as I understand here, it just draws your attention to certain items in the photo.

Q. But doesn't it say it is a drawing, not a photo?

A. It says it is attributed to that, I believe. Just a moment.

Q. All right.

A. There was contradictory lighting. The poles should run together. The anatomy is wrong in many cases...

Q. The roll call has been drawn. Right? {285|286}

A. Shows that this roll call has been drawn.

Q. That this roll call has been drawn. Right? And he means the picture up there, doesn't he?

A. That is what he is indicating.

Q. Whether you agree with him or not, that is what it says, doesn't it?

A. That is what it says here.

Q. Now, going back to Exhibit 1, we are going to read the next sentence and check and see if this sentence agrees with this book that he quotes as his authority. Let's read on:

"Close examination reveals immediately that the standing figures have been taken from the first photograph, and a heap of corpses superimposed in front of them. The fence has been removed, and an entirely new horror 'photograph' created."

Right?

A. That's what it says, yes.

Q. Now, read the caption on the left here, page 74, "Mauthausen", published with this text in R. Schnabel's "Macht Ohne Moral", page 341.

A. Yes.

Q. So what does it say here in the book that is supposedly false?

"This blatant forgery appears on page 341 of R. Schnabel's book on the S.S., 'Macht Ohne Moral'..."

Right? {286|287}

A. Yes.

Q. So Walendy appears in the book as he says. Correct?

A. This book agrees with this.

Q. Correct. Okay. Now, we have to find out if it is true about "Macht Ohne Moral". Right?

THE COURT: You don't have to answer that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I apologize for making any questions into answers.

Q. I now have in my hand the book, "Macht Ohne Moral" by Reimund Schnabel, and for the record I will indicate, rather than argue or debate about it, or try to prove it some other way, it is published in Frankfurt/Main. I don't want to file it, but if my friend wants to see it...

Q. Am I correct that it's "Macht Ohne Moral", by Reimund Schnabel, published in Frankfurt/Main 1957?

A. Yes.

Q. And at page 341, what do we find? What is that?

A. It's a picture.

Q. What kind of picture? It's the exact picture that is depicted in "Did Six Million Really Die?" and in the book of Udo Walendy which he says is from "Macht Ohne Moral". Correct?

A. Yeah. The pictures are consistent. Yes.

Q. They are consistent.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Visibly so. Right?

A. That's what I said, sir. {287|288}

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Could I file this book as an exhibit?

THE COURT: Yes. Certainly.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have no objection if my friend wishes to file the two pages referred to.

MR. CHRISTIE: In due course I plan on calling the author, so it makes no difference.

THE COURT: Marked as Exhibit "A" for Identification.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT "A" (For Identification): Book entitled, "Forged War Crimes Malign the German Nation" by Udo Walendy.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, I'd like to file this copy of page 341 of the book, "Macht Ohne Moral" with the title page which indicates its publication, and its index which is in German, rather than file the book, which is a rare book.

Q. Could you check that and make sure that they are consistent, please? Do you agree they are consistent, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Could I file this as the next exhibit?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 7: Excerpted pages from book, "Macht Ohne Moral" by R. Schnabel. {288|289}

Q. Sir, I am going to put away this book for now and ask you if you can still see anything in that paragraph that is false that you quoted earlier.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that's something for the jury to decide, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw the question. I think that's fair enough.

Q. I understand, sir, that you've read, "The West, War and Islam".

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because that's part of your investigation.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were on this case for nine months.

A. No. I believe I said seven, sir.

Q. Seven? Sorry.

A. Not totally, Mr. Christie.

Q. I understand. You have other duties.

A. Thank you.

Q. There are some rather critical comments there about Masons, I gather.

A. How critical they are, I interpret them to be, but I found them very inconsistent with...

Q. ...your beliefs?

A. ...some knowledge and beliefs that I have.

Q. Because you, too, are a Mason.

A. Yes, sir. I am. {289|290}

Q. Do you know many policemen?

A. Do I know many policemen?

Q. Yeah.

A. Yes, I know many policemen.

Q. Many policemen are Masons, are they not?

A. Many compared to what? I don't...

Q. Do you know any policemen who are Masons?

A. Yes.

Q. How many do you know who are Masons?

A. Fifteen or twenty.

Q. What degree are you?

A. I am a third degree Mason.

Q. Do you know all about the upper degrees above you?

A. No, sir. There are no degrees above me, sir.

Q. Oh, there's no higher than third degree?

A. Yes, but it's laterally, not above. It's laterally.

Q. And this little pamphlet, "The West, War and Islam", implies there is a conspiracy of Masons. Is that right?

A. Certainly.

Q. Masons get along pretty well with other Masons, don't they?

A. I'd like to think we get along with everyone.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Is there any secret about {290|291} Masonry?

A. Very, very small portion of it, sir.

Q. How big a portion?

A. A very few number of words, signs and symbols.

Q. Words, signs and symbols, eh?

A. A very few, yes.

Q. Did you ever see the Star of the Royal Archmasons?

A. No.

Q. You never have.

A. No.

Q. You wouldn't know if it was the Star of David?

A. There is no Royal Archmasonry right here. That is, I understand, a fourth degree in England.

Q. Oh, I thought you were third degree of the highest degree. There is a fourth degree in England?

A. I said laterally, sir. I didn't say higher.

Q. So these secrets are a very small percentage of the whole thing. Is that right?

A. Extremely small.

Q. Extremely small. These secrets, you know them all?

A. Pretty much.

Q. You do, eh? Do some people know more secrets than you?

A. Yes, sir. They do.

Q. So you don't know how many secrets {291|292} they know, do you?

A. No.

Q. You might not even know who are the members with secrets you don't know.

A. That's correct.

Q. That's the very quality about a secret, isn't it, that makes it difficult to understand how big or small it is.

A. That is right.

THE COURT: You don't have to answer that question, either.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. So if there was a secret Masonry conspiracy, would you know about it at your level?

A. No, sir, I wouldn't know about it at my level. No.

Q. Did you ever hear about the P-2 scandals in Italy – a Masonic lodge that involved cabinet ministers in Italy? Do you know anything about that?

A. I don't know about it, but I heard about it, yes.

Q. You heard about it? There was many prominent people involved in that, were there not?

A. I don't know, sir. I reside in Canada.

Q. Masons don't have relationships across oceans?

A. Fraternally, yes.

Q. I suppose those relations exist at the higher levels. Right?

A. No, sir. Not totally. {292|293}

Q. No. No doubt you have social functions together, eh?

A. Can you rephrase that sir? I don't understand what you mean.

Q. Do you have any meetings at which people from other countries come to Masons' meetings?

A. Yes, sir. I have been in attendance at that.

Q. So if there was any kind of secret conspiracy, you might not know about it, and if it was to be kept a secret, would you keep the secret?

A. Would I keep the secret?

Q. That's right.

A. Not a secret that is international.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just a minute. What secret are we talking about?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I can't answer that because it is a secret. He is not telling me, either. He is not telling me. He said there are some. He is not telling me all.

THE COURT: What's your next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You agree that Masonry is an international body of people who work together. Is that not right?

A. No, I don't agree with that, sir.

Q. Do you know about the Masonic Calendar?

A. I don't know what you are referring to.

Q. You don't?

A. No. {293|294}

Q. Well, is there not a calendar that the Masons use that indicates a different year than, say, 1984?

A. No. Not to my knowledge in this country, sir.

Q. Do you ever read books on Masonry?

A. One.

Q. One.

A. Well, I have read a couple of books on Masonry.

Q. Have you heard of the fact that there was inquiries of corruption involving the police department and Masonry in England, reported in a book called, "The Brotherhood"? Are you familiar with that?

A. No.

Q. You don't know that.

A. I don't think so.

Q. The name Stephen Knight (ph) doesn't mean anything to you?

A. No, it doesn't.

Q. As the author of that book?

A. No, sir.

Q. No? Would you say that it would be true to say that Masonry has tremendous power and influence?

A. No. I would disagree with that, sir.

Q. I put it to you that because it's secret, we will never know just how much power and influence it has. Isn't that true?

THE COURT: If he doesn't know, how can he tell?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he keeps secrets, {294|295} Your Honour, he has agreed to that.

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. Do I keep secrets?

Q. Yes.

A. The only secrets that I've kept are the ones that I've told you pertaining to signs, symbols and words – just a few secret words that I took upon myself an obligation on the Bible that I would not reveal those secrets.

Q. I believe you swear by The Great Architect of the Universe. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You see, I am not completely ignorant.

A. I never inferred you were, sir.

Q. But that is true, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's quite correct.

Q. Tell me, in your understanding of the Masonic difficulties, shall we say, in Italy, in which banks were involved such as the Catholic Church D'Ambrosiano, are you familiar with that?

A. I told you, I am not familiar with that at all, sir.

Q. None?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think that Mr. Zundel's having written against the Masons may have influenced your work somehow?

A. No, sir. Not at all.

Q. Would you agree with the proposition that Freemasonry is an international secret society? {295|296}

A. No, sir.

Q. What part of that is untrue? It's international; is that right?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. It is secret.

A. No, sir. It is not a secret society.

Q. Well, it keeps secrets, doesn't it?

A. Yes. That's a lot different than what you said.

Q. Well, maybe it is; maybe it isn't. It is for the jury to decide. I will ask you.

A. You did ask me.

Q. I will ask you another question.

A. Thank you.

Q. We agreed that you don't know how many secrets are kept, do you?

A. No.

Q. You know that some are.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some are kept by you.

A. That's the one that I am concerned about.

Q. Yeah. That's right. But all the rest keep some, too, don't they?

A. I have no idea, sir.

Q. None.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I do have some reply, Your Honour.

———{296|297}

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Sergeant Williams, can you tell us whether you were asked by Mr. Christie before today about your involvement with Masonry?

A. Yes. He asked me one question on Monday, and he said, "Are you a Mason?" And I replied, "Affirmative."

Q. "Affirmative".

A. I said, "Yes", yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Can I see Exhibit No. 2, please? Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. All right, Sergeant. At the bottom of page one of Exhibit 2, "West, War and Islam", there is a paragraph, I guess, headed, "The International Secret Societies:" and there is a semi-colon and some material follows. Would you read that, please, the whole section on international secret societies?

A. Your Honour, members of the jury:

"Unknown to most people of the Islamic World is the tremendous power and influence exercised by Freemasonry and all its cover organisations like the Kiwanas, Rotary, Lions, etc. Most Western decision-makers, politicians, economists and military officers are either members of a secret society or are dominated by such members. Any educated Moslem can recognise immediately the identity of Freemasonry with that of its secretive organisational predecessor, the Assassins. This is the {297|298} same satanic structure which we detect in Freemasonry: lies, secrecy, duplicity, infiltration and where necessary, assassination. That most Freemasons are unaware of the directors and direction of their secret organisation does not preclude their blind, unthinking support of this organisation and their obedience to its directives. The orientation and rituals of these secret societies of the West come directly from the Kabbala of the Babylonian Talmud. Their content is Jewish, their goals are Jewish and their masters are Jewish. This explains the consistent support of Freemasonry for the goals and machinations of international Jewry, which also explains the Freemasons' consistent role in directing the advance of world crime, corruption, poverty, war, revolution, collapse and chaos from their high-ranking positions in the Western political, economic and military establishments. On behalf of the Zionists, the Gentile members of these secret societies have spread these plagues not only in the West, but throughout the entire world in which Western influence exists. Most members who are aware of their {298|299} organisation's role in causing world suffering rationalise these horrors as 'change' and as necessary steps in the creation of a world government suitable to their Zionist masters. President John F. Kennedy said before his assassination that there were 17 million members of Freemasonic secret societies in the United States alone! Most U.S. presidents have been members of such secret societies, two notable exceptions being Kennedy, who was removed from office by assassination, and Nixon, who was replaced by 33rd degree Freemason, Gerald Ford. In one's travels through America, one frequently notices that the local Freemasonic temple is usually in close proximity to the seat of federal, state and local government. So deeply accustomed are Westerners to the acceptance of these secret societies in their midst that they have no misgivings in electing known Freemasons to public office, even though it will not be in the public interest that these public policies will not be made in the broad, open, well-lighted public offices, but in the narrow, smoke-filled confines of secret conclaves with their secret 'lodge brothers'. {299|300} No wonder U.S. policy always differs in practice from the pre-election promises made by these hypocrites! A child could readily perceive the truth that no organisation which claims to do good, as do the Freemasons, need be secret; but brainwashed children become brainwashed adults and the thorough Zionist brainwashing has made the Western majority blind to the enemy that works in their very midst. But if many Westerners are blind to this danger, there is no need for the Islamic peoples to be equally blind."

That concludes the "International Secret Societies".

Q. Perhaps you can pass that copy back to His Honour. Do you swear an oath when you become a police officer?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is the nature of that oath?

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me for interrupting, but I would like to point out to my friend, I am sure he is aware, that re-examination are only matters that were raised for the first time in cross-examination. I concede that I raised the issue of Freemasonry, but we are going quite a bit beyond the scope of my cross-examination, because this may involve cross-examination again on many the same – well, many of the issues that are coming up for the first time now. I don't know if my friend wishes to {300|301} pursue this. I'm afraid I must object if he does.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, it's virtually time that your coffee arrive. I think it will be arriving about now. You are excused for twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:04 p.m.

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, in the presence of the jury, during the re-examination of the first Crown witness, has taken objection to that witness being asked a question concerning whether or not, when he was sworn as a police officer, he took an oath.

Mr. Christie takes the position that that subject not having been raised during the course of his cross-examination, it should not now be raised in re-examination. In effect, to permit it would be tantamount to permitting into evidence a fresh subject not having been the subject of the cross-examination as it occurred.

Have I got it correctly, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: I take the position that the question is proper for the following reason:

During the course of the cross-examination, Mr. Christie very closely questioned this witness, a police officer, on his ability, by reason of his being a Mason or {301|302} a member of Masonry, was unable to properly and adequately discharge his duties as a police officer in the investigation of this accused for that reason.

The obvious, intended inference that counsel for the accused intended to leave for the jury was, by reason of the fact that this Officer is a Mason, he could not discharge his duties as a police officer properly and adequately, according to the law, with regard to his investigation of this accused.

The Officer has admitted that he did investigate this case and this accused for about seven months or a figure thereabouts.

This question being asked in re-examination following the cross-examination by Mr. Christie of the witness in that particular regard makes it proper. It will be permitted in twenty minutes.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 3:30 p.m. {302|303}

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Sergeant, I believe I asked you, before the break, whether, when you become a member of the police force, you swore an oath.

A. Yes, sir. I did.

Q. And what was the nature of that oath?

A. The nature of the oath was to uphold the laws of the land provincially, federally and municipally, the municipality; that I had to not disclose items that were revealed to me that I gleaned through investigations pertaining to other persons; also that I would undertake to protect property, life, and assist with the prosecution process.

Q. Do I understand from what you said about that oath that there are secrets you are required to keep as a police officer?

A. Yes, sir. There are.

Q. And you just read out the section of "West, War and Islam" that deals with international secret societies. Do you, personally, take offence at that?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I must say —

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Thank you.

Q. Has your membership as a Mason and your duties as a law enforcement officer clashed in this case, in your opinion?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have they ever clashed? {303|304}

A. No, sir. They have not.

Q. You told us that there are very few signs, symbols and words that are secret in your membership in the Masons.

A. That's correct.

Q. Were any of those signs, symbols and words have to do with assassination?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or breaches of the law?

A. No, sir.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much. I have no further questions.
 THE COURT: Thank you, Officer. The witness retires.
 MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Arnold Friedman, please, from the witness room.

ARNOLD FRIEDMAN, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Friedman, what year were you born in, sir?

A. 1928.

Q. You are now fifty-six?

A. Yes.

Q. And where are you living now?

A. What – the address?

Q. No. Just —{304|305}

A. Downsview.

Q. Downsview, Toronto.

A. Yes.

Q. And are you employed?

A. Yes.

Q. Where do you work?

A. Lumberking.

Q. Can you tell us where you were born and spent the early years of your life?

A. I was born in a small village in the Carpathian Mountains in an area not far from the capital of that area called Uzgrad. It's in part of Greater Russia now. It was annexed after the War. During the War it was part of Hungary, and prior to '38 it was part of Czechoslovakia.

Q. All right. And can you tell us whether you are familiar with farmers or what they did?

A. Well, it was a small village, roughly two thousand families, and we had a little store, as well as a farm, on a very small scale – sort of one cow, a few chickens – family type.

Q. And how many members were there in your family?

A. There were five children and my parents who were – my father was about forty-two, forty-three. My mother was about thirty-seven, and the children were ranging from ages of about five to twelve.

Q. All right. And at what point in time were they that age?

A. In 1944.

Q. Up until 1944 had you suffered any {305|306} hardships in the family?

A. There was a hardship from 1939 to 1944, a sort of graduated hardship as the anti-Jewish laws came into effect, starting with taking away the licence of the little store, and subsequently taking my father into a sort of civilian army labour-type of organization. They were under the auspices of the army, but they were unarmed. They only carried yellow bands and military caps for identification.

Q. All right. And was he working in that capacity in the vicinity of your village, or did he go away?

A. No. They were recruited in labour battalions and shipped to various areas, mostly —

Q. I am going to stop you, because you can only tell us what you saw with your own eyes, and if you weren't there, you can't tell us. Okay?

A. All right.

Q. But he was shipped away for a period of time.

A. Yes.

Q. Did your father come back to your village?

A. Yes. He came back in early 1944.

Q. Okay. Could you tell us, approximately, maybe a percentage, how many Jewish families there were in that village?

A. About fifty or sixty.

Q. And the other families were Ukrainian and Hungarian.

A. Yes. {306|307}

Q. Did the status of the Jewish families in that village change at some time in 1944?

A. Yes. Around Jewish Passover there was information given to us by the police —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, this obviously, I believe, is trying to inquire into truth, and if we get into the realm of information given by the police or given by somebody else, we end up in the position of having to face hearsay, which we can't test the validity of. And I recognize when everybody tells stories about their lives, it inevitably involves hearsay, and we are in a court of law, so I must say, please rule on whether I am right that hearsay should not be admitted to prove truth; and I am not sure under what other exception in this situation it could be legitimately introduced.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My friend is quite right. I will endeavour, if I know Mr. Friedman well, to eliminate hearsay.

THE COURT: Proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And I hope the Court will bear with us if there is a slip from time to time. I know Mr. Christie will be very vigilant.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will endeavour to be.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. You received some information, or your family did?

A. Yes. In the synagogue it was announced —

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Christie, you don't have to be that fast off the mark. I have lived {307|308} in these courts over a number of years. You will get the same indulgence when the inevitable occurs, when the shoe is on the other foot. I can pick these things up. I am quite capable of doing that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I apologize. I thought that was my duty.

THE COURT: No. It's mine. You can object any time you wish to object, but give me a little credit.

Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. You understand now you can't say what somebody else told you what information you have, but you can tell us what you did and what you said. All right? You received some information in the synagogue.

A. That we will be permitted —

Q. Don't tell us what the information was, but as a result of receiving that information, did you do something?

A. We were – I ran away on the second day of the gathering, on the second day of the Jewish Passover, from there, because we were permitted to stay home the first night and were gathered up, and we were told that in the morning we will be gathered up.

THE COURT: No. Just a moment. Just what he did, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. You had some information or belief, and as a result of that, on the second day of Passover did you do something?

A. Yes. I ran away. The village was surrounded, and I broke through a cordon of – they were {308|309} called Leventers. These were sort of junior, semi-organized youth with military guidance, or police guidance who were helping the police surround the area.

Q. All right. And you got through that cordon.

A. I got through that.

Q. Were you with a friend?

A. With a friend, yes.

Q. And where did you and your friend go?

A. We went to the nearest town where they were gathering up the Jews into a ghetto.

Q. All right. What was the name of that town?

A. Mukacevo.

Q. And did you stay in the ghetto in the town you've told us of?

A. Yes. The Jews of that city were gathered into street ghettos, and the Jews from the surrounding villages were taken into —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I recognize that it's frustrating to interrupt, and I know I shouldn't unless I have a reason. I am sure Your Honour can perceive my concern that we are getting involved in a narrative that introduces what, apparently, is not personal knowledge but a collection of some personal knowledge and general sort of raconteur-narrative; and if my friend could direct the witness to tell us what he did, what he saw from his own experience —

MR. GRIFFITHS: This is from his own experience, Your Honour. It is about both areas that I was {309|310} talking about.

THE COURT: Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, the last remark was about Jewish round-ups, and unless he was rounding people up, I wonder how he can say that from his own knowledge.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: My parents were in one section where the Jews of the villages were collected into. It was a brick yard, brick factory, and I was with the city Jews in the street ghettos.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: How long were you in the town for, in the ghetto?

A. Approximately a month.

Q. And is there another holiday in the Jewish calendar that assists you in the amount of time?

A. The Jewish holiday was Shavuot. Shavuot was roughly seven weeks, or precisely seven weeks after Passover; and a week before that we, the Jews of the ghetto in this city, were gathered, driven out of our houses and, under guard, driven into these brick factories where my parents were before me. I missed my parents by four hours.

Q. Your parents weren't there when you arrived.

A. My parents were no longer there.

Q. You said you were gathered up and taken to the brickworks. Who did the gathering and the taking?

A. The S.S. and the Hungarian police. They just knocked open every door and just yelled, "Get out into the street." And then we were, under guard, driven there on foot into the brick factory which was on the outskirts of {310}311 the city of Mukacevo.

Q. How long were you in the brickworks for?

A. Roughly two weeks.

Q. Were there any facilities there for people?

A. It was a huge brick kiln, inside which were subdivided family-type areas separated only by blankets, or bed sheets, and it was a vast sort of armoury-type of hall, and there were hundreds of people in there. Subsequently they just took section by section out to the holding area of the train and were loaded into trains, and we got out of the trains at Auschwitz.

Q. All right. Can you describe the trains for us that you were on?

A. The trains were cattle cars, sort of boarded-up, empty inside, but totally enclosed except for windows within, say, twelve inches from the roof, below the roof line.

Q. Was there any sanitary facilities – toilets; water?

A. No. We were given anything we could carry; we were permitted to take anything we could carry – foodstuffs that we could carry on our back. A barrel of water was given us per car, and a sort of big container, roughly the size of a fifty-gallon drum, cut in half, which served as a latrine.

Q. How long was this trainride in the cattle car?

A. That trainride was about a week.

Q. Were the doors open at all during {311}312 that week?

A. Not at all.

Q. Did everybody survive that trip?

A. Many people were feeble by the time the journey ended. I don't know whether there were any dead in our car or not. I saw people just sitting keeled over in the corners, but I was not sick. The stench was terrible and, of course, the use of the latrine was simply a matter where two or three people were holding up a bed sheet, and the person who had to make use of that latrine was just inside. It was a very degrading time.

Q. You say when the train stopped you were at where?

A. The train stopped in an area that was – we got to know as Birkenau.

Q. And did the train arrive in the day, or at night?

A. It arrived during the day.

Q. Can you tell us what happened, then, from the time that the train arrived?

A. Well, the train arrived. There was a yelling of, "Alles raus" – "Everyone out" – and the doors clanged open and we were ordered out. The atmosphere was chaotic. There was yelling and screaming of people who were told to get out, others who were looking for lost children, or looking for parents who were in different cars, families trying to reunite.

There were shots fired – people who didn't obey or whatever; but you could see dead people here and there. There were S.S. with dogs. There were civilian prisoners in blue and white uniforms, striped uniforms, who were assisting us to get out of the cars. We were told to {312}313 leave everything, all our possessions, in the cars – just line up into three groupings. One was those who wanted to work, or were capable of work, separate men and women, and those who were too old or too young; and as we lined up in rows of five, we were confronted with a trio of S.S. with machine guns drawn, two of them, and one was standing there, and he just went through selecting those groups who were lined up as working battalions. He then eliminated certain individuals as unfit for work, or for whatever reason.

We were then marched to an area, to a building in a wooded section there, and we were told to undress, leave our clothing there, and going for showers and disinfection. We were shorn of our hair, head hair and pubic hair, and when we came out of that shower we were given prison garb, ill-fitting, torn blue and white jackets and pants, and shoes – some leather, some wooden – and we were told to line up.

We were surrounded by S.S. again and told to march, and we were marched off into one of the camps. We were marched into a barrack and we were told this is where we belong until –

Q. All right. I will stop you there. Passover and Easter, they change from year to year in the calendar, what month they fall in. Can you tell us about what month they would have arrived?

A. Well, Passover is roughly around March. I don't have the exact dating for that year, and we arrived seven weeks later, which would have been April, May.

Q. All right. And if you were born in 1928, you were sixteen at the time?

A. Yes, sir. {313}314

Q. Was there anything unusual about the barracks that you were taken to?

A. No. The barracks were rows of uniform barracks. They were wooden barracks. They were divided in the middle by a brick fireplace which was heated from both sides of the building. It was a long, narrow barrack, measured about thirty-five feet in width by about a hundred or so feet in length. In the middle there was a brick construction. If you imagine a chimney lengthwise, which was heated on both sides of the building, and the heat was given off on the four lengths, that was the dividing thing. The design was for horse barracks.

Q. How many people would be in that barracks?

A. The whole area was filled with beds, three-tier beds, designed for – MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't hear that answer.

THE COURT: Say that again, please.

THE WITNESS: Three-tier beds.

THE COURT: Three-tier beds.

THE WITNESS: Designed for two people per tier, but they crammed in about twelve kids onto a tier.

Q. Can you show us or describe for us how big an area you got to sleep in?

A. Yeah. A tier would be about five-foot widths by about six feet length.

Q. Deep?

A. Deep, yes.

Q. And how high?

A. It was about three feet high. If {314}315 you sat up you hit your head on the next – on the upper deck.

Q. Are you able to tell us anything about the age of the people in your particular barracks?

A. In these five barracks, in our barrack and the next four, they were all children between the ages of twelve to sixteen, roughly.

Q. How long were you in Auschwitz or Birkenau, that is?

A. I was in Birkenau until December '44, and then I transferred to Auschwitz, which had the separate prison, about three kilometers away. I was there for one month.

Q. I will come to that in a moment. As long as we have some idea of how long you were there for. Were you aware of any particular smell in the camp?

A. Well, there was a constant smell in there. There was smoke belching from the crematoria, and it gave us a constant smell – the crematoria being close enough and low enough for the smoke to be dispersed through the camp rather than go straight up.

Q. During the first part of the time that you were in Birkenau from April and May to, say, October, did you make any observations as to what you described, what you called crematoria? And perhaps you can describe them for us, what you saw.

A. Well, there was – the building that I described as a crematoria is a cottage-type low building with a short chimney protruding from it. At nighttime you saw the flames shooting above the chimney about a meter or two meters, depending on the particular time. There was smoke coming out, and we were just discussing amongst our-{315|316} selves as to —

Q. All right.

COURT: Just a moment.

GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I am sure that there was a regular discussion about those, but we can't hear that. Okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Can you tell us, during that first period, whether you made any observations as to how often there was smoke or flame from the crematoria?

A. That was continuous. It rarely stopped.

Q. What about at nighttime?

A. It rarely stopped because the cars, the trains, were coming day and night, and they were unloaded and just processed.

Q. Now, were you working during this time in the camp?

A. Very rarely.

Q. What would your day consist of in the camp? What would you do?

A. Our day consisted of getting up very early in the morning, around six o'clock, going to the barrack, to the latrine barrack. There was the barrack dedicated as the latrine barrack. We washed ourselves and got back to our barrack to be, to line up for count.

Q. All right. Now, are you familiar with the word "appel" [Appell]?

A. Yes. This was the appel – one in the morning, one in the evening.

Q. And you also call that "count"? {316|317}

A. Yes.

Q. A roll call?

A. No. It was not a roll call. We lined up alongside of the barracks, rows five abreast, and we waited for the S.S. to come in and count physically each row to count up the number of prisoners in that group. The able-bodied stood at attention with our hats off, or caps off, and the dead that accumulated during the night were lined up in front of the building and were subsequently taken away by wagons drawn by people who collected every morning the dead.

Q. Were the dead counted as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have a number assigned to you at Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us when?

A. The number was assigned to me when we moved to Auschwitz in December, from Birkenau to Auschwitz. Birkenau had been an extermination camp.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, that last sentence contains a statement of something that, I think, relates to hearsay. So far it seems to, anyway. Can I please be forgiven for interjecting, because I think sometimes I have to say these things before they are made.

THE COURT: I don't know that you have to say them before they are made. How could you?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know, but I try.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour.

Q. I think, Mr. Friedman, if I could {317|318} just stop you from the narrative for just a moment and indicate again, I think, what ideally we would like to do, and I know it is very difficult, is to state your observations, and we will let the jury reach its own conclusions as to what went on in that camp. Okay?

THE COURT: Let me see if I can help.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You are permitted, as a witness, under oath, to say what you saw, what you heard, what you smelled, or a combination of all three. That is why you are here. Are you with me?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What you felt, if you felt something, say that. Opinions, no.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right, Mr. Friedman – I lost my train of thought...

THE COURT: You were talking about a number.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And you told us that you got your number in December of '44.

A. Yes.

Q. And prior to that time – do you have a tattoo today, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And when was that obtained? When were you given that?

A. On entry into Auschwitz from Birkenau.

Q. Can you tell us what that number is?

A. B14515 {318|319}

Q. Up until December 1944 did you have a number?

A. No.

Q. Do you know what a block register is? If you don't, just say you don't.

A. I don't.

Q. Did other people in your barracks, the children, have numbers while you were in Birkenau?

A. Only those of us that were left at that point.

Q. In December.

A. Yes. There was only one barrack-full left by that time.

Q. Out of how many?

A. Out of five.

Q. You were describing for us a day, a typical day, in regard, as far as appel – the count in the morning.

A. Yes.

Q. How long would that take, that procedure?

A. That would take anywhere from half an hour to two hours. On rare occasions even longer. It took the time of all the S.S. men counting up all the barracks, the live and the dead, and if it tallies, they agree that nobody went missing, then we were given our breakfast and then we proceeded with the day's activities.

Q. All right. And was there something different every day for breakfast, same thing? What: did you eat for breakfast?

A. That varied with the season. Sometimes {319|320} we got mulberry leaves.

THE COURT: What...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mulberry leaves, I think, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: In the form of tea.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: In the form of tea.

A. Yes. Other times it was coffee of broad [bread] barley, I believe – that kind of stuff. There was no ersatz.

Q. Is that ersatz coffee?

A. Yes.

Q. So you had tea and coffee. Were you given anything to eat?

A. We were given a portion of bread and margarine, and at times it varied, the variance being assembled cookies or cakes or various things that they brought from the transports, abandoned by the transport people, that was thrown into a kind of soup, and we could get that kind of a mixture for breakfast, soup. It was sort of like a porridge made up of a variety of things.

Q. How much breakfast soup did you have, and how much of the ersatz tea or coffee?

A. Well, there was a ladle-full. You just lined up and you got it. And then you got to the breadman who gave you your portion of bread and a piece of margarine.

Q. And how big would your bread portion be?

A. Perhaps I could show – that blue label. {320|321}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Indicating a package of Stenograph tape.

THE WITNESS: If that was cut in half and doubled up – in other words, half the length and double the width.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And how long would that last for, then, as a bread ration?

A. If you were careful you could carry the day with it; just nibbling a bit at a time, and saving the crumbs in your pocket, you could get through the day with it.

Q. Was there a noon meal – lunch?

A. Sometimes yes, and sometimes no, depending on what they had. If the kitchen had enough food, it would be a light soup made out of – what do you call it, these yellow turnips? Or barley mixed in. We would sometimes get meat in it if it was a special occasion. And if we had that for lunch we would probably get a piece of salami and bread for supper.

Q. You told us that people that died in the barracks were brought out each morning for the count. Can you tell, was there an average number who would die over the night, or would that figure fluctuate?

A. That figure would fluctuate by anywhere from five to ten people, and not every night. Some nights there were no dead people.

Q. Was there any security guard or fences or anything of that nature around your barracks, or your camp?

A. Around the camp there were barbed wire, electrified barbed wire fences consisting of, roughly, {321|322} six-inch concrete posts with a barbed wire on each side, then a median strip in between, and another fence. They were both electrified, and in the median there were the guard towers – machine guns and guards in there. On the other side of that fence there was another row of barracks, similar, and that went on several times over.

Q. So the camp would be several barracks and there were many camps in Birkenau, so we have a picture of it?

A. Yes. I think there would be about two rows of fifteen barracks each per camp, except in Camp A, which only had one row of barracks.

Q. How far away was the barracks that you were in from the crematoria, the chimney that you've described for us?

A. I was in several camps. I was in —

Q. Several barracks, or camps?

A. Well, these units. It is the same camp, but it is divided into A, B, C, D. When I was in D Camp we were separated from the crematoria by some cottage-type of barracks which were health units of some sort. We saw different people there from time to time, but I don't know what those people were except that I saw, at one time, midgets, at different times children – various things at different times.

Q. And other than those cottage barracks there was nothing between you and —

A. No.

Q. — the crematoria; is that correct?

A. No. Except the railroad, landing area, or the unloading area. Then the crematoria. {322|323}

Q. Would the railroad unloading area be anywhere near the crematoria?

A. Yes. The railroad up to a point where it stopped, and then past that, straight down the line, there was the crematoria.

Q. Are you able to estimate for us today how far that would be, from the end of the line to the crematoria from the railroad line?

A. No. It would be hard for me. Maybe a ten-minute walk.

Q. Was that an area that was accessible to you?

A. No.

Q. Were you permitted to walk in that area?

A. No.

Q. Did you see other prisoners walking in that area?

A. Yes. We saw a lot of people walking from the trains.

Q. And where were they headed?

A. In civilian clothing they were heading to those areas.

Q. What areas?

A. The crematoria area.

Q. Did you see those people return?

A. No. We only saw the grown-up, or the working people, the people capable to do work, come into the camps or be distributed into the camps; but most of the people who were not fit to work, like the elderly and the young, and mothers with children, did not go into any of the {323|324} camps and did not come out.

Q. Now, could I have that again? You said mothers...

A. ...and children.

Q. Did you say anything about elderly?

A. And elderly, were headed into that direction but never came out.

Q. Can you tell us if there were any gypsies that were in the Birkenau camp when you were there, if you have direct knowledge of that?

A. Yes. In A Camp they were gypsies and a group of Czech Jews who were there until sometime midsummer. I believe it was July when we saw one night, in the middle of the night —

Q. All right. I am going to stop you there. Just so we all understand, when you say "we saw"...

A. I saw.

Q. Did you see it?

A. Yes.

Q. And how was it that you saw it at nighttime?

A. Well, there were only barbed wire separating the camps, one from the other. There was a lot of light. Like the whole area was lit up. We saw – I saw military trucks. I saw people being herded onto these trucks. There was the screaming, usual screaming and yelling. Some shots were fired and the trucks drove away in the direction of the crematoria. On the next morning we had some new members, new children, a bunch of kids, maybe ten or fifteen, that we recognized that told us they came from that camp. {324|325}

Q. Some gypsies came into your barracks?

A. Czech children.

Q. Czech children, I'm sorry. At this point in time – now, you told us at one time you were about the second row of barracks, so you are quite close to the crematoria.

A. Yes.

Q. At this time, when you were watching this, how far away would you have been from the crematoria?

A. Well, it was fairly close. A Camp was only about a hundred feet wide: then you had, oh, about three hundred feet.

Q. Three hundred feet?

A. Three, four hundred feet.

Q. Did you see where the trucks went that night that were loaded with people?

A. They went into that knoll of woods. There were some birch trees there and they went into there. It was a very noisy night.

Q. Did you see the trucks come back that night?

A. No.

Q. How many crematoria were there?

A. Four.

Q. Were they all the same size?

A. More or less. We only saw the outline or the side, the low roof. That's all. We did not see the entrances and all that. That was hidden from us.

Q. Just so that I don't do what I have been asking you not to do, there were four buildings that had chimneys on them? {325|326}

A. Yes.

Q. And from what you said, they were similar in design.

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us if the amount of smoke and flame from the four chimney stacks was similar?

A. Yes. From alternate periods. It wasn't that they were all belching like a factory at all times.

Q. Can you tell us whether the odour that came from those four stacks was the same odour?

A. Well, it was the odour of burning flesh, and the flames were changing colours from yellow to a deep red on various occasions. I don't know.

Q. Did that cause some discussion in the barracks?

A. Yes.

Q. The colour of the flames? Don't tell us what. Was that the subject of discussion?

A. Yes, it was the subject of discussion.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this a convenient time, Your Honour? I am getting into another section.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, we will adjourn now until tomorrow morning. Please do not discuss the case with anyone beyond your number. It's absolutely essential that you keep an open mind. Please remember the thought that the picture does not become clear until the last piece is put into place, until the last word has been said in this case. We will start again at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Thank you. Have a good evening.

— The jury retires. 4:25 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 11, 1985.

JANUARY 11, 1985

THE COURT: Yes. Is there anything before I call the jury, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, please, Your Honour.

I must say this is somewhat of an unusual situation, somewhat of an unusual case, and day in and day out, as I leave Court and perhaps as others do, we are confronted in the media with stories about the case which I know to be inaccurate, to put it mildly.

Now that, in my submission, is of great concern because, of course, the jury goes home every night, too. Now, nobody is suggesting in the media any restrictions on their freedom of speech, and we can't suggest they have to be accurate or that they have to do false things, but one of the things that worries me is that there doesn't seem to be an understanding of what the case is all about.

I am keeping track of all the false allegations made in the media about this case, and we have — I would like to play a sample of what is going on, what happened last night, with the object of putting before you an indication of what I am concerned about.

To begin with, let me say that this case is not about a denial of the "Holocaust", whatever that may mean. This booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", does not {327|328} deny persecutions of Jews. It does not deny deportation of Jews. It does not deny transportation of Jews. It does not deny concentration camps. It does not deny suffering, massive suffering of Jews. It does not deny many of the things associated with the Holocaust story that we hear about in the media.

It does deny that there was an unprecedented weapon and an unprecedented crime. The unprecedented weapon was mass gassings, and the unprecedented crime of mass gassing specifically for Jews.

Now, if anyone had taken the time, in the media, to read the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?", it would be my contention they would perceive that. It is not their duty to be accurate, I suppose. I am not here to enforce any such duty, but I am concerned about the fact that day in and day out in the media, stories are circulated about this case that the jury has every right to hear and, no doubt, does hear, that the accused is charged with anti-semitism, which he is not, charged with hatred or spreading hatred, which he is not charged with. They may make their editorial comments on that.

They also say that he is denying the Holocaust ever happened. Now, to the average person who {328|329} understands the Holocaust in the context of what the media said about it, that is a misleading statement.

I would like to demonstrate with some of last night's news reports.

— Video tape played in the courtroom.

THE COURT: I don't know that we should take our time hearing about matters irrelevant to the submission you are making.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was just trying to demonstrate —

THE COURT: Well, I have heard it. I heard that.

MR. CHRISTIE: There are a couple more that I thought were worse. It will only take two minutes, three minutes, maybe, if I may.

THE COURT: Yes.

— Video tape played in the courtroom.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's all, Your Honour. I would like to point out three things there, questions that it ever happened, anti-semitic literature, and a Jewish conspiracy to take over the world. {329|330}

Now, that may be what the media would like to say about the case, but that is not what the article says at all, and I am concerned because day in and day out these people sit here and take notes and go out and say what I suggest is just grossly inaccurate. They have every right, apparently, to do so. They aren't going to be prosecuted. But we are on trial for spreading false news not for anti-semitic literature, or hate literature, or questioning whether it ever happened.

THE COURT: I think what you meant to say is whether your client is on trial for that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am representing him, and I am saying "we".

THE COURT: You haven't learned your principles of advocacy very well. You are an advocate and Officer of the Court, and don't forget it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am aware of that.

THE COURT: Then "we" should be dropped. You are making submissions.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Make them.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have made them.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not sure what {330|331} relief my friend is asking for the Court. If it is to sequester the jury, I think it is totally unnecessary. Your Honour repeatedly warned the members of the jury, at the time of their selection, that this was to be based on evidence in the Court.

I have no objection if Your Honour would repeat that warning. That may well be appropriate. If that is the relief sought, I concur.

THE COURT: What would you have me do, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would like to have the opportunity to explain to the jury what this case really is about, if they are going to hear every day misrepresentations of what our position is. You see, I think the media representing our position is ridiculous every day.

THE COURT: When would you like to do it?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would have liked to do it at the beginning, but I would like to do it now, if you would.

THE COURT: You may, if you wish, make an opening address to the jury in your own, absolute, unfettered {331|332} discretion, when you decide to call a defence. Even if you decide not to call a defence and Crown's case is in, you may make an address to the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I realize that.

THE COURT: But not now.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I wouldn't even have suggested it, Your Honour, except this is going on, and it had gone on in the past. It will continue to go on, I'm sure, throughout this trial, and I really don't think that's fair, because naturally the jury goes home every night, and I wouldn't be too surprised if they listened to the news.

If they hear this repeated over and over and over again, what kind of people do they think we are before they get a chance to put in our defence. That is why I am concerned.

I have said all I wanted to say.

THE COURT: Thank you. Is there anything further, gentlemen?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not from Crown, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, is there anything further? {332|333}

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Thank you.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 10:22 a.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

ARNOLD FRIEDMAN, previously sworn

CONTINUATION OF EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Friedman, you told us yesterday that in the children's camp, when you first arrived, there were, I believe you said, five barracks. Is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you recollect how many, approximately, would be in your barracks when you first arrived?

A. It would be about a thousand.

Q. Did the numbers in your barrack ever change, or the population in your barrack ever change?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us when that first occurred?

A. Well, whenever there were changes, they brought in more kids, or eliminated some, or condensed some for some reason or other. There was this fluctuation. {333|334} And these were minor fluctuations, but then there were major fluctuations when they started taking out greater quantities of people.

Q. All right. Did something happen around Rosh Hashanah – the Jewish holiday Rosh Hashanah?

A. Yes. On Rosh Hashanah, which is the Jewish New Year —

Q. What month would that be in, usually?

A. Around the end of July and the beginning of August – we were told to get out of the barrack and line up alongside the barrack in rows of five, and as was customary for appel, and we could be called any time during the day to be counted. This was a normal procedure.

We lined up there. It was a sunny day. It was around noon, close to noon. Dr. Mengele and a couple of S.S. came. Our Blockälteste, or the barrack manager —

Q. He would be the senior person in charge of the barrack?

A. Yes, he would be in charge of the barrack. He went and reported that everything was ready for them.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I ask that we avoid hearsay?

THE COURT: Yes. Please see to that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Tell us what they did. Don't tell us what they said. Can you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. You can tell us what you did.

A. He ordered us to strip to the waist.

MR. CHRISTIE: This is hearsay. {334|335}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What did you do?

A. I stripped to the waist.

Q. What did everybody else do?

A. With everybody else. The order was given, "Strip to the waist. Everybody. Leave your shirts where you stand." And the front row takes three steps forward. We did that. We were ordered to undo our trousers and drop them down to the knees. Dr. Mengele made a visual inspection of us, singling out or taking out of the room individuals and told them to form another line with us.

Q. You [He] did that with a hand gesture.

A. With a movement of his hand. And soon there were two groups.

Q. All right. The groups that were singled out by Dr. Mengele, did you see any difference between that group – first of all, were you singled out?

A. No. I was left standing.

Q. And the group that was singled out by Dr. Mengele and your group, was there any difference between those two groups that you could see?

A. It appeared to me that they were the skinnier ones, or sick-looking children. They were ordered to fill up the line, to step in line, and marched off to another barrack.

Q. Did you ever see any of those children again?

A. No.

Q. Were they replaced in your barrack by others?

A. Yes, they were. They did that with all the five barracks, and then condensed the remaining. The selected groups were then placed in different barracks. {335|336} In other words, we had new children come into our barrack, and some from ours went into the other barracks.

Q. Were the children that were taken away anywhere in the children's camp?

A. No. They were —

Q. You can only tell us what you saw.

THE COURT: Ask him if he knows this, or is this from information received. If it is from information received, he can't say it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. If I may, Your Honour...

Q. Were you able to move around freely between these five barracks, or was there barbed wire or something preventing you?

A. No. We were under orders of block sperre, which means temporary arrest – "Don't get out of your barracks".

Q. How long did that last for?

A. For the rest of the day until the other children were taken away. They did not want us to mix.

Q. All right. And at the next day...

A. The next day we were free, and the other barracks were empty.

Q. And could you walk around the whole area where the five barracks were, or only where your own barracks were?

A. No. There were roughly twenty or twenty-two barracks in a camp. You could move around freely, or we could move around freely.

Q. And were those children anywhere in that camp? {336|337}

A. No.

Q. Did you ever see another camp where there were children other than the gypsies you told us about and the Czech?

A. No. Those, we never saw those, because even to date we never heard from these children.

Q. All right. Was that the only time this happened – Dr. Mengele?

A. No. Then, ten days later we have a Jewish holiday called Yom Kippur, which is a fast day, and we endeavoured to fast. Most of us children were religiously oriented, and we sort of tried to follow the prayers on a daily basis, even though we had no books, but we were well enough knowledgeable on religious prayers to say them by heart, and we gathered to say the services in the group when, again, Dr. Mengele appeared. It was a fast day and the morning breakfast was in those bowls. We were given bowls; it's hard to describe them. There is nothing on the market here to show you what kind of bowls they were; but this one bowl served for your meals. Well, we carried our breakfast with us, and when Dr. Mengele appeared, we all broke the fast and swallowed it to have a sort of healthy appearance.

We were ordered to line up again, and the same as before, we were told to strip and the first line took three steps forward, and again the selection was done with one group of the weaker people, or selected people, being set aside.

Q. And did you see what happened with that group of weaker people, selected people, that were set aside?

A. No. The same procedure followed. {337|338} They were ordered to march into barracks. When they were gone, we were ordered to our barracks under the order of blocksperrre, which is —

Q. House arrest.

A. House arrest. And that lasted the same evening, and then we never saw those other kids again.

Q. How many barracks were there by now, children's barracks of the original five?

A. There was now about three.

Q. Did anything happen to reduce those numbers further?

A. On another, a couple of days later, another occasion, we were ordered to line up and were marched off to the back of the camp where there was a clearing. The clearing area was used for sport, which was sometimes used for football. There was a couple of — there was a football gate [goal] erected, consisting of two four-by-fours stuck in the ground, and they could have been used by stringing a net and playing volleyball, or used as a football gate and our goalpost.

We were marched and kept to one side of the field. The S.S. were there, and the chief, I don't know what his rank was — I know he had gold braids and gold insignia — he picked up a piece of one-by-two, which is a piece of strapping, and he nailed it on the vertical four-by-four posts to form a sort of delta, and he ordered the first row to march single file under this doorway.

Q. Like a gate.

A. Yes. He used that one-by-two as a measuring stick, and we were marching under that single file, and again he was selecting people to go, kids to go into one {338|339} group or another direction, and soon they formed two groups.

Being, perhaps, streetwise, I hedged backwards. I kept on going back, and although I was yelled at to get back in line, I said that I was trying to join my brother, who is at the rear of the group. When the two groups were fairly large, I saw a break, or an opportunity, and I ran to the group and joined the group that looked sturdier.

Q. Sturdier?

A. Sturdier, yes, healthier. I found a couple of bricks and I stood on them to reach the same height as those children, because I was quite a bit shorter and I saw all the short kids in the other grouping. I was caught at this and beaten. I was running amongst this group when a whistle blew. One of the S.S. was yelling at the guy chasing me.

Q. All right. Now, you can't tell us what he said.

A. No. He just called him off my trail.

Q. And did this new man on the scene, did he participate further in the events of that day? Did he do something else that day?

A. No. He was just called off to surround the others. So he left me alone and I stayed with this group.

Q. So were you with the weaker group, or the sturdier group?

A. I stayed with a group that was sturdier, and we were – we stayed there until the other group was surrounded and marched off to barracks, and again {339|340} we were taken to our barrack after they were gone.

Q. Did you ever see any of those people again?

A. Yes. It so happens we were a fairly close group. Some of my very good friends were in that other group, and it was very hot and humid and they were in those barracks overnight, and they were calling for water. Although no food was given to them, they were yelling through the window to get water, which we had access to and they didn't, and some of our group ran over and passed water when we were watching through the windows, and we were sort of yelling our goodbyes to each other.

Q. Did you see what happened with that barracks for children the next morning?

A. No. There was lagersperre. The whole camp was ordered to barracks. They were – that group was then removed. They were yelling to us their goodbyes. They were marched off, and after they were out of the camp, the camp returned to normal.

Q. Did you see where they were marched off to? You couldn't see.

A. No. We were locked up.

Q. How many barracks are left now after this third selection?

A. There were about two barracks at this point – very loosely, because they weren't full.

Q. They weren't full?

A. They were not full. The two barracks were no longer full. We were – a couple of days later, another Jewish holiday of the Tabernacle series – there are eight days of Tabernacle – and one of these days, on the {340|341} last day, we had a final selection, and this time it was just – we were just herded together from the barrack we were in. We were moved now to one of the front barracks near the gate.

Q. Near the gate...

A. Near the exit gate. You see, the camp was so constructed that it had a gate at the front, and there was no other way to go out. There wasn't a rear exit. It was just a compound, and we were marched out in the morning to work, those who went to work, and the rest just stayed in.

Q. All right. Where was the exit gate in relation to the crematoria? Was that closer to your barracks? Firstly, where was it in relation to the crematoria?

A. Well, all this faced a main road. That main road led to the crematoria, or out.

Q. Or out. Either way.

A. Wherever, yes.

Q. Okay. You are moved to a barracks that was closer to the gate that would go to that main road, and in the centre of the camp.

A. Yes.

Q. And was there some selection process in that, or were all the children moved there?

A. About eighty per cent. I don't know how they got out, some of the bigger kids, but not everybody was in that area. We were just locked up in there for about two days. On the second day they brought in some of the sick people from the hospital. We had one barrack in there called the hospital barrack. From that barrack they brought in some people to us so we now had some older people {341|342} amongst us, and we were just locked up in there till about midafternoon when we were ordered up, lined up, and there we were surrounded by S.S. with dogs and drawn guns. We were then ordered to march to the gate, and as was the custom, you stopped at the gate while your leader reported to the guardhouse the number of people he is taking out, and for what purpose. Being in the middle of that group, I heard him report he is taking —

Q. All right. Sorry. You can't tell us where. You heard the report.

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. I heard him check us out.

Q. And did you go through the gate?

A. No.

Q. Did anybody go through the gate?

A. Yes. We were half – the guardhouse was outside of the gate, so half our group was outside the gate, but in front of the guardhouse.

Q. So they'd be out in that main road we are talking about in the centre of the camp?

A. At the entrance to the main road.

Q. All right. And had the line, the formation that you've described, had they turned to any particular direction on that main road?

A. No. They were just standing at attention while the guard would come out and count how many and verify that the number of prisoners taken out is correct.

Q. All right. Did the line, or the formation, ever turn in any direction, or did something {342|343} prevent that?

A. No. We were standing at attention and then, from the opposite direction came a high-ranking German officer with two S.S., one on each side of him, just seemed walking towards a camp, and he asked the guard, "Where are you going?"

Q. All right. You can't tell us what the guard said, but did you —

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think both the question and answer are hearsay.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. As a result of this officer's appearance, what happened with the lineup of children?

A. He marched us back. We were ordered to about face, marched into an empty barrack, and stood to one side of the barrack. Now, there were no beds in the barrack. It was completely empty. And as I described yesterday, there was a chimney dividing the barrack. We were told to line up on one side. The German officer stood on that chimney part, on that stove part, and ordered us to undress and, in a single file, appear before him.

Q. And did everybody undress?

A. Yes.

Q. And he gave some further instructions as a result of which what did everybody do in that barracks?

A. Well, in single file we appeared before him, and he then directed us to jump over to the other half of the barrack, or stay to the back of this side of the back.

Q. When it was your turn, were you {343|344} directed – did you ultimately stay, or jump over?

A. I jumped over.

Q. And those people that stayed were told – or did not jump over, did you see what happened with them, where they went?

A. No. They were – they were ordered out and marched off.

Q. All right. Did you see where they were marched off to?

A. In the same direction. I didn't see them past the barrack. I just saw them go out of the barrack heading in that direction.

Q. Heading, I'm sorry, in what direction – towards the gate, or —

A. Towards the gate.

Q. And did you ever see any of those children again?

A. No.

Q. How many are now left, how many barracks full of children are now left?

A. Barely one barrack.

Q. All this time, was there any change in the odour or the amount of smoke and flame that were coming out of the various crematorium?

A. There was the usual smoke that was associated with the volume of people going in that direction, but when transports came, there was more smoke, and when transports abated, there was less.

Q. Now, is there any way that you can see out of your barracks when you are on house arrest, when you are inside the barracks? {344|345}

A. Yes. There are four-by-four posts supporting the roofs, and we would shimmy up those posts to the window level. They were just narrow windows along the roof line. We would shimmy up and see what's going on.

Q. All right. In the fall of 1944 did anything happen that changed the amount of smoke at the crematorium? Only tell us what you saw.

A. Well, there was a sudden blocksperr[je]?

Q. What does that mean in English?

A. That means an alarm – "Everybody get into your barracks under orders not to get out". There were gongs that rang, and when you heard that gong you run to the nearest, even if it is not your barrack, you'd better get into your barrack, and if not your barrack, get into somebody else's.

Q. What happened if you don't?

A. You get shot. That means alert. The guards in the towers are in full alert, and whatever S.S. are in the compound they would shoot. There was shooting going on.

At that particular time, it was more than usual, and I shimmied up to see what's going on. There was, beside the gongs, there was also a siren blowing which indicated a heavier alarm than just a barrack alarm. That meant that all the camps were under house arrest. There was clear visibility. There was nobody out of the barracks.

Q. Is this daytime, or nighttime?

A. This was daytime. We heard a lot of shooting. I saw soldiers running, truckloads and jeeploads of soldiers appearing on the main road, driving somewhere in alarming speed. I saw S.S. running on foot. About three {345|346} hours later I saw some of them returning.

Q. What direction were they running in, and what seemed to be the centre of activity, from your observation?

A. They were all running towards the crematoria, in that area, and then past the crematoria.

Q. Okay.

A. My specific interest in that activity was that I was told that my father

THE COURT: No. Just a minute.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Let me ask you this. From the time that you ran away from home and went into the ghetto at your nearby town, did you ever see your mother and father again?

A. No.

Q. Or any of your brothers and sisters?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever seen them to this day?

A. No.

Q. Were you looking for your mother and father in the camp?

A. Yes.

Q. And asking for information about them from other people?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And so your attention was directed towards the crematoria.

THE COURT: Don't lead the witness. Ask the questions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. Did you have some belief about your {346|347} father, that he was alive in that area?

MR. CHRISTIE: This, of course, is an invitation to speculation on hearsay, which I have tried to object to on a number of occasions, hopefully not to interrupt but to say that we are in a court of law.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Christie. Members of the jury, you will totally ignore that last exchange between counsel and the witness.

Are you finished?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Oh, you are not finished with your examination?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. Sorry, Your Honour. I misunderstood your direction.

MR. CHRISTIE: So did I. I'm sorry.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: How long were you in house arrest on that occasion?

A. That lasted until evening.

Q. After that incident, the shooting or what-have-you, did the amount of smoke, flame from the various crematoria change at all?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the change?

A. It became minimal. That whole operation became downgraded. We saw occasional smoke to a much lesser extent.

Q. Did you see any further trainloads of people coming into Birkenau after that incident?

A. No. {347|348}

Q. Can you tell us about when that would have been?

A. That would have been around October.

Q. That would have been —

A. 1944.

Q. After October of 1944. Indeed, after that, did you ever see anybody die in this camp?

A. There was the normal death rate of people dying. You still saw the wagons collecting the dead bodies. Whether they died overnight in barracks, or committed suicide on the electric barbed wires.

Q. How would people commit suicide?

A. They simply walk up to the fence, or be too close to the fence, and either trip, or just reach out for the wires.

Q. How often did that happen?

A. Depended on the situation and the cycle of whatever happened.

Q. Well, during the time that you were there, can you give us some idea of whether that was frequent, or unusual, or —

A. It was quite frequent. Many people who were beaten, or saw no —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You can't speculate as to why. My only question is how frequent it was.

A. It happened. It was quite frequent.

THE COURT: He said it was quite frequent. What is the next question?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: How did you come to leave Auschwitz or Birkenau, rather?

A. In December of '44 we were simply {348|349} ordered to line up and marched off to Auschwitz.

Q. Can you tell us — that's about three kilometers away?

A. Three to five kilometers. It's a fairly short distance.

Q. Okay. And how long were you in Auschwitz for?

A. About one month.

THE COURT: I didn't hear that, I'm sorry.

THE WITNESS: One month.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Were you working in Auschwitz, or was it the same situation?

A. No. We were just given numbers there. We were tattooed and just left there. The only work we had there was about late October. Dr. Mengele came in and —

Q. I'm sorry, is this in Birkenau or Auschwitz?

A. Birkenau. And he stood on that fireplace —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, he what?

THE WITNESS: He stood on the fireplace, on the elevated part of the fireplace, and he said.

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Don't tell us what he said.

A. He invited us —

Q. No. I'm sorry. He came in and said some things, as a result of which did you do anything?

A. Yeah. We lined up for work. {349|350}

Q. All right. Did you go to work?

A. Yes.

Q. What kind of work?

A. To carry potatoes from a train. Trainload of potatoes was brought in and we had to carry stretchers, a stretcher-like unit, like they carry plaster —

Q. That was the only work that you did?

A. We carried potatoes to put away, yes.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not you volunteered for that?

A. Yes, after he assured us —

Q. Did you volunteer?

A. Well, with Mengele we were afraid to, but later we did, being assured of our survival.

Q. How did you come to leave Auschwitz?

A. In January, one evening we were ordered to line up in front of our barracks on the main road. Now, this was a different type of camp. These were two-storey brick buildings.

Q. The barracks were?

A. Yes. And there were roads, or streets, and we were customarily lined up for counting, for appel, or whatever, on these streets now.

We were ordered, after supper, to line up. We were given rations. We were, this time, given double rations of both margarine and bread and told that — to stand there until the order is given to march out of there.

Q. Now, you told us yesterday what a ration of, I think, of bread and margarine was. {350|351}

A. Yes. It's about —

Q. About that much in volume.

THE COURT: You are holding up a ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: A new Stenographer's pad, Your Honour, still wrapped up in plastic.

THE WITNESS: About midnight the order came to march. We were then surrounded by S.S., both on foot, on truck, and the Kommandant was on a horse, and we marched that whole night. The next day, about ten o'clock, we stopped. We were given some hot tea or coffee. It consisted of some leaves, I don't know what they were, but it was hot.

Q. Now, you said this was in January. Can you describe the weather?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. Describe the weather.

A. It was fierce, cold, crisp.

Q. And what clothing were you issued?

A. We were not issued anything. We just wore what we had — torn jacket and pants — and if you were lucky to have shoes. It was so cold that when I stopped on the road to put some frozen margarine on my bread, I had an S.S. point a gun at the back of my neck, I looked up and I asked him what he's doing. He says, "I thought you'll bend over"

Q. You can't tell us what he said.

A. But it was frozen.

Q. All right. Can you tell us whether that was just your barracks, or more than just your barracks?

A. The whole thing.

Q. The whole of Auschwitz? {351|352}

A. All of Auschwitz. Preceding us — we were the second group. The men were the second group. Preceding us were the women's camp, the female camp, and they were marching ahead of us.

Q. On the same road?

A. On the same road.

Q. Did you see anything on the side of the road?

A. Yes, their bodies on both sides of the road.

Q. Can you tell us — I am not asking for numbers, but how many bodies?

A. A lot.

Q. Volume of bodies, quantity of bodies? Were there a lot or a few?

THE COURT: If you know.

THE WITNESS: There were a lot, but there were clusters at times, and sometimes there were single bodies. The rule was —

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry. I can't ask you that. Did you ever go back to your village at the end of the War?

A. Yes. In 1977.

Q. Not before then?

A. Oh, I went after the War, yes. Immediately after the War we were repatriated back to our chosen designations, and I went back to find my family.

Q. All right. Did you look for any of the fifty families that you told us about at the beginning of this testimony?

A. Yes, of course. {352|353}

Q. And are you able to tell us a percentage of how many of those families were still there?

A. None of the families were there, but there were individual members from about six families, although some families there were two or three members.

Q. Before the War did you have any uncles, cousins, greatparents?

A. Yes.

Q. After the War did you ever see any of those people here?

A. I saw some cousins.

Q. How many, do you know?

A. In one family there's five. In another family there's one. Other families none came back.

Q. Out of how many in your large family?

A. Well, I would have to count each family, the number of children.

Q. Do you know what molten iron smells like — hot iron?

A. Hot iron? No, not particularly.

Q. Do you know what it smells like when somebody puts a horseshoe on a horse?

A. Oh, yes. We used to hang around smitty during grades in school.

Q. And can you tell us whether the odour that you smelled was anything like a horseshoe going on a horse?

A. No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is that not leading?

THE COURT: Yes. You can rephrase that, Mr. Griffiths. {353|354}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. How would you compare the odour that you smelled at Birkenau with that of the horseshoe going on a horse?

A. Oh, there are vast differences. One is that shoeing a horse, you only smelled the burning hoofs for seconds, and there is only a puff of smoke; and the Birkenau smell was continuous, sometimes for days.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Do you wish to start now, Mr. Christie, or do you wish I intend to break at eleven thirty. I am in your hands.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it best to start now.

THE COURT: You certainly may.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. I am going to show you, sir, a book that is entitled, "Auschwitz K.L.". I guess that means Konzentrationslager. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And on the back it has some maps. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. I think on the back page — correct me if I am wrong — but you were shown this at the preliminary. Is that right, sir?

A. Probably.

Q. I suggest to you that that is a map and plan of the Birkenau portion of the Auschwitz complex. Would that be correct?

A. Yes.

Q. I'd ask you to tell me, if you may — and is it not correct that the railroad line is depicted running from the bottom to the top of that picture on the dotted lines — these?

A. Yes. They are running from here.

Q. The bottom to the top.

A. Okay. {355|356}

Q. And beside the railroad track it appears there is a road runs along. I would suggest on the lefthand side of the picture. Would that be right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to, if I may, get a photocopy of what I think is this, and you can compare it and make sure I got it right.

Would you agree with me, sir, that you can identify certain things on that map that are familiar to you in – sorry, did you hear me?

A. I don't know what certain things you are talking about.

Q. I just wonder if it looks familiar to you.

A. Not really. I've never seen – I know the view of a person from the inside being marched on a street, but if I presented to you a map of Toronto, I don't know what –

Q. You wouldn't know what it looked like?

A. I don't know what you expect me to get.

Q. Well, you would recognize a map of Toronto, wouldn't you? {356|357}

A. Not particularly.

Q. No? How long have you lived here?

A. Twenty odd years.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that you could remember certain things on a map of Toronto if you have been here for twenty-five years.

A. Yes, for sure.

Q. And you weren't in Auschwitz for twenty-five years, obviously. Right?

A. No.

Q. So it would be more difficult for you to identify the exact location of things, I suppose.

A. That's true.

Q. Right. You were there for how long, sir?

A. About nine months.

Q. Nine months. So in that period of time you'd certainly be able to recognize some things, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. I gather from my information that you'd be kept in a particular area of the camp and you really couldn't travel over the whole camp, so perhaps that {357|358} would be correct, would it?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, I've given you the photocopy, and in a minute I was going to ask you if you could see that it is a photocopy of what you've identified as a general plan of Birkenau. Would that be correct? The one on your right here.

A. I not sure if this is what I saw there, because I was always restricted to one camp, and only – all I could see was what you see pass. I could see the railroad, of course. I could see the main street.

Q. The main street.

A. The street where we marched out, the gates, the entrance gates were here.

Q. You are sort of pointing to parts of the picture. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. So some of it you recognize.

A. Some of it I recognize, yes.

Q. And to the extent that you recognize it, you agree it's accurate?

A. It is like looking at a house and looking at a blueprint. You can't identify some things. {358|359}

Q. Okay. I am not suggesting to you that you can identify everything on the map, but it's consistent with your recollection, would you say?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, sir. And you were there for how many months again, sir?

A. About nine.

Q. Nine months. Okay.

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, if I may, then, I'd like to mark that as an exhibit, and I'd like to use that to refer to, if I may, and then we can write on it.

THE COURT: That will be Exhibit 8.

EXHIBIT NO. 8: Photocopied excerpt from book, "Auschwitz K.L." showing map of Birkenau complex.

THE COURT: That's a map of Birkenau?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it is. That's my understanding.

Q. I would like to get a pen and ask you if you – you got one? Okay. Could you help me by identifying the main gate? Now, there's a main gate that we described, or you described as being the place where the railroad track came in. Is that right? AG 87 (6/16) {359|360}

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Would it be proper, Your Honour, if I could give each member a copy to follow along?

THE COURT: I don't see anything wrong with that. Do you see anything wrong with that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. I don't at all, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Because I think that might assist.

Q. The number "A", I suggest to you, on there, is where the railroad is.

A. The entrance, yes.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, I missed that last part.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is where the railroad track came in.

Q. And I think you said the entrance. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I am showing to my friend – now, there may be a problem here. I'd better ask my friend to check and compare. I can assure Your Honour it is identical, but it has some writing on the {360|361} top of it, and if my friend – that is where it came from, from this book. Do you want to make sure? Is it okay?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I am satisfied, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to make sure that this is exactly the same as that. There is some writing on it, but in the same respect it is the same.

THE COURT: Did you take a photostatic copy of the map that is in the book?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I did, sir. And then I photocopied what is written on the top, "K.L. Auschwitz". It is written in French. And I believe it is the title of the book that I showed, and the year it was published and the date.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: So I may give each member of the jury a copy?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay.

Q. Now, sir, I think so far we've only got to the point of describing the area known as "A". Is that right, sir?

A. Yes. {361|362}

Q. And that is the main gate. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, could you help us by describing where you went first when you came into the camp?

A. Well, you entered "A". The train entered "A", and you disembarked along these lines.

Q. Yeah. Now, by "these lines", for the benefit of the jury, I think you mean just where there is sort of a double track?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a siding there?

A. Yes.

Q. And at a point in the middle of the siding it says "E". Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. It is kind of small and it is between the two tracks. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And to the right of that was what – the ramp? Like to the right of the "E", would that be where you got off?

A. That was just an empty space. You {362|363} get off the train and line up in rows.

Q. And from there where did you go, sir?

A. We were marched off to the back.

Q. To the back. Down the railroad track to...

A. To some point here somewhere.

Q. Now, for the record, you are indicating some point between what's marked as "K II" and "K III"?

A. "K III". Right.

Q. Somewhere there?

A. Somewhere there, yes.

Q. And did you go and have a shower?

A. Yes.

Q. It was necessary to have a shower and everybody was obliged to have one. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it true that you had to take your clothes off, and I believe the men and women were separated for the shower. Right?

A. Yes. At that point they were segregated not only men and women, but working people or healthy people and the others.

Q. And you were, at this stage, certainly {363|364} not regarded, at least, as a working person. Is that right?

A. Yes. During that time they collected some younger children between those ages and we were just kept with that group.

Q. Okay.

A. As healthy youngsters.

Q. And after you were segregated you went for a shower.

A. Yes.

Q. And it was a real shower with real water and no gas. Right?

A. No gas.

Q. Okay. And you had to give your clothes in to somebody, I gather.

A. No, you didn't. You just got undressed outside and were told to march in and get shorn and get showered.

Q. Do you know if your clothes were picked up and put into a sealed room where there was something done to the clothes?

A. No. We, after the shower, we marched out the other end of the building and were issued different clothing. {364|365}

Q. Different clothing?

A. We never saw our clothing again.

Q. I see. That is the clothing you came with. Right? That you lost at that point.

A. That's right.

Q. I see. And was there a problem on the trains? And I am sure there was discomfort – right – terrible discomfort on those trains?

A. Right.

Q. And it would be terribly crowded?

A. Yes.

Q. And probably very dirty.

A. Smelly, yes.

Q. Yes. And you suffered a great deal on the train because of the confinement and the lack of sanitation facilities and the humiliation of having to use an obviously crude toilet, and that was terribly humiliating, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, after you got off the train, then, you got a shower and new clothes. Or not new clothes, but clothes.

A. Yes. {365|366}

Q. All right. And do you remember where that shower was that you had on this diagram?

A. On the map? No. But somewhere towards this area.

Q. All right. Somewhere towards – you pointed to the area of "K II" and "K III".

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, from the area where you had your shower and got the new clothes, where did you go?

A. We were marched along this route. How would you describe that?

Q. Well, let's see if we can describe it. Now, I am going to try and put it into words and you correct me if I am wrong.

A. All right.

Q. We are situated now between "K II" and "K III" and you are marched along a road which you describe to me as being just at the bottom underneath "K III". Right?

A. Yes. But I am not sure if that is a road, or —

Q. It's hard to tell in there.

A. Yes. {366|367}

Q. Could it be that you went down to the point where the railroad line ends and turns right?

A. Yes. It's quite possible.

Q. Okay. And there seems to be a road from the end of the railroad line, it turns right. In fact, there's two roads apparently parallel. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. It looks like it.

A. Yes.

Q. And one of them seems to go gradually further to the right and back into the camp.

A. No. From memory that was not that far out. We were not gone that far. We were marched out from here a short distance.

Q. And then —

A. To —

Q. Okay. Could I just follow your pen so the jury can understand?

A. Yes.

Q. You are saying you were marched down to what appears almost the fence line just underneath "K III" to the right? {367|368}

A. Towards "K IV".

Q. Towards "K IV". And then you turned right?

A. Down.

Q. Down a road.

A. That's right.

Q. So now you are going down the road. Could we maybe hold it down to the jury so they can see?

You are coming down the road on the righthand side of the barracks. Can everybody see that? So that's where you came down. Is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. So now you are coming back down to the bottom of the diagram. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, can you tell me where along this line you got in towards the barracks? Okay. Now, is that marked "b" and it's got "one one" and "a". Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that was a row of barracks. Right?

A. If I may give you another designation, you've got an "a" beside it. That was Camp "A". The next {368|369} one was camp "B", "C", "D", "E" and "F".

Q. Okay. So now, if we want to designate the type of camp now, it's "A", "B", "C", "D", "E" and "F", and they are on the extreme righthand side by what looks like a fence. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, camp "A" has a series of looks like locks. Those are barracks, are they?

A. Yes.

Q. And in each one was how many people, roughly?

A. It depends how many they crammed in at the time to get everybody inside the barracks.

Q. I see.

A. The main object was to get everybody inside a barrack.

Q. Were these barracks under the "A" designation, would they be anything special in the camp? Were they for a special group of people, or what were they for?

A. It was more of a holding type of barracks than a permanent. For instance, "C" was designated as a women's camp. "D" was designated as a workers' camp. {369|370} Men were marched out every day to work. Now, "C" was —

Q. I was going to suggest to you, and if I am right maybe you can tell me, that "A" was a quarantine camp for somebody who just arrived. Would that be —

A. It may well be.

Q. Okay. So you were in "A" for some time. Right?

A. For a short couple of weeks.

Q. Couple of weeks. Okay. Now, could you tell me where you went in this camp after that?

A. We went into one other camp, and – I don't remember whether it was "B" or "C". I think "C" was the women's camp and, therefore, we would be in "B", the second camp, or the other way around. Later on, about two months later, we wound up in "D", in separate children's barracks.

Q. I see. So for some time you were in either "B" or "C"?

A. No. I was in "A" and sometimes "B" or "C".

Q. So how long were you in "B" or "C"?

A. Just a week here, two weeks there. {370|371} The longest period I spent was in "D".

Q. In "D". All right. So you were perhaps two to three weeks in "B" and "C".

A. Yes.

Q. And then you were in.

A. "D".

Q. In "D" for how long?

A. Oh, for about five, six months.

Q. Five to six months.

THE COURT: Can we leave it there, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

— The jury retires 11:30 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— The jury returns 11:57 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Hr. Friedman, we were, before the break, we were drawing, or endeavouring to identify the camps. would you call them camps "A", "B", "C", and "D"?

A. Yes.

Q. They'd be where you were. Is that {371|372} right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would like to refer to the camps, and perhaps you could mark on them in this yellow felt highlighter pen the various camps you were in. And then we'll number them for the time sequence of your attendances in them. Okay?

A. All right.

Q. So the first was "A", I believe.

Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Could we take the pen and just block the whole of that camp off? We will just run the pen right down. Thanks. Now, you were then in either, I think you said, "B" or "C". Right?

A. "B" most probably.

Q. Okay. Then, let's put that as also the one that you were in. All right. And then, finally, for the six months you were in "D".

A. "D".

Q. And that is, could we mark that in, too? Okay. Now, am just going to take this and show it to the jury so that we understand what it is we are dealing {372|373} with. Okay? Now, am I correct in understanding that you went from "A" to "B" to "D"? And it is impossible to get out of the "D" camp although you can go from barrack to barrack. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And there are several barracks in "D", for instance. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Would there be about twenty, twenty-one, perhaps? Would you like to count them?

A. There are fifteen in each row. That would make it thirty per camp.

Q. Thirty per camp.

A. With the exception of "A". That only has, one row.

Q. "A" is the smallest camp and the rest are of equal size.

A. Yes.

Q. And then it appears that you could, therefore, go from the first row of "D" to the top row of "D". Could you?

A. Yes.

Q. So that actually your ability to move {373|374} in "D" camp would include the top half.

A. I'm sorry?

Q. No?

A. You are indicating "E". The other half of "D" is the lower part.

Q. I see. There seems to be a roadway that seems to cut "D" in half. Is that right?

A. This is a heavier roadway, yes.

Q. And there is a fence, it seems, on either side of the roadway, it would appear from the diagram.

A. No. I beg your pardon. You were right. The upper part is "D".

Q. All right. That's what I thought.

A. And I think there is a main road dividing the two.

Q. Between "D" and "E" there is a main road?

A. A main road, yes.

Q. So "D" includes the two columns above "D" or, rather, the column with "D" on it and the one above?

A. Yes. {374|375}

Q. Let's mark that because you could go through all of that.

A. Yes.

Q. So let's mark that as an area to which you had access. Would that be fair?

A. Yes.

Q. And – sorry?

A. "B" is the same thing. The upper part is also "B".

Q. All right. So that "B" and "D" include two columns each and there is sort of a divider, but you can see that you can move around the end.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. So those were the camps that you were confined in for the entire period you were there, except if you went out to work.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And it seems, from my understanding, that the building at the end of each of those roads, that kind of at right angles to them is a kitchen, would that be true, where you went to eat?

A. No. We did not go to eat. The food was brought to us to the barracks with a delegation {375|376} from each batch going to the kitchen to pick up the food.

Q. All right. But it was a kitchen.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, you were describing a series of selections, and I wonder which camp they occurred in.

A. "D".

Q. In "D". So that's where you were firmly established there and had sort of settled in.

A. Yes.

Q. It would be after a period of how long?

A. I'd be guessing, because we had no way of marking time. We had no calendars or anything like that.

Q. No calendars. It would be after a month, perhaps?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, was there a problem of lice in the camp at all?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you know from your own experience that lice caused a disease called typhus? {376|377}

A. Yes.

Q. And that disease is often fatal, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Especially when you aren't well nourished and not fed properly, or enough?

A. Or the lice are plentiful, yes.

Q. And where there is overcrowding.

A. Yes.

Q. So would you agree that that was the situation in the camp?

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Would it be fair to say that when people get typhus, they start to lose weight, from your experience?

A. Yes.

Q. And they – and of course, it spreads pretty rapidly, doesn't it, in a confined place like a camp?

A. Yes. Medical opinion, but...

Q. Well, probably also an experience of yours.

A. Yes. {377|378}

Q. All right. Would you agree that the process of showering was designed to get rid of those lice?

A. No. The way we combatted lice was by having, once or twice a week, made to sit down in organized fashion like we were lined up for counting. We would then sit down, take off our clothing and physically hunt for lice. Our clothing was changed about once a month by taking it to be steamed and then you'd get the steamed clothing back, although in many cases, it did not kill the lice.

Q. Did you see the clothing steamed?

A. No.

Q. No. It was simply taken away and cleaned somehow and returned to you.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And you never worked, I believe, is that right, except on one occasion we've heard of to unload a potato train?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. And were you sick in the camp at all?

A. No.

Q. Never sick? {378|379}

A. No.

Q. And you were never forced to work?

A. No.

Q. And there were, I would suspect, in these confined circumstances without work, you young people would be very worried about what was happening.

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear rumours?

A. Constantly.

Q. It would be fair to say that people were always discussing what was – discussing things in the camp. Right?

A. Discussing, analysing.

Q. And they would also be very unhappy in the camp.

A. Terrified, yes. Unhappy. A state of mind.

Q. Are you aware – you have, no doubt, seen movies over the last forty years about the Holocaust?

A. Some, yes.

Q. And have you read books about it?

A. Not much.

Q. No. Are you aware that children {379|380} sometimes went from Auschwitz to other camps?

A. Some of our group. Very few were tall enough to be mistaken for grown men.

Q. Well, you were never mistaken for a grown man, I gather.

A. That's why I never went to work.

Q. You never went to work. And are you aware that Anne Frank went from Auschwitz to Bergen-Belsen? Have you been aware of that?

A. I have been aware, but I did not read her book.

Q. You are aware of it?

A. I was on a tour of her house in Belgium, but I did not read her works.

Q. And for example, she was a child and she went from Auschwitz to Bergen-Belsen. Right?

A. I'm not sure.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just a second.

THE COURT: Just a minute, gentlemen. Hold it. Let him carry on, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. That's only on the basis of having toured her house and studied a little bit about that, I guess? {380|381}

A. I didn't study. I just went for an hour tour when I was in Brussels.

Q. I see. And for example, children like Eli Weisel who went from Auschwitz to Buchenwald, are you aware of that, later afterwards?

A. Yes, I was aware of him.

Q. And did you sometimes attend meetings of survivors?

A. Sometimes.

Q. And there were discussions there about what went on?

A. No. We are not addicted to that kind of stuff.

Q. You get together basically?

A. And do what, boast about how I made it?

Q. I am not trying —

A. I am trying to understand.

Q. To share your experiences.

A. Rarely. The subject does come up.

THE COURT: Did you say really or rarely?

THE WITNESS: Rarely.

THE COURT: Thank you. {381|382}

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Now, in your evidence you said that certain people were marched off towards what you described as the crematorium. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. But think you said that it was in the distance. You could only see the outline of it.

A. Yes.

Q. And naturally, you also said that you couldn't see any entrances to it or exits.

A. No.

Q. That's true.

A. That is true.

Q. And think you said that somewhere or other you have either – you said that this was an extermination camp.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Although you never saw any gassings or burnings at all.

A. No.

Q. All right. And would it be fair to say that you also said that there was only one entrance to the camp?

A. One entrance to each camp. {382|383}

Q. I see.

A. Are you talking about the whole camp?

Q. I meant the whole camp. Is that what you understood?

A. There is only one entrance, one major gate, guarded entrance, which then divides into the "A", "B", "C", "D" camps.

Q. So I am right to say there is only one entrance to the main camp?

A. Yes.

Q. And by the "main camp" I mean the whole complex in which "A", "B", "C", "D" and "E" are included.

A. Yes.

Q. And one thing I noticed, sir. At the back – in other words, if you come in through gate "A", from the bottom of the diagram, you are on the railroad. You get off around the ramp and you go up towards "K II" or "K III". There's also a road that goes out between "K II" and "K III", and it appears to go right out of the camp.

A. Right.

Q. Yes. So if people went in that direction, they could also have gone right out of the camp. {383|384}

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you know that there was a Jungenlager near Birkenau?

A. No.

Q. You didn't know that.

A. No.

Q. And it was out that road, out that way?

A. No. We were not given any information about anything past what we saw.

Q. I understand.

THE COURT: I'd like to ask the witness what Jungenlager means.

THE WITNESS: It's a young people's camp.

MR. CHRISTIE: It's a young people's camp.

Q. Well, maybe I should ask. I didn't pronounce it very well, but —

A. Yes. I understood it.

Q. I thought perhaps it would be more familiar in that language because it was the language – would it not be the language you were talked to by the German guard? {384|385}

A. Commanded, yes.

Q. Did you understand German very well?

A. Fairly well.

Q. Were you aware that there was other camps in the surrounding area to which people were moved from time to time?

A. There were work areas. Whether they were mines or working factories – and mobile work stations, yes. There were all kinds of work detail where men went to.

Q. Now, in your experience would it be true to say that not seeing the crematorium at all, that was the direction where some people went out of the camp or towards that you never saw again?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. A complicated question. Did you earlier on indicate that that was the direction certain people went?

A. Yes.

Q. That you never saw again.

A. That's right.

Q. Right. We now, I think, agree there was a roadway that went out of the camp in that direction, too. Right? {385|386}

A. There is a roadway marked on that map, but I was never – I never saw the roadway or —

Q. I understand, because you couldn't, really.

A. I never walked into that area.

Q. You were not allowed to walk?

A. I was not allowed to walk.

Q. Now, you gave a description at one point of something that happened in the gypsy camp, I think. Was that right, one night?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. All right. You told us that there was a commotion in the middle of the night, I think.

A. Yes.

Q. And the people were herded into trucks.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could you tell us where the gypsy camp was from you?

A. At that time I was in "D" camp and it was either "A" or "B".

Q. The gypsy camp was either "A" or "B"?

A. I would think from memory that it was {386|387} "A".

Q. Now, you said they were loaded into trucks and moved towards a birch wood.

A. Well, they were moved along this road at the entrance to the camps.

Q. I see. Excuse me. For the benefit of the jury, they can't see what we are talking about, and where you pointed. Could you point to the road along which they moved?

A. Well, camp "A", at the bottom of the diagram, and they were taken along the northern route here towards this area.

Q. Is this the birch wood area that is an area of "K IV" and "K V"?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And that's the roadway you described. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you noticed that that roadway turns to the left immediately after "K IV" and "K V", on the diagram at least.

A. Yes.

Q. And it connects to, the road that also {387|388} leads out of the camp.

A. Yes.

Q. I see. Thank you. So maybe we should mark that road so that we know in any future time what we are talking about.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, it's a road that this witness hasn't identified, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. He said that – he described the road. But my friend really shouldn't try to tell the witness what he said. If I am making an objectionable question, I understand that, but I would just like the witness to identify the roadway that he saw the trucks on.

THE WITNESS: Passing the main entrance to each camp.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Okay. I got a pen now, and could you somehow identify that roadway? Okay. And carry on to where the roadway goes.

A. The roadway goes on the map. I didn't see them past that point.

Q. I understand. Okay.

A. My line of vision was limited to the trees or the tree area. Whatever passed past that was unknown {388|389} to me.

Q. I see. Thank you. So you've drawn arrows. Do you mean to indicate that the portion inside the lines is the roadway? And you drew on the arrows to the right of the roadway?

A. Well, the roadway was past the gate locking us in.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. This is the main area I am talking about. Whether I am on the right side of the line, or the left side of the line...

Q. It doesn't really matter much.

A. It doesn't matter, but they drove past here and into this area.

Q. I see. I noticed the arrows are sort of not like inside those two lines. Is that the road in the two lines there? Like, is this all open?

A. I am not sure.

Q. All right.

A. I took this whole area, roadway. I would treat these little spots here as the outside of the...

Q. Gate?

A. The gate, the guardhouse. And once {389|390} you get past the guardhouse you are on the roadway.

Q. On the roadway. So can we point that out to the jury, that the guardhouse is the little block – am I pointing correctly, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. That is immediately to the left, say, of the letter "a". And then the roadway is immediately to the right of that. Is that right, sir, to the right of the guardhouse?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And that goes up between "K IV" and "K V". Is that right?

A. Well, the line extends.

Q. Yeah. You didn't see the area, but that is where that line extends?

A. Yes.

Q. And it turns left there and goes below the letter "F". Is that right?

A. Well, the line is obviously there to the diagram.

Q. That is not an area that you could see, though, from where you were?

A. No, not the roadway. There was no {390|391} trees other than that there. There were no other trees or other obstructions hiding anything. In other words, if you saw something moving you saw it moving to a point, and then you did not see it.

Q. Right. So your line of vision from camp "D" was just about – would it be to the point where "F" is? Or could you see further?

A. Yes. About that.

Q. Okay. So that is, as far as you could see, where "F" is.

A. Yeah.

Q. And from there, whatever became of the roadway, you didn't really know.

A. No.

Q. All right. Now, as far as the smoke I thought you indicated that the smoke, at first, it seemed like you indicated – correct me if I am wrong – that the smoke permeated the whole camp almost every day?

A. Not almost every day. There were times with the wind or whatever, the humidity factor and so on, you had for days a smell. Other days you didn't.

Q. Right. You told us there were people {391|392} frequently who died at night in the camp.

A. Yes.

Q. Either suicide or whether other causes – typhus, for example?

A. No.

Q. Nobody ever died of typhus?

A. They were not announced why they moved anybody, but the threat – we were threatened that if we don't delouse properly and get into typhoid, they exterminate the whole barrack. That was a threat.

Q. That is what you say, but I didn't ask you what was somebody else's words. But did anyone die of typhus in the camp?

A. They did not report to me.

Q. They never reported them.

A. Not to me.

Q. The cause of death —

A. Was not given out to inmates as that barrack was removed because of typhoid fever.

Q. Well, did you see anyone who appeared to die from typhus?

A. No.

Q. Never. {392|393}

A. I wasn't concerned with that. That was not my duty to inspect barracks.

Q. Did you see people who were taken out in the morning who had died?

A. I've seen the wagon being pulled with the cadavers collected on them, yes.

Q. And how many?

A. How many does a wagon hold?

Q. I don't know. You tell me.

A. Sometimes they were to the brim, and sometimes they were half empty. But that was a routine.

Q. And it was a routine. And they were then – what, were they buried or what happened?

A. Well, we were not invited to any funerals, so I don't know. I didn't see any funerals.

Q. Where did you see the bodies being taken?

A. In that same direction.

Q. To what direction?

A. Towards the crematoria.

Q. So you're saying – where is the crematoria, now?

A. In that same area. {393|394}

Q. Now, you are pointing to the area of "K IV" and "K V". Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever read Mr. Zundel's book, "Did six Million Really Die?"

A. No.

Q. So you don't know what it says, really?

A. I am not here judging this book. am just giving you evidence.

Q. I appreciate that. Have you heard it described in the media?

A. No.

Q. Never.

A. No.

Q. The crematorium was in the direction of the bodies that were taken of the people who died overnight. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say that if people had typhus, it was something that you were told about by somebody else as to what happened to them.

A. I wasn't told. We were threatened {394|395} just with that.

Q. That is what somebody tells you, I, gather. You say threatened you?

A. They told us if we don't delouse and typhus breaks out, we would all be cremated.

Q. I see.

A. We would all be gassed.

Q. Oh? Well, you said it right the first time, I suppose. People died from typhus and you were told that, weren't you, that it was a serious problem in the camp?

A. No. It was not a serious problem. The camp only consisted of healthy people, and those weak were eliminated.

Q. From the camp.

A. From the camp.

Q. And what became of them you, personally, do not know.

A. I did not witness.

Q. There was a hospital in the camp, wasn't there?

A. Yes.

Q. And people were taken there? {395|396}

A. Yes.

Q. And some people had teeth pulled there, like bad teeth, one tooth?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that on a previous occasion you recalled people going to the hospital to have a tooth pulled.

A. People went to hospital for whatever their personal reasons were. They did not check with me.

Q. And they would come back from the hospital.

A. Some, yes.

Q. Now, when it comes to smoke, and your evidence was the smell was of burning flesh, are you aware of the existence of a factory known as Monowitz within two kilometers of Birkenau?

A. Only from hearing. It was Monowitz. There was Gleiwitz. There were various other camps where people said they went to work, but I did not see those places. I did not go there.

Q. Was there a soccer field?

A. Where?

Q. In the camp? {396|397}

A. No. There was an area that had a goal post for a soccer field, but I only remember vaguely once seeing soccer being played amongst the Kapos and Blockältestes.

Q. Could you describe —

A. These are block barrack chiefs.

Q. Could you describe that on Exhibit 8, where that was?

A. It will be somewhere in this —

Q. May I make a suggestion to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Correct me if I am wrong. I suggest to you it's just underneath "Kill" in that open space. Would you agree?

A. No. We never left the area to go out.

Q. I see.

A. This was just in the camp.

Q. Okay. Could you mark — this is another coloured felt pen, if you could just mark that.

THE COURT: That colour is red.

MR. CHRISTIE: It looks pink, I hope. Yes, it is pink.

Q. Now, I am just going to show the jury {397|398} where you've described the soccer — well, the area where you saw the soccer played once.

A. Yes.

Q. And if I'm correct, that is really on the end of your barracks area.

A. Yes. It's at the end of that camp. Camp "B".

Q. Right. I'm going to read to you just a little part of your testimony on a former occasion, and I am going to just read from page 230, line 9. I am just going to show it to you.

A. Mm-hmm.

Q. And you can read it over and I will just ask you if you were asked this question and if you gave that answer.

A. I think so.

Q. Okay. I'll just put this into the record, that you agree that you were asked:

"Did any of the other boys in your barrack receive treatment there?"

That was medical treatment in the hospital facility. Right?

A. Yes {398|399}

Q. And then your answer was:

"Yes. If he had a toothache or if he had injured himself or something, he would go to the hospital barracks."

A. Yes.

Q. Right? Okay. So you must have become aware of that upon a person's returning, I suppose.

A. Not really, but they did return. We had epileptics. One particular case I remember, he was beaten for not standing during the appel[l]. He was subsequently carried to the hospital and he returned.

Q. Okay. Thank you. I was going to suggest to you something — do you have the Exhibit 8 in your hand there?

A. Yes.

Q. I was going to suggest to you that the gypsy camp was "E". Just next to yours at "D".

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest that perhaps that's true. Maybe — would you agree?

A. No.

Q. All right.

A. But that camp "E" was used for transient {399|400} types groups from time to time. As I indicated yesterday, at one time there were midgets gathered there. At another time I saw some other people. It wasn't a specific area where they had permanent people at one time, as opposed to "D" where it was a working camp.

Q. Right. Well, "D" was a working camp in which you were. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. But you didn't work.

A. Right.

Q. I see.

A. But the camp was designated as a working camp.

Q. I understand. The other camp "E" was a transient camp.

A. I don't know.

Q. I thought that's what you said.

A. Yes. Transient type people are seen there through the wire from time to time, but I had no communication with them.

Q. Okay. Do you know if there were metal works and blacksmith shops in Birkenau?

A. I don't know of any. {400|401}

Q. Do you know if the trains – they certainly wouldn't be diesel trains, would they? They would be steam engines that brought the —

A. Yes.

Q. Were they coal fired or oil fired?

A. I was in the passenger part of the train.

Q. Was this a low, swampy area?

A. I'm sorry, I can't give you that answer, either.

Q. It is true, isn't it, that it's pretty hard to differentiate the various smells that we smell from time to time. For example, you've never been around an iron works, have you?

A. No.

Q. It has a very – well, it's indescribable – well, you don't know, do you?

A. Well, I travelled through Buffalo and I travelled through Hamilton, so I can tell that part of the smell, but I was not in an iron works per se.

Q. All right. You gave some evidence about flames spewing out of a chimney, I think. Right?

A. Yes. {401|402}

Q. Okay. Now, this was, I gather, what you've described as a crematorium.

A. Yes.

Q. And that was some distance away. You could see the outline.

A. Yes.

Q. You don't know, I suppose, the matter of there being flames fourteen feet high. You never said that.

A. Fourteen feet high?

Q. Yes. Flames spewing fourteen feet out of the chimney.

A. When I refer to measurements, I cannot tell you from that distance whether it was fourteen feet high or thirteen feet high, but they were in excess of the height of the chimney.

Q. In excess?

A. Quite above the chimney. There was open flame spewing out of the chimney.

Q. And this is something you describe as going on day and night.

A. Sometimes, yes. At the height of a period when they brought in trains continuously, that smell {402|403} was continuing, that fire and smell was continuing.

Q. Mm-hmm. I am going to refer to page 225 of a transcript of your testimony at the preliminary, and I want you to read it over and make sure that – I want to ask you if this reflects your testimony at the time, and I will start with line 7:

"How often would you see flames from these chimneys?

A. Quite often, especially on a clear day. If there was no rain you could see these flames clearly going up.

Q. Coming out of the chimney?

A. Yes.

Q. How tall were these flames?

A. I would say about fourteen feet roughly.

Q. Now, the sketch indicates something at the northwest of the far left. It says 'K2, 3, 4, and 5'. If I were to suggest to you that those were the crematorium locations does that coincide with your recollection of what you observed?

A. Yes. {403|404}

Q. Were you asked those questions and did you give those answers?

A. Yes.

Q. And were they true?

A. Yes, but the fourteen feet height, flame shooting out fourteen feet or twelve feet or ten feet, for that matter, are a matter of guessing rather than measuring.

Q. May I suggest to you that fourteen-foot flames or ten-foot flames or five-foot flames going out of a chimney of a crematorium, it would burn the chimney? Would you not agree?

A. I am not an expert on that, but they were wide chimneys.

Q. White chimneys?

A. Wide. As they were quite – they were not the regular house chimney.

Q. Is it your evidence that the noise of this was day and night and it was so bad you couldn't sleep?

A. The noise?

Q. Of this burning chimney.

A. I didn't say anything about noise. {404|405} It was noise coming from that direction of people yelling and screaming.

Q. Oh?

A. Of guards yelling and dogs barking. Shootings, like sporadic single shots.

Q. This is the area where you saw the gypsies loaded into the trucks.

A. No. You are asking me about the crematoria here, or the gas chamber area.

Q. Wasn't that the area where you said you saw the gypsies loaded into the trucks and taken there?

A. No. The gypsies were taken from the camp and driven towards there.

Q. How far was it from the gypsy camp over wherever it was to, say, "K IV" and "K V"?

A. What do you mean by how far? In feet, distance?

Q. Well, if it's feet, use feet.

A. It's just past, outside of these camps.

Q. Well – yeah. It's not very far, then, eh?

A. No. {405|406}

Q. A couple of hundred yards?

A. Possibly, yes.

Q. You mean to say that they loaded these gypsies into the trucks to take them a couple of hundred yards?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see them unload them?

A. No, but heard.

Q. You heard?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you hear somebody being unloaded?

A. The screams and the light coming from that area and the motor and the sporadic shooting, single shots here and there is what is heard, although I couldn't see what specific movement took place there.

Q. It's my understanding that you say that in addition to the fourteen-foot high flames going out of the chimneys, you also indicated that you could tell the difference between skinny people or fat people from the colour of the flames. Did you say that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you mean to have us believe that {406|407} the difference of colour would be determined by the people who were being burned? Right?

A. Well, as we said earlier —

Q. Please, please.

A. We were discussing various things and this was part of the discussion of the guesswork we kids had in guessing that these were Hungarian transports because they have these type of flame, and these are Polish transports, they're very skinny, and therefore it's low fat people who were being burned, and therefore – but this was not medical evidence.

Q. It was guessing. It was you kids having guessing games.

A. Of our discussion at the time.

Q. And naturally, that would terrify you?

A. No. We were living with that for nine months and it doesn't terrify you. You just accept it as price of surviving another day.

Q. You formed the opinion that – you gave that as evidence, actually, under oath, I think in this Court about the skinny people having a different coloured flame than the fatter people? You actually swore that. {407|408}

A. That was an opinion, yes, an opinion we formed. I am not a medical person nor am I capable of giving medical evidence or scientific evidence.

Q. I understand. But this is the kind of atmosphere in which you lived in which these opinions were being expressed.

A. Yes.

Q. Although, indeed, you never saw anyone either being gassed or burned, or I haven't heard you say you saw anyone even being shot. Did you say that?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was being shot?

A. Would you like me to give you his name or his number?

Q. Either one, if you wish.

A. I don't know. We were in a group. When we were marched, anybody who stepped out of line, we were shot. Right in front of me, after he was shot, dogs jumped on him and they were trained dogs, to tear him apart. Then, at the very end, we had another detail of SS who shot every cadaver again, for fear of someone surviving the march.

Q. I see.

A. These are the things I saw. I was {408|409} also present a different time when somebody was just shot.

Q. For no reason?

A. For no reason.

Q. Mm-hmm.

A. He either talked back to somebody or he was – at lineups for food we would have some jostling of who would get to the bottom, to the part of the bottom of the container of food because that's where the heavy foodstuff was left, whereas if you got to a new container you would get only the soupy liquid part. So everybody was jostling for a better position. The Blockälteste, or the barrack the guy in charge of the barracks, had the authority to kill somebody with his cane at that point for just jostling around.

Q. Was this an SS person?

A. No.

Q. Who would he be?

A. He was a prisoner, a senior prisoner, senior authority.

Q. You have actually seen prisoners kill prisoners, then?

A. Yes, I have seen that too.

Q. So it was a very difficult place to {409|410} live, wasn't it?

A. Of course.

Q. Right. And prisoners kill prisoners on occasion.

A. Yes. Senior prisoners, either work Kapo – they, were the guys in charge of a detail of workers or the Blockältestes, who were the barrack chief, or the Lagerälteste, who was the chief of the camp. All these were civilians.

Q. All these were prisoners?

A. Prisoners, yes.

Q. So the prisoners, to some extent, were responsible for discipline.

A. Yes.

Q. And they could be very severe.

A. Yes.

Q. And I suppose some of them were just like yourself.

A. Some, yes.

Q. And they had arbitrary power to kill people, I guess.

A. Yes.

Q. And they exercised it. {410|411}

A. On some occasions, yes.

Q. Could you show me where some of – where the place was where you took the shower on this diagram, Exhibit 8?

A. In the area "K II" and "K III".

Q. I see. Can you identify a building there at all?

A. No.

Q. So the best you can do is identify the area of "K II" and "K III"?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's where you had your shower.

A. Yes.

Q. And what's "K II" and "K III"? What are they?

A. I presume it's Krematoria II and Krematoria III.

Q. So you don't know. It's a presumption that it was a crematoria. Is that right?

A. I don't understand what you mean by a presumption. When I was there constantly, no, I was not inside watching them burn anything. I could only observe that from the confines of my camp. {411|412}

Q. Right. But you did say that the shower baths were in the same area?

A. The shower bath we only got when we got off the train, got out of our clothes that we came in and were given prisoner clothes. After that I never went to that shower bath again.

Q. I see. So you don't know exactly where it was?

A. Well, it was near the train where we got off, and after that I had no contact with it again.

Q. At that time I suppose you would not be very familiar with the camp anyway.

A. No.

Q. Have you seen the movie, "Holocaust"?

A. I'm not sure.

Q. It is my understanding from your evidence that the only time you went with Dr. Mengele at his request, you went and unloaded potatoes off the train?

A. Yes. That is the only work I did with him. I didn't work with him actually. He only came —

Q. Selected you and told you.

A. No. He only came to ask us to volunteer for work because at that time all the men were gone {412|413} from the camp.

Q. They were all gone and he —

A. And he was coming to pick up a number of people to help unload the train.

Q. Thank you. And you did.

A. He took us and some other surplus people from the hospital building, like surplus doctors and so on.

Q. Mm-hmm. And you unloaded the train and went back to your barracks.

A. Yes.

Q. So it wasn't a case of the only trains there were bringing prisoners at all. There were other trains as well bringing supplies?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you know —

A. There was the one train that I worked on that had potatoes in it.

Q. How many people do you think there were in the whole camp?

A. I wouldn't know.

Q. Okay. within the area you had, "D", it looks like thirty buildings. {413|414}

A. Yes.

Q. And how many in each building?

A. I wouldn't know that. I know we kids were cramped, or later on given more space, but when transports were brought in, people were just pushed into barracks. Whether more people came into these particular beds or less people – and people were taken out of the camps to go to work areas permanently and temporarily.

Q. Right. So some people were out of the camps to work areas permanently.

A. Yes.

Q. You don't know how many were in that category.

A. No.

Q. You don't know how many went through the camp in the nine months you were there to other areas.

A. No.

Q. You don't know how many went from that camp to work areas permanently or to other camps.

A. I have no count or any ability to even guess at numbers.

Q. Would it not be the case that on the occasions when some of the kapos and what you call senior {414|415} prisoners disciplined prisoners there would be screaming and yelling?

A. There would be screaming and yelling when they were disciplined.

Q. Right. That is —

A. On a singular level.

Q. Sorry?

A. On a singular level. One person was yelling if he was being flogged or just simply beaten.

Q. I am talking about prisoners doing this to prisoners.

A. It was not a mass riot. It was just a single occurrence and a single officer dealt with a single prisoner.

Q. By "officer" do you mean prisoner, or SS?

A. Prison officer. No, the SS rarely came into it.

Q. Into the compound.

A. Into the compound, except for morning and evening count and from time to time just to talk to these barrack leaders.

Q. Hm-hmm. {415|416}

A. The SS were there in the morning to export the details that went to work and they went with them.

Q. In your evidence towards the end you said that there were some sick older people who came into your barrack area.

A. Yes.

Q. Mm-hmm. That was at the end of your stay in Birkenau.

A. That was after the last selection, yes.

Q. Mm-hmm. So as far as your case is concerned, you lived there for nine months without work, and I haven't heard you describe any occasion when you, yourself, were beaten at all.

A. No, I wasn't.

Q. No.

A. Beaten in a sense of being beaten. I did get a whack from time to time for various minor things. Like one day we were — we were sent to a kitchen to peel potatoes and an SS in charge had a short stick, and as we were sitting peeling potatoes he went around clonking everybody on the head just for his amusement. {416|417}

Q. Did you go to the hospital at all?

A. No.

Q. You, yourself, then, are not an eye witness to anything other than some people getting shot and some people being killed by prison inmates themselves. Is that right?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, with respect, Your Honour, I suggest he is an eye witness to what he has told us about. And he's testified to more than that. The question is if that is the only thing he witnessed. He told us for two days —

MR. CHRISTIE: I am not going to go through everything he witnessed.

THE COURT: Let me make it easier for you. You can ask the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. To be a little more precise, sir, as far as people killed are concerned, I believe it's true that, notwithstanding a great deal of what I concede to be very severe suffering on your part and an unjust detention and a total deprivation of your freedom, all of which I very obviously heard you describe, as far as people being killed is concerned you saw some people shot and you saw some inmates kill inmates. {417|418}

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Other than that you saw no-one killed.

A. No.

Q. That is correct.

A. Correct.

Q. Were you in contact with adults at all in the camp from your section "D"?

A. Yes.

Q. There were adults in there?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know if some of them were regarded as communists? You don't know?

A. There were some that had the designation on their number that would be a triangle of various colours like red or yellow which would indicate whether he was a murderer or he was a communist, but I wouldn't — I wasn't concerned with that.

Q. There were designations for murderers and communists, and you did see some of them, I suppose.

A. Yes.

Q. Did those people try to spread rumours, as well? {418|419}

A. No.

Q. The rumours were general, were they, throughout the camp? Everybody talked about the camp?

A. Yes. Nobody was muzzled from talking in the general context, but there were no gatherings of speeches, no gatherings to hear lectures or speeches or anything like that.

Q. No. I am sure of that.

A. Just general talking.

Q. What I am getting at is, there was a lot of people gossiping about what's going on in the camp. Right?

A. Guessing, yes.

Q. Guessing. You gave evidence about your family and the people that you lost after the war that you couldn't find, I guess. They didn't return to your village. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you actually — I suppose you were taken over by the Russian or Soviet Army, were you?

A. No. I was liberated by the American Army.

Q. You managed to get all the way to the {419|420} west, did you? Or where were you liberated, shall we say?

A. I was liberated in the mountains in the vicinity of Garmisch-Partenkirchen.

Q. Can you tell us where that is, sir?

A. Yes. That's near Munich, or fairly close to Munich, and —

Q. It's a long way from Auschwitz, sir, isn't it?

A. Yes. And near Dachau.

Q. Were you transported by German authorities from Auschwitz to that area?

A. We were force marched to a place where, after two days, we were given — we were loaded on coal trains and transported to a prison camp called Gross-Rosen. We were there for a couple of days, and then we were taken by train again, destination Dachau.

Q. Mm-hmm. No doubt there was bombing along the railroad line at the time?

A. I imagine so.

Q. Were you not aware of it at all?

A. I didn't inspect the lines.

Q. No, but bombs, did you notice any bombs? {420|421}

A. Yes, there was one bomb that didn't explode and held us up a couple of days after we were moved from Dachau to this area and near Garmisch-Partenkirchen.

Q. Would it be fair to say that people died along the road?

A. Yes.

Q. And you, no doubt, along with other prisoners, were suffering a great deal as a result of being moved from the east to the west. Is that right?

A. Well, I am not sure about the direction, whether it was east or west.

Q. Well, you were east of Munich?

A. But a lot of people were dying and suffering.

Q. That's right. And the whole of Europe was in turmoil. The part you could see was in absolute chaos, wasn't it?

A. The part that I could see from my view looked a hell of a lot better than the part where I was in. So to me, they were in heaven.

Q. You mean the ones in Gross-Rosen were in heaven?

A. No. The ones along the road you asked {421|422} me.
 Q. Oh, I see what you mean. The people that weren't internees.
 A. That's right.
 Q. So you were moved in cattle cars, I suppose?
 A. No. At that time we were moved in coal cars to Dachau. From Dachau we went into a different train after a stay in Dachau.
 Q. Would it be fair to say that in those camps the treatment was very much the same as it had been in Birkenau?
 A. No.
 Q. Was there a delousing procedure?
 A. There was delousing procedure at all times.
 Q. Mm-hmm. This was to kill —
 A. It was heavier in Birkenau because it was summertime, whereas Dachau was in wintertime.
 Q. Yeah. There was a constant effort to delouse people. Right?
 A. Yes,
 Q. Because of the danger of typhus. {422|423}
 A. Whatever. Anybody that looked weak was eliminated.
 Q. Taken out —
 A. Was taken away from my presence, yes.
 Q. From the group. That's right. And you were sleeping four or five to a bed at that time. Is that it?
 A. Eight, ten.
 Q. Okay. Do you know what was done with the sewage in the camp at Birkenau where you stayed for nine months?
 A. Well, I saw a women's camp and some men were hauling wagons with what was, what we were told was sewage that was being hauled to somewhere.
 Q. Well, in your own barracks —
 A. These were tanks.
 Q. Sorry?
 A. These were tanks on a wagon, a wooden wagon drawn by twenty or so inmates, men or women.
 Q. What did you do with sewage in your own barracks?
 A. Well, I don't know how they cleaned the latrines. {423|424}
 Q. They were just latrines. There was no running water there.
 A. In those last two barracks of each camp there was — one camp was long pipes of water and the other was latrines.
 Q. I see. So the waste —
 A. For overnight use we had, at the end of each barrack, there were containers which are emptied every day, every morning.
 Q. Where the sewage for the whole camp was dumped, I don't suppose you know.
 A. No.
 Q. It could have been in cesspits and cesspools.
 A. I can't judge, could I?
 Q. No.
 THE COURT: Is this a convenient time?
 MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. One question if I may before we go, I'm sorry.
 THE COURT: Yes. Certainly.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Q. All right. Was the sewage that you smelled or were aware of, I assume, in the cans that — truck loads or cart loads — did it smell {424|425} like every other kind of sewage you would be familiar with?
 A. I just saw them on the road outside our camp. I just saw them being hauled.
 Q. Thank you.
 — The jury retires 1:03 p.m.
 — Luncheon adjournment.
 — Upon resuming.
 — The jury returns 2:35 p.m.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Witness, you were telling us about your endeavours to celebrate certain Jewish holidays. Can you tell us about those again?
 A. We were attempting to celebrate holidays on occasion.
 Q. You told me about three or four Jewish holidays that you were aware of and things you did on those days. Do you remember that?

 A. Yes.
 Q. What were the names of those holidays?
 A. In camp or before?
 Q. In camp.
 A. There was the Jewish New Year and the {425|426} Day of Atonement, which is about ten days thereafter. Then the Festival of Tabernacle is shortly thereafter. During those days we had four selections.
 Q. Four selections. How did you know the days of the religious holidays without anybody having a calendar?
 A. Well, they were Orthodox people, senior people who had that information and —
 Q. Yes.
 A. If they led, if they gave out that information, then prayers just followed into that pattern.
 Q. Yeah. They must have had a calendar, then?
 A. Well, I don't think they had a calendar, but —
 Q. Did they know the dates without a calendar?
 A. I presume so.
 Q. I am going to show you a photograph from a book called the "Auschwitz Album" and I am going to ask you if you recognize anything in the photos. Specifically, page 21. Do you recognize the area there at all?
 A. Yes. More or less. {426|427}
 Q. What does it look like to you?
 A. It looks like an area where a bunch of people were dumped in the middle of nowhere, and there are some silhouettes of barracks in the background.
 Q. Do you recognize the silhouettes in the background?
 A. In a fashion, yes.
 Q. Well, what fashion?
 A. Well, considering I only spent about —
 Q. Nine months.
 A. — an hour at that particular spot —
 Q. I see.
 A. — of unloading area most of the time.
 Q. That is the particular spot, isn't it, the unloading area?
 A. That may very well be. That's fine.
 Q. That's what it is, isn't it?
 A. I don't see the trains and I don't see anything beyond than a zeroing in of the camera on a bunch of people.
 Q. So you don't recognize the spot?
 A. I could not testify that that was the spot in Birkenau, although it looks very much like it. {427|428}
 Q. I suggest to you that the silhouettes in the background with the chimney is what's marked on Exhibit 8 as "Krema III", Crematorium No. 3, which I will show you in Photograph No. 8. Excuse me, "Krema II". I am holding Exhibit 8 in front of you and I am pointing out to you what's indicated as "K II" for Crematorium 2, and I suggest to you that that's what is depicted in the back of the photograph in silhouette. Would you agree?
 A. I would have trouble relating the two.
 Q. I see.
 A. Because I don't know from what angle that was shot or how that relates to this.
 Q. Okay. Is there any smoke in that picture?
 A. No.
 Q. Okay. Could we turn the page? Now, do you recognize that picture at all?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Is that looking in the other direction? That's page 22. Looking in the other direction towards the gate?
 A. Yes. {428|429}
 Q. Marked "A".
 A. Yes.
 Q. Now, do you see any smoke in that picture?
 A. No. I don't see much else than a bunch of people with a main gate and tower in the background.

Q. I see. The railroad tracks are on the right there.

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. And the left.

Q. And the left?

A. Yes.

Q. I see your point. That's in the middle, I guess, between the railroad tracks, Exhibit 8. Right?

A. Well, it may be related to that, yes.

Q. It seems to be, because there are tracks to the right of the people in the picture and to the left. Right?

A. I would say that shot is taken from the north to the south.

Q. Right. So if the photographer is in {429|430} the position you've described, his back would be towards crematoriums 2 and 3. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And shooting towards the gate.

A. Yes.

Q. And there's no smoke in that picture either.

A. Not much of that picture, except —

Q. Lots of people.

A. The people, yes.

Q. Turn the page. Same photograph. Do you recognize it?

A. Yes.

Q. Same direction, sort of?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Could you turn the page again?

THE COURT: We are now at page 24?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think we are on page 26 and 27, sir. I guess we've got two pages in there. Can I just open it to a page?

THE WITNESS: There's no 24 here.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. There doesn't seem to be 24. It's not numbered. Going to 26 and 27. Right? {430|431}

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we are now looking in which direction, sir? It is sort of hard to tell. Do you recognize that, though, as the railroad siding at Auschwitz? Sorry, Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Would you just turn the page again? And further around the railroad. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. There's a selection taking place there, isn't there?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Turn the page again. We are looking at page 28 and 29. There's a selection process?

A., If I may clarify, 28 gives you a selection process. 29 gives you a questioning of an individual.

Q. I see. Okay.

A. And if I may explain that, if you'd like to know what that questioning was, they were searching out professional people, even amongst the older people, before relegating to one side. They would ask if there are any physicians, or certain people that they were looking for {431|432} at the particular time, like engineers.

Q. Engineers?

A. And so on.

Q. They wanted to use their skills, I guess. Is that right?

A. At that point I don't know what they wanted, but that is, I am just explaining to you the selection process as I know it.

Q. So obviously they were selecting them for their skills for some reason or other.

A. From time to time, yes.

Q. All right. Turning now, we have page 31, another around the railroad yard. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. No smoke there?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Turn the page. Page 33 has got another photograph on it.

What's going on there?

A. Well, you've got the truck in the background that's picking up the luggage that came with the people in the trains, You also. see the civilian —

Q. Internee.

A. — internee. {432|433}

Q. He is in the foreground in the striped suit?

A. He is in the foreground in the striped suit, yes. And these are the baggage handlers, if you like.

Q. They were prisoners?

A. They were prisoners, yes.

Q. And they were handling the baggage coming in?

A. Yes. They are not handling it. They are confiscating it. They are loading it on trucks because these people were not let to carry anything with them.

Q. The arrivees, shall we say, or the arrivors, or whoever is arriving, has their goods taken into the truck by the prisoner. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Could you turn the page? Same thing going on there?

A. No. This is herding the mothers and children and people who were not selected for working groups.

Q. Into another direction?

A. These are the leftovers, and they are now being — {433|434}

Q. Moved into another direction?

A. — moved into a grouping.

Q. Right. Now, is there any smoke in that picture at all?

A. No.

Q. Carry on and turn the page. You see a bunch of people working there in a direction. Do you recognize that direction? It's into the barracks area, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Page 37.

A. Yes.

Q. Any smoke in that picture?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Page 38 and 39 have photographs on them as well. And do they depict what's going on there by the train?

A. It's hard to tell what they are doing, but it looks like the train is being pulled out and the people are left standing there.

Q. No smoke there either.

A. No smoke.

Q. Now, we are looking towards page 41. {434|435} We are looking towards the main gate again. There is a whole bunch of people arriving, and is there any smoke there that you can see?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. There is a haze, but I don't know what that would consist of. It is a background of —

Q. Photographs. Yeah. Could we turn the page, and there's just people in that picture. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. A selected group.

Q. Selected group. Does it look like working men?

A. No. These look like professional people selected out of a group as opposed to this group where you have mothers and children and sort of not accepted people.

Q. Okay. And turning to page 44 and 45 do you see more — what's that — more selection process? It seems as if there are people coming from the trains again.

A. Yes. These look as if they have {435|436} just got off the train and have not got the message to separate, working from non-working.

Q. All right. And there's no smoke there either. Right?

A. No.

Q. It's a different — it appears to be a different day. Would you agree?

A. I wouldn't be able to judge that, but most probably on a different day, because these are all pictures at the station where the trains arrived.

Q. Mm-hmm. Okay.

A. And it doesn't seem to zero in on anything else.

Q. Have you ever seen this album before? It is called the "Auschwitz Album".

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest to you you could see all through those pictures and you don't see any evidence of smoke. Do you agree?

A. I haven't searched it for that purpose.

Q. All right. Then what I'll do is file it, if I may, and then we will put it in as an exhibit. {436|437}

THE COURT: Have you seen it, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, I haven't, Your Honour, and I am not sure for what purpose it's being filed. We don't know when these photographs were being taken, whether it is for the truth of the contents of the photograph —

MR. CHRISTIE: The witness had identified them as being in Auschwitz. I think that they are relevant for that reason, to try and depict the situation. He agrees that it is Auschwitz.

THE COURT: What is your purpose?

MR. CHRISTIE: Pardon?

THE COURT: What is the purpose?

MR. CHRISTIE: To display the situation there. My friend can say what he wishes. I think that's why I want to show them.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths can look at it and we will talk about it later.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Q. Mr. Friedman, I now produce and show to you two copies, or photocopies for identification of the Encyclopedia Britannica 1910 and 1902 on the subject of cremation, and if you'd just like to glance at that I will ask you whether you know anything, or {437|438} you can see anything there that shows the existence of smoke or the existence of flame coming out of a chimney of a crematorium.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, will you excuse us, please?

— The jury retires. 2:50 p.m.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, where is all this leading?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, I was going to lay the foundation for the suggestion that if there was smoke and flames coming out of the chimney, it was most certainly not a crematorium chimney.

THE COURT: Why would you want to do it through this witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he is the one who said he saw the smoke and flames and smelt the smoke of burning flesh.

THE COURT: Does that make him an expert on the crematoriums and their construction elsewhere in the world?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I concede he doesn't claim that, and I don't suggest that. {438|439}

THE COURT: I don't see that the documents are admissible or inadmissible, but the question at the moment, subject to what you might indicate, is why they are admissible necessarily through the mouth of this witness.

You said he has testified — we all heard him testify. We will not go into that at the moment, but merely because he has seen certain things at a certain period of time in a specific place, does that make permit you to lead evidence from the Encyclopedia Britannica on crematoriums?

MR. CHRISTIE: I suppose in a way, I am suggesting that standard authorities would suggest that he's wrong about it being a crematorium.

THE COURT: That might be something you might want to mention to the jury. I am not prepared to say anything about that; but I am just wondering what characteristic, in this witness, in what he said, would make him a person who would be knowledgeable on the subject you seek to adduce before the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think he would be in the same sense knowledgeable as, for example, Mr. Williams was knowledgeable upon the subject of the book. {439|440} He sort of read from it, and that merely proved that he could read the book; but he hadn't read other parts.

I think, perhaps, I will withdraw the question because I see it is rather convoluted. I think I can ask a simple question in another way, and I can —

THE COURT: Why don't we hear that now?

MR. CHRISTIE: That is a good idea. Thank you, Your Honour. I would ask the witness if he has any professional or other knowledge that enables him to say that the smoke came from any crematorium, if he saw it.

THE COURT: Other than what he said he saw, or — ask it again. I just missed part of it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, does he have any professional knowledge that enables him to say that the smoke came from a crematoria or cremation, because that, in this context, is quite ridiculous.

THE COURT: What does the Crown say?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I think that he can be asked whether he is an expert on crematoria, either here or anywhere else. If the answer is positive, then he can be asked further questions about the construction and use; but if he isn't, Your Honour, then hearsay evidence from the Encyclopaedia Britannica is as {440|441} inadmissible as what he hears on the street; and I don't think he is in a position to be able to answer this question. He can only say what he saw, and that is what he testified to.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

THE COURT: Can I put it to the witness that it is ridiculous to suggest that smoke comes from a crematoria where human beings are being cremated?

THE COURT: You can put that suggestion to the witness if you wished, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: And then I can put another question to him, that he has no knowledge whatsoever of crematoria to make that statement that it came from a cremation.

THE COURT: It seems to me you can either put that suggestion, or you can ask the question. Whatever way you choose, to your satisfaction.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, of course. And I think — I'm afraid I might ask other questions on that line. To exactly phrase them at the moment ...

THE COURT: Well, we will hear them when they arrive. Anything further from Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. {441|442}

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:55 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I put it to you, Mr. Friedman, I suggest to you that it is quite impossible for smoke to come from a crematoria for human beings, sir. What do you say to that?

A. Nothing.

Q. You don't really know anything about it, I suppose?

A. No. I have never worked in a crematoria, nor do I know the workings of a crematoria.

Q. Well, I put it to you that in crematoriums there is no smoke, no noxious gasses produced, there is no flame shooting out the chimneys, and those things, if you saw them, sir, were not a crematorium at all, I put it to you.

A. Well, if you are talking a crematoria in Toronto or a crematoria in Auschwitz, they are two different things. I know nothing about what —

Q. Are they?

A. I know nothing about what would be produced here. I have passed a crematoria in Toronto. I haven't seen any smoke. But in Birkenau there was smoke coming out of the crematoria.

Q. Well, I put it to you that in the crematorium in Auschwitz, the Birkenau camp, Topf & Sons were the builders of that crematoria and that they followed a patent and that there was burning of all of the substances that were produced in the cremation of a human being and that there was, therefore, no smoke, no flames up the chimney and no evidence whatsoever of the kind that you've described coming from the crematorium. Do you know something to the contrary to that?

A. Well, I know the information that was —

Q. Circulating.

A. — circulating in camp. And I saw and I heard and I smelled whatever I saw and felt and smelled. {443|444}

Q. I agree.

A. But if Mr. Topf and company wish to submit evidence, I will step aside.

Q. Well, I am putting it to you that you don't really understand anything about a crematoria to say, "Uh-huh, that smoke is from the crematoria", because that would be quite wrong, sir. That's true, isn't it?

A. I never saw what went on inside the crematoria. The information we had from where we were incarcerated was that this is what is happening. We saw the bodies go daily by the wagon load into that direction and this is what was accepted as truth.

Q. The explanation.

A. As the explanation.

Q. I see. But I suggest to you, sir, that there could have been many other sources for the smoke in question from the immediate area.

A. There could have.

Q. In fact, there were factories some of whom you've mentioned, including Monowitz. Right?

A. No. These were distant.

Q. Well, you did name some other work camps or factories? {444|445}

A. These were distant from the camp.

Q. Are you sure you are swearing there was smoke and flames belching every day from these things?

A. I didn't say every day.

Q. Well, how many days of the week are you talking about?

A. There were times it was going twenty-four hours a day for weeks, and there were times that they were silent.

Q. If I was to say —

A. Just a little bit, just little smoke, especially around October, November, and so on. Very little.

Q. I think you tried to correlate or suggest that there was a relationship between the arrival of new trains and this smoke. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I suggest to you, sir, with the greatest respect, that crematoriums for human bodies such as existed, indeed, indeed existed in Kremas II, III, IV and V, did not produce smoke at all, sir. You deny that?

A. I don't know if I would have listened to you. Same time I would have listened to other people, maybe I would have attached more credibility to your portion {445|446} than theirs, but at the time I accepted theirs.

Q. Have you ever heard of the international tracing service at Arolsen, West Germany, that's attached to the Red Cross, I would suggest? You never heard of that?

A. No.

Q. You never made attempts to check with authorities to trace your family, or members of your family through — after the War?

A. No. I went back and stayed in my town for about six months, spoke to various people, whether there was any chance. I was made aware that my father was one of the workers at the crematoria, although I only met a neighbour from my next village who told me that he is alternate shift with my father and he will relate to my father that I was in that camp.

Q. I see. So you have no personal knowledge of the ultimate outcome of the members of your family. What became of them you really don't know.

A. No documented evidence, no.

Q. It's my understanding — are you familiar with the occasional thing you read in the newspaper about people actually finding each other after many, many {446|447} years?

A. Yes.

Q. This sometimes does happen, I think you will agree. Would you?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree that it was because after the Second World War many people were displaced all over Europe, some into Russian sectors, some into American, some into the British, some assumed the others were dead. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you're not familiar with the tracing service of Arolsen?

A. No.

Q. And never made attempts to check.

A. I did make attempts in Washington at a Holocaust gathering. I entered the name in the computer. The name was entered through in Israel on the computer to see if any would register, but the process of finding people is usually that people trace back relatives and identify with relatives, even searching similar names in different cities of the world, and phone books and so on. We have tried all kinds of gimmicks to {447|448} locate people, and I am sure they, in turn, are trying to do the same thing. So if there was anybody alive he wouldn't want to live alone. He would make attempts to contact the family.

Q. And sometimes, even recently, these attempts are successful.

A. Yes, in very rare cases, where both are adult and have drifted into different sections of the world, but younger children or parents have made all efforts to contact through the known channels like relatives and townspeople and so on.

Q. Do you have any idea of the daily death rate in the camp itself in terms of a percentage?

A. No.

Q. There are some days there were people dead in the morning, and some days there weren't. Right?

A. Could be.

Q. And these were some suicides, some didn't have apparent causes for their death, and some were shootings, and some were beatings, suppose.

A. Yes.

Q. I was also interested in finding out {448|449} one other thing. You mentioned this morning, I think, in answer to some of my questions, that there were certain people who were transient people in the camp next to yours, and there were certain people who went to other work camps and never did return. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. The exact percentages of that in the six or so months, nine months you were there...

A. Yes.

Q. ...it would be hard for you to calculate that, I suppose, because you would be confined within "D" and they would be in another barrack area. Would that be right?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is no doubt that there was continual movement in and out of the camp. Right?

A. What do you mean by in and out? People coming —

Q. People coming —

A. There were only transports. No people coming in from other camps for vacations or anything like that.

Q. I am sure of that, but it was a sorting {449|450} facility to get people to go to other camps, in some cases.

A. Yes, They were — capable people were brought in, within a couple of days sent out.

Q. Were you aware, sir, that there were, in a period of time during the War, that there were three thousand babies born in Auschwitz?

A. Well, there were none in the men's section where I was.

Q. No. Have you heard of that since?

A. No.

Q. I am going to read you a little portion of what I will identify as the "Report of a Midwife in Auschwitz" from the International Auschwitz Committee,

"In the inferno they maintained human dignity".

THE COURT; Just a moment. What is the document?

MR. CHRISTIE: It's a document. It's a publication. I am just identifying it.

THE COURT: Please don't till you answer my questions. Members of the jury, will you excuse us, please?

— The jury retires 3; 06 p.m. {450|451}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, in British Columbia is it usual to show the document you propose to use to the witness to ask the witness whether or not the witness can identify it before you begin, in effect, to give evidence from it yourself?

MR. CHRISTIE: If I was trying to ask the witness for proof of its authenticity – I am only asking the witness to consider it in relation to his experience, and I was going to ask him if he could tell me that this could not have happened, or it is possible, or it is impossible in the circumstances that he lived.

THE COURT: However interesting that may be, what's the answer to my question?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I tried to answer it, Your Honor. I said —

THE COURT: Do you make it a practice; in your litigation process in British Columbia, to show a witness a document before you begin to refer to it yourself, or not?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not in all cases, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then you will in this Court. Would you show it to the witness? {451|452}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. What I have to do, Your Honour, is — this is a translation — I was in the process of identifying its origin.

THE COURT: A translation of what?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I have in my hands a translation of — well, I will produce the book.

THE COURT: Tell me what the document is.

MR. CHRISTIE: International Auschwitz Committee, entitled, "In the Inferno they maintained Human Dignity". It is the blue anthology, Volume II, second part, produced in Warsaw 1969, "A Report of a Midwife in Auschwitz", at page 159, 169. That is the origin of this page, which is in French, the translation of which is in English. I propose to put the quote to the witness and ask him if that is consistent with his recollection of the place. That's all.

THE COURT: Why don't you ask him now?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would. I was going to.

THE COURT: Witness, do you recollect, or is that consistent, or can you answer the question?

THE WITNESS: I didn't understand the question. {452|453}

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. Here is the question I would have asked him. I would have identified where this quotation comes from. I would have read as follows.

THE COURT: Why don't you do that now?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will:

"I worked under these conditions for two years, day and night, without somebody to replace me. The women gave child-birth on the heating pipes. I delivered in this manner more than 3,000 babies. In spite of the dreadful dirtiness, the vermins and the rats, in spite of the infectious diseases and other horrors beyond description, extraordinary things occurred there which are unbelievable, but true. One day the 'Lagerartz'... [Lagerarzt], camp doctor, "...asked me to submit a report to him concerning the infections attracted by the pregnant women, the mortality amongst mothers and infants (sucklings). I reported to him that I had not one single case of death either with the mothers or newborn babies. The 'Lagerartz' looked at me with incredulous eyes and informed me that even in the best maternal wards in Germany they {453|454} could not boast of such results. His eyes were full of rage and hatred. Why, indeed, had there been no mortality at all? Perhaps the organisms were destroyed to such an extent that they constituted a sterile (barren) substance for microbes."

I would then say, is this consistent with your experience of Auschwitz?

THE COURT: You can ask him.

THE WITNESS: I have no knowledge of what went on in the ladies' camp.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was going to ask him another question. I will carry on in the absence of the jury, and you can tell me what I am allowed to do.

Q. You said Auschwitz was an extermination camp. I put it to you that it is rather strange to have people give birth to children in these circumstances if one only wishes to exterminate them. Would you agree?

A. Well, there are also medical facilities — changing sexes and other experiments which Mengele was boasting of.

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of that? {454|455}

MR. GRIFFITHS: He has no personal knowledge of births, either. It does not stop Mr. Christie from asking that question.

THE COURT: I have the point, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am asking him if the conditions in the camp were conducive to childbirth, and if the purpose was to exterminate, why were there children born in that number?

THE COURT: How would he know if there were no women in the camp? He already said he did not know of the conditions?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I could ask him if he thought the women had a different kind of camp.

THE COURT: Ask him if he has ever been in a women's camp.

THE WITNESS: No.

THE COURT: The answer is no. You can't use the document. Is that clear enough?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I don't need to be told more than once, and I thank you for your advice.

THE COURT: I might add, for the purposes of the record, that the English version that was read, came {455|456} from a translation about which I know nothing at the moment.

Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury returns 3:14 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Friedman, have you received any compensation for the losses you suffered in terms of being interned for yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. And who pays that compensation — the West German Government?

A. I have no idea at present. In the course of tracing my family they found my records of my number and my identity of having been in Auschwitz, and as such they sent me at that time — and that goes back to my arrival in Canada in '48, roughly, '49, '50, thereabouts, I received a cheque, I think, for about $300 which was, the explanation I think was a dollar per day.

Q. Let's not get into the explanation, if you don't mind.

A. That is what I remember having received, in the neighbourhood of $300.

Q. You didn't receive anything else?

A. No.

Q. Not another penny? {457|458}

A. No.

Q. Do you ever receive anything for loss of any relative?

A. No.

Q. I was curious as to how the story went as to the colour of the flames. Which colour was produced by the skinny people, and which by the fat ones in the story that you retold?

A. I have a tough time remembering. I remember we distinguished them, that this is a clear yellow flame as opposed to a vermilion or pink type of flame, and the odour and so on. We were a bunch of kids ranging from very few twelve, mostly fourteen, fifteen, sixteen year olds and this was the discussion that we got from, information from those who worked at the clothing and other areas.

Q. I see. Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— {458|459}

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Did you apply for any compensation?

A. Not that I remember.

Q. All right. And the cheque for $300 that you received, was there a letter that came with that? Don't tell me what it said.

A. No. It is a bit confusing in my mind, because it came as an award of the Jewish Congress — an orphan, orphans, a group of orphans came to this country.

Q. All right. And what year was that that you received it?

A. In 1947. And the case worker did a lot of the correspondence.

Q. And do you know who the $300 was from?

A. From Germany. It was part of the process of locating documentation, or tracing back my identity in Auschwitz and hoping that, perhaps, my father's identity would come to light; but it was negative.

Q. Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this a convenient time, Your Honour, for the afternoon recess? I might be a little bit early, but ...

THE COURT: Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:18 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I ask for a ruling?

{459|460} I have, in the course of the defence, to call on translators from the Polish language, German, French, to the English language, and perhaps vice versa.

I take the view, and I have prepared my case in the belief that I can call anyone who swears that they are fluent in those languages and that they will translate, from the English language or vice versa to the best of their skill and ability – now, I hope that is true, because my translators are nothing special in terms of people, they are just ordinary people who speak both languages, and if I am wrong in my belief, then I am going to offer to get new translators.

THE COURT: I do not think you are wrong in your belief. You are talking about viva voce you intend to call?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. But I am also talking about parts of books that sometimes the authors may be called and this may, not all the time, may still create an objection from the Crown.

THE COURT: Have you indicated to the Crown, and has the Crown indicated to you on this problem what you each propose to one another?

MR. CHRISTIE: I haven't proposed to my friend at all.

THE COURT: Why won't you do that? I am not talking about matrimony. I am talking about what you propose to do.

MR. CHRISTIE: I haven't, I confess, revealed everything to my friend. I have no objection to doing so.

THE COURT: You don't have to. I am {460|461} asking you if you have, and why don't you?

All I am saying is, if you produce the translator in Court, then the translator will be known to the Court and to the Officers of the Court – namely, the Crown Attorney and yourself.

If it happens to be a blood relative of somebody who happens to have a stake in this trial, there may be a problem. On the other hand, if it is someone who is strictly a translator with no stake in the issues, I do not see that that is a problem.

MR. CHRISTIE: There's no relatives involved in this at all that I am aware of.

THE COURT: That is why we like to see the colour of the people's eyes. Then we know.

MR. CHRISTIE: This was requested of me, because there's a translator who I subpoena'd so that – they come from another country, as a matter of fact – so that they could be sure to be allowed in the country for one thing and they be allowed to come in. And unfortunately I have been told that that translator has been sitting in court, and I was grateful for the Court Officer telling me that this person with the subpoena has been in Court.

I want to make it clear I didn't realize this person was in, but they are not a witness, but a translator, and I hope they can continue to stay. But they are not giving evidence.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If they are not giving evidence, I have no trouble with them being in the courtroom.

MR. CHRISTIE: In the sense they are a witness, but not as to any fact, just to translate.

THE COURT: Do you see any problem that {461|462} has been raised here, Mr. Griffiths, that I have not appreciated?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir. I think that a part of the translation is that the person not be a relative, nor have a stake in the issue so that there can be some reasonable certainty that the translation is accurate. I don't know what we are all talking about.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am prepared to tell my friend this much. It involves translations of parts of books, and I will make my translator to translate any other part my friend may wish. I can't produce some independent translator, but I will certainly have my translator available to translate part of a book to determine that it is in context.

The problem will arise as to whether I am entitled to do that. I am prepared to meet it at the time, but I am prepared to tell my friend that that is what I am prepared to do, and the reason I propose to do it, I don't suppose I need to get into that, really.

MR. GRIFFITHS: And I have one matter, Your Honour, if I may, in the absence of the jury. It is something that has arisen twice that I am concerned about as this trial goes on, and perhaps apropos of Mr. Christie's comment now as well.

I don't know, this question of books going into evidence, I think I indicated at the outset, Your Honour, when Mr. Christie objected to me showing a page in the International Military Tribunal, that I had no intention of pitting my library against his library – and by "his", I mean that metaphorically in terms of the adversarial process. I still take that position, Your Honour. I think {462|463} that where there is an expert that can testify, he can get up and give his testimony. It is not necessary to put in all the books that an expert has written or published in articles and what-have-you as exhibits for the jury, then to spend the next six weeks poring over them to try and reach a determination here fairly and honestly.

A particular point at this time is the Auschwitz Album. Mr. Friedman has been able to identify a number of photographs there that he said appeared to be on the loading platform. There is no evidence that he can give as to when these pictures were taken, under what circumstances. Asking if there was smoke coming out of the chimneys, or whether there was smoke in the pictures – and certainly there is evidence from Mr. Friedman that from October '44 on what smoke there was was minimal, and before that time it was sporadic [sporadic] and depending on certain circumstances within the camp.

Those photographs, I think, are irrelevant because we don't know when they were taken. Other photographs – and it's a whole volume of photographs – are not identified by him. They are not people that he knows or doesn't know or anything else. There is a considerable text involved in the book of photographs, as well. The text –

THE COURT: May I see the book, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Quite frankly, Your Honour – and I only had a chance to skim through it in the twenty minutes of the break – but the text is descriptive of people being selected for going to the gas chambers and for extermination, and that's the nature of the text, so in that sense it is not a text that particularly hurts the Crown's {463|464} case, but at the same time –

MR. CHRISTIE: . I think it hurts the Crown's case.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Fine. But I still don't think that it is something that should go before the jury. I mean, we have all tried extremely hard so far to be very careful about hearsay evidence, and here is a whole book of it going in, – holus bolus, I'd suggest, without proper identification.

THE COURT: I would not say it is in.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No. Being tendered, perhaps, I think, is the better word. And really, I would have the same comment to make as to the book that was submitted as Exhibit "A", subject to further identification, of Udo Walendy the other day. The one photograph, a pair of photographs, was referred to in the article, and we are directed to several pages of the book, and I can't recollect now what they are, where those two photographs were also shown, and rather than a photocopy of those two photographs, we have a whole book of photographs, Your Honour. I don't know that any of the other ones are in the article, or I don't know why we have a whole book. So I am objecting, Your Honour, to the putting into evidence of entire volumes, either by the Crown or by the defence.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can understand my friend's concerns, and I certainly see his point. The book in your hands can be regarded in two ways, maybe three, I think.

First of all, it could be taken as an aide memoire that I simply showed the witness, and he said {464|465} yes, that looks like it. And I asked him a few questions about certain photographs, and then, if my friend's objection is upheld, it need not be tendered if Your Honour considers those points well made.

I can understand very well my friend's concern about the whole matter. The other way, I suppose, that might be used to deal with it is to have me photocopy the parts that I have shown to the witness and submit them, as my friend has, in extract form as exhibits. Then I suppose I could obliterate the text. It is only about the photographs that I want to ask him, and I think that is all I did ask him. I didn't ask him about the text of the book. I am not concerned about the text of the book, if it goes in as a whole.

I am aware of a mountain of what might be called literature that upholds the theory of the Crown that there was extermination and there were gas chambers that the Crown says is true and that this article says is not true.

THE COURT: Which article? Oh, Exhibit I and 2.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. So I am prepared, if it is agreeable to Your Honour, and if Your Honour feels that this is correct, to photocopy or to leave it out altogether, or put it in.

Now, I am only trying to be as co-operative as I can. I think that – may I say that there is a distinction between introducing evidence to prove that it is true, and introducing it as original evidence to prove that what is said about it in this article, for example; the Walendy book, is really in a different category, because {465|466} in this article it says certain things about the Walendy book that the Crown, by trying to, I suppose, call evidence of certain things, tried to imply it was not true. And that was done in respect to page 26, on that paragraph, "An excellent work on the fake atrocity photographs pertaining to the Myth of the Six Million is Dr. Udo Walendy's ..." and then that book was named. So I tendered a book that shows it is what it says it is about, fake atrocity photographs, and I suppose Your Honour can say that doesn't mean the book is true or false.

It is quite often the case that statements are admitted, not to prove their truth or falsity, but just to prove they were made, and in the same way, the book exists as the article says it does, and on page whatever there is the photograph depicted in the article on page 26, and it does say about that photograph that there is a fake, and the reasons why.

And then, I didn't raise the issue, so I don't see how I could do other than answer it by showing that what it says in this article is really true as far as that paragraph is concerned. All the paragraph says is that in the book, "Macht Ohne Moral" – in this case I produced a photocopy, the photograph that is regarded as a fake is purported to be original.

Now, I can alter call witnesses to show that "Macht Ohne Moral" is a real book, that it was published by those who fully believe in the exterminationists view that one is a photograph that we allege demonstrates to be a fake. I intend to call Udo Walendy from West Germany who made the document in question that is the exhibit. He will say, "I wrote that book", I believe, and he will also {466|467} say, "Yes, that is my opinion". Then you can rip him apart if you like, or cross-examine him to show that he is false; but he will be there.

Now, I concede that you don't prove the truth of anything by producing the book, but if the allegation is that the book is not the origin of those ideas, or if there is a falsity of that book, I think you can introduce the book to say that it wasn't true – namely, those photographs are fake and also reported in the book by Dr. Moreau (ph). So I produced both. It's a very complex question. I think we are going to run into this quite a bit. I am afraid that it is going to raise some difficulties, but I don't know how else I can deal with this really literary question without producing books.

THE COURT: Into evidence.

MR. CHRISTIE: Into evidence.

THE COURT: Total book.

MR. CHRISTIE: In some cases. Some cases I can't even get the total book. I have only been able to get photocopies, and I suppose one can say, "How can you prove they are real?" They are from the book —

THE COURT: Without the original, you mean?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Maybe that will arise from time to time.

In the case, for example, of an Encyclopaedia, there is no problem, and documents; but this brings me to another topic. I think it will arise and I am not trying to waste time on it, but in the course of this trial I am going to have to show that my client had an honest belief, {467|468} and I will also introduce, attempt to prove that honest belief through evidence that could support a reasonable belief and that will involve books, not to prove their truth, but to prove that they were published, that they said this, and therefore the accused had a right to read them and believe them.

Now, that will happen — from time to time. So therefore the problem will arise, I can see, more frequently. Certainly when it comes to the defence that will arise.

THE COURT: Insofar as the Auschwitz Album is concerned, do I gather that your position is simply this: That it is immaterial whether the book, per se, is put in as an exhibit provided the ex[c]erpts from it in photostatic form are put in as exhibits, which said excerpts you referred to when you were cross-examining Mr. Friedman. Is that, essentially, your position?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I would be prepared to block out the captions, or leave them in. I think they mean nothing to me, and they may even help the Crown. In that way we would just have before the jury the very thing we were talking about in the evidence — not the book, but the photograph. That might be the best way.

THE COURT: What I propose, gentlemen, at four o'clock on a Friday afternoon, is to order that the Album be marked as Exhibit "B" for identification. I will give some thought to what I heard from both counsel over the weekend. Hopefully Monday morning, given sufficient reasonable time, both counsel, after giving thought to what the real issues are, may be of assistance to me in the absence of the jury by making, in a more formal way, making {468|469} known your respective positions with respect to what the real concern, what the real issues in this trial really are.

MR. CHRISTIE: I could tell you right now, Your Honour.

THE COURT: I am not interested in hearing it now. I am getting to the end of a long week. I am not going to do it when I am tired, and I am tired. In that way I will be assisted, and in the process counsel may be assisting themselves.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, if I may and I only have one or two very short questions of Mr. Friedman — and perhaps we could just finish him so he doesn't have to come back on Monday.

THE COURT: Oh, yes. I presume that. I will stay here till six o'clock to finish him off. Bring in the jury, please.

— EXHIBIT "B" (For Identification): Book, "Auschwitz Album".

— The jury enters. 4:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Mr. Friedman, did you ever see any babies in your camp?

A. No.

Q. And did you see any babies through the barbed wire in the other camps?

A. No.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no {469|470} other questions.

THE WITNESS: I was just going to say we were —

THE COURT: A little louder, please.

THE WITNESS: We were talking to the women, because some of our kids had their mothers in there, there were some mothers, and we were constantly yelling across, or throwing food across, but never have I seen any babies in the nine months I was there.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Friedman. You can step down, sir.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me. That subject, I am not sure if that – if I could ask one further question.

THE COURT: About the babies?

MR. CHRISTIE: About the women's camp, the location of it.

THE COURT: Any objection to that? One more question, Mr. Friedman. Perhaps one or two more.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Have you got Exhibit 8 there, sir?

A. No.

Q. Isn't it true that the women's camp, in relation to "D", was across the railroad [railroad] tracks over here on the left side?

A. No. "C" was the women's camp.

Q. "C", was the women's camp? {470|471}

A. Yes.

Q. Thanks very much.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have another witness who is available, Your Honour, but it's been a long day and a long week. Perhaps that is enough for today.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, it being Friday afternoon I am going to stop a little earlier. As I have indicated, the case is far from over. Please keep an open mind. It is a human reaction – I was going to say human frailty – to read newspapers and watch television, sometimes it is entertainment and sometimes it is not.

Please do not come to any conclusions by reason of what you read or see concerning this case. My instructions are that you take extraordinary efforts to avoid reading about this case or watching television or anything else concerning this case. That is a difficult order to give. It is an even more difficult one to follow.

Please follow it as best you can totally. Have a good weekend. There will be certain matters that I will be discussing with counsel on Monday morning first, thing. In the result, I am going to ask you to please be here at five minutes to eleven, rather than at five minutes to ten, so that counsel and I can have a little time to go over certain matters in your absence.

Thank you very much. You are free now till that time.

— The jury retires. 4:05 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 14, 1985.

— VOLUME III follows –{471|472}.

VOLUME III

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: I asked that the jury return at eleven o'clock so that I could get a better notion or assistance from both counsel as to the issues to be tried, and to see if the issues can be a little more refined than, perhaps, they might have been prior to the commencement of this trial.

Start with the Crown or with the defence, it doesn't matter. Perhaps the Crown.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps it would be easier if it was me, Your Honour. Your Honour, it's the Crown's contention that the two articles contain false statements, or false tales, and in support of that contention it is not my intention of going through the two articles line by line, or paragraph by paragraph, but rather there will be specific things that I think we will be arguing are important to the overall structure of the articles that I will be attempting to prove, by evidence, are false, and I will be doing that through a number of witnesses. I propose to call, tomorrow morning, a Dr. Raul Hilberg, who is a Professor of History at the University of Vermont in Burlington, Vermont. He is the author of a book called, "The Destruction of European Jews". He teaches at the University of Vermont, {472|473} courses on the Holocaust, and he has commenced his research in this area in 1948.

He spent thirteen years researching this book up until 1960 when it was published – "The Destruction of European Jews" – and he spent the last twenty-four years writing the second edition of it which I expect will be out within the next six weeks or so.

He is intimately familiar with all of the various trials that have been held in west Germany and the immediate post-War period at Nuremberg [Nuremberg]. He is also intimately familiar with documents in their thousands – diaries and German documents that were captured at the end of the War, as well as Allied documents.

I purport to call him, Your Honour, for a number of reasons. First, he is specifically mentioned in the article on two occasions, on page 29 and page 30.

THE COURT: That's Exhibit 1.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. Exhibit "Did Six Million Really Die?", where he is referred to as a Jewish statistician, which he is not, and gives – the article attributes to him a figure of 866,892 Jewish dead from all causes in the Second World War. And he, I expect, will deny that figure or anything approximating that figure, {473|474} and indicate that that is a total falsehood that he's ever said anything like that.

I also, Your Honour, in light of Dr. Hilberg, his extensive expertise and knowledge in the area, I will be trying to have him qualified as an expert, to give expert evidence on various aspects of the article. I expect that he will be testifying for some two days – Tuesday and Wednesday. I have arranged for Professor Rudolf Vrba to testify on Thursday and Friday.

Professor Vrba was in Auschwitz and Birkenau from 1942, June, to April of 1944, when he escaped from Auschwitz. He worked for, I understand, on the ramps, as it is called, at Birkenau and Auschwitz, and he kept mental tally of the trainloads that were coming in, how many people were sent towards the crematoria and how many people were allowed to come into the barracks.

He, I expect after he escaped, Your Honour, he prepared, with another Czechoslovakian Jew, a report on the conditions in Auschwitz which was ultimately published by the War Refugee Board in 1944 and became an exhibit at Nuremberg. He would be an original source that people like Dr. Hilberg would go to.

He, I expect, Your Honour, will be testifying on "Did Six Million Really Die", the article, specifically with respect to page 24 of that article, wartime conditions in the camp, humane conditions – talk about conditions in the camp.

On page 20 of the article there is an indication near the top of column one that certain affidavits that were adduced at Nuremberg were the only information about the death camps such as Auschwitz, and he will be testifying about such information. He will also be testifying, Your Honour, about a so-called factual eye-witness account of Auschwitz which appears on page 17 and 18 of that exhibit, and he will be commenting as well on the registration of every prisoner which is indicated as a fact on page 17, as well, of that pamphlet.

I will also be calling, Your Honour, representatives of the International Red Cross Society – oh, I will be attempting, Your Honour, to have Professor Vrba qualified as an expert, given the special skill in observations that he had an opportunity to make, having lived in many sections of the camp, and as such, to be able to express his opinions and give the basis of the information on which his opinions are founded.

I will be calling representatives of the {475|476} International Red Cross to introduce business documents with reference to page 30 of the article, the allegation that based on figures from the International Red Cross, only some three hundred thousand people died in Germany concentration camps, not all of them were Jews. And I expect the business document will deny that the Red Cross has ever published that figure or, indeed, ever counted anybody in the concentration camps.

I will also be introducing through those representatives portions of the Report of the International Committee of the Red Cross on its activities during the Second World War that, I will be suggesting, indicate that many of the quotations on pages 26 and 27 of that exhibit, and a chapter entitled, "The Jews and the Concentration Camps: A Factual Appraisal by The Red Cross", that mainly the quotations are out of context and misleading, and some of the material attributed to the Red Cross are false, in particular, the sentence that the Red Cross found no evidence whatsoever at the camps in Axis-occupied Europe of a deliberate policy to exterminate the Jews.

I expect, as well, Your Honour, to be calling several other survivors who were in other camps. One of them was in Mauthausen and Dachau, and another gentle-{476|477}man was in Auschwitz, Dora, and Bergen Belsen. The gentleman who was in Mauthausen was there for five years. He helped to build the camp and was there at the time of the liberation. And he will be speaking to the specific allegation which doesn't leap to my fingers right now about the conditions in Mauthausen.

I also, with respect to Exhibit No. 1, Your Honour, would be proposing, subject to its admissibility, to show a movie to the jury that will be introduced by an archivist from the National Archives in Washington, D.C., as a business document kept in those archives. It is a movie said to be taken from a film of Allied personnel entering various concentration camps, and it's a copy of a movie I say "movie" – a true copy that was used as an exhibit at Nuremberg. The camps, I believe, are exclusively German camps that are filmed.

With respect, Your Honour, to the other exhibit, West, War and Islam, I expect to call Mr. John Burnett, who is a general counsel for the Royal Bank of Canada. He will testify as to the position of the Royal Bank in Canada, where I understand it is the largest bank, and internationally, where I understand it is in the top twenty largest banks in the world, and I expect him to {477|478} comment on that portion of "The West, War and Islam" that deals with international bankers that equates international bankers with international communism, and he will indicate that those things are false, and also about the control of Jewish people of banking.

I think I will also, Your Honour, be calling a representative from the Masons who will be testifying as to the relationship between Masonry and other organizations such as the Rotary, Lions, etcetera, whether there is any relationship, and what role, if any, the Masons play in the advance of world crime, corruption, poverty, revolution and chaos.

Finally, Your Honour, I will be calling a psychologist, a Dr. Harry Kaufmann, who is a Professor at Hunter College in New York. Formerly he was a Professor here in Canada, and in the decade of the nineteen sixties —

THE COURT: That name, again?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Harry Kaufmann. In the decade of the sixties he did a survey of the literature on hate propaganda very extensively and wrote a report at the request of what's known as the Cohen Commission on hate propaganda chaired by Dean Maxwell Cohen of the McGill Law School, and Dr. Kaufmann's report is an appendix in that {478|479} report and is relied on in that report as authoritative, and I will be calling him and hoping to qualify him as an expert in the field of psychology, in particular in hate literature, hate propaganda area, to testify as to the impact of Exhibit 1 and 2 on the public interest and racial and social tolerance and what effect that will likely have on the public interest.

I don't intend, Your Honour, to call evidence on the issue of whether social and racial tolerance is in the public interest in Canada, although I am prepared to do so. I understand, from looking at some of the cases, in particular Dean F.R. Scott's article from the Canadian Bar Review, a photocopy of which I handed up to you on my first day, Your Honour, called, "Publishing False News", I believe it indicates that what was in the public interest is a question of law for the judge. If I am mistaken on that, Your Honour, I would be proving that public interest through the filing of various statutes, both federal and provincial, including the Ontario Code of Human Rights, the federal Charter of Rights, Bill of Rights, and there are a number of other statutes to deal with discrimination.

Finally, Your Honour, I intend to argue and that will be the evidence overall that I will be calling {479|480} on the issue of the falseness of the material and the impact of the material on the public.

Finally, I intend to argue that the belief in the material can be disproven by recklessness, that having regard to the number and the nature of the falsehood in the two articles, Mr. Zundel, at the very least, showed such a wanton and reckless disregard for the truth in publishing them that his belief in the falsehoods, or his disbeliefs, rather, in the falsehoods, can be inferred from that recklessness.

I will be asking the Court as well, Your Honour, to take judicial notice of the Holocaust as a notorious fact, as a matter within the common knowledge of each and every person, and specifically what I will be asking the Court to take judicial notice is that millions of Jews died from 1939 to 1945 in Europe as a result of a concerted effort by Germany to annihilate them.

That's it, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie, you are not bound to make any comment unless you wish to do so, but you are welcome to do so now.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, as I have tried in the past, I will continue to endeavour to be completely {480|481} candid and tell Your Honour what it is we are here to dispute.

My friend says that the publication, "Did Six Million Really Die?" and "The West, War and Islam" is false overall. His recent discourse just completed is of great assistance to me, because every day I hear there are new and different witnesses.

I have just heard for the first time, for example, that the witness I expected for the proof of Masonic claims was unfortunately not available. We are back to the preliminary hearing which I have been told was changed, but all that my friend has said, it will be my contention, is to be proved by hearsay, largely the Crown's evidence through – for example, Dr. Hilberg, his position is not that of a witness, but of an expert, allegedly, to prove facts on hearsay. He teaches courses in all that my friend has said; there is one part of his evidence that might be relevant, and that is the matter of whether a figure was attributed to him. He can say, "That is not my figure", but I think that my friend, if he carefully looks at the context of the article in question, will find that it is certainly clear from the article that it is not a case of attributing the figure to Raul Hilberg, but the figures {481|482} attributed to a study by Professor Rassinier of France of Raul Hilberg's works from which Professor Rassinier derived the figure in the article. And that interpretation of the article is the interpretation which I would suggest is quite obvious from reading the article carefully.

My friend is endeavouring, or will endeavour to prove certain things about Auschwitz and Birkenau from Professor Vrba. I am very much looking forward to that because there is an interesting series of situations in regard to Professor Vrba that, no doubt, will come as a surprise, perhaps, even to my learned friend. The allegation of his being an eye witness is of great interest to us, and we will be cross-examining him on some of the publications, some attributed to him. He was not a witness at Nuremberg. His document, if it was filed as a document at Nuremberg, it is my understanding only part of it was filed. The War Refugee Board Report was not confirmed by him as to its facts, and so we will be interested in asking him some questions about that.

Now, as far as the Red Cross is concerned, we have documents to support the contentions in the article, and we will, in due course, be putting those to the Red Cross, I presume, expert, because I see from the preliminary {482|483} that nobody was called who claimed to have been in Germany during the War for the Red Cross.

We will be calling, in due course, people who dealt with the Red Cross on behalf of the German authorities during the Second World War. They will be giving evidence as to what took place at that time.

My friend takes issue with the material on a number of particulars. He intends to show the jury a movie. I will be arguing that that is quite improper. Even if it is, a record of business of an archive in Washington, it can't prove the truth of what it says in the movie. We weren't there and we don't know who produced it or – I have seen the movie, and it is called, "Nazi Concentration camps", and it is a sensational movie and it shows a whole raft of bodies being bulldozed into pits. I can only see one purpose for that, and that is to sensationalize the jury.

I will be, in due course, calling a doctor who entered Bergen Belsen, I believe, and can give evidence about the conditions there. To put it simply, the whole of our contention is confirmed in a booklet that my friend has. This is not printed by any questionable sources. It is printed by those who refuted the article. Incidentally, {483|484} this article, "Did Six Million Really Die?", was answered by a publication by certain members of the South African Jewish Community who decided, I think quite rightly, to debate the matter in a literary way by refuting it with what they purport to have a good answer.

In this publication – I have checked to see if I am clear in my understanding of the context – they put out a map, and my friend has this publication, and I think to summarize our position, it will be very useful to explain to Your Honour that all the camps on the left of the map are in what is known in Germany, or was on that occasion. All these are referred to as concentration camps. The ones on the right are Auschwitz, Birkenau, Treblinka, Stutthof – these are all referred to as extermination camps.

The contention of the defence is that what is true about the western camps, which was found by the Allies at the time, was a horrible situation of starvation, disease, death, overwork and all that; but the same is true of the eastern camps. There is no evidence except from questionable sources, dubious sources, as to what went on in the eastern camps.

So that is the basic position, and it is ironic, because I am well aware in many publications that {484|485} just after the War there was allegations of gas chambers and gassings at Mauthausen and Dachau, and gradually the world has come to accept that those accusations are unsubstantiated.

So the allegation of the Crown is that the booklet lies in saying there was no extermination programme in the east. Our position is, there was no order, there existed no order, there existed no plan, there existed no budget, there existed, in fact, no gas chambers that we are aware of, and we intend to call experts as well to demonstrate that the allegation is made in many of the publications about the stink of burning flesh, the sky blackened by the ashes of the deceased in the gas chambers, cremations, the rapid manner by which it was possible to go in and haul out thousands of bodies and cremate them, and it is subject to grave doubt. So that's where the defence will be raising evidence to prove that this booklet, in its statements, is true.

Much of what my friend proposes to do was done in Nuremberg. The very film that is to be shown here was shown at Nuremberg. None of the defence counsel were there when it was made, but it was made to show massive suffering. {485|486}

Now, let it be understood by all that we are not here to dispute the suffering that, no doubt, existed in concentration camps, but that existed throughout the world in other circumstances. They are tragic, pathetic, disgusting situations, but the allegation is unique about the Second World War and the creation of the word "genocide" was accomplished to describe a unique crime in the history of the world accomplished by a unique means. The unique crime was the systematic elimination of a group with a systematic use of a weapon – gas chambers. In some instances there is an allegation of gas vans.

We will be introducing evidence to show that many of the allegations made at Nuremberg were incorrect. Much of the evidence was questionable and doctored in some cases, and that there was evidence in surrounding circumstances of torture of considerable degree that would astound some of us today if we were doing it in a Canadian Court of Law; it would raise some serious questions.

My friend said he proposes to call John Burnett. Well, that's good. He is the general counsel of the Royal Bank. What he knows about international banking will certainly be explored. {486|487}

We will be introducing articles in the course of the defence to show that there is literature to show that what is in the article, West, War and Islam is arguable. We don't have to prove anything beyond a reasonable doubt. I think we have to establish a reasonable basis for the belief and a right to believe it.

I would respectfully suggest that calling Dr., Harry Kaufmann is another prejudicial piece of evidence outweighing the probative value. It will, no doubt, involve hearsay of some sort or another. It will deal with a man who researched the issue of hate propaganda. The issue is not that, but whether the statements in "Did Six Million Really Die?" and the allegations in it are true, and in the statements made in "The West, War and Islam", whether [whether] there is a basis for that as well.

My friend proposes to do something never before done in Canada in another matter – he proposes to ask you to take judicial notice of "The Holocaust". Well, that is a statement that absolutely perplexes me, because the Holocaust is a word that has a variety of definitions. It means many things. It could mean the gas chamber aspect of the story; it could mean the belief – you must believe that six million were killed; you must not question that; {487|488} you must believe that the gas chambers existed; you must not question that. If that is the case, I am saying he is asking you to dispose of the case and not to allow you to prove the basis for reasonable belief to the contrary, or, indeed, to question the validity of that belief. And I say, we are not taking away the Holocaust as an idea from current literature or anything; we are asking for the right to doubt it and the right to demonstrate the reasons why, and the literature.

My friend says that it should be regarded as a matter within the law, or rather, the common knowledge of our time. Well, when one deals with the complex question like what is now called the Holocaust, it certainly throws a wide blanket of obligatory belief on many – in fact, the whole country.

I suppose if it can be taken that a court can decide that it is a fact that the Holocaust happened in the way presented by the media, and it's a crime, then it becomes a fact that that is the truth, and to purview a contrary opinion becomes falsehood; well, then, the law has created a category of belief to disagree with, which becomes a crime.

That is, I hope, a novel proposition which {488|489} shall not be extended to the law of Canada, but that will, no doubt, remain to be decided.

So if I may just summarize, my client's position and the position of the defence, the booklet does not deny persecution of Jews, confiscation from Jews, deportation of Jews, forced labour of Jews in concentration camps, death by disease, death by privation, by War, and suffering ranging in the hundreds of thousands, perhaps; but the booklet does state – and the defence will raise the belief which the accused maintains he honestly believed that (1) there was no specific crime of genocide, which is a deliberate killing of Jews as a group, and (2) there was no specific weapon for the specific crime of genocide – that is, no gas chambers.

Now, gas chambers as defined by the Holocaust legend or story or truth, whichever way you want to believe or put it, were gas chambers of a unique kind. There were certainly gas chambers for the delousing of clothes, and we will be calling evidence to prove that – that, indeed, they did use the chemical Zyklon-B. That indeed, will be proved by an expert witness by the defence, or an attempt will be made to do that from an expert from the defence. {489|490}

As I understand it, the Holocaust, as alleged in the media and as represented through the literature, was a crime without precedent involving gas chambers, which the booklet alleges are not proven. In fact, the booklet disputes their existence.

The portion of the Holocaust involving gas chambers is a myth, since it was an attempt to explain a phenomena that was not known to the people involved. And since it is the core of the story which makes the Holocaust to a unique story, and a crime without precedent, then the Holocaust, as it has been represented with the gas chambers as a prerequisite element, is false.

The unprecedented crime by the history of both Nuremberg and current public opinion laid it squarely at the feet of Germany, and my friend did not say "Nazis", in his comments; he said "Germany", which is an interesting point – it is 'laid squarely at the feet of Germany. And this is unfortunate, and we feel – and rather, not I, but the accused feels – it is unfair. He believes it is not correct. And this does not mean that he, the accused, believes that Jews did not suffer terribly, but he will be producing evidence to show that Canadians in Canada were in internment camps as they were in the United States of {490|491} America, in Britain, in Japan and in South Africa during the World War; and in those camps, unfortunate and terrible things happened.

Now, my friend addresses the issue of racial and religious tolerance. It will be the position of the defence that the best solution to any intolerance is an open and free discussion. And it may be that some people's opinions are regarded as untrue, but the answer to untruth is truth, not prosecution. If there is an untruth in "Did Six Million Really Die?" the correct and honourable thing to do is to publish another book like, "Six Million Did Die: The Truth Shall Prevail", which is published in Johannesburg, 1968, a copy of which is sitting on my friend's desk and is the basis for his answer, which is an interesting book in itself; but our position on the whole matter of racial tolerance is that racial intolerance is created by the refusal to permit discussion of controversial topics, that it should be proper to debate anything.

Nobody denies the right to the existence of God, and that should be sacred. In this country it is done every day. Nobody denies the right for the different interests of Jesus Christ; people believe strongly in that; but it is done every day and it should be in this country. {491|492} People should defend them. And the best opportunity of belief is to debate it.

So social and religious intolerance is open to debate, and it is going on here in that we are obliged – that is the accused is obliged, the defence on behalf of the accused is obliged to introduce a defence. And it's a very costly process for the accused, as I am sure Your Honour is aware. It puts the accused in a very difficult position to face the massive weight of power and money on the side of the State. It will be the contention of the defence that he, the accused, is not anti-Jewish. He may have had criticisms against Zionism; he may even have the right to criticize Judaism; it is open to him to criticize Christianity, Mohammedism, or anything in this country, and to criticize it for some reason; but Zionism is not a religion, and to some extent, "The West, War and Islam", Zionism is the attack. And neither is freemasonry – well, there is some debate as to whether it is a religion, but if it is a religion, it would be interesting to hear the point about what it is, and we no doubt will.

The position of the defence is that it shouldn't be improper to question its power and its influence. {492|493}

It is my submission right now, Your Honour, that the wisest thing that the prosecution could do in the interests of the racial and religious tolerance is to drop the charges, because in the course of this trial we have already seen many misunderstandings represented in the media about our position.

The accused is not denying what everybody says about the Holocaust. He is denying what, in essence, is the most unique aspect of it, the allegation of gas chambers.

Now, the booklet denies the fairness at Nuremberg as part of its thesis. It denies that the trial came to a right conclusion. It says that the trial at Nuremberg, and all the trials at Nuremberg were in an atmosphere of hatred, created by the War, against German people, and the accused takes the position, or will take the position in his evidence that he has tried for many years to rehabilitate the image of German people, because they suffer every day in the media from a reputation that they are a bunch of genocidal maniacs.

He was a German citizen at one time, and a person with a German name and German ancestry who has tried, through this brochure, to raise the answer to these {493|494} charges, and that is his position.

I want to say that there is something that I suggest has occurred in the trial which is unfair. It hasn't happened yet, but I am told that this is the way it is proposed to occur. The witness, John Fried, who I mentioned at the beginning, the Crown does not propose to call. The defence was relying heavily on the opportunity to introduce his evidence, because it demonstrates the very important part of the defence of the accused. Now, the Crown tells me they do not propose to call the complainant who laid the charge, although the Crown has taken it over, Sabina

Citron, who supports the contention of the defence that Auschwitz was a place from which people were transported to other camps. She, in fact, lived there with her mother; she worked there and she was later transported in a passenger car to another camp where she worked till the end of the War. Much of the Crown's evidence will allege that people disappeared. Well, if I stay in a prison and I don't see people again, then, indeed, they disappeared.

But Mrs. Citron is one of the people who were there and went to another camp, and she has told us about that camp in the preliminary. Now we can't have her unless we call her. In fact, my instructions are that we should like to do so. {494|495} I am also told that she is having a difficult home situation these days, that I certainly have sympathy for – there is illness in her family, I am told – and I very seriously sympathize with that, but her evidence would have been, indeed, important to the defence.

So the Crown has taken the position, and I dispute this right, to simply say, well, although I brought these witnesses at the prelim., we don't propose to call them now. And in the case of John Fried, he being in New York, we are stuck.

Now, as of Friday I was told we were going to see, today, the Masonic expert, a man by the name of, I think, Archer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Arthur.

MR. CHRISTIE: Arthur, excuse me. Today – I know this is a problem that my friend is – we are now told, no, today is Mr. Bassett, having prepared to meet Mr. Arthur.

That is not too serious a problem in that adaptations can be made in this point, but the introduction of Dr. Kaufmann is totally surprising as well, as is the case of Mr. Vrba – this is another surprise witness. And Mr. Fulop, I am told, is another surprise witness. These {495|496} are witnesses that have never been called at the prelim., so we are confronted with new witnesses every day, it seems, and changes of those. I want to say, in respect to the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and the pamphlet, "The West, War and Islam", I would respectfully suggest that the jury should be allowed to read the booklet at home. The danger of independent research which my friend addressed is certainly a real danger, but nobody stops a jury from reading popular literature, or having watched the various and sundry representations in the media against which Your Honour has correctly warned them.

If the jury can accept that warning, and it certainly does, then I would suggest that they could also be warned that they should not decide the truth or falsity of the booklet, but they should at least read those publications to understand what they say. I say to Your Honour that they will never get the chance to get the whole context of the two articles unless one of two things happen: They do read them in their own home, because they can't read them in Court, or my friend has somebody read the whole thing to them – me, or I suppose I would be cast with that duty, because if the Crown doesn't do it some day, {496|497} somehow somebody has to understand what the whole thing says. We can't take pieces out and say, "That's false. We got ya."

If it is in context, the whole thing makes a different meaning, and then it is that which they have to assess. We can't take it that they look at a comma or a quote, if it is out of place, and if that's false, then we have the accused somehow in a position of lying. It is my contention they should read the whole thing and understand it – not believe it or disbelieve it, but simply understand it. I think that's a practical solution, because we can't spend the time necessary to read this whole thing through to the jury. I am prepared to do that if I have to, but it would take a lot of what I suggest is unnecessary time. They could be warned about not doing independent research and to decide the case on the evidence in Court, but to read it so they will know what it says.

So to capsule what our position is that is, the accused's and the defence position – we maintain that Dr. Fried, or John Fried, should be called. We have prepared with his expert evidence in contemplation. We maintain that Dr. Raul Hilberg – I think he is a Doctor – is going to be giving entirely hearsay except for the part {497|498} referable [sic] to the quote attributed to him, that he does have –

THE COURT: I have that point.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. And that we should be entitled to have an opportunity to examine Sabina Citron, and I think that this demonstrates that the problems that I think are now becoming clear demonstrates that s.177 should never be directed to a historical issue, only falseness about present facts to which direct eye witnesses can testify.

It is my submission that we are confronted with a massive body of evidence that s.177 was never created to cope with. Section 177 is not competent, as a section, to deal with this massive inquiry to which the Crown is endeavouring to use the section in the present case. This is a question of history.

My friend said at the outset he didn't want to debate the Second World War. Unfortunately, he has chosen to attack the truth of a pamphlet that does question what went on; not who won – there is no doubt about that it looks to me there is no doubt about Germany losing, anyway – but there is straight doubt about exactly what went on and how does he or anyone have the right to decide for {498|499} the rest of society what went on during the Second World War and make that a matter of indisputable fact? The figure of six million is not supported by Dr. Hilbert, [Hilberg] who says 5.1 of European Jewry.

The figure of 4.9 is introduced by Dr. Reitlinger and a group of people who believe that the extermination of Jews was a plan. In fact, in Germany, as late as 1983; I believe, conferences were called by exterminationists who believed in the deliberate and systematic elimination of Jews in gas chambers. Those are what are called as exterminationists; and there's the vernacular group of people called revisionists who deny that.

In Germany, as late as 1983, there was a discussion among those who believe in exterminationism to decide whether or not it was a functional process or an intentional process. The functionalists maintain that it sort of developed out of a sort of economic problem – there were no direct orders; the intentionalists, among whom is Dr. Hilberg, believe it was a plan, but they concluded – and there's new reports on it – that they couldn't find the plan, they couldn't find the order. They tried to analyze from the Wannsee [Wannsee] Conference and the use of the word "final solution" and other such phrases. {499|500}

So that is where, in my submission, the dispute lies. I have tried to be as candid as I can, and perhaps more than I had to be, of course, to explain what our position is.

I think, with respect, it is a historical dispute between revisionists and exterminationists. My client happens to be a revisionist, and there were many reports of Belgian babies being bayoneted, and soap was made by the Germans. After the World War they were accepted as propaganda.

The theory of the defence is unfortunately, through political reasons, some wartime propaganda is still being used for political reasons, and we maintain the right to question the validity of what the accused refers to as false beliefs.

It is also of interest, and I think the Crown should know that I will be arguing, that at the very beginning of this booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", the accused sets out his reasons for publishing it. He sets out that he doesn't want thought crimes to exist in Canada. He refers to the process of dispute between the Attorney General of British Columbia, in fact, surprisingly enough, and the Attorney General of Ontario, as to whether he should {500|501} be allowed to publish the article and the letter at the beginning of this article will be of great moment to the defence in that it indicates the position of the accused on the whole matter, to the effect that he is not saying that you have to believe it, but – he will testify that he distributed this widely with the question, should you have the right to think these thoughts, or should they be illegal thoughts?

I think that's well-known, and because the Crown has a copy of the article, and it's there, I want the Crown to know that I will be arguing that it was the position of the accused all along that this article, which he believes to be true, should be open to debate, and he invited that debate. In fact, he invited the very thing that happened in South Africa – the publication of some other reasons to the contrary.

Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I could just very briefly reply, Your Honour, on two points or perhaps three.

First of all, as I know my friend is aware, in a trial like this, with the amount of publicity that there is, I have four or five people coming up to me every day saying they can be a witness; and obviously, I am not {501|502} utilizing all those witnesses, but there are some changes, and my friend knows that as soon as I am aware of that, I have notified him. I have provided him with as much information as I can.

Professor John Fried, Your Honour, is an eighty-three-year-old professor emeritus from New York. He testified and was cross-examined at the preliminary hearing. If my friend wishes, it is available to him, under a section of the Criminal Code, to read in that evidence.

There is one final matter, Your Honour, that I neglected to say that the Crown will be arguing as a very basic issue in the "Did Six Million Really Die?" pamphlet, and that is that this is more than historical revisionism, a new look at World War II. What is alleged in this pamphlet is a massive fraud based on imaginary slaughter to wring monetary compensation out of West Germany.

Each of the various witnesses, Your Honour, that are called by the Crown, with the exception, perhaps, of Dr. Kaufmann on Exhibit 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?" are all people who have either been intimately involved in the research of this issue, or who will testify as to enormous losses in their family and from their towns. Each {502|503} of those people would have to be part of the conspiracy, and they will testify that they are not.

That's all, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Well, I am grateful to both counsel for defining again the issues.

What I propose, subject to the comment of each side concerning the necessity for each juror to read the two Exhibits 1 and 2, will be this, that for the moment, at least, and subject to further order, as the trial proceeds, I propose to have the jury come to the jury room each morning a half an hour early so that they will get an opportunity to read both of those exhibits. That is my initial thought.

Mr. Christie, do you see anything wrong with that, subject to any further order I may make?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I think that's a better idea than I had. I would like Your Honour to couple that with the suggestion that they shouldn't decide on its truth or falsity, or perhaps even discuss that matter among themselves until they have heard the case, but that they should read it, and I think it will probably be possible in half an hour to read, depending on the person's comprehension {503|504} and whatnot, pretty well all of it in four days or so. So thank you.

THE COURT: Do you see anything wrong with that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I am content with that procedure.

THE COURT: Are you gentlemen ready to proceed?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is defence ready?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 11:10 a.m.

— The jury polled – counsel content the jury is present.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. My next witness is Mr. Roy Bassett.

— {504|505}

ROY BASSETT, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr. Bassett, I understand that you are a member of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force.

A. I am, sir, yes.

Q. And you are what rank?

A. Staff Sergeant.

Q. How long have you been on the Force?

A. I joined in 1957, which is about close to twenty-eight years on this Force.

Q. Are you also a Mason?

A. I am, sir, yes.

Q. How long have you been a Mason for?

A. Approximately twenty-two years.

Q. Have you ever held any offices in Masonry, any elected office or serve as an officer?

A. I am presently the secretary of my Blue Lodge. I went through all the chairs to become the Master of my Blue Lodge, and I am presently a member of Grand Lodge.

Q. Were each of those things – maybe you can help us as to what they are. First of all, Masonry – what is Masonry?

A. It's a fraternal organization.

Q. And who may join?

A. Any male person over the age of twenty-one who is not an atheist.

Q. And how does one become a Mason? How does one join? {505|506}

A. Well, to be a Mason it must be of your own free will, and in Ontario a Mason should not and must not ask another person to be a member. Therefore, a person wishing to become a member would have to approach a Mason and ask him if he may become a Mason, and that would start the process.

Q. All right. And what would finish the process – take us all the way through – to become a Mason?

A. If the Mason approached felt that the person could become a Mason, he would give him an application which would be filled in by the applicant, and I, then present it to the Lodge; the application would be presented to the Lodge and a committee would be appointed to investigate the applicant to see that he met the criteria that I mentioned.

Q. Which criteria is that?

A. That he must be over twenty-one years, a male person and not an atheist. And then the application, the report of that investigating committee would go back to the Lodge and ultimately the members of that particular lodge would vote as to whether they wished that person to be a member.

Q. Is there a secret ballot, or —

A. It is a secret ballot, yes.

Q. Is there any bar to Masonry by reason of race, religion, colour, country of origin – anything of that nature?

A. Not that I know, sir, no. Only the atheists, or a person who practised that type of thing, that would definitely be the bar to becoming a Mason. But, no, {506|507}religion, there is no bar.

Q. Are there any dues paid?

A. Yes. They vary from each Lodge. For instance, in Toronto there's approximately a hundred and ten Blue Lodges, and the dues differ. The ones that I know of, the dues would be between $50 and $75 a year.

Q. You have to help us now. A lot of people don't know how this works. Are there different colours of lodges?

A. No. The Blue Lodge, we call it the Blue Lodge as the first three degrees, and they are the normal, regular lodges. Beyond that there is no higher lodge, but there are different lodges such as the Scottish Rite. It goes to thirty-two degrees, and there is no colour attached to that Lodge.

Q. How many of those would there be in Ontario, or Toronto?

A. I don't know how many in Ontario, but there is one in Toronto, it's called the Vally of Toronto. There is one Scottish Rite. There is another one, I know, in Barrie. I don't know of any others.

Q. All right. Do you take any obligation when you become a Mason?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. Can you tell us what that obligation is?

A. I couldn't tell you what the words to the obligation are.

Q. Without using those specific words, could you tell us what the meaning of the words is?

A. I would say it would be very consis-{507|508}tent with living a lawful and honourable life.

Q. And what's the primary goal of Masonry?

A. I would imagine that there could be interpretation to this, but certainly ly the goals that I have seen set and achieved by members of the fraternity that I know have been to practise charity, to make good men better, and certainly to live a lawful life.

Q. Is there anything in the obligation that you undertake as a Mason that is in conflict with your obligations as a police officer?

A; Absolutely none, sir. It's in concord with my obligations as a police officer.

Q. You told us about Toronto lodges and something about Ontario-wide. What about beyond Ontario? Do you have any knowledge of Masonry beyond Ontario?

A. I have no direct knowledge, no. I have read many books. I know Ontario comes under the Grand Lodge of Canada in the Province of Ontario. I have no relationship at all, really, with any other lodges or any other jurisdictions. There is the one exception to that, sir. My brother is a past Master of a lodge in Vancouver, and although I don't speak to him very often because of the distance, the times that we have discussed lodge practices, they have been —

THE COURT: Just a minute, now.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am afraid we can't get into hearsay about what your brother told you they did in B.C.

THE WITNESS: No. All right.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Is there a world {508|509} organization of Masons?

A. I don't really think I can answer ' that, sir. There is not one that I know of, not as a world organization itself.

Q. All right. Is there something that – is there internationally, if anything, that would combine ...

A. I think most of the origins come from the Grand Lodge of England, the Grand Lodge of Scotland, and with the charters issued by them over the last few hundred years, there have been lodges and jurisdictions established in different countries.

Q. Charters issued by the Masons in England and Scotland.

A. Yes.

Q. Do any of your dues go to England and Scotland?

A. None that I know of, sir. The dues from the Blue Lodge, except for a small amount per member, goes entirely on the administration of that lodge. Other than that, there is a small amount goes to Grand Lodge per capita, but —

Q. The Grand Lodge. Is that England and Scotland?

A. I'm sorry, the Grand Lodge of Canada in the Province of Ontario.

Q. Can you tell us if Canada has one charter for all the various provinces, or if each province is a separate entity?

A. Each province would be separate, sir.

Q. Is membership in Masonry secret? {509|510}

A. No.

Q. How do I know – if I want to join how do I find somebody who is a Mason?

A. Quite a few Masons wear rings or other Masonic regalia – not regalia, I'm sorry, Masonic emblems; or it could come into conversation.

Q. All right. Are you wearing a ring?

A. I am, sir, yes.

Q. Mason's ring?

A. Yes.

Q. On the index finger (sic) of your left hand?

A. Yes, sir. In conversation it may be that one person would say, "I am not going to be working tonight because I have to go to Lodge", and of course, this would indicate to other people that he may be a Mason. So it's nothing that's secret that it shouldn't be known to other people that you are a Mason.

Q. How often do you meet in your Lodge?

A. In my Lodge we have a regular meeting each month, and an emergent meeting each month. So we meet approximately eighteen times per year.

Q. And how large is your particular Lodge?

A. We have, at the present moment, two hundred and fifty members.

Q. And do you know how large the Ontario Chapter is?

A. I'm sorry. I don't know, sir.

Q. Are you a member of a Lyons Club?

A. I'm not, no. {510|511}

Q. Or Kiwanis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Rotary?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any other group like that?

A. No, I'm not a member of any other group at all.

Q. Are you aware of any – can you tell us whether or not there are any ties between Masons and service clubs such as I have just mentioned?

A. There is none that I know of, sir. I do know many Masons who are members of different organizations, but there's no tie between the two – the service club and Masonry.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I may, Your Honour, I will just distribute "The West, War and Islam" book to the jury this morning.

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I am showing to you what has been marked as Exhibit No. 2.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "The West, War and Islam". Have you ever seen that before?

A. I saw it once before, approximately two to three months ago, yes.

Q. At the preliminary inquiry.

A. That's right, sir. Yes.

Q. All right. At the bottom of page 1 there is a paragraph entitled, "The International Secret Societies".

A. Yes, sir. {511|512}

Q. It starts off saying:

"Unknown to most people of the Islamic World is the tremendous power and influence exercised by Freemasonry and all its cover organisations like the Kiwanas, Rotary, Lions, etc."

Can you tell us whether Rotary, Kiwanis and Lyons are cover organizations for Freemasonry, or Masonry?

A. No. I could say they are definitely not, sir.

Q. All right. Are you a secret society?

A. No, sir. We are not.

Q. Is there any publication of your meetings?

A. Yes, there are. It's common knowledge when the lodge meet, there are books published – books are available to anybody, and our meetings, our regular meetings, are always on the same – for example, our lodge is the second Monday of each month. It has always been that way. And it's just known to everybody that wishes to find out when our lodge meets.

Q. All right. Are there secret things that go on at your lodge, or could any member of the public attend a meeting?

A. No – before a visit?

THE COURT: You asked two questions.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Could any member of the public attend your meetings?

A. Not unless he was a Mason, sir.

Q. All right. And are there secret {512|513} things that go on at your meetings?

A. There are some secrets that are known only to Masons, except for those that are published that anybody can read but may not understand. And this is to identify the person, to see that he is entitled to attend a meeting, and it's very similar to a deuce card. We all have deuce cards. And it should be the first duty of any lodge, before they admit a visitor, is to see his deuce card. This will be the first thing. And then, if they are satisfied the deuce card is okay, they could ask questions that would establish whether he is a Mason or not. These are the only secrets, if you wish to call them secrets, that we have.

Q. All right. At the top of page 2 it says:

"This is the same ..." –

referring to predecessor, so-called, Masons – The Assassins.

It says:

"This is the same satanic structure which we detect in Freemasonry: lies, secrecy, duplicity, infiltration and where necessary, assassination."

Let's take that a little bit at a time. "Satanic structure" – do you worship

Satan?

A. No, sir. I do not. And no Mason that I know does.

Q. All right. Is this your Masonry ring here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. May I see it for a moment?

A. You can take it off if you like. {513|514}

Q. You offered to take it off. No. That's all right. Thank you.

Do you find in Masonry lies – you have told us about secrecy. Let's talk about lies. Are there lies in Masonry?

A. There are no lies in Masonry, sir, no.

Q. "Duplicity, infiltration" – do you know what that's referring to there?

A. I don't really understand what that would mean at all, sir. If you added on to the last word "assassination", obviously it is incorrect. We have nothing to do with assassinations. And infiltration into what? I don't know. We are very open. We are Masons and we don't have to infiltrate anything. We are there.

Q. All right. "... and where necessary, assassination". Is that a policy of Masonry?

A. Absolutely not, sir.

Q. "That most Freemasons are unaware of the directors and direction of their secret organisation does not preclude their blind, unthinking support of this organisation and their obedience to its directives."

Is there anything other than the directives you've told us to make a good man better and act charitably in Masonry – any other goals or directives?

A. Basically, sir, that does cover the teachings of Freemasonry. Certainly law abiding citizens, and nothing else but that.

Q. All right. And do you have a blind, unthinking support of this organization? {514|515}

A. I do not, no, sir.

Q. Are you aware of the directors and direction of Masonry?

A. I am, yes.

Q. All right. The office-holders for Ontario, is that published somewhere, who they would be?

A. Yes, it is published.

Q. Is that public knowledge? Could any of us get this information?

A. I have seen it printed in newspapers, yes, soon after the elections in July of each year. I have seen names of our Grandmaster in newspapers notifying the public that a certain person was elected Grandmaster of our jurisdiction.

Q. "The orientation and rituals of these secret societies of the West come directly from the Kabbala of the Babylonian Talmud." Do you know what the Kabbala of the Babylonian Talmud is?

A. No, sir. I don't. I have no idea.

Q. Moving along, then.

A. I could say that it mentions secret societies again, and we are not a secret society, so the whole issue doesn't come out there.

Q. Next sentence says:

"Their content is Jewish, their goals are Jewish and their masters are Jewish."

First of all, Mr. Bassett, are you Jewish?

A. I am not, sir. {515|516}

Q. Are the goals of Freemasonry Jewish goals that you know of?

A. No, sir. No.

Q. And are the people who head up Freemasonry Jewish?

A. I am sure there are Jewish members in different positions.

Q. It's open to Jewish people to belong?

A. It sure is, sir, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. And, yes, sir, I am sure there are Jewish people who are in different offices.

Q. Are there non-Jewish people in different offices as well?

A. Yes, sir. There are, yes.

Q. Do you know what the goals and machinations, if there are any, of international Jewry are?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. And what role, if any, have you made in directing the advance of world crime, corruption, poverty, war, revolution, collapse and chaos from your position as a staff sergeant in the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force?

A. Absolutely none, sir.

Q. Do you know of any members engaged in that kind of activity?

A. If I did, I would take steps to have him charged and ejected from the fraternity.

Q. And when you say "charged", you mean charged in the fraternity, or charged under the Criminal Code of Canada?

A. Of course, that would depend as a {516|517} police officer, if it was an offence under the Criminal Code, I would pursue it that way, as well as a Masonic offence, which it is. It is a Masonic offence to be engaged in any of this type of thing.

Q. All right. What is the offence? Can you describe it for us, or ... You say it is a Masonic offence. What ...

A. It is a Masonic offence to do anything contrary to any law, and obviously, all of that is contrary to the law of Canada in the section of terrorism.

Q. And if a Mason commits such an offence, what happens?

A. Are you talking Masonically?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, anybody that has information on a Mason committing any offence – and that is any offence against the Criminal Code of Canada or other – would report it and a committee would be set up and, in essence, the person would be tried and, if found guilty, he would be struck from the books of Freemasonry.

Q. Let's see what's next:

"On behalf of the Zionists, the Gentile members of these secret societies have spread these plagues not only in the West, but throughout the entire world in which Western influence exists."

I think you have already told us about that.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Most members who are aware of their organisation's role in causing world {517|518} suffering rationalise these horrors as 'change' and as necessary steps in the creation of a world government suitable to their Zionist masters."

Do you have any interest in a world government, Mr. Bassett?

A. I have none. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what that is referring to at all?

A. No, sir. I think it would be ridiculous to even think that Freemasonry had anything to do with that type of thinking.

Q. All right. And you've already told us about Zionist masters. You have testified about that. And you can't tell us about travels in America. All right.

Just towards the end of that long paragraph there is a sentence that's underlined:

"No wonder U.S. policy always differs in practice from the pre-election promises made by these hypocrites!"

It is the next sentence I am interested in:

"A child could readily perceive the truth that no organisation which claims to do good, as do the Freemasons, need be secret; but brainwashed children become brainwashed adults and the thorough Zionist brainwashing has made the Western majority blind to the enemy that works in their very midst."

Do you have any comment on that, sir? {518|519}

A. I repeat what I said before, that of course we are not a secret society. The only work that I know that Masonry has done in the City of Toronto is good. We have collected money for charities. And the rest of that remark that's printed here is ridiculous to even accept as being true.

Q. Okay. Excuse me just a minute.

The standard symbol for Masonry that you find on a ring ...

A. Yes, sir.

Q. ... your ring looked different from what I had seen other times.

A. I wear a Scottish Rite ring. The status symbol for the Blue Lodge, the first three degrees is a square and compass with the letter G denoting God as a centre.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Are you a member of the Scottish Rite?

A. I am, sir, yes.

Q. What degree?

A. 32nd Degree.

Q. Are you familiar with a church known as the Roman Catholic Church?

A. I am, sir, yes. {519|520}

Q. Are you familiar that it is a fairly large church?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It claims to have represented Christianity for quite a few years; do you agree?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You don't know that?

A. No.

Q. I put it to you that the truth is that the Roman Catholic Church, on the 15th of December, 1983, said: The question has been raised whether the Church's position on Masonic associations has been altered, especially since no explicit mention is made of them in the New Code of Canon Law, as there was in the old Code. This sacred congregation is able to reply that that circumstance is to be attributed to a criterion adopted in drafting. This criterion was observed also in regard to other associations which were likewise passed over in silence, because they were included in broader categories.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, why don't you ask the witness whether or not he is aware of what you are reading from? Otherwise you are giving evidence and he is not.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am going to ask him that. I would like to read what it says and ask him if he is aware of it.

THE COURT: Why don't you ask him now?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I haven't finished —

THE COURT: I don't want you to finish. I want you to ask him now if he is familiar with a document that you are reading; otherwise you are giving evidence. {520|521}

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, when I put something to the witness I have to know if it is the truth, otherwise I am committing a grave offence; second, I have to put it to him to be identified.

THE COURT: Haven't you put enough to him yet, or do you want to put the whole thing?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it is about a hundred and sixty words.

THE COURT: What is the document?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is issued on the 26th of December, 1983, by the Vatican's Doctrinal Congregation, signed by Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, and approved by the Pontiff John Paul II.

THE COURT: That identifies the document.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are you aware that the Catholics are forbidden to be Masons?

A. I am not aware of that, sir, no.

Q. Well, I put it to you that you are aware that Catholics in the past have been forbidden to be Masons, haven't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are totally unaware of that?

A. My information is that Catholics can become Masons.

Q. Well, I put it to you that the truth is that the Church has said on a number of occasions that Masonry and Catholics enrolled in Masonic associations are involved in serious sin and may not approach Holy Communion, that they are excommunicated. Do you claim you didn't know that? {521|522}

A. That is true, sir. I didn't.

Q. You claim you didn't know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You claim that the biggest Christian denomination and their position on Masonry, you didn't know.

- A. That's right.
- Q. You claim that.
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know any Catholic Masons?
- A. I do, sir, yes.
- Q. What is their name?
- A. Last name of one is Burke.
- Q. Both their names.
- A. Denis Burke.
- Q. Where does he live?
- A. He lives in Mississauga.
- Q. Well, you claim that you don't know that the Catholics who are members of the Masonic orders are excommunicated; right?
- A. That's right. I didn't know that.
- Q. Did you know that excommunication from the Catholic Church is regarded as a very serious matter?
- A. I would assume so, but I know nothing about the Catholic Church.
- Q. I see. So that is an aspect of Masonry you just don't know anything about – the fact that the largest Christian denomination condemns it. You don't know that.
- A. I have never heard that before, no.
- Q. Okay. Did you ever consider that {522|523} there might be reasons why other groups don't believe in Masonry, that they think it is evil, very sinful? Did you ever consider that?
- A. I can't consider that, sir, because I know different.
- Q. You know different, eh?
- A. That's right.
- Q. You know all there is to know about Masonry?
- A. I know about the portion of Masonry that I live, yes.
- Q. That's right. And you could be ignorant of many of the secrets above you, couldn't you?
- A. I could be, yes.
- Q. And that is what the Masonic does, it keeps the lower initiates ignorant of the secrets at the higher level.
- A. It is not true.
- Q. You mean to tell me the secrets that you know as a 32nd degree members are known to the others at the lower degrees?
- A. If they wish to know them.
- Q. If they wish to be initiated.
- A. It is available to them.
- Q. But they have to go through initiation, don't they?
- A. That's right.
- Q. And that can take many years; isn't that right?
- A. Many months, not years, sir. But it is still available to them, sir. {523|524}
- Q. I put it to you that the Church to which I referred condemned Masonry by Papal Order in 1751, 1821, 1825, 1829, 1932 [1832], 1845, 1849, 1864, 1865, 1869, 1873, 1882, 1884, 1890, 1894 and 1902. I suppose you are ignorant of all that, too.
- A. If what you are saying is true, that's right, I am ignorant of that, sir.
- Q. Totally unaware that in everyone of those years the largest Christian denomination denounced Masonry.
- A. No, sir.
- Q. I put it to you that you don't know much about the history of Masonry, do you? Yes or no?
- A. I know what I learned about my years as a member.
- Q. You didn't know this?
- A. I didn't need to know that. From the day I joined, any person was able to join Masonry except a person who is an atheist.
- Q. So you are saying for all these years you honestly believed that Catholics can join the Masonic order.
- A. It is true. They have been able and they have.
- Q. Are you a Catholic?
- A. No, sir. I am not.
- Q. Then how do you know they have been entitled as Catholics to join?
- A. I said that Catholics were entitled to join the Masonic Lodge.
- Q. You allowed them. {524|525}
- A. Yes.
- Q. You didn't know that it was regarded as a significant sin by the Catholic Church?
- A. No, sir.
- Q. You know that the Lutheran Senate also condemn Masonry and those who joined the Masonic orders?
- A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know that the Christian Reform Church, the Society of Quakers, also condemns Masonry? Do you know that?
- A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you know that the Mennonites, the Jehovah Witnesses, Church of the Latter Day Saints, the Mormons also condemns Masonry?
- A. I don't know that, sir.
- Q. Just oblivious of all. The United Church, Seventh Day Adventist Church, General Booth in the Salvation Army condemned Masonry? Do you deny that?
- A. It is the first time I heard that said.
- Q. You never read it even in an encyclopaedia about Masonry?
- A. No, sir.
- Q. Just something you didn't know.
- A. That's right, sir. Providing it's true, of course.
- Q. I see. Oh, yes. You deny that's true.
- A. I don't know, sir. I told you I never heard of it before. {525|526}
- Q. Okay. I put it to you that the Lodge originated in the sixteenth century as far as we know, in the United Kingdom. Is that right?
- A. Approximately, yes.
- Q. And many times the explanation is offered for it involved reference to King Solomon's Temple among other things?
- A. There are some references, yes.
- Q. You say there is no connection between Masonry and Judaism. Right? To the best of your knowledge.
- A. The Freemasonry that I practise, no, sir.
- Q. Well, what's the difference about that from other Masonry – the Scottish Rite, for example? You are in the Scottish Rite.
- A. Yes.
- Q. I am just going to show you a medal. Do you recognize that?
- A. No, don't.
- Q. You don't.
- A. Well, I'm sorry, I will correct that. It is not a Scottish Rite medal. It is a medal —
- Q. — of a Royal Arch Mason.
- A. That is not Scottish Rite.
- Q. So you don't know anything about the Royal Arch Rite?
- A. No.
- Q. Why not? Is it secret?
- A. No. It is another branch.
- Q. You know that this is a Royal Arch medal? {526|527}
- A. Yes.
- Q. What is in the centre of it?
- A. I don't know, sir.
- Q. You don't recognize the Star of David?
- A. Oh, in the centre.
- Q. That's right.
- A. Yes, it's the Star of David.
- Q. What other group has the Star of David for a symbol – the six-point star?
- A. I'm sorry. What do you mean?
- Q. What other group has for its symbol the six-pointed Star of David, sir?
- A. Within Masonry you are talking about?
- Q. No. In the world. You don't know about the State of Israel? You haven't seen the State of Israel's flag?
- A. Yes, I have.
- Q. What is it?
- A. I don't know, sir. I couldn't tell you exactly.
- Q. What does it look like – like that?
- A. Yes.

Q. How different is it?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You don't know. Look carefully and tell me if there is a difference between that symbol and the symbol on the flag of Israel today.

A. You will have to show me the flag of Israel.

Q. You don't know the flag of Israel?

A. No, sir. {527|528}

Q. I put it to you it is the Star of David, and it is like what is in the centre of the Royal Arch Mason's. Do you agree?

A. I can't agree with you. You are likely right, and I don't know what this even means on the Royal Arch medal.

Q. What's in the centre of the Star of David, if you look carefully – another small symbol? I will put it to you so you don't have to guess – the square and compass. Right?

A. No, sir.

Q. No?

A. No, sir.

Q. The square and compass is not in the centre of the Star of David in that medal?

A. It looks like a triangle to me with – I don't know what it will be.

Q. Your eyesight – you are having difficulty? It is a small thing to see, I suppose. Right?

A. No. I can see very clearly. It is a triangle in the centre. It is not a square and compass.

Q. What does the square and compass represent?

A. To who, sir?

Q. To you.

A. They are part of the working tools of a Freemason.

Q. Aren't they the symbols usually associated with Freemasonry?

A. Yes. {528|529}

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file that as an exhibit, please, the article identified by the witness as a Royal Arch Mason medal?

THE COURT: It's been referred to. Exhibit "C" for further identification.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT "C" (For Identification): Arch Royal Mason medal.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce to you a piece of paper on the front of a book. What is the piece of paper?

A. I presume you are referring to what appears to be a one-dollar bill – United States of America.

Q. That is what it is, isn't it?

A. Well, it certainly looks like that yes.

Q. Whose face is on one side and whose face – it is George Washington on one side. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And he was a Freemason. Correct?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You don't know anything about that?

A. Well, I am told that he was, but don't have personal knowledge.

Q. Are you purporting to have some knowledge of Masonry generally such as you expressed to my friend just so you could assure my friend that Masonry were a group of people to help others and do charitable works? You must have told him you had some special knowledge of {529|530} Masonry, didn't you – a man of long experience.

A. Yes, I have special knowledge of Masonry.

Q. You answered my friend that it was stupid to say that – it was ridiculous to say that Masonry was an international secret society.

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Well, do you have any knowledge of the international workings of Masonry?

A. Masonry is not a secret society.

Q. Is that right? What's on the top of the pyramid in the American one-dollar bill in the middle of the triangle?

A. An eye.

Q. What kind of eye? Just an eye? It's the Mason's all-seeing eye, isn't it?

A. It's an eye, sir.

Q. You don't know what it means?

A. No, sir.

Q. You've got no idea?

A. No. Not on an American dollar bill.

Q. No, you don't know. The Master Mason's symbol in America – I am going to ask you if you know of the "Symbols of Masonry", which is the title of this book.

A. Some of them, yes.

Q. All right. I am going to turn to page 47 of this book. What's indicated at the top of the page as the glossary of symbols? What's that, at the top of the page?

A. What is which, sir?

Q. What is that, right at the top of {530|531} the page, the symbol?

A. It is an eye.

Q. An eye. What's it called? It's called the Masonic all-seeing eye, a symbol of watchfulness and the Supreme Being, whom the Sun, Moon and Stars obey and under whose watchful eye even Comets perform and even invades the inmost reaches of the human heart. Isn't that right?

A. I don't know, sir. That's an American version of that.

Q. Do you have any knowledge of a symbol in Masonry called the all-seeing eye?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. You do.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any other organisation that uses that symbol besides Masonry?

A. No, I don't, sir.

Q. So strangely enough, we have a unique symbol to Masonry situated in a very interesting position – on top of a pyramid situated on the American one-dollar bill. Don't we?

A. We certainly do.

Q. We do. And underneath it we have some Latin words, don't we?

A. Yes.

Q. And it says, "Novus Ordo Seclorum". Doesn't it say that?

A. It does, sir, yes.

Q. What does that mean but "new world order", sir? {531|532}

A. I don't know what it means, sir.

Q. You don't know. That is a Masonic secret you don't know, right?

A. Yes, there could be.

Q. Well, for a lot of people less than thirty-three degrees or thirty-two degrees, there's a lot of secrets they don't know, too, isn't there, that you do know?

A. Yes.

Q. So you can claim ignorance of the words "Novus Ordo Seclorum". Right?

A. I have no idea what it means.

Q. Have you ever heard that term in common conversation – new world order?

A. Not that I can recall, sir.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You have the knowledge of no Masonic history? Is that your position?

A. I'm sorry, sir?

Q. You don't know your Masonic history?

A. I have read Masonic history, but I don't think I could be considered an authority on it.

Q. I see. Well, I put it to you that George Washington was a Mason, so was Thomas Benjamin Franklin a Mason. Do you deny that?

A. I can't deny it, sir. I don't know.

Q. You didn't study anything about it; is that right?

A. I have been told that they were Masons. Yes, sir.

Q. You also have knowledge, do you not, that Benjamin Franklin was a member of something called the Hellfire Club in London? {532|533}

A. I don't think I know anything about that, sir.

Q. A group known to practise Satanism. You don't know that either.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that there have been many examples of Masonry involved in revolution throughout the world, especially in the nineteenth century? Do you deny that?

A. I know of none, sir.

Q. Are you interested in the matter of police responsibilities?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware that in the United Kingdom there have been instances of Masonic involvement in crime involved with the police department, and investigations of those subjects received much great publicity?

A. When was that, sir?

Q. In 1981, I believe. Are you familiar with this?

A. No, I'm not, sir.

Q. You are not? Have you ever read this book, "The Brotherhood"?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. By Stephen Knight?

A. No, sir. I haven't.

Q. Are you aware that at the lower level of Masonry God is referred to as The Great Architect of the Universe?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. I recall in answer to my learned {533|534} friend's original questions as to something you said, "I couldn't answer that". Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. It's not that you didn't know, is it? My friend asked you, could you tell us what the words to the obligations are? And you answered, "I couldn't tell you what the words to the obligations are". Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know the words to the obligations, don't you?

A. I do, yes.

Q. But you refused to answer his question because you don't want to tell. Right?

A. No. Because I swore not to tell.

Q. Now, you have sworn an oath to the Masonic brotherhood, and you are on the stand under oath to Her Majesty The Queen, and you swore you won't tell, and you won't tell.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He swore he couldn't tell, and the question was, "Could you tell us", Your Honour. Let's not twist it.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You are under oath to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

A. I am, sir.

Q. And you declined to answer the question because you didn't want to give the words of the obligations.

A. The actual words, yes.

Q. Because you swore an oath to keep it {534|535} secret.

A. Yes.

Q. And you wish to respect that oath.

A. Yes.

Q. And if I ask you to answer questions about that, what will you do – answer me truthfully, or refuse?

A. I would suggest you asking the question, sir.

Q. What are the words to the obligation?

A. Which obligation, sir?

Q. Your last degree.

A. I have no idea. I couldn't tell you right now. The 32nd degree?

Q. Yes.

A. I have no idea, sir.

Q. What are the words to any obligation?

A. I can tell you what they were, which I said the meaning of the whole thing, but I wouldn't tell you the words of the obligation, no.

Q. You wouldn't tell us the words of the obligation. You would give me a description of them in your words, but you wouldn't tell me the words of the obligation. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. You would refuse.

A. Yes.

Q. So if I ask you to tell me the words so I can judge for myself what they mean, you won't answer me. Is that right?

A. That's correct, sir. {535|536}

Q. So now I know whose oath takes precedence with you – your Masonic oath. Right?

A. The one that I took on the same Bible that I swore to.

Q. But the one you took in the Lodge, not the one you took here.

A. It is identical to this one.

Q. Same Bible; but when I ask you questions that you don't want to answer, you'll refuse because you have taken the Masonic oath to keep it secret. Correct?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. So if there was a conspiracy of Masons, would you tell me the truth about it?

A. I would, sir, yes.

Q. I see. Even though you have told me now that you will not tell me those things you swore to keep secret in the Lodge. Right?

A. That's right, sir, yes.

Q. That Lodge oath takes precedence over the oath to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, to that extent, doesn't it?

A. No, sir. I have told the truth, and I have told the whole truth.

Q. Well, you haven't told me the words to the obligation because you swore not to.

A. That's right, sir.

Q. So it's not the whole truth, is it? You won't tell me those words, will you?

A. I've actually seen them written in books that are available to the public, and if you had {536|537} a book that had them in there, I would tell you if that was the oath I swore.

Q. Okay. How about any other question? If you knew of a Masonic conspiracy, would you tell me?

A. Conspiracy to do what, sir?

Q. To promote Masons to positions of power. Would you tell me about that, sir?

A. I sure would, sir, yes.

Q. Would you?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about the case of the P2 scandals in Italy? Nothing, I suppose.

A. They are not recognized by our Lodge, so —

Q. That's right. There are many lodges throughout the world that are not recognized by you lodge, aren't there?

A. There are, yes.

Q. And they are Masonic Lodges, aren't they?

A. They purport to be Masonic Lodges, yes.

Q. Yours is the only true Masonic Lodge, I guess, eh?

A. It is what we consider the true Masonic Lodge.

Q. Right. But there are many other Masonic Lodges whom you don't recognize, and they practise Masonry and secret rituals and all sorts of things you wouldn't know anything about. Right?

A. That's right, sir. {537|538}

Q. You do know a certain amount about what was on that dollar bill, though, don't you?

A. Such as what, sir?

Q. That all-seeing eye – you knew what that was, didn't you?

A. I didn't know it referred to the all-seeing eye that I consider the all-seeing eye, which is God.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. That is no secret, sir.

Q. Why is it no secret – that that eye represents God?

A. That's right.

Q. I thought you said it is a Masonic symbol.

A. Yes.

Q. They are not secret?

A. No, sir.

Q. They aren't, eh? I suppose anybody understands what an eye means if it is on a piece of paper. Is that your position?

A. Any person wished to research it would know what it means in Masonry, yes.

Q. If you looked in the Masonic publications, and if you looked in the library, you would find this is a Masonic symbol. Is that right?

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. So you don't know anything about the Masonic Lodge called Propaganda, do you?

A. No. I know nothing of it, sir.

Q. Masonry is not necessarily compatible {538|539} with Christianity, is it, sir?

A. I think – could you explain that a little bit wider, sir?

Q. Well, what is Jahbulon? Isn't that a Masonic Lodge? Isn't that a Masonic name for God?

A. Not one that I recognize, sir.

Q. Is there a degree of Masonry higher than you – 33rd degree?

A. Well, not really higher, sir. The highest degree is the third degree, and we are all equal as far as high. The other degrees go lateral in the Scottish Rite and the York Rite.

Q. They just go lateral; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, is there a 33rd degree Mason?

A. There is, sir, yes.

Q. Was Gerald Ford a 33rd degree Mason?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Is he referred to as the Sovereign Grand Inspector General?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You don't know?

A. No.

Q. That's a secret, is it?

A. No. I just don't know. I only knew Gerald Ford as a past president of the United States. I don't know anything about him.

Q. Well, is a 32nd degree Mason referred to as a Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is you. And a Grand {539|540} Inspector Inquisitor Commander is a 31st degree Mason. Is that right?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. Have a look at this diagram which purports to set out the Masonic categories of the Scottish Rite.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct.

A. What are you talking about?

Q. The categories, the thirty-three degrees of the Scottish Rite of Masons. Is it accurate? Is it accurate?

A. It looks to be accurate, sir, but I would have to compare that to my own list at home.

Q. They appear to go vertically, don't they, up to thirty-three degrees?

A. Well, it's just the way it is set out on the paper, yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So getting back to what I asked you about before, you don't know what Jahbulon means, eh?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. You are familiar with a lot of other secret passwords, though, aren't you?

A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. And you are obliged not to tell any of those passwords, aren't you?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. And so you refuse to tell me those passwords, wouldn't you?

A. Most likely I would, yes. {540|541}

Q. And you have refused to tell me what Jahbulon means.

A. No. I don't know what it means. I would tell you if I knew, sir.

Q. So that might be something in the nature of a secret that you don't know.

A. It would be a word for one of many of the degrees, either in the Scottish Rite or the York Rite.

Q. So you wouldn't be able to dispute the fact that it is a Masonic word for God that replaces the words, "The Great Architect of the Universe", which is used at lower levels, would you? You wouldn't dispute that?

A. I don't believe that's true, sir.

Q. You don't?

A. No, sir.

Q. And part of the word in that word has reference to Baal. Do you deny that?

A. Never heard of that word, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about Scottish – York Rite Masons?

A. None at all, sir.

Q. So their secrets are kept by them, and yours by yours. Right?

A. I don't know anything about the York Rites, sir. I don't know if they are secret.

Q. That's the interesting thing about secrets, isn't it? You don't know what secret somebody is keeping.

A. That's right, sir. {541|542}

Q. Do you know anything about the Kabbala?

A. I don't know.

Q. The mystic use of numbers? Do you know anything about that?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know anything about the origin of the Masonic degrees?

A. I know some of the origins, yes.

Q. You deny it has anything to do with the Kabbala?

A. Well, how can I deny it, sir? I don't know what the Kabbala is. I haven't read anything about the Kabbala.

Q. So again you claim that you just don't understand what that means. Right?

A. I don't know, sir. That's true.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Do you have any idea why, if I am right, that the Catholic Church has forbidden Catholics to join Masonry? Have you any idea why they might not support it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Where is all this leading us, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it seems to me it is somewhat relevant if a large Christian Church takes such a severe view of the matter.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If it does.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am prepared to prove that, if I have to, but I can't at this point. That is why I am asking the witness. {542|543}

THE COURT: Hasn't he already indicated that he doesn't know anything about the Roman Catholic Church?

MR. CHRISTIE: Fair enough. Thank you.

Q. Now, witness, are you aware of the fact that in the United Kingdom and other countries, too, judges are Masons? Correct?

A. How can I possibly answer that?

Q. All right. How about here in Ontario, then, where you do live – judges are Masons, aren't they?

A. Correct, sir.

THE COURT: Not this one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. And many lawyers are Masons. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All part of something that is regarded as a brotherhood. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They all meet in the Lodge from time to time. Right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean to tell me they never discuss what they are doing in their daily lives?

A. Yes. There would be discussion on what happens in their daily lives, among all members.

Q. Do you know of Masonry in South America and Mexico?

A. I don't know, sir, no.

Q. Do you know that Benita Juarez and certain Mexican revolutionists were Masons? Well, you said {543|544} you don't know. You don't know about America. You don't know about Italy. You don't know about Germany.

A. I have met a person who was in Germany, but I don't know about the —

Q. Was he in the Scottish Rite in Germany?

A. No. In the regular lodge.

Q. What lodge?

A. The Blue Lodge.

- Q. So he is part of your lodge.
A. Yes. He is in the same type of lodge I was in, yes.
Q. Do you know about what Masonry involves in those countries?
A. I don't know, sir.
Q. So far as it being conspiratorial or political you couldn't deny that, could you?
A. I have no idea what they do. I can only tell you what happens here in Ontario.
Q. And in the United States, perhaps?
A. No, primarily Ontario. This is what I would be concerned with, sir.
Q. Do you know that Robert Jackson the prosecutor for the Nuremberg Trial in the United States, was a Mason?
A. I don't know, sir.
Q. Do you know that a judge by the name of Simpson, who investigated allegations of impropriety during the Nuremberg trial, was also a Mason?
A. I didn't know that, sir, no.
Q. Do you know that many, many Presidents {544|545} of the United States have been Masons?
A. So I have been told, yes.
Q. Do you know which ones?
A. I don't know, sir.
Q. Do you think they favour the Masonic brothers in terms of advantages and benefits of office?
A. I would sincerely hope not.
THE COURT: How can he say that if he doesn't know? Didn't he just say he didn't know, Mr. Christie?
MR. CHRISTIE: The previous question he said he didn't know, yes. I didn't think that meant he didn't know for the question I just asked.
THE COURT: What was the one you just asked?
MR. CHRISTIE: Whether he thought it likely that those who were the officers in Masons would offer benefits of office to other Masons.
THE COURT: You can answer that.
THE WITNESS: I would say I would hope not, sir, because that is contrary to our belief.
Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, it's contrary to your belief to help other Masons?
A. In the manner that you mentioned. Yes, sir.
Q. Oh. Now, do you deny that you have any knowledge of the scandal involving fifty-two police forces in England in 1981 and Masonry? Do you deny that?
A. I would have to, sir. I have no knowledge of that. {545|546}
Q. No knowledge of it, eh?
A. No, sir.
Q. You sound as if you, perhaps, come from England at one time.
A. Yes, I did.
Q. Were you involved in Masonry there?
A. I was not. I was a police officer in England, but not a Mason.
Q. Not a Mason.
A. No, sir.
Q. Most police officers, we should say lots and lots of them, are, aren't they, in England?
A. I'm sorry. I don't know.
Q. Are your lodge meetings open to the public?
A. No, they are not.
Q. So people who aren't members of the lodge can't come to the meeting.
A. That's right.
Q. That is what the man at the door is for, to keep out strangers?
A. That would be his duty, yes.
Q. Do you read the newspapers?
A. I do, sir, yes.
Q. Did you ever see any accusations in the papers that connected the KGB and the Masons in the United Kingdom [Kingdom] in regard to spying?
A. No, sir. I have never read anything about that. I must have missed that. What newspaper is that?
Q. The Toronto Star, Friday, January {546|547} 27th. The year is missing, but I think it's '83 or in '82. It says, "KGB used Masons to spy. U.K. Book", and it is the book I had in my hand, "The Brotherhood". Did you ever see that article?
A. I haven't, sir, no.
Q. Have you ever heard of Sir Roger Hollis?
A. No, I have never heard of him.
Q. Hollis – you don't know anything about that case.
A. No, sir. I have lived in Canada for twenty-eight years. I have no idea what —
Q. Wouldn't it interest you if Masons are accused of espionage? Doesn't that interest you at all?
A. Well, if I had seen it, I would have read it, yes. I certainly would have read it.
Q. The Globe and Mail, Thursday, September 22, 1984, L2, "Masons within the U.K. ... controversy over the influence of law and order is widening. Scotland Yard earlier —"
THE COURT: All right. Just show it to him.
Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you read that?
A. I have not, sir.
Q. Is that a surprise that it is attached to such an organization as Masonry?
A. Well, it's not too much of a surprise that some people can do things that they shouldn't be doing; and of course, if that happened here in Toronto they would be charged, and they wouldn't be Masons very long, if it was an offence [offence] against the law. {547|548}
Q. Mm-hmmm.
A. Whatever they are doing.
Q. But doesn't it happen, too, sir, that the loyalty of the lodge is sometimes greater than, shall we say, the loyalty to the law?
A. No. It can't be, sir.
Q. It can't be?
A. Absolutely not.
Q. Well, I just ran into a situation a short while ago when a Mason was asked to tell us the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, he couldn't tell us certain things. Do you think that could happen?
A. I have told the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.
Q. Except for the obligations, the words.
A. Certain words, yes.
Q. We are not allowed to hear that to decide for ourselves so that we could all ascertain they were innocent words and have no evil intent. Is that correct?
A. That's correct, sir.
Q. Because your oath to keep that secret is greater than your oath to tell the whole truth; isn't that right?
A. I have told the whole truth. I have told you that the obligation has nothing contrary to any unlawful act.
Q. That is your opinion; but we won't hear the words to decide for ourselves. Right?
A. That's right, sir.
Q. Okay. So we have to take your word {548|549} for it that it is all innocent in terms of meaning. Right?
A. That's right, sir.
Q. Were you aware that Sir Roger Hollis was the director general of MI5 in 1956 to '65, and that he was a Mason?
THE COURT: Mr. Christie, he has already said that he doesn't know anything historical. Now stop reading from it.
MR. CHRISTIE: It is a different article, Your Honour.
THE COURT: Then file it. You know the rules.
MR. CHRISTIE: I do, Your Honour.
THE COURT: Then please show the witness the article.
MR. CHRISTIE: I wasn't using it as evidence.
THE COURT: You are doing it indirectly. You were reading it without showing it. Now, please show it and continue your cross-examination. And stop groaning or I will excuse the jury and have a word with you.
Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I will refer to an article, the Chicago Tribune, 1984. I suppose you are unaware of that, too, sir. Will you have a look at it?

A. It's the first time I have ever seen that article, sir.

Q. Thanks very much. Again, totally oblivious to anything involving Masonry and the fact that the KGB might use Masonry. Right?

A. Not in Canada. They wouldn't do it in Ontario, no. {549|550}

Q. No. But if it's a secret, as you maintain, how do you know what goes on in other lodges?

A. Well, it isn't a secret – I haven't maintained that it's that secret, sir. All I have said is that there are certain things that identifies one Mason to another, and primarily that is to gain entrance to the Lodge.

Q. And in daily life isn't it true that you identify a Mason by certain grips and handshakes and signals?

A. Not necessarily, sir.

Q. Not necessarily, but isn't that done?

A. It is a form of recognition, yes.

Q. Like for example, if you wanted to make a signal to somebody in this courtroom, you could do so. If they were a Mason, they would know the signal and they would know and nobody else would. Is that right?

A. It's likely, but it would never be necessary, sir, because I would never tell anybody that I am a Mason. I wouldn't need to have any secret signal. But the secrets are to gain admission to our lodge room.

Q. Are there secret signals?

A. There are signals, yes.

Q. Are they used in daily life outside the lodge, ever?

A. You are asking for me, myself, sir? No, I don't use them at all.

Q. Are you familiar with the form of Masonry known as Grand Orient Masonry?

A. No, sir. I am not.

Q. You don't know about that. {550|551}

A. No.

Q. And I suggest to you that on the Continent it is more common on the Continent of Europe. Do you deny that?

A. I can't affirm or deny it, sir. I don't know anything of it.

Q. You don't know. Have you studied anything about the relationship between Napoleon and Freemasonry?

A. I have not.

Q. French Revolution and Freemasonry?

A. No, sir.

Q. The theology of Masonry – have you ever studied anything about?

A. I haven't, no.

Q. Have you ever read other books to study Masonry? What have you read?

A. The books about Freemasonry in Ontario.

Q. Produced by whom?

A. By the Grand Lodge.

Q. So you rely on all your information from what comes within the Grand Lodge?

A. I do, yes.

Q. You don't read books outside the Grand Lodge about Masonry.

A. None that I can recall, sir. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of illuminism?

A. I have not, sir. No.

Q. The article doesn't seem to reflect any reference whatsoever to Ontario, does it, that my friend {551|552} read to you?

A. Which article, sir?

Q. Well, you read the article called, "The West, War and Islam" which was a message to the Islamic world. It says on the top, "A Message to the Islamic World". Now, you don't consider Ontario the Islamic world, do you?

A. I wouldn't think so. No, sir.

Q. No. And everything that was read in it by you, after the word, "International Secret Societies", does that refer to Ontario anywhere?

A. I don't think it specifically refers anywhere. May I have a look at that? No, there's no mention other than The Western World.

Q. Well, the Western world, that includes Europe, does it, and South America and the United States – areas of Masonry you know nothing about? Right?

A. That's right.

Q. So then you can't say that article is ridiculous at all, can you?

A. I can as far as Ontario.

Q. Ontario, yes, but with your experience in Ontario, it doesn't seem consistent, but you have to admit that the knowledge of Masonry in the rest of the world is a little inadequate. Would you agree?

A. Inadequate in what? I have no knowledge of the types of Masonry.

Q. No. Do you know that they do exist, though? Have you ever heard of Grand Orient Masonry?

A. No, I haven't, sir. {552|553}

Q. No. You have heard of the York Rite, though.

A. Yes.

Q. That's another branch of your lodge, or is it not?

A. No. It's similar to the Scottish Rite, and any third degree Mason can join the York Rite, as they may join the Scottish Rite.

Q. Are you aware of any international meetings of the Masons?

A. I'm not, sir, no. I'm sorry, international meetings?

Q. Right.

A. We have American Lodges meetings here in Toronto the odd time, if that can be considered international.

Q. Are you aware of these words spoken on the 20th of September, 1876, by the then Prime Minister of England, Benjamin Disraeli?

If my friend is going to object, I will stop. I am going to use these words.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, 1876?

MR. CHRISTIE: 1876. I am going to read what he said.

MR. GRIFFITHS: What is the source of it?

MR. CHRISTIE: A speech he made in Aylesbury on September 20, 1876, and I am going to quote a paragraph.

THE COURT: Have you seen the quote?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I just don't know – perhaps the question now should be whether {553|554} the Officer is familiar with that speech.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, you are obviously unaware of any speech of Benjamin Disraeli in 1876. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you agree that Masonry has been condemned throughout history on a number of occasions by very prominent people?

A. I wouldn't go so strong as to say "condemned", sir.

Q. Would you say there is a condemnation in "The Modern History of Europe" —

MR. GRIFFITHS: The same objection, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am asking if he considers this a condemnation. I want to know if he approves ...

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The modern history of Europe can only be written by one who is initiated in the secrets of the secret societies. These societies can bring all political arrangements to nought. Their agents are everywhere, unscrupulous agents that incite murder.

Would you consider that a condemnation of secret societies?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And isn't it true that many people throughout history have referred to Masonry as a secret society, whether you agree or not with that statement?

A. They may refer to them, sir, but they are not secret societies. Freemasonry is not a secret society. {554|555}

Q. Yes. You have said that over and over again.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But would you agree that you are aware that throughout history, at least the Catholic Church – now, you don't know about that either. Many people, you will agree, have referred to Masonry as a secret society, haven't they?

A. Many uninformed people refer to it as a secret society, yes.

Q. You, as a Mason, you know better.

A. That's right, sir. I do.

Q. Sure. Although the meetings are not open to the public, and there are secret signs and passwords, you don't consider it secret.

- A. That's right, sir.
- Q. Mm-hmmm. Have you ever studied how the American Revolution was financed?
- A. I have not, sir.
- Q. Have you ever studied how the French Revolution was financed?
- A. I have not.
- Q. Are you familiar with General MacArthur?
- A. I only know him to be an American general. I don't know anything about him, no.
- Q. No. You don't know what his relationship, if any, was with Masonry.
- A. No, sir.
- Q. Does it surprise you that many of the prominent people of the world were Masons, or is that what you would expect? {555|556}
- A. It doesn't surprise me, sir. No.
- Q. Because the Brotherhood helps its own, don't they?
- A. In what way, sir, are you suggesting?
- Q. Well, do the words make plain, ordinary sense to you, like helps its own? Is that confusing to you?
- A. It is, yes.
- Q. Do you agree that Masonry has taken the view that all churches are equally right? In fact, all religions are equally right?
- A. We don't discuss religion at the meetings, and we don't have any view on other religions.
- Q. You wouldn't, therefore, deny that Christianity, as such, is never mentioned in the Lodge.
- A. Not as a discussion, sir, no.
- Q. This reference to the Bible, it exists in the Lodge and it is there for the purpose of oaths; is that right?
- A. In my Lodge. Yes, sir.
- Q. You don't know whether that is true of Grand Orient Masonry or other kinds of Masonry.
- A. I don't know anything about that at all, sir. I know there's other Holy Books in other Lodges other than the Bible itself.
- Q. Yes. What Holy Books?
- A. I think the Koran is one of them.
- Q. Mm-hmmm. Others, too, though, aren't there?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So it's sort of a universal brotherhood {556|557} that transcends religious groups. Would you agree?
- A. No, I don't agree with that, sir.
- Q. Why not? What's wrong with that statement? Is there an error in it?
- A. Well, because we are not a religious group.
- Q. I said it transcends religious groups. It goes above them and breaks through various religious groups. There's Islamic Masons; there's all different religious groups are in Masonry, aren't they?
- A. But as I said, we don't discuss religion, and I won't ask any other member of the Lodge what religion he was.
- Q. So do you know what it means by "transcends religion"? It crosses all religious lines, doesn't it?
- A. Yes, I would agree with that.
- Q. The Lodge might use a Bible one day and a Koran in another lodge somewhere. Right?
- A. That's right. Yes.
- Q. It might use a different book somewhere else.
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. It is by no means true to say that it has any connections whatsoever with any church or religion.
- A. That's correct. Yes.
- Q. In fact, it is somewhat anti-religious, isn't it?
- A. It is not.
- Q. Would you agree that in the past it has sponsored attacks on certain churches? {557|558}
- A. To my knowledge it has never sponsored any attack on any religious establishment.
- Q. I'd like to show you the front cover of what I suggest is a popular magazine on the Continent of Europe and ask you whether that has any relationship to Masonry that you know of.
- A. Well, it has words on it such as Scottish Rite and York Rite, White Masonry, Rotary, Blue Lodge.
- Q. Masons without the apron, secular humanism.
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. It's called "Diagnosam" and it is dated September 1984. Is that right?
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. It seems to have on top of it that triangle with the all-seeing eye, doesn't it?
- A. Gee, I don't think I can agree with that one, sir. That looks like a blurb within the triangle. don't think that's an eye.
- Q. Mm-hmmm. Could I use that as an exhibit for identification?
- THE COURT: Where is the original? That appears to me to be a photostatic copy.
- MR. CHRISTIE: It is. I can't undertake to produce the original at the moment.
- THE COURT: Then when you can, we will decide the matter.
- MR. CHRISTIE: All right. It is identified by date publication.
- Q. Would you agree with me, sir, that {558|559} at least in popular literature, that it's often represented that there is a relationship between various Masonic orders outside the Scottish Rite?
- A. I'm sorry, you will have to repeat that. I didn't quite catch the question.
- Q. Did you ever read in popular literature about Masonry?
- A. No, I haven't. Could you name an article or a book?
- Q. All right. I did, but I will try again. The book that I suggest to you was reviewed in a lot of papers, "The Brotherhood" by Steven Knight, you have a picture on the front of two hands being clasped – obviously somebody's right hand and another person's right hand. Is that right?
- A. Yes.
- Q. You are oblivious to that book?
- A. I have never seen it before, sir.
- Q. Or the book, "Freemasonry Unmasked As The Secret Power Behind Communism" by Monsignor George F. Dillon, D.D.; you are oblivious of that?
- A. I'm sorry, I have never read that.
- Q. Never read that.
- A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you think people should be free to know what it's all about, your type of organization?
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. They should be free to analyze it and discuss it.
- A. If they wished, yes, sir.
- Q. And even criticize it? {559|560}
- A. Providing they don't lie about it, yes.
- Q. Yeah. But none of the words in the article that you read, "The West, War and Islam", referred to Scottish Rite Masonry; right?
- A. Well, it referred to Freemasonry, not Scottish Rite Masons or Freemasons, so, yes, it did indirectly refer to them.
- Q. So your complaint is that it was not precise enough. It didn't specify which Masons it referred to; is that right?
- A. No, that is not my complaint, sir. My complaint is that I believe that to be lies, what's in there.
- Q. Well, if it is talking about Grand Orient Freemasonry, or even your lodge, you don't know anything about the actions of your lodge in the United Kingdom at all, do you?
- A. My Lodge is in Scarborough, Ontario, sir, not in the United Kingdom.
- Q. So there is no relationship to the Grand Lodge in England?
- A. Yes, there is a relationship.
- Q. What is that relationship?
- A. We originally got a Charter from the Grand Lodge of England.
- Q. Right.
- A. We have no communication with them now.
- Q. And that's why you have no knowledge of whether they were involved in corruption at all. Right? {560|561}
- A. I don't know if they were involved, sir. No.
- Q. Not being familiar with the situation there you cannot say that the criticism in the article is false, can you?

A. I can when it is referring to Freemasons as referring to them here in Ontario, sir, yes.

Q. There appears to be a great deal about Freemasonry that you don't know. Would that be correct?

A. Oh, yes. That's correct, sir.

Q. Do you get the American publications on Freemasonry?

A. I do not, no.

Q. You don't subscribe to the Northern Light?

A. No, I do not.

Q. "A Window for Freemasons".

A. No, I do not, sir.

Q. And do you know what that publication is?

A. I do not, no.

Q. Would you agree that your position in Freemasonry appears to be that of a person who has faith in the organization, much of which is secret even to you?

A. No, that's not correct, sir. I do have faith in the organization that I belong to, mainly because I know so many people personally within it, and I know their beliefs and I know their actions.

Q. Yes. But there is an awful lot more that you don't know about Masonry generally, is there? {561|562}

A. I don't believe so, no. Could you expand on that a little bit?

Q. Well, I have tried to ask you about Masonry in Britain and you don't know, in the United States and you don't know.

A. No. I have told you from the beginning, I am a Mason in Ontario, and that's what I know.

Q. You have told us, too, that the Masons in the Lyons Club and the Rotary and whatnot, there is no direct connection, but there are lots of Masons in those organizations: right?

A. Oh, yes. I would imagine so.

Q. And would you agree that those organizations are often places which are, shall we say, good resource material for Masonry? Lots of people go there, and then they become. Masons?

A. No, I don't believe so, sir.

Q. You prohibit just atheists and females; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any bloody oaths in Masonry?

A. Do you mean by letting blood?

Q. No.

A. Could you describe or explain what you mean by that one, sir?

Q. Well, oaths that are rather terrifying oaths.

THE COURT: Involving blood?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Mutilation [Mutilation].

THE WITNESS: No, sir. {562|563}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: There aren't?

A. No. I have never seen blood shed —

Q. I didn't ask you that. Don't misunderstand my question. I said, are there any oaths involving mutilation?

A. I don't understand the question, sir.

Q. Why not? What about it don't you understand?

A. Well, I've answered that there is no mutilation [mutilation], there is no blood-letting in lodge rooms.

Q. I understand that. I think you understood my question when I asked you whether the oaths involve discussions of, "my tongue torn out by the roots, my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water-mark, or at cable's length from the shore where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours". Is that familiar to you?

A. It is, yes.

Q. Tongue torn out by the roots, eh? Why would someone want to swear that?

A. I have no idea, sir.

Q. But you did swear it.

A. I didn't, no.

Q. You didn't?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have never heard that initiation?

A. Who says it's an initiation, sir?

Q. Well, is that part of an oath in the Masonic Lodge?

A. Not that I know, sir. {563|564}

Q. You don't have any knowledge of that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You ever heard of an oath where someone would discuss their intestines being pulled out, or disembowelled?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never?

A. No.

Q. Is there the use of a dagger in the rituals of the lodge?

A. No, there's not.

Q. A knife, maybe?

A. No. If you are asking, there is a sword inside for the inner guard, but there is no dagger or knife.

Q. You maintain there are no oaths that involve candidates for membership in saying that they would suffer physical pain; is that it?

A. Not actual pain. No, sir. That's correct.

Q. Well, does it involve saying that they would receive physical pain, or the acceptance of that?

A. No, because it wouldn't happen, sir.

Q. That's not the question, with the greatest respect.

A. Well, repeat the question, then, sir.

Q. Well, does your oath at any time involve the fact that if you did certain things you would accept physical pain?

A. No, sir. {564|565}

Q. And your vows are not reinforced by threat of physical harm; is that it?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. And you are under oath ...

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth here today.

A. That's right, sir.

THE COURT: You don't have to remind the witness of his oath.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What about this having the tongue torn out by the roots? Has it ever come up?

A. I have heard it, yes, sir.

Q. Where did you hear it?

A. I am not free to tell you, sir.

Q. Why not?

A. Because I don't wish to.

MR. CHRISTIE: He should, Your Honour.

THE COURT: No

MR. CHRISTIE: I ask that the witness answer the question.

THE COURT: Why is it relevant?

MR. CHRISTIE: Because it involves the very question of whether a person would suffer physical pain. It's part of the ritual, and if he is under oath to tell the truth, and I am here to say that Masons keep secrets, then I can demonstrate it by the fact he refused to answer the question.

THE COURT: He already said secrets are kept. {565|566}

MR. CHRISTIE: I want to demonstrate what the secrets are.

THE COURT: I will not let you ask the question. It is irrelevant to the issue to be tried.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I say that the issue to be tried is whether Masonry is involved in the use of force and the use of secrecy to conceal threats, and I suggest that's exactly what is involved in the oath.

THE COURT: I made the ruling. What's the next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: May I have the noon recess?

THE COURT: No

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. You maintain, in Masonry, that there is no such threats of violence to the person if they break the oath; is that right?

A. That's correct, yes.

Q. And are you familiar with the case of Captain Morgan from New York in the nineteenth century and the suggestion that he was murdered for daring to reveal Masonic oaths?

A. I am not aware of that case at all, sir, no.
 Q. Are you aware of a man called Colby (ph) found hanged on a bridge in London?
 A. I read that in the newspaper, yes.
 Q. Yes. A member of the P2 Lodge in Italy.
 A. That I don't know, sir.
 Q. Involving millions and millions of {566|567} dollars? Are you aware of that?
 A. Only what I read in the newspaper, sir.
 Q. So that involves Masonry that's in Italy; that is not part of the Scottish Rite, and you don't know about that. Right? Or is it that you don't know anything about —
 A. Well, from what I understand, that is a lodge that is not recognized by our lodge here in Ontario.
 Q. Mm-hmmm. It is certainly public knowledge, and you know that there was an accusation of the extortion of millions and millions of dollars and the Banco Ambrosiano was a part of that conspiracy, wasn't it?
 A. I have no idea, sir.
 Q. You didn't read that in the paper?
 A. I did read it in the paper, but I don't know whether that is true or not.
 Q. But that accusation is widely made, is it not?
 A. I read one article in the paper about it, sir.
 Q. Isn't it true that initiates to the Brotherhood, if we can call the Masons that — do you call them the Brotherhood?
 A. We call it the Masonic Order.
 Q. Do you ever refer to it as the Brotherhood?
 A. No, sir.
 Q. Have you ever asked such questions as, "Are you on the square?", or, "Are you on the level", {567|568} to people?
 A. Yes, this is a question.
 Q. Do you do that in general, public discussions with people sometimes?
 A. No, I don't, sir.
 Q. Isn't that a way of finding out whether a person is a Mason or not?
 A. Could be used, but it's a common word. I don't know that I would ever use it, sir.
 Q. Well, when a person finds out that another person is a Mason, you talk to them with more candor than you do with strangers; right?
 A. Not necessarily. I wouldn't waste time asking questions of another person other than I might ask him, "Are you a Mason?" I wouldn't need to ask him about on the square or on the level.
 Q. Where is that phrase ever used, then?
 A. Which one, sir? On the level? It means to speak to somebody on the level of the floor, of the lodge room.
 Q. Is it true that the candidate for initiation then has to repeat — this is when a candidate is initiated, "I, John Smith, in the presence of the Great Architect of the Universe" — is that the first line of the pledge?
 A. That is part of my obligation that I can't mention.
 Q. In that obligation I put to you that the person is under no less a penalty on the violation of any of them than that of "having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots". Isn't that true? {568|569}
 A. No, sir.
 Q. Pardon?
 A. Not in Ontario, not at the present day; no, sir.
 Q. Not at the present day.
 A. No.
 Q. Did you swear such an oath?
 A. No, sir. Could I ask where that book is printed, sir?
 Q. Sure. 1984 —
 A. No. Where? Is it an American publication?
 Q. It says, "British Library Cataloguing and Publication Data". It has a number — ISBN 24612164-5. So your evidence is that that's just not the oath.
 A. That's correct, sir.
 Q. I thought at one point you agreed you heard something about "my tongue torn out by the roots". Did you not say that?

A. I heard that, yes.
 Q. Just somewhere out in conversation, not in the Lodge.
 A. Well, I don't wish to discuss that part with you, sir.
 Q. Thanks very much.
 A. But it isn't exactly the way that you've read it.
 Q. Then tell me exactly how it is.
 A. I am not going to, sir. I told you I am not going to discuss that part. {569|570}
 Q. You tell me it is not exactly as I say, but you won't tell me exactly how it is; is that correct?
 A. Correct, sir. It is very easy to pick up a book and read anything out of it, or any person can write anything they wish.
 Q. And it's very difficult to cross examine somebody who won't answer questions and can keep silent about it, isn't it?
 A. I have told you the truth.
 THE COURT: Just a moment. Do you have another question?
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you say, sir, just as a general observation on the average, and your intelligence and mine, that if, just per se, if someone had to swear that these several points, "I solemnly swear to observe without equivocation or mental reservation of any kind, under no less penalty on the violation of any of them than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water-mark", would you think that a pretty solemn oath?
 A. If a person meant it, yes, I think it would be quite solemn, provided it was sworn properly, yes.
 Q. And if I asked you whether that was an oath that you know existed in the Lodge, you will say what?
 A. Right now? I will say no.
 Q. No. Right now.
 A. Yes, sir. {570|571}
 Q. What, at the moment?
 A. Are we playing with words, or —
 Q. I don't know what we are playing with, because I don't think you answered my question. Was it ever?
 A. I will say, 1984, 1985, no.
 Q. If I suggest to you that that was the obligation of the first degree, would you agree?
 A. I disagree, sir.
 Q. Why? Is it inaccurate?
 A. I just disagree with what you say, sir.
 Q. Would you agree with me that secret societies, or shall we say those societies that administer oaths of secrecy, are open to infiltration?
 A. Oh, yes, they are.
 Q. And do you agree with me that Masonry has been regarded as a means of promoting oneself in society?
 A. No. I would deny that, sir.
 Q. Isn't one of the objectives of Freemasonry the reconstruction of King Solomon's Temple?
 A. I have never heard of it.
 Q. Have you ever heard reference to King Solomon's Temple?
 A. Yes.
 Q. In the Lodge?
 A. Yes.
 Q. What do they say about it?
 A. Describe the Temple, the inner Temple, the pillars approaching the Temple, the area that {571|572} the priest walked on inside the temple — this is the symbolism of Masonry.
 Q. That's right. It all revolves around King Solomon's Temple.
 A. It doesn't revolve around it.
 Q. Well, whose temple?
 A. I don't know how they chose that as being the Temple, but it is the Temple that we do get our symbols from, yes.
 Q. So we agree that you don't know why the symbols are there, or how they got the symbols, more correctly, but you agree that the symbols of the Masonic Temple or Lodge are those of King Solomon's Temple.

A. No, not of the Temple. They were taken from it.

Q. They were taken from it.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, King Solomon's Temple was built where?

A. In the area of Galilee, I believe.

Q. What about Jerusalem, does that ring a bell?

A. That is in the same area.

Q. Was he the King of a group of people, King Solomon?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was he the King of?

A. I believe the Jewish people at that time.

Q. I see. So we agree that the Lodge involves rituals that show us how King Solomon's Temple {572|573} functioned – no? Sorry. You tell me, then, what does the Lodge do with these symbols from King Solomon's Temple?

A. They are symbols that we use, such as the square and compass that you mentioned before, and the pillars to the entrance of the Lodge, the steps, the stairways into the Lodge, it just reminds us of things – the symbols remind us of things, that's all.

Q. If I was to ask you how many Masons there are in this room, could you answer me?

A. No idea, sir.

Q. None, eh? Well, King Solomon's Temple, then, has a relationship, a bit of a mysterious one to the Lodge.

A. Yes. It's used in our stories, our history, yes.

Q. What is the name of the fellow who – he is famous in your Lodge as being someone who founded it all.

A. The builder. Abit. High Roman Abit. The person who built the Lodge.

THE COURT: We will hear about it after lunch. We will adjourn to two-thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— Discussion regarding scheduling of witnesses, Mr. Fulop and Dr. Hilberg.

—— {573|574}

— The jury enters. 2:40 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

Q. Witness, earlier this morning you were asked to direct your mind to the pamphlet entitled, "The West, War and Islam". You were asked to read the portion referable [sic] to Freemasons, and in respect to the, "Their content is Jewish, their goals are Jewish, and their masters are Jewish" in respect to the orientation 1 and rituals of Masonry. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in respect to the content of Freemasonry, I put it to you that in the passwords there are a number of Jewish words called, "Shibboleth". Do you deny that?

A. I can't discuss that, sir.

Q. Well, I put it to you that you can tell us that they are Shibboleths, because this is a common English word to describe passwords. Isn't that right? You can see it in the dictionary.

A. That is part of the obligation I don't wish to discuss.

Q. I understand. But if it is part of the obligation and it is also in the dictionary as a word, defined as "password", you can tell me that it does exist, can't you?

A. No, I can't, sir. All of the words are contained either in the dictionary or in the Bible.

Q. Right. The word "Succoth" is {574|575} also a password, isn't it? You don't have to tell me what it means or what it is.

A. No, that isn't a password that I know of.

Q. "Zaradatha", are you familiar with that?

A. I believe I am familiar with it. Is it the name of a town or city in Bethlehem, or that part of the world?

Q. Mm-hmmm. It is referred to as being between those two places that Solomon ordered all the holy vessels to be cast, and that is part of the ritual, isn't it?

A. No, it's not part of the ritual, but I have read that in part of our learnings, yes.

Q. Then we can discuss the learnings, because you can discuss those, can't you?

A. Well, I guess I'd have to wait and see what the question was.

Q. All right. It is my suggestion to you that certainly that content of your learning is Jewish, sir, in origin. Nothing wrong with it, but it is Jewish, isn't it?

A. Well, I think from the mere fact that that is a part of the country that we are talking about, yes, but it doesn't mean anything Jewish to me, though.

Q. Well, let's be frank about history here. Isn't it the case the King Solomon built his Temple in Jerusalem, and that is a part of Old Israel, and he was regarded as the King of Israel? {575|576}

A. Yes. That was in those days. I am talking about my last twenty-two years.

Q. Oh, I know you are, sir: and I am talking about the content of the Masonic ritual, and I put it to you that it is Jewish in origin. Do you agree or disagree?

A. I don't know that I can agree with you.

Q. Tell us about Hiram Abit, who he was.

A. Well, he was the builder of the Temple.

Q. What Temple? Solomon's Temple?

A. Solomon's Temple.

Q. And you talk about the people who murdered Hiram Abit in the third degree?

A. I'm sorry, I don't remember each one of the degrees that closely, sir.

Q. And isn't it discussed how that murder should be avenged? The ninth degree is the Master Elect of Nine, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it discussed in that degree, the murder of Hiram Abit?

A. I can't confirm or deny it whether that's the portion.

Q. I suggest that throughout all of the Masonic ritual, there is constant reference to Solomon's Temple, to various and sundry Jewish traditions and words that, I agree, are in the Bible, but that's the substance of it: isn't it?

A. Well, I've got to a degree where {576|577} there are a lot of Jewish words. I'm not too sure about the traditions, though.

Q. Okay. You don't know anything about Jewish traditions, I suppose?

A. No, sir.

Q. You wouldn't even know if I was right or wrong if I told you that part of the Jewish hope is to re-establish the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem? You wouldn't know that?

A. Well, if that's true, that has nothing to do with the hopes and thoughts of Freemasons.

Q. No. You don't talk about establishing the Temple of Solomon?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never?

A. No. We talk of the Temple, but not about resurrecting a temple or rebuilding a temple.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So whether the word "Shibboleth" is used in your ritual or not is one of the things you refuse to tell me, I suppose.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it wasn't in your ritual you would tell me, wouldn't you?

A. I would tell you what?

Q. You would tell me if it wasn't in your ritual, wouldn't you, because then you wouldn't have to keep it secret?

A. I told you it's in the ritual, but I don't want to discuss the word itself.

Q. Okay. Now, isn't it true that Masonry throughout the world has kept certain of its {577|578} secrets that you are aware of so that nobody who wasn't initiated would know about them? Right?

A. The only secrets, as I mentioned before, are so that we could recognize another Mason coming into the Lodge room.

Q. Yeah. I didn't ask you to explain why you keep them secret, but I asked you to confirm just from the point of starting another question that you do keep these secrets from uninitiated persons.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also true that the higher degrees of Masonry keep secrets that do not become known to the lower degrees of Masonry. True or false?

A. That's true, sir. Yes.

Q. And it's also true that it's difficult from anyone outside of your organization to determine how innocent it is, as you have assured us, because they don't know what goes on inside. Right?

A. That's true, sir, yes.

Q. You assured us that it is an innocent and totally lawful group of people; right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you won't tell us exactly what goes on inside those rituals. Right?

A. That's right, sir. Yes.

Q. We just have to take your word for it that it's a nice bunch of guys getting together for a good time. Right?

A. No, not for a good time.

Q. To help society and generally do good works; is that right? {578|579}

A. Yes.

Q. And we agreed that we've seen already that when your Masonic oath is threatened, you simply maintain that oath of secrecy. Right?

A. That's right, sir. Yes.

Q. Now, you understand that Mr. Zundel, in this article, had a complaint about a particular advertisement in a newspaper in West Germany that attacked Arabs?

A. No, I am not aware of that, sir.

Q. You are not? Are you aware that in West Germany certain Masons put articles in newspapers that portrayed Arabs as being in the same category as Adolf Hitler? You are not aware of that?

A. No, I am not aware of that.

Q. So you don't know, really, why Mr. Zundel said what he did about Freemasons at all; right?

A. I don't, sir.

Q. And he doesn't know you and you don't know him. Right?

A. That's right.

Q. So as far as whether he was talking about your group of Masons is concerned, you really don't know; true?

A. Well, I can read the words there, and it doesn't imply that he knows Freemasons.

Q. Well, does he say all Freemasons, or Freemasonry generally?

A. It is the same thing to me, sir.

Q. But you agree that Freemasonry is not homogenous. It is not all one body.

A. That is correct, yes. {579|580}

Q. So it doesn't necessarily refer to Ontario Freemasons; right?

A. Well, I would say it does, sir.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Because that is what you are familiar with. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. But you acknowledge that it is a whole bunch of Freemasonry around the world that you are not familiar with?

A. That's correct, sir, and a lot of them who allege to be Freemasons who aren't.

Q. Well, let's put it this way. They might call themselves Freemasons, but you would disagree?

A. Yes.

Q. Because you belong to a Charter from the Grand Lodge of England through a Charter to the Grand Lodge of Ontario and, in your words, they are innocent. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And they criticize the United States, and you can't give us an opinion on that, can you?

A. No, I can't, sir.

Q. Can you tell me any good reason why good works need to be performed in any kind of secrecy at all?

A. The works aren't done in secrecy, sir.

Q. Well, I understand the term "Masonic works" to mean the obligations and rituals and the discussions therein. Am —

A. The only secrets, as I mentioned {580|581} before, are recognition, so that only Masons attend the meetings.

Q. Mm-hmm. And lower Masons don't know what the higher Masons know; right? We've discussed that about degrees — the higher degrees have secrets that the lower degrees don't know. Right?

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. So not all Masons at every level know all there is to know. Right?

A. But only recognition signals, not any other Masonic work that we are doing such as our charity work.

Q. I see the difference, yes, but in this Masonic work that you do, there are things discussed and communicated, aren't there?

A. Yes.

Q. But we won't ask you what that is, because we don't want you to be put in a position of having to answer that. Can you understand why a person looking at the outside of this organization might think that it was Satanic? Did you think that there might be that reasonable interpretation because they don't know everything you know?

A. Well, I certainly never thought that before I became a Mason. I can't think of any reason why they should.

Q. But you didn't know anything about Masonry before you became a Mason as to how it ritualized, did you?

A. No.

Q. So how could you know what Masonry was when you weren't a Mason? {581|582}

A. That's right.

Q. So from the outside it looks very suspicious, doesn't it?

A. No, it doesn't look suspicious. There are many clubs that I might wish or not wish to join, and from the outside I wouldn't know what they were until I made enquiries.

Q. Right. How many of them hold meetings that only members can attend and have secret signals that only the higher members of the group understand? Tell me what other groups are like that.

A. I don't belong to any other groups, I don't believe, sir. I would suspect there would be others.

Q. Do you know who the Assassins were?

A. Which assassins, sir?

Q. How many do you know of?

A. It is a question I don't understand. You said —

Q. All right. Assassins as an ancient term to define a secret society that killed people for money. Do you know anything about them?

A. I don't, sir.

Q. No. Well, did their rituals have similarities? You don't know therefore you cannot say.

A. Correct.

Q. I suggest to you that the Assassins used blood-curdling oaths that involved that if any Assassin ever revealed the identity of any other Assassin, he would have his throat slit and his tongue ripped out and he would understand that by that oath.

THE COURT: I thought that he didn't {582|583} know anything about Assassins.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am putting it to him.

THE COURT: All right. Put it to him.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I just wish to put to you that that is the type of oath that was characteristic of the group known as Assassins. If that is my understanding and you agree with that, do you see any similarity to that in Masonry?

THE COURT: Now, wait a minute. Just because it is your understanding — unless you want to take the gown off and give evidence ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, surely, when put a question to a witness I can put to him things that I can later introduce evidence of.

THE COURT: I don't know that you can, but go ahead. Do you want the question read back?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I think I can rephrase it.

Q. I put it to you, witness, that in history there has been a group known as Assassins; they originated in India, in the Far East; they had secret rituals and identification methods; they kept those secrets to themselves; they kept them so their identity would not be known to outsiders; they had passwords and they had oaths that if ever a password of the identity of another Assassin was revealed, they would suffer severe, vicious punishment.

Now, if that was a group known as Assassins, do you see any similarity to the oaths administered in Masonry? {583|584}

A. In the way you described it, yes, sir, I do.

Q. Such as an oath to have the throat cut or the tongue torn out? That doesn't exist as an oath in Masonry?

A. No. I mentioned before, that may be part of it that I can't discuss with you, but I have answered the question honestly before.

Q. Yeah. Now, just to clarify, that's a part that you can't discuss with me, but if it wasn't part of the Masonic ritual, you could tell me. Right?

A. Well, I am not saying that is part of the Masonic ritual, though.

Q. No. I didn't ask you to say that is part of the Masonic ritual, but if it wasn't, you could tell me; isn't that true?

A. Then I am just contradicting myself. I can't answer that at all, sir. I can't answer the question.

Q. Not because you don't know, but because you won't say.

A. I am just going to refuse to answer any of that question, sir.

Q. That's right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

——— {584|585}

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. A couple of things, Staff Sergeant Bassett. First of all, has it ever – you mentioned one Catholic in your lodge. Has there ever been a Master in your Lodge who was Catholic?

A. Yes, there has been.

Q. And recently, or —

A. Two years ago.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's all. Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Griffiths, in the absence of the jury you indicated you had scheduling problems insofar as one witness is concerned who is coming to testify tomorrow.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's correct, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You have a witness here now that you have indicated you are not too anxious to start if he does not finish, due to what you hope will occur tomorrow.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's right, Your Honour.

THE COURT: How long do you think you will be with that witness?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Tomorrow? {585|586}

THE COURT: Today – if I indicate you should call that witness today.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I expect half an hour, forty-five minutes, Your Honour. It's hard to judge.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you know enough about this to be able to give an estimate?

MR. CHRISTIE: Unfortunately my friend provided me with very brief notes on this matter, and I really don't know. My first intention, if we start now with this witness, is to arrange to pick up an expert who would be observing the evidence.

THE COURT: Did you not indicate to me you would not be very long when the jury wasn't here?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: How long do you think you will be?

MR. CHRISTIE: Depending on what the witness says.

THE COURT: I agree. In other words, you don't know.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry, that's the truth.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, I don't like to adjourn at three o'clock in the afternoon in a case that – to inconvenience the jury, the taxpayers and everybody else. My inclination now, unless you really feel that you really cannot continue, is to call the witness and let us see what the witness has to say, and let's start the cross-examination and if we have to start here a little earlier than ten o'clock, subject to what the jury has to say, we will start it. I just don't want to stop a court {586|587} case at three o'clock in the afternoon.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I understand, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Or not if I can possibly avoid it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am in your hands. As I said, I am prepared to proceed. For the reasons I indicated to you earlier, I would prefer to start with Dr. Hilberg in the morning, but I am prepared to go ahead, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Could I, Your Honour, on a separate matter, could I speak to you for just a minute in the absence of the jury, please?

THE COURT: Certainly. Members of the jury, would you excuse us, please?

— The jury retires. 3:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Would you like the witness in when he is making his submission?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think it affects him – not his testimony, but him, so I have no objection to that. I don't think it will interfere.

I have a request to make, Your Honour, and in fairness, Mr. Christie doesn't know I am going to say this.

In speaking with Mr. Fulop —

THE COURT: Mr. Fulop is the next {587|588} witness?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. As you are aware, there has been a tremendous amount of publicity that has gone along with this trial. Mr. Fulop is a family man with children, and he has some concerns about testifying if his name is being broadcast far and wide. He is prepared to do that, if Your Honour so orders; if possible, he prefers that he can testify, give his name in Court here, but I would ask that there be some order that his name not be broadcast.

THE COURT: What is the basis for the fear?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think, Your Honour, that in all fairness, the fear is a subjective one. There have been no direct threats on Mr. Fulop. It is something that arises out of his experience in life, not with this particular matter, and as a concern to him; and I told him that I would make this request on his behalf. He would be prepared to testify regardless, Your Honour, but would prefer not to have his name broadcast.

That would be the request of the Crown, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I don't know that I need to hear from you on this unless you wish to say something.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, my position is that no witness should have any special treatment in regard to names at all. It is the same for everybody. I realize it's unpleasant. We don't like to see, sometimes, our name written down. I don't blame anybody for that, but I don't believe that we should make exceptions to the general rule. {588|589}

THE COURT: That is your submission?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Crown counsel, in the absence of the jury and before he calls to the stand the next witness, has requested of the Court that an order be made pursuant to the relevant section of the Criminal Code that the name of this witness not be disseminated through the media to the public at large.

Crown counsel indicates, when asked by me, that the basis for the request made on behalf of the witness is, subjectively speaking, to the eyes of the witness, a subjective fear, as Crown counsel put it; the fear is subjective having been one acquired by the witness through the process of living. He would just as soon not have his name mentioned with respect to the evidence he proposes to give.

I have not asked, nor has either counsel stated to me, the proposed type of evidence that the witness is going to give. In consequence, I must make the ruling on the basis of what I have heard.

Mr. Christie points out that however odious and disagreeable the prospect is of having one's name {589|590} put in the newspapers and broadcast over the television and radio media, that all witnesses in our open Courts should be identified within the bounds of law, and the content of their testimony should be the subject matter of dissemination to the public.

I am inclined to agree with Mr. Christie. However unfortunate it may be, I am not prepared to make a judicial ruling ordering that the identity of this witness be kept confidential or within the confines of the courtroom, however well-intentioned the proposed witness may be and however sincere Crown counsel is in making the request.

For those reasons, the request is denied.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Bring back the jury.

_____ {590|591}

— The jury enters. 3:07 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Mr Fulop, please.

IGNATZ FULOP, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Sir, I understand you are fifty-eight years of age?

A. Fifty-eight.

Q. And you were born in Hungary?

A. Hungary, yeah. Nyirdass.

Q. Do you know Mr. Zundel?

A. No. Never met him.

Q. Okay. Are you Jewish? Is your, faith Jewish?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us if, during the War years, you and your family were ever arrested?

A. We were deported to Germany, Auschwitz.

Q. Can you tell us when that would be, sir?

A. I can give approximate date. It was 1944, April, when we were taken to the ghetto, and approximately six weeks later, what would be approximately May 15th or the 20th, taken to Auschwitz.

Q. Who in your family went to {591|592} Auschwitz?

A. My mother, my father, six sisters and I.

Q. And how did you get to Auschwitz? What was the transportation?

A. Cattle car.

Q. Was your family all together in the cattle car?

A. We were all together in the cattle car, yes, with other families.

Q. Can you tell us how long it took you in that train ride to get to Auschwitz?

A. Approximately three days.

Q. Was the car opened at all during that time?

A. It was open once.

Q. When you arrived, was it daytime or nighttime?

A. Between five and six at night.

Q. In the evening?

A. In the evening.

Q. And can you tell us what happened when you arrived at Auschwitz?

A. When we arrived in Auschwitz they slammed the doors open. There was screaming of "Raus. Raus." "Get out. Get out", and everybody has to jump out, young or old. There was no platform going off, just jumping off. You left all your luggage, all what you had – but there wasn't much that you are allowed to take there – left in the car. You lined up, men separate and boys. Women, female, separate line. Five in a row. And that's when everything {592|593} started.

Q. All right. How old were you at that time?

A. Seventeen. I was born in 1926, September 3rd. I was seventeen, seventeen and a half.

Q. Did you see anyone have any trouble; any difficulties during the selection process?

A. Well, before the selection started it was actually, from my village, a blind man with his adopted daughter, and the daughter went a little bit – she went crazy, and the blind man was holding on to her, and the girl wouldn't let the blind man go, the father who raised her. She was an adopted child. And I saw them both clubbed to death. The blind man and the crazy woman who went nuts in the ghetto, or in the train, in the ghetto and train ride, she was hysterical, like completely gone.

Q. Who did you see clubbed her to death?

A. Mostly the Kapos. The Kapos were doing the dirty job. Kapos by order from the S.S.

Q. Were there any S.S. in the area when this happened?

A. Oh, yes. They were all over. They were all over.

Q. Did they do anything to try and stop them?

A. They were ordered to do it. The Kapos was ordered to do it.

Q. Were you in the same line of five with your father, or were you in a different line of five?

A. Yes, I was the same line with my {593|594} father. My father was from my left. I was from his right.

Q. Can you tell us what happened during the selection of you and your father?

A. We started to walk, long road, walking in front of a man was called Dr. Mengele. As a matter of fact, his name was The Angel of Death. He pointed at me with a stick. I believe he was standing on a pedestal a little higher up. He had a stick in his hand, pointed at me – this way – pointed the rest that way.

Q. Yes. So you were to go to the —

A. I went to the right.

Q. In the group that you were with to the right was there anything that they had in common?

A. Young, healthy. Young, look strong and young.

Q. But what about the group that your father was in?

A. Never saw him again.

Q. Where did you go from that process?

A. They took us a big building, huge hall, where you stripped, undressed, shaved you, and they let you keep your shoes, your belt and if you had glasses. You walked in. As you walked in, you had to step in, like it was from cement made, like a bathtub, but came approximately ten inches water in it, but you had to put your shoes in it, what they call disinfection. And then you went in to take a shower, came out another door, another big room, and that's where I took the first beating and the worst beating in my life. One wall from the room was a bunch of naked women. Another wall from the room was a naked man. And they had a line. I don't remember if that line was red {594|595} or orange. And we were behind the line. The women walked behind the line and we walked behind the other line. And I looked at the women. I wanted to pick out if I could pick out my sisters. And as I got to the front, close to the line, one of them was screaming my name, was asking for father. So I didn't pay too much attention. I just started to walk. I was screaming if mother is with them. And they answered no. And I answered no. By that time I was knocked to the ground and beaten.

Q. Who beat you?

A. The Kapos; but one S.S. beat me because I got it with the butt from the gun – not the gun, the rifle. And I saw boots, and the Kapos didn't wear boots, and kicking.

Q. How long did that beating go on for?

A. I don't know, but it seemed like for ever; but I crawled back. I crawled back behind the line, crawled back to the rest of the people.

Q. Did you ever receive some clothing?

A. Clothing?

Q. Yes. Did you receive some clothing?

A. Yes, we received the striped clothing, pants and a jacket, the striped one.

Q. Where were you taken, then?

A. Then they marched us – that would have been, the closest figuring, around midnight, they were marching us. Where they were marching, I don't know. All of a sudden gates swung open and I had been thrown into that camp. Where I fall, I slept. I just fall asleep till the sun didn't get up. And then I found out it was the {595|596} gypsy camp, where the gypsies were kept. They were kept there with the families, grandchildren and grandmothers and grandfathers.

Q. How long were you in Auschwitz for? Was this Auschwitz or the number of different camps? Do you know which camp this was that you were in?

A. I don't know if I was – I was in the "C" Camp, the "C" Lager, but if it was Birkenau or Auschwitz, I don't know. I don't know. I was in Auschwitz, yes. It was approximately eight days or ten days.

Q. How was it that you got out of Auschwitz?

A. I was taken out by an S.S. If that was the same one who beat me up or it wasn't, I don't know, because I didn't see his face when I took the beating, but he came to the gypsy camp. As a matter of fact, I was hiding when I saw – well, I was afraid, and I hide under the barrack. The barrack was built on a pedestal, like some blocks or bricks it was. It was higher up and I crawled underneath, but he saw me when I went, and I went around, around the barrack. He says, "Okay. I saw you out there," in German. "Let's not play games, mouse and cat, cat and mouse."

Q. So you came out?

A. I came out.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't hear what the last remarks were, but I am sure they were hearsay. I trust my friend is aware, we discussed this before, and if I could just have the last words again.

THE COURT: That was the hearsay part.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. {596|597}

THE COURT: "Don't play cat and mouse" was what the S.S., he said, said to him. Is that correct?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I didn't understand.

THE WITNESS: He said to me, "I won't hurt you."

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You can't tell us what the guard said to you.

A. That is exactly what he said to me.

Q. You can't tell us what he said. Let me see if I can help you. You had a conversation with him.

A. No, I didn't talk. He was doing the talking.

Q. He did the talking. Did he give you anything?

A. He said, "I will take you out of that camp."

Q. Tell us what he gave you.

A. He didn't give me anything.

Q. Did he give you an instrument?

A. That was after he took me out of the camp.

Q. He took you out of the gypsy camp?

A. He took me out of the gypsy camp.

Q. And what did he give you?

A. A mike to measure the steel.

Q. A micrometer?

A. Yes. He didn't give it to me. He showed it to me. {597|598}

Q. He showed you how to use it?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you ever used one of those before?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And after he showed you how to use it, did he take you somewhere?

A. Yes, he did. He took me to another camp. He said, "I won't hurt you."

Q. Tell us where he took you.

A. He took me to another camp where they selected three hundred people to go and work in a factory.

Q. All right. And was there a requirement that those three hundred people had to meet – some test they had to meet before they could go and work in the factory?

A. That was the mike what he gave me. He explained it how it works. He explained it how it works and that's all that it's gonna be. They give you the mike. What they call the shubler (ph). I don't know how to spell it. It's called a shubler. They gave it to me. And this – how should I explain how it looks?

Q. He showed you how to use it.

A. He showed me how to use it, and that's all it's gonna be. So he put me in front of the lines and put me with that three hundred people to take me out.

Q. And did you get in with the three hundred people?

A. Yes, I did. {598|599}

Q. So did you leave Auschwitz?

A. I certainly did.

Q. And you told us you never saw your father again. Did you ever see your mother again?

A. No.

Q. Where did you go?

A. They took me to Falaslaben (ph). It is right now on the border of Eastern West Germany, what was a Volkswagen factory.

Q. And what were they doing at that camp?

A. Building the V2 rocket. Sorry, it was the VI Rocket.

Q. And how many people were working on it?

A. We went – there was people there already, but we went there three hundred.

Q. How long were you there, at Falaslaben?

A. I was there approximately two months, take a week or give a week. Approximately two months.

Q. Do you have a tattoo from Auschwitz?

A. No, sir.

Q. On page 17 of, "Did Six Million Really Die?", column one, second paragraph, it says:

"Although several millions were supposed to have died at Auschwitz alone, Reitlinger has to admit that only 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and February 1945 {599|600} (The S.S. Alibi of a Nation, p.268) and by no means all of them were Jews. It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered, but no one has offered any proof of this."

Were you registered in Auschwitz?

A. I was not registered in Auschwitz except when they took me out. When they took me out they didn't ask any question. I just went with the three hundred. They didn't ask any question when they took me in.

Q. All right. Did something happen at Falaslaben in the VI factory that you were working at?

A. It was wiped out, bombed out.

Q. Were you inside the factory when it was bombed out?

A. Yeah, we were in the factory, in the bunkers.

Q. Where did everybody go from there?

A. From there —

Q. Where did you go? Let's put it that way.

A. All three hundred of us went from there to France, Merstille (ph). I don't know if it's Tilmerse or Merstille. I don't know if it's two words or one word. In a valley. It was a valley, mountains around it, and it was a valley.

Q. All right. Was there a camp there?

A. It was a camp there of about five hundred prisoners, joined to us later, to our camp, but when we got there, we had to build it ourselves, the camp, fence {600|601} around and build the barracks.

Q. Was there a crematorium as part of that that you built?

A. It was no crematorium there when we arrived, but we were building one. As a matter of fact, I was selected to build one.

Q. All right. And were you given any plans for the building of that crematorium?

A. Blueprint.

Q. What was the capacity of that crematorium?

A. One person.

Q. Now, how long were you at Merstille?

A. Till about the end of September, beginning of October.

Q. And where were you taken then?

A. Then I was taken to Dora.

Q. And what is Dora?

A. Dora was no camp, no camp whatsoever – no fence, no barracks, and I remember it must have been beginning of October when we were there because it was Yum Kippur, and as we were Jews, the S.S. decided we should fast for Yum Kippur. They wouldn't give us our food. So they new better the holiday than we did. So we were there without the barrack, without fence, I would say till we were there, twenty-four hours rain, and that place must be by the Rhine, because it was nothing around, just wineries, like graperies.

Q. And where did you go from Dora?

A. From Dora they took us to Durno (ph). From there it was a camp of twenty thousand prisoners, what {601|602} was made up from France, Italians, Polish, Ukrainians – you name it, they were there, but all Christians. We were the only Jews as far as I know – one barrack.

Q. When you say "we", is this the same three hundred?

A. Well, it was 299. One died. It was 299. So same three hundred, yes.

Q. How did he die?

A. The one who died died in France when we arrived, when we put on the first barrack. So we were all forced into one barrack to sleep, and if you laid down, packed in like herring, if one turn, the whole row had to turn, and if one had to go out for nature call at night, so he had to watch who he steps on; and he step on somebody, and somebody gave him a kick and he fall in, that other fellow fall in this fellow's stomach and just rupture.

Q. How long were you there for? You are now in Durno in early October.

A. Not too long – ten days, fourteen days – just a stopover. I don't know why stopped over.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. Dora. We went to Dora.

Q. I'm sorry, perhaps I have the camps confused. There's one camp by the Rhine. You said there were no barracks.

A. That's Dora. That's Durno, and from Durno we went to Dora.

Q. So Dora is the big camp with the twenty thousand people?

A. With the twenty thousand people. {602|603}

Q. What were you doing in that camp?

A. Working on the V2.

Q. And how many days a week would you work?

THE COURT: That's the V2 rocket?

THE WITNESS: The V2. How many days?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: How many days a week would you work?

A. Seven days, twelve-hour shift.

Q. Twelve-hour shifts? And what kind of food would you be getting?

A. Once a day. I was in the day shift. Five o'clock in the morning it was feeding time. We used to get a cup and a half or two cups of hot water. Once we were lucky we would get a small potato or half a potato. Two hundred ninety-nine or three hundred people, we used to get one bucket hot water five o'clock in the morning. The bucket was the same bucket what the Canadian farmers used to have for the milk, shipping the milk to the dairy, and potatoes once a week. You're getting one half bucket, only one half a bucket for all three hundred. And we used to get like we have the white sliced toast, but very thin, a half of one slice of the toast, but very thin, thinner than they slice it here. That was the daily ration.

Q. Half a bucket of potatoes, a bucket of water and a little bit of bread?

A. A little bit of bread.

Q. What happened if someone, refused to work?

A. They hanged them. They shoot them. Or they put them to the post in January or February, to the {603|604} post, the main post from the appel place, the appel plaza –

Q. Is that where they do the counting?

A. Yes, the roll call. And they used to tie them, tie his hand to the post, tie his neck, tie his leg, take water, running water, let it run slowly on top of his head. By the time we were coming at night, the man wasn't there. No such a thing you refuse to work. Even if you know you are dying, you wouldn't go to, it was a so-called hospital, with a doctor, you never go there. You never come out.

Q. Did you ever go there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever moved again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on that last occasion is that the last occasion you were moved?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When would that have been, then?

A. That had to be in the early part of April 1945. I was moved to Bergen Belsen. In Bergen Belsen was liberated by the British the 22nd, I believe, the 22nd of April, around nineish. I was moved there. We went either seven days and eight nights, or the reverse – 120 of us in a cattle car.

Q. 120?

A. 120, and ten thousand people. Ten thousand people from it was two transports made up from the twenty thousand, so if it was in the end left seventeen thousand or eighteen thousand, I never counted them. And half of it went in one transport – 120 in one car.

Q. How many were alive in your car when {604|605} you reached Bergen Belsen?

A. Myself. The rest was all dead. They never opened the door. They never gave us a glass of water. They never gave us any food. It was terrible. I am ashamed to say – actually, I'm not. I never wasted any water. What I had on me, I used to save it in my hand and lick it up, or at night I put my hand out, find a little hole to get the wetness, and put it to my lips.

Q. How much did you weigh when you were liberated?

A. The British Army weighed me. They claimed seventy-two pounds. I didn't see it. I just go by what they told me when they took me to the hospital.

Q. Did you ever go to your village of Nyirdass after the War?

A. Yes. I went back – I came out from the hospital, the British Hospital, yes.

Q. Before the War can you tell us how large the Jewish community in Nyirdass was?

A. Sixty families.

Q. And how many in total before

A. Approximately four hundred.

Q. At the end of the War can you tell us how many people were left in Nyirdass who came back?

A. All together, even the ones who are already in Canada, or England or whatever, all together it wasn't forty people.

THE COURT: How many?

THE WITNESS: Forty. It wasn't forty people. By the way, I lived there when I went back four years till 1949.

Q. You stayed there till '49? {605|606}

A. Till '49.

Q. Did any over the age of forty return?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever receive – well, first of all, did you ask for any money from West Germany?

A. No, sir. I wouldn't accept it.

Q. You wouldn't accept it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you involved in any conspiracy or hoax to fool people about the number who died, the number of Jews who died in the Second World War?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Are you involved in any conspiracy or hoax to fool people to the number of Jews who died during the War years?

A. I don't belong to any organization or anything. I am not – it's not a joke what happened, sir.

Q. No. I said hoax

A. No. You can't make a hoax of that, or joke.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Please don't discuss this case with anyone. We are going to take a little adjournment now. You can step down, sir.

— The witness stands down.

— The jury retires. 3:40 p.m.

— Short adjournment. {606|607}

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 4:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.
THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. When you were in Auschwitz, did you see a whole bunch of smoke?

A. Didn't see smoke. I saw flame.

Q. Where did you see flame?

A. At nighttime. Heat flame.

Q. Where did you see the heat flame?

A. When you looked out in the camp you saw the heat flame.

Q. Heat flame. Coming from where?

A. From the crematorium. That is the only place it can come heat flames.

Q. So how high were the heat flames coming from the crematorium?

A. Forty, fifty foot, thirty foot. All depends how hot it was the ovens.

Q. I see. So either thirty feet or forty feet flames.

A. Yeah.

Q. Out the chimney.

A. Yes.

Q. And you were in the gypsy camp, were you?

A. Yeah. The "C" Camp. I believe it {607|608} was the gypsy camp. The "C" Camp.

Q. You mentioned the fact that there were grandmothers and grandfathers there.

A. Yes. And —

Q. And children.

A. Grandchildren. They lived in families.

Q. They lived in families.

A. Yeah.

Q. So of the flame shooting forty, thirty or forty feet every night or sometimes fifteen ...

A. I don't think you could see a fifteen foot flame where I was.

Q. So it had to be more than fifteen-foot flame.

A. And it came from the crematorium. It is a heat flame. There are two differences between flames and heat flame.

Q. But you could see them.

A. Yes.

Q. At night?

A. At night you can see them.

Q. Did you have any personal knowledge of any gas chambers at all?

A. What you mean by that, sir?

Q. Well, did you see any gas chambers?

A. One who saw a gas chamber wouldn't testify. Once you got in there, you had no way out. It was like a cemetery. You go, they take you to the cemetery, you got no return.

Q. So this is what you've heard from {608|609} other people, I suppose.

A. Yes, sir. That's what I heard from Kapo, the first night.

Q. Kapos, they are prisoners, aren't they?

A. They are prisoners, yes.

Q. They are prisoners, and the person that you saw beaten to death by a Kapo —

A. By Kapos.

Q. — was beaten to death by a prisoner, then?

A. Yes. They are the foremen. They have the order to do it.

Q. Did you ever see the order to beat prisoners to death?

A. Did I ever see the order?

Q. You did?

A. Oh, yes. We had Kapos all along, all three hundred of us. We had Kapos. We had lageraltesters — what his name was, I believe, Grossjula (ph).

Q. Let's get back to the question. The question was, did you ever see the order for a Kapo to beat a prisoner to death — anything in writing?

A. No. I heard it verbally from the S.S. who ordered the Kapo to beat the hell out of them. They didn't give written orders.

Q. No, I'm sure. I just wondered —

A. Just verbal orders.

Q. And you heard the verbal orders.

A. Oh, yes, sir. So help me God.

Q. You say you were never registered; {609|610} is that right?

A. Right.

Q. Did I hear you say that the S.S. hauled you from underneath the barracks?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. Did I hear you say he called your name?

A. No, sir. I never said he called my name.

Q. How did he know you were underneath the barracks?

A. That is why I guessed he is the one who threw me in there, because it was the gypsies and me. The gate opened, and he threw me in.

Q. How did you know you were in the gypsy camp?

A. Because he threw me in there. I didn't know if he threw me in there, because I didn't look in the face. I was afraid.

Q. So what did he call?

A. He went around the barrack. He went around the barrack. He says, "Come on out. I know you in there. Let's not play cat and mouse or mouse and cat", or whichever way he said it.

Q. So you came out and he gave you something in the nature of a tool.

A. Yes. He showed it to me. He didn't give it to me. "This is a shubler, and that's how it operates. You hold it like this. You put your thumb on top of it." It had a little wheel like you wind your watch with. Pull it over, measure the thickness of the {610|611} material, push it back, and with the same thumb you tighten the winder, like the watch winder on top of it.

Q. You also told us about the presence of Dr. Mengele who you described as The Angel of Death.

A. That is what he was called — The Angel of Death.

Q. Did you meet him more than once?

A. I only saw him. I never met him. I wasn't that used to him. I only saw him. I believe he was on a pedestal, or like an orange crate. He was standing up.

Q. How did you know he was Dr. Mengele if he never introduced himself; he never used his name?

A. They said, Dr. Mengele.

Q. They said.

A. Yeah.

Q. Other prisoners who just arrived with you?

A. No. The Kapos.

Q. Is it your experience that you left with three hundred prisoners and you went to someplace called Falaslaben?

A. Yes.

Q. And then you went to Mistile?

A. Mers, Merstle, or it could have been pronounced Stilmers. I don't know if it is two little villages there or two cities, or just one, or it's only a district.

Q. And it was there that one of the three hundred prisoners died.

A. Yeah. {611|612}

Q. And he died because he fell on another prisoner in the middle of the night?

A. No. Somebody fall in his stomach.

Q. Somebody fell on his stomach.

A. Yes.

Q. When you moved from Merstle or Stilmers, sorry, I don't know for sure, you went to either Dora or Danau (ph), I'm not sure which?

A. Durno.

Q. And what did you do there?

A. Nothing. Nothing. I had no idea why even they stop us there.

Q. This was very close to the end of the War, wasn't it?

A. No, that wasn't close to the end of the War.

Q. What — October, November of 1944?

A. That was probably in October, because it was Yum Kippur, and Yum Kippur always in the beginning October, or tenth or twelve October, in that neighbourhood. Yum Kippur is always in October.

Q. And you were there for how long, at this Durno?

A. Not too long, just a few days. Could be eight days, ten days, twelve.

- Q. Was there bombing going on along there?
A. No bombing.
Q. And this was in October '44?
A. That was in October '44.
Q. Where was this place? {612|613}
A. By the Rhine. It must be by the Rhine because of the wineries. It was only – you don't see nothing for miles and miles. You only saw one thing – grapes. They only grew grapes.
Q. So you were there with how many prisoners?
A. Three hundred, 299.
Q. You weren't there with twenty thousand prisoners?
A. No. No. We went to Dora from there, to the twenty thousand prisoners.
Q. Twenty thousand prisoners in Dora. And this was in what month?
A. That was till the end. We were on the 22nd freed by the British, take off approximately two or three days what I was there. What month we went to Dora?
Q. Mm-hmmm.
A. Or from Dora?
Q. To Dora.
A. That was August, October, beginning of October or middle of October.
Q. And that's where you were liberated?
A. No. I was liberated in Bergen Belsen.
Q. That is what I heard the first time, but a minute ago you said the British arrived in Dora.
A. I didn't understand your question. I thought you were talking about Bergen Belsen.
Q. What did you do in Dora? You {613|614} worked there?
A. Where the twenty thousand was?
Q. Yes.
A. Yes, I was working on the rocket.
Q. What did you do?
A. I was testing the fuselage, what they put in the explosion. I was testing it with water, putting a screw on a hose, put the air on it, and if it leaks, I suppose they send it back; but I didn't. I just let it go through.
Q. So you were sort of sabotaging the enterprise, so to speak?
A. I wasn't sabotaging. I was doing my job what they suppose to. They didn't pay me for it. They didn't feed me. Why should I do a good job?
Q. So you were there for some time. How long?
A. I was there in Dora working from end of October, middle of October, till beginning of April '45.
Q. So you left Dora in the beginning of April '45.
A. Yeah. They took me.
Q. Was there sickness in Dora?
A. Oh, yes. It was sickness in Dora, people were dying.
Q. Was there typhus in Dora?
A. I am not a doctor. I don't know if it was typhus or not. People were dying.
Q. People were dying.
A. Yes. Like flies. {614|615}
Q. They were sleeping in close quarters there?
A. There were three hundred in one barrack in Dora.
Q. And were there cleaning facilities there?
A. What do you mean?
Q. Anyplace to wash
A. Who needed washing? I never took off the rags from my legs all winter. So who needed washing? You never heard such a thing as water, soap, wash yourself.
Q. Well, is it your recollection that you slept in rather dirty clothes and, obviously, unclean conditions?
A. Yes. You slept in the same clothes what you wore all day. You never took them off.
Q. And there were lice there, weren't there?
A. Lice?
Q. Lice.
A. You have no idea how much. could have gone open my shirt, gone like this, and got a handful.
Q. Lice.
A. Lice.
Q. Everywhere.
A. Everywhere.
Q. That is some of the things that spread the diseases there, wasn't it?
A. I don't know what spread the disease. {615|616}
Q. Certainly. There were lots of lice, and people —
A. Billion. Billions.
Q. You said that you counted a hundred and twenty people in a boxcar from one place to another?
A. I didn't say I counted. That's what it was. We had a hundred and twenty people, could be a hundred and eighteen. It was a hundred and twenty people average in every boxcar.
Q. How did you know a hundred and twenty? Did you count them?
A. That is what they said they were going to put in.
Q. Who said?
A. The German, the S.S.
Q. The S.S. said, "We are going to put in 120 in a boxcar"?
A. They said, put in 120 and that's it.
Q. This is a standard European boxcar – two axles, one on either end?
A. I didn't count the axles.
Q. Do you know what a boxcar is?
A. Yes, I know what a boxcar is.
Q. You travelled from Auschwitz to the west in Bergen Belsen in one of those boxcars?
A. In one of those boxcars. Not the same boxcar.
Q. They weren't all the same?
A. Not all the same. {616|617}
Q. I am sure they weren't all the same, but they all looked alike.
A. Sure.
Q. They all looked like the same type of boxcar.
A. Right
MR. CHRISTIE: Could I give these to the jury?
THE COURT: Yes.
Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest to you there is a photograph of those types of boxcars somewhere in here. Were they open boxcars, or closed?
A. Closed.
Q. Was it that size, or bigger?
THE COURT: That is page number?
MR. CHRISTIE: It looks like 23.
THE COURT: Exhibit 1.
MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.
Q. Pretty hard to tell the size there anyway.
A. You have here a few people in a boxcar. You haven't got a quarter of it there, or a tenth of it there.
Q. No. I'm sure that's true; but there's a boxcar.
A. That is a boxcar, but I tell you what – I am not supposed to say anything; I am supposed to answer questions, but if you give me the measurement of the boxcars, like you know it, I can mathematically figure standing up how many people you can put in.
Q. I am only asking you what you — {617|618}
A. What is the standard size? I don't know. No idea.
Q. You don't recall how big they were.
A. No.
Q. Did you say something about a slide rule in your evidence?
A. A slide rule? Slide rule?
Q. Slide rule.
A. You are referring to the mike, to the measurement to the steel?
Q. Yes.
A. Yeah.
Q. Is that what you call a —
A. It's a shubler. Do you know what a shubler is – a mike? You mike the metal, the thickness, with it.
Q. Like a micrometer.

- A. Yes.
- Q. But not a slide rule?
- A. You see, we didn't have – it wasn't advanced, not even the Germans were advanced to have the same mikes what they are making now. They used a shubler. Ninety-nine per cent of using the shubler to measure the thickness for a metal.
- Q. So you say there were ten thousand people on one train. Is that —
- A. Ten thousand people in one train. If it could have been only eight thousand five hundred, I don't know how many died or how many transported was coming in there, bringing in fresh ones, fresh ones all the time, but I don't know how many was in April 1945 exactly; I never {618|619} counted them.
- Q. Well, I heard you say ten thousand people on a train, didn't I?
- A. Roughly, yes.
- Q. Well, how rough is that?
- A. All depends how many was alive. Was it seventeen thousand alive from the twenty, or was it twenty with the new transport?
- Q. Well, I did hear you say there were ten thousand people on one train.
- A. Half of the camp.
- Q. What?
- A. Half of the camp should have been ten thousand mathematically; but if three thousand died, then we only gonna have seventeen thousand left, so that's only half of seventeen thousand on it.
- Q. Well, when you said ten thousand people on a train, and 120 in each boxcar, you are saying this is a train of a hundred boxcars, are you?
- A. Sir, I will say it's a train of eighty boxcars.
- Q. Okay. You are sure of that.
- A. No, I am not. That could have been eighty, it could have been ninety, it could have been seventy, but it was close to eighty.
- Q. How do you know there were eighty boxcars on this train?
- A. Well, when you have on the track, you're gonna have the train, what they pack you in, what you have to jump on. Roughly you're gonna see there's fifty there or a hundred fifty or eighty. Roughly. You don't {619|620} have to count it. Roughly you're gonna see how many is in that transport.
- Q. So it's a guess, really, he[h]?
- A. If you want to call it a guess, sir, yes. They wouldn't let me count it.
- Q. I'm sure you wouldn't have counted from the inside of a boxcar.
- A. But you see it before they load you.
- Q. Of course. Did you count it then?
- A. Roughly, looked at it, so you know how big the transport is.
- Q. So were there a hundred boxcars in the train, or seventy-five?
- A. I said it would be eighty.
- Q. Eighty. When you were in Birkenau you weren't sure if you were in Auschwitz or Birkenau?
- A. Maybe you could tell me, sir, where was the "C" Camp, the gypsy camp. Was it in Auschwitz or Birkenau? We weren't there to ask questions, sir, so maybe you would know what it was.
- Q. What surprises me is that you found out somehow that the doctor on the crate was Dr. Mengele, but you don't know if you were in Auschwitz or Birkenau. How do you explain that?
- A. I listen to what they tell me. As far as I was concerned, the whole thing was Auschwitz.
- Q. Yeah. So as far as I have your evidence, you never saw the S.S. or any German soldier in the camp kill anybody, did you?
- A. Oh, yes, I did. I never said that I didn't. Oh, yes, I did. In Dora. {620|621}
- Q. In Dora?
- A. Oh, yes, I did. I saw them. They did the strapping to the doorpost, like the gatepost. Oh, I saw him hanging at one time with one rope. The rope was hooked on to a vehicle, and no Kapo and no Jew or no Ukrainian or any nationality except German was allowed to drive that vehicles, and they pulled the rope. They didn't put the rope on the prisoner's neck. Ten or twelve at a time, two posts, another piece across on the two posts, ten or twelve hanging coming down, all figured out from one rope hooked on to all ten or twelve, hooked into the vehicle, and the vehicle went and just pulled them all up. Yes, I saw them.
- Q. So you saw one rope hang ten or twelve people?
- A. That's right. They did it every day.
- Q. Every day?
- A. There was not one day pass when we had to go to the appel every morning where they shall not hang people.
- Q. So they hung ten or twelve every day.
- A. Every day.
- Q. And this is at Dora?
- A. This is at Dora.
- Q. Where you are working on the V2 rockets.
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you went to work every day?
- A. Oh, yes. I went to work every day. {621|622}
- Q. Twelve-hour shift?
- A. Twelve-hour shift, seven days a week.
- Q. And before they sent you to work they'd hang twelve prisoners every day?
- A. At the Appel Plaza, yeah.
- Q. Did you ask why they were being hung?
- A. Who would you ask, sir? I asked God, but God forgot to answer me, sir. Who else would you ask? Who would you ask?
- Q. Well, you might have asked another prisoner.
- A. What does another prisoner know why they hang him? As long as they didn't hang me, I didn't worry. What can I worry about? I cannot do nothing about it.
- Q. So we have it every day – ten or twelve prisoners hung with the same rope.
- A. Oh, yes. Oh, yes. Mostly Ukrainians, sir.
- Q. I see. And these are healthy, able-bodied men who could otherwise work?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. So they took these ten or twelve men, able-bodied men, every day before you went to work and hung them with one rope.
- A. Yeah. They all had a different noose on their neck.
- Q. Different nooses, but the same rope. And then they pull on one and it lifts them all up at the same time. {622|623}
- A. That's right, sir.
- Q. And you were at Dora for how long?
- A. I was in Dora from approximately middle or the 20th of October 1944 till, take off seven and approximately ten days from twenty-two, till roughly the tenth, 1945, April. Could be the eleventh, you know. Tenth or eleventh.
- Q. Sure. So did you receive any other new clothing other than the time that you received some at either Auschwitz or Birkenau?
- A. I used to take it off a dead body.
- Q. Take it off a dead body.
- A. Take it off a dead body, so if you want to call it new clothing, yes.
- Q. I thought you never took your clothes off that whole winter. Remember?
- A. I didn't take off the rags from my foot because I had no shoes. It was warmer to take the clothes from the dead bodies, cut it up and make boots, like keep on rolling it on and keep on rolling it on. It was much warmer than the wooden shoes.
- Q. You had wooden shoes?
- A. I had wooden shoes, yes.
- Q. Where did you get those?
- A. They gave it.
- Q. Were there any gas chambers in Dora?
- A. I didn't even see a crematorium in Dora.
- Q. You say you built one in what camp was it?
- A. Durno. No. That was, the crema-{623|624}torium what I built, that was in France, Mers. I was working on it, yes.
- Q. Yeah. You saw plans for that, I suppose.
- A. It was from a blueprint. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you must be – you were fairly skilled in building things, I gather.

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, I have an incinerator, pollution-proof incinerator in Toronto, built it myself, designed it myself, and it is approved by the environment in Toronto, by the pollution controls, yeah.

Q. So you've built a new kind of incinerator, is it?

A. Yes. Would you like to see it?

Q. Well, I don't know. Maybe some other time.

THE COURT: Just answer his questions.

THE WITNESS: I do have it.

THE COURT: Just answer his questions.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Sir, what I am asking you is, at the time did you have some special skill that enabled you to build from blueprints?

A. First of all we had a foreman.

Q. Another prisoner?

A. I believe it was a German prisoner, yes.

Q. I see.

A. There were German prisoners, yes.

Q. Usually they were political {624|625} prisoners. Right?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Didn't they have special designators in the form of triangles for political prisoners, homosexuals, communists and Jews?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And didn't he have a triangle?

A. I don't know what it was marked. I know the Ukrainians had different. The Poles had different – any nation had different colour. The Jews had yellow.

Q. You say for every nation there was a different colour?

A. Yes. For French it was different colour.

Q. What colour was it for French?

A. I think it was purple, I believe.

The Ukrainians were red; but I don't remember exactly what colour each one carried.

Q. So did you go into a factory to build the V2 rockets?

A. Yeah. It was underground. It was a long tunnel – long, long, long tunnel – and going like cutting off, going around, coming out back to the main line, and going like a snake.

Q. Underground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so it was an underground factory somewhere.

A. Yeah. It was dugged under the mountain where you could not bomb it out. {625|626}

Q. M-hmmm. There was a lot of urgency to the building of this weapon, I suppose. Everybody is being forced to work hard.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Everybody was being forced to work too hard, I suppose?

A. Everybody did their job. If it came there, the tank, to me, I put on the hose and I open the air, so much pressure. They told you how much pressure they wanted in it and tested it. Then the water went back down. You had another hose what took the water back down and you kept on doing it.

Q. Mm-hmmm. The three hundred that left Birkenau, you say that you were not registered because you were put into the gypsy camp by the S.S. man.

A. No, I didn't say that that's why. I don't know why I wasn't registered.

Q. I see. But the other 299 I don't suppose you can say that they weren't registered, can you?

A. I don't know.

Q. And I don't suppose you can really say whether you were registered or not as a person coming off the train. Are you sure they didn't count you?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Are you sure they didn't count the people that came off the train?

A. Counted?

Q. Counted.

A. You didn't need to count them. They knew exactly how many they put in the ghetto, so they {626|627} didn't need to count.

Q. So you didn't keep track of the number?

A. Oh, I don't know. I didn't do their bookkeeping.

Q. But you did say a second ago that they knew exactly how many they got out of the ghetto?

A. They know exactly how many Jews out of this ghetto, and that ghetto, and they knew exactly how many they put in a transport.

Q. That's right. So you say that you weren't tattooed?

A. No, I wasn't tattooed.

Q. But you can't say that you weren't numbered and registered as such.

A. They never asked me anything, by name or anything.

Q. Well, that's right, but it's impossible for you to say whether you were registered or not, isn't it?

A. I couldn't say I wasn't. I couldn't say I have.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Did any of the other three hundred men have tattoos on their arms?

A. No.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. Nothing else {627|628}

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you will notice that each day you have been given copies of Exhibits 1 and 2. I think you will agree that you haven't had much of any opportunity to settle down and read those documents since this trial started. That is so because the evidence upon which your verdict will be based must be led in this courtroom, and it must be led under oath and it must be subject to cross-examination.

In your absence I have spoken to counsel, and it is their view, as well as mine, that you should get better acquainted with those two documents.

With that in mind, I propose to ask you to come to the courthouse tomorrow morning at half past nine, at which time those documents will be available to you in your jury room.

Please do the best you can to read as much as you can of those documents between nine thirty and ten. We will start sharply at ten.

I am asking you to do this because otherwise the full picture, at a propitious time, will not be in your possession. We may do the same thing on Wednesday, I am not sure. I will find out from you how you do tomorrow. If you would be here at nine thirty for that purpose I would be grateful.

Please do not discuss the case. Do not permit anyone to discuss it with you. Please keep an open mind. The case is not over until such time as the last word of evidence has been heard, and until both counsel {628|629} have addressed you and I have given my charge.

It is absolutely vital that you keep an open mind and an open approach to this whole case until it is completely before you. Have a good evening. Nine thirty tomorrow.

— The jury retires. 4:31 p.m.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 15, 1985.

JANUARY 15, 1985

Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, before we have the jury, there is a matter that should be discussed in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: How long will it take, as best you can estimate?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps till eleven o'clock, Your Honour. I don't know how long Mr. Christie will be.

Your Honour, if I can advise you, it is something that Mr. Christie has mentioned he would be raising.

Dr. Hilberg is here and I propose to qualify him as an expert to give testimony as to his opinion on the document and also as to documents that he has seen and read that contradict the material that is contained in Exhibit No. 1. {629|630}

The issue in which we need Your Honor's assistance for a ruling is to what extent Dr. Hilberg can testify about those other matters as a historian, and to what extent, or to what use, I guess, the jury can put his testimony.

THE COURT: Yes. Do you agree that eleven o'clock is within reason?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour.

I think, perhaps, it would be well-used time if the jury, in the meantime, could continue reading the booklet in question in the jury room. At least, they wouldn't be wasting their time. We could discuss this matter and no one would, presumably, suffer as a result.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 10:10 a.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, during your absence in the last ten minutes a matter has arisen which is going to require my attention and the attention of counsel for some little time.

Counsel estimate eleven o'clock. My {630|631} intuition, acquired over some years, tells me it will be closer to eleven thirty. I don't want to keep you in that jury room for that period of time unless, of course, you wish to remain there to read or finish reading the documentation, namely, the two exhibits that I understand you have been assiduously reading this morning.

I am therefore going to excuse you until eleven thirty, or eleven forty, and in the meantime if you wish to remain in the jury room to read, continue reading the two exhibits, please do so.

You are free to leave and go about your own business until eleven forty, if that be your decision.

If you do leave the jury room, please leave the material in it and I will ask the two Sheriffs' officers to make sure that the material is left there. So you are free to go till then on that understanding. Thank you very much.

— The jury retires. 10:12 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {631|632} Call Dr. Hilberg, please. He is in the witness room.

RAUL HILBERG, sworn on voir dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Good morning, Doctor. I understand, sir, that you have come from the University of Vermont to testify here today?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And when I contacted you about the possibility of testifying in this trial did you prepare or send to me a curriculum vitae?

A. Yes, I did send that.

Q. And that sets out some of your qualifications and cases that you have testified on.

A. That's correct.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'd submit that as an exhibit on the voir dire, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Did Mr. Christie see it?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't know that he has, Your Honour, although he was at the preliminary hearing and disclosure was made at that time to counsel at the preliminary hearing.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder if my friend has a copy that I might have.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, I do.

THE COURT: Exhibit A on the voir dire. {632|633}

— EXHIBIT "A" (Voir Dire): Curriculum vitae of Dr. Raul Hilberg.

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps I can assist my friend by articulating my position in respect to Dr. Hilberg.

The whole question of expertise is in respect to matters of history, not quite the same as it is in matters of science. I don't deny any of the Professor's literary and educational background. I certainly don't take issue with what he says as to his books or publications or his having testified in other cases. To what extent and for what reason I don't know, nor does it matter for the purpose of my argument.

My argument is that this case involves questions of fact in relation to the booklet in issue, and I am quite sure my friend will concede the fact that Dr. Hilberg is not a witness to any of the alleged facts in the booklet. He is a person who has studied deeply in the area, formed opinions, no doubt, and he has derived his opinions from what might be considered primary sources in some cases, and I am sure might be considered secondary sources in other cases.

I would be arguing the case of R. v. Abby on the area of expertise in respect of fact. That's a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

THE COURT: Yes, I have it here.

MR. CHRISTIE: I mention this at the outset, and I think that to save time I don't need to have the witness qualified as to what is on the curriculum vitae, and I would be quite content if he would be {633|634} excused and we could argue the legal issue of the admissibility of this type of evidence. That is what I wanted to do.

THE COURT: Let me see if I have your position. Your position is that you admit the contents of the curriculum vitae insofar as that document pertains to the field of historical expertise as acquired by this witness. Is that correct?

MR. CHRISTIE: I accept that the statements of facts in the curriculum vitae are accurate.

THE COURT: You do not admit that he is a historical expert.

MR. CHRISTIE: I submit there are no historical experts. There are historical opinions and, in fact, it is like being an expert in theology, for instance. You can have all sorts of different views, and we generally tolerate them all. Nobody has, so far, been ruled to be scientifically qualified to state facts because they are an expert in theology.

To put it on a more practical plane, the Courts have recognized experts once the facts are proven to derive from their expertise and conclusions that the ordinary layman could not draw – for instance, in breathalyzer cases or in accident cases, experts are qualified to say from proven facts, for example, the weight of an automobile or the weight of a human body and the distance the body has been thrown; the expert can calculate the speed at which the automobile travelled because of scientific exceptional abilities. But he cannot prove the facts through his expert scientific abilities. That is, I think, what R. v. Abby says. In essence, it involves {634|635} psychiatry, and it was the defence contention that a psychiatrist, through second-hand interviews, could say what the state of the accused's mind was. Now, Dr. Hilberg, with all the qualifications that he has ... well, that is a brief summary of my position. I don't think I need – unless you wish me to proceed to the whole of it, that's all I wanted to put before you, for the moment.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would like to call some evidence from Dr. Hilberg on which I will be basing my submissions, at least in part.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. Dr. Hilberg, we won't go through your eminent qualifications. Can you tell us when you started working, researching matters pertaining to the Holocaust?

A. At the end of 1948.

Q. And at that point had you been a graduate student?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us the form that your research took through the years?

A. Primarily an examination of documents, many of them original documents, and then in the United States; and also, to the extent necessary, the explanations of these documents by people concerned with the contents described in these materials – that is to say, witnesses or people [sic] who made affidavits or similar recording, what {635|636} they knew in statements, usually statements made before Courts but not necessarily and not always. My research methodology, in other words, is based upon documentation and, secondly, also witness' recollections and testimony.

Q. I understand that you have written a book the first edition of which came out in 1960 called "The Destruction of European Jews" and you are now working on the second edition of that.

A. The second edition should be coming out in a few months. Correct.

Q. And can you tell us how extensive the first volume is? My recollection is about eight hundred double-column pages.

A. That's correct.

Q. And are there footnotes in that?

A. There are footnotes.

Q. And the second edition, how large would that be?

A. It will be in three volumes.

Q. And can you tell us if you have any particular methodology that you used before you formed an opinion as to something happening?

A. I would describe myself as an empiricist. I look at the material carefully and over very long periods of time, in some cases, to be able to interpret it. I have found, many times, that original documents are not necessarily self-explanatory, and they do require a good deal of interpretation and analysis, in the main by recourse to other documents, since documents explain each other. And I have done that over the years and I am still doing it. {636|637}

Q. What is the source of many of these documents? Or can you tell us the sources of the documents, first of all, in a general way?

A. My particular interest, of course, is in documents of German providence – that is, those materials and records that came from the bureaucracy that was engaged in the process of destruction itself.

Many of these materials are civil service documents that is to say, the ministry, the official organizations, civilian organizations – some are military – quite a few, in fact, some are S.S. or party documents, some are from industry.

In addition, I've looked at materials from Jewish sources. There are Jewish documents produced within ghettos. And I have looked at documents of satellite countries and I have, more recently, looked at materials that have come to light from the United States and other governments that collected information during the War.

Q. Can you tell us where some of these documents are kept, what depositories they are kept in? Are they of Canada?

A. Well, I don't think there are very many of them in Canada. The United States was assiduous in its collection of material, and at one point there were approximately twenty-five thousand linear feet, that is to say documents in boxes, standing up and requiring twenty-five thousand feet of shelf, in Alexandria, Virginia.

I was employed there for a while so that I had direct access to original documents. A small portion of this material was selected for trial purposes {637|638} at Nuremberg. Of those other so-called Nuremberg documents there are, to be sure, other depositories and other collections.

The originals that have been collected in the United States have been sent to Germany, and they are now in the German archives and they are microfilmed and can still be consulted in microfilm if need be.

Q. How many languages do you read for the purposes of your researches?

A. My primary language is German. When I must do so, I resort to documents in romance languages because my training tended to be in the romance language area more than anything else. So I do manage to read some materials in Italian or French or Rumanian, but with the help of dictionaries. When it comes to Slavic languages, I must have help.

Q. Is there a particular perspective that you brought to your research and your authorship of "The Destruction of European Jews"?

A. I felt that – what I wanted to know, first and foremost, is how, not why, but how the Jews of Europe were destroyed; how, in essence, one step followed another. And thus I became interested in very small details as, for example, how people were transported to death camps and how this transportation problem was handled, for example; how negotiations took place between the German Foreign Office and satellite countries for deportation purposes; how definitions of the term "Jew" were written; how confiscations down to the last belongings, clothing that people had left in death camps, were collected and distributed; how the process was financed. {638|639} What was the jurisdictional picture? What was the inter-relationship with the various elements of police, and how did they function within the framework of Nazi Germany?

That was the perspective and the approach.

Q. Do you spend any time cross-checking documents as an empiricist?

A. Yes, I always do that.

Q. With other documents?

A. I always do that, yes.

Q. Doctor, what is your doctorate in?

A. Public law and government.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Could I see the exhibit again, please, Your Honour?

Q. In your curriculum vitae there is an indication that you have testified as an expert witness in a number of cases in the United States. It looks about ten or eleven that are mentioned there, just roughly.

A. Right.

Q. And in what area was your expertise recognized, and were you permitted to give opinion?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would object to that question. I don't think the witness is competent to answer what the decision of a court was. He hasn't, so far, qualified himself as an expert, in law, to say, "Well, I know what the Courts decided my expertise was."

I think it is quite inappropriate to make that decision for the expert himself. In my respectful submission he is not qualified to say in what manner the Court qualified him as an expert.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not asking about {639|640} the manner in which, but whether he was qualified as an expert by those Courts.

THE COURT: Does that make a difference to your objection, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, it does, but it has very little – well, that is a matter of argument. I accept that question in that form.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. Were you accepted as an expert by the U.S. Courts in those various matters?

A. Yes.

Q. And in what fields were you permitted to express an opinion in those various other cases in the United States?

A. I was presented to the Court as a specialist on the Holocaust. I was asked how to define the Holocaust, and I did that as a physical destruction and annihilation of Jews under Nazi control. And I heard the Judge accept that definition which I, myself, gave, and I was accordingly given the status of an expert witness in the cases concerned, in all of these cases, indeed.

Q. All right. Have you ever been presented as an expert and not accepted by a Court?

A. No. I have never been rejected.

Q. Have you ever given evidence as an expert witness in Canada?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And in what case is that?

A. The Rauca case, extradition case.

Q. All right. And in what field were {640|641} you permitted to give your expert opinion in Canada in the Rauca case?

A. In the Rauca case —

MR. CHRISTIE: This does involve my previous objection.

THE COURT: Do you have an objection on this one?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. It is exactly the same question as I suggested before it should not be the entitlement of this witness to answer. The field of expertise for which he was allowed to testify as an expert is the opinion of the Court and is not the opinion of the witness as to what the opinion of the Court was then. It sort of begs the question. He can't say, "Well, the Court accepted me as an expert in this field", when that's a judgment of the Court, unless he is an expert in law and can say —

THE COURT: It will be interesting to know whether the Court did make a pronouncement that he was an expert in that field.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is what the Crown should say. The Crown should not say you were an expert in the Holocaust and what did the Court say you were an expert in. I think he should show the transcript.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will be showing the judgment, Your Honour – I am content with that – in the Rauca case.

MR. CHRISTIE: Then I assume my friend will withdraw his question.

THE COURT: He can ask his question, Mr. Christie. Go ahead and ask it. {641|642}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You told us you were qualified as an expert in the Rauca case. In what area were you permitted to express an opinion?

A. It was substantially the same as in all the American Courts – namely, as a specialist in the Holocaust: needless to say, with particular reference, as in all of the cases, to a particular area in contention. In the Rauca case that was Lithuania, the role of the German Gestapo there, any relationship with the Gestapo as a network of other officers in the area.

Q. As a part of your initial researches did you ever have occasion to read the International Military Tribunal transcripts from Nuremberg?

A. Yes.

Q. And to review the documents that were referred to in those transcripts?

A. Yes.

Q. That's some forty-two volumes.

A. Yes.

Q. And what about trials of the American Military Tribunal?

A. Those also.

Q. What about the trials in the nineteen fifties and sixties held in West Germany involving war criminals?

A. Those also, particularly those trials pertaining to death camps and the like held in the 1960s in West Germany, yes.

Q. And have you had occasion to examine any diaries or personal documents said to be from individuals in Germany? {642|643}

A. Yes. Some of those as well.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you. I have no further questions on the motion.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr Christie.

THE CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. It is my understanding that you testified in the Kungys case, sir.

A. Yes.

Q. It is my understanding that the Court, on appeal, dismissed the case against Kungys and made certain comments regarding the admissibility of certain evidence on the case. Are you aware of that?

A. What I know of the Kungys case is that my testimony, as usual in these cases, was confined to a description of the administrative network of the methods used in the killing of Jews, in this in a particularly small town within Lithuania. Mr. Kungys himself was not a regular member of the police and thus, his status —

Q. Well, just —

THE COURT: Let him answer the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: The question didn't involve who Mr. Kungys was.

THE COURT: I have ruled that he can answer the question, Mr. Christie. Please let him answer the question. {643|644}

THE WITNESS: Mr. Kungys was not a regular member of the police. He was a temporary auxiliary, if that, and so the decision ultimately had to rest upon the witness' testimony, not my testimony. I could only go so far in describing the framework, but inasmuch as this was not what was called a document case as far as Mr. Kungys himself was concerned, there was no materials, no documents pertaining to him. The case rested on witness testimony. So my role was fulfilled. Whether witnesses were available in sufficient number, whether their testimony to the extent that it existed was sufficiently credible, was another matter.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I have the question read back, please?

THE COURT REPORTER: "It is my understanding that the Court, on appeal, dismissed the case against Kungys and made certain comments regarding the admissibility of certain evidence on the case. Are you aware of that?"

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did the Court of Appeal, in the person of Mr. Justice Dickson, issue a judgment that allowed the appeal and overturned the decision of the trial judge?

A. Well, now you are asking me to testify about matters that I don't have in front of me, and I would have to review. I was told by telephone

what was going on, but as you can see from my statement, I have been involved in twelve of these cases, and this is not my full-time occupation, and I do not follow these cases through the appeal mechanism. {644|645}

Q. The answer is, then, you don't know if the appeal was allowed?

A. I do not know enough to answer this question on the spur of the moment.

Q. I thought you already told us that your evidence was not part of the evidence that was set aside on appeal, because you were only testifying on documents, because you had no eye witnesses, or documents, actually identifying Kungys as a member of the Gestapo.

A. No. I was discussing the trial court in which gave testimony, and I read the decision of the trial court, but I do not follow it through the appeal mechanism.

Q. I see. You didn't bother to find out if the appeal was allowed, or for what reason, if it was allowed.

A. No. Indeed not.

Q. You, of course, gave evidence in the Rauca case without having been in any way personally acquainted with Mr. Rauca; is that correct?

A. I am never personally acquainted with the defendants or respondents in any of these cases.

Q. Had you, personally, been Lithuania in respect of the Rauca case?

A. No, I have not.

Q. So everything that you testified about in the Rauca case was on the basis of documents, and your assessment of them and second information.

A. Well, it was certainly on the basis of documents. I don't know what you mean by secondhand information in this case. {645|646}

Q. Well, you didn't prepare the documents.

A. I didn't what?

Q. Prepare the documents.

A. No. Of course. These were German documents.

Q. And you couldn't establish from any expert knowledge the authenticity of the documents.

A. No. I would say that the authenticity of a document is a matter for an expert to deal with, and in this matter I am called upon sometimes to make a comment in the court.

Q. Yeah. But you're not an expert in the authenticity of German documents.

A. If you mean ink, paper and the mechanical properties of a particular document, there are other people that test for that sort of thing.

Q. Yes.

A. But if you mean the contents, namely, the likelihood that this is the sort of document fitting in with thousands of other documents – in other words, could this conceivably have been forged or conceivably have been something other than what it is purported to be, yes, on that score, I can give an opinion.

Q. You can give an opinion on whether a document is forged or not?

A. Well, I could certainly spot a forgery.

Q. Could you?

A. Oh, yes. I think I could. On content. {646|647}

Q. On content. So if somebody copied the content of original documents and forged a signature, that you couldn't determine.

A. Well, I could determine – as I said, I could not look at handwriting because I am not a handwriting analysis person.

Q. You are not an expert in handwriting. Right?

A. That is certainly true.

Q. You are not an expert in the analysis of composition of German paper or German ink or German documents.

A. Not that.

Q. So if it is typewritten and it is signed and you take it at its face value, you will tell us whether it fits with the rest of the documents you've seen.

A. That's correct.

Q. You are also telling us that without personal firsthand knowledge of anything, but looking at a number of sources of documents and talking to other people, you can assess the accuracy or whatnot of a document.

A. I am pretty confident in my ability to do that, yes.

Q. Yes. And that is the basis of all your knowledge.

A. The basis of all my knowledge is thirty-six [thirty-six] years of study of documents, many of them rather original documents, I might say.

Q. Yes. Thirty-six years of study of documents, talking to people, looking at original and secondary sources. {647|648}

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. Those are my questions.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I have nothing arising out of that, and I have no other evidence to call on this issue, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you, sir, you can step down.

— The witness stands down.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you wish to lead any evidence?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, thank you, Your Honour. Do you wish my submission?

THE COURT: Since you are not leading any evidence, I am in your hands. You can go first, but I thought you might like to have the last word.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I don't think that there is very much complexity to it. I am going to say that the Abby case deals with the very issue that arises here, only it's obviously a less far-flung implication. What's going on in this case is the inquiry into historical matters of fact by people who are about to testify who were never there.

Now, this is the first time, in my submission, in Canadian jurisprudence, that a person has been {648|649} required to testify in what happened in a situation where they were not physically present and have no direct firsthand knowledge. So it becomes, I suggest, a rather important issue, especially since this case involves history, with the greatest respect, if you were there, and even then, it is a matter often of opinion where it goes beyond your own personal observations of the five senses of which we are all possessed, or most of us.

The Abby case, I think very clearly, dealt with the issue of whether an expert can say and establish a fact. To read from the headnote, that case said:

"The trial judge erred with respect to the use which could be made of hearsay evidence introduced during the testimony of four psychiatrists".

Now, it is my submission that every thing the learned Doctor has said as the basis of his knowledge, which may very well be credible to scholars, it may be debatable. We can carry on that debate here because we are prepared to call hearsay too, if that is the way it is going to go, but it is hearsay and it is embarking on a realm that, really, Courts should not engage in. It is {649|650} almost as if to say – to debate the issue of, say, somebody publishes that Christopher Columbus discovered America, and then somebody says that's a lie, and we get scholars from both sides who say, "I have looked at all sorts of documents and I have read the literature and I have concluded that Christopher Columbus did discover America", and somebody else says, "No. The Vikings, or the Irish Monks, or the Chinese, or somebody else discovered America." That is what we are about to embark on, really.

The learned Doctor is a well-read gentleman. I have no dispute about that. He has been allowed to testify in other Courts. I don't know whether he has been allowed to testify to prove the truth of what he said. That I don't know, and the Crown hasn't really proved that, but to quote from the Supreme Court of Canada:

"An expert opinion based on secondhand evidence, ...", or hearsay evidence, "is admissible, if relevant."

But in this case the relevance can only be to prove the truth, not to prove that the opinion is held. I can concede that if we were to debate whether there are people who hold Dr. Hilberg's views. I don't {650|651} dispute that there are people who hold Dr. Hilberg's views, but the test here is, are they true? Now, I submit here that the fundamental error of this proceeding is that truth itself is the basis of society not proven through historical facts in court; but the testimony as to the circumstances upon which the opinion is based is not introduced and cannot be introduced in order to establish the veracity of the secondhand evidence. That is the essence of what I say is wrong.

THE COURT: You are reading from page 410, are you?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I am reading from 395. It is only the headnote. I was going to expand on that. I was saying that Dr. Hilberg's opinion is his opinion and it is debatable in society; but Courts, I suggest, require a little more than hearsay evidence to be the foundation of opinion. The testimony as to the circumstances now, the only relevance to Dr. Hilberg's testimony is to prove the truth of the circumstances upon [upon] which the opinion is based, namely, six million did die in the gas chamber.

I think the Crown has to prove that, or that there were gas chambers, to prove the story alleged {651|652} by the Crown and denied by this booklet. That is the purpose of his evidence. I don't think the Crown really can deny that.

So that he is really testifying as to the circumstances upon which his opinion is based, and it should not be introduced, and cannot be introduced in order to establish the veracity of his secondhand evidence.

The danger in admitting such testimony is the possibility that has happened here that a judge or jury, without more, will accept the evidence as going to the truth of the facts stated in it.

Now, I am well aware, having read the preliminary hearing transcript, that Dr. Hilberg has developed his theory at great length, and we are prepared to deal with it, with some interest, but it is indeed secondhand. I mean, he is a very clever and intelligent scholar. He has numerous footnotes, a voluminous book, but it is all based upon such things as he refers to in his footnotes, which anyone can believe what they wish to believe, but they are not legal proof. When such testimony would be admitted into a court, it will be impossible for a jury to be advised in such a way that they would not regard it as proof of the truth. And in the case of Abby, {652|653} the Supreme Court of Canada held that the expert opinion based upon secondhand evidence, and I quote: "Was not in any evidence of a factual basis of those events and experiences."

In this case, Mr. Abbey tried to prove that he was non corpus mentis, and he said certain things he had experienced, and the Doctor repeated that – those experiences as recounted to him by the accused – and accepted them as fact.

In the case at bar Dr. Hilberg has heard from a number of people as to what they say occurred, and he is here to prove the truth of his views, and in the same way, he cannot prove the truth of his opinions and the facts of which he has no personal knowledge by simply saying, well, "I have read the Nuremberg Trial transcripts and I have read documents in Virginia" – well, I don't think he said he read all twenty-five thousand feet of shelf-space, but he said from that a small portion of that material was selected from Nuremberg. That would be part of the contention of the defence, in fact, that the selection process took place there, but we cannot, with respect, take it that he has firsthand factual knowledge that he can testify to. And what other purpose can his {653|654} opinion be put to?

With respect, I can see no other purpose than to try and prove the theory of the Crown, that is, that there was a process of planned, deliberate extermination, which we all believe, because the media has so often said so, and because the Nuremberg Trial said so.

And the booklet in question says the Nuremberg Trial was a judicial farce, to put it mildly, and –

THE COURT: I'm sorry could you repeat that again? I missed that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I said the booklet says the Nuremberg trial, the International Tribunal at Nuremberg, was a sort of judicial farce, to put it mildly – I summarized that because that is a brief summary of what takes four pages to analyze, and numerous references to support.

Now, whether the Nuremberg Trial was or was not a farce is a debatable proposition. It may be even a radical statement, a statement that people would be criticized for making, but it is the statement that is made in the book.

Now, to prove that is false, I would {654|655} suggest, is not the jurisdiction of a Court. It isn't the jurisdiction, either, of an expert to say, "I've read the transcript and I have concluded that it wasn't a farce. It was a good trial. Everything was fair", or whatever you want to say about it. That's fair. Everybody is entitled to their opinion and they can defend it with their sources; but to come to a Court of Law and prove the truth of their opinion, they can't do it with hearsay.

Now, what else does the booklet say? It says that the theory of the exterminationists is that there were camps in Poland for extermination, whereas the camps in Germany were not for extermination. It says that at one time that was not known, that we thought that concentration camps like Dachau and Buchenwald and Bergen-Belsen were extermination camps, but that theory has changed and its thesis is that where that belief was unfounded, so is unfounded the belief that the extermination camps were designed as such.

As I said many times before, the booklet does not deny suffering and all that is obviously unfair and unjust about concentration camps. The booklet attacks the very essence of the exterminationists' view, which was the planned, deliberate extermination of Jews by gassing. {655|656}

Now, Dr. Hilberg has a right to his opinion, and most people can agree with him. It can be debated here, if Your Honour holds the hearsay such as he admitted is a legitimate basis for an opinion, and an opinion can be a basis for the truth, but I suggest that that embarks on a new procedure for proof of matters in a Court of law that should not be logically extended.

In fact, we have the evidence very clearly from a psychiatrist in the Abbey case, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that Dr. Vallance was telling what the accused said had happened, and on the basis of what the accused said had happened was formed the opinion the accused had been insane.

At page 407, he testified in the course of his interviews that Abbey told him of various delusions, visions, hallucinations and sensations on the six months preceding his arrest. On the basis of that Dr. Vallance formed his opinion, and I gather the trial judge accepted that opinion.

The Supreme Court of Canada said, well, the proof of the facts of his having these delusions, the proof of the fact of him acting in a manner to justify the opinion must be proved other than by hearsay. {656|657}

Now, I think that's a simple, logical position that shouldn't have to be defended. I am kind of surprised in a way that the Crown sees this method of proof as a possibility. I can see why they see it as a necessity, because without people like Dr. Hilberg I can see they'd have a difficult time proving this thesis that this booklet is wrong, six million did die, etcetera.

Now, I think that it comes to the heart of the case, because otherwise we are going to get involved in hearsay to a very great degree, and opinions and counter-opinions, and although we are prepared to meet all this, and looking forward to it, I might add, I really think it is not the right place for it. It is my submission that, as I say, we are using the Courts for an academic debate which should be resolved elsewhere.

It is interesting to note that in the Abbey case, Abbey did not testify. Now, it is utterly impossible to test the credibility or accuracy or truth of opinions about history because, obviously, the people long dead are not here to testify, and maybe that's a logical, extension of the sound reasoning that we should let history remain history, and debate it with reason, and outside of the sphere of this type of adverse[a]rial situation. {657|658}

I just capsule by reading from page 412 where it was said by, I think Mr. Justice Dickson on behalf of the Court:

"While it is not questioned that medical experts are entitled to take into consideration all possible information in forming their opinions, this in no way removes from the party tendering such evidence the obligation of establishing, through properly admissible evidence, the factual basis on which such opinions are based. Before any weight can be given to an expert's opinion, the facts upon which the opinion is based must be found to exist."

Now, the Crown has called two survivors so far. They have some direct evidence. They have not, with respect, proven the existence of six million casualties or anything approximating. They have told very tragic, very sad stories, no question about that, but with the greatest respect, I don't believe that they are really relevant to the issue, which is the thesis of the booklet. {658|659} Nothing in the booklet denies the sadness of the stories they have told, the suffering they have recounted. That is not what the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" disputes at all. So if Dr. Hilberg's opinion evidence is to go beyond what these witnesses have said to prove that something in here is false, then he must be proving something contrary to it is true.

It is my submission you cannot do so from any direct evidence. He has no direct evidence. And then, it can accurately be said that his opinion has no weight. Before any weight can be given to an expert's opinion, the facts upon which the opinion is based must be found to exist.

Then I suppose my friend will say, let's take judicial notice of what Dr. Hilberg says so, therefore, we can find the facts to exist. That, I think, is another debate, and we haven't crossed that bridge yet, but if my friend wishes to pursue it, I am ready; but I am facing now an expert who has given you, clearly, the basis of his opinion, and it is all hearsay. It may be a very credible opinion. I am not disputing that Dr. Hilberg is an intelligent, outstanding, distinguished scholar, but so may others be who disagree with him, and the process {659|660} of finding truth in that sense is beyond the jurisdiction of this Court.

I don't think that I should go into the issue of taking judicial notice, which I have ample authority to debate or discuss, at the moment; but unless he is prepared to do that, or ask Your Honour to do that, there is no basis upon which Dr. Hilberg can give opinion evidence to prove the truth of his opinions, or to prove facts, to deny that which is printed in the book.

Thank you kindly, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Your Honour, the proposition that Mr. Christie puts before you, that in order to prove a historical fact all the participants involved in that historical fact must be called to the Court, is a novel one. It would indicate that, perhaps, when the last veteran of World War I is dead, we no longer know whether we had World War I because there is no living witness. {660|661}

The Abbey case, Your Honour, is clearly distinguishable, dealing as it does with the psychiatrist rather than a historian. It is a completely different situation. I found some assistance, Your Honour – should say that my suggestion to you is that Dr. Hilberg be found as an expert on the Holocaust, as defined by Dr. Hilberg, that he be permitted to express his opinions to state the basis upon which he forms those opinions, and that the jury should be entitled to judge from his testimony the weight, if any, that they will give to his evidence.

Now, I have, Your Honour, first a decision of Mr. Justice Evans of the High Court Justice, Province of Ontario, Chief Justice, Federal Republic of Germany v. Rauca, and I would refer you, Your Honour, to page 712 of that decision. And I know that Your Honour and Mr. Christie are familiar with the background of that. It was an extradition application by West Germany to have Mr. Rauca returned.

Page 712, Your Honour, under the heading, "Jurisdiction of Germany to seek extradition", I will read:

"Raul Hilberg, a professor at the University of Vermont, and the holder {661|662} of M.A. and Ph.D. degrees, was qualified as an expert in political science. He has been engaged in the research of Holocaust since 1948. He was involved in the interrogation of German prisoners and civilians, had access to Nuremberg trial documents and is the author of 'The Destruction of European Jews', a history of the Holocaust. He has done extensive research in the organizational structure of the Reich and also had access to a limited number of Russian documents. He has testified as an expert in several American trials involving war criminals. He outlined the organizational set-up and agreed with the information contained in the depositions of Dr. Scheffler and Dr. Rosenkranz.

Professor Hilberg testified that in August 1941, the German Reich had set up a civil administration in Lithuania and that it continued until 1944. {662|663} He stated that there was no Lithuanian Government that did not take ..."

THE COURT: There was no local ... Did you say there was no Lithuanian Government, or no local —

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry.

"He stated that there was no local Lithuanian Government that did not take orders from Germany and that German law applied. This situation prevailed until Russia invaded Lithuania in the latter part of 1944. He testified that he had examined Helmut Rauca's personnel file which indicated that he was a police officer in Germany, later associated with the S.S., that he was paid by the Gestapo and held an honorary position in the S.S. In occupied areas such as Lithuania, Rauca's group constituted a mobile unit with civil service status which was designated as a special unit to carry out particular missions and was always subject to German law." {663|664}

Here, Your Honour, Professor Hilberg was first qualified as an expert by an Ontario Chief Justice in the very field which my friend states he should not be permitted to testify as an expert; and secondly, he was permitted to give opinion evidence, give the source of his opinion evidence, and it would appear from this that the judge weighed that and accepted some of it as historical fact.

That case, Your Honour, went to the Court of Appeal for Ontario. The citation I have is 145 D.L.R. (3d) 638. It is a five-member appeal court in which judgment was given by the court as a total body. There were no dissenting opinions. And Chief Justice for Ontario, Mr. Justice Howland, and Associate Chief Justice for Ontario MacKinnon were both on that panel. At page 645 of that decision, third paragraph:

"Dr. Raul Hilberg, a professor of political science at the University of Vermont, was qualified as an expert witness on what is known as the Holocaust. He testified that the Reich Security Main Office or RSHA was one of the 12 main offices in the {664|665} SS and police. It was created at the beginning of the War in 1939. It combined the Security Service and the Security Police. The Security Police was subdivided into two main police forces: the criminal police and the State Police or Gestapo."

According to Dr. Hilberg, the RSHA maintained, in areas that were being invaded, mobile units known as Einsatzgruppen. The Einsatzgruppen were subdivided into units called Einsatzkommandos comprising roughly 150 persons. The Einsatzgruppen were civil units, not military units, and were subject to civil authority, not military authority."

The case goes on.

"Dr. Hilberg had examined the appellant's personnel file. According to Dr. Hilberg, the file showed that the appellant was a member of the Gestapo with an honorary position in the SS. The appellant was paid by the [sic] Gestapo, not by the SS. {665|666} Dr. Hilberg testified that a member of the Gestapo was a federal policeman and a federal public servant. This was confirmed by the deposition of Dr. Wolfgang Scheffler, an expert on National-Socialist persecution of the Jews."

And it goes on and deals with Dr. Scheffler's evidence, also an expert, not somebody giving direct evidence of events in Lithuania at the time. Your Honour, I would suggest that implicitly, if not explicitly, the Ontario Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal were expressing, in the Rauca case, an exception to the hearsay rule in matters of history.

If Your Honour does not accept that argument — and again what I am suggesting is that the jury be permitted to hear the Doctor's evidence and the basis upon which his evidence is given, with reference to documentation, and judge for themselves the weight to which will be accorded to that evidence — if Your Honour does not accept that proposition, then I would suggest to you, sir, that Dr. Hilberg be permitted to testify as to the existence of documents and be permitted to testify as to the contents of documents that are contained within the {666|667} pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" as to whether those documents are represented correctly by that pamphlet.

I would suggest, Your Honour, that that evidence, if he is permitted to give it, form the factual basis upon which he can express an opinion as to the whole.

My apologies, Your Honour. I do not have multiple copies of the next term in support of that proposition, but I do have one copy and I am happy to pass it around. I think my friend has a copy of MacWilliams, and I am looking at MacWilliams, and in particular that portion of MacWilliams that deals with documentary evidence, Chapter 6, and it's "Canadian Criminal Evidence (2d) 1984" by P.K. MacWilliams, in which the author points out that where the original documents — it is a discussion of the best evidence rule. Where original documents are not brought to the Court, or available to be brought to Court, they can be proven in Court by way of secondary evidence, that a proper way of introducing secondary evidence is through oral testimony where the witness has actually read the document himself. And there are rules as to when it is proper to go from the best evidence, the document itself, to secondary evidence, which would be either photo-{667|668} copies, or in this case oral testimony as to the contents of the documents. And one of the rules, Your Honour, that I will suggest, is when the document is not available to be brought to Court (a) because it is in a foreign country, or (b) because it is a document that is archival and simply cannot be brought into court.

Dr. Hilberg has testified that all of the documents that he examined are in archives in Germany and in the United States. Page 94 of MacWilliams contains that proposition, Your Honour. Dealing with secondary evidence it says secondary evidence is admissible when the person with the original is outside the jurisdiction. I will pass that up to you.

That proposition, Your Honour, is also contained within Phipson on Evidence, 13th Edition, published in 1982, and the author there indicates, under his chapter heading of "Form of Secondary Evidence", paragraph 36: "Secondary evidence of the contents of documents must be legitimate and trustworthy evidence, inferior to primary solely in respect of its derivative character, and must not consist of conjectural or illegal matters. Its chief admissible forms are Copies; Oral Testimony; Admissions; Circumstantial or presumptive Evidence; and Declarations, {668|669} made either in Public Documents, or by Deceased Persons." Then in dealing specifically with a subject heading, "Oral Testimony and Admissions", Phipson says at page 893, "In addition to testimony as to examined copies, the contents of private (but not generally of public or judicial documents) may be proved as secondary evidence by any witness who has in fact read them. A party cannot, however, be compelled by his opponent to admit the contents of documents unproduced in the witness-box, although his admissions out of court afford primary, or sometimes secondary, evidence of such contents against himself."

There are no degrees in secondary evidence, says Phipson, at page 895. "The general rule is that there are no degrees in secondary evidence; and that a party is at liberty (subject to comment if more satisfactory proof is withheld) to adduce any admissible description he may choose." In considering what may be appropriate for secondary evidence, Phipson says at page 901, paragraph 36-31[37?], under the heading, "Impossibility or inconvenience of production": "When production of the original is physically impossible or highly inconvenient, e. g., inscriptions on walls, tombstones, etcetera, unless there are circumstances of suspicion, the object itself {669|670} will not have to be produced."

I am suggesting that in this case it is impossible to produce archival documents that are being held in a foreign country.

And at page 902, contained under the section, "Impossibility or Inconvenience of Production", it states at the top of the page: "The rule applies equally where a private document is beyond the reach of a subpoena duces tecum because it is filed in a foreign Court or is in the hands of a person whose refusal to produce the document cannot be overcome because he is a resident abroad or is entitled to diplomatic immunity."

So I am suggesting, Your Honour, that first of all, on the authority of Rauca, that Dr. Hilberg is entitled to express his opinion, that he be qualified as an expert, express his opinion on matters contained within the pamphlet dealing with the Holocaust, and that if that opinion — that he can state the basis upon which that opinion is given, and that the jury can consider what weight to give to that evidence, that if Your

Honour finds that Rauca does not go that far – I suggest that it does – if Your Honour finds that it does not, then I would suggest that on the basis of the literally thousands and thousands {670|671} of documents, original documents that Dr. Hilberg has read himself, he can testify as to the contents of those documents and to their existence.

I would suggest that Phipson would indicate – and this would probably correspond with what my friend would argue – Phipson would indicate that the use to which the fact of reading those documents can be put is two-fold, and only one is a proper use: The first is for the existence of those documents, and the second is for the truth of the contents of the documents. The only use is for the proper use of the documents. There is a document that exists that says this. It can't go to the truth of what it says, but it can go into consideration of what a historian considers in forming a historical opinion, and it gives weight such that his opinion can be heard by the jury.

That would be my argument.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: A couple of preliminary points in reply.

First of all, the Rauca case was an extradition case on which the burden of proof is similar to that of a preliminary hearing. It is also true to say {671|672} that the issue raised by the appeal from the decision of the lower court in the Rauca case does not involve the issue that I have asked Your Honour to consider. Nonetheless, the Court of Appeal did refer to the evidence of Dr. Hilberg which, at the time, apparently [apparently], was unchallenged by counsel for the respondent to the application of the Federal Republic of West Germany – namely, Mr. Rauca. In that case it's my submission that there was no obligation upon the Crown to prove truth beyond a reasonable doubt, because the only thing that Crown had to do – that is, not the Crown, probably more correctly the Federal Republic of West Germany, actually had only to prove a prima facie case. And the Canadian Government, in the Extradition Act, very clearly indicates their position that if a prima facie case is proven, then they permit the accused to stand trial in a country of origin of extradition proceedings.

My friend says my argument is novel. I have already said the whole case is novel. We are not here, he says, to determine what the world knows. That's true. He says there is a distinction between a historian and a psychiatrist. Historians cannot use hearsays – rather, a historian can use hearsay, but a psychiatrist {672|673} cannot.

I think he is stuck with the problem where the Supreme Court of Canada has made a general statement about the admissibility of evidence from expert evidence, and I think, quite clearly, that you don't prove the fact through calling an expert to say what somebody else said, and I don't think they restricted those remarks at all to psychiatrists. And the remarks of Mr. Justice Dickson, Chief Justice of Canada, seem to me a far wider application than just a psychiatrist.

My friend then contends we are kind of a half-way house where Dr. Hilberg can say, "Well, I know this document exists." Well, I respectfully suggest that the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" doesn't dispute the existence of documents that I am aware of at all, in any case, to any great extent. It does dispute the meaning of testimony at the Nuremberg Trials. It disputes the findings of those Courts. It disputes the allegations of gas chambers. It doesn't dispute the existence of certain documents. I don't think that is what the case is all about. If so, I would like my friend to point out where he says this pamphlet says the document doesn't exist and Dr. Hilberg says it does. Then I know what I am dealing with, {673|674} but I don't hear him say that.

My friend says psychiatric evidence is admissible to prove the existence of a document if primary evidence is unavailable. I agree with that. That doesn't answer the objection to the admissibility of the primary evidence to prove the truth. The primary evidence must be admissible in order that psychiatric evidence can take its place.

I don't dispute that if the primary evidence of various and sundry documents was disputed, and the Crown wished to prove the existence of them and the truth of them, then if the primary documents were admissible to prove truth, then they could substitute secondary evidence, if they couldn't produce the primary document.

That, I don't think is the real issue at all. The right to do that I don't take issue with. I take issue with whether you can introduce these documents through a witness to prove truth when, in fact, the documents themselves would not be admissible.

We are not, I suggest, entitled to automatically – perhaps there is some rule that would admit their existence into evidence. We are not entitled, as far as I am aware, to introduce the documents of another Court {674|675} as proof of the truth of their content, especially when that other Court was not a Canadian Court. I don't think I would be well-advised to suggest that we should take some of the evidence from some trial of mine and introduce it as proof of something here. I think I would be looked upon with somewhat of a strange glance, quite rightly, and I think that is basically what my friend is contending – not only to introduce that through the primary source, but to introduce it through Dr. Hilberg.

My respectful submission is, it is not admissible at all in this Court, and I don't think that his argument about the admissibility of the secondary evidence deals with that at all. Thank you very much, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, if may, one other thing, and I mentioned it in passing, and I wanted to repeat it again so that we are clear. There are documents that are referred to in here, and specifically – and by "in here", I am talking about Exhibit 1. There is a reference to a report of a Lieutenant General Stroop on page 19, dealing with the Warsaw Ghetto. There are other documents as well that are referred to in here, {675|676} and I take the position that if Dr. Hilberg has read those documents, he can testify as to whether those documents that he's read contain the information that is in this report here.

We are not talking about proving anything about the Holocaust. We are talking about this article and its accuracy or falsehood. And I mentioned that in passing in my argument, but I hope that is understood, that I hope to introduce that evidence from Dr. Hilberg.

As well, there are allegations made about the Nuremberg hearings, which a reading of the transcripts would reveal, I suggest, are false.

That's all. Thank you.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you have any reply with respect to those two matters which we just heard about?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I do, Your Honour.

The reference to the Stroop Report, I think my friend is alleging that the report is misquoting, or the article misquotes part of the Stroop Report. It's my submission that in order to {676|677} give evidence to refute what is said here, one would have to be able to swear this is the actual and truthful Stroop Report, and to do that is to give evidence beyond the competence of a witness who was not a party to the report. It wouldn't be an admissible report in these proceedings unless its authorship could be established, unless it could be proven to be authentic. And this witness has not the ability with regard to that degree of authenticity unless he says he is an eye witness with respect to its creation.

I think what we involve ourselves if my friend follows the practice, is the process of accepting as proof someone's opinion on the authenticity of a document.

I respectfully submit that a person qualified as a writer of books and a general historian really hasn't developed that type of expertise.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Not a general historian, a Holocaust historian.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, a Holocaust historian. Even a Holocaust historian specializing in an area of history is not qualified to say, "I know that to be the actual and true copy, or the original Stroop Report". I would be very interested if Dr. Hilberg can produce the {677|678} Stroop report or something that far-fetched. I would find that, perhaps, direct evidence, but it would be the only admissible evidence.

Now, I think my friend also referred to the Nuremberg Trial transcript, and I didn't clearly understand what he meant. If he says that Dr. Hilberg will disagree with some of the statements here, I don't doubt that, but I don't think he is qualified to make a judgment on the accuracy of the transcript or the books that have been printed by other people about it. I have read them, too, and I have also found corroboration from what is said here, and there are disputes about what is said here. He, indeed, will be relying on secondary sources that were supposed to take admissible primary sources.

I just think that it involves an expert expressing opinions that take us no closer to the admissible evidence that should properly be before a Court.

Thank you.

THE COURT: I hope to be ready at twelve-thirty.

REASONS FOR RULING

THE COURT: This voir dire determines the issue of whether or not the evidence of one Dr. Raul Hilberg may be received in evidence as the testimony of an expert witness. The accused is charged with two counts pursuant to s.177 of the Criminal Code. Both counts are contained within the confines of a single indictment. The issue I must decide relates essentially to count number two of the indictment, although I am not to be taken, in the course of this ruling, as having confined the issue to that count alone. It may pertain to count number one; essentially, however, count number two is the relevant count with which I deal. That count reads as follows:

"ERNST ZÜNDEL stands further charged that he, in or about the year 1981 at the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in the Judicial District of York, did publish a statement or tale, namely 'Did Six Million Really Die?' that he knows is false and that is likely to cause mischief to the public interest in social and racial tolerance, contrary to the Criminal Code."

The essential issues, as I see them, at {679|680} this particular stage of this trial, concern the accused's admitted publication of the document entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die?". Within that document, the main thread of its contents seems to me to be that the so-called Holocaust (as he phrases it) did not occur in the way that historians, the media and others have all said it occurred. Secondly, while the document points out that many thousands of Jewish people did die during the course of World War II, there was no systematic policy espoused, created and followed by the German government, the German armed forces, both political and otherwise, during the course of World War II the object to which was to systematically exterminate Jews from the face of Europe. There are, undoubtedly, other issues which I regard as somewhat more minor that surely will arise during the course of this trial as set out in Exhibit No. 1, "Did Six Million Really Die?". However, as I see it, those are the two issues I have attempted to identify that constitute the main substance of the document.

Dr. Hilberg is a proposed witness for the Crown. He has testified on this voir dire. He has sworn that he holds a Ph.D. As I recall his evidence, his subject to achieve that degree of learning was in law and {680|681} politics, or something along those lines. He swore he has become expert on the subject of the Holocaust. He began that study as a graduate student in 1948. For the last thirty to forty-five years, as I understand his evidence, he has studied in detail books, papers and documents of all descriptions and topics on the subject. He has perused with great care the documentation on the subject of the Holocaust created by the civil service of more than one country and including that in the United States of America and Germany.

His methodology is based upon the study of documentation of all kinds on the subject in question, the comparison of all documents with others to see if they agree or disagree, and the obtaining of opinions from persons which he considers expert in the field. He has created and written at the present time a substantial text on the subject containing about eight hundred pages and many footnotes.

He has studied primary documents of, as I say, a civilian civil service nature and military nature, and in Germany the S.S. political aspect of the police force, as well as the totally civilian aspect of the then existing German police force. He has studied with care transcripts of the evidence given at trial in Nuremberg subsequent to World War II. He has had direct {681|682} access and has perused many of the documents contained in the archives in the United States on the subject in question. Those documents occupy about twenty-five thousand square feet of shelf space in the State of Virginia. His object, he swore, has been to determine how and not why the Jews, as he says, were destroyed. In that regard he has focused his attention on methods of transport negotiations between various European countries, the finance required for the scheme that he said occurs, and the inner diplomatics of Germany in relation to other sovereign states or semi-sovereign states at the time. This all involved the consuming of much time. It also involved a great deal of cross-checking of documentation. This field, in essence, is the method of destruction of Jews.

He further testified that he was accepted as an expert witness in the Supreme Court of Ontario before the Chief Justice of the High Court Mr. Justice Evans in the recent case of Rauca. That was an extradition case. He has been recognized as a specialist in the Holocaust in other courts in the United States where his evidence as an expert witness has been accepted. He has familiarized himself in the nineteen fifties and nineteen sixties with the {682|683} transcripts of trials held in West Germany when it is said that persons charged as war criminals were on trial during those two decades as a result of the Second World War. When cross-examined he acknowledged a case upon which he made comment. He was not aware of the ultimate disposition of that case. I gather from his evidence that that case was overturned in appeal and is a case similar in nature and substance to the one before this Court. The witness stated that he did not follow that case or, indeed, any other cases in which he testified as far as the appeal position was concerned. His evidence was given as an expert. His understanding was that the case was not overturned on the basis of any expert evidence he may have given in that trial.

Mr. Christie, counsel for the accused, takes the position that this Court should not qualify Dr. Hilberg as an expert witness. It is pointed out by the defence in this case that this is a matter of history, that however scholarly Dr. Hilberg may be, he is, essentially, being asked to give an expert opinion based upon what he has gleaned from many sources all of which, in the submission of Mr. Christie, constitute hearsay evidence. In the result, the witness will be giving his opinion, if he is {683|684} permitted to do so, based on inadmissible hearsay. Therefore, in matters of history, this witness should not be permitted to testify. His opinion on the subject of the Holocaust may be debatable but not in a court of law. That is so for reasons I have just given, according to the submission of counsel for the accused.

It is submitted that this witness cannot prove a fact based on opinion drawn from selected documents that he, himself, has selected and read. That is so because it does not constitute firsthand knowledge. Mr. Christie takes the position that the Crown, although he used the word "we", was employing the courts in order to conduct an academic debate. That cannot be done in a court of law because persons long dead are not here to testify. Counsel for Mr. Zündel submits that his position is supported by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in The Queen v. Abbey, 68 C.C.C. (2d) 394. After making reference to a number of portions, if not all, of the headnote of that case, Mr. Christie has specifically referred me to page 412 of that decision, part of which reads as follows:

"While it is not questioned that medical experts are entitled to take into consideration all possible information {684|685} in forming their opinions, this in no way removes from the party tendering such evidence the obligation of establishing, through properly admissible evidence, the factual basis on which such opinions are based. Before any weight can be given to an expert's opinion, the facts upon which the opinion is based must be found to exist."

Mr. Griffiths, counsel for the Crown, takes the position that the evidence of Dr. Hilberg has been admitted and qualified as expert evidence by the Chief Justice of the High Court of Ontario, as confirmed by the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of Re Federal Republic of Germany v. Rauca, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 368; 28 O.R. (2d) 705.

Mr. Griffiths submits that the same witness testified on essentially the same subject in the Rauca case. To hold that his evidence is not now admissible in this case would be erroneous in law. Mr. Griffiths points out that, contrary to the position taken by Mr. Christie, if the last survivor of the Second World War, generally speaking, in this country died, then the fact that the Second World War occurred, if Mr. Christie's position is {685|686} taken, could not be proven. That is so because there would not be anybody alive to say that it happened under oath in a court of law. In the alternative the Crown takes the position that if he is in error with respect to the case law on Rauca that he has presented and the reasons that he has given in the form of submissions, then Dr. Hilberg should be permitted to testify as to the existence of documents which might refute specific allegations made within the confines of Exhibit No. 1 concerning, for example, the accused's version of the Nuremberg trials and other specific references that I do not intend to name here. I am reminded by the Crown that Phipson on Evidence, Article 363 (1) is favourable to the Crown's position. That would be favourable in view of the fact that Dr. Hilberg will be testifying with respect to documents held in archives in foreign countries which would not be available in the ordinary course to this trial in this case.

In reply Mr. Christie submits that the case of Rauca can be distinguished from the case at bar on the ground that the burden of proof requiring the sending of Mr. Rauca back to Germany for trial was proof on the balance of probabilities. I presume that Mr. Christie had in mind the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada {686|687} and the United States of America v. Sheppard as the test. In this case at bar Mr. Christie takes the position that proof must be made beyond a reasonable doubt, which is a much higher burden of proof.

McCormick on Evidence (2d) 29, Article 13, has the following to say on the subject of expert testimony:

"An observer is qualified to testify because he has firsthand knowledge of the situation or transaction at issue. The expert has something different to contribute. That is a power to draw inferences from the facts which a jury would not be competent to draw. To warrant the use of expert testimony, then, two elements are required. First, the subject of the inference must be so distinctively related to some science, profession, business or occupation as to be beyond the ken of the average layman. Some courts emphasize that the judge has discretion in administering this aspect {687|688} of the rule, and other courts will admit expert opinion concerning matters about which the jurors may have general knowledge if the expert opinion would still aid their understanding of the fact issue. This latter approach emphasizes the true function of expert testimony. Second, the witness must have sufficient skill, knowledge, or experience in that field or calling as to make it appear that his opinion or inference will probably aid the trier in his search for truth. The knowledge may in some field be derived from reading alone, in some from practice alone, or as is more commonly the case, from both. While the court may rule that a certain subject of inquiry requires that a member of a given profession, as a doctor, an engineer or a chemist, be called, usually a specialist in a particular branch within the profession will not be required. The practice, however, in respect to {688|689} experts' qualification has not for the most part crystallized in specific rules, but is recognized as a matter for the trial judge's discretion reviewable only for abuse. Reversals for abuse are rare.

Finally, opinion evidence is not admissible if the court believes that the state of the pertinent art or scientific knowledge does not permit a reasonable opinion to be asserted even by an expert. Nor will expert opinion be admitted if the court believes that an opinion based upon the facts in evidence cannot be reasonably grounded upon those facts."

I am of the view, having heard the evidence of this witness, that Dr. Hilberg has become a person who has acquired specific expertise within the confines of the field that he, himself, elected to study. That field, generally speaking, concerns his acquired knowledge concerning the systematic, if I can use that phraseology, destruction of Jews. That subject is, essentially, at least {689|690} one of the main issues that this jury, not possessing this special expertise, must decide. There is a distinct difference between the admissibility of evidence and the weight, if any, that a trier of fact, in this case the jury, will give to the evidence.

My function here is to decide, on the basis of the principles as set out by McCormick on Evidence, whether or not this witness falls within those principles. I find that he does. The wording in Abbey that I specifically read, which was referred to me by Mr. Christie, is far from simple to totally understand, at least by me. I am assisted by Mr. Justice Dickson, as he then was, in the same case where he pointed out at page 410 the following words:

"Thus an expert opinion based on second-hand evidence is admissible, if relevant."

At page 411 he went on to say:

"The problem, however, as pointed out by Fauteux J. in Wilband resides not in the admissibility of the testimony but rather the weight to be accorded to the opinion."

When those passages and others similar are related to the final words on page 412, which I have set, out, in my respectful view those final words can only mean {690|691} that the Crown must prove the source, and the trier of fact must know what the source is. That is so because the trier of fact, in this case the jury, will be obliged, as part of its duty, to believe all, part or none of what the expert witness says. If the jury does not know specifically the documents upon which the expert has relied in order to form his opinion, if the jury is not told about that, then the jury will have no basis upon which to base any weight, if it wishes to place weight, some weight, no weight, or total weight. Surely that is what the learned Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada meant when he used the words, "This in no way removes from the party tendering such evidence the obligation of establishing, through properly admissible evidence, the factual basis upon which such opinions are based before any weight can be given to an expert's opinion, the facts upon which the opinion is based must be found to exist."

It would seem to me that, reading the decision in Abbey, the Courts of law in this country do permit the evidence of experts to be given provided it is properly qualified and stated to the trier of fact based upon secondhand evidence, and not necessarily hearsay evidence, although I must confess that the dividing line between the two is not, {691|692} in all cases, entirely clear.

For those reasons, in my view, the evidence of Dr. Hilberg may be given as the evidence of an expert. He may give opinions based upon the secondhand evidence that has been referred to in the case of Abbey. He cannot give his opinions with respect to the whole of World War II. His evidence as an expert will be confined to the issues that this jury must try. Those issues are contained within the confines of Exhibit No. 1, and if there are any issues contained within the writing, "The West, War, and Islam" – and I have not, at the moment, seen any – then he may testify in that regard also.

I part with this ruling by saying that experts in the field of science, medicine and the practical mechanics of the day-to-day living of people in this world surely should not be the only experts who are permitted to testify in courts of law. Expertise in the field of history is just as much a field of expertise as that of pure science. One can never be entirely satisfied that the evidence of a psychiatrist, who is also a qualified medical person, is, in total or in the main, scientifically based.

The motion is allowed to the extent and within the parameters that I have set out.

——— {692|693}

THE COURT: Are there any questions from the Crown?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, sir.

THE COURT: From the defence?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you. Two-fifteen.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just before the jury comes in, there is something I would like to address you on.

Several days ago some material was being left on seats within the courtroom here. I don't know who left the material there. There were seats that were being reserved for two people, one of whom was Sabina Citron. As I said, I don't know who left it there. It was left in the courtroom, not outside. The second is a piece that was handed to Mrs. Citron this morning in the courtroom by a Mr. Felderer. His name is indicated on that material. Now, he has been ejected from the courtroom.

I want it on the record that this kind of thing is going in, not outside, but in the courtroom.

THE COURT: Yes. It's on the record. {693|694}

I would consider this type of action as, possibly, an attempt to influence the course of the trial. If I thought it was, I would start an immediate investigation. I am suspicious only.

The recurrence of any of this will result in direct and fast action in a very disagreeable way to the perpetrator.

That will cease. That will be an exhibit for identification, the next one.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: In this trial? I beg your pardon, do you mean it to be an exhibit in the trial?

THE COURT: For identification.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit "D".

— EXHIBIT "D" (For Identification) Two documents distributed in courtroom.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is the only matter I have, Your Honour. Thank you.

— The jury enters. 2:20 p.m.

VOLUME IV

RAUL HILBERG, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. I understand, sir, that you were born in Vienna, Austria, in 1926.

A. That's correct.

Q. And that at some point you left Europe and came over to the United States.

A. That's correct.

Q. When would that have been?

A. 1939.

Q. And did you come alone, or with your family?

A. I came alone.

Q. Did you ever serve in the United States armed forces?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And when did you start your service with the armed forces?

A. 1944.

Q. And can you tell us what segment of the armed forces?

A. I was an infantryman for a while, {680|681} engaged in intelligence work.

Q. After the war you returned to your schooling?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And can you tell us what degrees you have and what universities you obtained the degrees from?

A. I have a B.A. degree in political science from Brooklyn College, M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia University in public law and government.

Q. And when did you receive your Ph.D. from Columbia?

A. In 1955.

Q. So it will be Dr. Hilberg. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And Dr. Hilberg, I understand that you took up subsequently a teaching post at the University of Vermont.

A. That is correct.

Q. And you still hold that post today?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And you are a full professor at the University of Vermont?

A. Yes, I am. {681|682}

Q. Can you tell us what courses you teach?

A. I teach international relations, American foreign policy, and of course, on the Holocaust.

Q. Before you were attached to the University, did you engage in some form of research?

A. Yes, did.

Q. Can you tell us about that?

A. I was employed in the Federal Records Centre at Alexandria, Virginia, in a project for the United States Government, exploring captured German documents.

Q. And how long were you there for?

A. Approximately one year. 1951 to 1952.

Q. Well, so you teach a course on the Holocaust. Have you ever done any other work in that field?

A. My main work is writing, sometimes consulting with publishers that send me books, or manuscripts, to be reviewed, and things of this sort.

Q. When did you commence studying the Holocaust?

A. I did not call it the Holocaust at the time, but commenced a study of the subject at the end of 1948. {682|683}

Q. And when did you stop your researches in that field?

A. I have not stopped.

Q. You say that you are a writer. Can you tell us if you have written a major work on this subject?

A. I've written a book called, "The Destruction of the European Jews", which was first published in 1961, and has been re-printed a number of times. An enlarged edition came out in Germany two years ago, and a somewhat larger one that will come out in three months in three volumes in the United States. That will be a revised, expanded edition, but in between I have published other works, both articles and books.

Q. And do any of those other works have to do with the destruction of European Jews?

A. Almost everything does, that I have written, yes.

Q. Have you ever written any articles for encyclopedias?

A. Yes. I have some in the Americana, and one in Funk and Wagnalls.

Q. And what subject would those articles be on? {683|684}

A. On the Americana, on concentration camps, as well as the entry in Dachau and Buchenwald, and in Funk and Wagnalls on the Holocaust as such.

Q. Do you belong to any organizations?

A. Well, I belong to the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, which is a United States government body, and I am a member of it by appointment of the President.

Q. President of what?

A. Of the United States. I have been a member of the American Society of International Law. I am a member of the Jewish Studies Association. These are the only organizations that come to mind, aside from being a sinecure on some editorial boards.

Q. Are you familiar with the President's Commission on the Holocaust?

A. That was the organization established prior to the Holocaust Council, and I was a member of it.

Q. And how did you become a member of that organization?

A. By appointment of President Carter.

Q. Can you tell us how you've carried out your researches in this area? {684|685}

A. My main research strategy is to look at documents, to rely primarily on documents, and secondarily on the statements of witnesses, all kinds of witnesses who have knowledge of or direct observation of any part of the subject matter that I am interested in.

Q. Can you tell us what the source of these – first of all, can you tell us where these documents are, where you go to find them, that you have been looking at?

A. When I speak of documents, I mean primarily public documents. That, is to say, records of the German Nazi regime, kept primarily during, the years 1933 to 1945. The United States government in particular captured a large part of these records during the war and kept them physically in Alexandria, Virginia. I looked at some of them while they were located in that area. In addition, of course, I looked at the so-called Nuremberg documents which are, essentially, taken from this pile, for purposes of introducing evidence in the war crimes trials in Nuremberg – namely, 1946, 7, 8, 9. In addition to that, I have been to archives in foreign countries where smaller collections are available and looked at those, quite a few in the original.

Q. And a Xerox machine is a fairly recent {685|686} invention, Dr. What would you do when you were studying these documents in the age before the Xerox machine?

A. In the pre-Xerox age, one had to copy the documents by hand, and that is what I did for years.

Q. And can you give us any idea how many documents you would have copied out in longhand?

A. A few thousand.

Q. You've used the term "Holocaust" a couple of times. How do you define the Holocaust?

A. I would generally define it as the annihilation by physical means of the Jews of Europe during the Nazi regime between the years 1933 and 1945.

Q. Can we do it once again? Annihilation by physical means ...

A. Annihilation by physical means of the Jews of Europe during the Nazi regime between the years 1933 and 1945.

Q. Thank you, sir. In your book, "The Destruction of European Jews", can you tell us how large a book that is, how many pages it would be?

A. It has eight hundred double columns, footnoted pages.

Q. Any idea how many footnotes would {686|687} be attached to that first edition?

A. A little over three thousand.

Q. You said that your latest edition that you are compiling now is some three volumes?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that larger or smaller than —

A. It will be larger. Some condensation of material, but much that's been added. It's hard to transfer percentages, because the format is a little different. It's not double columned any more, but it is thirty, forty per cent longer than the first, even though it comes out in three volumes.

Q. Can you indicate to us what your methodology is as a historian of this period and this phenomena?

A. I would describe myself as an empiricist, looking at the materials, particularly the small details, and trying to come to conclusions from these details about the larger processes and the larger issues.

Q. Can you give us an example?

A. Well, I would, for example, look at railway transports from specific areas to death camps with a view to establishing the pattern of deportations and {687|688} killings in Europe, or I would look at the manner in which clothing, or the lost belongings of the gassed would be collected and distributed to find out some, in some way, as to how thorough the process was, what the mentality behind it was, and how, indeed, it was financed.

Q. Can you tell us what perspective you were looking at this whole issue of destruction of European Jews? What perspective, if any, were you taking, and do you take, in your work?

A. I was mainly curious from the beginning, and I am still curious now about the details, about how this process was implemented from stage one to the last. I did not view it as a simple, massive, amorphous, undertaking. I wanted to see it in its step-by-step procedure. Trained as a political scientist, I was interested in who made these decisions and in what order they were made. And on the whole, that is a perspective of a political scientist approaching a historical probe.

Q. Have you had an opportunity to see the — I believe it is Exhibit 1 — "Did Six Million Really Die?" pamphlet?

A. Yes, I have seen that.

Q. Is there an extra copy available here {688|689} for the doctor to look at?

THE COURT: Take a look at that and show it to Mr. Christie first, would you, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am satisfied it is the same.

THE COURT: It may not be. Please look at it. I have done some underlining. If it is not satisfactory, then it will not be used. While Mr. Christie is doing that, members of the jury, I think I should say this to you now. This witness is testifying as an expert witness. It is my responsibility to decide whether or not this witness may do that. I have decided that he may do so. Merely because he comes before you as an expert witness does not make him any different than any other witness who testifies from this witness stand under oath. You will be told many times between now and the end of this trial, and especially towards the end of the trial, that you, as jurors — and I mean each one of you — can accept all, part or none of what any witness has to say under oath during the course of this trial from the beginning of the trial until the end of the trial. That will apply to this witness as it will apply in the same way to any other witness. Merely because he has been qualified as an expert witness in no way endows {689|690} this gentleman with any more credibility to be attached to his evidence than that of any other witness who testifies during the course of the trial in your view. Each one of you is a supreme judge of the facts. I am not, neither counsel is a judge of the facts. You are. You can accept all, part or none of what any witness has to say.

Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I can only find one small part underlined. I have no objection to that.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Christie.

Q. I am showing to you, sir, a pamphlet, red pamphlet, entitled, "Did Six Million Really Die? Truth At Last Exposed." Have you seen that pamphlet before?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And have you had an opportunity to read that pamphlet over?

A. Yes, I've read it.

Q. I am going to ask you, first of all, doctor, considering the pamphlet as a whole, if you have any comment to make on the methodology, the historical study or methodology that was used in this pamphlet.

A. It's a bit hard to use the word {690|691} "methodology" in connection with such a pamphlet. Methodology presupposes some honest look at material and conclusions drawn honestly from it. What I find here is concoction, contradiction, untruth mixed with half-truths as some ordinary statements which anyone can accept in order that it's hard for me to comprehend. It seems, at first glance, and also upon re-reading, to be a highly biased statement.

Q. Thank you, sir. If I could direct you to page 7 of the pamphlet, and a heading, Chapter 3, "Population And Emigration". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. The second paragraph —

THE COURT: Is that "emigration"?

MR. GRIFFITHS: "Emigration", yes, sir.

"Population And Emigration". It states:

"In the first place, this claim cannot remotely be upheld on examination of the European Jewish population figures. According to 'Chambers Encyclopaedia' the total number of Jews living in pre-war Europe was 6,500,000. Quite clearly, this would mean that almost the entire number were exterminated." {691|692}

First of all have you, in the course of your studies, tried to determine a total number of Jews in pre-war Europe?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And what Sources have you gone to to try and arrive at that figure?

A. In the first instance I would consult census statistics. In some countries there is a breakdown in the census by religion, and those areas, one must look at the date of the census and, obviously, one must, in certain instances, account for the difference of years, if it is a 1930 census to 1939 or to 1940, given the birth rates in the population as estimated. In those countries in which there was no census figure, and there are some like that, the data are a little bit more nebulous. They are based upon estimates made on the whole Jewish communities, but there are estimates made as well by the Gestapo and by German statisticians, and one can look at all of these, and I have done that. Not but one which I would describe as highly precise, but one which, nevertheless, gives me a ballpark figure.

Q. What's your ballpark figure?

A. About nine and a half million pre-war.

Q. And do you know what the percentage {692|693} of error is in that figure?

A. There is quite a percentage of error in that figure because, however one wishes to define Europe, I look at the Jewish population of Poland for which there is a census figure for 1930, and a Polish estimate for 1935, and the figure is three million, three hundred and fifty thousand just for one country, Polish. One looks at the census of the Soviet Union and sees in 1939, January 1939 census, a figure of three million and twenty thousand. So here are two countries with six million and, roughly, four hundred thousand people. And that does not encompass Germany, France, Britain, and also other European countries, Hungary and Rumania, which may be added.

Q. Do you have any difficulty with defining what a Jew is in pre-war Europe?

A. Basically, the census statistics take the definition to be religion. Anyone belonging to the Jewish religion at the time was considered to be Jewish. Needless to say, Nazi Germany wrote its own definitions of the term "Jew", so did satellite states such as Hungary, where the term "Jew" was defined in terms of grandparentage – in short, an individual with four Jewish grandparents, even though born into the Christian religion, was considered {693|694} Jewish, under the Nazi definition. Thus, there is a difference, depending upon the country involved, of several percentage points, based upon which definition is adopted.

Q. Doctor, there will be some testimony later with respect to two pages, photostatic, that I am showing to you now, and particularly the second column on page 99.

THE COURT: That is exhibit ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Is it an exhibit?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I will be submitting it subject to further identification, Your Honour. I believe it is from a 1973 edition, and there will be evidence of Chambers Encyclopaedia.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this from Chambers Encyclopaedia?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. And I will be calling evidence to that effect, to identify it.

Q. Have you had an opportunity to look at column 2 there on page 99?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us, if any, where in that column you can find the figure six and a half million? {694|695}

A. Yes, I do see it.

"On the continent of Europe apart from Russia, whose western provinces also suffered terribly, only a handful of numerically unimportant communities in neutral countries escaped and of the 6,500,000 Jews who lived in the Nazi dominated lands in 1939, barely 1,500,000 remained alive when the war ended six years later."

This is a statement about Europe outside of Russia, which had three million —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I object to the witness telling us what Chambers Encyclopaedia meant. I think the words speak for themselves. He shouldn't extrapolate on his view of what they mean.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Can you tell us, doctor, when you compare that sentence, six and a half million Jews including Russia, in 1939 – where is it again?

A. In Chambers it excludes Russia. It refers to six and a half million Jews in Nazi-dominated lands in 1939. {695|696}

Q. Would that figure have changed, in your opinion, in 1940 or 1941?

A. Well, of course, because, leaving aside the accuracy of this figure about which I wouldn't comment, the fact is that Nazi-dominated Europe widened as German armies marched into France, Belgium, Holland, and above all, the Eastern regions of Poland and the Soviet Union. Now, this would have happened in 1940 and 1941, so this is ...

Q. Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would submit that, Your Honour, subject to further identification.

THE COURT: Yes. That will be marked for further identification.

— EXHIBIT "E" (For Identification): Excerpt from Chambers Encyclopaedia, pages 99 and 100.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: On page 10 of the document, Dr. Hilberg, there is a section headed, "Absence Of Evidence", and it is under the title, "The Six Million: Documentary Evidence". "Absence Of Evidence", column one, the first sentence:

"It should be emphasised straight away {696|697} that there is not a single document in existence which proves that the Germans intended to, or carried out the deliberate murder of Jews."

Could you comment on that, doctor?

A. Leaving aside what the authors meant by the term "document", my interpretation of German records is that there are, indeed, many hundreds of documents dealing with death-dealing operations directly, and reporting upon them, and giving figures and details.

Q. Can you describe some of those documents for us, doctor?

A. Well, for example, when the German armies crossed the border into the Soviet Union on June 22nd, 1941, they were accompanied by battalion-size units of security police and security service. These units called Einsatzgruppen reported back on a daily basis all their operations, above all, of course, the killings of people, and that is ninety, ninety-five per cent Jews, according to those reports, in various localities of the vast regions of the U.S.S.R. from the Baltic to the Black Sea. That is just one example of direct rapportage in the German documents.

Q. And these documents exist today? {697|698}

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Have you seen them?

A. Yes.

Q. Where would they be found?

A. These documents were Nuremberg documents. They come from the pile of records that the United States captured, or they are photostatic copies, microfilm copies available from the National Archives of the United States. I would not describe them as rare.

Q. While we are discussing Einsatzgruppen, you could turn to page 13, column one. It says, "The Case Of the Einsatzgruppen".

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. "The Wisliceny statement deals at some length with the activities of the Einsatzgruppen or Action Groups used in the Russian campaign. These must merit a detailed consideration in a survey of Nuremberg because the picture presented of them at the Trials represents a kind of 'Six Million' in miniature, {698|699} i.e., has been proved since to be the most enormous exaggeration and falsification."

Would you agree with that?

A. Of course not.

Q. Have you seen any terms in the documentation that you have gone through that would prove the evidence presented at Nuremberg dealing with the Einsatzgruppen was the most enormous exaggeration and falsification?

A. Not at all. I have seen repeated documentation, some of it in the original documents that I have seen in Alexandria, Virginia, which do indicate much larger figures for these mobile operations which involve shootings on a mass scale. They were not at all limited to the so-called commissars attached to the Red Army. There were extremely few of those. Indeed, there were not thirty-four thousand, as stated here.

Q. I will read the next part:

"The Einsatzgruppen were four special units drawn from the Gestapo and the S.D. (S.S. Security Service) whose task was to wipe out partisans and Communist commissars in the wake of the advancing German armies in Russia. {699|700} As early as 1939, there had been 34,000 of these political commissars attached to the Red Army."

Is that the figure you are commenting on, the thirty-four thousand?

A. I think it is a careless figure. I am not a specialist of the Red Army, but I do know how few were reported to be the shootings of the so-called commissars, even the low-ranking politroops (ph) which were essentially political officers. And you must keep in mind that a commissar would have had to be attached to a battalion [sic]. There is an implication here of thirty-four thousand battalions [sic].

A battalion [sic] would have a thousand men in it, so here you are. The Germans themselves repeatedly stated in their testimony – and these were Generals, and these were S.S. Officers – that the number of commissars were relatively few, at least those captured, apprehended, identified, and shootings were rather few.

Q. All right. Let's carry on then, with that paragraph dealing with the Einsatzgruppen:

"The activities of the Einsatzgruppen were the particular concern of the Soviet Prosecutor Rudenko at the {700|701} Nuremberg Trials. The 1947 indictment of the four groups alleged that in the course of their operations they had killed not less than one million Jews in Russia merely because they were Jews. These allegations have since been elaborated; it is now claimed that the murder of Soviet Jews by the Einsatzgruppen constituted Phase One in the plan to exterminate the Jews, Phase Two being the transportation of European Jews to Poland. Reitlinger admits that the original term 'final solution' referred to emigration and had nothing to do with the liquidation of Jews, but he then claims that an extermination policy began at the time of the invasion of Russia in 1941."

Can you comment on that?

A. What is correct in the statement is that there were four Einsatzgruppen composed, as stated here. It is also correct that I, myself, have stated that the killings of the Jews in the path of the Einsatzgruppen was {701|702} Phase One, and that the deportations was Phase Two. I, myself, have stated this in my own work. Also it is true, not only Reitlinger has stated that, that the usage of the term "final solution" is an old usage, and it did mean emigration or some other disappearance of Jewry from the scene in the early days, and it did not mean killing until 1941. The phrase was not altered. The meaning given to the phrase was, however, entirely different once it was used in connection with either Einsatzgruppen operations or deportations to Poland.

Q. It carries on, and again, this seems to be considering the work of a man by the name of Reitlinger. Are you familiar with his works?

A. Reitlinger wrote a work called, "The Final Solution". It appeared in the early fifties. It is one of the first studies made on the basis of what I would consider not an overwhelming number of evidentiary materials, but nevertheless, enough to sketch the large picture. It is actually a rather conservative work. It's written by an Englishman, Reitlinger, who tended to be skeptical, and especially with regard to numbers, tended to downgrade them rather than move them up.

Q. "He considers" – "he" referring to {702|703} Reitlinger:

"He considers Hitler's order of July 1941 for the liquidation of the Communist commissars, and he concludes that this was accompanied by a verbal order from Hitler for the Einsatzgruppen to liquidate all Soviet Jews (Die Endlösung, p.91). If this assumption is based on anything at all, it is probably the worthless Wisliceny statement, which alleges that the Einsatzgruppen were soon receiving orders to extend their task of crushing Communists and partisans to a 'general massacre' of Russian Jews."

I am not going to ask you what Reitlinger based his assumptions on, but is there anything other than a statement by a man by the name of Wisliceny that you base your opinion on?

A. Oh, yes. There are statements made by various commanders, not only of, but in these Einsatzgruppen, some of them testifying at Nuremberg. Their affidavits are on record. There are statements made by members of the armed {703|704} forces. There are records, including one which mentions the Chief of Operational Staff – if I give you the word it will be very long – in the high command of the armed forces. Now, these are short, very concise, almost cryptic statements, but they do refer to a Hitler order. As far as the written material is concerned, it only refers to commissars and Jewish Bolshevik Chieftains, as Hitler referred to them, but so far as the comments and statements of the commanders of Einsatzgruppen who, after all, were in the field and who carried out these operations, were concerned, yes, there was a Hitler order. Surely they didn't want the impression to be created that they were doing all this on their own without the Hitler order.

Q. All right. Go back, then, to the beginning of this section that we have been looking at on page 13. It starts on page 11, Chapter 5. The reference in the second paragraph, under Chapter 5, is again made to various statistics, one used at Nuremberg and one used at the Eichmann trial: 9,600,000 Jews living in German occupied Europe, and 9,800,000 at the Eichmann trial. There is a statement there that it is an inflated figure. You have already commented on that.

A. Yes. {704|705}

Q. Okay.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't understand whether that was a question or a statement by my learned friend.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Oh, all right. I will assist you, Mr. Christie. Have you formed any opinion as to whether those figures that were used in Nuremberg and at the Eichmann trial by the prosecution, as indicated here, are accurate, roughly?

A. As I previously indicated, in my own calculations it was nine and a half million, but I also indicated that if one introduces different criteria of the definition of Jew as those belonging to the Christian religion, the numbers are slightly higher. So these are ballpark figures.

Q. All right. We can turn to page 12, the first column there. Do I understand from your evidence that you have read the twenty odd volumes of the Nuremberg transcripts?

A. Oh, yes. Oh, yes. That's only the first Nuremberg trial.

Q. Yes, sir. There is the International Military Tribunal here. Can you explain to us what the {705|706} difference is?

A. There was a trial of the so-called major war criminals headed by Goering. This was a trial under a Charter, actually a treaty, but it is called a Charter of the International Military Tribunal, to which some twenty odd countries were a party. The judges at the trial were American, U.S., British, French and Soviet. The prosecution also was drawn from these four powers, and the defendants were the top leadership apprehended after the war, with some exceptions – a few lower ranking individuals as well. This record produced twenty volumes of testimony and additional volumes of documentation. There were so-called subsequent trials which were conducted as U.S. Military Tribunal proceedings, but these proceedings were, although called Military, and although deemed international because under a control council which was passed by all four occupying council, these particular trials were headed by American judges drawn from the highest State Courts and consequently proceeded along lines customary and usual in these courts. There were twelve subsequent trials involving Field Marshals, top corporation executives, top ministerial bureaucracy representatives, and the like, also the high S.S. people. And these twelve subsequent trials produced {706|707} yet another much larger record of documentation and to testimony.

THE COURT: Were each of those trials conducted with a single accused, or were they conducted with a mix of multiple accused?

THE WITNESS: Only one trial had a single accused, Milch. The others had several accused, up to more than a dozen.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, all those trials, were they collectively Nuremberg trials, or do they go further afield?

A. One does call them collectively the Nuremberg Trials, however, if one says the Nuremberg Trial, single, that is the first one.

Q. The International Military Tribunal.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us, doctor, whether in your examination of the transcripts of those matters – and perhaps I could refer you first to the top of the page and ask you to comment in that way. This is page 12, column one, and in context, this starts on page 11:

“The Rules of Evidence, developed by {707|708} British jurisprudence over the centuries in order to arrive at the truth of a charge with as much certainty as possible, were entirely disregarded at Nuremberg. It was decreed that ‘the Tribunal should’ not be bound by technical rules of ‘evidence’ but could admit ‘any evidence’ which it deemed to have probative ‘value,’ that is, would support a conviction. In practise, this meant the admittance of hearsay evidence and documents, which in a normal judicial trial are always rejected as untrustworthy. That such evidence was allowed is of profound significance, because it was, one of the principal methods by which the extermination legend was fabricated through fraudulent ‘written affidavits’. Although only 240 witnesses were called in the course of the Trials, no less than 300,000 of these ‘written affidavits’ were accepted by the Court as supporting the charges, without this {708|709} evidence being heard under oath.”

Do you have any comment as to, first of all, those numbers – two hundred and forty witnesses called –

THE COURT: I have it, Mr. Christie. Let's hear the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: I wasn't going to interrupt until –

THE COURT: I know.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: — that no less than three hundred thousand of these written affidavits were accepted by the Court as supporting the charges, without this evidence being heard under oath?

THE COURT: Just before you answer, doctor. Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't want to interrupt the proceedings unnecessarily, but —

THE COURT: You are not.

MR. CHRISTIE: If Your Honour could direct me as to whether your ruling intended to go as far as to allow the questions of a legal nature, I will then be guided more clearly in my reaction to this type of question.

THE COURT: I did not hear the question as a legal one. I thought it more concerned itself with {709|710} numbers. Why is it legal? We are talking about the three hundred thousand affidavits type of thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Maybe I misunderstood the question. If that is all it directed itself to, then I will withdraw my objection.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is all it is meant to.

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought it involved more than that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am not going to ask him about the principles of English justice. He is not a lawyer.

THE COURT: You are asking him about the alleged volumes of affidavits that you said were tendered at the Nuremberg trials, things of that nature.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Does that clear matters up, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: That was within the scope of Your Honour's ruling, so I have nothing further to say.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Do you have the question, Dr. Hilberg, {710|711} or would you like me to repeat it?

A. No. I have the question. The system of keeping records at Nuremberg was to give each document an accession number – that is, regardless of content, as a document is received, it would receive a consecutive number within a so-called document series. So we have a pretty good figure of the number of documents that there were. These documents were given numbers regardless of whether they were German correspondence or affidavits. It made no difference. They would just get a number. And if the previous number was 599, then the next number was 600. From this I could tell you that the prosecution documents at the first Nuremberg Trial were approximately forty-five hundred, five thousand, including affidavits, that the prosecution documents in all the subsequent trials which I have mentioned aggregated roughly forty thousand documents, including affidavits, but in addition, there were many defence documents.

Q. Oh, you mean the defence could give affidavits as well?

A. Oh, yes. In fact, I would, without being able to give you exact figures, say that I have seen enormous quantities of defence affidavits which were received. {711|712}

Indeed, I used some of them, and they are in the footnotes of my work. But in no case can we speak of three hundred thousand affidavits. That would be, even if you include all of the defence affidavits, which are more than the prosecution affidavits, that would be excessive.

Q. So did you see any reference there to defence affidavits?

A. No. I would say that the implication of the sentence, as I read it, if I read it correctly, is that these particular affidavits, these particular witnesses, were called as prosecution witnesses, and there is no mention of defence witnesses there at all.

Q. All right. The article goes on:

“Under these circumstances, any Jewish deportee or camp inmate could make any revengeful allegation that he pleased.” Can you comment on that sentence?

A. Well, I would say that in almost – again, I don't speak as a lawyer, but in any proceeding, and particularly at Nuremberg where I said in the subsequent trials there were State Judges quite used to the rules of evidence and the usual business of what is and is not a {712|713} legitimate question verbatim, one could not make a statement in any way at all in whatever way one pleased. There had to be some relevance. That is not to say that the statement was necessarily correct or that it was given any great weight, any more than my testimony is to be given quite a lot of weight, but it was a statement, and it had to have some relevance.

Q. It goes on:

“Most incredible of all, perhaps, was the fact that defence lawyers at Nuremberg were not permitted to cross examine prosecution witnesses.”

A. That is strictly falsehood. I have gone through the trial testimony of these twelve subsequent trials and I can only state that defence lawyers used a lot of opportunities given to them, and they had these opportunities to cross-examine prosecution witnesses. They may, at some time, have elected not to do so because the testimony was too damaging and they just didn't want to cross-examine.

Q. But they did have an opportunity to cross-examine.

A. Oh, yes. I've seen such testimony. {713|714} I've read it. I've used it.

Q. There is a reference to a Judge Wenersturm and some comments attributed to him, and if you go down to the bottom of page 12, still in the first column, at the bottom, there is a little footnote there, “(ibid. p. 68)”, and I am going to start reading after that:

“It is obvious from these facts that the fundamental legal principle: that no man can sit in judgement on his own case, was abandoned altogether. Moreover the majority [majority] of witnesses were also Jews.” Were the majority of witnesses identified as Jews?

A. No, not at all. Not at all. I can't give you numbers, but there was a fair percentage of Jewish witnesses, but there was a very large number of non-Jewish witnesses. Some were victims, and a very large number of witnesses from the defence side. People were testifying about their superiors on trial, or their friend on trial. And moreover, there were prosecution witnesses drawn from the German bureaucracy as well. Some of these were called turncoats, but nevertheless there were people {714|715} testifying for the prosecution, even though they, themselves, may have been in the S.S. or some other capacity involved in acts of destruction. So as far as that goes, as far as the statement about witnesses is concerned, yes, there were Jewish witnesses. Of course there were Jewish witnesses. But in no sense do they stand out in my mind as being a majority. Not at all.

Q. The next long section is entitled, “‘Confessions’ Under Torture”. Some statements are attributed in the first paragraph to the American Senator Joseph McCarthy. Have you ever heard of an American named Senator Joseph McCarthy?

A. Senator from Wisconsin. That was —

Q. Was he a historian?

A. No.

Q. And —

A. I think the reference here was to a trial, so-called Malmedy trial. This, by the way, was not a Holocaust trial, but concerned a trial of S.S. people charged with shooting American prisoners of war. Joachim — it is misspelled in the paper.

MR. CHRISTIE: What is that?

A. Joachim Paiper, it is misspelled here. {715|716} In any case, it is not a Holocaust, but a prisoner of war trial — during the Battle of the Bulge by S.S. troops. It concerns prisoners of war, wanton shooting of American prisoners of war. That is what this is all about.

Q. And two-thirds of the way down that first paragraph, halfway down: "As in the notorious Malmedy Trials of private soldiers, the prisoners were hoisted in the air and beaten until they signed the confessions demanded of them. On the basis of such 'confessions' extorted from S.S. Generals Sepp Dietrich and Joachim Paiper, the Leibstandarte was convicted as a 'guilty organisation'."

A. Yeah. Paiper [Peiper] is misspelled here.

Q. And the Malmedy trial doesn't have anything to do with the Holocaust?

A. It is not a Holocaust matter at all. And in any case, the facts alleged here are so mixed up and so — it is hard to comment on it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, Your Honour, this witness is supposed to qualify himself and has been recognized {716|717} as a Holocaust expert, but if he wants to go in this matter, I think he is going beyond his expertise. I am quite prepared to deal with it if it arises, but I wasn't aware he was qualified to comment on the Malmedy Trial as well.

THE COURT: Do you intend to pursue that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Proceed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

Q. Now, Dr. Hilberg, we will now turn to page 13, and there is reference there to the Ohlendorf trial as the most revealing trial in the Einsatzgruppen case. Have you had an opportunity to look over that section? And you have commented already on the Einsatzgruppen. Is there anything else you want to add?

A. No. I don't suppose there is anything much to add. The allegations made here, as it is in the preceding passage, about torture of Ohlendorf, I know nothing about such torture and really find it a bit incredible.

Q. Have you seen any documentation indicating torture of Ohlendorf?

A. It is, to me, a little bit inconceivable {717|718} that by 1947 or 8 prisoners in a war crimes trial under American custody, American Military Police, would have been tortured in a physical sense. I am not talking about whether they conceived the questioning as torture, but whether they would be tortured in a physical sense — I speak here as an ordinary person, not an expert — it is a matter of being an American and having lived amongst Americans and looking at what is and isn't plausible, and I have never seen any document connected with this trial in which the defence alleged that there was torture.

Q. Page 14, the Oswald Pohl trial. Can you tell us from your examination of the documents what position Oswald Pohl held?

A. He was a high-ranking S.S. Officer in charge of the so-called economic administrative main office of the S.S. and police mechanism. In his jurisdiction, among other things, was the management of concentration camps — not all camps, but those labelled as concentration camps. He also managed so-called S.S. enterprises, utilizing prisoners for labour. He also dealt with purely financial matters pertaining to the organization known as the S.S. and security police. That, was his job.

Q. Midway, or halfway through that first {718|719} paragraph, "The Oswald Pohl Trial", it says:

"A peak point of hypocrisy was reached at the trial when the prosecution said to Pohl that 'had Germany rested content with the exclusion of Jews from her own territory, with denying them German citizenship, with excluding them from public office, or any like domestic regulation, no other nation could have been heard to complain.' The truth is that Germany was bombarded with insults and economic sanctions for doing precisely these things, and her internal measures against the Jews were certainly a major cause of the declaration of war against Germany by the democracies."

I don't want to take you outside your field of expertise, and if I am say so, please. Are you, able to comment on that last phrase, "internal measures against the Jews were certainly a major cause of the declaration of war against Germany by the democracies"?

A. I think it is common knowledge that {719|720} Germany attacked Poland on September 1st, 1939, and that two days later Great Britain and France declared war on Germany.

Q. Thank you. Next sentence:

"Oswald Pohl was an extremely sensitive and intellectual individual who was reduced to a broken man in the course of his trial."

Can you tell us any more about what Pohl's responsibilities or duties would be, according to the documents you've seen, in the administration of the concentration camps?

A. The correspondence that I have seen conducted by Pohl, and I now speak of documents with his signature, his handwritten signature, deals with such matters as the construction budgets for concentration camps — where to finance the money, be it for barracks or other installations, where to finance the ammunition for the guards. He dealt with the death rates in the concentration camps. He dealt with Auschwitz to a very considerable extent, because that was one camp under his jurisdiction — not all of them were, but Auschwitz was. So his duties, if we may call them that, encompassed the management of the concentration camp {720|721} system, roughly twenty full-fledged concentration camps and the numerous satellite camps around them which contained hundreds of thousands of people at anyone time, in which death at Auschwitz and in other localities reached seven digits. And that was the man, Pohl. Now, by background he was an accountant. He might have been mild-mannered, although his correspondence is not mild-mannered.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is this witness now going to give us his opinion on the quality of correspondence, judging its intellectual and emotional content, as well? I am —

THE COURT: I don't know that he's gone that far. He might, perhaps, not be asked to go any further than he has.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. The next sentence, continuing on where I left off, says:

"As Senator McCarthy pointed out, Pohl had signed some incriminating statements after being subjected to severe torture, including a bogus admission that he had seen a gas chamber at Auschwitz in the summer of 1944." {721|722}

Can you comment at all, from your examination of the documents, as to whether there is anything indicating that Oswald Pohl was tortured?

A. No. I must make a comment here about Pohl that I made earlier about Ohlendorf or anybody else. I haven't seen any allegations of torture by the defence. The defence had every opportunity to raise such a statement, make such questions. I haven't seen any in the record. I have been through all the record. I am not even sure just what Senator McCarthy, even considering what he was and who he was, made a footnote in any of this material.

THE COURT: I think, Mr. Griffiths — I have just been informed that the coffee for the jury is now here and we don't want that to get cold, if possible. We will adjourn for twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:25 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:50 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. {722|723}

Q. Just before we leave Chapter 5 and the discussion at Nuremberg, I'd like to refer back again to page 11. One phrase there I want to draw your attention to, and it's under the heading, "Legal principles Ignored": "Should anyone be misled into believing that the extermination of the Jews was 'proved' at Nuremberg by 'evidence', he should consider the nature of the Trials themselves, based as they were on a total disregard of sound legal principles of any kind. The accusers acted as prosecutors, judges and executioners; 'guilt' was assumed from the outset."

I will not ask you, doctor, about legal principles, but the phrase that interests me is, "guilt was assumed from the outset". Were all the people that were tried in the various Nuremberg Trials convicted?

A. Oh, no. Not all. Some were exonerated. Some were convicted on some count, but not other counts.

Q. And was there a uniform penalty for all those who were convicted?

A. No, there was no uniformity. There {723|724} were short prison sentences, some long ones, some life, a few death sentences. I could spot no uniformity. There was, perhaps, a tendency to impose more severe penalties on the members of the S.S. engaged in shootings, and lesser penalties on diplomats or white-collar people generally. That was the only distinction I could find in the sentencing procedure.

Q. All right, sir. If we can turn to the next chapter, then, which begins on page 16, Chapter 6, "Auschwitz and Polish Jewry". It is a chapter that deals more specifically with Auschwitz. Under the subheading, "More And More Millions", the second paragraph which is written in dark ink:

"However, no living, authentic eyewitness of these 'gassings' has ever been produced and validated."

In the various transcripts, sir, of trials that you have read, has anybody ever come forward to indicate that they were an eye witness of these gassings?

A. Well, there is certainly such witnesses, and some who retrieved the bodies – they would be Jewish workers, inmates – from the gas chambers. Here and there an S.S. person who said that he would look through the {724|725} peephole in the door and witnessed gassings in that fashion. In Russia, where there were gas vans, occupied Russia, where gas vans were used, there were many witnesses because it was an outdoor undertaking, as the bodies, particularly, were being unloaded. So I would say that there were a fair number of witnesses. Not a huge number, a fair number.

Q. And have those witnesses testified in the past about the trial of the proceedings?

A. Yes. Most recently I suppose, in the West German trials conducted in the course of 1960 against death camps located in Poland, not Auschwitz, but other camps.

Q. And you read the transcripts and the statements that were taken?

A. Yes, I have. Yes.

Q. Have you ever heard of a man by the name of Phillip [Filip] Mueller?

A. Yes. Phillip Mueller wrote a book under the title, "Eye Witness Auschwitz", in America. He was a person deported from Slovakia in 1942 and remained in Auschwitz through 1944. He was detailed to — MR. CHRISTIE: Are we going to hear from this witness what Phillip Mueller wrote in a book as {725|726} some sort of evidence?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is a fair objection, Your Honour, and I will phrase it in another fashion, if I may.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Mueller has ever testified in a courtroom in proceedings that you have read of?

A. I have not looked at any of his testimony. I have, however, read his book. So my comment is about the book.

Q. All right. I won't ask any more about Mr. Mueller. On page 17 of the booklet, the bottom half of the page contains a map. The source of the map isn't indicated, but it says in the heading underneath, "By a curious coincidence, alleged 'death camps' were all in territory now controlled by the Communists."

First of all, do you have any comment on the distinction made in that map between concentration camp and extermination camp?

A. I would characterize a death camp as one which was set up for the specific purpose of killing people, one in which there was an ongoing operation designed to kill as many people as possible upon arrival. Under my {726|727} definition, such camps were in Auschwitz. Not the whole of the Auschwitz camp, but in Auschwitz. Chelmo is indicated here. Treblinka is indicated here. Sobibor is indicated here. Belzec is indicated here. And to a limited extent, Maidanek, which the Germans simply referred to as Lublin. I would not include Stutthof, although it is on this map, also as a death camp. There were shootings going on, but one must remember that the definition of "death camp" versus "concentration camp" is sometimes semantic. In Stutthof, too, there were systematic shootings. I would look for systematic killings in the numbers of tens of thousands, or hundreds of thousands or more before I would personally characterize the facility as a death camp.

Q. Then follows the long paragraph entitled, "Auschwitz: An Eye-Witness Account", and we will deal with that on another day with another witness. On page 18 it says, under the heading, "The Warsaw Ghetto":

"In terms of numbers, Polish Jewry is supposed to have suffered most of all from extermination, not only at Auschwitz, but at an endless list of newly-discovered 'death camps' such as Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Maidanek, {727|728} Chelmo and at many more obscure places which seem suddenly to have gained prominence. At the centre of the alleged extermination of the Polish Jews is the dramatic uprising in April 1943 of the Warsaw Ghetto. This is often represented as a revolt against being deported to gas ovens; presumably the alleged subject of Hitler and Himmler's 'secret discussions' had leaked out and gained wide publicity in Warsaw. The case of the Warsaw Ghetto is an instructive insight into the creation of the extermination legend itself. Indeed, its evacuation by the Germans in 1943 is often referred to as the 'extermination of the Polish Jews' although it was nothing of the kind, and layers of mythology have tended to surround it after the publication of sensational novels like John Hersey's 'The Wall' and Leon Uris' 'Exodus'." {728|729}

First of all, can you comment on the phraseology here, "an endless list of newly-discovered 'death camps' such as Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Maidanek, Chelmo ..."?

A. Well, I would simply state that it is not an endless list, and it is not a case of newly-discovered death camps. Some of these camps were mentioned in the war. They were discovered to have existed by Polish underground personnel. One can find them mentioned in the New York Times during the war. So they are not as mysterious as is indicated here. That is not to say that much knowledge existed about these camps, because of the jurisdictional nature – that is to say, the reporting system from them. Not as many records have survived and, indeed, there have not been many people who survived these camps and, hence, also the testimony is less, and was not systematically gathered before the 1960s when the West German authorities conducted trials. Now, to the extent that the discoveries are "new", yes, they were made in pursuance of several trials conducted by the West Germans against personnel of Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Chelmo and, most recently, Maidanek.

Q. Are any of those trials referred to in this pamphlet that you have seen? {729|730}

A. No, they are not. None of them.

Q. All right. The paragraph starting at the bottom of the page: "It has been established already that the 1931 Jewish population census for Poland placed the number of Jews at 2,732,600, and that after emigration and flight to the Soviet Union, no more than 100,000 were under German control. These incontrovertible facts, however, do not prevent Manvell and Frankl asserting that 'there had been over three million Jews in Poland when Germany began the invasion' and that in 1942 'some two million still awaited death' (ibid, p.140). In reality, of the million of [or] so Jews in Poland, almost half, about 400,000 were eventually concentrated in the ghetto of Warsaw, an area of about two and a half square miles around the old mediaeval ghetto. The remainder had already been moved to the Polish Government-General by September {730|731} 1940. In the summer of 1942, Himmler ordered the resettlement of all Polish Jews in detention camps in order to obtain their labour, part of the system of general concentration for labour assignment in the Government-General. Thus between July and October 1942, over three quarters of the Warsaw Ghetto's inhabitants were peacefully evacuated and transported, supervised by the Jewish police themselves. As we have seen, transportation to camps is alleged to have ended in 'extermination', but there is absolutely no doubt from the evidence available that it involved only the effective procurement of labour and the prevention of unrest. In the first place, Himmler discovered on a surprise visit to Warsaw in January 1943 that 24,000 Jews

registered as armaments workers were in fact working illegally as tailors and furriers (Manvell & Frankl, ibid, p.140); the {731|732} Ghetto was also being used as a base for subversive forays into the main area of Warsaw."

Now, let's go back over that and look at some of the different parts of that if I may.

A. Now, of course, this paragraph perhaps stands out for containing more errors, misstatements and some outright preposterous nonsensical matter. You know, it's hard to comment, but I'll try. The census of 1931 is incorrectly reproduced here. It was not 2,732,600. It was over three million. The error here is in attributing 2,732,600 to 1931 instead of to an earlier census in the 1920s. So we start out with an error that may have been an honest error, but it is incorrect. There is a statement that, "after the emigration and flight to the Soviet Union, no more than 1,100,000 were under German control." I have no idea where that number, 1,100,000, came from in this passage. All I could tell you is that there is a report that indicates, to a considerable degree of accuracy, how many Jews were located under German control at various times. We know that this number was approximately two million after Poland was divided that is to say, in the western portion of Poland in 1939, and we know that, except for a {732|733} quarter of a million that succeeded either in escaping to the Soviet Union or in being in the Red Army or in having been deported by Soviet authorities, except for that, roughly a quarter of a million, almost the entire Jewish population of Poland aggregating over three million, was caught between 1939 and 1941 under German control. So in short, not 1,100,000, but somewhat over three million.

Q. All right. If I can stop you for just a moment, and we can go over this carefully. I want to understand, if I may, what the sources are for the conclusions that you've reached.

A. Yes.

Q. It would appear that the pamphlet attributes emigration and flight to the Soviet Union of approximately 600,000 people.

A. Yes.

Q. And you said that that's about two hundred and fifty thousand people. That's a big difference in number.

A. Yes.

Q. How do you arrive at your numbers?

A. There is a report, and this is just one of several, by a statistician employed by the S.S. whose {733|734} name was Korherr. This report was made with all the statistics gathered to the end of 1942, and a supplement for three more months to the period March 31st, 1943. In this report are detailed the figures of Jews under German control by region. And we know, therefore, how many of these people were under German control at given periods of time. But in addition there are detailed figures where specific districts, and where specific cities, some of them actually published in print by German authorities, others contained in German documents, that enable us to pretty accurately determine how many Jews were, indeed, under German control. And these are the figures that I just gave you.

Now, how do we know how many people did escape to the Soviet Union? We do not know this directly. We have no figures from the U.S.S.R. We have only the data gathered after the war of those of the Jews who were able to escape who made it back. Since all these Jews were Polish citizens, they were given the opportunity to go back. They did not, of course, stay in Poland, but became displaced persons, and they were roughly 180,000 of them. I said perhaps a quarter of a million succeeded in escaping. I am attributing deaths to some of them. After all, they were {734|735} fighting in the Red Army to some extent, or they perished while escaping, but the figures are within limits roughly a quarter of a million escapees. We know that, after the war, the number of Jews under German control in Poland, those that have been in Poland, was extremely few.

THE COURT: Extremely ...

THE WITNESS: Extremely few. The Korherr report, fewer than 300,000 Jews remaining in the so-called Government-General, plus eighty thousand that remained in the Ghetto of Lodz, plus a certain number, not very many, sometimes thousands, in Bialstok, plus a handful in the Eastern Districts of Molhania. By March 1943 a census was made by the Germans, and only two hundred two thousand Jews were left in the General Government, indicating a further decline. Subsequent detailed reports indicate that this decline continued. Why three hundred thousand, then two hundred thousand, then fewer? Because the Germans were trying to retain Jewish labour, skilled labour, for as long as possible, with the proviso that also Jewish skilled labour had to disappear one day. Thus, as soon as there were Polish or Ukrainian or other replacements for this labour, Jewish labour was killed and replaced by non-Jewish labour. Thus we see a controlled process of reduction by {735|736} shooting and by gassing in Poland with the result that of the pre-war population of roughly 3,350,000 as of September 1939, the death toll attributable to the Holocaust is close to three million, Poland alone, pre-war boundaries.

Q. I will go a little further along that paragraph. Can you tell us what the Polish Government-General – I won't try to say it in French ...

A. Well, the Germans used the French phrase, but the Government-General consisted of five districts – the district of Warsaw, the district of Radom, the district of Lublin, the district of Krakow, and the district of Galicia. It didn't include territories of Poland included into the German Reich, and it didn't include certain other eastern territories inhabited by population attached to the Ukraine or, in the case of Russian population attached to the so-called Ostland. But the so-called Government-General did contain roughly two-thirds of the Polish Jews. Indeed, it contained perhaps two-thirds, or close to two-thirds of the population of pre-war Poland. In the case of the Warsaw Ghetto, one would never know this, reading this passage, which is altogether confused, but —

Q. We will come to that. All right. And in the paragraph there is a reference to Jewish labour {736|737} being used:

"As we have seen, transportation to camps is alleged to have ended in 'extermination', but there is absolutely no doubt from the evidence available that it involved only the effective procurement of labour and the prevention of unrest."

Can you tell us if those death camps of Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Chelmno, whether there was any documentation indicating factories, or someplace where Jewish labour could be used in those concentration camps?

A. Belzec was a pure killing facility without any production of any kind whatsoever. Treblinka was a pure killing facility. There was a neighbouring camp by the same name which was much smaller which did have a very small S.S. operated granite works. Sobibor was a pure death camp which did establish, late in 1943, a facility for making ammunition, or-rehabilitating ammunition, very small. Chelmno had absolutely no facilities for production of any kind. These were extremely small camps in diameter. They were used exclusively for killing.

Q. Carrying on, then, with the heavily-{737|738}outlined section of that Warsaw Ghetto, page 19, column one, last paragraph:

"After six months of peaceful evacuation, when only about 60,000 Jews remained in the residential ghetto, the Germans met with an armed rebellion on 18th January, 1943."

Are there any documents that you have seen, and if so, what, that would indicate where Jews were taken during that peaceful evacuation that is referred to?

A. Yes. There is a report by the highest S.S. and police officer in the area whose name was Stroop. He was in charge in 1943. He made a long report indicating clearly, in writing, where the Jews went in 1942. He said three hundred and ten thousand were transported to Treblinka, which is a death camp. Now, of the population in this ghetto in 1942, sixty or seventy thousand were left over after that deportation, half of them registered, the other half more or less in hiding. The registered inmates were used in production. So in January yet another six or seven thousand were deported, and following that deportation yet another action began to liquidate the ghetto in its entirety, but that was the liquidation of a remnant. {738|739}

Q. All right. We can go on with that paragraph:

"Manvell and Frankl admit that 'The Jews involved in planned re- sistance had for a long time been engaged in smuggling arms from the outside world, and combat groups fired on and killed S.S. men and militia in charge of a column of deportees.' The terrorists in the Ghetto uprising were also assisted by the Polish Home Army and the PPR – Polska Partia Robotnicza, the Communist Polish Workers Party. It was under these circumstances of a revolt aided by partisans and communists that the occupying forces, as any army would in a similar situation, moved in to suppress the terrorists, if necessary by destroying the residential area itself. It should be remembered that the whole process of evacuation would have continued peacefully had not extremists among the inhabitants planned an armed rebellion {739|740} which in the end was bound to fail. When S.S. Lieutenant-General Stroop ... – the same one you've talked to us about ...

THE COURT: Just a moment. Was that the answer, sir?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: " ... entered the Ghetto with armoured cars on 19th April, he immediately came under fire and lost twelve men; German and Polish casualties in the battle, which lasted four weeks, totalled 101 men killed and wounded. Stubborn resistance by the Jewish Combat Organization in the face of impossible odds led to an estimated 12,000 Jewish casualties, the majority by remaining in burning buildings and dug-outs. A total, however, of 56,065 inhabitants were captured and peacefully resettled in the area of the Government-General. Many Jews within the Ghetto had resented the terror imposed on them by the Combat Organization, {740|741} and had attempted to inform on their headquarters to the German authorities."

Now, you have seen, you say, the report referred to here of S.S. Lieutenant-General Stroop.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect him giving a figure of 56,065 in that report?

A. Yes, he does. That's his figure of Jewish dead.

Q. So when they talk about peacefully re-settling that number from the Government-General, what are they talking about?

A. Well, of course, this whole passage is a complete falsehood in that it converts figures of dead into figures of presumably living people. And the only correct statement in the entire passage is that the assault began on the 19th of April, and Stroop did report one hundred and one casualties, sixteen killed and eighty-five wounded. Everything else here is pretty wrong.

Q. Have you ever had an opportunity to try – you said at the beginning that you were empiricist [empiricist] and checked documents against documents. Have you ever had an opportunity to try to check any other documents about {741|742} where people from the Warsaw Ghetto were taken?

A. Oh, yes. Oh, yes. In Germany, as I mentioned, in West of Germany there was a trial of Treblinka personnel – that is to say, people who served in the German guard forces and its commanders – and there is, of course, a good deal of testimony in the trial record as to the arrival of the Jews of the Warsaw Ghetto in Treblinka. The fact is that the first killings in Treblinka took place as the first transports —

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me. It is not clear from the witness' evidence, but he appears to be giving evidence from another trial that he is telling us about, and I don't know that Your Honour has given him authority to tell us what another trial decided.

THE COURT: That is an interesting point. Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, the question isn't what the other trial decided. There has been no reference, Your Honour, to the verdict of the other trial, but that —

MR. CHRISTIE: Evidence from another trial is what I was referring to.

THE COURT: Yes. You might qualify that {743|743} before you draw the answer.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Have you ever had occasion, Dr. Hilberg, to look at railroad schedules in wartime Germany?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us whether that's been a particular interest of yours?

A. Yes, it has been.

Q. And can you tell us what role, if any, those railroad schedules have played in your study of this matter?

A. It was a very important role, because although there aren't very many of these railroad schedules, they indicate a great deal about the strategy of the German deporting agencies – for example, why the camps were located, where they were located in Poland. The answer is that the Germans – that is, the Gestapo, as the shipping agents, the security police which is the larger element of Gestapo and police, had to pay the German railways for each transport of Jews, the one-way fare per person, third class, per track kilometer. The longer the trip, the heavier the bill. It was thus in the financial interests of the deporting {743|744} agencies to make those trips as short as possible and to locate the death camps where Jewish population was most heavily, most densely found. The trip, for example, in kilometers from Warsaw to Treblinka is relatively short. That is to say, the bill could be met. It was met, as reported by an S.S. Officer, by selling old clothes, belongings, the currency of those of the gassed, and thus the bill was paid with the belongings of the dead Jews. This is clearly stated in a final report. We thus know, from these railway —

Q. I'm sorry, what final report?

A. This was a final report by a man in charge of collecting and distributing the final belongings of the dead, the personal belongings that were collected in the death camps. Everything was salvaged. Everything was routed to some final purpose and final route, and insofar as any money was to be gotten from it, the expenses of the death operations, including transport costs and the cost of the camps, were defrayed. The rest of the money became part of the Reich budget. It was an income to the Reich. That is the way it was done. Now, these railway schedules make clear that the transportees, the deportees, had to be counted for the simple reason that payment had to be made for {744|745} each one. The counting was necessary for financial purposes. This tells me a great deal about everything that transpired here. We see lots of trains going to a few small places like Treblinka and Sobibor which, on the map, are villages, which on the map are found to be places with a few hundred inhabitants nearby, and all of a sudden you find hundreds of thousands of people going to these places on one-way trips, and the trains returning empty.

Q. And that is what the documents indicate?

A. That is what the documents indicate.

Q. I am going to go all the way over to page 28, other evidence on other matters here. Chapter 10, "The Truth At Last: The Work of Paul Rassinier":

"Without doubt the most important contribution to a truthful study of the extermination question has been the work of the French historian, Professor Paul Rassinier. The pre-eminent value of this work lies firstly in the fact that Rassinier actually experienced life in the German concentration camps, and also that, as a Socialist intellectual {745|746} and anti-Nazi, nobody could be less inclined to defend Hitler and National Socialism. Yet, for the sake of justice and historical truth, Rassinier spent the remainder of his post-war years until his death in 1966 pursuing research which utterly refuted the Myth of the Six Million and the legend of Nazi diabolism."

Have you seen that?

A. Yes, I have the German translation of this book.

Q. You have the German translation of —

A. Of the original French version of Mr. Rassinier's work. It is not quite identical with the French version. There are British, German and French editions of this work.

Q. All right. Have you ever met Mr. Rassinier or corresponded with him?

A. No.

Q. And have you any comments on the methodology used by Mr. Rassinier in his book?

A. I would characterize it in one word, {746|747} as fabrication.

Q. All right. And why is that?

A. Simply because Mr. Rassinier will say thus and thus must have happened, and attach figures to his opinion which come out of thin air. Thus and thus, notwithstanding any evidence, did not happen, and thereby attach figures to justify what he says.

Q. Page 29, second column in the heavy type, above the section, "Emigration: The Final Solution" – the paragraph headed, "With the help of one hundred pages". Have you got that? It says:

"With the help of one hundred pages of cross-checked statistics, Professor Rassinier concludes in 'Le Drame des Juifs europeen' that the number of Jewish casualties during the Second World War could not have exceeded 1,200,000, and he notes that this has finally been accepted as valid by the World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation at Paris. However, he regards such a figure as a maximum limit, and refers to the lower estimate of {747|748} 896,892 casualties in a study of the same problem by the Jewish statistician Raul Hilberg. Rassinier points out that the State of Israel nevertheless continues to claim compensation for six million dead, each one representing an indemnity of 5,000 marks."

Your name is Raul Hilberg.

A. That's correct. That's the only correct statement in the paragraph.

Q. Are you a statistician?

A. Actually not.

Q. Do you give an estimate of 896, 892 in your book?

A. I have never given —

Q. In any of your work?

A. Not in my book, not in any of my published work, not in any of my unpublished statements that I ever made, not of any kind.

Q. Do you know how that figure arrives? You read the book. Where does it come from?

A. It comes from a calculation, if we may call it a calculation, made by him in which he took two {748|749} columns. Before and after columns, Jewish population in 1939, Jewish population in 1945, adjusted for anything such as migrations or war casualties. He did not subtract the last column from the first. He subtracted one column from the other, which gave him a number such as 5,400,000.

MR. CHRISTIE: Who is the "he"?

THE WITNESS: He is Rassinier.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: And then he decided that he would have to proceed in this number in order to render it into something proper, so he deducted from it various figments of his imagination, numbers that he concocted, and came up with a bottom line, his, not my bottom line, of 896,892. Here the figure is attributed to me.

Q. Can I ask you what figure you have arrived at? What figure have you arrived at?

A. My calculations of the Jewish death toll in the Holocaust are over five million.

Q. Can you break that down at all, or is it possible of breaking down?

A. I have broken it down, particularly in the second edition. I can break it down by cause. I can break it down by locality, and now I could even break it {749|750} down by time, by year.

Q. Can you tell us by cause how you have broken it down?

A. I would say that of this five million one hundred thousand rounded figure in which the term "Jew" is taken as the one adopted by the Germans, roughly up to three million were deaths in camps. The vast majority of them, of course, were gassed, but several hundred thousands in these camps were shot or dying of privation, starvation, disease [disease] and so forth; that a million three hundred, or a million four hundred thousand were shot in systematic operations, and that the remainder —

Q. Sorry. The 1.4 million shot —

A. Shot in systematic operations such as those of the Einsatzgruppen, but not limited to Einsatzgruppen operations, shot in primarily the occupied U.S.S.R., Galicia, but also Serbia and other localities, and that the remainder, deaths from conditions in the ghettos, which can also be calculated because the Korherr reports has numbers about such deaths, and because individual ghettos, Jewish councils in these ghettos sent reports to German agencies. We have these reports indicating the monthly death tolls in such places as Warsaw, which was the {750|751} largest ghetto, and Loge (ph), which was the second largest ghetto. We also have data about Lebov (ph), which was the third largest ghetto. Thus we do have a pretty good idea of the death rate in the ghettos which, at the peak, in 1941, was one per cent of the population per month.

THE COURT: I see that it is four thirty. Do you think this is a good time, or will you be much longer?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't think I will be much longer, but it may be a good time, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Then it will be a good time.

Members of the jury, let me please caution you again, at the risk of being repetitive, that what you read in the newspaper, if you do read it, and I hope you do not, what you read, what you see on television does not constitute anything to do with this trial whatsoever. It is solely and only what you hear from that witness stand.

In another trial of recent memory of mine I acquired the habit of remind the jury not to become intoxicated on printer's ink. I will certainly give you that same admonition. Please treat it with great care. {751|752} Please do something else other than read about this or see it. There are much more interesting things for you to do than that.

Have a good evening. Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

— The jury retires. 4:35 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 16, 1985.

JANUARY 16, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Yes. Is there anything before we start, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to put on record, in the absence of the jury, the fact that there have been threats made on my life which I reported to the police.

I am well aware Your Honour has no particular concern in the matter, but I want to put it on record. {752|753}

THE COURT: I have a very deep concern in the matter from a personal point of view. That should not happen to anyone.

MR. CHRISTIE: But I wanted to be clear on the record.

THE COURT: The jury, please. Is Dr. Hilberg available?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— {753|754}

RAUL HILBERG, previously sworn

CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

THE COURT: Are you all finished, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I have a few more questions to ask. I won't be long.

— The jury enters. 10:10 a.m.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I think we are up to page 30, Dr. Hilberg. I will get you a copy so that you know what we are referring to.

A. Okay.

Q. Under the heading, "Conclusion", on page 30, column one, it says:

"Contrary to the figure of over 9 million Jews in German-occupied territory put forward at the Nuremberg and Eichmann trials, it has already been established that after extensive emigration approximately 3 million were living in Europe, excluding the Soviet Union. Even when the Jews of German-occupied Russia are included (the majority of Russian Jews {754|755} were evacuated beyond German control), the overall number probably does not exceed four million. Himmler's statistician, Dr. Richard Korherr and the World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation put the number respectively at 5,550,000 and 5,294,000 when German-occupied territory was at its [at its] widest, both these figures include the two million Jews of the Baltic and western Russia without paying any attention to the large number of these who were evacuated."

I will just stop there for a moment. Dr. Richard Kohrerr [rect: Korherr] – I don't know if I am pronouncing that right – you mentioned the man yesterday by the name of Kohrerr, a statistician.

A. Same person. Chief statistician of the S.S. and police.

Q. So these are not the only statistics that he kept that are referred to here.

A. Oh, no. The report of Kohrerr runs for something like ten, twelve pages, plus appendixes. It's {755|756} a report packed with figures.

Q. You told us about many of those yesterday.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know whether he, in the World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation, used the figures that are set out here, or do you have any knowledge of that?

A. Well, the figures as quoted here bear no resemblance to what is in the Kohrerr report. Obviously they are totally out of context and inaccurate.

Q. Top of the next column:

"It is very significant, therefore, that the World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation in Paris now states that only 1,485,292 Jews died from all causes during the Second World War, and although this figure is certainly too high, at least it bears no resemblance at all to the legendary Six Million."

Are you familiar with an organization of World Centre of Contemporary Jewish Documentation in Paris?

A. I am not familiar, but any organization [repeated line]{756|757}

A. I am not familiar with any organization by that name, and I doubt that it exists, but possibly reference is made to a Centre in Paris which has a similar name, but that centre has not published, to my knowledge, any figure resembling 1,485,292 as the total number of Jews that died from all causes during the Second World War.

Q. What is the centre in Paris?

A. It is Centre de documentation Juivre Contemporaine. It is the Centre for Documentation of Contemporary Jewry, contemporary documentation. It is located in Paris. It's not a world centre in any sense of the word. It's a small research organization, and from my knowledge of its publications, it's never published any figure in the vicinity of 1,485,000 as the Jewish toll.

Q. Next paragraph, in heavier ink:

*"Doubtless, several thousand Jewish persons did die in the course of the Second World War, but this must be seen in the context of a war that cost many millions of innocent victims on all sides. To put the matter in perspective, for example, we may point out that 700,000 Russian civilians died during the siege {757|758} of Leningrad, and a total of 2,050,000 German civilians [*repeated line] died during the siege of Leningrad, and a total of 2,050,000 German civilians [*] were killed in Allied air raids and forced repatriation after the war. In 1955, another neutral Swiss source, "Die Tat" of Zurich (January 19th, 1955), in a survey of all Second World War casualties based on figures of the International Red Cross, put the 'Loss of victims of persecution because of politics, race or religion who died in prisons and concentration camps between 1939 and 1945' at 300,000, not all of whom were Jews, and this figure seems the most accurate assessment."*

Can you tell us whether, in your researches, looked into statistics gathered by the Red Cross?

A. I am not familiar with any such statistics by the International Red Cross or, for that matter, any other organization, and I could not give you the source of it. I don't know whether it's an invented datum here {758|759} or taken from some publication which I have never heard of.

Q. Okay. May I ask you, aside from yours, whether there are any other researchers and writers working in this area?

A. Yes.

Q. And how extensive would be the academic body examining the Holocaust?

A. There are, no doubt, several documents recognized, highly trained researchers still alive or, in fact, young, working in this area within the United States, here in Canada, in Western Germany, in Israel, in other countries. It's not a very large group, but there are several dozen.

Q. Can you give us some name of some of those people?

A. I can give you some names without trying to say that these are the top researchers. I will give you some names. In Western Germany there is probably, by now, the largest single group researching the Holocaust. A young person, Ada Uwe, an older person, Halmut Krausnick [Helmut Krausnick], who, incidentally, [incidentally] was in the German Foreign Office during World War II, but a very capable and objective historian of the Holocaust. He wrote, as co-author, a book numbering many {759|760} hundreds of pages about the Einsatzgruppen and the Holocaust in print. In France the leading researcher is Leon Poliakov. In the United States, on the west coast, Christopher Browning. In Canada, at the University of Toronto, Professor Marrus, in the Department of History. On the west coast in British Columbia, Professor Conway, in the Department of History. In Israel, naturally, there are several historians – a Professor Bauer, Professor Gutman. I am not giving you all of the names. I am trying to pick names from several countries.

Q. Are all these various men published that you told us of?

A. Yes. They are all published, and this publication goes on, and one can pick up the newspapers and see reviews of books coming out concurrently. The most recent review is of that of an English researcher, Gerald Fleming.

Q. In your review of these authorities, which I take it you are familiar with ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... leaving aside the details, are there any of those authorities that you've mentioned that deny that millions and millions – five to six million – Jews were annihilated as a result of Nazi Germany policy during {760|761} World War II?

A. No. There is no such denial.

MR. CHRISTIE: Are we here to hear his opinion of what other authors say, Your Honour? That is another kind of hearsay.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is qualified as an expert. He can refer to literature, Your Honour, in my opinion, is what an expert is allowed to do.

THE COURT: Yes, I will allow it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

Q. Moving from this field of experts, have you ever had occasion to look at encyclopaedias on the issue of the Holocaust?

A. Well, I have, myself, written for encyclopaedias, and I have had a look at encyclopaedias, yes.

Q. And do any of these sources available to all of us indicate that anything other than what you told us here?

THE COURT: I think if you want to ask the question, Mr. Griffiths, you might want to ask the witness to be more specific about what specific encyclopaedias he is talking about.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You wrote an article? {761|762}

A. Yes. I made entries in the Encyclopaedia Americana, and in the Funk and Wagnalls Encyclopaedia.

Q. Those two encyclopaedias you have written in?

A. Yes.

Q. And I understand that they would not be as lengthy as your larger work. Is the thesis the same, or is it different?

A. It is by and large the same.

Q. Were there many people working in this field in 1948 when you began your researches?

A. No. In fact, I believe myself to be alone. As it happened, Professor Poliakov was working in Paris, and Mr. Reitlinger was working in England, but I wasn't aware of the fact, and I did not know them.

Q. So as one of the original members researching and documenting the Jews' annihilation, are you a member of any conspiracy or hoax or fraud to falsify the scope and tragic proportions of the annihilation as described –

THE COURT: Just a moment.

MR. CHRISTIE: That is the question that {762|763} is one of the issues in the case, and he is not entitled to usurp the jury's function. I suggest it is a matter of some dispute here, and if he is entitled to say what his view of the case is, he really does go beyond the area of expertise. Eminent qualifications as a historian in the Holocaust do not qualify him to decide the legal question at issue.

THE COURT: What do you say to that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I disagree entirely, Your Honour. One of the things contained in this article, Exhibit 1 is that there was a conspiracy. There was a hoax to fool the world into thinking that six million people were dead. If there were, this man may well be a part of that conspiracy. [conspiracy] He is entitled to be asked that question, as direct evidence, and give his answer to the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it's a form of cross-examination on the point, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You can ask the question.

This is a question put to a witness – I presume both counsel will agree – not necessarily in his capacity as an expert. He is not being asked for his opinion. He is being asked whether or not he is a member of a certain conspiracy or agreement. You can ask the question. {763|764}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Do you have the question, or would you like me to repeat it?

A. No. I understand the question. I am not a member of a conspiracy or agreement, nor any of the combination of persons dedicated to finding conclusions in advance of research, and certainly no hoaxes.

Q. Thank you, Dr. Hilberg. I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Doctor, you have criti[c]ized the booklet for not having footnotes. Correct?

A. Well, of course, I do not mean to say that every single publication must have footnotes, but when there is an allegation of purported facts such as appear in this pamphlet, which are so much at variance with the accepted knowledge, one is entitled to ask for a source in the form of a footnote. so that one may, as a reader, check the information.

Q. I simply put it to you that you have {764|765} criti[c]ized the booklet for not having footnotes, sir. Correct or incorrect?

A. Subject to my answer just before, you are correct in assessing my answer.

Q. Yes. And isn't it true that in your entire evidence, today and yesterday, in your broad, sweeping statements of fact, you have not, yourself, produced one single document to support anything you have said? Isn't that true?

A. I have made verbal, oral references to documents. The matter of introducing documents in the form of pieces of papers I need hardly tell you, as an attorney, is a matter for the government to decide. I am not the person introducing documents at any time in any court whatsoever. I am simply a witness trying to explain what I know.

Q. Well, I think, then, you would agree, the simple answer is no, and the reason you say that is because the Crown or the State hasn't introduced them through you. Is that your evidence?

A. Well, as you just restated the matter, I could accept it broadly, but I wish to remain with my words.

Q. Yeah. Well, I want to understand your {765|766} words. Very simply and, I put it to you very clearly, that you have yourself, whether it's through the Crown's decision or yours, I don't know or care, that you have not yourself, today or yesterday, produced one single document to support what you have said. Isn't that true?

A. I have not presented pieces of paper, nor do I deem it my function to do so, but I have orally referred to pieces of paper.

Q. Yes. You have mentioned the existence of hundreds of orders and hundreds of train railway schedules and special trains. You have mentioned all that, but you have not produced one single example, sir. Have you?

A. I have given you oral examples, with leaving out only the document numbers. And if you wish, you can check them in a book I have written. Quite a few are in there.

Q. Well, get your book.

A. They are not secrets.

Q. No. I just wanted to clarify, though, that you haven't produced a single document.

A. Well, if you wish to state the obvious fact, I will confirm it.

Q. Thank you. You say that you have done {766|767} research, and I think at the beginning you described your methodology to be that of trying to be an empiricist. [empiricist] Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. And you said that you tried to find out how, but not why, the six million were killed.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. That was your methodology and you described it as such.

A. Yes.

Q. You did not say, and I put to you that at no time did you ever enquire, if six million died. True or false?

A. If one asks oneself the question —

Q. I didn't ask myself the question —

A. I am referring to myself.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is answering the question, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: I am trying to answer it the best way I can.

THE COURT: You can let him answer the question.

MR. CHRISTIE: I hope not with a question. That is what I objected to. {767|768}

THE COURT: I didn't think it was that., but I didn't hear enough of the answer to decide what it was. Perhaps you can give the answer, witness, and we can decide if you are answering the question with a question. Do you want the question again?

THE WITNESS: No. I understand it. The empirical method is one in which one must make certain initial determinations of what happened. In my case, these initial determinations were based upon a cursory examination of documentation pertaining to this event. By "cursory", I don't mean one or two documents, but I mean a study, after some months, of the then available documentation. Without saying a word in the public or without printing anything, without writing anything, I then said to myself, "Let us take this initial source pile and ask, what exactly happened here." Now, the what and the how are the same, and it is in this method, and by these means, that I proceeded to construct the picture, step by step, detail by detail. That is not to say that my initial thoughts or findings were in all respects one hundred per cent correct, but the fact of the Holocaust was certainly confirmed over and over.

Q. I want to understand – a simple answer to my question – so that I, as a simple person, can {768|769} understand it, Professor. I asked you if your method was to find out how it happened, not why it happened. Do you agree?

A. That's correct.

Q. I asked you if you ever made an effort to determine if six million really died, and your answer to that was, you made an initial determination of what happened on the basis of a cursory examination of the available data. Right?

A. That, in order to decide for myself, and myself only, whether to invest my time, and as it turns out my life, in this project.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Who would want to spend a lifetime in the study of something that did not happen?

Q. Well, sir, I am not here to answer your questions.

A. Well, it is a rhetorical —

Q. You, unfortunately or fortunately, are here to answer mine. So if you will tell me whether it is true that you made an initial determination that six million died, did you do so?

A. I made an initial determination of this fact. {769|770}

Q. Yes. That would be called a presumption, wouldn't it?

A. It would be called a presumption. That is rather rebuttable. It could be destroyed. It could be abandoned upon the finding of contrary evidence.

Q. Good. Now, you have given us your opinion on a wide range of subjects. Correct?

- A. Mm-hmmm.
- Q. It involves the subject of concentration camps, I assume. Is that right?
- A. In part.
- Q. And what's called extermination camps. Right?
- A. If you wish to label death camps that way, yes.
- Q. Well, you call them death camps.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you now tell us that you have formed opinions on all those places. Correct?
- A. I have formed opinions. Correct.
- Q. In regard to Bergen-Belsen, have you ever visited the camp? So the answer to that is no?
- A. No. {770|771}
- Q. In regard to Buchenwald, have you visited that camp?
- A. No.
- Q. In regard to Dachau, have you visited that —
- A. No, I have not visited — I can tell you, to save your questions, I have visited only two camps.
- Q. What were they?
- A. Auschwitz and Treblinka.
- Q. Now, Auschwitz is compiled of two and perhaps three camps. Is that right?
- A. Yes. There are three parts to it.
- Q. One is called Birkenau?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. One is called Monowitz?
- A. That is correct.
- Q. And one is called Auschwitz?
- A. That is correct. They also called it Auschwitz 1, 2 and 3.
- Q. Yes, I realize that. So you have to been to Auschwitz 1, 2 and 3?
- A. 1 and 2, not three. {771|772}
- Q. So you have been to Auschwitz and Birkenau?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. One time.
- A. Once. And you also went to Treblinka.
- A. That's correct.
- Q. And how many times there?
- A. Once.
- Q. And when did you go there?
- A. 1979.
- Q. After you wrote your first book.
- A. Yes.
- Q. So you wrote a book about a place before you went there.
- A. I wrote a book on the basis of the documents.
- Q. Yes. Well, I just want to put it very simply.
- A. Yes, you are putting it very simply.
- Q. You went and wrote a book about a place — {772|773}
- A. I did not write a book about the place. I wrote a book about an event in which a place is mentioned, albeit repeatedly.
- Q. I will phrase it another way. You wrote a book about what happened in a place before you went there.
- A. Oh, yes.
- Q. Yes. Because of what you heard and read and seen in other sources.
- A. You say "other sources". I say documents. I am being specific.
- Q. Call them what you will, there were other sources than being there.
- A. Oh, yes.
- Q. So we agree that you wrote the book before you ever went to the place you were writing about.
- A. That's correct.
- MR. CHRISTIE: Do you have an objection?
- MR. GRIFFITHS: That's fine.
- MR. CHRISTIE: All right. When you went to Auschwitz once in 1979, how long did you stay there?
- A. One day. {773|774}
- Q. One day. And to Birkenau?
- A. That was the same day.
- Q. Same day. And to Treblinka?
- A. That was another day.
- Q. One day?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. One day in Treblinka, and perhaps half a day in Auschwitz, half a day in Birkenau?
- A. Something like that.
- Q. Mm-hmmm. How many homicidal gas chambers did you find in Auschwitz?
- A. Now, in the locality known as Auschwitz I?
- Q. Yes. I will call it Auschwitz, because the next camp is called Birkenau, or Auschwitz 2.
- A. In Auschwitz 1.
- Q. You found one homicidal gas chamber?
- MR. GRIFFITHS: No.
- THE COURT: He didn't say that.
- Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You said Auschwitz 1, and you mean the camp?
- A. Right. As it happens, it is one gas chamber, in good condition, but partially reconstructed, in {774|775} Auschwitz 1.
- Q. So there is one homicidal — you call it homicidal for killing people. Is that correct?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. And there is one in Auschwitz that you say is partially reconstructed.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Okay. Now, did you see any others at all — than the one that is partially reconstructed?
- A. In Birkenau there are —
- Q. In Auschwitz 1.
- A. No. In Auschwitz 1 there is only one gas chamber. There was never more than one, to my knowledge, in Auschwitz 1.
- Q. So that is a decision you make when seeing it in 1979, and —
- A. No. You are trying to put words in my mouth. I have studied the documents.
- Q. That's right. Read them.
- A. Including those pertaining to construction and, thus, was aware, many years before I ever set foot in Auschwitz, that there was a gas chamber in Auschwitz in the first old part of the camp which was in use {775|776} prior to the establishment of additional gas chambers in Auschwitz 2, known as Birkenau.
- Q. We will deal with that in the next question, so you don't have to answer all the questions at once. We will go one at a time.
- A. All right.
- Q. Birkenau, how many homicidal gas chambers there? Four, right?
- A. Now, just a moment. It's not that simple. In 1942, and I now speak on the basis of documents, not observation, two gas chambers were established.
- Q. That's called —
- A. In Birkenau.
- Q. That's Crematorium 2 and 3?
- A. No, no. Not crematorium. Two so called huts, bunkers, were established in Birkenau. They were temporary structures. There were no crematoria in these buildings. The bodies were first buried, subsequently disinterred, and burned.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. Not until 1943, after extensive building lasting many months, were four massive structures created in Birkenau. Those are labelled 1, 2, 3, 4 in a new {776|777} enumeration.
- Q. Yeah. So you have now four crematorium in Birkenau. Correct?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Yes. And those crematoria are what you also referred to as the gas chambers.
- A. The structures contained gas chambers and crematoria.
- Q. So did you see them on the day you were there?
- A. What I saw were the ruins.
- Q. What you saw were the ruins. Right. Now, I am going to show you a map and ask you if that's a map of Auschwitz I, the first camp, the old camp.

A. Well, it does bear the resemblance to what I recall as Auschwitz 1. Nothing seems to be labelled here.

Q. No, nothing is labelled there.

A. That's right.

Q. Is there anything there that you can see that is in any way different from what you saw?

A. Well, you are showing me a building plan and what's around in a place when one does not walk with {777|778} a building plan, but there is no discernable difference from what I recall seeing there today and what's on this building plan, or this outline.

Q. All right. Have you ever seen a building plan of Auschwitz 1 before?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Does it look different than that?

A. No. It bears a resemblance. It may be exactly the same as what I have seen before, but I would have to have the two documents in front of me to be utterly precise. I mean, there are documents and there are documents. If you are going to show me building plans, photographs, diagrams, I do not have the same competence as I would with documents expressed in words.

Q. Well, I want to get an understanding of – will you accept that as being an accurate description and layout of the camp?

A. I will accept it within the limits that I have just stated, that is to say, I cannot be quite as confident as I would be with a document in words. It does, certainly, reveal the features that I recall having seen before.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit {778|779} for identification?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT "F" (For Identification) Plan of Auschwitz 1.

Q. Mr. Christie: You recall yesterday saying these words, in regard to the Stroop report:

"Q. Now, you have seen, you say, the report referred to here of S.S. Lieutenant-General Stroop?"

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect him giving a figure of 56,065 in that report?

A. Yes. He does. That's his figure of Jewish dead."

A. Yes.

Q. Do you wish to change that evidence in any way, or do you maintain that is his figure for Jewish dead?

A. That is a figure of Jewish dead.

Q. Okay. I put to you the Stroop report as reported in the transcript to the International Military Tribunal, Document 1061 PS, and you notice the part {779|780} highlighted. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

THE COURT: Sorry, I missed that. I am writing it down. What is it again?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is a document from the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg entitled, "The Stroop Report". It is 1061 PS.

Q. Could you just read the portion highlighted, beginning with the sentence at the top of the page?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, is this an English translation, or German?

THE WITNESS: He is showing me the German.

MR. CHRISTIE: The reporter might have some trouble with this. I suppose the solution to that problem would be to put to the witness what I suggest it says in English. I propose to do so. You are familiar with both the English and German language, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have told us that 56065 refers to Jewish dead. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that those words, {780|781} in the German language, do not say dead, killed, at all.

A. They say annihilated, vernichten.

Q. They say annihilated. They do not say vernichten?

A. They do say vernichten. It is your document.

Q. I put it to you in 1946, in the judgment – are you familiar with the judgment of the International Military Tribunal?

A. Pardon me, sir, but before we leave the passage that you just gave me and you asked me a question about and you asked me whether I wished to change my testimony

Q. Yes.

A. ... and you asked me to interpret the sentence containing the number 56065, and in that very sentence is the word vernichten, which means "annihilate".

Q. It means "annihilate" — to you, does it?

A. I dare say it means "annihilate" to anyone familiar with the German language, and it is so written in any dictionary.

Q. The judgment of the Military Tribunal, I put it to you, on 30th September, 1945, did not say what you {781|782} said it was, "annihilated".

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, excuse me, Your Honour. I have no objection to my friend referring to the judgment. I can put in the whole judgment. I will be happy to do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: There is one word in issue in the whole transcript.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, one at a time. I have become accustomed to listening to one at a time. Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: On a number of occasions, Your Honour, yesterday, I referred to trials, and I was told to be very careful not to refer to my specifics in the trials in West Germany, and people testified in those trials and they have not testified as to the outcome or the specifics of the trials. I don't know why Mr. Christie would do any differently today.

THE COURT: Well, he is doing it differently because it is cross-examination and he has a wider scope than, perhaps, you had in examination-in-chief.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you. {782|783}

Q. I am going to refer to this report and ask you if you consider this as true or false. I will have to prove it to be the report later. You may dispute it if you wish. I suggest that it indicates – I will let you read it with me – page 494, the second paragraph from the bottom, it says, "Stroop recorded that his actions at Warsaw eliminated approved total of 56,065. To that we have to add the number of those killed through blasting, fire, etcetera, which cannot be counted."

Have I read that correctly, sir?

A. You have read it correctly.

Q. And I suggest to you, if you are familiar with the judgment of the International Military Tribunal – is this their judgment?

A. I have no doubt it is their judgment.

Q. You maintain that the text indicates "annihilated"?

A. That is correct.

Q. They use the word "eliminated".

A. I'm sorry, but if you wish to resort to a dictionary ...

Q. Well, we may do that, sir, but I am asking you for your opinion. That's all. {783|784}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, what else – did you have any further answer you wanted to give?

THE WITNESS: My only answer is that in the judgment, the term "eliminated" may have been used as a synonym for "annihilated", because the German word "vernichten" leaves no doubt. It is not an ambiguous word. It means "annihilate".

Q. Are you familiar with the historian Hugh Trevor Roper?

A. Yes. I don't know him personally, but I know his name, of course.

Q. He has published many books on this subject?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't consider him a lunatic or anything? He is a respected historian?

A. He is a British historian, yes.

Q. I suggest to you that he wrote the foreword for, "A Pictorial History of the S.S. 1923-1945" by Andrew Mollo. Are you familiar with that publication?

A. No, I am not familiar with the picture book.

Q. You are not familiar with the picture {784|785} book.

A. No.

Q. I will put it to you, I will ask you to comment on these words in that publication with its introduction [introduction] by Hugh Trevor Roper.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Are these Hugh Trevor Ropes words, or whose words are these?

MR. CHRISTIE: The book was written by Andrew Mollo. The introduction was by Roper.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Are we reading Mr. Ropes words was my question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I will put it more clearly again. These are the words attributed to Andrew Mollo. The foreword to the book was written by Hugh Trevor Roper. It is called, "A Pictorial History of the S.S. 1923-1945".

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. I will put to you these words and have you tell me whether they are true or false: "Jewish losses amounted to many thousands buried in the rubble, fifty-seven thousand taken prisoner, twenty-two thousand were sent to various concentration camps, and between five thousand and six thousand escaped. German losses were sixteen dead and eighty-five wounded." {785|786}

Do you disagree with that?

A. That is not the account or the summary that I would give. It leaves ambiguities and holes. The figures don't quite add up, and I am somewhat hesitant to endorse this description, since we do have the original document and we can do better than that.

Q. Yes. And we do have the judgment of the International Tribunals.

A. Which is a little bit more accurate although shorter.

Q. So they use the word "eliminated", and it is more accurate than —

A. Not more accurate than mine, but more accurate than what you are reading there. People were taken and shot upon being taken prisoner, and this means annihilation, or they were — wait a minute — or they were, as pointed out, sent to Treblinka, where they were gassed, which means "annihilation".

Q. Well, the way I understood your evidence — you want to go on?

A. Well, just to finish my answer. Or they were sent to Lublin to be annihilated.

Q. You have now interpreted the words {786|787} as being annihilated not at this time, but somewhere else now. Is that right?

A. Partially at this time, and partially in subsequent killings.

Q. Your evidence yesterday was that the 56,065 was the figure of Jewish dead.

A. Yes.

Q. Aha. It seems to me you were indicating that that occurred in that report at that time, but now you interpret that to mean some of them were killed later at Treblinka, some at other places. Is that your evidence today?

A. No.

Q. No?

A. It wasn't my evidence today or yesterday. In the pamphlet — and this was what the question was about — the number was cited as people who were alive then, later, and presumably after the war.

Q. Where does it say, then, later and presumably after the war?

A. I said that is my interpretation of the pamphlet, and that is the nature and the thrust of what was said there.

Q. Well, let's go back to the pamphlet and {787|788} make sure we don't misunderstand it.

Q. I think we have been told that the pamphlet says that Stropp [Stroop] entered the ghetto with armoured cars on the 19th of April.

A. Well, I can read to you the sentence to assist you.

Q. Well, let me read to you the sentences I want to ask you about, and I won't need your assistance so much then. Okay?

THE COURT: What page?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am quoting from the transcript, to identify the page.

A. Page 19, a simple sentence.

Q. Well, maybe we should deal with it in the order of my questions, rather than your definition.

A. Your question.

Q. Okay. You have the part where it says, "When S.S. Lieutenant-General Stroop entered the Ghetto with armoured cars on 19th April,

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Now, that is true, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Stroop entered the ghetto on the 19th {788|789} of April with armoured cars.

A. Yes. He entered them that date. Correct.

Q. "... he immediately came under fire and lost twelve men ..." Do you deny that?

A. No. He lost some men in this very first encounter. That's correct.

Q. It's a fact, then, that the people in the ghetto opened fire on the armed forces under General Stroop. Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Are you familiar with the British and American Rules of Land Warfare?

A. I'm familiar with the International Law respecting land warfare. If you are going to be specific about British and American, I am not sure how familiar you wish me to be.

Q. I asked you a specific question. Are you or aren't you familiar with them?

A. I can say that I am somewhat familiar. I can't say that I am totally familiar, or totally unfamiliar. You are asking me questions that can't be answered yes or no.

Q. And you are giving me lots of long {789|790} answers.

A. It is in the nature of your questions. When you ask me if I am familiar, if I say I am familiar it is not to be interpreted of knowing everything about these things by heart.

Q. Are you familiar with the principle of dealing with partisan warfare by retribution?

A. Are you referring to reprisals specifically?

Q. Yeah. Retribution, reprisals.

A. Yes, I am familiar with reprisals.

Q. You are familiar with the British and American Rules of Land Warfare justifying reprisals against partisans, or those in occupied territory that open fire on armed soldiers?

A. If you are referring to World-War II regulations, these were to my knowledge.

Q. So the answer is yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Is it not also true that after the capitulation of Germany, the same process of taking reprisals was used by the British and Americans? Is that not true?

A. I have no knowledge of any such {790|791} event as you describe.

Q. You are unaware of threats to shoot fifty Germans for every American soldier shot?

A. Pardon me, but that is the first time I heard of it.

Q. So it is true, then, "he immediately came under fire and lost twelve men"? You don't know whether that is correct?

A. No, that number is approximately correct. It may be precise since Stroop reported his casualties day by day.

Q. Now, "German and Polish casualties in the battle, which lasted four weeks, totalled 101 men killed and wounded". Do you take issue with that?

A. He reported exactly that number.

Q. So he reported exactly that number.

A. Yes.

Q. By "Polish casualties" he probably meant Poles fighting on the German side. Right?

A. Well, in actual fact, as I recall, there was only one Polish casualty. There were, however, Ukrainian casualties.

Q. "Stubborn resistance by the Jewish {791|792} Combat Organisation in the face of impossible odds led to an estimated 12,000 Jewish casualties". Now, did Stroop estimate 12,000 Jewish casualties, or did he not?

A. That seems to be an interpretation of what he said.

Q. Well, that's an interpretation with which you disagree, I suppose.

A. No. What I am saying

Q. Yes or no?

A. The term "casualties" here is a bit ambiguous. In other words, take the simple matter at face value of one hundred and one dead and wounded on the German side, and then, whether you wish to say twelve thousand, fifty-six thousand or seventy thousand, what kind of ratio is that?

Q. I wasn't asking you about —

A. No. Wait a minute. "Casualty" implies being wounded or killed in combat.

Q. You don't think there was combat going on in the Warsaw Ghetto at that time?

A. What I believe is that in no sense, whether twelve thousand or fifteen thousand or fifty thousand combatants on the Jewish side.

Q. Were you there? {792|793}

A. I am well aware of the sources, and I have, indeed, spoken to members of those that survived in this battle in hiding and so on, and the estimates, my estimate was fifteen hundred combatants on the Jewish side, which was a high estimate, a very high estimate. I have since seen, in Gutmann's book, an estimate of seven hundred and fifty. He is a very well informed researcher who happened to have been there.

Q. So you are trying to explain why there aren't twelve thousand casualties. Is that right?

A. I am saying that it is mislabelling to say that someone gunned down an old woman, a child, without arms in his hands, as a casualty, because "casualty" presumes in this context combat, that the person has been fired on because he fired.

Q. Well, in guerilla warfare isn't it the case that people shoot from buildings without announcing their presence, or are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I am familiar with that. I was a soldier.

Q. If fifteen hundred armed partisans are in a massive building structure, can you decide who is a guerilla and who is not? How do you figure that one out? {793|794}

A. It is not a simple matter to decide, but I would say to you, that the entire enterprise of so-called "clearing the ghetto" had been decided by German authorities prior to the commencement, with a view to liquidating this ghetto in its entirety.

Q. Now, how are you going to tell us that you have insight into the mind of those who were involved in the operation?

A. Because they reported what was on their mind on paper.

Q. Where is the paper?

A. That is partially in the Stroop report. It is partially in other documents prior to —

Q. I put it to you that nowhere in the Stroop report does it say anything about liquidating the entire population of this ghetto.

A. Well, I can only read the report in its entirety.

Q. You tell me any part of it that says that its intention was to liquidate the members of this ghetto.

A. The simple matter is that when —

Q. The report is in front of you, isn't {794|795} it?

A. Oh, yes. It is a long report.

Q. That's right. And I have read it. Now you say there is a part in there that talks about liquidating the members of this ghetto, and I am asking you to find it.

THE COURT: Is it in —

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, Your Honour. The witness is familiar with the language.

THE WITNESS: On page 635, just around the break, where the original report breaks between page three and page four. There is mention made of a major action which was to last three days to forcibly, as they say, relocate the enterprises that were then in the ghetto, and then it goes on to describe how this gross action, this major action, began on the morning of the 19th. The intention was, in short, to liquidate the ghetto.

Q. So "relocate" to you means liquidate.

A. Absolutely. By "liquidate" I mean the physical removal of everything in this ghetto. Not just people, but the enterprises, the machinery of these enterprises. Everything.

Q. So relocating everything is what you mean by "liquidating the ghetto". {795|796}

A. Now, now, relocating. Machines were to be saved. Skilled labourers, to some extent, were initially to be saved. Everybody else was to be annihilated.

Q. Annihilated.

A. Yes.

Q. The words you read from the report were "relocated" — right?

A. That's correct. Yes, that is the correct.

Q. Now, that doesn't say, it doesn't indicate an intention to annihilate, to me. Does it to you?

A. Yes. That is the difference between us, you see, because I have read thousands of German documents and you haven't.

Q. Sure. And you have the view that to relocate, in the German language, is to annihilate.

A. No. No.

Q. No?

A. It means to relocate in certain contexts.

Q. And you alone know the context?

A. I am not alone in knowing the context. I have mentioned colleagues and fellow workers who know the {796|797} context also.

Q. Those who share your view of "annihilate" do as you do and interpret "relocate" to mean "liquidate". Right?

A. I used the term liquidation.

Q. You did. Now, let me understand your term, liquidation.

A. To encompass both people and goods and machinery.

Q. Well, you don't liquidate machinery, do you?

A. That's correct. That is precisely the distinction I am trying to make.

Q. Well, are you saying that the intention to relocate the people meant that they were going to kill all the people?

A. I said that they would — initially there was the view and the attempt and the purpose of saving some skilled labourers. This plan was not to come to fruition.

Q. Well, we are not talking about what you interpret the plan to be. I am interested in what the Stroop report says about the plan. And so far we have very clearly that it says to relocate the ghetto. Right? {797|798}

A. Well, actually the relocation refers specifically to the enterprises.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. "Die Verlagerung der Betriebe" means "relocation of the enterprises".

Q. So we understand those words to mean, "relocation of the enterprises". The Germans go into the ghetto and they are fired upon.

A. Yes.

Q. So then there develops a battle in which there are fifteen hundred, you say, partisans in various buildings inside the ghetto.

A. At most fifteen hundred.

Q. Well, you told us before fifteen hundred was a low figure.

A. No. I said it was my high figure.

Q. Your high figure, eh?

A. Yes.

Q. That's [That's] on the basis of what you've read.

A. Yes.

Q. So fifteen hundred people firing from inside the building, and did they have guns? {798|799}

A. To the best of my knowledge, judging from what the Stroop report itself states, they may have had three automatic weapons, one light machine gun, and possibly two other grease guns.

Q. You are relying on what the Stroop report says?

A. Primarily, but not exclusively. Stroop mentioned something like fifty-nine rifles captured. There were not many more. The armament consisted of pistols, home-made explosive devices, things of that sort. Anyone with any military experience knows that the total armament of the ghetto did not total then what was in the infantry company.

Q. But it would be hard for a person in the street to know what was inside a building, wouldn't it?

A. Well, they had some idea. I would have to say that their intelligence wasn't very great in those days.

Q. Well, you agree, then, that they were involved in a battle of sorts, although you consider it a very uneven battle.

A. Yes.

Q. So you say there weren't casualties in {799|800} the number of twelve thousand but, in fact, they were just victims of slaughter.

A. If I may use a simple word, murder.

Q. Well, of course, we've agreed that if, in the time of war, people shoot on soldiers from civilian hiding places, that is looked upon as a breach of the rules of war, and it means that they don't have the rights of prisoners of war, doesn't it?

A. It is my understanding.

Q. Okay.

A. Given as a soldier, going all the way back, that one uses necessary force. Now, necessary force is limited.

Q. Yeah. That's right. Necessary force is limited. These people were inside buildings and they were shooting from buildings and, in fact, as a result, buildings collapsed when they were fired upon, and people were buried in the buildings. Right?

A. People also surrendered and were shot upon surrender, in large numbers.

Q. Is that right? Again you have something in the Stroop report to indicate that?

A. Oh, I think the figures and the {800|801} numbers and, may I add, the photographs, since they are abundant....

Q. Oh?

A. ... indicate what happened. They show people surrendering.

Q. Well, the report we are looking at, the document Exhibit 1, says twelve thousand casualties.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Right? Do you dispute that now, or is it your evidence that more than twelve thousand were killed?

A. You are now mixing up several things. The figure twelve thousand comes from your sources, and not the document. It comes from the one I am not familiar with.

Q. Yes, I understand. Now, do you dispute that there were twelve thousand casualties?

A. I would suggest to you, sir, that as I said before, the term "casualty" has certain connotations.

Q. Well, dead people ...

A. ... are not always casualties.

Q. Oh, my goodness. Well, what do you call casualties, if they are not dead people?

A. To me in the context of battle a casualty is a person who falls in battle. {801|802}

Q. And you think this was not a battle. It was a slaughter because it was so uneven.

A. I think that there was a battle, but I think that there was a much greater slaughter.

Q. You feel that more force than was necessary was used.

A. Excuse me, sir. You are trying again to put words into my mouth.

Q. I am trying to understand you. Don't tell me what I am trying to do. I am trying to ask you questions.

A. Let me answer with the following qualifications, which is very, very serious ...

Q. They are serious.

A. Yes, they are very, very serious, because the term as you used it suggests a mode to this whole problem whereby the liquidation of the Ghetto of Warsaw was "necessary" as something I would accept as necessary, that the impartial observer would accept as necessary. And I would have to reject that, the notion, the idea, without going into the motivations whatsoever, that the Holocaust or any part of it was "necessary".

Q. I am not talking about the part "Holocaust". {802|803} I am talking about the Warsaw Ghetto and asking you what you mean when you say there weren't casualties in the number of twelve thousand. And I think; if I understand you correctly, you mean that it was a totally unfair battle in which more people were killed than was necessary.

A. Well, I would say that it was certainly unfair. I cannot disagree with that.

Q. Well, you don't disagree, then, with the figure that there were twelve thousand casualties.

A. Well, here you go again. You are citing a number from a source I have never seen. We have documents, if we wish to rely upon those.

Q. We will get to documents, Dr. Hilberg. I am just trying to understand your answer. Do you say that that's a false statement, or is it a true statement?

A. I would not accept the figure twelve thousand out of context, nor do I accept the terminology "casualty" for the occurrences in the Ghetto of Warsaw during the spring of 1943 insofar as they appear to be attached to such large numbers.

Q. Well, with the greatest respect, I don't understand your answer, so I will go on to another question and hope we get to understand each other better. It {803|804} says in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" that a total of 56,065 inhabitants were captured and peacefully resettled.

A. That's correct.

Q. You say that is false. Right?

A. Absolutely.

Q. I've shown you the book that says that fifty-seven thousand were captured. Haven't I shown you that?

A. Yes, you have.

Q. Yes. Now, fifty-seven thousand is fairly close to fifty-six thousand, isn't it?

A. Well, I accept the rounding.

Q. Well, isn't it the case that other sources besides yourself seem to suggest that fifty-six or fifty-seven thousand were, indeed, captured?

A. What other sources?

Q. Well, the one I just mentioned to you. I will get it again. I am not asking you to agree with these other sources, but I am asking you to agree that they do exist, and I have referred to the "Pictorial History of the S.S. 1923-1945" by Andrew Mollo with the introduction by Hugh Trevor Roper, who you acknowledged is regarded as a {804|805} reasonably accepted historian to you – that is, Trevor Roper. Do you know Andrew Mollo?

A. Never heard of him.

Q. Never heard of him. Apparently Trevor Roper has heard of him. Do you agree?

A. Well, that would be a supposition of no value on my part.

Q. Well, you are an author. Do people you don't know write forewords to your books?

A. People do not write forewords to my books generally, but, yes, one Swedish historian did write a foreword to a book of mine.

Q. Without ever reading it?

A. He's read it, but he did not know me. We never met.

Q. Right. Okay. But this book seems to indicate the Jewish losses amounted to many thousands buried in the rubble, fifty-seven thousand taken prisoner, twenty-two thousand sent to various concentration camps. You agree with me, at least, that source seems to indicate fifty-seven thousand prisoners taken.

A. That's what it says on this paper.

Q. Okay. And the judgment at Nuremberg {805|806} indicated that this Stroop recorded that his action at Warsaw eliminated an approved total of 56,065 people. That was in the judgment at Nuremberg, wasn't it?

A. Yes, but please, as you read it, I think you should make clear that the word "eliminated" is not in quotes.

Q. No. The words are, "approved total" – let me read the quote – don't interrupt me. I am asking the questions.

THE COURT: One at a time, gentlemen.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Quoting from the Stroop report, "Approved total of 56,065. To that we have to add the number of those killed through blasting, fire, etcetera, which cannot be counted." That is the end of the quote, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that is quoting from the Stroop Report, is it not?

A. Not entirely, because the word "eliminated" is not in quotes.

Q. I agree with you that the quotes come after the word "eliminated", but have I not read, "Approved total of 56,065 people. To that we have to add the number {806|807} of those killed through blasting, fire etcetera, which cannot be counted". Have I not read you accurately and completely the complete quote in the International Military Tribunal judgment on 30th September, 1946, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thank you. The word "eliminated" was the Tribunal's description of the word you called "annihilated". Right?

A. Well, it is the description of the Tribunal. They do have the original text to go by.

Q. They do have the original text to go by, and you have some secondary source, I guess?

A. No, I do not. I'm sorry.

Q. Why are you sorry?

A. Because you are once again trying to put words into my mouth.

Q. Well, let me be very careful to avoid that, sir.

A. Yes, try.

Q. To understand you clearly, the Tribunal used the word "eliminated".

A. Yes.

Q. And that was in their judgment, the {807|808} meaning of the Stroop report, I suggest to you.

A. Yes. The word "eliminated", in the ordinary sense, does have ambiguity. One can eliminate people by killing them, or one can eliminate them by other means.

Q. One can eliminate those in guerilla actions by capturing them.

A. One can eliminate by various means.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that the judgment, the Stroop report, dissolves ambiguity, and I suggest to you, sir, that it is not an uncommon translation.

A. Translation is not a hundred per cent accurate, and I would have preferred a more accurate translation, but we get what we get.

Q. Yes. And your translation, then, is in your opinion, more accurate than —

A. Well —

Q. Let me finish the question, please — than the words attributed to the Stroop report by the International Military [Military] Tribunal in their formal judgment. Is that your opinion?

A. Yes, that is my opinion.

Q. Thank you. Do you agree with me that the German language is a very complex language? Is it not? {808|809}

A. Well, I don't doubt whether it is more complex than other languages.

Q. Would you agree that it uses words in such a way that they often do have somewhat ambiguous meaning?

A. They may have multiple meanings.

Q. Multiple ambiguous meanings.

A. I would not say ambiguous. There is a difference.

Q. You, therefore, chose to define the word "relocate" as "liquidate" in your evidence here today.

A. No, no. Not the word. The entire description.

Q. The meaning of the word, we will say, in the context.

A. No, because the word "relocate" in the report is attached to the enterprises, and I was referring to the entire liquidation of the entire Ghetto.

Q. Does that mean the killing of all the people in it?

A. It means the killing of the largest number of people in it, yes.

Q. Oh. {809|810}

A. It does not mean every last one. We do know of several thousand survivors.

Q. It would mean the killing of everyone who resisted, didn't it?

A. And a lot of people who didn't.

Q. But I think you will agree with me that at the time with people shooting from buildings and things blowing up, it might be hard to tell who is resisting and who isn't?

A. It is not hard to tell once a person has surrendered, once he has come with his hands up, of which there are many photographs, that that person is not resisting.

Q. That's right. There are photographs of people with their hands up.

Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are saying they were shot?

A. Yes. Quite a few were shot.

Q. And how many were shot, from you, who was never there?

A. I said I was not there.

Q. Well, you can answer.

A. The Stroop report mentions in some detail the final figures, and they are here in this report in {810|811} front of me, and if you prefer, I will read them to you.

Q. No. I asked you a specific question, and if you want to address your mind to the answer in the report, that's fine, but the specific question is, did the Stroop report say how many people were shot after they held their hands up?

A. The Stroop report did indicate how many people were shot. It did not make the distinction you are trying to make — those that had their hands up and those that didn't have their hands up.

Q. It wasn't the distinction I was trying to make. You were making the distinction because you said people were shot, people who had their hands up, you who were never there, and the Stroop report doesn't make reference to people being shot who had their hands up.

A. At the beginning of this section, answering your questions, I made reference to the disparity of 101 casualties included dead and wounded on the German side, and the five digit figures of Jewish dead on the other side.

Q. Yeah. You said very clearly that 56,065 were all dead, didn't you?

A. I was saying to you, sir, in answer, to the original peaceful evacuation as is mentioned in the {811|812} pamphlet, that it was the contrary matter, that these people were all dead. Perhaps not all last single-one of them, but many thousands were shot immediately, several thousand were sent to Treblinka, several thousand were sent to Lublin. By 1943, by the end of the year all but a handful were all dead.

Q. Oh, so now you say that the figure 56,065 means Jewish dead, you mean that within a year they were Jewish dead. Is that right?

A. Well, you have to remember that the Stroop report makes reference to precisely this phenomenon. In other words Stroop, when he says people were transported to Treblinka, is well aware that at Treblinka people are gassed.

Q. Well, now, just address yourself to my question.

A. Yes.

Q. Yesterday you said that 56,065, that is his, meaning Stroop's, figure of Jewish dead.

A. That's right.

Q. Well, it's not Stroop's figure of Jewish dead today. I suggest to you today, in your evidence, it's Stroop's figure of those captured who were then sent to Treblinka, and you say became dead. Is that right?

A. I would say to you, sir, that when {812|813} Stroop made his report in which he used "capture" and "annihilation", he used the word "vernichten", annihilation, with respect to this fifty-six thousand, that his meaning was opposite of the one in the pamphlet, and that is the only thing I was trying to point out yesterday.

Q. Well, you did say that was his figure of Jewish dead. You didn't say that that's a figure of people who were captured and then sent to Treblinka that he knew were going to die, did you?

A. Well, had additional questions been asked, I would have made these additional answers.

Q. But I suggest to you your simple answer, given at the time, very clearly indicated that that was Stroop's figure of Jewish dead and not a year later, but at the time.

A. We are not talking about a year later. We are talking about 1943.

Q. Let's address our mind to the question, sir. In your answer yesterday you didn't put this qualification on it, that the 56,065 were later killed. You said that that's Stroop's figure of Jewish dead. Right?

A. I did not break down the figure of fifty-six thousand. {813|814}

Q. I realize you didn't, but I suggest to you you left a very clear impression with me, with the jury, with reasonable people, that that figure was dead.

A. That figure meant that these people were either shot on the spot or sent to gas chambers or to death camps, to the two of them, Treblinka and Lublin. So that way we are discussing where they were shot —

Q. No, we are not discussing where they were shot. We are discussing what you said yesterday, and the simple meaning of what you said yesterday.

A. What we were talking about —

Q. Now, may I ask you a question about that? You've now told us that the sum figure you've referred to as Jewish dead means those shot at the time, means those shipped to camps and killed. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. How many of the fifty-six thousand do you say were shot at the time?

A. Well, I would say that the number was somewhat over twelve thousand.

Q. Somewhat over twelve thousand.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Why do you use the figure twelve {814|815} thousand?

A. I don't. You used it.

Q. Oh, I see. Okay. I used it, did I?

A. Well, you quoted from the Pictorial History that I was not familiar with.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact the booklet says the twelve thousand were the casualties, didn't it?

A. Well, at any rate, it's not my figure.

Q. Mm-hmmm

A. But I think at this point we are talking a few thousand this way or that way.

Q. Are we?

A. Yes, we are.

Q. So what we mean now by Jewish dead are those captured and you say later killed.

A. Well, what I say is there were the following —

Q. Please answer the question.

A. I am trying to answer it the best way I can. A certain number of people were killed by the fire, including the artillery fire of German, S.S. and army forces in action in the Warsaw Ghetto. A much larger number of people were killed after, in particular districts or {815|816} particular houses. Resistance ceased, people came out with their hands up. Very many of them were shot on the spot as Stroop himself states.

Q. Where — with their hands up shot on the spot? Just find a spot in the Stroop report which you say exists.

A. All right. You will have to give me a little bit of time here. This is a long report.

Q. How many pages, twenty pages? You quoted from it. You seem familiar with it.

A. Yeah, but this is not the whole report you've got here.

Q. Oh?

THE COURT: Would this be a convenient time to break, Mr. Christie, so that he can find the spot?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I think so.

— The jury retires. 11:25 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 11:52 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I think, to be fair, {816|817} witness, and to get back to where we were, I believe my last question was whether there was any reference in the Stroop report to the number of people shot with their hands up.

A. There are references to people shot, and unfortunately, in the document you gave me, the parts in which these references are made are not included. You have given me a fragment.

Q. Oh, let me understand you clearly. You mean to say that in other parts of the Stroop report you recall that it says there were figures for people shot with their hands up?

A. There were figures for people that were shot.

Q. I see. But not with their hands up.

A. Well, the clear meaning is that they were shot upon capture.

Q. I see.

A. Since there was no counting, as he himself states, the people who were buried in the rubble of the buildings.

Q. In the part that you quoted, though, where you say that it was vernichten — is that right?

A. Yeah. {817|818}

Q. You say that means killed.

A. Annihilate.

Q. Annihilated. It also seems to refer to those as different from those who were killed in the burning buildings, etcetera.

A. The figure is given as in number, nachvirlich, that could be counted, but there were others that could not be counted because they were inside buildings that had been demolished because of fire, etcetera — in other words, during the course of fire, essentially, burning.

Q. Very good. Now, I am going to move from the Stroop report and move to the questions referring to your visit in Birkenau.

THE COURT: Just before that happens —

MR. CHRISTIE: I marked that, but if Your Honour wishes, I am happy that it be marked.

THE COURT: Mark it as an exhibit for identification.

— EXHIBIT "G" (For Identification) Stroop report

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I am now going to show what I suggest is a plan of the Auschwitz 2 complex known as Birkenau. Do you agree or disagree, sir? {818|819}

A. Yes, that does seem to be the 1944 depiction of the Birkenau camp.

Q. Yes. On it it says, "K2" and "K3". Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That means Crematorium 2 and Crematorium 3.

A. Yes.

Q. And then it was Crematorium 4 and Crematorium 5. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. The area immediately left of K3, 4 and 5 is the area known as "Kanada". Is that right?

A. I don't quite recall. It could be correct.

Q. "F" is the bathhouse; is that correct?

A. I could not give you any recollection of what "F" means. This plan is not equipped with any legends.

Q. No diagram or legend on it, but I understood that you had been there?

A. I had been there, but not with a plan in my hands. That was not the purpose.

Q. So you are not familiar with the plan {819|820} of Birkenau?

A. I am familiar with it, but you are not asking me to describe the buildings in it other than the crematoria, which are clear, and the railway tracks, which are clear.

Q. I thought perhaps you might, from your expertise, be familiar with the layout of the camp.

A. I am sufficiently familiar with the layout for the purposes, and if I need the use of any plans, I have them in front of me, but they are not reproduced in any of my works, in my books, and so if I do make reference to these particular building plans, I have them with the German legends.

Q. Without the legend you don't seem to be able to identify the area?

A. Well, I do seem to be able to identify substantial and necessary portions of it. You are asking me about an adjacent building, and I don't wish, under oath, to state for sure what is possible. It may not be.

Q. All right. I'll ask you other specific areas and I'll ask you to identify them. The area to the left of the railroad tracks, that is the women's camp, is it not, as you look from the bottom to the top? Is the area to the left {820|821} of the railroad tracks the women's camp? Right or wrong?

A. Now you're giving me a quiz about the individual blocks of this particular camp.

Q. No. All the area to the left of the railroad tracks.

A. I believe so, but I cannot be entirely certain of that from sheer memory.

Q. Okay. I suggest to you that the "A" block is a quarantine block. Do you agree?

A. There was a quarantine block, yes.

Q. Do you know where it was?

A. No. That again, I can tell you that there was a block for women. There was a quarantine block. There was a so-called gypsy camp here. I know the designations, but I must also say to you that when it comes to north, east, south, west and building plans, that is not my field. When I use these things, I use them very carefully with legends and clear-cut —

Q. Right. Somebody else's legend, not your own?

A. Obviously not my own.

Q. Okay. I suggest to you that the circular objects to the right of "K3" is a filtration plant {821|822} for water. Do you agree or disagree?

A. I cannot testify to that.

Q. Okay. As far as the plan is concerned you are prepared to identify it as being the plan of Auschwitz Birkenau in 1944. Is that right?

A. It is Auschwitz 2, known as Birkenau.

Q. Thank you. May that be an exhibit, please, for identification?

— EXHIBIT "H" (For Identification) Plan of Auschwitz 2 (Birkenau)

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, as far as visiting Auschwitz in 1979 is concerned, I have been informed that you were actually doing that in relation to the trip made by the President's Commission on the Holocaust. Is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. So you went there with and on behalf of the American Government, sort of a recognition of your appointment.

A. Well, I was a member of a group consisting of not all but some of the members of the Commission, certainly.

Q. Yeah. The Holocaust, or the President's Commission on the Holocaust, to which Mr. Eli Wiesel is a {822|823} member.

A. Is the Chairman.

Q. And you are a member?

A. Yes.

Q. And who else is a member?

A. Oh, there are quite a few members.

Q. Any names you remember?

A. Yes, I know some of the names. Do you want current members, or do you want the members at the time?

Q. Just give me three names of members at the time.

A. Members at the time. All right. Mr. Lautenberg now is the United States Senator from New Jersey.

Q. Yes.

A. He was a member at the time and was also a participant in the trip.

Q. Yes.

A. Of course, Mr. Wiesel who was the Chairman. Mr. Bookbinder, from Washington, D.C., was a member of this group.

Q. You were guests of the Polish Government, I understand. Is that correct? {823|824}

A. We were not guests, if you mean by that any, payment by the Polish Government.

Q. No. I mean guests in the sense that they led you around and explained to you what the areas were all about.

A. I need not be led around by the hand —

Q. Did you know the area without the plans?

A. How is that?

Q. Did you know the area without the plan?

A. No. I asked, as did other members of the group, to be shown certain parts of Auschwitz, in particular the gas chambers.

Q. In Auschwitz 1?

A. We saw, not ruined, but a partly reconstructed gas chamber in Auschwitz and we saw the facilities in this plan —

Q. Which is a ruin at the present time.

A. Which are demolished, that's correct. They are ruins. They are untouched ruins, I should say. They are left as the Germans left them. {824|825}

Q. Well, as somebody told you the Germans left them. Right?

A. Well, it's not just somebody. We do have some evidence of what happened in January 1945.

Q. Yeah. That's something that somebody else told you, though. It is not something you know as a fact?

A. I was not present when these buildings were blown.

Q. Did you ever look at the plans of Crematoriums 2, 3, 4 and 5 in Auschwitz 2, Birkenau? [Birkenau]

A. I have looked at those plans.

Q. They are available in the Auschwitz Museum, aren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. And copies of those are available by photographing them, aren't they?

A. One can obtain copies, and there are copies published in various books.

Q. Right. Now, it is also true that there is a monument at Birkenau, [Birkenau] that is Auschwitz 2. Correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You saw the monument? {825|826}

A. Yes.

Q. And on it it says, "Four million Jews".

Right?

A. Yeah, it says something like, "Four million victims". It does not —

Q. Are you sure it doesn't say "Jews"?

A. I cannot recollect what is said on that particular gravestone there.

Q. How many do you say died at Auschwitz?

A. My own figures are, Jewish, a shade over one million. Non-Jewish dead, perhaps three hundred thousand, plus.

Q. So the monument seems to be about twice, or a little more than what you say —

A. I did not, frankly look at the monument closely enough to notice what it said, but any figure in multiple millions is off the mark.

Q. Yeah. This type of information would be available from the Polish Government. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it true that you are familiar with the fact that the Warsaw Ghetto survivors frequently meet as a group at times to celebrate their reunion? Are you {826|827} familiar with that?

A. Well, I really don't know what they do to celebrate their reunions.

Q. I asked you whether you know that they celebrate their reunions.

A. I have no information on what they do.

Q. Do you have any information about a conference on the 20th of May, 1984, in Stuttgart, West Germany?

A. May 19 — yes.

Q. You were there.

A. Yes.

Q. You were there to discuss some things. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. With a number of other people who believe that the extermination of six million Jews is a fact. Correct?

A. There were Holocaust researchers there.

Q. Yes. You regard those who believe that there were six million Jews, or five million Jews, or 4.9 million Jews as Holocaust researchers. Correct? {827|828}

A. No, no, no, no. Just because somebody gives a figure doesn't make him a researcher. I am talking about people, all of whom present, to my knowledge, had done extensive research over a period of years and have published work.

Q. In your opinion is there an order, or was there an order of Adolph Hitler for the extermination of the Jews?

A. That is my opinion, my conclusion.

Q. Well, yesterday I think you told us you were very sure there was an order.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Is that an important order?

A. I would say so.

Q. Is it a specific order?

A. Well, that was, of course, another matter. How specific it was, and in what form it was given, to how many people it was relayed was, in fact, a considerable subject of discussion at Stuttgart.

Q. Yes. Well, in your book at page 177 you say, and I quote – I now produce and show to you a book called, “The Destruction of the European Jews” by Raul Hilberg. You wrote it. That’s your book. Right? {828|829}

A. Yes.

Q. Page 177, please. Last paragraph on the bottom of this first column, and I am reading and you correct me if I am wrong, it says:

“How was the killing phase brought about? Basically, we are dealing with two of Hitler’s decisions. One order was given in the spring of 1941, ...”

Am I reading correctly?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there a footnote to indicate where that order is?

A. No. This is an introductory passage to a chapter.

Q. On page 177?

A. Yes. This is an introductory passage to an eighty-page chapter.

Q. I didn’t ask you what it was. I asked you if there is a footnote.

A. No, there is no footnote here.

Q. What order were you referring to?

A. In this particular case I have elaborated, in my second edition, since there is so much {829|830} discussion and controversy over the nature of this order. So I could tell you not solely on the basis of what was published here in 1961, if you wish to hear it, but on the basis of all my knowledge to this date, to what I am referring to.

Q. What was the order?

A. Within the high command of the armed forces a plan was made for “treatment of populations” inside the territories that were to be occupied following the invasion of the U.S.S.R. That order was submitted through channels to Adolph Hitler for his approval. He indicated that he wanted certain editions and changes made in this directive. We have, and I have quoted here, the directive dated March 1941. Excuse me, I am speaking of a directive not a Hitler order.

Q. I am interested in what it says here, one order was given by Hitler —

A. If you allow me, I will explain the changes in the directive.

Q. I want you to understand what I am interested in.

A. I know what you are interested in, but you are raising a question, a question complicated enough {830|831} to have caused a distinguished historian in Germany to invite people from all over the world to pool their knowledge in order to figure out what happened.

THE COURT: Yes. Let’s get on with the answer. What is the answer to counsel’s question?

THE WITNESS: The question was about the Hitler order. There was a draft directive. Hitler wanted changes made in it. The changes were subsequently made in April and were then resubmitted to Adolph Hitler’s approval.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. So there is a Hitler order, you say, that was approved by Adolph Hitler in 1941 in April.

A. By April, yes.

Q. By April, or in April?

A. Now you want the exact date.

Q. No, I don’t. I want to know whether it was in April.

A. We are talking about several weeks. at the end of March when these discussions took place.

Q. All right. What were the words in the order?

A. According to General Jodl, who wrote this document I am now citing, the words were — {831|832}

Q. Now, you said it was a Hitler order written by General who?

A. No. If you will allow me to finish the sentence ...

Q. Oh, okay.

A. You previously critici[ci]zed me for not giving sources. I am trying orally to give my sources.

Q. Yes, I understand you are.

A. Adolph Hitler said that he wanted the Jewish Bolshevik Commissars to be liquidated.

Q. That’s the order you refer to.

A. Well, that was the first part of it.

Q. I’m sorry I interrupted you. Go ahead.

A. He said that for this task he wanted organs of the S.S. and police to be directly involved and responsible. He then pointed out that for this purpose the military should discuss with the S.S. and police the details. Now, that was the content of the order as described by General Jodl.

Q. So we don’t have the order?

A. The order was oral, and all we have are the reflections of Adolph Hitler’s words as described by {832|833} Jodl. We have, however, the words also of other people who were talking to Adolph Hitler which were more direct and more specific, but those words occurred in different contexts, such as Henry [Heinrich] Himmler’s words, and words spoken by other people. In any case, the order was oral.

Q. The order was oral, and you don’t know what the exact words were, I suppose.

A. You are quite correct. No one knows the exact wording.

Q. No. So you say there is an order to exterminate the Jews from Adolph Hitler that was oral, the content of which you don’t know, and apparently nobody knows, and it was in the spring, in fact the month of April, 1941.

A. When I say that we do not know the words, I do not mean the general content. I meant the specific words.

Q. Now, you said it referred to Commissars. Right?

A. Jewish dash Bolshevik Commissars.

Q. Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars. There is a dash in it?

A. Yes, because there was a document {833|834} and I am quoting Jodl.

Q. Yes. You quoted Jodl. Now, where is the document with the dash in it that reported the verbal order?

A. In the German, West German National Archives.

Q. Now, you wrote a book called, “Documents of Destruction”?

A. There is a document which appeared in 1971.

Q. It does not have such a —

A. No. It is a small book and it contains a variety of documents, but not this one.

Q. It would appear that this is rather the documents that you thought were important for the “Documents of Destruction”.

A. No. As I explained in my preface, it is a mixture of some important and some, shall we say, descriptive items of what went on locally.

Q. Can you think of a more important order to prove the existence of than one from Adolph Hitler for the extermination of the Jews?

A. You see, sir, in preparing a very {834|835} small book such as this one, which is a collection of documents aggregating a couple of hundred pages, one must make some choices. And even if the topic is very important, if it requires, since no document is really self-explanatory, a group of documents with additional explanations, I might have had to use a rather substantial portion of space for this one point.

Q. Oh, is this a long order for the killing of Jewish — what did you say, Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars?

A. It is not that the words are that long, but that the explanation, the history, the —

Q. Oh, I can believe the explanation will be long from you, sir.

A. The nature of the directive, the explanation of who originally drafted the directive, what the channels were — this is not a simple matter.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So really we don’t have an order in existence in any written form. We have from you an interpretation of what Mr. Jodl is supposed to have said Adolph Hitler was supposed to have said, which you say was in the Archives of West Germany, and which you say has a dash between Jewish and Bolshevik. {835|836}

A. That is my best recollection.

Q. Your best recollection.

A. Yes.

Q. So there is a dash in —

A. Well, it’s a hyphen.

Q. So it, wasn’t just Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars that had to be killed. It was Jewish people, was it?

A. Well, this particular problem is the one that caused a lot of discussion. There is no precise, clear answer as to what the exact wording was. We could only deduce from subsequent explanations by lower ranking individuals who passed on this particular command, particularly to the Einsatzgruppen, what it was that was being ordered.

Q. Oh, this was the Commissars' order to the Einsatzgruppen, was it?

A. Ultimately it was the order not only to the Einsatzgruppen, it was to the armed forces as well.

Q. So I want to understand clearly. This order says "Annihilate Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars". Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And you interpret that to mean, {836|837} Annihilate Jewish people and Bolshevik Commissars. Right?

A. Correct.

Q. But there is a hyphen in there that you think exists. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. But it doesn't say Jewish people and Bolshevik Commissars.

A. No, it does not. And obviously, one would not call a conference and one would not discuss in great detail, and one would not have extensive articles if the matter were clear-cut. There is such a thing as a gap in knowledge of history, and we are dealing here with one of the more complex problems of what the Germans called decision-making in this case.

Q. Right. It doesn't appear, from your very brief and unfootnoted statement at the very bottom of page 177, that this is a very complex subject, that the order, as such, does not exist but we have an account of it from somebody else. None of that seems indicated in the very simple words:

"Basically, we are dealing with two of Hitler's decisions. One order was given in the spring of 1941, during {837|838} the planning of the invasion of the USSR; it provided that small units of the SS and Police be dispatched to Soviet territory, where they were to move from town to town to kill all Jewish inhabitants on the spot."

Right?

A. Yes, these are introductory words to a chapter.

Q. Yes.

A. And in the subsequent pages you will find in the footnotes that you are looking for reference to particular sources, including the directive that I mentioned by General Warlimont and other commanders, including above all the commanders of Einsatzgruppen who, to the extent that they were around in Nuremberg, made statements about what it is they were told to do.

Q. Yes, what it is they were told to you, even according to you now, is not to kill all Jewish inhabitants on the spot, but it was to kill Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars. Correct?

A. What I am saying is that the original wording justifying the establishment of special units called {838|839} organs in this particular language of the S.S. and Police was the killing of Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars. This was the justification. The units to be established for this purpose belonged to the S.S. and Police, which was deemed to be the type of organization to carry out such a political task, rather than the armed forces. This, of course, does not exhaust the problem. One would not set up four units aggregating three thousand men to kill a small handful of people, Bolshevik Commissars, who were extremely few, and who were not often captured since they tried to avoid capture, naturally, and there would be little point in establishing, with high-ranking personnel, three thousand men, such, you know, for such a single small purpose, relatively small purpose.

Q. So getting back to the point, there is really no order that you know of, verbal or otherwise, that says to the Einsatzgruppen or anybody else, from Adolph Hitler, to kill all Jewish inhabitants on the spot. Right?

A. Now, I would say that the order, as for example Himmler pointed out, was given to him. He was invested with the responsibility to solve this problem. So in other words, one must put —

Q. What problem?

A. The Jewish problem, as they called it. {839|840}

Q. I thought we were referring to the Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars order. That is not the Jewish problem, is it?

A. This is the problem of teaching complex history in such a small setting, but what I am telling you is that the initial problem was administrative. One had to establish battalions of S.S. and Police that had to move with the armies that exercised military jurisdiction, military territorial jurisdiction within their sphere of operations. A justification had to be given for the establishment of such units. Adolph Hitler said this was a war unlike any other war. This was a war in which there would be a showdown, and the Jewish-Bolshevik Commissars, as the bearers —

Q. Showdown of who?

A. Two world views — Nazism and Communism.

Q. So there was a war between Communism and Nazism, according to Adolph Hitler?

A. Yes. And Commissars, as the carrier of this system, would have to be shot. This was not a task for the army. For this reason they were going to establish this Einsatzgruppen. So — {840|841}

Q. Can I just get back to the question? Okay? To put it very simply, then, you interpret this Commissar order to mean that it resulted in the shooting of Jewish inhabitants on the spot, but we don't have anything in writing to that effect and, in fact, that is not what it is reported to have said, but it is your interpretation of what it means. Correct?

A. Well, I am saying a little bit more than that. I am saying, and I will say that this is a matter which one can dispute honestly, that it was the intention from the beginning, that is to say, the months prior to June 22nd, 1941, to annihilate the Jews in the territories that were about to be overrun. The difference of opinion, the difference of view that was expressed in Stuttgart was whether that particular decision was made in March, in April or at the latest in August.

Q. Did you say, in Avery Fisher Hall's article, that there was no order, no plan, no budget?

A. Did I say, no order ...

Q. Yes. No order, no plan, no budget. Did you say that?

A. Well, I don't know out of what context you are reading these words. {841|842}

Q. In the context we are talking about, whether Adolph Hitler issued an order for the annihilation of Jews.

A. Do you have a tape recording?

Q. No. I am asking you if you said that, sir.

A. Well, it doesn't seem like how I would put it. I am very careful in my words, even when speak extemporaneously.

Q. Yes, I agree. Now, is it the case that you said he is an eminent authority?

A. I think he is an authority. He is certainly one of the first researchers. He was working with limited source material, limited in today's term. I would regard that what he says is generally reliable.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book entitled ... (Reporter's note: French title)

In English it's called, "Harvest of Hate". Is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Could you turn to page 512?

A. There is no page 512.

Q. No page 512? 1974 edition. Page 171, {842|843} first paragraph to the bottom of the page.

A. Well, I've read the paragraph.

Q. Now, I just want to ask you a question about it. I want to ask you if this is what it says in English in the last two sentences of that paragraph.

A. I must say that I am not a qualified translator from the French into English.

Q. Well, let me ask you a general question, then, as to what it means, because you do understand French, don't you?

A. I understand it sufficiently, but as I testified before, I prefer to have a dictionary, especially for a need to know exactly what the particular phraseology or meaning of a word is. This is not my language.

Q. I see. So you wouldn't be able to answer me whether or not it says these general things, that there was no document left behind, perhaps none ever existed, such is the secret with which the masters of the Third Reich, however boastful and cynical they may have been on other occasions, have surrounded their major crime. Is that the general meaning of the last sentence?

A. Well, here again, you see, you are taking an introductory paragraph to a chapter. {843|844}

Q. I just want to know if this is what the last sentence says. I will read the whole book, but I just want to know about that last sentence.

A. It does seem to me to be an adequate translation, but it is hardly up to me to comment on the elegance of the translation from the French into English.

Q. I am not asking about the elegance.

A. But you are. You are essentially. You are putting me as a specialist of language from French into English.

Q. I just want to know whether you know the language enough to indicate whether that is the meaning of that sentence.

A. The general meaning.

Q. Certain details will be forever, however, unknown as far as total extermination is concerned. The three or four principle actors committed suicide in 1945. Then it says, no document was left behind, as perhaps none ever existed. Such is the secret with which the masters of the Third Reich, however boastful and cynical on other occasions, surrounded their major crime. Is that the meaning of the last three sentences?

A. Well, within the confines of what I {844|845} said before, it is acceptable to me, yes.

Q. That's your confrere and associate, Leon Poliakov.

A. He is not a confrere, and he is not an associate.

Q. Well, he is one of the people who you regard as an expert in the field.

A. He is one of the people who I regard as a competent researcher and an expert, and he is one of the very first.

Q. He seems to think that there is no plan in any way visible. Correct?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The word, Your Honour, was "no document". I didn't hear any "plan" in the translation mentioned.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I will say no document, then.

A. I think that he meant – now you are asking me what I think he meant, but I think that he meant that there was no written document signed by Adolph Hitler, that in short, we do not have a written order. And he said that if we wanted to ask questions after the war of men like Himmler, we can't, because Himmler committed suicide {845|846} immediately after capture, and because Heydrich was assassinated in 1942, and so that means that some of the principle figures could not be questioned.

Q. Now, you earlier were asked about an article by Avery Fisher Hall called, "The Holocaust in Perspective", and I now produce and show it to you. It says, "Panelist, Raul Hilberg, a Professor, ponders the question of the Holocaust."

A. It is a question asked by the audience. I was listening.

Q. I am talking about you and reading this, aren't I? You are the man in the article?

A. But please read what it says there.

Q. I will just ask you if this is accurate as to what you said. Maybe I should read it right in your presence so we don't make any mistakes. I have highlighted the part that I want to read to you and ask you if you said this, and if it is true. Right there:

"If one looks at origins one may go back through the centuries into antiquity to discover the building blocks of destruction of the European Jews." Correct? {846|847}

A. Yes.

Q. "Hilberg said, but what began in 1941 was a process of destruction not planned to advance."

Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "Not organized centrally by any agency."

Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "There was no blueprint."

Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "There was no budget for destructive measures." Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "They were taken step by step, one step at a time." Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "Thus came about not so much ..."

and then it goes over to the next page,

"... not so much a plan being carried {847|848} out, but an incredible meeting of minds, a consensus, mind reading by a far flung bureaucracy."

Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that, didn't you?

A. I said that. I said nothing about any order not existing.

Q. No, nothing there about any order. Right.

A. Well, you had previously said that I had, at that meeting, in conjunction with these other phrases, also indicated that there was no order, and I said I recall no such word and, indeed, what you showed me does not indicate that I said anything about an order.

Q. No. I agree you didn't say anything about an order. In fact, you said it was an incredible meeting of minds.

A. Yes.

Q. Does that imply the existence of an order?

A. It does not exclude the existence of an order. {848|849}

Q. A consensus, mind reading by a far-flung bureaucracy. Does that imply the existence of an order to you?

A. Well, you see, if an order is given orally —

Q. If an order. You said there was an order.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps he can finish his answer.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, it will be helpful to the jury if you will just resist the temptation to cut in when an answer is coming. Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: If an order is given orally and passed on, and especially if wording is couched in such a way that the order giver relies on the understanding of the subordinate, then it does become important for those subordinates to understand, indeed, and to have the same understanding of what was expected. And this is what I said.

Q. Was there an order, or wasn't there?

A. I believe that there was a Hitler order.

Q. Okay.

A. Professor Krowslich (ph) believes this. {849|850} Others believe that there was not.

Q. So it's an article of faith based upon your opinion?

A. No, it is not an article of faith at all. It is a conclusion. One can come down one way on it, or the other.

Q. Because there is no evidence to prove one side or the other. Right?

A. There may be evidence, but there is a question in this case of what is sufficient evidence.

Q. One order was given in the spring of 1941 is what you said in your book.

A. That is one man's opinion — mine.

Q. It doesn't say it is an opinion. It states it as a fact, sir, I suggest.

A. Look, how often must I reiterate that wording? It is in the beginning of a chapter. It is in the nature of saying, "Here is what I am laying out. Now, keep reading. You don't have to agree with what I say after you have seen the footnotes, after you have seen the evidence."

Q. That same is true about the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" You don't have to believe it. You don't have to accept it without verifying it. {850|851}

A. Oh, no. Oh, no, that's not the same thing. I'm sorry, very sorry.

Q. All right. Next question is referring at the top of page 177, you say:

"This method may be called the 'mobile killing operations.'"

Now, you are referring to the Commissars you talked about earlier. Right?

A. I am talking now about the entire operation, bringing the killers to the victims.

Q. "Shortly after the mobile operations had begun in the occupied Soviet territories, Hitler handed down his second order."

Now, where is his second order?

A. The problem with that particular order is the same as it is with the first. It is oral.

Q. It is oral.

A. And there are people who say, no, it was not one order at all. It was a series of orders that were given to various people at various times.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. This is a matter for dispute and for {851|852} argument among historians, and for this purpose one has meetings and second editions of books, too.

Q. I see. So you have to correct that statement in your second edition. Right?

A. No, I am not saying that I have to correct this statement, but there are corrections in the second edition, of course.

Q. This statement does not appear to be qualified with the words you added here today this is a matter of opinion and subject to dispute, and others may disagree with it. It states, "Hitler handed down his second order". No qualifying words. Right?

A. No, there is no qualifying word there.

Q. Do you want to see the book and make sure I am not misleading?

A. I agree with you that in this introductory statement I stated my conclusions ahead of the treatment to follow.

Q. I see. So if Mr. Harwood had been able to write a book and give you more evidence, he would have been able to follow up his statements with more information, too? {852|853}

A. That would be a tall order, wouldn't it?

Q. I wonder, sir. Can you show me where the second Hitler order is?

A. That is not the question.

Q. It is now.

A. But the major [major] question as I understood it all along is whether there was a Holocaust, not —

Q. That is not the question from me. The question from me is whether or not you can verify, as you say one ought to, as —

A. One certainly ought to, I completely agree, but certain matters can be shown up to a point and not beyond.

Q. Can you show any evidence of the existence of a second Hitler order at all? And if so, what is it?

A. I indicated to you, although I have revised my judgments, but if you want to look, I don't say that everything I expressed in this book I retain. I am entitled to change my mind about something I do.

Q. And is Mr. Harwood also entitled to change his mind? {853|854}

A. He may change his mind, but I am talking about what I thought then to have been a pivotal Hitler directive as stated by Goering to Heydrich on July 31, 1941.

Q. That is the letter which originated the Wansee Conference which occurred in January 1942. Correct?

A. Well, it was the letter that set in motion the train of events that eventuated in the Wansee Conference.

Q. I put it to you that the letter from Goering to Heydrich talked about re-settlement in the east of Jewish people. Didn't it?

A. Well, the term "re-settlement" became the word used throughout the correspondence in World War II in German records to refer to the process of deporting people to killing centres. In short, this was to be distinguished from bringing the killers to the victims. Here the victims are being brought to the killers.

Q. Well, that is your interpretation of —

A. That was my interpretation, and it still is now.

Q. But it wasn't an order or a letter {854|855} from Hitler at all.

A. No, it is not.

Q. But it says here, "Hitler handed down his second order". Correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. That could be a little misleading, couldn't it?

A. Yes, it could be misleading, and for that reason we write second editions

Q. Yes.

A. The belief I had then was that the order written by Goering was written at the behest of Adolph Hitler, since Goering was the number two man and could speak on any matter whatsoever. It is not a belief I hold as firmly right now, because I have since discovered additional information to indicate the draftsmanship of this order, who drafted it, and the circumstances under which it was given, and this leads me to the conclusion that the order was initiated by Heydrich.

Q. Now, what about the existence — let's get to the point of saying that you now maintain that any talk of re-settlement in the east you now interpret as being an order to kill all Jewish persons. Is that your {855|856} interpretation, or was it then when you wrote this?

A. It was then and it is now my opinion that re-settlement was the synonym used for deporting Jews to death camps.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Was there not a Madagascar plan to deport Jews to Madagascar?

A. There was such a plan and it was popular for a while in 1940, and to the best of my knowledge it was considered at the highest level, as late as but no later than February 2nd, 1941.

Q. Was there not a plan also to deport Jews out of Europe into the area of Latvia?

A. Now, this is a different matter.

Q. I know this is a different matter, but was there such a plan?

A. When you are referring to deportations of Jews to Riga from Berlin and from other German cities, in the late fall of 1941, following the operation of the Einsatzgruppen, the idea was, to the best of my reconstruction of events, that these Jews were to be shipped there in order to be shot upon arrival by Einsatzgruppen personnel stationed in Riga. This was not colonization.

Q. Aha. That is, according to your inter-{856|857}pretation of the results. That is what you said, isn't it?

A. Well, we do know what happened to these transports.

Q. Do we?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. In Riga.

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest to you, sir, that there is no evidence whatsoever that re-settlement in the east referred to in Goering's letter had any other meaning than what it said on the paper.

A. No, no. In a way there are some conclusions one may come to and there are other conclusions one may not come to, because there is such a thing as a body of evidence.

Q. A body of evidence. All right.

A. And the fact of the matter is that orders went out to no longer permit the emigration of individual Jews. The fact of the matter is that the whole number of Jews under German control was now so great that emigration, other than to Madagascar, which was being considered up to but not beyond February 1941, was considered a manifest impossibility in the middle of a war. {857|858}

Q. Yeah. There would be problems created by the war in forced emigration of Jews. Right?

A. Obviously.

Q. And there was a problem, because the Russian front started to move west by 1943.

A. 1943. But we are jumping years.

Q. Well, two.

A. That is a long time, because a lot of Jews were killed in the interval.

Q. You are maintaining there was a Hitler order to kill Jews by the spring of 1941 which we now know that is sort of somebody's view of what you say Hitler may have said verbally. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And the second Hitler order we don't really believe any more existed. Right?

A. No, I didn't say that. Quite the opposite. I said there was a divided opinion on whether there was one or whether there were several orders. I might say to you, just to make the point in your favour, there is a minority opinion that states — two German historians — that there was no need for a Hitler order.

Q. Mm-hmmm. {858|859}

A. That the process went on without it, but this is a minority opinion and very much in dispute.

Q. That's very much in dispute at your conference, or the conference of exterminationists at the Town of Stuttgart in May of 1984. Right?

A. Well, it's a major city.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, what is an exterminationist?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will ask the witness if my friend doesn't know.

Q. Do you know the definition between exterminationists and revisionists?

A. This vocabulary is something else.

Q. I suggest you used the term yourself.

A. No, I did not use the term "extermination" except in quotation marks.

Q. Well, you have used it in quotation marks.

A. But never as my word.

Q. But there is a school of thought about which you are aware, and about which you have spoken publicly, and about which you are reported to have spoken publicly, that categorizes people that believe in the Holocaust {859|860} as you define it as exterminationists. Isn't that true?

A. No, it is not true.

Q. So you don't use the word to define people who believe in the Holocaust?

A. No. I don't know the source of your statement, but that is pretty well off the mark.

Q. Is it? And you have never used the term yourself?

A. No. I don't write about this whole school of thought as defined by the defendant.

Q. They are beneath your dignity, a whole school of thought opposite to yours?

A. Not beneath my dignity, but I do not devote my efforts in discussions such as we have here.

Q. Could you turn to page 631 of your book?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, first column at the bottom:

"In November, 1944, Himmler decided that for all practical purposes the Jewish question had been solved. On the twenty-fifty of that month he ordered the dismantling of the {860|861} killing installations."

Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You give there a footnote referring to an affidavit [affidavit] by Kurt Becher, March 8, 1946.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Document PS-3762. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you explain that the wording of this document provides no basis for your statement, neither as to the date, nor does it make any mention of killing installations?

A. Again, this is a question of treating statements in context. Look, no document is self-explanatory, and every rendition of it involves some interpretation, unless the text is reprinted in its entirety.

Q. All right. Unless a text is printed in its entirety. Correct?

A. All right. You have the text, I will be glad to comment on it.

Q. Thank you. I now produce and show to you document 3762-PS. Do you recognize it?

A. Yes.

Q. At the top it describes it as the affidavit by Kurt Becher, SS-Standartenführer. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. 8th of March, 1946, with the undated latter by him. Correct?

A. Yes. {861|862}

Q. Did you look at that?

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to read you something that I suggest is close to its text as I can get. It says:

"I, former SS-Standartenführer Kurt Becher, born on 12 September,

1909, in Hamburg, wish to make the following statement in lieu of another:

1. Approximately between mid-September and mid-October 1944 I induced the Reichsführer-SS Himmler to give the following order which I then received in two original copies, one for the SS-Obergruppenführer Kaltenbrunner and Pohl, and one copy for myself:

Effective immediately, I forbid any extermination of Jews and order to the contrary that care be taken of the feeble and sick. I hold you (meaning Kaltenbrunner and Pohl) personally responsible for this, even if this order should not be strictly complied with by my subordinate quarters."

Carrying on:

"I personally took the copy destined for Pohl to his office in Berlin and handed up one meant for Kaltenbrunner into his secretary's office in Berlin. {862|863} I feel that after this date Kaltenbrunner and Pohl should, therefore, be held personally responsible for any killings of Jews that took place afterwards.

2. On the occasion of my visit to the concentration camps of Mauthausen, 27 April, 1945, at nine o'clock in the morning, the camp commander, SS-Standartenführer Zierreis [rect: Ziereis] informed me in strict confidence as follows:

Kaltenbrunner has instructed me that at least one thousand people still have to die in Mauthausen every day. The facts mentioned above are in conformity with the truth. These statements are submitted by me of my own free will and without any duress. I have read them through, signed and affirmed them with my oath."

Then follows the date, signature, the rank, and:

"Subscribed to and sworn before us at OBERURSEL/Germany this 8th day of March 1946. Richard A. Gutman."

Is that right?

A. I wouldn't know how to pronounce his name.

Q. Is that what you say is the justification for your statement that in November 1944 Himmler decided that for all practical purposes the Jewish question {863|864} had been solved?

A. Yes.

Q. And the order to dismantle the killing installations ...

A. Yes.

Q. Well, it indicates there, at least, mid-September and mid-October, and it wasn't in any way an order from Himmler originated by him. You say it was originated by Becher. Is that not true?

A. No, no. What I say is what's in the document. Becher states.

Q. Let's analyze what is in the document.

A. Let's analyze it. I am not going to say the document speaks for itself because it is a complicated thing. Becher states here —

Q. Let me ask you some questions.

A. All right. Go ahead.

Q. The actual document here is an affidavit of Kurt Becher. Correct?

A. Yeah.

Q. It's not an order from Himmler. Correct?

A. No. He quotes —

Q. He says there was one. Right?

A. Yeah.

Q. It's an allegation of an order from Himmler. Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. But it has not been produced.

A. He produces it, presumably from {864|865} memory, in this affidavit. It need not, may not have been the exact language used by Himmler, but the substance of it, to me, seemed plausible and believable.

Q. So your statement on page 631 is certainly false as to date, and it's false as to the existence of an order. It, in fact, refers to an affidavit that says an order existed and quotes from the alleged order. Is that right?

A. Well, are you trying to say that I am in error as to the exact month?

Q. Well, that's one error, but it is not the only one. It is an error there, isn't it?

A. Not necessarily, because Becher does not recollect precisely when he acted. He said that sometime between the middle of September and the middle of October he approached Himmler. He was successful in convincing Himmler. That doesn't mean that Himmler carried out the order, gave the order the next day.

Q. With the greatest respect, sir, it doesn't say, "approached Himmler". It says, "induced Himmler".

A. Induced, fine. Induced Himmler.

Q. That, in effect, means he accomplished the objective of giving his order. Is that right?

A. Well, it doesn't mean he got the order on the precise date.

Q. So you know when the precise order was?

A. No, I wouldn't say that I know very precisely. I would say that it is November, because I do believe, knowing how long it takes for orders to be {865|866} written, to be filtered down and to be carried out, that the great likelihood was for the order to have been given in November – not September or October, particularly because gassings were going on in Auschwitz in October. And here we would be implying gassings going on despite specific orders already having been received.

Q. Well, now you have explained the difference of date. You say that Himmler decided that, for all practical purposes, the Jewish question had been solved. This affidavit seems to indicate that the author made a decision and induced Himmler to sign the order. Right?

A. Fine.

Q. That certainly puts a little different light on it, do you think?

A. Not really, because don't you see, this was an S.S. Colonel. He was trying, in making this affidavit, as so often happens with S.S. Colonels who were prospective witnesses in war crime trials, to put the best face on himself. Here is something he could claim credit for, so he came forward with this affidavit. The question is, was he the only one to have made this suggestion? Perhaps not. Was he making it precisely in the form in which he said? Perhaps not. But that the order was given, I do believe.

Q. You have explained that these types of affidavits were often false, but you chose to believe this one. Right?

A. No, no, no. Here again you are trying to put words in my mouth.

Q. That's right. I am trying to suggest {866|867} to you that there is a short, simple answer to this convoluted explanation you gave, and it is this, that some S.S. Colonel doesn't force someone by the rank of Mr. Himmler to make an order, and that this affidavit was an exaggeration for self-defence purposes by Kurt Becher, and you should know that as an expert. That is what I put to you.

A. My understanding is that you suggest that Himmler gave no such order, period?

Q. I am suggesting to you, sir, that this affidavit, you would have to acknowledge, was highly dubious as a source.

A. But you see, we know when the last gassings took place. We know, you see, the sequence of events pretty well. Of course, when one does not have, as I explained at the outset, the proper documentation, that is to say, the original correspondence, one must have recourse to testimony. One must have recourse to statements made by people who made assertions. One must weigh these assertions.

In this case the historian is not different from a jury, is no different from a judge. One must weigh. Now, I weighed, to the best of my ability, and I would still weigh it much in the way in which it is described here in the book published in 1961.

Q. In this book in 1961 you didn't say in your statement that we don't have the Himmler order. You said we have an affidavit from a colonel in the S.S. who says he managed to convince or induce Himmler to make an order. Did you?

A. Well, I have given a footnote {867|868} stating plainly, "Affidavit by Kurt Becher".

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. In this affidavit is the purported text of Himmler's order.

Q. Right. Would you agree with me that it is rather dubious in its contents?

A. Well, I don't know how to answer you, because I have already said repeatedly —

Q. A simple yes or no would do.

A. Well, I don't agree with you.

Q. You don't agree?

A. No. I seem to have to repeat it fifty times.

Q. Not any more. Not once more, I can assure you. I now produce and show to you the results of an interview which purports to have been had with you in "Le Nouvelle Observateur". Is this an interview with you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know when it took place?

A. Several years ago. It took place shortly before the appearance of the —

Q. 9th July 1982, is that correct?

A. Well, the interview took place before then, but not too long before.

Q. You were speaking French in the interview, were you not?

A. No, no. As a matter of fact I was speaking in English. This is a translation of my {868|870} remarks.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that you said that, "I would say that in a certain way Faurisson and others, without having wanted to do so in the first place, have rendered us a good service. They have come up with questions which have the effect of engaging the historians in fresh research work. The historians are obliged to come forward with more information to scrutinize the documents once again, and to go much further in the understanding of what has really happened."

Was that your statement?

A. Yes.

Q.. Were you referring to Professor Robert Faurisson of France?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know him?

A. I know him only through some of his publications. I don't know him personally. He once wrote me a very nice letter. We have not met..

Q. Would you agree that many of the premises you started with in your research, because they were never questioned, you have now had to revise slightly?

A. Well, I don't quite understand what you're asking. I've had to revise because they were never questioned, or —

Q. I will make it clear.

A. All right. Please do.

Q. This seems to indicate to me that due to the fact that people like Faurisson who have been asking questions about this issue of the Holocaust, you've had to do some fresh research work. {869|870}

A. No, no. I think you are somewhat overstating the matter.

Q. I thought it was a pretty clear quote from what you said.

A. Yes, but here again, please keep in mind the context. The question was supposed to be from a journalist for a French publication who wanted to have my opinion, particularly, I suppose, with regard to my personal feelings and reactions towards people who deny the Holocaust — and incidentally, in the process several of them use insulting language about me personally.

Now, given this insulting language, one might think that I might be very angry or something of this sort, but I am not. Quite the opposite.

Q. Well, you are not accusing Dr. Faurisson of —

A. I am not accusing him, but the question was a broader one. It included this whole group of people who say that the Holocaust did not happen, or Butz, or people of that sort, and of course, Rassinier and Butz are quite insulting in their language about me.

Q. Oh, really, Rassinier is quite insulting in his language about you?

A. May I finish?

THE COURT: Yes, you can finish.

THE WITNESS: Well, I said that, nevertheless, I will consider what anyone says about anything in such a way as to re-think something. Just because I believe that something happened does not mean that I have explained it adequately. I am a classroom teacher for three decades, and I have learned the hard way that one must explain everything, that nothing is {870|871} obvious, that one may take certain things for granted as being understood immediately; they are not.

So in this rather peculiar roundabout way I have said, fine, I will be willing to look at anything said by anybody, no matter what his motivation may be, and if this leads me to re-state anything, to substantiate anything, to look for anything, that's fine.

Q. So it does cause you to do fresh research work, as you said here?

A. Well, I think – please don't exaggerate. I am always doing research. I am always doing research, of course.

Q. These are your words, sir.

A. Absolutely. If there is something requiring more substantiation, I will, necessarily, have to go and find it.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that as far as the researching the scene of Auschwitz, Treblinka, Sobibor, Chelmno, Stutthoff, you didn't do any firsthand, on-site research whatsoever until after you wrote your book.

A. What I did in the case of Sobibor, Belzec, Chelmno and Treblinka was to look at the German, West German court records. I have testified repeatedly that I learned about these camps from documentation and from testimony. I am not a person who will take in a particular scene and be able to describe it in such a way that a professional policeman does. I am not that kind of individual, and this is not my research method.

In short, I have, in the nineteen sixties and seventies, looked for and at documentation, {871|872} testified about these particular camps. It was not necessary for me to go there because going there would not have helped me substantially.

Q. It might, in fact, have disproved your theory, sir.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, I think what we will do is excuse the jury till two-thirty and resume then.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury enters. 2:30 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. I'd like to get back briefly to page 631 in this book where we were discussing this statement, bottom of the page on the first column, the statement:

"In November, 1944, Himmler decided that for all practical purposes the Jewish question had been solved."

You mentioned that although the document Kurt Becher prepared was an affidavit which was referred to in the order, and although it didn't give the date of November, you said because it said mid-September, {872|873} October, that it would mean November. Right? Takes some time.

A. That was one reason. There were several other reasons.

Q. Yeah. How did you come to the conclusion referred to in the next sentence that on the 25th of that month he ordered the dismantling of the killing installations? That strikes me as a precise date, and I wondered if you get that from the text, too.

A. No. Where are you reading from, please?

Q. Next sentence:

"On the twenty-fifth of that month he ordered the dismantling of the killing installations."

A. That is, perhaps – I should perhaps include one or two other sources. It is sometimes difficult to present all of them when they happen to be testimony.

Q. Was there another source?

A. Yes. There were several other sources, and one of these was from a man who also talked to Becher and got that information.

Q. So you have some other source that didn't talk to Himmler but talked to Becher.

A. Yes. That's correct.

Q. Oh, I see. That wasn't referred to in your book at all.

A. That wasn't referred to, no.

Q. Now, earlier on you referred to the Commissar [sic] order as an order to shoot the Jewish Bolshevik {873|874} Commissars. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree, to put that in context, that there was a belief in Germany at that time that Bolshevism had Jewish origins, and all Commissars would be Jewish?

A. No. That is not something that I would assume.

Q. Are you familiar with the theories of the day and the beliefs about communism?

A. I am familiar with the theories of the day. I am also familiar with the manner in which these theories were received by the population, including even the S.S. people. I don't think they are unsophisticated [unsophisticated] people.

Q. I am not suggesting anybody was unsophisticated [unsophisticated]. I am suggesting that a prevalent theory, at least of the Nazis, was that communism and bolshevism was Jewish.

A. That was propaganda.

Q. That was propaganda, but they claimed it was their belief at the time?

A. They claim.

Q. They said that Trotsky was Jewish and Seneviv was Jewish, and Karl Leitnik was Jewish?

A. There are all kinds of people labelled as Jews, whether they are or not.

Q. It is certainly true about Trotsky and Seneviv.

A. Certainly true.

Q. And they were very important. {874|875}

A. Very important.

Q. So they had this belief and so that they assumed the Commissars were Jewish. Right?

A. Well, I would not go so far as to say that. Not even Hitler had that thought. I don't think even Hitler may have thought that.

Q. Oh, it's hard for us to perceive what Hitler thought, isn't it?

A. Yes, indeed it is.

Q. Now, in your testimony in-chief you said that there were perhaps forty thousand affidavits at trial, or documents. Well, I will quote you, and you said yesterday morning:

"From this I could tell you that the prosecution documents at the first Nuremberg Trial were approximately forty-five hundred, five thousand, including affidavits, that the prosecution documents in all the subsequent trials which I have mentioned aggregated roughly forty thousand documents, including affidavits, but in addition, there were many defence documents."

That is what I recall you saying. That is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would like you to tell me if you recall testifying at the preliminary hearing of this matter. Do you?

A. Well, it happened a while back. {875|876} If you would like me to recollect what I said, go ahead.

Q. Right. But what I am going to ask you, am going to read to you – do you know John Fried?

A. Yes.

Q. Professor Fried from New York City?

A. Yes.

Q. He was called as an expert with you at the preliminary. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And he was an expert in Nuremberg because he was there and whatnot.

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, I am going to read to you what he said and ask for your comment as to whether this is true or not:

Q. Well, what comment, if any, do you have to that proposition, Mr. Fried, about fraudulent affidavits? Can you tell us how the affidavits were obtained?

A. Altogether?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I think there were well more than a hundred thousand by the defence alone.

Q. By the defence?

A. By the defence. There were an incomparably smaller number by the prosecution in these affidavits insofar as deliberations that were never used without the affiant testifying in open {876|877} court.

Now, do you consider that truthful, or erroneous?

A. I think that seems to be what a man recollects as having happened, and I see nothing especially wrong with that.

Q. He was there and you weren't. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. You say forty thousand. He says a hundred thousand.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He said a hundred thousand defence documents, and Dr. Hilberg has testified about forty-five hundred prosecution documents.

THE WITNESS: Yes. And many more defence. That is what I said.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, when you said, "aggregated roughly forty thousand documents, including affidavits, but in addition, there were many defence documents", you mean there were only forty thousand prosecution documents?

A. Yes.

Q. And there were many from the defence?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you sure this is accurate?

A. As I said, the numbers are accession numbers so one could easily add them up, and I did that years ago.

Q. Is that from the twenty-five thousand feet of shelf space that you referred to? {877|878}

A. No. I am only referring Nuremberg documents, which is a rather small percentage.

Q. Right. In your evidence you dealt with the subject of Rassinier who you said did some concoctions on your statistics.

A. Yes.

Q. You said that the document, "Did Six Million Really Die?" was false because it attributed to you the figure that was not your figure.

A. That's correct.

Q. I suggest to you that Professor Rassinier, in his book, attributed the figure to you after he prepared some calculations from your figures.

A. Well, that conforms with my testimony. He found certain figures in my book ...

Q. That's right.

A. ... and then he, as I testified, concocted certain numbers and then came out with this eight hundred some odd thousand total.

Q. Yes. Well, isn't it true that he referred to your statistics as fog?

A. That he referred to them as fog?

Q. Yes. Fog.

A. Very possibly, if he is liberal in his characterizations.

Q. Yes. Just this sentence here.

A. I might add that the copy I have is a German translation, which is in several respects different from the French original. So this may have been the first time I have seen that phrase.

Q. Well, am I right in my understanding? {878|879}

A. Well, good enough, yeah. Again, I don't want to be, here, a translator from the French.

Q. Well, you understand it. Doesn't that say that, "The study that I have made of Mr. Hilberg's statistics ..." – is that what it says there?

A. Well, to him it appears to be that number, 896,000.

Q. 896,892.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, that's just the figure that is given in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" as attributed to you.

A. Yes, but in the book it is attributed to me, period.

Q. I agree it is.

A. But I have never made that statement. I have never published such a figure and I have never —

Q. That's right. Just read that sentence in English, if you would.

A. It appears that this figure is my figure, from this sentence.

Q. Yeah. This sentence.

A. That is what he says.

Q. I agree. It is not what you say; it is his mistake; right?

A. In this work a figure is attributed to me.

Q. Correct, sir.

A. And I testified that I had never, never given such a figure, anywhere, period, finished.

Q. That's right. I understand. But {879|880} this book attributes that figure to you.

A. Is this book in the footnote, referring to the "Did Six Million ..."?

Q. It is in the content. But answer my question. Doesn't this book, the book of Paul Rassinier, attribute that figure to you?

A. Yes, he does.

Q. Okay. So if you have a quarrel with whether that's accurate or not, it is a quarrel with Mr. Rassinier who said it was your figure, even though quite concede you say it was not your figure.

A. But it is not my figure, and this pamphlet does say it is my figure.

Q. Yes, because it quotes this book which says it is your figure.

A. But it does not say in the sentence, the two sentences in which this figure is attributed to me, that this is taken from some book.

Q. It does say it is taken from this book, sir. Read the first paragraph where it is referred to as your figure, which you say is erroneous.

A. He concludes, Rassinier concludes certain numbers.

Q. Yes. And he refers to the lower estimate of 896,000 in a study of the same problem of statistician Raul Hilberg.

Q. Yes. He attributes it to you. That is erroneous, isn't it?

A. That is totally erroneous. It is a concoction.

Q. But he says Rassinier attributes it {880|881} to you, doesn't he?

A. Yes, in this paragraph it does. There are two mentions of it.

Q. Yes, sir. And the ones on the next page. So if you want to look at the next page, I agree with you.

A. Okay. He says the Jewish statistician Raul Hilberg estimates it at the lower estimate of 896,892.

Q. But you see my point, I trust. He is saying that Rassinier attributed it to you, which Rassinier did say, although Rassinier was wrong in attributing it to you.

A. Well, I will say this much. You have found the French edition, and in my German edition it is different. And it is not attributed to me in the German edition.

Q. But it seems to be in this one.

A. It seems to be in this one.

Q. So if Harwood made a mistake in saying Rassinier had attributed it to you, he was accurately reporting what Rassinier said, although Rassinier was wrong. Isn't that true?

A. We can leave it at that, sure.

Q. As far as this edition is concerned, that is a fair statement?

A. As far as this edition is concerned, and that page.

Q. Well, that's right. But it's that page which gives that figure, though.

A. Okay. {881|882}

Q. But apparently Rassinier altered the edition later to reflect that he was just analyzing your statistics. Correct?

A. That seems to be the case.

Q. I understand now. So – okay. I think understand. Did you give any consideration to trying to understand how Rassinier came to this conclusion about 896,892?

A. Well, I did give some consideration to it, of course, but —

Q. I agree you don't agree with it, but can I just try and understand it so that we know what it was he was doing with your figures which you disagree with?

A. He took two columns from —

Q. Can I describe it and you correct me if I'm wrong? Maybe I can put it in quick words. He took the number of those who were counted, according to you, in 1931, and he took the survivors in 1945, calculated the difference, and then he took from that a number that he called "recovered immigrants".

A. That's right.

Q. And that's where I think where you would say his error comes in.

A. Well, error is a mild word.

Q. Well, you would consider it, somehow, deliberate. You think that he was trying to distort things?

A. Yes.

Q. But that's what he did; right?

A. Yes. {882|883}

Q. Okay. It is my understanding that you indicate that we should not take what we call the survivors away from the total that were counted in '45. Right?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. Well, I will leave that question. But I think I've explained, I hope clearly, and you agree with me, that's the error that you feel Rassinier has made.

A. Yeah. Well, it's – "error" sometimes refers to some misinterpretation of some documents, and this is a lot more than a misinterpretation. This is sort of an invention of figures.

Q. You think so.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. You don't think we should even consider that there were immigrants that came to – just let me finish, please, sir.

A. Sorry.

Q. During the War and shortly thereafter there were masses of emigrants from Europe of Jewish origin who entered the United States and were not counted as being of Jewish origin. Do you agree that there was no census of the religion of emigrants to the United States in those years?

A. The Commission did count the Jews, particularly, among the displaced persons, and very, very, few people entered this country prior to then because of the quota in the United States then in effect.

THE COURT: When you say "this country" ...

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry. The United {883|884} States. I'm sorry.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could we just have a look at your statistics, sir? In your book – I believe it is in front of you ...

A. Yes.

Q. And I think I may have left inside of it the German version of the affidavit of Becher. Is that right?

A. Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: perhaps if I can file that, just as an exhibit for identification – it is of very little value in German, I suppose.

THE COURT: It is of totally no value. This is a trial in English. But it has been referred to. I will mark that as an exhibit for identification, but it is, as I said what is that, madam clerk?

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit "I" for identification.

— EXHIBIT "I" (For Identification): Affidavit in the German language sworn by Kurt Becher.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could we turn to Table No. 1 in your book, sir?

A. What page is that? Oh, yes. Page 5. Yes, I've got it.

Q. Is this figure giving a figure for Polish survivors?

A. I'm sorry, I am looking at some thing else. When you say Table which page do you mean? {884|885}

Q. Well, I'm afraid it is not in my notes, and until it is I am going to move to another area. I see it's on page 670 of your book, where you get involved in statistics.

A. 670, yes.

Q. And I think it says, "The Jewish Population Loss 1939-45".

A. Yes.

Q. Now, under "Poland" you have 3,350,000 survivors in 1939 and 50,000 in 1945.

A. Yes.

Q. In Table 2, which says, "Postwar Jewish Population Changes in Eastern Europe" —

A. You are changing the numbers of the tables, so you must give me the page numbers.

Q. I think it is Table 96, actually. It is on page 737. I'm sorry not to give you the page.

A. All right. Got it.

Q. Okay. Now, that says, "Postwar Jewish Population Changes in Eastern Europe", and then it says "Poland" "Survivors and Returnees 1945-46" 225,000 survivors.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, where did the extra 175,000 Polish Jewish survivors appear from?

A. From the Soviet Union. These are repatriates. These are part of the two hundred thousand people or so that fled or otherwise located in the Soviet Union. That is the reason that we got returnees as well as survivors. These are not all survivors, and the year here is 1945-46, rather than 1945. So these are two {885|886} different counts, two different groups of people.

Q. So you count the number of surviving returnees as 225,000.

A. Within the Polish frontiers, postwar boundaries by the end of 1946, yes.

Q. Although you list the Polish survivors in '45 as fifty thousand.

A. Yes.

Q. That being Jews?

A. In other words, if you subtract that fifty thousand from the two hundred and twenty-five, you get the approximate number of people who returned from the Soviet Union who are technically not survivors, but have fled.

Q. What I am saying is, are you relying on Soviet statistics to say what people stayed in the Soviet Union?

A. We have to rely on something in life, and in this particular I have relied not only on the statistics of the Soviet Union, but postwar Poland, and Poles did record the number of survivors or returnees. We have this data. Virtually the entire postwar population of Poland has since emigrated, so we have a further check in knowing where the Jewish population of Poland went, roughly, at least, since the vast majority went to Israel; thus we have a ballpark figure, or a good idea of the correctness of this data.

Q. That's the number of returnees.

A. The number of returnees.

Q. That's the 225,000.

A. Yes. That includes mostly the {886|887} returnees. That is about 175,000 returnees. There may be a few more, because the boundary changes took place, and there were, in Eastern Poland, a few thousand more in the territory of Poland that is now part of the Soviet Union.

Q. This figure, then, is based upon an estimate from Polish authorities as to the number who returned in '46.

A. No. This is not simply an estimate, because the repatriation took place after an agreement had been made between Poland and the Soviet Union, and these people returned in trains that had definite numbers of passengers, special trains; and so that is actually a count; this is not a simple matter of individuals crossing frontiers and so forth.

Q. How do you know that all the Polish Jews returned to Poland?

A. We do know something about the Jewish population in the Soviet Union from subsequent census data of the Soviet Union.

Q. Do all Soviet Jews announce themselves to be Jews?

A. Well, that's an interesting question and much debated. There is some speculation in this matter, if you want to call it that, in the initial postwar census that it may have understated the number of Jews in the Soviet Union in the sense that, perhaps, not all of them identified themselves as Jewish; but the subsequent two census are rather different in the sense that now people do identify themselves as Jewish, given the possibility, at least, of emigration, and in matters pertaining to {887|888} half-Jews, that makes some difference inasmuch as I understand the Soviet procedure, a sixteen-year-old can choose whether he wishes to be Jewish for nationality purposes in the census, or Russian-Ukrainian, as the case may be.

Q. So all of this is rather complex, isn't it, Doctor?

A. It is not simple.

Q. No. Isn't it true that the whole of Poland was moved bodily westward by hundreds of millions [miles] after the War in terms of boundary?

A. It was certainly moved westward, yes.

Q. And isn't it true that it is really difficult, if not impossible, to give any accurate figure for Poland when the Polish frontiers were so radically altered after the War?

A. Well, it all depends on how much accuracy you want.

Q. I agree. But it is very difficult to give accurate figures in those circumstances.

A. I have spent many hours research in the matter, so it is certainly not easy.

Q. If the Germans had an official [official] policy of exterminating the Jews, how is it that there were as many as 3.7 million left at the end of the War?

A. The principal number of those left are, as you could see from that table, in the Soviet Union, and —

Q. They were Jews, I suggest to you, that had been in Poland previously and had gone to the Soviet Union to get away from the Germans. {888|889}

A. Well, some of them. But you see, we know the census figure for Poland for 1931 and the extrapolation to 1939. We also have a census figure for the Soviet Union for January 1939. So that we have some idea, although one may argue as to whether casualties occurred as a result of action within the pre-War Polish frontier or as a result of action within the pre-War Soviet frontier. Nevertheless, we have a pretty good idea of the total.

It's like a punching bag that if you want to make the figure larger in one area, you have to make it smaller in the other.

Q. Mm-hmmm. On page 767 you have a table that lists the statistics of Jewish dead.

A. Yes.

Q. In the table, on that page you give the figure for losses in France and Italy as seventy thousand.

A. Yes.

Q. Yet on Table 89 on page 670, which we had looked at earlier, the figure for losses for France and Italy works out to eighty-seven thousand. Why is this contradiction?

A. In the first place, my figure as represented in the second table for France and Italy combined, I now recognize to be too low. I was a bit too conservative. The number of losses from France alone is in the vicinity of seventy-five thousand, and to that one must add the Italian losses of roughly seven thousand.

Q. Are you familiar with the Klarsfeld publication for the deportations in France? {889|890}

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Mr. Klarsfeld listed all the deportees in France by name, date.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware that the figure you give for the total losses is very close to the figure he gives for the total deportees?

A. That's true. There were very few returnees from Auschwitz or wherever.

Q. All right. Looking at the table for the statistics on Jewish dead again at page 767, the total Jewish loss is given twice as five million one hundred thousand. Right?

A. Roughly. Mm-hmmm.

Q. In Table one, that is page 670, you give a figure of 5,407,500 for the total loss.

A. I do no such thing.

Q. Have you totalled the losses?

A. I deliberately did not. Mr. Rassinier totalled the losses, but not I. Now, please excuse me a minute. These figures are not comparable. One cannot subtract one from the other, because, as I clearly stated, the boundaries are different.

Q. Oh, I see. Okay. Why is the Table 1 loss for "Roumania" 370,000 — that is Table 89 in your book, page 670? For Rumania it is 370,000. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. The difference between 800,000 and 430,000, which is 370,000.

A. Yes. It is a substantial difference within the boundaries of Rumania. {890|891}

Q. Just a moment. Table 3 you give the losses for Rumania as 270,000.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Then again, that is just explained by the fact that you say the boundaries shifted. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. We've got a difference there of almost a hundred thousand.

A. Yes. There are post-war data that are used. In other words, post-war boundaries are used for 1945, as are clearly indicated in the table on page 670. Okay.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Post-war boundaries. However, pre-war boundaries are used in the other tables, so these, again, are not comparable figures.

Q. So do we take it that Rumania grew in size during the War, then?

A. No.

Q. Well, it seems to me that we have no problem there.

A. Well, let me clear up your problem.

Q. Okay.

A. If you were to adjust the boundaries to reflect the territories lost to the Soviet Union, then the number 430,000 would be increased so as to account for people alive in the areas ceded to the Soviet Union, and then you would see that the two figures would be comparable, or roughly comparable since 800,000 is very rounded.

Q. So when you use the statistics on {891|892} page 671 for Rumania, and when you use the table on page 767 and you say it's for Rumania, you mean two different —

A. Absolutely.

Q. I see. Two different countries.

A. Not two different countries, but same country with two different boundaries.

Q. It doesn't seem to indicate that in the table at all.

A. Yes. It indicates it very clearly. You just have to read it.

Q. Well, I read it.

A. Look at the first sentence in the footnote;

"The statistics for 1939 refer to prewar borders and postwar frontiers have been used for 1945."

That is a signal and announces to anyone with an ounce of competence not to subtract figures from the left, because they are not comparable figures. And this is just what Rassinier did.

Q. Is that the note you put in 767 to those statistics, or didn't you make such a note?

A. Well, again, I have said the data are for the boundaries of 1939, for this particular tabulation. "Borders refer to August, 1939". Clearly stated.

Q. Well, the losses, then, on the second table are for 1939 borders, the 270,000?

A. Yes. That's correct.

Q. But I thought you said that Rumania was bigger in '39 than it was in '45. {892|893}

A. Yes.

Q. Well, then, the losses for the calculations should not be larger; they should be smaller.

A. No. Go back. Go back a mile here.

Q. No. If it's impossible for me to understand, I think I will move along. Okay?

A. All right.

Q. Now, you gave the losses for Yugoslavia — I suppose they are the same problem — on Table 89 as sixty-three thousand, being the difference between '39 and '45. Is that because you say the boundaries of Yugoslavia changed?

A. No.

Q. So we have sixty-three thousand for Yugoslavia on the same boundaries, and we've always had — right?

A. Roughly. Sure.

Q. Okay. So then we get to Appendix III, which are the statistics on Jewish dead, page 767, and we have losses for Yugoslavia there, we have sixty thousand, rounded.

A. Rounded numbers.

Q. I see. Rounding off at —

A. Well, it's not just that. I must make some allowance for the fact that Yugoslavia was a theatre of war; some Jews were in the Yugoslavian

army, some were killed in action. In wartime birthrates dropped. Adjustments have to be made, and we are talking about three thousand. {893|894}

Q. I don't understand. Do you mean to say that you excluded from your figures anybody killed in action or as a result of the deprivations of war?

A. On page 767 we have the Holocaust dead. I didn't use the term "Holocaust", but that is precisely what it is. What we have on the other chart, it is totally unadjusted, before and after figures, not even aligned for boundaries. So this table should not be used, the one on page 670 – which for some unaccountable reason Rassinier used; he should have used the other one – should not be used except to find out what is going on and what is to be done with this data.

Q. Did you say you were a statistician?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. No?

A. No, I am not a statistician. This is the pamphlet. You are confusing —

Q. Oh, the pamphlet said you are a statistician.

A. Yes.

Q. And I am looking at all the explanations and I was going to ask you again if you were a statistician, but the answer is still no.

A. No. The answer is no. Because a statistician is a person with, at the very least, an undergraduate, and hopefully a graduate degree in mathematical statistics. I am not that person. I add and subtract.

Q. Yes. I see. You say that the explanation for the difference between Table 89 and Appendix III table for Greece is changing boundaries, as {894|895} well?

A. No. There are no changes in boundaries here. What are we talking about – two thousand people?

Q. That's right, two thousand.

A. The numbers on page 767 are, first of all, rounded to the nearest ten thousand, if not more. So if you will notice, I have resisted the temptation to be super precise where super precision is impossible; but also, I have taken into account that, in the case of Greece, as well as in other countries, the fact that there were Jewish soldiers who were killed, the fact that there were Jewish war casualties; and in the statistics of Jewish dead I am referring to Holocaust dead.

Q. And the difference in terms of Poland amounts to three hundred thousand, but that's, again, as a result of shifting boundaries.

A. That's a major shift. And returnees, yes.

Q. So we now understand that the statistics are an attempt to calculate the problems of varying boundaries and the possibilities of some being killed by deprivation of war.

A. A few, comparatively few, were killed in the course of War, yes.

Q. You consider that anyone who starved to death in the camp was, then, a Holocaust victim?

A. Yes.

Q. I see. And you consider that anyone who died from typhus in the camps is a Holocaust victim?

A. Yes. A Jewish person in a camp {895|896} was there because he was a Jew. So he is a Holocaust victim.

Q. I see. So that it doesn't mean you are saying these people were gassed, then.

A. No. If I say they were dying in certain camps, that means they died in those camps, be it as a result of gassing, or because of privation.

Now, when I speak of certain camps, virtually one hundred per cent of the victims were gassed, but in other camps, that's a difference.

Q. That brings us to the subject of gas chambers. Let's get to that point. Now, was there a homicidal gas chamber in Bergen Belsen in your opinion?

A. No. No.

Q. No. Buchenwald, in your opinion?

A. Are you referring now to gassings of Jews, or a gas chamber in which occasionally people were gassed?

Q. I used the term "homicidal gas chamber". I don't differentiate between Jewish people and others. They are the same.

A. Well, that's nice, but it presents a problem to me.

Q. Why the problem?

A. There were certain camps, and among them —

Q. Well, let's deal with just one – Buchenwald.

A. I will give you a short answer to save you a lot of questions. Natzweiler and Mauthausen, particularly the latter, had very small gas chambers in {896|897} which people were gassed.

Q. Let me deal with one at a time. I want to make sure I don't misquote you. Buchenwald, no.

A. I am not aware of a gas chamber for that purpose.

Q. Dachau?

A. That is a maybe, but I would not make the statement – you see, here it's a factual question of whether certain people were gassed or were not gassed, and this is a difficult problem to determine whether they were or weren't. Small numbers.

Q. Okay. Flossenberg. Yes, no or maybe?

A. These are all maybes. Probably not, except for a very small handful.

Q. Very small what?

A. Handfuls. Individual people – too weak to work, things like that.

Q. I see. Individual people, too weak to work. So you think there was a gas chamber, but it wasn't used much. Right?

A. Not necessarily. I am not familiar with all of the camps and their layout because my specialization is the gassing of Jews.

Q. I want to know whether there were gas chambers in these locations in your opinion: Neuengamme.

A. I don't believe there was a gas chamber there, but again, you refer to a particular kind, one which was used in order to kill people.

Q. That's right. We agree, don't we, that the word gas chambers for the delousing of —

A. Okay. Then fine. {897|898}

Q. Now, I am interested in homicidal gas chambers for the killing of people.

A. I will give you a short answer, and that is that it is a maybe, except for Natzweiler and Mauthausen.

Q. Okay. You say a maybe for Neuengamme. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's a maybe.

A. That's a maybe.

Q. Oranienburg.

A. Same thing.

Q. A maybe?

A. I am not aware of any gassings of people there at all. I have not even heard anything.

Q. You have not heard anything.

A. No.

Q. So do you take it that there is, or you take it that there isn't?

A. It is an open question. If somebody comes along and says, yes, there was, I will listen; otherwise I can't make the statement that there was. In other words, I do not know whether there was or whether there wasn't a gassing of individuals in particular camps.

Q. Sachsenhausen?

A. Same thing.

Q. What's that, a maybe?

A. Yes.

Q. Ravensbrück?

A. Same thing.

Q. Maybe, eh? Stutthof, Natzweiler, is that a yes? {898|899}

A. Those are two camps.

Q. Well, we'll put them together for the purpose of consideration.

A. Well, no, because in Natzweiler there were some gassings.

Q. There were?

A. As for Stutthof, there is some testimony to that effect, but I would not give it the weight that would make it, in my opinion, a certainty.

Q. Stutthof is then a maybe.

A. Yes. In Stutthof there were shootings.

Q. I see. Well, now, Stutthof Danzig is another camp, isn't it?

A. Not – Stutthof is near Danzig.

Q. I was talking about Stutthof near Natzweiler.

A. Oh, you mean Struththof.

Q. That is what I was trying to say.

A. Sorry. That is a maybe. That's a different camp. That's S-t-r ...

Q. Okay. Stutthof Danzig.

A. That is probably not. Probably not.

Q. Probably not?

A. Yes.

Q. Theresienstadt.

A. No.

Q. Mauthausen.

A. Yes.

Q. You are sure there was.

A. Yes. There's been very – most {899|900} recent scholarship in Germany has gone in very great detail about the gassings in Mauthausen of Soviet prisoners.

Q. Hartheim.

A. I am not even familiar with that camp. Excuse me, do you mean Hartheim?

Q. H-a-r-t-h-e-i-m.

A. Oh, yes. Let me explain, however, this is a different matter. There were, altogether, six facilities designed exclusively for gassing people —

Q. Well, let's deal with this one.

A. — of which Hartheim is one. It is not a camp.

Q. You are saying it is not a camp, but there was a gas chamber there.

A. Yes.

Q. Maidanek you say yes, definitely?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was what, steam or carbon monoxide, or ...

A. In Maidanek, which the Germans called Lublin, there were three gas chambers, and one or two – I am not sure, offhand, which – were equipped interchangeably for the use of the carbon monoxide or hydrogen cyanide. Both were used.

Q. Belzec had how many gas chambers there?

A. Initially, in all probability, three. Upon the expansion of the gas chambers in the summer of 1942, six.

Q. Six in '42.

A. Well, the initial three were also in 1942, but after some months, because of the heavy volume {900|901} of traffic into the camp, the rebuilding took place and six gas chambers were erected in lieu of the earlier three.

Q. Right. And you say that this was for what kind of gas?

A. Carbon monoxide.

Q. Just carbon monoxide?

A. Oh, yes. I might add, however, that the German court leaves open the possibility, based only on testimony, that initially hydrogen cyanide may have been tried experimentally.

Q. Chelmno.

A. Chelmno was equipped with gas vans. Carbon monoxide.

Q. Pardon?

A. Carbon monoxide.

Q. Carbon monoxide. Sobibor?

A. Those had gas chamber.

Q. Carbon monoxide?

A. Yes.

Q. Treblinka?

A. Carbon monoxide gas chambers, yes.

Q. And you've given, I think, in your book, an indication that the carbon monoxide gas chambers used old Russian diesel tank engines.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I put it to you, sir, that diesel engines don't produce sufficient quantities of carbon monoxide, but they actually produce mostly carbon dioxide. What do you say to that?

A. I can't really comment about it, because afterwards, when I had more interest in the {901|902} technical details, my understanding was – and it was left at that in the German trial – that what came out was a mixture of carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide.

Q. And you say that came from diesel engines in your book.

A. Yes. And the outflow was a mixture, but the proportions were not indicated, and when you mentioned Hartheim before, which was a totally different facility for mentally impaired people that were gassed there, that was chemically pure carbon monoxide, to distinguish it from the kind of mixtures that emanated there.

I did call it carbon monoxide. I still call it that for short, but it's a mixture.

Q. This is Hartheim?

A. No. Hartheim is pure bottled, chemically pure carbon monoxide gas.

Q. Now, you say these gas chambers, at Auschwitz, there was one, at Birkenau there were four. Right?

A. Well, first there were two huts, and then there were four more built, and then one of the huts was —

Q. We have identified on the plan what you are describing – the four gas chambers. They are called crematoria on the plan.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you are familiar with the source of the belief of what you said, and one of them, at least, is one Kurt Gerstein. Correct?

A. Well, that's one source, yes.

Q. It is one source that strikes me {902|903} as being important to you, because you refer to it ten times in your book.

A. Yes.

Q. You quote this man, Kurt Gerstein, and a document, PS-I553, ten-times.

A. Right. I wouldn't doubt it.

Q. I put it to you you do, having counted them.

A. Yes, I am sure you have.

Q. Now, you quote him because he gave a statement which, although it wasn't used at Nuremberg, it was used – rather, at the I.M.T., but it was used at the N.M.T. – the American trials. Correct?

A. Well, let me see.

Q. Just answer that question.

A. Yes, have used that document. You see, I don't use —

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: My question, Doctor, is whether it was used at the Nuremberg Military Tribunal of the United States, and it was – right?

A. I think it was, but I can't swear to that.

Q. Now, let's go slowly. I won't try to cut you off, but I want to deal with one question at a time.

A. All right.

Q. Now, isn't it true that Kurt Gerstein had, by that time, hung himself in a French jail?

A. Well, whatever the circumstances of his death were, he was dead. {903|904}

Q. Dead. Very dead. They did use, however, his statement, in fact, parts of his statement. Is that correct?

A. That is what I did. I used parts.

Q. Now, I am going to refer to the parts that you didn't use.

A. Okay.

Q. And it's true, isn't it, that Kurt Gerstein made a long, detailed statement in French on the 26th of April, 1945, which I suggest to you was some of the most incredible nonsense that you or I have ever looked at; do you agree?

A. Are you alleging that I used it, or didn't use it?

Q. I am suggesting you commented on it but didn't use certain parts.

A. All right. I would be very, very careful in the use of certain statements, that I would put Gerstein's statement as one that one must be most careful about. Parts are corroborated; others are pure nonsense.

Q. You would take parts that are, in your view, credible.

A. Yes.

Q. And leave out the parts that, in your view, were incredible.

A. That's a fair assessment, yeah.

Q. And when someone swears a statement such as this one was sworn ... Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. ... don't you think it reflects on the author that some of those statements are totally {904|905} ridiculous?

A. It certainly reflects on him, and the only answer I can give you here is that I am not a court of law.

Q. No.

A. And I am at liberty to take —

Q. You can take anything out of context that you like as far as I am concerned. I don't care.

A. All right.

Q. But I am asking you whether, as a commonsense principle, if you meet somebody that tells you that between twenty-eight and thirty-two people can be packed into one square meter, 1.8 meters high, that that person is either a fool or is a liar? Would you agree with me?

A. Well, on this particular datum I would be very careful, because Gerstein, apparently, was a very exciteable [excitable] person. He was capable of all kinds of statements which he, indeed, made not only in the affidavit but its context.

Q. He wasn't totally sane.

A. I am not a judge of sanity, but I would be careful about what he said.

Q. All right. I will put it to you what I suggest certain things that he said in his statement which was referred to as PS-1553, referred to and quoted as authority by you ten times in your book.

A. Are you quoting from the statement as I used it, or as he made it?

Q. As he made it.

A. Oh, well. All right. {905|906}

Q. We are going to deal with it as he made it, not as you used it. Okay.

A. All right.

Q. Now, he did say that seven to eight hundred persons were crushed together on twenty-five square meters in forty-five cubic meters; didn't he?

A. Well, what do you want me to say to that?

Q. Just yes or no.

A. Whether he made that statement?

Q. Yeah.

A. Well, if you've got the document there, it speaks for itself.

Q. That's right. But you are the expert, and I ask you whether it meets with your recollection, and if that is the statement you used as your authority.

A. Did I use these data?

Q. No. You ignored that part of the statement, but this statement, taken as a whole, includes that data, doesn't it?

A. We have no quarrel on that.

Q. Well, just yes or no, then.

A. Yes.

Q. So did you think that that was just a mistake, that he had said that in error?

A. It's very hard to characterize the man, because he was capable, in his excitement, of adding imagination to fact. There is no question of that.

Q. And he refers to Hitler and Himmler being there to witness gassings. Right? {906|907}

A. Totally false.

Q. Well, did he say that?

A. He attributed to someone else the statement that Hitler was there. And Hitler wasn't, because Germans researched that subject.

Q. And we know that to be a totally false statement; right?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And it was one of the statements Gerstein made.

A. Yes.

Q. He then also said — in fact he said twice — that seven to eight hundred people were crushed together in twenty-five square meters in forty-five cubic meters. He said it twice.

A. He may have said it three times as far as I know, but I didn't use that statement.

Q. No. I realize you left that out. Now, would you agree with my calculations that seven to eight hundred persons in twenty-five square meters means between twenty-eight and thirty-two people in one square meter? Would you like to just calculate that?

A. Well, look, I won't go through the arithmetic. I trust yours.

Q. But it is my understanding that you actually made a calculation that supported that proposition. That's what I understand from reading your evidence at the preliminary hearing. Am I wrong?

A. I do not recall the exact question asked of me, but I do remember an answer to the effect, to the other counsel, that you'd be surprised as to how many {907|908} people could be squeezed into a space.

THE COURT: I would like to read the question, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I was looking for it.

Q. It is at page 128 of your cross-examination, and it was a rather long question. I suppose I could read it all. Now, unfortunately, Volume I of the green series we are looking for is not available. Another copy was obtained. I have given my friend one. I will produce one to the witness and one to Your Honour.

I will refer you specifically to page 253, about halfway down the page where it refers to seven to eight hundred crushed together in twenty-five square meters and forty-five cubic meters. And further down it refers to seven hundred and fifty persons and four times forty-five cubic meters:

Now, I submit to you that just logically or mathematically it would be physically impossible to put eight hundred people into twenty-five square meters at anyone time. Would that seem to you that that might be an exaggeration?

A. Well, I have made the calculation and it is amazing how many people can be squeezed in, but if you will permit me, I will say a few words, because I know what you are leading up to in this affidavit.

Were you asked that question and did you give that answer? {908|909}

A. Yes.

Q. Now, sir, I just want to suggest to you that when a witness such as Mr. Gerstein seems to give this type of information, he is not someone who you should rely on as authority ten times in your book. Would you agree?

A. Well, let me say that the camps Belzec, Sobibor and Treblinka were with the undocumented camps in which I was interested. Gerstein was an S.S. officer in charge of delivering poison gasses, hydrogen cyanide, and in that capacity he made his trip, which is verified, he did make the trip in the company of other people to Belzec, and also to another camp; and also verified is the fact that he made statements on the way back on the Warsaw-Berlin express train to a Swedish diplomat at the time, in fact confirmed by the Swedish Foreign Ministry.

To me, the important thing was that an S.S. officer had seen the procedures.

Q. Well, that's his story; right?

A. Yeah, but this is a corroborated story.

Q. How is this story corroborated, in view of the fact that no action was taken by any Swedish diplomat whatsoever? They totally thought the man was nuts.

A. I have no doubt that this could very well have been the impression, and here you have to keep in mind, it is 1942, someone who is very exciteable [excitable] tells an absolutely incredible story, something that had never been heard before, something utterly unimaginable [unimaginable] {909|910} and unprecedented — well, here is a careful diplomat; he is not going to immediately credit everything he hears.

Q. Thank you. Now, you said you did some calculations.

THE COURT: I think, Mr. Christie, we will take an adjournment. Fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:50 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Now, I meant to add, I am told that in referring ten times to Kurt Gerstein, you were quoting ten times PS-1553, and actually referred to Kurt Gerstein twenty-three times in your book for authority for the truth of what you are saying. Am I correct, sir?

A. Well, we can look at the index and see the number of references there.

Q. Well, if you want to do that, please do.

A. I don't regard the question as material in any way, but ...

Q. Well, that is not for me, but for you to decide. {910|911}

A. Well, I've got here three references and indexes to him in text, but there may be more in footnotes.

Q. Well, you wouldn't dispute that, then.

A. No.

Q. You said you made some calculations to see if the twenty-eight to thirty-two people, depending on seven or eight hundred, in twenty-five square meters was correct. What calculations were they that you made?

A. Oh, it's a very simple matter, because we worked with feet. When one lays out the number of feet, roughly —

THE COURT: You should know, Doctor, until recently we worked in feet, too.

THE WITNESS: And that gives one an approximate notion of the size of such a chamber, and one tries to figure out how many people may be squeezed into it, and it is a surprisingly large number.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, for the purposes of demonstration, I am going to and have prepared something that purports to be one square meter, and I am going to ask some people to come and stand in it.

THE COURT: No, you're no. You are not going to ask anybody to come and stand in it without my permission.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, may I?

THE COURT: Would you excuse us, members of the jury, please?

— The jury retires. 3:55 p.m. {911|912}

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, if you are going to be innovative, you might have the good grace to discuss it with me now.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry. I didn't think it would be a problem. I can see now how it would come as a surprise.

THE COURT: What do you propose?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, actually, have some people to try and stand in one square meter, and just demonstrate that the figures are preposterous. And that's all.

THE COURT: Why wouldn't you ask the witness if they are preposterous so that we don't have a whole lot of people standing in a courtroom in a trial such as this in what you say is one square meter? I don't want to become technical with you, but before I could allow the jury to accept one square meter, I would have to hear a lot of witnesses who measured it.

Is that really necessary, when you can ask the witness a perfectly simple question and get the answer first?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, yeah, I did.

THE COURT: Why don't you ask him? He said you'd be surprised how many people you can get in one square meter. Now, do you want to see how surprised the jury gets? Why wouldn't you ask him whether or not that is, to all intents and purposes, in commonsensical everyday living, ridiculous, and see what he says. Ask him now, and perhaps then you will get the answer without having a lot of people being — I don't know who you are going to get to stand in the meter. Do you have people {912|913} outside the door to come and stand in it?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. I have people in the courtroom who are ready to do so.

THE COURT: Well, do you want to ask the witness the question first?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

Q. Witness, do you agree it is a preposterous statement, totally ridiculous statement?

A. I don't know whether I would characterize it that way. You know — how many square meters did you say again? How many was that again, twenty-five?

Q. Well, he said seven to eight hundred people in twenty-five square meters and twenty five cubic meters, and he describes that as one point —

A. All right. Square meters will do, because they are not crouching down.

Q. That's right. But to make sure we understand the height, he does say in a couple of places 1.8, or 1.9 meters high. So that is how you get the cubic area. So I say that is an utterly preposterous, ridiculous statement, and I thought you indicated that it was not ridiculous.

A. No. What may be surprising is that the order of magnitude, the number of people one can push in such places, is in the hundreds. It may not be eight hundred; it may be three hundred. Moreover, this particular witness may not have estimated the area quite correctly.

We don't know what size of gas chambers he is referring to, so I would not characterize the statement as totally preposterous, but neither did I accept {913|914} it and I wouldn't use it.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If I may, this is my objection, and I was three times ready to get up. Dr. Hilberg has repeatedly indicated he has not used those figures, and he only used those parts of the affidavit that he could corroborate.

THE COURT: Yes, I heard all that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: So I don't know what the purpose of all of this is.

THE COURT: What is the purpose?

MR. CHRISTIE: When somebody quotes in the book, twenty-three times, and ten times refers to this document as authority for propositions, they shouldn't pick and choose what is credible from what is incredible if it is all sworn to be true by the same person. It becomes dubious when these things are in such an argument.

I suggest that the person with this argument is deluded, or hallucinating, specifically, "twenty-five million killed, mountains of clothing, thirty to forty meters high."

I think that I am trying to show that this is a preposterous document which is used in its so-called rational part by this expert witness as authority for his theory.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The jury, Your Honour, in a courtroom, is entitled to accept some, all or none of a given witness, and surely that is what Dr. Hilberg has done in his assessment of the affidavit, as an expert.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you have the last word.

MR. CHRISTIE: If the jury is entitled {914|915} to consider some, all or none of any witness' testimony, I quite agree, but in the usual —

THE COURT: That would have to be the law.

MR. CHRISTIE: But in the usual course of affairs, they have opportunity to hear cross-examination, and they can see where a witness is either mistaken or lying or dubious. If an authority such as Dr. Hilberg relies on an expert or witness such as Gerstein, quotes him as authority for his argument and that document, which he alluded is only used in part, the ridiculous portions being edited out, the ability to show that that document and its author are dubious is eliminated, if my friend is right to circumvent my cross-examination such that I was not entitled to lead evidence to show that the source of the Doctor's opinion is a ridiculous [ridiculous] source, then I don't think I have done my job, which is to demonstrate that the basis of this belief both of Dr. Hilberg and his expert opinion.

THE COURT: Anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: No.

—— {915|916}

RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused, during the course of his cross-examination of the witness,

Dr. Hilberg, proposes, in the presence of the jury, to demonstrate, through the use of certain "props" being persons in the audience in the Courtroom, to stand them up in front of the jury within the confines of some sticks he has placed on the floor in front of the jury box. He tells the Court that the arranged sticks constitute a certain specific measurement being his own concoction.

His purpose in doing so is to discredit the testimony of this witness. Dr. Hilberg has testified that he employed, as part of the background for his evidence, the contents of an affidavit or another type of narrative document said to have been given by a Nazi war criminal during the course of either the Second World War or in the period of time soon thereafter.

The subject matter that is under discussion in the cross-examination of Dr. Hilberg is a portion of that German narrative affidavit which was not employed by this witness as supporting material for the field of expertise in which I permitted him to testify as an expert. {916|917}

I should hasten to add that another portion from the same German affidavit, which is not the subject of this discussion, has been employed by this witness in his own writings and as a small part of his expertise in his field of endeavour upon which he has been authorized by this Court to testify as an expert.

Counsel for the accused is perfectly entitled to attack the credibility of any witness, including the one who is presently being cross-examined. It becomes a question of my discretion whether I will permit what I would regard as a type of sideshow in front of the jury. I will not permit it because it would constitute precisely that. It will not happen for that reason.

Perhaps a stronger reason, in law, is that in my view the subject matter of the cross-examination is such that, while it may indirectly have the effect, through the jury's eyes, of affecting the credibility of the witness, the information that is put to the witness by defence counsel, emanating as it does from the long-deceased German Officer, is not going to be considered for the truth of its contents by this jury. Its use would {917|918} only be to have the jury decide what weight, if any, the jury will attach to the overall evidence of this witness.

For those reasons, this application, made at my behest and not by counsel who proposed it in part at the beginning in front of the Jury, will not be permitted.

THE COURT: Now, please pick up those sticks and get on with your cross-examination.

MR. CHRISTIE: Can I ask another question before I get caught in anything else?

THE COURT: I will let you know that when I hear the question. What is it?

MR. CHRISTIE: The question is, can I ask questions pertaining to other parts of the Gerstein statement which has been alluded to by the witness on twenty-three occasions in his learned work to demonstrate the lack of, shall we say, credibility in that work, thereby to demonstrate the reliance put upon it by the expert witness as illfounded?

I specifically allude to the part of the Gerstein statement where it refers to: Twenty-five {918|919} million people killed, clothing forty-five meters high, Zyklon-B, 175 kilograms, enough to kill eight million people; Mauthausen and even Gussen, these are the places in which millions of people disappeared in gas chambers, or gas chamber-like cars. The method of killing children is to hold a tampon with the gas under their noses. At Oranienburg I saw the prisoners who were there being perverts and homosexuals disappear in a single day, and I am ready to swear to the truth of all my statements.

These remarks, in my submission, demonstrate that an expert such as the witness at bar should not edit the portions of his reference to Gerstein which he has acknowledged doing, and acknowledged as patently ridiculous as taken out of context, and that is what the Crown accuses the author of "Did Six Million Really Die?" as doing, and I want to demonstrate that there is a certain amount of poetic licence being used by this expert in parts of what is otherwise a questionable document. Thank you.

THE COURT: I have no comment to make on that. I have heard no objections to any of your questions up to now from the Crown. I do not propose to restrict your cross-examination in advance of your asking the {919|920} questions. If the questions are proper, you will be permitted to ask them. If they are not, you will not. It is as simple as that. Bring in the jury, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: . May I have time to do what Your Honour ordered me to do?

THE COURT: Yes.

— The jury returns. 4:05 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Witness, I put it to you that the only person you make more numerous references to in your learned work than this Gerstein is one Hoess. Do you agree or disagree?

A. No. I totally disagree. The index is ample evidence of who is quoted how many times.

Q. Mm-hmmm. I put it to you that Gerstein being referred to in your book twenty-three times and quoted as to PS-1553 ten times is an important witness for your belief in the book.

A. He is an important witness for the fact of the existence of these camps, particularly Belzec, in 1942, the gassings that took place there with carbon monoxide. The fact that he, as a disinfection officer, as a dispenser of poison gasses, was present is significant. Beyond that I realized, of course, clearly, what sort of person this was from the context of the language he used, and did not rely upon any statements that appeared to me, {920|921} either imaginative or exaggerated. I did not use them.

Q. In fact, in your book, in your use of his statement, you eliminated all such ridiculous parts.

A. Well, I eliminated anything that seemed not to be plausible or credible, certainly.

Q. You consider that it was credible or plausible that eight hundred people could be crushed together in twenty-five square meters?

A. Well, as I indicated, the actual number who can be crushed in such a place may be in the hundreds. I wouldn't say that many.

Q. All right. You said it twice, though, sir, exactly the same both times. Do you agree or disagree?

A. Said twice what?

Q. He said the same thing twice.

A. He did?

Q. Yeah.

A. But the question of whether two or three hundred people may be squeezed in such a place, or seven hundred, becomes of interest when one looks at the gas chamber, the number of people gassed, and the calculations that may be made therefrom. It suffices for this particular S.S. Officer that there were gas chambers.

Q. That's right. You quoted him to prove that there were gas chambers and left out some of the things he said.

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, I notice from the book of Leon Poliakov, earlier, you regard him as an authority. {921|922}

A. I regard him as a capable researcher.

Q. He quotes extensively and accurately up to a point the same report of Gerstein.

A. Well, he used it more than I do.

Q. He also said something interesting. He suppresses that figure of seven or eight hundred in twenty-five square meters, and he suddenly turns it into 23 square meters, doesn't he, in his book, page 294?

A. Well, there are several versions of this Gerstein affidavit, and I really can't tell you which one.

Q. There is only one version of PS-1553, and that is the figure which has the figure seven to eight hundred, in that case, in the actual document, in twenty-five square meters, and he has actually changed that to twenty-three square meters, hasn't he?

A. I really cannot testify to that. I can see a number, but you are not asking me to pass judgment upon the manner in which a document was used by another researcher.

Q. It appears that somebody else thought that the figure was inaccurate and changed it, wasn't it?

A. I don't know whether he changed the figure, or as I said, if there is another version [version] of the affidavit that he may have made use. I really can't answer that.

Q. Thank you. Do you consider that a person who would make a statement like this is credible, that Belzec and Treblinka, nobody bothered to take anything {922|923}approaching the counts of the number of persons killed, the figures announced by the BBC are inaccurate [inaccurate] and actually about twenty-five million persons were killed, not only Jews, but especially Poles and Czechoslovakians, too, who were, in the opinion of the Nazis, of bad stock? Now, do you consider that a credible statement?

A. Well, parts of it are true, and other parts of it are sheer exaggeration, manifest and obvious exaggeration. To me, the important point made in this statement is that there were no counting at the point at which people entered the gas chamber.

Q. So you take the obviously exaggerated part out and used the part that you thought was credible, that there was no counting. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. I see. That's the process of your research.

A. Well, in certain situations, when affidavits are at stake, when long statements are involved and they do touch upon important matters, one must be judgmental.

Now, there are some things I would not use at all; there are some things I would use in part.

Q. This is one you would use in part.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. The part about the twenty-five million persons —

A. Obviously not. Rhetoric.

Q. Leave that out of your assessment.

A. Absolutely.

Q. Now, do you deny that is exactly {923|924} what he said in his statement?

A. Well, you know something, it is immaterial to me.

Q. I don't care whether it is immaterial to you. I want to know if that, in your opinion, was in the statement.

A. I would not deny anything. I don't even recall this, to tell you the truth.

Q. It was not something that was so unusual that it would stick out in your mind?

A. No, because of the fact that one tends to exaggerate numbers sometimes, and one does so, obviously, without basis in fact. Any competent researcher can see that and pay no further attention.

Q. Do you think that someone-who swears that, "I am ready to swear the absolute truth of all my statements" and says that, is a credible person?

A. Well, counsel, at the risk of offending every lawyer in this room, I don't go by whether a statement is sworn to or not. Certain people may make truthful statements not sworn to; others may make statements that are not based upon fact, even though sworn to; some people are not aware of the fact that they make misstatements. There are all kinds of possibilities here.

Q. Do you think either one of, those possibilities applies to this statement?

A. I think that Gerstein was somewhat given to great excitability, [excitability] in the course of which —

Q. And lying?

A. Well, I would not characterize it {924|925} a lie, because a lie is a deliberate falsehood. I don't know whether, in his mind, this was a deliberate falsehood. The fact that you characterized him, yourself, as not quite with it, what can you say about his motivations?

Q. Well, he was crazy, I suppose.

A. Well, I am not making diagnoses here, but —

Q. Would you say that somebody who would say twenty-five million people were killed at Treblinka and Belzec was a rational person?

A. I would not characterize him as totally rational, no, but that is of no value, because I am not the expert on rationality.

Q. I see. Well, he said further on, I put it to you, that there were eight gas chambers and whole mountains of clothes and underwear, thirty-five or forty meters high.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Do you think that was a rational statement? Do you think that was credible?

A. Well, the thirty or forty meters is a very interesting number, because how does one estimate the height of anything unless you are trained to do that? And on the other hand, if he says eight gas chambers, is that a more important dictum? Although I, myself, believe it was six, I could see how somebody thought it was eight given the number of doors and things of this sort.

Q. How do you know the number of doors, having never been there?

A. Well, the question as to how many gas chambers there were at Belzec at any given time is a {925|926} matter entirely of the persons who were there.

Q. And this is one of them, claiming to be.

A. Yes. But on the other hand —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps he could finish the answer, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Yes.

THE WITNESS: But there were a number of people who did not merely visit there, but who were stationed there, and who testified, repeatedly, as to the number of gas chambers.

Q. You don't refer to them ten times, sir.

A. No, because this book was a 1961 book, and the, testimony to which I refer occurred after the publication for this book. That is the reason for second editions.

Q. I see. You write that Gerstein — I put it to you that Gerstein said 275 milograms [kilograms] of Zyklon-B were enough to kill eight million people. Did he say that, to your knowledge?

A. I don't recall that. I honestly don't.

Q. He also said, according to this, he is alleged to have said Auschwitz and Mauthausen, Gussen, these are the places in which millions of people disappeared in gas chambers, or gas chamber like cars; the method of killing the children was to hold a tampon and press the gass [gas] under their nose.

Now, do you consider that true, or false news?

A. Well, there were massive gassings {926|927} at Auschwitz. I would not characterize it as millions, but certainly a million.

Q. Do you believe in the part of holding a tampon with gas under their noses?

A. I don't know about the tampons. I have heard repeatedly from witnesses about such killings. I have not cited them in the book because when it comes to certain matters of this kind, I am super careful.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Not so super careful about your sources, though, because this source says that was done, and swears it is as much credible as he does the rest of his statement.

A. Yes, but I quoted only those portions of his statement that seem to be credible, and I made no use of those that were not.

Q. Wasn't that editing? Isn't that taking out of context?

A. No, I do not think that that is taking out of context. Where a number of statements are made on separate points and separate matters, and so long as the intent and the meaning of what a person said is not tampered with, then I don't regard it as taking out of context. If a statement contains ten points, be they numbered or not, and I decide that two or three of them are credible, are correct, are plausible, I will make use of them. If I decide others are not so, I will not make use of them.

Q. I suggest to you that is what you did in relation to this statement of Kurt Gerstein. You selected the portions that you thought would be plausible and used Gerstein as your authority for your proposition. {927|928} Right?

A. No argument.

Q. But if anybody read the Gerstein statement, they might take a little different view of the rather plausible image you presented for this source. Would they not?

A. For the use I made of those portions of the affidavit?

Q. Well, I think, to put it back where I asked you before, you used the plausible parts and then referred to Gerstein.

A. Well, obviously, yes.

Q. Leaving out what is evidence, I suggest to you, of a very strange mind prone to exaggeration.

A. Yes.

Q. Because that would not be plausible.

A. That's correct.

Q. So the impression you leave when you quote Gerstein as your authority is that he is a plausible man.

A. No.

Q. No?

A. No. It merely means that he has made certain plausible statements, and that is another matter for being a plausible man. You could go into an institution for mentally ill people and get some rather plausible statements, and then total nonsense as well.

Q. Right.

A. You don't have to reject everything as a human being. You don't have to reject everything that he says. {928|929}

Q. I agree, but if I get a book describing a situation, and in it the author quotes a madman but he quotes the rational parts of the madman's statement and he ignores the fact that he is a madman and he ignores the fact that things he said are impossible, do you think I have an accurate picture, if I got the truth from that book?

A. Are you characterizing me, and are you wishing that I should agree with you?

THE COURT: Just answer the question, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Well, I really can't, because I deem it a rhetorical question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, let's put it this way. Gerstein was obviously incredible.

A. He was incredible for many people, and nevertheless, one may take people of that nature and discover that they have made certain statements that have certain value.

Q. All right. Gerstein made another statement to which you did not refer, on the 6th of May, 1945, before he died, which was introduced in evidence at Nuremberg, PS-2170. Is that not right?

A. You are saying I did not use it?

Q. That's right.

A. Yes, I didn't.

Q. Because it casts grave doubts, greater doubts on the credibility of this man, Gerstein, that you have referred to ten times as various authority for your propositions.

A. Look, it is entirely possible that {929|930} a man's condition can deteriorate. You, yourself, suggested that he committed suicide.

Q. So you are suggesting the second statement that you, yourself, referred to may have been as a result of a deteriorated condition and not the first?

A. I have never met the man, and I am not competent to make a diagnosis.

Q. No. Well, it's only about ten days later, for the second statement, sir. Would you agree?

A. Again, I am not a physician. I can only look at the statement that he made. I find nothing in it that I need, nothing that is persuasive or indispensable, so I don't use it.

Q. Nothing in it that you need, nothing that is persuasive?

A. Or indispensable.

Q. Indispensable to your theory.

A. No. To the elucidation of what happened.

Q. I see. Let me direct you to your document that I show you, which is PS-2170, introduced at the Nuremberg Military Tribunal on the 26th of October, 1945, dated the 6th of May, 1945, about ten days after the first statement that you referred to ten times in your book. I ask you to identify that as being the document that it says it is. Would you agree?

A. Yes, I've seen that.

Q. Now, there's some highlighted portions there. I would just like to check with you and see if that is what it says. You see the first one?

A. Highlighted {930|931}

Q. Yes. He makes all kinds of rather mysterious allusions to producing a certain quantity of prussic acid, right – 260 kilograms?

A. Yes.

Q. This man, Gerstein, was responsible for producing the prussic acid for the administration?

A. Well, the question you raise is a complicated one in jurisdiction, but – I'm sorry, but it is a complicated question.

Q. Well, I will try to make it simple. Isn't it simple enough to say that he was responsible for the concentration camp administration delivery and shipping of Zyklon-B?

A. That is true, but the camps at Sobibor and Treblinka were not part of the concentration camp administration.

Q. But he distributed Zyklon-B to Auschwitz?

A. Which was a part of that administration. That is the problem.

Q. To Birkenau, too.

A. Yes. That was part, and so was Lublin.

Q. And strangely enough, he distributed the same amounts of Zyklon-B to Oranienburg on the same dates, where there were no arrangements for killing people, according to you.

A. Exact amounts?

Q. Exact amounts in 1953 that we referred to earlier.

A. I did not make use of the numbers he asserts to have been calling for the deliveries made. {931|932}

There are documents, real documents signed by Gerstein —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Ask the questions, please.

THE WITNESS: — upon which one can rely. I mean, why take an affidavit if one has documents?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Sir, let's rely on the affidavit that you relied on in your book.

A. That's not this one, is it?

Q. No, but PS-1553 is a document filed at Nuremberg that gives the distribution of Zyklon-B to Auschwitz-Birkenau and Oranienburg in exactly the same amounts on exactly the same dates. Do you deny that?

A. Are you suggesting that I made use of this data?

Q. I am asking you if you know about it.

A. Yes.

Q. I am not misleading you, am I?

A. No.

Q. May I point out to you that if Zyklon-B was used for killing people in Birkenau, then there is no reason for it to not go to Oranienburg at all.

A. You see, Oranienburg was the headquarters of the economic-administrative main office from where it is entirely possible gas was distributed. I have no way of knowing that. I have no way of knowing what happened. The gas may not have been used at Oranienburg at all. It may simply have been stored there for shipments to another concentration camp. Oranienburg was the head of all concentration camp facilities. {932|933}

Q. May I suggest to you another reason for that? May I suggest to you that the real reason for that fact, which we agree exists, as to the distribution of Zyklon, is that it was used for delousing in both places in the same way?

A. Well, you are entitled to your suggestion, but please don't impose it upon me.

Q. No, I won't impose it upon you, but I suggest that is as logical an explanation as yours, sir.

A. Well, you are not asking a question.

THE COURT: He is entitled to put it to you, witness, the way he is doing it. What is the answer?

THE WITNESS: Well, I cannot agree. It is not a plausible explanation at all.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You do agree there are no gas chambers at Oranienburg for killing people?

A. My testimony was that I had absolutely no information about people being killed in gas chambers and Oranienburg.

Q. Could you turn to page 10 of the document I showed you? You will find a highlighted portion there. And is that also part of Mr. Gerstein's statement?

A. There are two highlighted statements. Which one are you —

Q. Starting at the top: Likewise tests were carried out with compressed air. People were put in boilers into which compressed air was forced, using the conventional blacktop row compressor.

Is that in that statement in those {933|934} words, in the first highlighted portion?

A. Yes, I see that statement.

Q. It is a pretty ridiculous statement, isn't it?

A. I cannot explain that one at all.

Q. It is pretty far out.

A. It is a far-out statement, and even taking into consideration that there were some far-out people in some of these camps, I would not credit it, and I have not used it.

Q. No. The next statement highlighted there, please follow me and correct me if I'm wrong when I give you the English version:

An approved method of killing human beings in Poland is that these people were made to climb the circular staircases of blast furnaces, then finished off with a pistol shot, suffocated ..... subsequently incinerated ..... however, in this respect my source of information is not one hundred per cent reliable.

Is that what he says?

A. Yeah.

Q. Now, that is, I suggest to you, 11 another rather incredible statement from Mr. Gerstein.

A. Well, he himself says it is not entirely reliable.

Q. He seems to state it is not entirely reliable.

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest to you that Gerstein, to whom you made considerable references, is a man of whom we should have grave reasons to doubt. Wouldn't you agree? {934|935}

A. I have testified before and will again that in the use of such affidavits, one must be extraordinarily careful.

Q. Now, you want to see how you used Gerstein in your book, "The Destruction of the European Jews"?

THE COURT: We will do that tomorrow.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, before we adjourn for the night, could I speak with you in the absence of the jury? Thank you.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, the same admonitions concerning coming to any conclusions, and other admonitions, still apply. There is a matter that I must deal with at ten o'clock tomorrow morning. I don't think it will take very long. Please be ready to come in at ten-thirty. Thank you very much.

— The jury retires. 4:30 p.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, again before the jury retires for the night.

THE COURT: All right. I will ask them to stay in their room. What's the problem?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The problem is, Your Honour, that I think as I indicated a week ago —

THE COURT: Do you want Dr. Hilberg?

MR. HILBERG: No, Your Honour. It is the Doctor's difficulty and mine that I am addressing you on. As I think I commented to you a week ago, there are scheduling problems involved in a trial of this nature {935|936} where people are coming in from other places who have other obligations, and I had initially scheduled Dr. Hilberg to be testifying as the first Crown witness a week ago, and because of argument, what-have-you, that was impossible and we re-scheduled it for him to commence his testimony yesterday.

I think, as I indicated yesterday, I had assigned two days to that, as had Dr. Hilberg. He has a class tomorrow morning that opens his new term, and he is most anxious to go and to attend to.

I also have here in town a witness from Vancouver who will be quite lengthy as well who I expected to start off with tomorrow morning, and I guess my request was going to be two-fold: One, if possible, to sit later tonight to complete the cross-examination. I know it's been a long day. If that's not possible, whether, if I could have a moment with Dr. Hilberg, maybe we can interrupt that cross-examination and have it continue on another day other than tomorrow.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, what are your views as of the moment?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, if there was some way that I could convenience Dr. Hilberg, I would. My client, every day, it costs him thousands of dollars to keep experts waiting, to keep people who are here waiting.

I am well aware the Crown has difficulties. They have more resources than we have to cope with it, and I must say that it wasn't our desire to cause difficulty, and I don't want to now.

THE COURT: What is your suggestion? {936|937}

MR. CHRISTIE: I can't see any other way than to proceed in the normal manner. I know it is inconvenient for witnesses. It happens all the time.

THE COURT: Are you in a position to say how long you will be?

MR. CHRISTIE: I can guarantee you that I couldn't finish it tonight.

THE COURT: You couldn't. All right. Does that make any difference to your thinking, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It may to this extent, if I may have a moment. Your Honour, I am obliged. I have spoken to Dr. Hilberg and it is more complex going in and coming back than it is to stay, so he will be here tomorrow morning.

THE COURT: Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

— The witness stands down.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 17, 1985.

(Volume V follows) {937|938}

[Volume V]

JANUARY 17, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything before call the jury?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Nothing from me, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: There is one question that I had. I just wanted to confirm what I understood, and that is that the jury no longer requires the booklets, I understand, if that is the situation.

THE COURT: I don't know if they do or they don't, but I will canvass that with them.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. If you will, thank you very much.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 10:45 a.m.

RAUL HILBERG, previously sworn.

Q. Dr. Hilberg, there are only a couple of things I want to raise from the Gerstein statement to which you made reference yesterday, but before I do that, I wanted to confirm that in your evidence so far, I think we have agreed that you indicate you are not a statistician; is that right, sir?

A. I am not a statistician as that term is understood and defined today, and I confine my operations to numbers with additions and multiplications and very simple things. {938|939}

Q. And statistics, as far as enumeration and census figures are concerned, is a technical field of endeavour, isn't it?

A. Well, it depends upon what one wishes to do with this data. I am qualified, I believe, to look at census data insofar as the question arises as to what they refer to. On the other hand, if one wishes to engage in very complicated projections, then I'd stay away from such mathematical operations.

Q. Mm-hmmm. That degree of qualifications that you have would be the same degree of qualifications of anyone who wished to make research into the field of statistics.

A. Well, I don't know what to say, though, in that regard, because "anyone" would comprise a large number of people in the college-educated person. Perhaps I've had one more math course than other people.

Q. Being more precise, your endeavours to find out accurate statistics is no more qualified in the academic science than that of Mr. Rassinier.

A. Oh, no, not at all. My ability to see statistics in a context and understand what numbers refer to is, I believe, superior to that of the gentleman you've just mentioned.

Q. Yeah. However, in terms of any academic [academic] qualifications in that field, you are not better qualified than he was.

A. Oh, yes, I am more academically qualified for the simple reason that statistics, numbers that are embedded in documents referring to specific events and occurrences, involve complicated issues, such {939|940} as boundaries and the like, and in this regard I am more qualified.

Q. What academic qualifications do you have in the way of any academic recognition in the area of statistics that is greater than that of Mr. Rassinnier [sic]?

A. I was not calling myself a statistician. I am called a statistician in the booklet. I have tried to correct the impression that it's possible, from the statement "statistician" in that booklet, by limiting my competence in this matter so as to involve only the numbers insofar as are referred to and are embedded in historical data, sometimes very complicated situations, and on that regard my training as a political scientist does entitle me to look at statistics with more understanding; and my preoccupation with this subject over the years has given me some ability to see what the statistics mean and what they don't mean.

Q. Is there anything else you want to add?

A. I believe that answers it.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So the answer, I suggest to you, is that you have no academic qualification in respect to statistics except you are qualified in political science.

A. That does give me some competence in looking at numbers and understanding them, yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, Mr. Rassinnier's experience, you are aware, was that of an inmate of a German concentration camp during the War; isn't that true?

A. That seems to be his statement. {940|941}

Q. Do you deny that?

A. I deny nothing.

Q. You deny nothing.

A. No. I deny nothing. It is simply a matter of what he states. I have not checked upon where he was. I was not interested.

Q. M-hmmm. Well, at least he claims to have had firsthand experience of concentration camps.

A. He is entitled to that claim. He has made that claim. He has checked upon it. I have no comment to make.

Q. And in his publications – you have read them – by no means was he a Nazi sympathizer, but a communist elected member of the legislative —

A. Whatever his past and whatever his reason for his incarceration, I can only look at the book he wrote afterwards, and that's the limit of my knowledge about him.

Q. In the book it certainly indicates that, doesn't it?

A. Whatever he was in the past, that is indicated. I have no comment to make upon it.

Q. Well, tell me whether it says it in the book or not.

A. I recall that it says that in his book.

Q. Thank you. I am not asking you to tell us whether it is the truth or not as you do about the other things you say, because in Mr. Rassinnier's work he says he is either a communist or socialist.

A. Yes. {941|942}

THE COURT: He has answered your question. What is your next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am aware of that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What is your next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was about to ask it, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please do.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You are aware he was an elected member of the Parliament in France – at least, he claims so in his book?

A. All I can say is what I said before. I can only agree about what he said about himself. I have not checked on anything.

Q. Oh, I know you have not checked on anything, sir, but in his book he said he was an elected member of the Parliament of France?

A. I don't recall all the details of what he said. I am quite willing to accept what you are saying. It is close enough as far as you are concerned.

Q. Do you recall how long he claimed to have been in the concentration camp in Germany?

A. I don't recall the number of years. I simply can't remember that.

Q. Mm-hmmm. But he, to you, was not credible.

A. Not credible.

Q. Right. I am going to read you from Gerstein, to which you attached some credibility, where he said, and I put it to you that he said, you having quoted him on ten occasions in your book: Missions of so-called {942|943} doctors, actually nothing but young S.S. men in white coats, rode around in limousines throughout the towns and villages of Poland and Czechoslovakia selecting the old and tuberculous people, shortly afterwards sent to the gas chamber.

Did you attribute credibility to that statement?

A. Well, I have not used it, of course, and it is a complicated statement involving a great many separate events some of which, indeed, did occur.

Q. Well, do you consider that one as having occurred?

A. There was a certain attempt to gas Polish people who were tubercular, on a large scale.

Q. I see.

A. The matter was put by a Gauleiter Graiser. He wanted to gas some thirty thousand Poles who had tuberculosis, and his reason was that they might infect Germans. In fact, that particular project was vetoed, but it was proposed.

Q. You are quoting another source. I asked you a specific question. I would like you to deal with the question, and then I will deal with the generalization.

A. Well, you mentioned illness and killing.

Q. I quoted a specific quotation, and I asked you if this is credible, and I will ask you if this is true in your opinion.

A. I tell you that there are elements of what appears in this global statement that are true, but I would not — {943|944}

Q. This is a global statement?

A. Well, because it does involve several regions, multiple events, and long periods of time.

Q. I suggest to you the statement in that respect is utterly fantastic, that young men in white coats did not ride around in limousines in Poland, Czechoslovakia or anywhere in the Third Reich picking up people for gassing. Do you maintain that to be true?

A. I have never said that this is true. I would not say that people in white coats pretending to be doctors rode around in vehicles or limousines. No, I don't think that this particular detail is sufficiently credible to be used by a scholar, nor have I used it.

Q. No. That's one of the parts of this material, the Gerstein statement, that you chose to ignore; correct?

A. Yes, I did ignore it.

Q. Yeah. But it's, nonetheless, from the same author of those things you chose to accept.

A. It is from the same author. I think we've been over that ground.

Q. That's right. But it's rather a new point, isn't it? We didn't discuss this yesterday.

A. I don't believe it is a new point, but please go on.

Q. Did I mention to you yesterday, does your memory tell you that I mentioned to you yesterday: Men in white coats riding in limousines?

A. No. It is in the gender of questions you asked before. {944|945}

Q. They are the same type; right?

A. Yes.

Q. But the point is, Dr. Hilberg, you chose to ignore that aspect of the statement and select what you thought was more credible; right?

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest to you that what you did was take the Gerstein statement and attribute credibility to it out of context with what is obviously incredible from the same author under the same oath in the same statement. Would you agree?

A. No. I disagreed with you when you made that statement yesterday, and I have to disagree with it today. Nothing has changed.

Q. Nothing has changed, yes.

A. I explained to you what I mean by "out of context". Out of context means the use of words by an author in such a way as to render the meaning he intended differently from the way that he intended it to be. That, to me, means out of context. It means to leave out qualifications. It means to leave out ifs, buts, however; but if a person makes a statement which can easily be segmented into ten different assertions or twelve different assertions or twenty different assertions and I find that ten are credible and ten are not credible, or that five are credible and fifteen are not credible, if I happen to choose those, which I find to be confirmed by others, which I find to be plausible in the light of events as I know them, then I'm not taking these statements out of context, of what he is saying.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You are taking them to {945|946} support your thesis.

A. I am taking them in order to create a larger canvas of the facts; if that happens to support my thesis, fine; if the thesis is not supported, the thesis will be modified.

Q. Yes. But when there happens to be parts of the larger canvas to which you attach this statement that are inconsistent with this statement so that the statement becomes incredible, you simply cut out parts of the statement. Right?

A. I think that there are several statements rolled into a single affidavit or deposition, and I have simply used judgment —

Q. Yes

A. — in the utilization of this particular material.

Q. Yes. Your judgment was that it will be best to leave out the parts that seem rather dubious; right?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Would you agree that someone looking at this Gerstein statement might take it that the whole thing was rather dubious? Would you give them the right to believe that?

A. I would give any right to anybody who was honest, who was cautious, who wishes to look at things cautiously. I am myself that way. I permitted myself the use of portions of this manuscript because I was familiar with other material that enabled me to use that particular statement. I also told you that I have seen documents signed by Gerstein at the time, so that it {946|947} is not the only statement, not the only Gerstein documentation.

Q. No. That's right. There's at least four or five of them, aren't there?

A. Well, there are letters, correspondence by Gerstein, too. When I keep using Gerstein, I have used correspondence by Gerstein, 1944 correspondence by Gerstein.

Q. But that is not what you referred to in your book. You referred to this document, PS-1553, eight times specifically by letter and number.

A. Well, look, sir, your number, the number of times I referred to this, changes every time. I don't know how you are accounting these things. Now, if you will check the record, you said once over twenty, now it's eight, then it's ten.

Q. Are you arguing with me about the number of times you used it?

A. You are the one that brought up the number of times I used it. I wish to be clear about one thing. There are letters written by Gerstein which I used. These are documents. These happen to be correspondence. These were written at the time of the events. Now, if you wish to confuse the issue, please go ahead and confuse it; but I wish to remain clear about things.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You say that you are not confusing the issue in people's mind by referring to a statement that obviously has totally incredible parts to it. That is not confusing people, eh?

A. I don't see why anybody should be confused unless they wish to be. {947|948}

Q. Well, if they read the statement and tried to attach credibility to it, it does create a problem, doesn't it?

A. Well, sir, the reason that there are people like me who write books is that we develop a certain amount of expertise in the use of these materials.

Q. Yes.

A. There is no need for anybody to trust my research. You can check any document you wish. You can come to any conclusion that you wish.

Q. Well, my question to you was directly, would you accept the fact that honest people, looking at the Gerstein statement that you referred to PS 1553 — could honestly take the position that it is totally incredible?

A. They could certainly take that position if they know nothing except that particular document.

Q. They could also, I suggest, take that position if they didn't believe you. Right?

A. Well, if they did not believe me after reading eight hundred pages, I don't know what to say, because that signifies the failure of a lifetime.

Q. Is that right? Well, just because people don't believe what you conclude in your thesis, that's a failure, is it?

A. That would be my failure.

Q. All right. But you must concede that some people decide things differently than you, and they should be free to do so. If they look at the Gerstein statement and they say it is incredible, they are free to {948|949} do so, in your view of the matter?

A. You have twice used the phrase "free to do so".

Q. I did. Do you agree or disagree?

A. I must qualify what I am about to say; I'm sorry, but I must qualify.

Q. Oh yes. Go ahead.

A. I do believe in academic freedom. I do believe that people —

Q. Are people free to doubt your word on the statement?

A. Certainly. If deliberate misconstruction and malice are not involved, I certainly believe that they should have that freedom.

Q. They are free to publish their opinion about the Gerstein statement?

A. Absolutely. Such a statement, such an article did appear in a rather prestigious German publication.

Q. Now, is it true that the Gerstein statement, the one we have referred to, is an important part of your book, because you rely on it to prove the number of deaths at Treblinka and Belzec?

A. No.

Q. Isn't it true that there is no other source for your figures in respect to Treblinka and Belzec?

A. In my book, the first edition, I do not give precise figures for Treblinka or Belzec because, at the time, I did not feel that I could give a figure for each of these counts. What I had in my possession was a {949|950} figure that applied totally, combined, to Treblinka, to Belzec and to Sobibor. That came from a German document.

Back in the nineteen fifties I was not able to break down that figure for those three camps. I am better able to do this now, but I did not do it then and I did not rely on Gerstein or anyone else.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You didn't rely on Gerstein when he said — and I am referring to the part where he says: Belzec, on the Lublin Hamburg road, on the sector of the Russian demarcation, maximum fifteen thousand persons a day (Seen). Sobibor, I don't know exactly where it is located (Not Seen) twenty thousand persons per day. Treblinka, 120 kilometers north north east of Warsaw, twenty-five thousand persons per day (Seen).

A. What I relied upon in the statement was the fact that he had been there, that he had seen the two facts to which he referred. I did not take from that statement his estimate of maximum capacity in the camps.

Q. So that part, too, then, was incredible, was it?

A. I did not say that. Just a moment, please. You keep on putting words to my mouth.

Q. I want to get to the point.

A. The point is that I had no basis, in those days, for making an estimate of the capacity, the daily capacity, or the total toll in each of these camps. I only knew the global figure to December 31st, 1942.

Q. Isn't it true, Professor, since you claim that you know about the transcripts of the Nuremberg Military Tribunal — that is, the American portion of the International Military Tribunal — that the judgment of the {950|951} court in the Pohl case, specifically that of Judge Michael A. Musmano, quotes extensively from Gerstein's document, PS-1553, and ignores parts of it, as you did?

A. Well, I would say that Judge Musmano had good cause to do what he did, that he was a capable judge.

Q. Yeah. Another case of selected editing for the reasons of the judgment. Right?

A. Now you are accusing a judge of the same thing you are accusing me of.

Q. That's right.

A. Fine.

Q. He did that, though, didn't he?

A. I don't quarrel with it.

Q. No. And your estimate of the executed persons, as you called them, or people that you say were gassed at Auschwitz, was a million, roughly.

A. Yes.

Q. You put that in your book. Right?

A. Well, I have that, yes. That was my estimate then. That is the recalculated estimate, roughly the same now.

Q. Yes. And part of the basis for that opinion, certainly at Nuremberg, was the admission of Rudolf Franz Hoess's affidavit. Right? The so-called Commandant of Auschwitz.

A. No. Let me – if you want me to explain how I arrived at that —

Q. I didn't accuse you of using Hoess. I am saying part of the Nuremberg judgment relied on the statement. {951|952}

A. Hoess was a witness.

Q. And he was quoted in that judgment.

A. And he was quoted in that judgment, but you are asking a complicated statement if you ask what a particular set of judges relied upon in coming to a conclusion.

Q. Am I? Well, I put it to you that this particular judge said what he relied upon in coming to his conclusion, and I quote to you from the transcript of his judgment, same judge, and he said, and I quote page 113 of the judgment of Musmano in the Pohl case – he is quoting Rudolf Franz Ferdinand Hoess, Commandant of Auschwitz which was from May 1st, 1940 to December 1943, he said that he estimated that at least 2,500,000 victims were executed and exterminated there by gassing.

A. Well, he is quoting Hoess.

Q. That is what I am trying to establish.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, did you say that you are quoting from a transcript?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am quoting from a Nuremberg transcript. I can show it to Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please, if you will. Is it a judgment, or the transcript?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is the transcript, judgment. The only transcript that is published. I am quoting from the trials before the Military Nuremberg Tribunals, Nuremberg, October 1946 to April 1949, Volume V, which includes all of the reported portions of the trial, and I am quoting from page – actually it's page 1131, and {952|953} it was the judgment of Mr. Justice, I suppose he is referred to as Judge Michael A. Musmano. Do you wish to see that?

THE COURT: Please.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I carry on, Your Honour?

THE COURT: In a moment you may carry on. Thank you. I have looked at it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, is it not true, sir, that apparently, from this judgment, a judge found, on the basis that a man who was himself, later, to be hanged, namely Mr. Hoess, that 2,500,000 were to have been executed there, and Hoess, of course, claimed to be an eye witness? Correct?

A. Hoess was there. Hoess was quoted. No question of that.

Q. And Hoess said, according to the transcript, 2,500,000 —

A. He made two statements about victims, and in one of them he made the statement that you quoted.

Q. All right. Let's deal with what I suggest, first. If you want to elaborate and discuss any other subject he may have said any other time, any other place, I am delighted to hear from you, sir; but let's deal with the question. He did say that, and it is quoted in the judgment as a finding of fact, I gather.

A. It is quoted.

Q. As a reason for the judgment. I showed it to you. You disagree with that?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, we haven't {953|954} heard that judgment.

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't propose to read the whole judgment.

THE COURT: Just a moment, Mr. Christie. I can only hear one at a time. Surely you can just contain yourself while I hear from Crown counsel. In the same way, he will contain himself while I hear from you. Is that agreeable with you?

MR. CHRISTIE: Always has been, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Then please don't interrupt.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I am objecting to the judgment or portion of it put to the witness, and I have no objection to that, but to start to characterize or ask this witness to characterize what the reasons for the judgment is, or the rationale, or that is what the judgment was based on, I don't know if this witness is qualified to do that, Your Honour. I haven't heard any qualification —

THE COURT: You don't propose to do that, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir. I haven't done that.

THE COURT: Then proceed.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Certainly that is what a judge quoted of Hoess. Right?

A. Right.

Q. And it appears that that figure, again, was twice what you, today, say was the truth. Right?

A. It's twice the figure that I give {954|955} in my book in 1961.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, didn't you give the figure in 1961 that you believe to be the truth?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say, then, that the publication I referred to and the judgment of the Court was false on that point?

A. It's an error in my opinion.

Q. Yeah. Twice the facts.

A. That's my opinion.

Q. The Court found twice as many victims as you find in your research.

A. The Court quoted Hoess to that effect.

Q. It would appear that Hoess is another important part of the belief of the six million.

A. No. He was the Commander of Auschwitz from the time it was founded until November 1943. He then was present in Auschwitz again during the summer of 1944. He was absent for some times from the camp on other duties. He does, however, have important information about Auschwitz.

Q. He was captured by whom, sir?

A. He was – I am trying to recall whether it was the British Army of occupation. I think it was in the north of Germany where the British were.

Q. He wrote a book in which he said he was beaten and tortured by the British; isn't that right?

A. I am not aware of his having said that in his book. I would be pleased to look at it.

Q. All right. I now produce and show {955|956} to you a book entitled, "Commandant of Auschwitz", the biography of Rudolf Hoess, translated from the German by Constantine Fitzgibbon, with an introduction by Lord Russell of Liverpool, published by Pan Books Limited, London, 1956, it appears.

I refer to page 196. I ask you if am reading correctly. when I say, looking halfway down the page, highlighted here, "At my first interrogation evidence was obtained by beating me. I do not know what is in the record, although I signed it." "1" is a footnote. It says at the bottom, "A typewritten document of eight pages which Hoess signed at 2:30 a.m. on March 14th, 1946. It does not differ substantially from what he later said and wrote in Nuremberg or Krakow".

Have I read it correctly, sir?

A. You have. I am not familiar with this edition. I have the German edition.

Q. I see. Do you think the content is different?

A. It may well be that I kept no immediate recollection of this particular passage in the German edition. I don't dispute what is stated here. It is his allegation. He said he was being beaten and that he signed a record.

Q. May I go on to read, sir, and you correct me if I am wrong? He says: Alcohol and the whip were too much for me. The whip was my own which by chance had got into my wife's luggage. It had hardly ever touched my horse, far less the prisoners. Nevertheless one of the interrogators was convinced that I perpetually used it for flogging the prisoners." Correct? {956|957}

A. You are reading, and —

Q. "I was taken to Minden on the Weiser, the main interrogation centre in the British zone. There I received further rough treatment at the hand of the English prosecutor, a Major." Footnote, see page 14 of Lord Russell's introduction for details of this interview.

Have I correctly set out the context of this statement, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And I have referred to the footnotes; correct, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, it would seem to indicate from his autobiography that he considered himself to have been beaten. Right?

A. It appears from what you read that he did consider himself to have been beaten with his own whip.

Q. Right. And he didn't understand what he was signing, he said, but he signed it anyway.

A. That appears what appears to be said there, yes.

Q. All right. Now, you quoted earlier from Frank Zierreis, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, he was a man who was kept in custody by somebody else [else], wasn't he?

A. Well, I don't know the precise circumstances inasmuch as they are somewhat complicated.

Q. Well; I will put some facts to you and you tell me if I am wrong. {957|958}

A. Yes.

Q. I put it to you that Frank Zierreis was the Commandant of Mauthausen in Austria.

A. Yes.

Q. That he was the recipient of torture in that he was seriously wounded by three bullet-wounds in the course of his interrogation, or immediately prior, that he knew he would die shortly, that he was interrogated for a period of six to eight hours during May 22nd —

THE COURT: You are going too quickly Mr. Christie. Even the competent reporter that we have, cannot take it down at that speed.

MR. CHRISTIE: I'm sorry. I will try to go a little slower.

Q. ... that he knew he would die shortly, that he was interrogated for a period of six to eight hours during the night of the 22nd and 23rd of May, and that he died that morning. That is all correct, sir, isn't it?

A. No, I can't say that. I've had and read about two or three versions of his wounds and his subsequent death.

Q. He died shortly after signing his affidavit, sir.

A. He certainly died shortly after the end of the War as a result of wounds he received. According to one version he had tried to escape; according to another version, angry inmates inflicted the injuries upon him. You have just read yet another version. Unfortunately, I cannot choose between these versions. I can only confirm {958|959} that he had wounds, that he did make the statement, and he subsequently died.

Q. You told the jury what his statement was about gassing tubercular people; right?

A. Excuse me? To whom are you referring now?

Q. Franz Zierreis. You quoted him.

A. Not in connection with gassing tubercular people; that was Gerstein. No. Excuse me. That was in connection with the question you asked me about Gerstein and attributed to Greiser, not this man. A totally different person. No connection.

Q. Again, for the record, I understand that you referred to somebody.

You don't say what they said. Correct, so far — you haven't said anything about what they said?

A. About what, Greiser?

Q. Greiser, yes.

A. I indicated to you to the best of my ability that Greiser had proposed the gassing of tubercular Poles in his area.

Q. So you put —

A. That's all that Greiser wrote at the time, so it's a document.

Q. Where is the document?

A. It is quoted in my book. If you wish to find it, it is easy to find it.

Q. Documents of destruction, or —

A. No. The big book.

Q. Thank you. Referring specifically to Franz Zierreis, I now produce and show to you the {959|960} affidavit of Hans Marcellis, which is a translation into English of document 3870-PS, again from the transcript of the Nuremberg Military Tribunal, and I read to you:

Franz Zeireiss was interrogated by me ... — this is Hans Marcellis, a policeman of the 11th Armoured Division —

... the former prisoner and physician, Dr. Kosinsky, and in the presence of another Polish citizen, name unknown, for a period of six to eight hours, that the interrogation was effected from the 22nd of May to the 23rd of May, 1945. Franz Zeireiss was seriously wounded, his body had been penetrated by three bullets, and knew that he would die shortly and told me the following ...

Then is quoted what is attributed to Franz Zeireiss. Correct?

A. Well, might I just simply —

Q. You go ahead and have a look.

A. Might I just simply add one thing. I don't know if it is in my rights to do so, but immediately above the line you just quoted is the statement that he was shot while being tried by American soldiers while escaping, which is somewhat different from the version you read.

Q. I didn't read it all.

A. Oh, I understand.

Q. You think that I was misleading you, do you?

A. Well, you read from a source that you do not identify. You were asking me to confirm something that begins in the middle of a paragraph, as a matter of fact, and in the sentence immediately before it {960|961} is the sentence that he was trying to escape. He was shot by American soldiers. He was then wounded. He was interrogated in the presence, according to Marcellis, of a representative of the 11th Armoured Division.

Q. And then the document was tendered to include the statement of the dead man. Right?

A. That is his recollection. That is Marcellis's recollection of what was said by Zeireiss.

Q. Yeah. And that's put into evidence to confirm the contents of the affidavit, isn't it, supposedly proving a gassing plant was built in concentration camps at Mauthausen, prisoners were gassed in this room, and it was done on the urging of S.S. Haupterfuhrer Dr. Krechsbach [Sturmbannfuhrer Dr. Krebsbach]. All of that is quoting the dead man, isn't it, who you say was shot while escaping? I am not arguing about that.

A. No. That's in here. I said there were three versions.

Q. Well, here's one that is sworn.

A. In this sworn version he was trying to escape and was shot while trying to escape.

Q. This was a prosecution affidavit, wasn't it?

A. You are asking, in essence, for my comment about the laws of evidence as used in the particular —

Q. No, I am not. I asked you if it is a prosecution document.

A. Yes, it is a prosecution document.

Q. I am not asking you about the laws of evidence, just questions of fact, because you, as an expert, have said that you read the volumes and — {961|962}

A. I have read this document, certainly.

Q. Well, then, tell me if that wasn't used, or was it used in the transcript of the proceedings.

A. I cannot tell you exactly whether it was used. I wouldn't be surprised if it was used to some extent. It is a prosecution document. I might add that the fact of a number such as 3870-PS does not mean that the document was introduced in evidence.

Q. It doesn't.

A. No, no. This is not ipso facto evidence of the document having been used in evidence. It merely means that it was collected by the prosecution, given a document number. It might then have been used; but not all of the prosecution documents have been used as evidence.

Q. This document appears to have had a number attached to it, and I thought you said in your evidence earlier that every document that was introduced got a number in sequence.

A. That's correct.

Q. Well, now, this has a number PS-3870.

A. It is an accession number.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that maybe they didn't consider it in their judgment, but that really it was before the Court.

A. I don't quarrel with that.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. I just wish to point out that just {962|963} because a document had a number does not mean that it became an exhibit.

Q. Oh?

A. I don't happen to know whether this one was or was not given an exhibit number.

Q. Well, this tends to signify, at least, the existence of a practice of people that were shot while trying to escape, shall we say, who died shortly after giving the statement and then, instead of introducing the statement with a signature on it, they quote the man who took it and include the statement. Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. That's what they did here.

A. Yes.

Q. And that's a practice that you don't have any professional judgment on one way or another, I suppose.

A. Well, do you want a professional legal opinion about the use of evidence —

Q. I am not asking for a professional legal opinion. I just suggest that it's something you don't seem to think, as an ordinary human being, with the same common sense that I have, you don't think that there is anything wrong with that.

A. I would say the following: When a man has been the commander of a concentration camp and is wounded, the question of whether he may or may not be interrogated is essentially a medical question. Whether the physicians were consulted or not, I have no way of knowing. When I look at the document — and I did look at it — I could use it or not use it, depending, once again, {963|964} as to whether or not the information contained in it seems to be credible, plausible, corroborated, confirmed or not.

Q. In the document that I just showed you that you said you read before, I suggest that it says that there was a million or a million and a half human beings killed in the Castle Hartheim near Linz. Did you believe that to be true?

A. There were people gassed at Hartheim, certainly not the number that you have just quoted, no.

Q. Well, that's quoted in the affidavit, isn't it?

A. Well, here again, all I can say is, I did not use that particular datum. Indeed, in the first edition I don't even believe that I have mentioned Hartheim, which was a facility for gassing incurable persons.

Q. I am not suggesting you used it, sir, but isn't it true that that would be considered a false statement?

A. Well, the fact of Hartheim existing as a euthanasia station for gassing incurably ill persons with mental or neurological disorders, and also for gassing concentration camp inmates that were either obstreperous or at the end of their physical strength has been confirmed over and over and over. The numbers alluded there are manifestly out of the question.

Q. So as far as the number is concerned, it is utterly false.

A. Oh, absolutely.

Q. But the part that you chose to believe as true is that gassings existed at Hartheim. Right?

A. Oh, this is not based upon my {964|965} reading of this particular affidavit alone. There is a lot of information —

Q. Oh, no. Other sources, right?

A. Yeah.

Q. Other reliable sources. Right?

A. You don't have to put the inflection on "reliable". They are reliable.

Q. Then tell me what they are.

A. Indeed, it happens not to be my research, but in the Journal of Contemporary History published under the aegis of the Institute of Contemporary History, in English.

Q. Let's have the English title.

A. You will find discussion at great length about euthanasia, an important subject involving the killing of an estimated eighty thousand in six euthanasia stations, of which Hartheim was one.

Q. Sir, you are telling us that that's based upon credible information. Right?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. But you don't know what that information is, do you?

A. I have checked some of it.

Q. Some of it.

A. Oh, yes. But it is not my area, not my area of research.

Q. Well, forgive me. I am not asking you to go beyond your area of research, but I am suggesting to you that these types of documents were tendered to prove the existence of facts, namely, the figure 1.5 million, that were utterly false. Correct or incorrect? {965|966}

A. I agree that the number is false.

Q. Now, I put it to you that these types of documents are not rare, sir, that torture was common, sir.

A. Torture of whom, by whom?

Q. Well, I'll name names. Franz Ziereiss [sic] I've mentioned. Hoess I've mentioned. Franz Hoettl I will mention. Konrad Morgen I will mention. Josef Kramer, Erik [Erich] von Manstein... Now, do you suggest those are far-out, strange people, or are they central to the whole of the Nuremberg issue?

A. All the names you have mentioned are familiar to me. The allegation of torture, in most of the cases that you have just indicated, are not familiar to me.

Q. They are not familiar to you.

A. No. If you'll wish to introduce the documents, then I will probably agree to seeing what it is in print there, but I have no independent knowledge, I can tell you right away.

Q. You haven't looked into, I gather, just what degree of voluntariness was involved in these statements. Is that correct?

A. No, no. I am, of course, interested in how much a particular affidavit can be trusted. At the very outset I pointed out that my principle reliance was on documents, that my secondary reliance, where the documents do not speak for themselves or sufficiently so, is upon statements. I handle all such statements, whether deliberate under the freest circumstances or under constraint [sic], with the utmost of care. {966|967}

Q. Do you agree you referred to yourself as an empiricist?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you agree that empiricism is the process of looking at experience and conducting experiments with real things? Or do you have a different word for "empiricism" than I understand?

A. Well, I am not going to extend the definition of "empiricism" to include experiments as a matter of necessary consequence. There are manipulations, some of which is simulation, are experiments, and some of which are not either.

Q. What I put to you, sir, is that what you have told us about the expertise is the examination of documents.

A. Yeah.

Q. And the examination of documents may be scholasticism, but it certainly isn't empiricism, sir.

A. Well, I'm sorry to say that the simple definition, which is mine —

Q. Which is yours.

A. — of the method I have followed, my description of what I am doing, is the procedure of looking at facts as they are contained in documents, and then coming to a larger picture, going from the small to the big, and that I call the empirical approach to the subject. There are, and could be, other approaches, but that happens to be mine. "Experiment", to me, suggests a repetitive element that can be manipulated in a laboratory. This I don't do.

Q. May I suggest that experiments can {967|968} mean going to the scene of an event and conducting scientific tests?

A. One may conduct scientific tests. I don't exclude that.

Q. Have you done it?

A. I do not. I have repeatedly said that I am not a chemist. I am not a geologist. I am not a photo interpreter. I do not do these things.

Q. I don't doubt that you don't. I am asking you if you have done any physical experiments at all.

A. Oh, in the laboratory in college, but not in this —

Q. No. In respect to the research we are dealing with here.

A. No. No.

Q. Do you know of one scientific report that substantiates that any single place was used as a gas chamber, just one? If so, please name it.

A. What do you mean by a scientific report?

Q. Well, you told me —

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, it's your term, Mr. Christie. You tell the witness.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I don't usually have to define simple words, but by "scientific report" I mean a report conducted by anyone who purported to be a scientist and who examined physical evidence. Name one report of such a kind that showed the existence of gas chambers anywhere in Nazi-occupied territory.

A. I still don't quite understand the {968|969} import of your question. Are you referring to a German, or a post-War —

Q. I don't care who — German, post-War, Allied, Soviet — any source at all. Name one that —

A. To prove what?

Q. To conclude that they have physically seen a gas chamber. One scientific report.

A. I am really at a loss. I am very seldom at such a loss, but —

Q. I put it to you you are at a loss because there isn't one.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, there will be one at a time, please. Now, Mr. Christie, cross-examination is permitted with some latitude. You have reached the edge, because you keep interrupting the witness. You may not like the answers he gives; you may not like the length of the answers; I completely understand that, insofar as you are concerned, but would you please let the witness answer?

Now, then, start again, please. Ask the question and then, please, let the witness answer. If he becomes too long or he is not sticking to the point, I will get him to stick to the point. Now please ask the question again and let's get on with this. It is an important subject.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell me of one scientific report that concludes that any single object, place or thing was a gas chamber?

A. Again, I can only state that there have been aerial photographs that were analyzed. Perhaps that is not in your definition of science. There have {969|970} been contemporaneous documents about the lethality of the gas that was employed. Perhaps this is not important to you. There are documents —

Q. Excuse me, I want to understand clearly. You say the second thing is evidence about what?

A. The lethality, the toxicity of the gas, the nature of the poison and what it does.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Signed by scientific personnel within the German chemical industry.

Q. As a matter of fact, the cans were labelled for Zyklon-B "poison".

A. That's correct. None of these examples will satisfy you because you want the proverbial connection to be made so close.

Q. No, no —

THE COURT: Go ahead, Doctor. Just answer his question, please. Don't anticipate counsel.

THE WITNESS: The additional, how shall I say, scientific evidence is contained in such subject matter as filters for gas masks and the like, again indicating the caution with which one must approach this gas. Now, these are all connected with gas chambers.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Mm-hmmm. I don't want to interrupt you. Is that the end of your answer?

A. Well, for the moment, it's a couple of examples that at the spur of the moment I can bring up. If you want me to reflect on the matter, I can certainly conjure up from my recollection other examples, but I am still at a loss to really understand your question.

Q. I see. So you say we have aerial {970|971} photographs; right?

A. As an example.

Q. Yes. Okay. Now, I'll show you an expanded version of an aerial photograph that I suggest on a previous occasion you looked at and told us this was proof of the gas chambers.

MR. GRIFFITHS: May the jury be excused for a moment, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. Excuse us, please, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 11:35 a.m.

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Sorry, Your Honour, I don't mean to interrupt my friend's cross-examination, but it sounds as if he is about to refer to an aerial photograph or something. I want to know, before it being shown to the jury, whether this is a photograph that will be proven, where it comes from, and on what prior occasion, because I don't believe it was at the preliminary inquiry that this witness gave evidence to the photo that my friend has referred.

THE COURT: Yes. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Does Your Honour not wish me to show the photograph that was shown, and I think identified, at the preliminary, or — I have an expanded version.

THE COURT: Would you just please answer — don't be asking me questions, Mr. Christie. Would you please just reply to what you've heard from the {971|972} Crown so that we can get on with the case? It's not a question of you asking me rhetorical questions as to what I will allow.

Now, if you are going to produce a photograph, how do you intend to prove it? Will you be proving it in due course? It's very simple.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I would.

THE COURT: That's all I need to know. What else do you want to know?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Fine. If he's got the photographer, I will be happy to hear from him.

THE COURT: Do you have the photographer? How do you intend to prove it, in other words?

MR. CHRISTIE: I intend to call someone who says they took photographs from — aerial photographs from the National Archives. The witness who claims to have seen these aerial photographs and has identified them can say whether or not they accurately depict the scene.

Now, I am not here to prove anything. I am here to show the basis of the Crown's opinion. I don't think that I should be precluded from showing what — I am prepared to call witnesses to say there are photographs from many books of what purports to be people on the way to gas chambers. I have the people here. They have been waiting for days. They are ready here to testify.

I simply — and I can identify the people who made these prints from existing books and from National Archive photographs. Really, I don't know what my friend is complaining about.

THE COURT: I don't know that he is {972|973} complaining

Mr. GRIFFITHS: I want the books of photographs, too, Your Honour. I want to know, I think I am entitled to know, either it is a business document that is being held in some archive, or a copy of that document. Then I'd like to have it introduced in the proper manner, not from the book, but an archivist to say that is a true copy being held in the archives. That is a manner of proving it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have a document issued by the U.S. Department of Commerce from the Central Intelligence Agency in Washington, D.C. It's number — it is called "Holocaust Revisited — Experimentation Complex", and the photographs in this brochure are mainly enlarged and some taken from the originals in Washington.

THE COURT: Who did the enlargement?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I will call the person. Do you want to know? I will have to check on that.

The name of the photographer who made the enlargement is Clinton Ashton, I am told.

THE COURT: And from what source did he make the enlargement?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know offhand. If Your Honour is insisting that I prove this right now ...

THE COURT: No, I am not. I am not insisting on anything. I am merely asking.

MR. CHRISTIE: My information is that he made the enlargements from negatives taken from the National Archives in Washington. Some. Some are taken from books which are authorities that I think the Doctor would recognize. The expert would probably know where these {973|974} come from, because they indicate things that he, himself, says and believes. As a matter of fact, I can produce the books. I don't understand the difference. I could produce the books; I could produce the Central Intelligence Agency report, or I could produce the photographs, as long as I can prove the origin of them later.

I have undertaken that I am in a position of being able to do so. The same applies to all the other photographs. The same applies to Dr. Hilberg's proof. I haven't asked for proof of the authenticity of that, either. I don't know why we are wasting time on such a point. It doesn't seem to make sense to me. I don't understand it.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It makes enormous sense to me, Your Honour. We are in a courtroom here where hearsay is ultimately not allowed except for the rulings of Your Honour. If there are going to be documents submitted in court, I am satisfied that my friend indicates that at the appropriate time he will be calling the documents to prove them in accordance with the laws of evidence, not photographs taken out of a book that we have no source for, but from an archive or from a specific source, whether the photographer is available or the archivist is available.

That is what the laws of evidence, I submit, say, and I am prepared to make further argument.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am flabbergasted with the proposition that we should exclude hearsay when everything the Doctor said is hearsay. Now, I wish to cross-examine him on other hearsay that he, apparently, doesn't wish to recognize. He wishes to object that it is {974|975} hearsay. I might point out I am not obliged to prove the truth of any hearsay, to prove hearsay not for the truth of the hearsay but that it is the basis for the belief of my client, [client] which I am entitled to do, and if I am not allowed to lay the foundation of that belief with the introduction of what my friend says is hearsay, and I can undertake to be the original evidence, then he seeks to apply one set of rules to his advantage and one set to my disadvantage when I, myself, am not required to prove the truth of anything. Thank you.

I point out that at page 137 of the transcript of the preliminary hearing, this particular witness said, and I quote —

Mr. GRIFFITHS: On page ...

MR. CHRISTIE: 137, line 17: Now, the photographs that I saw in the National Archives, the United States clearly show that the purpose of the picture taken was Monowitz, was a very large area in the Auschwitz complex called Auschwitz III, where Monowitz, where the industrial installations were located. Thus one can find on some of the photographs Buchenwald, which was the death camp in the lower lefthand corner. It was obviously not the intent of the military to record the Holocaust or even to discover it. This was an incidental discovery that wasn't even looked at. Photographic interpretation didn't mention it but was only subsequently made when the two C.I.A. agents managed to retrieve these photographs where they saw the crematoria. There is a photograph of June 1944 with a train on a ramp in front of the gas chambers in a kind of ragged line, not a military formation, on its way to one of these gas chambers. {975|976}

Now, I have the photograph that I think the witness will identify as being the one he referred to, and I'm gonna ask him if this is his photographic evidence of the gas chambers that these people were "on their way to". He says:

Further, these were very large buildings in which gas chambers and crematoria were designed in a single structure.

Now, obviously, that is the issue. That is why it arises. There is the reference to it by Dr. Hilberg in evidence on a former occasion. Here is what I suggest is the photograph of what he was talking about, enlarged. I will be asking him if that is the basis of his photographic evidence. I have others, if you wish it to go further.

MR. GRIFFITHS: If the witness has seen the photograph before, that's fine. Fine, Your Honour. But he is not a photo interpreter and has said that, relying on the interpretation of the C.I.A. agents who took that photograph.

THE COURT: Has the witness seen that photograph?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is my understanding that is what he referred to. I am prepared to show it to him now.

THE COURT: Yes, please do.

THE WITNESS: Do you have the entire photo from which this is the excerpt, in an original?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, you want it in an original?

A. Yes, because you see — {976|977}

Q. You think there might be retouching on it?

A. No, no. The original photograph is provided with information.

Q. I'll show you some more photographs with information.

A. No, no, no. It has to be the entire photograph as taken from the aircraft, and not some small part of it.

Q. Well, I will show you —

THE COURT: Were you shown that photograph before at the preliminary hearing, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: No, I was not shown any photographs. I have, however, been to the National Archives and have, myself, purchased some of these photographs which are provided with detailed information in the margins as to the flight, as to the date, as to the height of the photograph. In addition, there is ample documentation about the purpose of the photograph and photo interpretation attached in other documents. And this is what I am referring to.

If I am being shown something which looks pretty fuzzy out of a photo, without any of the numbers and other identifying data, which come from the document itself, in this case I am referring to the photo as a document, then I am a bit hesitant to come to quick, off-the-cuff conclusions, even if the appearance is that way, which I testified to because it is appearance. And this is important to defence, and —

THE COURT: Your position is you haven't been shown any of these photographs which counsel {977|978} is holding before you?

THE WITNESS: Well, what I am saying is that this is an enlargement of — could be an enlargement of a very small portion, just a very small portion of the original photograph.

THE COURT: But the photograph print that you are holding now, were you shown that before at a preliminary hearing?

THE WITNESS: Oh, no. I was shown absolutely no photos at a preliminary hearing. Not this or any others.

THE COURT: Is that in accord with your view of the matter?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't know. I wasn't at the preliminary hearing. I can't say what happened there.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I was at the preliminary hearing. There were no photographs.

THE COURT: Then the ruling is that you have a photograph, total photograph in the Archives. You can show him that and refer to whatever else that you have there; but in the absence of that, you cannot. That is the ruling.

The jury, please.

— The jury returns. 12:13 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: In your evidence earlier, sir, you said that there was only three sources of scientific evidence to support the belief that you have {978|979} about the killing of six million Jews in gas chambers — one was aerial photos, evidence of lethality of gas, and scientific evidence for gas masks and filters in gas masks, — in response to my question as to whether there was a scientific report on the existence —

A. I didn't say that there were only three. I said on the spur of the moment, not fully understanding the nature of your question, I could only find these three.

Q. In your book, "The Destruction of the European Jews", if you had a scientific report proving the existence of only one gas chamber, wouldn't you have used it?

A. Oh, well, there is no single report, as you say, proving scientifically the existence of a gas chamber, unless you mean by this the chamber. Now, if you mean a scientific report as to what happened to people inside a gas chamber after they have inhaled gas, that's a separate matter. One can assemble —

Q. I didn't ask you that.

A. Well, that's the reason I am saying I am not quite sure as to the nature of your question. What scientist would make a report about a couple of hundred people squeezed into a gas chamber, and what exactly happens physiologically to them all, when you've got, from German sources, the exact description of what this gas will do once it is inhaled by human beings?

Q. You are asking me a long question, sir, as to what a scientist would do. I will put to you an answer in the form of a question, and I would like you to answer my question. I suggest to you that it is quite {979|980} possible to determine if hydrocyanic acid in gas has come in contact with stone or brick or mortar or substances on walls. Do you know of a single scientific examination of any of those objects to determine, in 1945, the existence of hydrocyanic acid inside the walls of any buildings, sir, anywhere in the world, certainly in Europe?

A. Well, we have numerous structures described in German documents for utilization of gas for a variety of purposes. The particular gas to which you refer was delivered in various strength, and some of the structures were sealed off more securely, others less so, depending upon the purpose.

Obviously, to me, from the existence of the industry, the reported quantities of gas used in the majority for fumigation purposes —

Q. In the majority for fumigation of what, sir — lice?

A. Of buildings, of ships — oh, I see. Not necessarily lice. It could be cockroaches.

Q. Anything, bugs, were disinfected with Zyklon-B; right?

A. The bugs were disinfected? The building was disinfected. The bugs were killed.

Q. To kill the bugs they used Zyklon-B.

A. Pardon me for giving you a long answer again, but that "B" stands for the strength of the gas. There was Zyklon-C and B at the beginning, at least, and depending upon the purpose, these particular strengths were used in the strengths indicated for the purpose.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, my question, to get back to it, was whether any building — and there are so {980|981} many buildings you've mentioned, you said there may be gas chambers, there really were gas chambers and they are there but they are ruined or reconstructed, I want you to tell me if you know of one scientific report of the analysis of those structures that was used in conjunction with hydrocyanic acid, or Zyklon-B, which is otherwise referred to, for the killing of people. Just one such report.

A. No, I don't know of any such report unless it is, you know, somewhere in the records of the Soviet Polish Investigation Commission of Lublin, Maidanek, because you have to remember that aside from the Lublin chambers, otherwise known as Maidanek, and the one Auschwitz chamber still in existence, there wouldn't be any

THE COURT: Doctor, I think — do you know of such a report?

THE WITNESS: No.

THE COURT: All right. That's the answer to the question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, isn't it true, sir, that Professor Rene Fauvre, toxicologist, in 1945, was asked to examine the corpses of people allegedly gassed at Struthoff-Natzweiler, five kilometers [kilometers] from Strassburg in Alsace-Lorraine, and have scraped things from the van and the alleged chambers itself where Kramer was supposed to have gassed people, and that the results of that report is that there were no poison evidence in his analysis?

A. I am not at all familiar with this report.

Q. Was there, in your knowledge, the existence of a single autopsy report to indicate that the cause of death of one person was from the ingestion of {981|982} hydrocyanic acid, prussic acid, or Zyklon-B in existence in this world today?

A. Unless you are referring to the report of Professor August Hirt, who caused Jews to be gassed in a chamber at Natzweiler for the purpose of investigating their skulls in an anatomical investigation, that would be it.

Q. Is that a report that you've seen?

A. Yes, I do believe that I've seen that in a document, but it does not give a detailed medical description of what transpired in the course of gassing, since that was not his purpose.

Q. Does it give any evidence that you know of that the person or persons died from ingestion of hydrocyanic acid?

A. He caused them to be gassed in order to sever their heads for anatomical studies.

Q. Where is this report, sir?

A. You will find it in the Nuremberg documents. I regret I can't give you the number.

Q. I see. And this is your evidence to say that that report exists, and that it does say that people died from prussic acid, hydrocyanic acid or Zyklon-B.

A. I am saying that this man caused several individuals to be gassed for the purpose of conducting an anatomical study of their heads. He caused them to be gassed first and then he severed their heads in order to conduct anatomical studies. He made sure that they would die with the proper dosage of Zyklon in a gas chamber.

Q. You say there was some sort of {982|983} command to perform gassings?

A. There was correspondence there. There was a request for the delivery of the individuals.

Q. Ah, this is what we have, then, is a correspondence, that is a request for the delivery of the individuals.

A. I am —

Q. Is that right?

A. Perhaps I should simply state that —

Q. No such report exists. That would be the simple answer.

A. I would not go so far as to say that no such report exists, but what you want —

Q. I want the report.

A. All right. If you want a detailed medical study of what happens to an individual after he has been gassed, I have not seen that, and that's it.

Q. I don't want a detailed study of what happens to a person after having been gassed. I want reports after the War, before the War, or during the War to show that between 1939 and 1945 someone was killed by the use of those substances.

A. Well, there are plenty of such reports, but you want a scientific report by a physician.

Q. Yeah. An autopsy.

A. No, no. Unless we are talking about this August Hirt document series, which I would not exclude the possibility here of something autopsal in his report, but I cannot now testify to that.

Q. No. You wouldn't exclude the possibility of something autopsal, but you certainly can't {983|984} swear that there was correspondence to prove anything there.

A. Well, I've just testified that they wanted individuals to be delivered to him for the purpose of conducting anatomical studies of their heads.

Q. I heard you say that three times, but specifically — let me finish my question before you make some remark. Would you mind telling me if you recall seeing any document such as that, or any other, that proves that someone died from the use of prussic acid?

A. I don't really wish to answer that so quickly, because it's possible that I have seen such things.

Q. Okay.

A. But my mind is simply not structured towards these, towards these details.

Q. Okay. Now, there is something which I gathered from reading your testimony given on the first occasion here. You correct me if I am wrong, but did you not say that there were many documents to prove the killing of Jews in existence in Germany after the War?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you an article entitled, "Social Education", or a booklet called, "Social Education April 1978". I turn to page 272 of this article, and there is an article that says, "Confronting the Moral Implications of the Holocaust".

THE COURT: Just a minute. You are showing the witness an article?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am, sir. He is reading over my shoulder.

THE COURT: Well, then, ask him if he recognizes the document.

MR. CHRISTIE: He is the author, sir.

THE COURT: I am not interested in you arguing with me. Do what I ask. Just ask him if — identify it.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am reading, identifying it.

Q. Are you the author, sir?

A. I'm sorry that I can't give a yes or no answer even to that. The footnote will indicate —

Q. That you are — you are the Raul Hilberg, Professor, Vermont University, author of "The Destruction of European Jews". This article is a transcript of an address delivered at a National Invitational Conference sponsored by the anti-defamation league of the B'nai B'rith held in New York on October 9th and 11th, 1977.

Do you recall those occasions, sir?

A. I do recall those occasions.

Q. I put to you words that are attributed to you and ask you if you said these things in this address:

A. Please, will you allow me to answer the question? You asked whether this was my article.

Q. I did, yes.

A. The transcript is a transcript with numerous errors of a lecture that I did not have time to edit.

Q. You can tell me whether this is true or false, whether you said this or not:

There were peculiar uses of language, the very language of people like Butz who denied the Holocaust [sic]{985|986} ever took place, who now say it has to be read literally. Resettlement, for example, and other such words, were euphemisms for killing. I kept looking for one single document, any document which contains the actual word "killing". After going through tens of thousands of documents I found the word just two weeks ago in a report of an actual killing action for real four-legged dogs. The word killings was not used for dogs. Human beings were specially treated. They were re-settled, or the Jewish problem was solved.

Those latter two words "re-settled", or the Jewish problem "solved" were in quotes. Does that accurately reflect what you said, sir?

A. That reflects it accurately enough.

Q. So I take it it is true, first of all that you didn't find in all your research reference to killing Jews at all, only reference that you would interpret as meaning as killing Jews.

A. All I said there was that the word "killing", "tunden" [töten] in German, was not used with reference to the annihilation of the population of Europe.

Q. But you would have us believe that all the German people and the German soldiers and S.S. who are familiar with taking orders and seem to be inclined to take orders would somehow learn a new language where killing was meant in resettling, and the Jewish problem solved also meant killing. Is that what you would have us believe?

A. I would not have you believe it. I state, as a fact, with all the expertise at my disposal which may or may not be sufficient, that in correspondence there were strictly understood customary rules as to how the {986|987} killing process was to be referred to. As a matter of fact, even some of the euphemisms, after having been used repeatedly, were proscribed, forbidden, when, for example, Kohrerr, the aforementioned statistician in the S.S., used the word "special treatment", which was a euphemism for killing. It had been used so much it was understood so well, that Himmler said he no longer wanted this word used in the report and wanted the report changed and another word substituted.

Q. The other word was "transport[i]eren"?

A. No. The other word was "durchgeschleusst".

Q. I am putting it to you, sir, that the man you referred to, Kohrerr, wrote a letter to the newspapers in Germany in 1977 to explain that he had tried to find out at the time what the word "sonderbehandlung" special treatment, meant. Right?

A. I have no fewer than four affidavits by Kohrerr about his report. I don't know any of his letters to newspapers in 1977.

Q. Well, let me just put something to you. I suggest to you, and I am now showing you a copy of what purports to be the magazine "Der Spiegel"

A. I am familiar with it.

Q. It is a famous magazine in Germany. No. 39 in 1977 there is a letter attributed to Dr. Richard Kohrerr, and could you just have a look at the highlighted portion? I will read what I suggest it says in English, and you tell me if I have translated correctly or not.

MR. GRIFFITHS: As I understand, this is a letter that the Doctor has not seen before. {987|988}

THE COURT: That's my understanding.

THE WITNESS: I have never seen that letter.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am putting it to him and asking him some questions about it.

THE COURT: Well, you can't.

MR. CHRISTIE: Why not, sir?

THE COURT: The ruling is you can't because the Doctor is not familiar with the letter, unless you want to call the writer of the letter. If you tell me that you may do that — but it seems to me, Mr. Christie, that it would be most improper, once the witness has said he does not recognize the letter, to permit you to quote hearsay to him about a letter and a writer of which he has disavowed any knowledge.

MR. CHRISTIE: He hasn't disavowed any knowledge of Dr. Richard Kohrerr. He has referred to the Kohrerr Report repeatedly. He has quoted from it, and I haven't even seen or heard my friend object to the introduction of hearsay there. Now, I will withdraw the question. Fine.

THE COURT: You can rephrase it and quote to him anything you want as long as you don't attribute the quotation to something that this witness knows nothing about, or has said he knows nothing about.

If you want to put it to him, you can, but in different language.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, sir.

Q. Would you be surprised, sir, to find that Dr. Richard Kohrerr is still alive? {988|989}

A. As a matter of fact, I would be. He must be getting on in years, and —

Q. Maybe I should more correctly say — I'm sorry, was I making an improper question?

THE COURT: Yes. The witness hadn't finished answering the question, I don't think. I don't know.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you like to say something else? You are surprised because he would be very old?

A. More than that, because Dr. Richard Kohrerr has made several statements, all of which I have seen, before German prosecutors. He was asked in 1960 to make another statement and he said he was no longer capable to do so, and that was that. That is in 1960. That is why I am surprised to see a letter purported to have been written by him in 1977, if he could no longer make a statement in the nineteen sixties.

Q. I show you a picture allegedly taken in July of 1978 of Dr. Kohrerr. Do you recognize him? Does that man look incompetent?

A. He is smiling, but he, himself, said he was no longer competent in 1960; and that particular correspondence written by a German prosecutor I have seen.

Q. Did Dr. Kohrerr write that?

A. A German prosecutor attempted to get a statement from Dr. Kohrerr, and he could not do so because of the alleged incompetence of Dr. Kohrerr to make statements.

Q. And that is the words of the prosecutor, not of Dr. Kohrerr that you are stating? {989|990}

A. Obviously.

Q. So I take it you understand the opinion of the German prosecutor?

A. I am giving you my best recollection of what I saw in that letter.

Q. Yeah. And it was signed by the German prosecutor.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. I see. Thank you. Not that it was a letter from Richard Kohrerr.

A. No. Richard Kohrerr was no longer, presumably, writing letters. That is what surprises me about this letter.

Q. I see. Well, what I am going to suggest to you is that he indicated in 1977 that he had contacted his superiors in the RSHA. Do you know what the RSHA was?

A. Yes.

Q. That was superior to Dr. Richard Kohrerr?

A. No.

Q. They were not superior to Richard Kohrerr?

A. No.

Q. And that he asked that this term, "sonderbehandlung", be defined, and he was told it meant resettled in the District of Lublin.

A. No. I can give you —

Q. Is that false?

A. It is not accurate.

Q. Thank you very much. Now, do you {990|991} know about Madam Veil?

A. I know of her from newspapers. That's all I could tell you.

Q. Are you aware that she's alleged to have been killed in the gas chambers and was referred to as such in the book by von Hefte, "Auschwitz" [Hefte von Auschwitz]? Are you familiar with that, sir?

A. Well, the journal to which you refer has been published over a period of years, and I cannot remember every reference in that particular journal. I just told you that I recall the name in newspaper articles and the like. I am in no way really capable of telling you anything about her, her life or anything, because it has interest to some people, but not really to me.

Q. Yes. So you, don't know whether she is alive or dead, I suppose.

A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Okay. Now, you gave evidence on a previous occasion right here before the jury that, when my friend asked you whether it was true to say that the cause of the Second World War was the matter of the treatment by the German Government of the domestic Jewish population, you said that the cause of the War was common knowledge, of the German invasion of Poland. Right?

A. I said that the German invasion of Poland occurred on September 1st, and that Great Britain and France declared war on Germany on September 3rd.

Q. Yeah. That was in answer to some relevant question as to whether the statement in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die" was true. Right? {991|992}

A. Well, the statement, you have it there, seemed to indicate that the Jews had a large, or perhaps even predominant role in causing the War to have been fought. That seemed to be the import of the statement.

Q. That's right. And I am now going to put to you certain historical events and ask you if that does not support the very point made in the booklet. Okay? Wasn't it true, or are you aware, that in 1933 Samuel Untermyer made a statement that indicated that War must be waged on Germany, that it must be waged unremittingly until the black clouds ...

Are you familiar with that speech, sir?

A. I may have seen it, but there were a number of speeches, and that's one of them. I don't recall it.

Q. Okay. Okay. Samuel Untermyer was a fairly important person, wasn't he?

A. No, I wouldn't characterize him that way.

Q. Do you know what his position was?

A. I don't even remember, but I do remember he was not an important personage.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And he urged the confrontation of Jews throughout the world. Do you agree with that?

A. That what?

Q. Well, it was a fairly prominent story, front page of the New York Times, Monday, August 7, 1933.

A. I didn't read it, in 1933, no. {992|993}

Q. But you are a historian of sorts. You gave evidence about what you thought was the cause of the Second World War and you said that it was not correct to believe that the relationship of Germany to its Jewish domestic population had anything to do with the War.

A. No. No. You are talking about whether the Jews caused the War.

THE COURT: Just a moment, gentlemen. Mr. Christie, you have put a document in front of a witness. You haven't asked him whether he recognizes the document, although I thought you were going to do that, and then you asked him about the causes of the Second World War. Which do you want done first?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think, perhaps, to accept Your Honour's direction, I will put the document in front of him and ask him if he recognizes it.

Q. Do you recognize the title of the "New York Times"?

A. I recognize this as a print-out from the "New York Times", August 7, 1933.

Q. It is already in this article being indicated that —

THE COURT: Ask him if he recognizes the article, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I can put it to him whether he recognizes it or not, can't I?

THE COURT: No. If I ask you to do it, please do it. Now, please do it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, do you recognize the article?

A. I have not read this particular {993|994} article. I probably have seen a headline, but I have never read the entire text of this particular speech. I have testified before that there were numerous speeches. It is humanly impossible and fruitless to read all of the speeches of personages of importance or less important as they react to persecution in 1933. There were lots of speeches.

Q. Well, I take it, then, that you are not familiar with that speech at all?

A. No. I have never read it.

Q. Does it come as a surprise to you that speeches reported on the front page of the "New York Times" at that time were saying that there was a campaign to exterminate Jews in 1933?

A. Is that on the front page?

Q. Well, I think it says the front page. I don't know. If you want to tell me otherwise, and you know more than I do, go ahead.

A. Well, usually there is a page number, and there isn't in this particular print-out. The "New York Times", I must say, especially in those days and this I can testify to — printed a lot of things.

Q. I see. Does it come as a surprise to you that major comments were being made about extermination as early as 1933 in the press in a form of propaganda about this being the cause of war and seeking war, specifically referring to the Jews as being the victims of persecution, as early as 1933? Does that surprise you?

A. Well, I do not know in what context such a word was used. It is common knowledge, and it is obvious that there was no campaign to annihilate {994|995} the Jews — I have said this before — in 1933. I have testified to and written about the evolution of this process. People were killed as Jews because they were Jews in 1933, but there was not, in 1933, an immediate threat of total, physical annihilation of the Jewish population of Germany.

Q. So if anybody said in 1933 that the Hitler regime originated to fiendishly exterminate the Jews by placarding Jewish shops warning Germans against dealing with them, by imprisoning Jewish shop keepers, would that be false news to say that?

A. It is a form of rhetoric, since it was common knowledge to anybody what was happening. It was widely reported. People knew what was and what was not occurring, because it was at that moment a time of peace and there were correspondents in Germany reporting daily on the events there.

Q. So it was not a form of false news; it was a form of rhetoric?

A. I would say so.

Q. Now, you said that the Nuremberg Trials — would you disagree with what the article said, “Did Six Million Really Die”, what it said? Does it misrepresent, them?

A. Well, would you like to point to a specific reference? There is so much misrepresentation here that I said it was a lot of concoction, untruth, mixed with half-truths, occasional truths, a sentence may be half a sentence.

Q. You made a blanket reference to it as being basically a biased statement. {995|996}

A. Oh, yes. Basically biased.

Q. Now, in its reference to the Nuremberg trials would you agree that it condemns them and says they are the result of torture and that they had pre-conceived notions of guilt and that kind of thing?

A. Yes.

Q. You consider that true or false?

A. I consider that largely false.

Q. Do you know who Harlan Fiske Stone was?

A. A jurist.

Q. Yes. Chief Justice of the United States.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. If I said that this article, “Did Six Million Really Die”, said portions of the Nuremberg trials could be capsulized by saying that the Nuremberg trials were a high-grade lynching party, would you say that I am false?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. You wouldn't consider the Nuremberg trials as a high-grade lynching party.

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Would you consider that, if it came from Harlan Fiske Stone to that effect, would you consider it somewhat credible?

A. Well, you say to that effect; did I. he use “lynching party”? Did he use any such phraseology?

Q. Yes. I refer to the book of the autobiography of Harlan Fiske Stone, member of the Law, by A. Thomas Mason. I refer to page 716 where I quote {996|997} from the second paragraph.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, just before we quote from the second paragraph, is this something that this witness is familiar with?

MR. CHRISTIE: We are not allowed to ask questions about this, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie. Don't be editorializing all the time. Just do what you must do and get on with this.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very kindly, sir.

Q. It says, and I quote:

“Yet irritation growing out of the accumulated inconvenience he attributed to Justice Jackson's absence provoked even more intemperate comments. ‘Jackson is away conducting his high grade lynching party in Nuremberg,’ he remarked. ‘I don't mind what he does to the Nazis, but I hate to see the pretense that he is running a court and proceeding according to common law. This is a little too sanctimonious a fraud to meet my old-fashioned ideas.’”

Did I read that correctly?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, who is Justice Jackson?

A. Mr. Justice Jackson was a member of the supreme Court of the United States.

Q. He was a prosecutor at Nuremberg, wasn't he, of the United States of America?

A. He was a prosecutor at Nuremberg of the United States of America. Prior to being in the Supreme Court of the United States, he was the Attorney {997|998} General of the United States.

Q. Yes. And I put it to you that it's very clear that at least Harlan Fiske Stone referred to Jackson is away conducting his high-grade lynching party in Nuremberg, he is referring to nothing else than the Military Tribunal of which Mr. Justice Jackson was the prosecutor and a member of the United States of America.

A. Well, Mr. Thomas Mason, who wrote this biography, on page 716, may have quoted, for all I know, an intemperate remark made at a lunch table by the Chief Justice who was annoyed because one member of the Court was taking a prolonged leave of absence to Nuremberg.

He was, as he correctly described him, old-fashioned. Now, he may have used his intemperate language — I don't challenge the accuracy of the quotation, but you must put it into the context of the book, of the remark, of the circumstances, and of everything else.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So would you call it false news to say that the IMT, International Military Tribunal, was regarded as a high-grade lynching party?

A. Well, I cannot probe the mind of every jurist, and there were, no doubt about it, difficult legal questions connected with the indictment, particularly the notion of a crime against peace, which is nothing to do with the Holocaust, and about which a great deal has been written. There is no doubt that this particular trial caused, in the legal community, much discussion, be it in the matter of evidence, or in the matter of substance, particularly as it pertains to crimes against peace. I said before that Mr. Justice Jackson had been {998|999} Attorney General of the United States. As Attorney General he was asked whether it was in conformity with the Constitution of the United States to permit the transfer of fifty destroyers to Great Britain, and at a time when Britain stood alone. He advised them that it was in accordance with the Constitution and of international law to do so. He felt the obligation to reinforce the point that one could take measures short of war in sending fifty destroyers to another country in need that was defending itself and other countries against aggression. He wanted to nail the point against aggression. He stated this clearly in the Conference in London, establishing the Charter of the International Military Tribunal. That has caused controversy.

Q. Would you agree with this statement about the Nuremberg Tribunal referred to at page 715, quoting again, I suggest, quoting:

“... the Chief Justice expressed his disapproval of the entire proceedings by refusing Biddle's personal request to swear him in. ‘I did not wish,’ he explained, ‘to appear, even in that remote way, to give my blessing or that of the Court on the proposed Nuremberg trials.’”

This, I gather, is the Court called the Supreme Court of the United States; is that right?

A. This is the man who is the Chief Justice.

Q. Yes. Fairly prominent jurist, isn't he?

A. So is Mr. Justice Jackson.

Q. Yeah. Now, would you agree that he {999|1000} seemed to indicate that he didn't approve of the Nuremberg Trials?

A. There is no question that that is the indication.

Q. All right. Did he say further on that —

A. He is quoted as saying, please. I don't know what he actually said.

Q. Well, I am looking at a book which you could look at, anyone can read. Is it false news?

A. What do you mean by “false news”?

Q. Do you take issue with the truth of these statements?

A. I don't take issue with the truth of what was in the mind of Mr. Chief Justice Stone as reported here.

Q. All right.

A. But all you seem to be asking me about is whether I agree with what was in the mind of Mr. Chief Justice Stone respecting a whole lot of questions which I believe mainly to be questions of the count of aggression.

Q. Well, let's let the jury decide what the statements say. I just want to ask you, who made the judgment on the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” as to its distorting the matters at Nuremberg, whether or not you believe these statements are true or not yourself, expert as you are.

Now, do you understand me?

A. Do I believe what Mr. Justice Stone is saying?

Q. No. Do you understand me? {1000|1001}

A. Maybe I don't. Are you asking me whether I agree with Stone?

Q. No. I am asking you whether you agree with the words spoken by Stone.

A. No.

Q. All right. Let me read some more of them. He is quoted as saying:

"For your information, but not for publication as coming from me, I would like to advise you that the Supreme Court had nothing to do, either directly or indirectly, with the Nuremberg Trials or the governmental action which authorized them. I was not advised of Mr. Justice Jackson's Participation until his appointment by the Executive was announced in the newspapers."

A. That's right.

Q. Do you agree with that as to the truth or falsity?

A. There is no question of it that here was a slight conflict, shall we say, between the judicial and executive branches.

Q. He is quoted as saying further in the same page:

"So far as the Nuremberg trial is an attempt to justify the application of the power of the victor to the vanquished, because the vanquished made aggressive war, ... I dislike extremely to see it dressed up with a false facade of legality."

A. Well, as I've testified, the issue – and I did testify without even reading this – that the issue was the count of aggression.

Q. We will read on and see if this is {1001|1002} so, but do you agree that the Nuremberg trials were dressed up in a false facade of legality?

A. No, I do not agree.

Q. All right. So you disagree with the Chief Justice of the United States on that point.

A. If I may be permitted to, yes.

Q. Oh, yes.

A. I have no training in international law.

Q. Yes, you have expressed your opinions without reservation. I am just asking you if you agree with him.

A. I do not agree with him.

Q. All right. He goes on to say:

"The best that can be said for it is that it is a political act of the victorious States which may be morally right, as was the sequestration of Napoleon about 1815. But the allies in that day did not feel it necessary to justify it by an appeal to nonexistent legal principles."

Do you agree that the principles of Nuremberg were non-existent legal principles?

A. I certainly do not agree. If I may give a reason for my statement, I will be happy to do it.

THE COURT: No. Just, you don't agree. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So I take it although this may have been – and I suggest to you it was the opinion of the Chief Justice of the United States, you have a different opinion. I give you the right, but {1002|1003} that is true, isn't it?

A. Well, you are quoting statements by the Chief Justice evidently made privately in which he even said, "I don't want to be quoted". This man was expressing private opinions which are printed, and I don't agree with them.

Q. All right. Fine. But you, certainly, would acknowledge that that probably was his opinion and it is published.

A. Absolutely.

Q. And he is entitled to that opinion; right?

A. Well, the entitlement is a difficult question. He, himself, did not feel that he should make his opinion a public statement.

Q. Oh, so because this booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" makes similar statements publicly to what the Chief Justice of the United States makes privately, then you condemn this booklet.

A. No. These are two separate issues. The concern of the Chief Justice, apart from the fact that he was annoyed by the prolonged absence of one of the nine brethren in Nuremberg, was the count of aggression, the fact that heretofore there had not been criminal international law, as he saw it, making criminal an aggressive act. He did not like the retroactivity of this count, as he saw it. He made no comment whatsoever about war crimes. He made no comment here whatsoever about prosecuting criminals or killing masses of people. He confined the comment, as you read it to me, to the count of aggression. The booklet, on the other hand, deals with {1003|1004} whether six million really died and raises the question of whether the prosecutions at Nuremberg were condemned by the Chief Justice for that reason.

Q. I suggest to you that there's reason to analogize that he was criticizing the whole procedure at Nuremberg.

A. I see no reason to make that assumption.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that we are allowed to make these assumptions based upon what he said, sir. Do you disagree?

A. Well, it was obvious that he was in a state of discomfiture, to say the least, about the presence of Mr. Justice Jackson, first at the London Conference in which the counts were debated and drawn up, and secondly as prosecutor representing the United States.

The point about which he was most discomfited was the count of aggression. I said this before. You even showed me the passage.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And that, in my opinion, is a different matter from the well-recognized, well-precedented action of crimes being prosecuted if they have happened to be war crimes. War crimes are an established part of customary international law. You certainly know that, sir. You are the lawyer.

Q. I suggest to you what he said is:

"I don't mind what he does to the Nazis, but I hate to see the pretense that he is running a court and proceeding according to common law."

I suggest to you he is not just {1004|1005} criticizing the indictment, but the constitution of the whole Court, sir; isn't he?

A. Let me do a little bit of mind-reading, since you are inviting me to do so.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is not necessary, Your Honour, editorial comments from my friend.

MR. CHRISTIE: I just wanted to address the question.

THE WITNESS: The Chief Justice of the United States was born and lived with a system of a written Constitution in which all crimes, to my understanding of it, are spelled out in statute, laws passed by legislatures. International law is a different proposition, but it, too, defines well-understood crimes that may result in prosecutions; that called war crimes is a well established branch of international law, as is piracy; but counts of aggression is something new and did not appear prior to the organization of the Charter and the Tribunal in 1945.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you name me one criminal court that was set up by one or more nations to try the nationals of another nation in war for anything called the crime against humanity, previous to Nuremberg?

A. The crime against humanity was not a crime so generous. The crime against humanity was considered only if it happened also to have been a war crime. There was no such thing as trying a person, a German, let us say, for having killed Jews prior to the outbreak of the War on German soil. Such an event could not be prosecuted at Nuremberg. The only way in which so-called crimes against humanity could be introduced, and {1005|1006} the record is very clear on that, is if it happened to have been a war crime. To be a war crime, the victim had to belong, by nationality, to one of the nations at war with Germany or, if the victim did not belong to one of these nations, he had to be killed on the soil of one of the nations at war with Germany. Other than that, one could not find a count of guilt in the case of so-called crimes against humanity.

Q. I say again to you, sir, that, rather than discussing those esoteric topics, the Chief Justice, in his comments published as his autobiography, was criticizing more than the technical procedure; he was saying he thinks Jackson is not running a Court – he said:

"... but I hate to see the pretense that he is running a court and proceeding according to common law."

I suggest to you he is criticizing the constitution of that court.

A. Of course Mr. Justice Jackson didn't run the Court. He was one of the prosecutors and, obviously, the entire comment from which you are reading is off the cuff, perhaps interview-type of deliberation, not something that a jurist with the experience and training of Mr. Justice Stone would be writing if he wanted his words to be weighed carefully.

Q. But it is certainly information published in his name that is publicly available, isn't it?

A. I don't deny that.

Q. Now, you did criticize the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" specifically for saying that the relationship of the German government to the Jews was {1006|1007} the cause of the War. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who was the person by the name of Forrestal? Who was he?

A. He was the secretary of the Navy of the United States during World War II, and subsequently he was the First Secretary of Defence of the United States.

Q. Okay. So I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "The Forrestal Diaries". Do you recognize the picture of the person?

A. I have the book in my possession.

Q. I put it to you that although you take the view that the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" was wrong to suggest that the Jews had, in effect, been the cause of World War II, that in this book published for all the world to read called, "The Forrestal Diaries", at page 122, a photocopy of which I produce to you, a highlighted portion and underlined portion which I show to you, he says:

"Chamberlain, he says, stated that America and the world Jews had forced England into the war."

Now, who is the Chamberlain he is referring to, Neville Chamberlain?

A. Now, you say "he says". Who says? It is truly out of context. Who is the "he"?

Q. We'll read previous to that if you think the context is erroneous.

A. Who is "he"?

THE COURT: We will do that at two-thirty. {1007|1008}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 2:35 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. This morning, witness, I was showing you an affidavit referring to the interrogation and the information from Mr. Franz Ziereiss and you looked over that with me; is that right, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And we had some words about whether or not it was introduced as evidence, and we don't know that; is that right?

A. I don't know it at the moment.

Q. No. What I am interested in is the quotation of Franz Ziereiss where it says — I want you to correct me if I am taking it in any way out of context:

A gas plant was built in a concentration camp in Mauthausen by order of the former garrison doctor camouflaged as a bathroom. Prisoners were gassed in these camouflaged bathrooms ...

And it goes on to refer to the gassing of prisoners at Mauthausen; right? {1008|1009}

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. So that's what we got from a man who was shot three times trying to escape, and apparently was dying at the time. Right?

A. Correct.

Q. Right. He confesses to gas chambers at Mauthausen. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Or one gas chamber, perhaps.

Q. Well, he says people were gassed in camouflaged bathrooms — prisoners. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. He confesses to that. Now, do you regard Yehuda Bauer as an authority on these matters?

A. Yehuda Bauer specializes in residue — that is, he has a knowledge, of course, of what transpired inside Nazi Europe, but his speciality in Holocaust studies is the outside reaction to the Holocaust.

Q. Did he write a book called, "A History of the Holocaust" by Yehuda Bauer?

A. It is a small history written by a graduate student, yes.

Q. And I am referring to page 209 when suggest that he says:

"Although no gassings took place at Mauthausen — many Jews, as well as non-Jews, died there in a process the Nazis called 'extermination through labor.'" Am I quoting correctly?

A. Yes.

Q. So a reputable scholar in the area {1009|1010} would you agree — says that no gassings took place at Mauthausen.

A. Well, he is a reputable scholar, and in this basic text he stated his best belief, since he had no other information, that there were no such gassings. That is what he stated.

Q. Is that false news?

A. Yes, it is, as it turns out, because more recent research published by Alfred Streim in a book about the fate of Soviet prisoners of war in German hands does refer to gassings of Soviet prisoners in a Mauthausen camp. I have not personally done this research. I am, however, familiar with the book and know Mr. Streim to be a very careful researcher.

Q. Was he relying on Soviet information?

A. No, because the camp Mauthausen is in Austria, and he was relying on a variety of sources, including statements made by people who observed and were witness to these events, as well as other material that he had at his disposal, and he has a lot of material at his disposal.

Q. Well, rather than deal with the book, which isn't in evidence and we can't consider, would you answer me this, as to whether you would consider the statement of Yehuda Bauer to be a false statement.

A. Well, I would consider that it is not a correct statement in the light of more recent research. I think that he thought there were no gassings going on, and there were.

Now, I am not suggesting that these were large-scale gassings, but there were periodic {1010|1011} gassings of Soviet prisoners according to Streim, who in this matter is probably the best authority.

Q. Mm-hmmm. When did he publish his book?

A. About two years ago.

Q. It seems like it's the same time Yehuda Bauer published this book.

A. Well, you know the publication process of any manuscript takes at least a year. This was what we call in the trade a "quickie". It was a rapidly produced book with a graduate student —

Q. Well, I put it to you this is a reputable scholar who says there were no gassings in Mauthausen. You may disagree with him and say you have better knowledge, but it seems that Mr. Ziereiss was confessing to something Mr. Bauer says didn't happen.

A. And it turns out, according to Mr. Streim, it did happen.

Q. So we have conflicting views from reputable authorities on the matter; is that right?

A. Well, you see — you do have conflicting views, but one man, namely Streim, he was the German author I referred to, did rather thorough research. The other Professor Bauer assumed from the lack of evidence at his disposal that there were no gassings.

Q. May I put it to you that another Jewish source (Reporter's Note: Name unintelligible) ... published in 1968 said there were no gas chambers in Mauthausen. You say she is wrong?

A. She might very well be wrong. I once saw the woman, but I know nothing about her. You {1011|1012} refer to her as Jewish. That's news to me.

Q. Is it your evidence that the statements about torture at Nuremberg in the pamphlet in "Did Six Million Really Die?" are false?

A. I think "torture" is a rather broad word, especially when used by prospective defendants who said they were tortured. I don't exclude the possibility of someone [someone] having been mishandled by captors, especially immediately after capture. One must take these things realistically into account. They could have happened and, probably in a number of cases, did happen. And if Hoess made a statement, signed a statement late in the evening after having been, as he says, whipped with his own whip, and in the statement were words written by somebody else that he's signed, particularly with regard to a number – well, even without having realized that this may have been a statement which he signed, prepared by somebody else, I would not use this, number, and I did not use it.

Q. Well, I am curious as to whether you say that what this booklet says, "Did Six Million Really Die?", about torture, is true or false.

A. I don't think – well, I don't exclude the possibility of one or another person having been mishandled. Actual torture, that is a broad word, but I do not think it is a broad practice and not, particularly, after the initial period of capture, confusion and the various people, military police and everything else, handling prisoners.

Q. Are you familiar with the Simpson van Roden Commission?

A. No, I am not – what are you {1012|1013} referring to particularly? I may know it by another name. I am not sure what you refer to there.

Q. The Simpson van Roden Commission, I suggest to you, was instituted to investigate the allegations of abuse against the Allied Forces in their conduct with prisoners at Swabisch Hall as alleged in the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?". Are you familiar with the Simpson van Roden Commission?

A. No, I am not.

Q. I put it to you that the truth is that Edward van Roden and Judge Simpson were entrusted with the responsibility to investigate those allegations, and your answer is, you don't know about that?

A. I don't know the allegations, even.

Q. Well, I will put it to you that the truth is that the allegations were of beatings and brutal kickings, knocking out of teeth and breaking of jaws, mock trials, solitary confinement, posturing as priests, very limited rations by virtue of deprivation, proposals of acquittal – have you ever heard such complaints with respect to the investigation at Dachau?

A. You mean prior to the Dachau trial?

Q. In regard to allegations that approximately 139 prisoners were handled in that fashion, with those methods.

A. Well, I can't say that I haven't heard anything, because one does hear things, but I am not aware of anything that is confirmed in the nature of an official finding, and I am not familiar with the particular document you have in your hand.

Q. Well, I am referring to an article {1013|1014} published in the magazine known as "The Progressive", February 1949, in which an article was published called, "U.S. Atrocities in Germany" by E.L. van Roden, and I am just going to ask you whether you consider this as true or false, because you've said that the allegations in the brochure are false when it says, American Atrocities in Germany by Judge Edward van Roden, and I quote:

"American investigators at the U.S. Court in Dachau, Germany, used the following methods to obtain confessions: Beatings and brutal kickings. Knocking out teeth and breaking jaws. Mock trials. Solitary confinement. Posturing as priests. Very limited rations. Spiritual deprivation, Promises of acquittal. Complaints concerning these third degree methods were received by Secretary of the Army Kenneth Royall last Spring."

Judge van Roden was one member appointed to go to Germany to check up on the reports. Now, do you think that is a false statement?

A. I could not confirm or deny it, because it's the first time I am looking at it, and I have no independent knowledge of what happened.

Q. Well, you see, the reason I refer to that is because in the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" it says that there were floggings until they were soaked in blood, after which their sexual organs were trampled on as they lay prostrate on the ground.

Do you consider those statements in the context of which you read them – and I believe you said you read them – do you consider those statements false?

A. Well, I consider that a bit fanciful because I have never seen it corroborated, mentioned any-{1014|1015}where, the particular detail that you have just read.

Q. Okay. I am going to read on from the same article which I referred to as "The Progressive", February 1949, and Judge van Roden writes:

"Our investigators would put a black hood over the accused's head and then punch him in the face with brass knuckles, kick him and beat him with rubber hose. Many of the German defendants had teeth knocked out. Some had their jaws broken. All but two of the Germans, in the 139 cases we investigated, had been kicked in the testicles beyond repair."

Now, are you aware of those statements having been made sometime in 1949?

A. I am certainly not, and if this is an official report, I would certainly like to have been referred to see an official report, rather than an article in a magazine called "The Progressive", which I could then read.

Q. Yes. Well, do you consider those statements to be false?

A. I have no independent knowledge of the events alleged there.

Q. Well, when I ask you whether the article, "Did Six Million Really Die?", in respect to, allegations that they were flogged until they were soaked in blood after which their sexual organs were trampled on as they lay prostrate on the ground – you said that was false; is that correct?

THE COURT: No. He said that was fanciful.

MR. CHRISTIE: Fanciful. {1015|1016}

Q. I refer to a book entitled, "Manstein", by R.T. Paget. Have you heard of the book?

A. I know of Field Marshall Mainstein [sic]. What is the book about?

Q. The book is by R.T. Paget, his defence lawyer.

A. I don't know the defence lawyer, and I have not read this particular book.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, have you heard about the book?

THE WITNESS: No. As a matter of fact I haven't. I have read a book by Mainstein, but not about him. That's his picture.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That's the picture of Field Marshall Erich von Manstein, and it is by R.T. Paget, K.C., M.C.

A. I have heard the name Paget in a totally different connection, not with Mainstein. He has made other remarks; but not in this connection.

Q. All right. Now, you've said those remarks in the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", were fanciful. I ask you if, in this book, on page 109, the words are written: "This commission, consisting of Judges Simpson and Van Roden, and Colonel Laurenzen had reported among other things that of the 139 cases they had investigated 137 had had their testicles permanently destroyed by kicks". Am I reading correctly, sir?

A. You are reading from a book, and you are reading correctly.

Q. Yes. Would you agree that this book seems to confirm what is in the pamphlet of "Did Six {1016|1017} Million Really Die?"

THE COURT: Mr. Christie [sic], aren't we going through the same thing that we went through this morning? He does not know the book. How can he answer the question?

MR. CHRISTIE: May it please Your Honour, he did answer the question as to whether these remarks were accurate or not. He said they were fanciful.

THE COURT: That was in Exhibit 1.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am showing that he is making statements that he doesn't know from investigations are true. I am not saying he is trying to mislead us, but I am saying he tends to make judgments without having looked at the relevant information on the subject. That's all.

THE COURT: That may or may not be, but that does not derogate from the fact that he doesn't know the book, so therefore, how can he possibly answer the question, if he doesn't know the book, when you ask him if it is accurate or appears to be accurate – because you have no basis for that. Go ahead. What is the next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Would you agree with me that this book tends to provide confirmation of the statement in, "Did Six Million Really Die?" that they were flogged and their sexual organs were trampled?

A. All I can tell you is that you are reading words that re-appear in the pamphlet. The name Paget as the author of, or counsel of Manstein, he is known to me in an entirely different context, about {1017|1018} comments made in the House of Commons about black people. That is the context in which the name is known to me.

Q. I see. Do you wish to express other things about the man Paget?

THE COURT: Not unless asked. Next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, you said that "Confessions Under Torture", how would you describe it in the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", how would you describe it in the Chapter 12 in "Confessions Under Torture"?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Give him the book. The Court has it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I thought you read the book; but I should more fairly give you a copy. I think you made some comments about it before, but I am specifically asking you to draw your attention to page 12, and the Chapter, "Confessions Under Torture".

A. All I can say about this column and some additional material on the next page is that it refers to a situation involving several individuals. These are not, in the case of the matters we discussed earlier in Malmedy, Holocaust matters, and so far as the matter regarding the Dachau trial is concerned, I have no independent knowledge of what this particular information alleged here seems to indicate. I still have not seen from you or anyone else the official report, whether it was accepted or not accepted. I know about the Dachau trial, but that is all I can say. It involves personnel in the main, at Dachau. It was an early trial. It was not one of the Nuremberg trials, and what else can I say? {1018|1019}

Q. Well, maybe you can say whether that column is true or false. That is what I asked you.

A. It is, at the very least, misleading, and the statement is, to my way of thinking, an adequate description of the judicial process that took place in the multitude of trials, particularly important ones at Nuremberg. I never included the possibility of manhandling or of torture, even; but as a description of a general procedure, it's false.

Q. You mean that statements in that column are false?

A. If they are by one means to characterize the prosecution of war criminals generally under American, or, for that matter, British jurisdiction, I would not accept it as true.

Q. Well, what about it as false? What statement there is false on that column? I am not asking you to extend your view beyond that. Tell me one statement there that is false.

A. If you mean the specific statement regarding this and that particular individual or this and that particular event, I will not comment upon truth or falsity, because I do not have the independent knowledge necessary to make such a comment.

Q. I put it to you that every single statement on that page is true. Do you deny that?

A. Maybe. Maybe not.

Q. Previously you said it was fanciful.

A. It seems to me to be fanciful still.

Q. You still think it's fanciful.

A. I would have to be convinced by {1019|1020} something better than what you have shown me. You have not shown me a single official document. You have shown me "The Progressive" magazine, and a book by Paget.

Q. All right. So you still maintain it's fanciful.

A. That is the description of what is in my mind when I look at it. I do not exclude the possibility of elements of truth in this allegation.

Q. Do you have any evidence of one single lie in that whole —

A. I have no independent knowledge of what transpired. One is hard-put, ever, to say something did not happen. You should know this in this trial.

Q. Well, I am going to refer you to a trial that I suggest appeared in the "New York Times" March 5th, 1949, and in it it says —

Mr. GRIFFITHS: Well, perhaps we could hear whether Dr. Hilberg has seen this article before.

THE COURT: I agree.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you seen it, sir, before?

A. I have read about the Malmedy trial. I cannot be totally certain that I read this particular article at that time, but the various articles about Malmedy are familiar to me, in a general way.

Q. You are aware, then, that there were accusations of the use of physical violence against the accused.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of the Congressional {1020|1021} Record of March 10th, 1949, and a speech by the Honourable Lawrence H. Smith in the House of Representatives of the United States?

A. No. This particular speech is not familiar to me.

Q. Would you consider remarks made in there which, in fact, repeat the accusations that I've raised as still being fanciful?

A. All I could tell you, sir, is that as a sometime reader of the Congressional Record, most anything will be included at the Congressional Record, including the raising of radishes.

Q. So you consider these accusations in the category of such ludicrous things as the raising of radishes?

A. All I am telling you, sir, is that if you wish to convince me of something, show me at least an official document, and not the allegations repeated and repeated and repeated, which are included in various publications.

The Congressional Record is not one which one looks for any final authoritative statement in regard to certain matters, because members of Congress are given free rein to publish anything they wish there.

Q. So you consider the suggestion that there was a Simpson van Roden Commission just a fanciful figment of my imagination.

A. I am not saying to you that there was no such Commission. I testified that I didn't know about it. I would like to see, if you want me to take a stand on something or other, its official report and the {1021|1022} way it was received or not, approved of or not. I have no independent knowledge of the matter.

Q. Now you, as an expert in this area, having expressed an opinion that this article is fanciful, could you tell me what you would consider authoritative? Would you consider an article in "The New York Times" of that date authoritative?

A. I am a document man.

Q. Yes.

A. And I would look at documents also if they describe American actions or British actions in preference to anything in a newspaper, even the "New York Times", because so long as one can look at and have access to official, reliable information, why not use it?

Q. Well, this was common knowledge at the time, sir, I suggest; would you disagree?

A. Well, to some extent the Malmedy trial, which involved the prosecution of German personnel who have alleged to have gunned down American prisoners of war, was certainly a matter of common knowledge, and the manner in which these prisoners were treated and the allegations is also a matter of common knowledge. There was great anger in the United States about the shooting of American prisoners, and it is not impossible, in my mind, that the Germans, once caught, were not treated appropriately in accordance with the judicial processes necessary.

Q. Isn't the thesis of this article, Professor, that in view of the fact that there was torture involved, the things alleged in regard to the Dachau and {1022|1023} Malmedy trials, that it is reasonable to believe that the same atmosphere existed in relation to the International Military Tribunal?

A. Well, that is the crux of the matter. I am glad you raised the question, because, you see, the International Military Tribunal and the subsequent trials were conducted in an entirely different atmosphere. They were not immediate post-war events. They were not localized events. They involved carefully monitored and carefully — procedures in every respect with highly trained police making sure that prisoners were not maltreated.

Q. So you are saying that the Malmedy trials and the Dachau trials to which I suggest that you disagreed with me, that you have no knowledge of the existence of the Simpson van Roden Commission that you suggest may or may not have happened, you are not aware if they did happen, an indication that such a situation existed at the International Military Tribunal, because that was earlier. Right?

A. Not only at the International Military Tribunal, but the subsequent trials, as well.

Q. I'd like to ask you whether you consider books authoritative on the subject of this inquiry that I've suggested existed – the Simpson van Roden Commission.

A. Books?

Q. Books, yes. Do you consider those authoritative?

A. What books?

Q. Well, the book entitled, "Crossroads {1023|1024} of Death", by James Weingarntner. Did you consider that authoritative?

A. Counsel, if you are going to empty the Library of Congress, its books, you will discover that I haven't read most of them. This is one.

Q. Well, you set yourself up as an expert to say that articles that the accused is alleged to have published are fanciful; and then, when I come forward with books, newspaper clippings, you just say, "I don't know". Now, how do you justify that?

THE COURT: You don't have to answer that question. What's the next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, do you take issue with this statement reported in the book I have referred to at page 192:

Simpson, van Roden and Laurenzen expressed the by now customary reservations about certain of the tricks and ruses used by the American investigators, in particular the so-called mock trials. They profess to be satisfied that the twelve death sentences which had been assigned to the guilt of the men had been adequately demonstrated. They doubted, however, that an American court martial would have, upon Americans convicted of similar crimes; in view of what appeared to be improper investigative methods in the absence of even-handed objectives in sentencing, therefore, the report recommended that all deaths be commuted to live imprisonment.

Do you dispute those statements?

THE COURT: What was the document from which you read?

MR. CHRISTIE: "Crossroads of Death", {1024|1025} the Malmedy trial.

THE COURT: Isn't that the book from which the witness hasn't read?

MR. CHRISTIE: I asked him if he disputed the statement.

THE COURT: Isn't that the book which you asked him about that he hasn't read?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: You can't — what is the next question? You know better than that.

MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest that I can ask him questions which define his beliefs.

THE COURT: You can do that, but not from books he hasn't read. You can rephrase it, but not by reading something from a book that the witness told you he hasn't read.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you maintain that it isn't true that the 139 prisoners were beaten in the way described in this booklet?

A. May I repeat for the fourth time that I have no independent knowledge of the treatment of the 139 prisoners and the events in the Dachau trial.

Q. Then why do you say it's fanciful?

A. Because I was asked how this particular passage struck me. This is how it struck me. This is how it still strikes me. I am, of course, willing to look at something that contradicts what my impression is.

Q. It has to be a document, though; is that right?

A. It had better be something that is {1025|1026} a little more authoritative than you have shown me.

Q. Well, do you consider this false news: I put it to you that in the "Chicago Tribune" of February 13, 1949, reported on page 3 —

THE COURT: Show him the article, Mr. Christie. Ask him if he recognizes it.

MR. CHRISTIE: No, that's fine. Thanks very much.

Q. I am sure you wouldn't be familiar with the "Chicago Tribune" of February 13, 1949. Right?

THE COURT: Don't answer the question. Ask him a question, and then don't put it as, "Is that right?"

MR. CHRISTIE: I am cross-examining.

THE COURT: I appreciate it. And I am presiding over the Court, and I appreciate you doing as I say when I say it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I will, sir.

Q. You know about Samuel Untermyer, who he was or what he was?

A. Do you want me to repeat what I said?

Q. Just confirm yes or no.

A. Yes, whatever I said, I will confirm.

Q. You will agree that he was the President of the World Jewish Economic Federation, or you just don't know that?

A. There are lots and lots of Jewish organizations, some of which last a very short time. I am not familiar with this one, and what it did or didn't do, at the moment. {1026|1027}

Q. Would you agree that many of the famous people of the era of the Nuremberg war trials regarded them as a travesty of justice?

A. Many famous people?

Q. Yes.

A. How many is many — two, three?

Q. Well, perhaps I should put it more correctly that, in regards to the Nuremberg War Trials, certainly the gentleman I mentioned earlier, Forrestal, who was somewhat prominent, regarded them as very unfair. Would you agree?

A. Mr. Forrestal, who was Secretary of the Navy and subsequently Secretary of Defence, and whose business was military, may well have had this opinion; but of course, as I pointed out, his area of responsibility was defence.

Q. You seem to take the view that if anyone publishes an article such as, "Did Six Million Really Die?", for which you say they derived their news or source of information from anything other than official documents, that it isn't quite right somehow.

A. No.

Q. No. Well, when I asked you whether the statements on that page under "Confessions Under Torture" were true or false, you said fanciful; and when I produced items which tended to demonstrate that there was a reason to believe them from articles such as the newspapers and the Congressional Record of the United States, you seem to maintain that that doesn't satisfy you as to their truth. Right?

A. And most especially it doesn't {1027|1028} satisfy me as to the whole trend of the argument which you implied in one of your questions, or actually stated that what happened before the Malmedy trial, or before the Dachau trial, is also indicative of the atmosphere of Nuremberg, and I could not agree with that.

Q. Are you familiar with the book entitled, "The Review of the War Crimes Trial" by Adolf Aikenauer?

A. The German defence attorney?

Q. That's right.

A. Yes, I have perused that book once. I have not read it thoroughly.

Q. Do you consider it false news?

A. My goodness. I could not comment about all of it because, although [although] I perused through it, reading it was worthwhile and my decision was contrary.

Q. Because it does not agree with your belief.

A. Not at all. I welcome, I welcome, look for, search for materials that do not agree with my conclusions or my assumptions, provided that they contain a basis upon which I can look.

Q. All right. Would you agree that the basis from which you could work such as you've described the criterion for looking further might include such remarks as those of, for example, President Kennedy? Do you consider him someone you might look at in terms of credibility?

A. The President as President, or the President long before he was President?

Q. Well, the President who wrote the {1028|1029} book, "Profiles in Courage".

A. Yes. And how old was he when he wrote that?

Q. Well, I don't really know.

A. Well, quite young.

Q. That makes a difference, does it?

A. It makes some difference.

Q. He was complimentary to Senator Robert Taft in that booklet.

A. That's right.

Q. Because he had taken issue with the Nuremberg War Trial even though it was unpopular at the time; isn't that true?

A. That's correct. The President of the United States, Mr. Kennedy, had one favourite word, it was "courage", that he used frequently. He sought out and wrote about figures that, in his eyes, were worthy of emulation.

Senator Taft was not the most popular figure in the United States. He was a presidential candidate, but Senator Taft was a person who spoke his mind, and he spoke his mind in regard to Nuremberg. He didn't like it, particularly, once again, with respect to the charge of aggression.

With Kennedy, what I take to have admired in Taft, was Taft's willingness to stand up and voice an unpopular and unaccepted opinion.

Q. Are you familiar with what Senator Taft said about the Nuremberg Trials.

A. I can't quote verbatim what he may or may not have said, but he did utter some statements {1029|1030} which were critical of the trial, the first trial.

Q. Would you agree that he said:

My objections to the Nuremberg Trial was that while clothed in the form of justice, they were, in fact, an instrument of government policy determined once before at Tehran and Yalta.

A. Well, he said that. He wasn't entirely accurate in this matter, but he said that.

Q. You, of course, know when the objectives of the Nuremberg Trials were established, of course.

A. Well, in fact I do. I don't wish to appear to be the all-knowing witness who knows better than U.S. Senators, but I have devoted a great deal of time to studying the documents leading up to the Nuremberg Trials. The decision to hold the trial was a late decision of much debate.

Q. It is my understanding, sir, that you are familiar with the learned author, Nahum Goldman.

A. I would not describe him as you just did. Go ahead.

Q. Well, are you aware of the fact that he says how the Nuremberg concept was created, and he attributes it to jurists Jacob and Nehemiah Robinson?

A. One of these gentlemen, to my knowledge, was a lawyer.

Q. Well, I would like to put to you a part of a book and ask you to comment on its truth or falsity, if I may.

MR. GRIFFITHS: What book is this, excuse me? {1030|1031}

MR. CHRISTIE: "The Jewish Paradox", by Nahum Goldman.

Q. Quoting from page 122:

"During the war the WJC ..."

What's that?

A. World Jewish Congress.

Q. "... had created an Institute of Jewish Affairs in New York (its headquarters are now in London). The directors were two great Lithuanian Jewish jurists, Jacob and Nehemiah Robinson. Thanks to them, the Institute worked out two completely revolutionary ideas: the Nuremberg tribunal and German reparations. The importance of the tribunal which sat at Nuremberg has not been reckoned at its true worth. According to international law it was in fact impossible to punish soldiers who had been obeying orders. It was Jacob Robinson who had this extravagant, sensational idea. When he began to canvass it among the jurists of the American Supreme Court they took him for a fool. 'What did these Nazi officers 'do that was so unprecedented?' they asked. 'You can imagine Hitler standing trial, or maybe even Goering, but these are simple soldiers who carried out their orders and behaved as loyal soldiers.' We therefore had the utmost trouble in persuading the Allies; the British were fairly opposed, the French barely interested, {1031|1032} and although they took part later they did not play any great part. The success came from Robinson managing to convince the Supreme Court judge, Robert Jackson."

Now, do you believe that to be a statement of the true origin of the establishment of the International Military Tribunal?

A. It is obviously untrue, preposterous, and were it not for the age of the person who wrote the book, I would have said naive.

Q. Well, he's a fairly important person, isn't he, sir?

A. Indeed he is important in the political realm, and he is given to all kinds of statements. I do not credit him with being an authority in matters of history. He is an axe man – in other words, a politician.

Q. Have you heard of Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court of the United States?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he, in your view, a fairly significant jurist?

A. He was, with a reputation for, as a former Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, very knowledgeable about matters of finance and regularly wrote opinions in financial cases in the Supreme Court., He wrote other opinions as well.

Q. Would you credit him with moral judgment?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you consider him an honourable man? {1032|1033}

A. Yes.

Q. I would like to quote from a letter of William O. Douglas referred to in the book, "Doenitz at Nuremberg: A Reappraisal. War Crimes and the Military Profession" prefaced by Justice William Hart of the Supreme Court of Ohio, edited by H.K. Thompson, Jr., and Henry Strutz, and I'd like to ask you if these words, in your opinion, are true —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, is this a book that the Doctor is familiar with?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I suppose you are not familiar with that book?

A. "Doenitz at Nuremberg". Is this a brand new book?

A. I don't think it's that new. It looks like —

A. '83

Q. '83.

A. No, I am not familiar with this.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I ask him if he agrees with the words in it?

THE COURT: You can ask him if he agrees with the statement.

MR. CHRISTIE: Of William Douglas?

THE COURT: Of a statement that you can put to him. It should not be attributable to anybody because there is no way of proving that the statement is what it says it was merely because it is in print.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well:

"I thought at the time and still think {1033|1034} that the Nuremberg trials were unprincipled. Law was created ex post facto to suit the passion and clamour of the time. The concept of ex post facto law is not congenial to the Anglo-American viewpoint on law."

Do you agree with those statements?

A. I agree that the American concept of law in matters of criminal behaviour is such that it is considered an injustice if something is made a crime after the act alleged to have been committed had already occurred, but these particular concepts are confined to American constitutional law; they are not incorporated in the international criminal law; and in this case, as well as the many other comments, the question of retroactivity pertains to the count of aggression.

Now, I will be perfectly honest with you. I, personally, speaking for myself — this has no value —

THE COURT: Well, just a moment. You are here, to testify as an expert. I don't know that your opinions, Doctor, and I say this with respect, are germane to the issues this jury must try.

THE WITNESS: Fine.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you agree with the statement:

"Scholars have searched frantically for little pieces of evidence of whether there was ever an International law and have pieced together fragments that in their minds justify the conclusion that aggressive war is an international crime — but the reasoning in those cases is shaped to the urgent necessity to find an ex post facto justification for what was done”.

A. Yes, I understand.

Q. Do you agree with the truth of those words, or do you consider them true, I should say?

A. As to whether they were made or not, or whether —

Q. No. Do you agree with the statement, and did you consider —

A. I agree. Let me put it this way. I agree that the count of aggression caused anguish, anxiety and trouble in the legal community, and with that I agree. And I was going to say, although I am not a member of the legal community other than a member of the American Society of International Law, which is not the same thing, that I, personally, would have been just as happy without this count in the indictment about which we are talking so much this afternoon.

Q. Well, it does seem to have been part of the proceedings at Nuremberg, doesn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was criticized in this article, “Did Six Million Really Die?”, in that Nuremberg is referred to as a totally unjustified exercise. Would you agree?

A. Yes. But there were several counts in the indictment.

Q. Yes. {1035|1036}

A. And the count of aggression is one thing, and the count of war crimes is something else.

Q. The article seems to indicate the basic argument that the Nuremberg Trials were unjustified. Would you agree with that statement?

A. I cannot agree with the statement that the Nuremberg trial was unjustified.

Q. I asked you whether you would agree with the statement, the article, this one, “Did Six Million Really Die?”, Chapter 5, “The Nuremberg Trials”, whether you like it or not, indicates that the trials were unjustified. True or false?

A. Whether this pamphlet says so.

Q. That's right.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you consider that totally wrong, in your opinion?

A. I consider it wrong insofar as the crimes committed, so-called war crimes, and the sub-category of crimes against humanity is concerned. Either we do have a judicial system that can punish crimes, or we don't.

Q. Well, until Nuremberg, we didn't have a tribunal to punish war crimes of defeated nations, sir.

A. We had tribunals.

Q. I know. We have one here. We have one in the Supreme Court of Canada. But I suggest we did not have —

A. But there were war crimes trials.

Q. There were war crimes trials imposed {1036|1037} by national courts against their own nationals. Correct?

A. Yes, but —

Q. I asked you this question: Was there ever before Nuremberg an International Military Tribunal set up of the victor nations to judge the nationals of the defeated nations?

A. I am not aware of an international tribunal.

Q. All right. Now, I put it to you —

A. In the criminal sphere.

Q. Now, I put it to you it wasn't international; it was of the Allies, in fact.

A. Well, “international” is a definition of any two or more nations.

Q. Well, why didn't they take the invitation of some people like the Chief Justice, to some of the judiciary from India — impartial parties — to judge at Nuremberg? Why didn't they do that?

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, how can he read the mind of what was set up in 1945?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, sir, I thought he was purporting to give his justification as an expert for the conclusion that the judgment in the book, “Did Six Million Really Die?” was a bad judgment, and I wanted to ask him, as such an expert, why he thinks that international and impartial sources might not have sat on the tribunal, or if he has maybe considered that.

THE COURT: No. I think if you want to rephrase it, you can ask that question; you can't ask him a question which, in effect, would be asking the witness to read the mind of people forty years ago. {1037|1038}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you very much.

Q. Would you accept the proposition, sir, that it does appear to us who are less informed than you about the distinction between aggressive war and crimes against humanity that Nuremberg appeared to be a tribunal of the victors? Would you agree that laymen might think that?

A. I have no quarrel with that.

Q. Yes. And perhaps the man who wrote this booklet, Mr. Harwood, didn't have your expertise. Right?

A. Well, if you want me to agree, I will.

Q. Yes. Because he doesn't have the background and knowledge that you have, apparently.

A. Well, apparently.

Q. Yes. So would you say that ignorant people like myself, or perhaps the author of this, if I may be so bold, he might take this book of Nahum Goldman and open it to the page I did and say, “My goodness, two Jewish jurists motivated the whole world to set up this tribunal.” He might, as a naive human being, be able to conclude that from the book; would you agree?

A. Well, I wouldn't include you in that group.

Q. Well, you are very complimentary, sir. Thank you. Would you agree that, in looking at some of the documents, it certainly leads one to the conclusion that there were some unfair things going on {1038|1039} at that time?

THE COURT: What documents?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. Looking at — I should be more precise — for example, the affidavit of Hans Marsalek, which we have discussed, it certainly appears like a very suspect kind of evidence, would you agree, on the surface, at least?

A. Well, suspect to whom? In other words, to me it was a document to be used very carefully, and I am not entirely sure that I used it more than once with reference to a minor matter, but — it's rather obvious that a layman confronted with a fragment of history in the form of a document should be careful in using it, because the document does not explain itself.

Q. Well, that's your view of the document, sir; but a layman looking at it would form the opinion, first of all, the man was dying; second of all, they interrogated him for six to eight hours after he had been shot; and thirdly, they take the statement and they kind of put it in the policeman's handwriting and he swears the guy said it. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. It does look suspicious, doesn't it, to —

A. You mean as a forgery, or as an unfair thing to do to a wounded man?

Q. Unfair thing to do.

A. Well, as I said, I have difficulty reconstructing what is fair or unfair in these circumstances. I don't know how badly wounded he was, what kind of care he had, whether physicians were consulted. It {1039|1040} it hard to say this. I, personally, would be reluctant to say the least question of anybody who was in a state of discomfort, but that is, you know ...

Q. Well, in respect to the major trial, the International Military Tribunal, you maintain that there was no suggestion that there was torture there, or was there?

A. I don't believe that there was torture in the course of the Nuremberg Trials.

Q. Okay. Was there an allegation of torture in the course of the Nuremberg trials?

A. Now you are asking me who alleged what. I can't answer that, because there could be all sorts of allegations.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that there was a major accused by the name of Streicher who certainly alleged that he had been tortured.

A. A major?

Q. Yes. He was one of the major war criminals.

A. Oh, you mean, Gauleiter Streicher?

Q. I don't think he was. I don't think he was anything at the time.

A. I don't know to whom you refer, then.

Q. Streicher.

A. Gauleiter Streicher?

Q. Well, in the tribunal proceedings he certainly alleged torture, did he not?

A. I don't recall the allegation. I am not saying it wasn't there, but there are twenty-two {1040|1041} volumes, and I don't remember every single word.

Q. Would it assist you to refer to some of the allegations, perhaps —

A. Are you going to read from a transcript?

Q. Well, I probably could. Maybe I should, but I was going to read from "The Times" article of London, Saturday, April 27, 1946, and see if it refreshed your memory of the transcript.

A. All right. Go ahead.

Q. Let me ask you if you would be able to say this is true or untrue, from your expert knowledge of the transcript. In the article he says that::

"... he was kept four days in a cell without clothes. 'I was made to kiss negroes' feet. I was whipped. I had to drink saliva.' ... 'My mouth was forced open with a piece of wood and then I was spat on. When I asked for a drink of water I was taken to a latrine and told, 'Drink.' These are the sort of things the Gestapo has been blamed for.'"

Do you recall those allegations being made in the course of the trial?

A. No.

Q. Would you be prepared to deny that they were made?

A. I cannot deny, because as I said, I might overlook something that if that allegation had been made, and if anything were to it, I dare say I would {1041|1042} have found that particular passage and discussion of it, but I don't know — I certainly do not recall any such passage in the transcript of the trial, and I do believe I read every word, and if the allegation was made out of court, if it was made out of some context that is outside Nuremberg after his capture by unknown assailants and captors, I cannot comment.

Q. It's my information that it was made in the course of the trial, but perhaps you overlooked it. Would that be possible?

A. It is conceivable that I overlooked it, but I do wish that you could show me the trial record, if it was, indeed, an allegation made before competent judges.

Q. All right. I am going to show you part of the transcript of the IMT referable [sic] to Fritz Sauckel, which occurred on the 13th of December, 1945, and it's an exchange between Mr. Dodd and the President of the Court.

A. Yes.

Q. He was asked if he concluded, and he said, "Yes, I have concluded."

THE COURT: Let the witness read it, please. And let us know, Doctor, whether you have knowledge of its content.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: You do have knowledge of its contents.

THE WITNESS: I have read this one time, yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you agree {1042|1043} with me, sir, that it indicates that where there is allegation of torture in respect to a document, then it was withdrawn?

A. No. The word used is "coerced", not "tortured"

Q. All right. Thank you.

A. And inasmuch as there was a question about the nature of this coercion and what it was, Mr. Dodd simply, in all fairness, wasn't going to use the document.

Q. Right.

A. But there is no allegation of torture, here. None whatsoever.

Q. I see.

A. "Coercion" could be all kinds of things.

Q. Was it, in your knowledge, true that if certain people did not say certain things to the interrogators at Nuremberg, they could be turned over to the Russians?

A. I have read a number of interrogations, since these are matters of record. I have not run across that particular type of threat. It might have occurred. It's an open question whether this is a permissible or impermissible technique. It's common knowledge that many of the witnesses, the German witnesses, were given what was in their mind a choice of testifying for the prosecution or, in the case of refusal to testify for the prosecution, being turned over to the Russians for crimes they committed inside Russian territory.

Now, whether this was pointed out {1043|1044} to them in some way, whether this was the nature of coercion which factored their decision to co-operate or not, I can't say, but I can conceive of it.

Q. That, to me, is rather unclear as an answer, sir: I'm sorry, but do you mean yes, or do you mean no?

A. Well, you are a criminal lawyer. There is a witness that you want. You want someone to testify for the prosecution, let us say, and this person would, perhaps, not like to do that for a variety of reasons. You point out to him the consequences of not co-operating. It might be extradition; it might be that he, himself, was betrayed right here; it might mean a number of consequences. I don't know that I would characterize that as coercion, certainly not torture, although a person might be tortured by having to make a choice, as I was tortured yesterday as to whether to continue testifying or go home and meet my classes; but surely I was not coerced.

Q. So you define the choices by this witness in Nuremberg to your difficulty of having to testify or not?

A. Surely my dilemma was much smaller, but all the same, real.

Q. I show you what purports to be a transcript of the IMT trial, May 1946. Do you know who Sauckel was?

A. Yes.

Q. He was one of those charged at Nuremberg with being one of the major war criminals.

A. Correct. {1044|1045}

Q. Yes. Now, I suggest that you look at the arrow on that document, you being able to read German, and me having an English translation, and confirm to me that I am reading correctly up to the next arrow.

THE COURT: Before you read it, ask him if he recognizes it, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You recognize it?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it say:

I herewith confirm that my signature is under this document. I request the Court to be allowed to state how the signature has come about. This document was submitted to me during this interrogation. I thereupon requested to be permitted to read this document through in my cell in Oberersul and to consider whether or not I should sign it. This was refused me. I was told during this conversation in the presence of an officer who is said to be a member of the Russian or Polish army that should I hesitate too long to sign this document, I should be handed over to the Russian authorities. Subsequently, this Polish or Russian came in again and said, 'Where is Sauckel's family? We know Sauckel and we shall, of {1045|1046} course, take him with us, but the family must also come with us and will likewise be transferred to the Russian zone.' I am a father of two children, so I did no longer consider this matter of signing this piece of paper in consideration of my family. Upon returning to my cell I contacted the commanding officer of the camp in writing and asked him to be heard by him alone in this matter. This was no longer possible because I was taken to Nuremberg shortly after this incident.

And it goes on. Am I correct in my understanding of its meaning, sir?

A. In other words, there is something that is alleged to have happened prior to his transfer to Nuremberg for trial.

Q. Right.

A. Well, he made that statement, yes.

Q. Yes. So at least that is an accurate account of an allegation at Nuremberg.

A. Yes. He was alleging that if he would — evidently, somebody talked to him, being a member of the Polish or Soviet army, that if he were too long, he would be extradited.

Q. Is that what you testified in other Courts and the United States with respect to people going to the Soviet Union and other countries?

A. You mean the attorneys going there? {1046|1047}

Q. No. The people who were being extradited going there.

A. No. There's been no one, to my knowledge, who went to the Soviet Union following any denaturalization procedures in the United States, and certainly none involved in the proceedings that I have been involved in.

Q. Oh. None?

A. None.

Q. To a communist country?

A. I have not been informed of anyone going to any communist country at any other proceedings I was involved in.

Q. Are you aware of what would happen to a German officer such as Sauckel if he was sent to the Soviet Union, as Hoess was?

A. Well, you see, Hoess was accused of multiple murder and multiple hangings at Auschwitz, meaning the recruitment of forced labour in Russia and Europe and all over Europe with many deaths occurring might very well have suffered, in anyone's custody, the penalty of death; on the other hand, many people convicted in the Soviet Union of war crimes were released and returned to Germany in the nineteen fifties. So not everybody was executed.

Q. So your position is that it really didn't matter whether you were tried by the Russians or tried by the British or tried by the Americans?

A. I would say that for certain individuals, the expected penalty, given the fact that the death penalty was in use, would have been death by hanging {1047|1048} or something like it, no matter where they had been tried, because the evidence was so overwhelming.

Q. Because the public opinion was so overwhelming, sir; would you agree?

A. Well, I am still of the view, which is strange for me, to express to you that a judge is a judge and resists public opinion. I speak, at least, for American and British and French judges.

THE COURT: With that, we will take an adjournment. Fifteen minutes, please.

— The jury retires. 3:40 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 4:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. I think the last thing we were discussing, you were making some rather complimentary remarks about the judiciary, right?

A. Well, I hope they are accurate.

Q. Would you take the same view about Mr. Justice Wenersturm of the Nuremberg Military Tribunal?

A. I'm sure that he did his job as he saw fit. Remarks have been attributed to him. {1048|1049}

Q. Are you familiar with those remarks?

A. I am familiar with the attributions, yes, which, not of a judicial temperament —

Q. Do you consider the remarks not of a judicial temperament?

A. Well, a layman's opinion.

Q. Right. Do you agree that, as an expert in the history of the Nuremberg trials, he did say, publicly —

Mr. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. Maybe we should hear whether he is an expert in the history of the Nuremberg trials first.

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. I thought he was. I have been asking questions on that basis for quite some time.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I'm sorry. You are . talking about Judge Wen[n]er-strum, or Dr. Hilberg?

MR. CHRISTIE: This witness, Dr. Hilberg.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I see. Excuse me.

THE COURT: Let me have the point again.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's all right, Your Honour. I had my answer. Thank you.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you

Q. Whether you agree with the remarks or not, and perhaps you don't, probably you don't, he did say some things at the time, didn't he?

A. I recall that such remarks were attributed to him, yes. {1049|1050}

Q. Well, he was quoted in the "Chicago Tribune" as saying, on February 23rd, 1948:

"Obviously the victor in any war is not the best judge of the war crime guilt. Try as you will it is impossible to convey to the defense, their counsel, and their people that the court is trying to represent all mankind rather than the country which appointed its members."

Do you recall those remarks?

A. Well, they are remarks, but they are in keeping and may well have been made.

Q. He also said, did he not, that:

"The initial war crimes trial here was judged and prosecuted by Americans, Russians, British, and French with much of the time, effort, and high expenses devoted to whitewashing the allies and placing the sole blame for World War II upon Germany."

Do you recall those facts?

A. No. Again, you are reading from a different source than the one I am familiar with, so I am not familiar with this remark. He made quite a few remarks.

Q. You are familiar with his interview, famous interview, and that the reply to the interview was published before the interview because —

A. I don't know that story.

Q. And you know that he said: {1050|1051}

"What I have said of the nationalist character of the tribunals applies to the prosecution. The high ideals announced as the motives for creating these tribunals has not been evident."

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

"The prosecution has failed to maintain objectivity aloof from vindictiveness, aloof from personal ambitions for convictions. It has failed to strive to lay down precedents which might help the world to avoid future wars."

Now, that's consistent with the general tenor of his remarks.

A. Yes.

Q. And he said:

"The entire atmosphere here is unwholesome. Linguists were needed. The Americans are notably poor linguists. Lawyers, clerks, interpreters, and researchers were employed who became Americans only in recent years, whose backgrounds were imbedded in Europe's hatreds and prejudices."

A. Yes.

Q. And he was implying that there were a large number of Jewish persons on the prosecution.

A. Absolutely. That was the implication and the attribution, and it was, in fact, somewhat largely false. {1051|1052}

Q. Largely false in your opinion, but he was making these remarks?

A. Yes, but he was assuming things of people being Jewish by things of this kind. People do not go around in the United States, and people do not go around in the Armed Forces, and people do not go around in the prosecution with yellow stars identifying them.

Q. But it was his opinion and he expressed it publicly that he felt that a large number of Jewish persons were involved in the prosecution?

A. That was his wrong opinion.

Q. That was his opinion, whether you agree with it.

A. Yes.

Q. He said:

"The trials were to have convinced the Germans of the guilt of their leaders. They convinced the Germans merely that their leaders lost the War to tough conquerors."

Would you agree that was his remark?

A. I don't remember this particular one, but it is certainly in keeping with the man.

Q. Yeah. He also said, I suggest:

"Most of the evidence in the trials was documentary, selected from the large tonnage of captured records."

The records taken from Alexandria, Virginia. Correct?

A. No. Long before those documents {1052|1053} were at Alexandria, Virginia, they were in other depositories — London, Paris, Berlin — and the documents were there. It was later that they were shipped to Alexandria.

Q. This statement that the selection was made by the prosecution, is that true?

A. The selection was made by the prosecution, and the defence did also make the selection.

Q. I suggest to you that the defence could not have access without permission from the prosecution [prosecution].

A. Surely. But they had permission.

Q. They did. Were there not complaints that they couldn't get access?

A. Yes, there always are complaints. I've heard them in courts often enough during the process of discovery.

Q. Mm-hmmm. He also said, "The defence had access only to those documents which the prosecution considered material to the case."

Now, those were Wenersturm's words, right?

A. Well, that is a possibility, yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

"Our tribunal introduced a rule of procedure that when the prosecution introduced an excerpt from a document, the entire document should be made available to the defense for presentation as evidence. The prosecution protested vigorously."

Those, again, were some of the criticisms {1053|1054} he made of what was going on.

A. Yes.

Q. And he was assailed for making those remarks at the time, was he not?

A. He was assailed for making several of these remarks. I would not assail him for all of the remarks, especially the last one. If I am being shown a document which is truncated, I would like to see the whole document. You showed me a truncated Stroop report. Well, I would like to see the whole report, and I completely sympathize with this criticism; but the business of imputing the prosecution, saying that they are Jews — Schrer, who was not Jewish, was thought of as a Jew, and things like this — does not speak of judicious temperament, even though these remarks were made out of court to a variety of people.

Q. It seems to me you formed this opinion after the fact.

A. Well, he did not make the remarks to me, nor to you. We are both relying on newspaper reports, books and the like; but obviously, these particular remarks are numerous enough so one might give credence to him.

Q. But they are quoted in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?", too, are they not?

A. I don't, offhand, recall. If you say they are, I would accept that.

Q. I notice on page 8 [12 handwritten] it seems to attribute remarks to Justice Wenersturm, on the lefthand column:

"The real background of the Nuremberg {1054|1055} Trials was exposed by the American judge, Justice Wenersturm, President of one of (the) Tribunals. He was so disgusted by the proceedings that he resigned his appointment and flew home to America, leaving behind a statement to the "Chicago Tribune" which enumerated [enumerated] point by point his objections to the Trials."

Would you agree that it appears that he made remarks in the "Chicago Tribune"; that would be true?

A. I have not seen them in the "Chicago Tribune", but I don't dispute the fact that they appeared there.

Q. And what I said was your recollection, anyway, of his unfounded opinion.

A. No. The general tenor of the remarks seems to be in keeping with the man, from every source that I've seen.

Q. I see. So that part of it, anyway, is not a fabrication; the part of the "Did Six Million Really Die?" booklet that refers to those remarks is actually —

A. Actually, I haven't found — you say page 8?

Q. My mistake. I didn't mean to say "8". I meant to say "12". And it's just on the left of the page. I tried to follow from the evidence in-chief. Where it says, "3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8", and it's my understanding that he did say: {1055|1056}

"Had I known seven months earlier what was happening at Nuremberg, I would never have gone there."

Now, would you disagree those were his remarks?

A. No, I have no disagreement.

Q. You do disagree?

A. No, I have no disagreement.

Q. Now, in your evidence you said that you enquired [enquired] as to how there was an extermination programme for Jews; that's your general procedure.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you, in the course of finding out how, ever visited an American gas chamber where they use hydrocyanide gas for executions in some states to find out how difficult it is, how time-consuming, how dangerous? Have you made such enquiries?

A. I've seen one of these, but I have made no enquiries. I have made no studies of either the difficulties or the preparations or the chemistry that is involved.

Q. Now, earlier on you made a remark that in the book, "Documents of Destruction", there was a reference to something, somebody called Greisler, that showed something about gassing Jews. Am I mistaken in understanding that?

A. Are you referring to Greiser?

Q. Yes, I guess I am. I didn't hear very well.

A. Yes. That's in the big book.

Q. In the big book. Okay. It isn't {1056|1057} in the "Documents of Destruction".

A. No. I think it's in the big one.

Q. Oh, could you just point that out to me?

A. I will have to go through the index.

Q. All right.

A. It is mentioned twice. Yes. It's — you will find it on page 642 on the right column.

Q. Okay. And what does it say there?

A. "One year later, on May 1942, Gauleiter Greiser of the incorporated Wartheland reported to Himmler that the 'special treatment' of 100,000 Jews in his Gau would be completed in another two or three months. Greiser then proceeded in the same paragraph to request Himmler's permission for the use of the experienced (eingearbeiteten) Sonderkommando at Kulmhof in order to liberate the Gau from still another danger which threatened 'with each passing week to assume catastrophic proportions.' Greiser had in his province 35,000 tubercular Poles. He wanted to kill them."

Footnote to a letter Greiser to Himmler, May 1st, 1942, Nuremberg document No. 246. Then the discussion goes on to see what happens to the suggestion.

Q. Okay. May I see that for a moment, {1057|1058} please? It doesn't seem to indicate anything in the document about killing anyone, or gassing anyone, does it?

A. What it indicates is that at the moment, when Greiser wrote his letter, there was a Kommando —

THE COURT: There was a what?

THE WITNESS: A Kommando, which is simply a detachment, working in Kulmhof, a killing centre, a death camp —

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, did he say that, or is that your word?

A. I am trying to describe the document. I am trying to differentiate between his interpretations and his words. Now, I am trying to explain what he meant. He had a Kommando at that very moment killing Jews, and he had — while he had the gas masks, he had another problem on his hands — not only Jews, but thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles who might infect the German resident population. At this point, because of the fortuitous point of having the killing centre at hand, he asked for permission to kill these thirty-five thousand Poles.

Q. Well, I, with the greatest respect, don't see any reference to the killing of thirty-five thousand Poles, or the killing of anyone from the document itself that appears here. Would you agree?

A. Well, of course, this particular item appears at a late stage of the book in the context of a description of everything that transpired there, and all I could say to you is that one cannot, in such {1058|1059} a book, repeat the basics on every page.

Q. Well, if you could quote the document at all to say where this was an order to kill anyone, or a suggestion that there was an intention to kill any one, why not do it?

A. I am not speaking of orders. I am saying that Greiser makes reference to a Kommando, an experienced group of people. Now, at the moment of his writing this letter they are working in Kulmhof, and while they were still there, because they weren't going to be there forever, there wasn't an inexhaustible supply of Jews in this town, he wanted Himmler's permission to also subject to the same treatment, meaning of course gassing, thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles. This was not a hospital.

Q. Well, I gather you are giving us an interpretation of the document from what you gather is the context of it. Is that your position?

A. Yes. And it's my further statement to you, sir, that Kulmhof, a little village, does not have a major hospital accommodating thirty-five thousand patients.

Q. Well, where in the document at all did it say anything about taking thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles to Kulmhof? Do you have that anywhere reported?

A. May I read it again?

Q. Yes.

A. He was making reference to his "experienced Sunderkommando in Kulmhof in order to liberate the Gau from still another danger", and that danger was {1059|1060} that of infection by thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles. He wanted this danger to be eliminated.

Q. Can I just understand very clearly what you say the document said itself?

A. What the document says itself is that —

Q. Let me just get it down very clearly. Okay. Now, the document said what?

A. The document said he was completing the "special treatment", in German "Sonderbehandlung", of one hundred thousand Jews. He expected that this particular operation would be completed two or three months from the moment of his writing the letter. In the same paragraph he then states —

Q. He then states —

THE COURT: Let him complete the answer.

MR. CHRISTIE: I want to make sure he does it properly, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Please go slowly, witness.

THE WITNESS: In the same paragraph he suggests that while this Kommando was there, his experienced Kommando, the thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles should also be conveyed there.

Q. The thirty-five thousand tubercular Poles should also be conveyed there.

A. Well, that's my summary from memory of the verbatim text.

Q. Okay. That is a summary from memory of the verbatim text.

A. Yes. In English. {1060|1061}

Q. Yes. So the words "special treatment", then, that you defined as "killing", the "Sonderbehandlung".

A. Yes. That is the direct quote special treatment.

Q. That is the German word "Sonderbehandlung".

A. Yes.

Q. And that is the word you interpreted to mean "killing".

A. Right.

Q. Okay. I understand. Is the word "Sonderbehandlung" always to be defined as "killing", or is it just sometimes to be defined as "killing"?

A. It was used in German correspondence as a synonym for killing, not only for Jews, but also for certain other categories of persons who, in the context, within the meaning of the communications that were sent, were intended to be killed. It was a euphemism.

Q. Well, then, it isn't always?

A. No, of course not. One could go to a hospital and get special treatment. One could go to a hotel and get special treatment. It is a word.

Q. So we can get the meaning from the context?

A. All meanings are from the context, of course.

Q. The words don't mean anything without the context; is that correct?

A. I suggest to you, sir, that it should have in a document. {1061|1062}

Q. But the context of the document, surely, must have to be provided by the writer to some extent.

A. Yes.

Q. In this case did you consult the writer, or did you have access to other things he wrote?

A. Well, of course, the correspondence goes on.

Q. Do you have other letters that define the situation as you have described it?

A. Well, the words "special treatment" recur and recur in documentation. I have already made reference to the use of it by Kohrerr in his report, and the fact of the matter is that Himmler thought it was used too much. It had lost its utility as a euphemism and he didn't want it used any more.

Q. Isn't it true that in the Nuremberg trials certain people were asked for the meaning of Sonderbehandlung — in fact, for example, Kaltenbrunner was asked for the meaning of "Sonderbehandlung", wasn't he?

A. Well, I believe a lot of defendants were asked that question. I would not exclude him.

Q. Well, I suggest he was asked and gave an answer and he didn't agree with your answer.

A. I am quite sure he didn't.

Q. I now produce and show to you a transcript, or a copy of the transcript of the 12th of April, 1945, and I ask you whether that indicates that the question was asked of Kaltenbrunner and he gave an answer. {1062|1063}

THE COURT: Perhaps the jury should know who Kaltenbrunner was.

MR. CHRISTIE: He was one of the accused at the International Military Tribunal.

Q. Is that not so?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you could just give us his answer, what was it?

A. Did you want me to read it? It is extremely difficult to summarize this answer.

Q. All right. But let's put it this way. Clearly, it doesn't indicate anything to do with killing, does it?

A. No. He is certainly trying, in this answer, to deflect all possible imputations to be drawn from this expression about his own role and responsibilities.

Q. So this, to you, is just someone trying to avoid the world knowing that six million Jews were killed by anything he had anything to do with. Is that it?

A. No. This was not, in fact, in the context of the Jews. This was a different matter which was here being discussed. It was not the Jewish Holocaust. The word, as I said, was used repeatedly, "special treatment" — Poles, Commissars, [Commissars] anybody including even mental patients, could be conveyed to special treatment.

He said it was a humorous expression, or something of this sort. I don't really want to summarize it. If you want me to read it, I'll be glad. The man {1063|1064} was on trial for his life because he was the chief of the Reich Security Main Office.

Q. Well; Dr. Richard Kohrerr wasn't in that category as was Kaltenbrunner, was he?

A. No. Kohrerr was not tried, and certainly was not of that high rank.

Q. Well, I put it to you that he endeavoured to find the meaning of the word "Sonderbehandlung", and it was explained to him by those in authority who were helping him to prepare the report that he did prepare that it meant "resettlement".

A. You are referring, no doubt, to the letter that he wrote to the newspaper in the nineteen seventies?

Q. That's right.

A. And I indicated to you before that I had seen four statements that Kohrerr had made much earlier describing in detail the exact usage of terminology in his report.

Q. Could you show us one of those?

A. Well, I did not bring them with me. I would have been very happy if I had known that you wanted to see them.

Q. Well, you didn't think at the outset that it would be necessary for you to back up anything you said with a document?

A. The problem of document selection is not mine. It is for the Crown to decide. I could not bring a railroad car full of documents with me, nor would I have had the time to invest a half year or a year to explain them all. {1064|1065}

Q. Well, I guess it's true to say that you didn't bring one document at all, then?

A. I was not asked to bring any documents, sir.

Q. Would you agree that the President of the International Military Tribunal, or certainly one of the three major parties, was I.T. Nikitchenko?

A. You say he was a prisoner? He was one of the four judges.

Q. Yes. Do you agree?

A. He was one of the four judges, yes.

Q. He was also the chief, or one of the three judges at the Moscow trials in the thirties, right?

A. Oh, yes. He was engaged in purges. He was Procurator General of the Soviet Union.

Q. And that fact doesn't lead you to think that the process at Nuremberg was questionable?

A. No. When we read the judgment we find out very clearly that, whereas Nikitchenko had altogether different conceptions of the law, he also dissented when the majority, meaning the British, American and French judges, decided not to convict one of the defendants, or not to impose a death sentence. He and he alone felt that just going to trial meant that these people were convicted anyway. I suppose that this is a Soviet view.

I don't mean to be disrespectful here, even to the Soviet Union, but fact is fact. This is not the sort of judge that we like to see judging people if we can help it, but the Soviet Union was a party to {1065|1066} the treaty. He had one out of four votes, and his vote did not prevail.

Q. Would you say that anywhere in the Kohrerr report there is any reference to killing anyone?

A. As I said before, there was no such use of the word "kill". It would not have been accepted. It would have been proscribed. If even "special treatment" was not acceptable, how could the man use the word "kill"?

There is, however, no ambiguity to what happened to certain numbers of people as specified in the Kohrerr report. When he says "dragged through", ... (German phrase) there is no question as to what that means.

Q. Dragged through?

A. Yes. Certain camps.

Q. Transit camps. Isn't that what it means?

A. Not transit camps. Certain camps in the Gouvernement-General.

Q. Wasn't there reference in the Kohrerr report that the death camps were transit camps?

A. No. There is no usage there of the transit camps.

Q. What is the German word for "transit camps"?

A. "Durchgangslager", abbreviated "Dulag", by the way.

Q. I think you are familiar with the booklet, "Six Million Did Die", published in South Africa by certain people that you are familiar with, I {1066|1067} would suggest. Is that right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Do you agree with this depiction as set out on page 74, that they chose the camps in question and described them on the one hand as concentration camps, on the other hand as extermination camps?

A. By and large I would not include Stutthoff as a death camp, although one may do so. This is a matter of definition.

Q. Right. Now, that is Stutthoff, the same map as is in "Did Six Million Really Die?"

A. Which map are you referring to now?

Q. Well, I think there is only one like it in there.

THE COURT: Page 17, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So you don't think the map is anything false because it's in the book you agree with.

A. I may have testified about this before. Now, my recollection is no longer so firm as it might be, and I said then that the map as depicted here is, by and large, subject to certain amendments I would make in it, more or less a correct depiction. I would not involve Stutthoff.

Q. But other than that you wouldn't argue with it.

A. No, other than that I wouldn't argue with it substantially, no.

Q. If I could capsize the thesis of this book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" in a few words, {1067|1068} it would be this, sir, and then I will ask you if you agree with it, that that map is the position that most authorities take today, including yourself, and that that map, at one time, would have been portrayed a little differently with death camps in Germany, too. Would you agree?

A. Well, of course, there have been all kinds of maps and all kinds of depictions and all kinds of errors. You know, I have seen labellings this way and that. I have made my own definition of a death camp as a facility the primary purpose of which is conveying people to their deaths. There were camps in which, this happened, but that may not have been the primary purpose of the camp.

One can still argue whether this or that camp did have this or that primary purpose. One can also argue as to whether some small camp with such a purpose should or should not be included. I have simplified the matter somewhat as one must, and I have said I shall concentrate on certain camps. I concentrated on six. I would not include Stutthoff.

Q. Well, to get it to a simple point, what I suggest to you is the difference between the camps on the right in that map and the camps on the left is the existence in the ones on the right of what are called gas chambers for killing people. Would you agree?

A. Gas chambers or gas vans.

Q. Yeah. Okay. So the allegation that you accept and maintain here and have testified to is that the camps on the right exist as a different kind of camp from the camps on the left. {1068|1069}

A. Yes.

Q. Right? And the camps on the left are in what we now know as West Germany, or Germany proper.

A. Well, yes, more or less. One in French territory, one in Dutch territory, one in Austrian territory.

Q. But they were liberated by the Allies.

A. Most of them. Some were liberated by the Soviets, too, since they invaded Germany.

Q. But all the ones on the right are in territory captured by the Soviet Union. Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Do you agree that the Soviet Union is more, or was then more capable of atrocity propaganda than were the Allies?

A. What do you mean by atrocity propaganda?

Q. Well, I suggest to you that the Polish Government, for some reason, has chosen to put a monument at Auschwitz to —

A. Oh, that sort of thing. Yes.

Q. Now, that is a false statement, isn't it? You've seen the monument, sir.

A. I have seen this monument, and —

Q. It's false.

A. As to number it is certainly not correct.

Q. Right. What I mean by that is that they — that is the Soviet Government, or shall we say those governments that have sympathizers towards the {1069|1070} communist position – tended to have a deeper and more, shall we say, violent anger and hatred against the Nazis than, apparently, the Allies on this side of what we now know as the Iron Curtain seemed to have.

A. Well, you know, that is for everyone a matter of conjecture. I would say this much. The occupation forces, military and civilian, in the occupied territories of the Soviet Union, did a frightful amount of damage and caused many deaths. They did not invade the United States or Canada. They did not even invade Britain, and although they bombed it, and it is natural to expect that people who suffered acutely from loss of many deaths in ways that there seemed to be wanton and unnecessary brutality should develop feelings towards the occupation forces of the enemy that had been there, to that extent I can readily agree that there was at the bottom a different feeling and a more violent one against the Germans; and yet I would not say that the number in Auschwitz or the other numbers that have been stated, such as still is being stated by the Soviet Union about the total losses is a propagandistic number.

It could be incompetence. It could be that they could not understand the circumstances at the beginning, or did not count adequately, and they evidently didn't.

Q. I suggest to you that the thing that makes the Eastern camps attributed to extermination, and the Western camps attributed to simple concentration camps with dire consequences and bad conditions was that the objective observers that observed the Western Camps at the time could not go into Auschwitz, Treblinka, Sobibor and Stutthoff. {1070|1071}

A. Well, that's – no, I can't [cannot] agree with that because obviously it is the West rather than the Soviet Union that captured the bulk of the German records, even though the Soviet Union and its satellites does have a substantial number of interesting and even indispensable documents. I do believe that much that was known from the beginning about at least some of these camps derives from Western sources. Moreover, I think most of what we know about Treblinka, Belzec and Sobibor at this stage of the game derives from West German sources, that is to say, the findings and trials conducted in West Germany in the nineteen sixties.

So I would not say that we rely upon what Soviet propaganda may have said or issued in order to make the determination as to where the killings took place.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that the documentary evidence surrounding the camps and in the camps was captured by the Soviet Union and nobody else.

Do you agree?

A. No. No. A certain number of documents were captured by the West, and a certain number of documents, as I said, were captured by the Soviet Union. It's not a matter of one country having everything.

Q. Would you please address yourself to my question?

A. Yes. I deny it. I said no.

Q. Well, did you hear me when I said in the camps and surrounding the camps, any documents were captured by the Soviet Union?

A. You mean found inside the camps? {1071|1072}

Q. Yes. Physically inside —

A. I'm sorry. I misunderstood.

Q. I thought you misunderstood. But listen to me and you will understand me.

A. One gets tired.

Q. The documents on the site, the scene itself and all the people on the place were captured by the Russians. Right?

A. Well, I would not say it about the people, because, of course, the personnel were evacuated and they were not captured by the Soviet Union. I mean the personnel of the camps.

Q. All the camps were evacuated; is that your position?

A. I am talking about, well, Treblinka, Belzec and Sobibor, were obliterated before the Soviets got there, but the other, Lublin, only a small portion were captured; but in the case of Auschwitz, to my knowledge, the Soviet Union did not capture any German personnel – they all went west.

Q. The whole site was within the Soviet sphere of control, and nobody from the west was allowed into those camps to investigate; isn't that right?

A. Well, I don't know of any requests made to investigate.

Q. Well, let's just address the question.

A. When you say no one was allowed, it implies some request.

Q. I don't know whether it does or not. Just tell me — {1072|1073}

A. All I could say is, I know of no Western investigators early on in Auschwitz, or any of —

Q. Treblinka?

A. Well, there was no more Treblinka in 1945.

Q. Sobibor?

A. That was no more.

Q. Maidanek?

A. Maidanek is another matter.

Q. Was there anybody from the West that went to Maidanek?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Belzec?

A. Belzec was the first camp to have been obliterated.

Q. Chelmno or Stutthoff?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Auschwitz or Birkenau?

A. No.

Q. All right. So isn't it the case that all the physical objects in those camps were in the control of the Soviet Union and nobody else, for some time after the War?

A. Poland, yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Would you agree that, in fact, the Soviets have indicated, at least by their publications, that sixty thousand people a day were exterminated in Birkenau?

A. Well, I don't recall any publication with that particular number. It is not impossible that {1073|1074} they said that.

Q. You would agree that it's possible, but you don't know about it.

A. Yes. I mean, since they came to the conclusion that there was something like two and a half million dead in Auschwitz, that would easily lead them to the supposition that there were sixty thousand a day; but there was no such capacity, and that could not have happened.

Q. Would you agree with me that all of the Allied observations of concentration camps in the West could not produce the evidence of a single gas chamber as such at all?

A. Well, I do think I excepted Natzweiler and another camp, since they were both in Allied hands, and they used very small chambers with which to eliminate, kill small numbers of people – these are not part of the Holocaust complex – and they were, indeed, in the custody of the Allies, and I have already testified, so I would be repeating myself, about findings in them.

Q. It's quite obvious, isn't it, Dr. Hilberg, that what you or I could see in any of those camps would not indicate the existence of any gassings such as you might consider existed in Auschwitz or Birkenau.

A. I do not, myself, rely upon on-site visits to make determinations about what happened in particular localities.

Q. Right.

A. I don't deny the possibility that {1074|1075} somebody with a different kind of training might engage in such an endeavour, but I am not that person. I am, as I testified repeatedly, looking at documents. I am looking at testimony to the extent that the documents are not self-explanatory, and upon this ground primarily I have to make my conclusions of what transpired.

Q. How can you explain to me that in the Hoess confession, which was tendered in evidence at Nuremberg, he wrote the confession in the English language, that there is no evidence that he understood it?

A. Well, you know, the man made quite a few statements, and the one to which I believe you refer, which may be the very same one in which there was an allegation that he did not quite know what he was doing or signing because he may have been beaten —

Q. Later.

A. — but that particular one I would put aside. I would not rely upon that for the information of numbers or things of that sort, because there are so very many statements by Hoess. That is not to say that even this statement is false in its entirety.

Q. Could we identify that as the one made on the 15th of April of '45?

A. Well, I do not know from memory on what date it was made.

Q. Well, I put it to you that the one that was introduced was, in fact, the same wording as that document.

A. You mean the one introduced in evidence.

Q. Right. {1075|1076}

A. Yes. I don't dispute what you are saying. I am talking about my utilization of sources and my reliance on them.

Q. How do you explain to me that he repeatedly mentioned a camp Wolsek, that he repeatedly mentioned a camp that didn't exist?

A. Yes, I have seen that garbled reference. It may have been Belzec. It's very hard, if the man did not write anything, if he said things, if he was tired, if he was misunderstood, if he misspoke himself

Q. Well, what makes it even more difficult for me to understand is that he referred to Belzec, at one place, Treblinka, and then Wolsek. I suggest to you that there is a reason to believe that this man was not only being obliged to sign a confession in a language he didn't understand, but things were being put into a statement for him that are patently absurd, again like Gerstein.

A. There was obvious confusion in this one statement.

Q. I put it to you that that's document PS-3868, and there it is. Have you seen that document?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Second page over, I think you will find the Wolsek reference.

A. Yes, I've seen that reference. It's terrible.

Q. It's obvious that something wasn't quite right about that individual; would you agree?

A. No, I wouldn't say that something {1076|1077} wasn't quite right about the individual. I would say that something wasn't quite right about the circumstances under which this was made as an affidavit. The individual, Hoess, subsequently made any number of statements, some of them as a witness in open court at Nuremberg, some of them in the form of depositions, and last but not least the memoir. So we have a lot of verbiage from Mr. Hoess.

Q. It is my understanding that in his testimony at Nuremberg in person it was obvious that he had been burnt on the face. Do you agree?

A. No, I'm sorry. Where do you get this idea?

THE COURT: Well, do you know, witness, or not?

THE WITNESS: Hoess? Yes. Hoess was Commander of Auschwitz.

THE COURT: Do you know about him being burned on the face?

THE WITNESS: No. That is something that is new to me.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What do you know about the existence of a staff evidence and analysis of June 22nd, 1945, which indicates the existence —

Mr. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps —

Mr. CHRISTIE: I will show it to him.

THE COURT: I think it is now ten minutes to five. You can show that to him tomorrow morning.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, just before I excuse you for the evening, would you please {1077|1078} indicate by holding up your hands whether or not you have completed reading those exhibits? I gather, then, that you have read them all. Then thank you. We will collect them. You are excused now until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 4:55 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 18, 1985.

JANUARY 18, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

— The jury enters. 10:20 a.m.

Q. I want to carry on, Dr. Hilberg, with the question of Hoess, and to put it in perspective as to its real importance to your book and research, would you agree with me, and I put it to you, that you quoted Hoess forty-two times in your book?

A. Well, here we go with the numbers, which I have not counted, of course, since I do not carry in my head the numbers of citations of thousands of people mentioned by name in the book. So when I am disputing the precise number, I would say that he was {1078|1079} mentioned repeatedly, and especially in one chapter; and the sources are repeatedly not only his statements, but also correspondence that involves him.

Q. Yes. In your research you are familiar with the book that he wrote about his life, and especially his treatment in Nuremberg, called, "The Commandant of Auschwitz" by Rudolf Hoess?

A. Yes.

Q. And I dealt with a small part of that book yesterday where you acknowledge reading this book.

A. I have read it, yes, in German.

Q. Do you think that my translation or statements about the book were somehow erroneous when I said that he indicated that: "At my first interrogation, evidence was obtained by beating me. I do not know what is in the record, although I signed it. Alcohol and the whip were too much for me. The whip was my own, which by chance had got into my wife's luggage. It had hardly ever touched my horse, far less the prisoners. Nevertheless, one of my interrogators was convinced that I had perpetually used it for flogging the prisoners."

Do you say there is anything inaccurate about that statement from Hoess' memoirs?

A. Well, you are quoting it, and the translation, as far as I remember, is adequate enough. There is no clarity in my mind or, for that matter, in the context of the book, as to when or where this occurred. It was clearly not in the Nuremberg prison.

Q. No. I put it to you that in the book he says he was maltreated by the field security police {1079|1080} which occurred upon his capture.

A. Well, the United States does not have anything like "field security police".

Q. No. He was captured by the British, sir; didn't you know that?

A. Yes, but I don't know what the British have by way of field security police. You are now asking me to comment about situations I am not familiar with.

Q. You are an expert. You have read this book and you are familiar with what he said.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, I put it to you that he said further — and this book, I suggest to you, was written when he was in Polish custody after he had finished giving his testimony at Nuremberg ...

A. Yes.

Q. Right. You know, don't you, that he was first captured by the British.

A. Yes.

Q. He was turned over to the Americans. Then he testified at Nuremberg.

A. Yes.

Q. Then he was turned over to the Poles.

A. Correct.

Q. Then he wrote his book.

A. Yes.

Q. Then he was hanged.

A. Correct.

Q. Right. I put it to you that he said:

"After some days I was taken to Minden-on-the-Weser, the {1080|1081} main interrogation centre in the British zone. There received further rough treatment at the hands of the English public prosecutor, a major." Right?

A. Well, you are reading. I presume you are reading correctly.

Q. Well, I want to make sure.

A. No, I can dispense with that. I trust you.

Q. I just want to get out what he said in his book, and then ask you questions. So if you think in any way that I am misrepresenting what the book said, or what he said, please tell me. Would you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. So for the sake of brevity, I am going to read the entire part. He said: "The conditions in the prison accorded with this behaviour. After three weeks, to my surprise, I was shaved and had my hair cut and I was allowed to wash. My handcuffs had not previously been removed since my arrest. On the next day I was taken by lorry to Nuremberg, together with a prisoner of war who had been brought over from London as a witness in Fritzsche's defence. My imprisonment by the International Military Tribunal was a rest-cure compared to what I had been through before."

He goes on to say – and I am skipping over some here if you think that I am taking it out of context ...

A. Yes, go ahead.

Q. He said: "Although the conditions in prison were in every respect good, – I read whenever I {1081|1082} had the time, and there was a well stocked library available – the interrogations were extremely unpleasant, not so much physically, but far more because of their strong psychological effect. I cannot really blame the interrogators – they were almost all Jews. Psychologically I was cut in pieces. They wanted to know all about everything, and this was also done by Jews. They left me in no doubt whatever as to the fate that was in store for me."

Now, I put it to you, that is what he said after he was released and after he had testified. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In the forty-two times you mention Hoess in your book I suggest to you not once do you raise the issue of torture. Would you agree?

A. Of Hoess?

Q. Of Hoess.

A. No.

Q. It is never mentioned.

A. Not at all.

Q. Right. So reading your book, one never get any indication that Hoess was tortured, or suggested that he was tortured.

A. I did not consider relevant the question of torture in any matter, if it was torture. All we have is his statement, his allegation. That's all we have. Just as he says, he was interrogated by Jews. He just assumed everybody was Jewish, as did that American judge.

Q. Are you telling me what he assumed? {1082|1083}

A. Obviously he assumed. Did he ask the interrogator, "Are you a Jew?"

Q. He might have.

A. Oh, please.

Q. He was there in the interrogation and you were not.

A. No, but I have been an interrogator and I was never asked what I was.

Q. But you are Jewish.

A. Now you are asking.

Q. Yes.

A. Do you want the answer?

Q. Yes, please.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Thank you.

A. The Germans did not ask me that I question. You are asking me.

Q. But you think that Commandant Hoess was ignorant, mistaken or lying when he said that?

A. He certainly made assumptions about interrogators, and anyone speaking the German language without an accent in German was presumed to have been a Jew who emigrated from Germany and thus, in the uniform of the American Armed Forces or some other armed force, was asking the questions. That was the basic presumption, I notwithstanding the fact that there were non-jewish immigrants as well, notwithstanding the fact that some Americans speak good German, notwithstanding the fact that there were Professors and teachers of German who were also interrogators.

Q. Yes. Now, sir, can you tell me if {1083|1084} it is correct that in his initial statement taken at two thirty in the morning he made certain statements that you and I would agree are totally false? Would you agree?

A. I'm sorry. What is false?

Q. Certain statements that he made —

A. About the number, yes.

Q. The number was totally false.

A. Yes. He signed — now, please, let me underscore that I did not use this number.

Q. No. I realize —

A. I only used Hoess information obtained under the nice conditions, relatively nice as he describes them, at Nuremberg. His testimony or the correspondence prior to the end of the War — in other words, if I were to have used information that was obtained under torture that he alleged to have been tortured, then I would be under some obligation to explain by way of qualification; but I didn't use it.

Q. You have explained that you only used the Nuremberg testimony. Right?

A. The Nuremberg testimony, statements made under conditions free of torture, and above all, correspondence by Hoess.

Q. Yeah. That is where he referred to the military imprisonment at the International Military Tribunal as a rest cure compared to what he had been through

A. That's correct. Yes. The rest cure statements I did use.

Q. You used the rest cure statements, right; but you didn't use the part about what had {1084|1085} happened before in his interrogation.

A. No, I didn't use the number, did I?

Q. No, because the number was ridiculous; wasn't it?

A. Of course.

Q. So the part that is ridiculous you leave out of your book; right?

A. Wouldn't you?

Q. No. If I was trying to present the whole picture and tell the whole world what actually happened or what he said happened — you asked me a question and I am going to give you an answer — I suggest to you it is the right thing to do: The fact that he gave an absolutely ridiculous figure, and the fact that his statement was taken at two-thirty in the morning, he invented a concentration camp that didn't exist called Wolsec, and it couldn't have been Belzec because that was also used in the statement; is that true, sir?

THE COURT: No, just a moment. Any more than that and you will have to take off your gown, won't you?

MR. CHRISTIE: I apologize. I will try and rephrase the question.

THE COURT: No, don't rephrase the question. You will answer questions, do you understand, Doctor? You don't make statements and you don't ask counsel questions. That gives counsel the opportunity to make speeches. We don't want that. Proceed.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. I put it to you, witness, that he invented the name Wolsec in a statement taken at two-{1085|1086}thirty in the morning.

A. No, I don't really think that he invented it. I can only state my general knowledge of that situation, which is that he was being interrogated; he may have been given a drink ...

Q. I see.

A. It was late in the day

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. He was under psychological pressure; the whip may have been taken out, whether it touched his body or not I cannot say. He says it did.

A statement based, presumably, on what he was saying, and he may not have articulated things very well. It was written down, presented to him for signature. He signed it. I never used any of that statement.

Q. Pardon?

A. And I never made use of that statement.

Q. May I suggest to you, sir, that —

A. Therefore —

Q. — that that statement was put to him at Nuremberg, read to him, and he was — once in a while the prosecutor paused a minute and said, "Isn't that right?" And he said, "Yes, sir. And then more was read. Let me finish. And he was asked, "Is that right?" and he said, "Yes, sir."

A. Yes.

Q. That's the way it was, wasn't it, sir?

A. But I — {1086|1087}

Q. Can you answer that question?

A. That's the way it was.

Q. That's the way it was. Thank you. I have another question, so let's deal with it one at a time. Now, in respect to Wolsec, it is not a word that describes a camp that ever existed; right?

A. That's correct.

Q. All right. He used that word; isn't that true?

A. Well, it appeared in the affidavit.

Q. Yes. And it also appeared in the statement that was given in the circumstances he described where the whip and alcohol were used. Right?

A. Yes. That's the one, yes.

Q. Right. He also, in fact, gave that information in a statement that you used part of, but you eliminated that information in your book.

A. No. I eliminated an obviously unverified, totally exaggerated number, one which may well have been known or circulated as a result of some faulty initial findings by a Soviet Polish investigation commission in Auschwitz.

Q. Now, sir — thank you. You have made an important admission in that. You made an admission that some of the statements of Hoess may have come from the Soviet authorities and been incorporated into his statement, haven't you?

A. Please don't characterize what say as an admission.

Q. I put it to you that way.

A. I am simply speculating that the {1087|1088} number may have come from an initial faulty finding of a Soviet Polish investigation commission.

Q. Well, may I suggest to you that there is no reason why a Soviet finding should end up in Hoess' statement unless there is some pressure on Hoess to incorporate it.

A. I quite agree, and I have not used that number.

Q. Yes. That also, I suppose — is that your explanation for the incorporation of the mythical name Wolsec, or do you have another explanation?

A. I have no idea how that particular word entered into the statement, and I have not made use of it.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that upon his initial capture a statement was written for him in English, in handwriting, by a person other than him, and he signed it?

A. Now, that I don't know.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, you said no?

THE WITNESS: No, I, don't know of that episode.

THE COURT: Before you answer, witness, when you are shown a document, don't answer until I give you the word.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you what purports to be a photocopy of a handwritten document. Do you recognize the document? That's the bottom half, not the part referable [sic] to Kramer

THE COURT: Just a moment. What does that pertain to, Mr. Christie? {1088|1089}

MR. CHRISTIE: It's a —

THE COURT: Does it pertain to the question you just asked him where the witness said he was not aware?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Well, then, how can he answer it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Sometimes he can recognize the document that he cannot remember. That's all.

THE COURT: All right. You can answer whether you recognize the document or not, witness.

THE WITNESS: I do not recognize the document. I do not recognize the handwriting.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you recognize the signature?

A. Not even that, because I am not a handwriting analysis person, and it's —

Q. That's fine. I will withdraw the question. Thank you very much. Are you familiar with this book, sir?

A. I have seen this. This seems to be a German translation of an English book. Is that correct?

Q. Well, I am just asking if you are familiar with it.

A. Well, I can't answer that question without knowing the title of the book, because Lord Russell of Liverpool. I know a book by him and this may be a translation of the book that I know.

Q. You are not familiar with that book?

A. I am not familiar with the German {1089|1090} translation of the English original. I am familiar with the English original book. If this is the same book, just a translation of the English, fine.

Q. I just asked you if you are familiar with that book, and I gather the answer is no.

A. All I can say to you is, I am familiar with a book written by Lord Russell of Liverpool in the English language, and this may be a translation of the book I am familiar with; but I have never seen a German translation of it, and you are showing me a German translation.

Q. Thank you very much. You are not familiar with that, then.

A. I am not familiar with the German translation.

Q. Now, in view of the fact that the statement of Hoess was initially taken in his interrogation in English and signed by him — will you agree with that statement, sir?

A. Well, I'm sorry, but I don't know what exactly transpired in the situation you seem to be describing. I am not even quite sure what you are describing.

Q. I am describing the situation that prevailed in April of 1945. I think there was —

A. It must have been later than that.

Q. The first statement of Hoess.

A. Yes. Was that, you said, April?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't think he was captured before May, but anyhow, that's immaterial.

Q. The statement I referred to is the {1090|1091} one that was signed by him. I suggest to you it was in the English language, as he says in his book.

A. Does he say it was in the English language?

THE COURT: Do you know, witness?

THE WITNESS: No. That's the first time I heard of that. Maybe it is a misreading of what he said.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he said: do not know what is in the report, although I signed it.

A. Well, he doesn't say it was in English, does he?

Q. No. Actually that's true. He doesn't say it was in English.

A. That's right.

Q. Do you know whether it was or not?

A. No. I can only make assumptions, and that is, that one would not present, even in a broken state, an affidavit to be signed by somebody in a language that one knows the signer is not familiar with.

Q. So you don't know whether the statement was in English or German, but you assume it was in German, I gather.

A. I would assume so. He certainly doesn't say it was in English.

Q. Not in this book. But you don't know any better than what I suggested to you as to whether it was in English or German?

A. Look, if you say it was in Chinese, I would say probably not.

Q. I want to know from the expert {1091|1092} that you are.

A. Just as I wouldn't swear that it wasn't in Chinese, I wouldn't swear that it was in English.

Q. Now, did you suggest in your book that some of what Hoess said was obviously fabricated?

A. Did I suggest that in my work?

Q. Yeah.

A. Well, let me simply say that if state something that I doubt whether it's fabricated, I would certainly indicate that my belief is that the particular statement herein recorded may be fabricated, or is fabricated, but I made no use of that statement. My book wasn't about Hoess; it was about the destruction of European Jews.

Q. But sir, the belief that in Auschwitz 2.5 million Jews were gassed comes from the Hoess statement.

A. That may have been the belief in Nuremberg, but it is not my belief, it is not my statement.

Q. But you quoted extensively from Hoess in your book, about forty-two times.

A. Well, you keep on saying forty-two times. I doubt I quoted from Hoess at Nuremberg forty-two times.

Q. Would you like to go through your book?

A. Oh, in any case, the quotations are a compound of correspondence signed by Hoess in 1942, in 1943, in 1944, of his testimony, of his various statements made at various times, and some in testimony.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that at no {1092|1093} time before his testimony in Nuremberg did he make the statement publicly that you have attributed to him in your book.

A. Are you saying that —

Q. I am putting that to you.

A. I may not follow your question.

Q. That at no time before his statements in his testimony given at Nuremberg did he publicly state what you have attributed to him in your book.

A. Well, I think most of his statements, by far the greatest number of his post-war statements, were made after his arrival in Nuremberg. He made a number of statements.

Q. If you would like to address yourself to my question, and I will repeat it again, at no time did he make publicly the statements that you attributed to him in your book before his testimony at Nuremberg.

A. That's probably correct, yes.

Q. Right. So when you refer to all sorts of wartime correspondence, you are not referring to 2.5 million Jews gassed at Auschwitz, or —

A. No, I never referred to that.

Q. No. So all of what I suggest to you you attributed to him in your book about confessing to those figures comes as a result of what he said at Nuremberg.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The Doctor repeatedly testified he didn't use those figures, and my friend insists in putting those words into his mouth. He said it over and over.

THE COURT: Yes, I know. {1093|1094}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, do you deny that you attributed to Hoess a confession at Nuremberg for the gassing of Jews at Auschwitz?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. The figure 2.5 million you left out of your book. Right?

A. That's correct.

Q. You say the figure actually was one million. Right?

A. Roughly. A little bit over, perhaps, but that's the range.

Q. I think it is right when he says seven hundred thousand.

A. Well, he is very conservative, too much so.

Q. And other people have said many larger figures. Right?

A. Lots of people have said different things, true.

Q. There's a person by the name of Sehn that you quoted repeatedly in your book. Are you familiar with that person?

A. How would you spell that name?

Q. S-E-H-N.

A. Oh, that is a Polish judge.

Q. Yeah. And he refers to far, far larger figures than yours.

A. No doubt.

Q. He refers to sixty thousand a day.

A. He was making his statements on the basis of the Polish Soviet investigation commission which {1094|1095} I've already described as faulty findings of numbers.

Q. Yes. They, of course, were the occupation force at Auschwitz.

A. They made their best efforts at estimating very early in the game, and they were not correct.

Q. So in respect to Hoess, you haven't at any time in your book indicated any accusation of torture; is that correct?

A. I can only repeat that I have not discussed the treatment of prisoners with regard to statements made that I did not use.

Q. But I suggest to you that what happened at Nuremberg was very clearly just the repetition of his earlier statement in testimony; would you agree?

A. I did not use the repetition.

Q. Well, let me suggest that you really did in that you quoted from what Hoess is supposed to have said at Nuremberg in your book on a number of occasions.

A. About two and a half million victims?

Q. Not about that. You left that out, we all agree, because that was a ridiculous figure and you left that out. Right?

A. Yeah.

Q. You left the statement of Streim because you didn't quote his figure.

A. That's correct.

Q. You also left out parts of Gerstein about Hitler being in these camps, which you acknowledged {1095|1096} was ridiculous; you left that out.

A. Well, incorrect, certainly.

Q. So you leave out parts of testimony that you consider ridiculous, and you keep what you consider credible. Right?

A. I plead guilty.

Q. Well, that process of selective perception was inclined to convince your readers that this man, Hoess, was a credible witness, wasn't it?

A. He was credible in some respects. In fact, in most respects, under most circumstances in which he made statements.

Q. Yes. I am suggesting to you that the cross-examination of Hoess, or the examination before, in fact, by — he was called as a defence witness, wasn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. He was called as a defence witness, and then the prosecution, Colonel Amen — do you pronounce it Amen?

A. I don't know how to pronounce it. I don't know the gentleman.

Q. Well, you tell me, and he then cross-examined the witness and he put to him a totally new statement that he had not made in his evidence in-chief.

A. Please go ahead. I can't answer that partial question.

Q. Let me put it to you the cross-examination went something like this —

THE COURT: No. Have you got the cross-examination there? {1096|1097}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: All of it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I can read the whole thing. It went on for a long time. I am going to refer to the part where the statement was put to him, and the manner in which he was asked questions, and the manner in which he gave answers, is what I want to get at.

THE COURT: Well, you had better get at it, but you had better ask the witness whether he knows anything about it and whether he is familiar with it, otherwise you will be giving evidence from the court.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I put it to you, witness —

THE COURT: Without reading it all, ask him, please, what I asked you to ask him.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can you tell me, on the 15th of April, 1946, whether you are familiar with his testimony?

A. I have read through this entire series, including the one you mentioned.

Q. Yes. That was the day on which he first testified at Nuremberg; would you agree?

A. If you say so. I am agreeing because I cannot precisely recall whether that was the first date of testimony.

Q. I put it to you that that was the day that world headlines were made, and he was the most important witness to testify at Nuremberg. Would you agree?

A. Well, when the world headlines were made, I was still in uniform, so I cannot confirm that. {1097|1098}

Q. But you are an expert talking about what you now know.

A. I don't know what you mean by world headlines, but I really —

Q. Then I will withdraw that part of the question. Do you agree that he was considered, and do you consider him the most important witness at Nuremberg?

A. No, I would not consider him the most important witness at Nuremberg, but I would say that he was the most important witness at Nuremberg with respect to happenings in Auschwitz.

Q. Thank you. Would you agree that Colonel Amen was putting to him the affidavit that had been signed in the circumstances I described and related from his book?

A. I believe so.

Q. All right.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, may I go on, then, to deal with that?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Now, I put it to you that Colonel Amen began to introduce that affidavit obtained in the circumstances described in this book in the following manner:

"COLONEL AMEN: If the Tribunal please, we have in four languages (turning to the witness) some of the matters covered in this affidavit you have already told us about in part, so I {1098|1099} will admit some parts of the affidavit. If you will follow along with me as I read, please. Do you have a copy of the affidavit in front of you?"

HOESS: Yes.

COLONEL AMEN: I will omit the first paragraph and start with the second paragraph. 'I have been constantly associated with the administration of concentration camps since 1934; serving at Dachau until 1938, ..."

He then went on to describe the background of the witness. Right?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. In the affidavit.

A. Yes.

Q. And then he said:

"Is that true, witness?"

HOESS: Yes, it is."

"COLONEL AMEN: Now, I read the first few lines of paragraph 3 and start in the middle. 'Prior to establishment of the RSHA, Secret. State police Office (Gestapo).'"

And he reads on down to the discussion about Kaltenbrunner.

For the sake of accuracy the President said:

"The last date of paragraph 2 is 1943 or 1944?"

There was a correction. Colonel Amen then read on. He said:

"COLONEL AMEN: Right."

And the statement was read further for a full page, and {1099|1100} then he came to paragraph 6, the final solution, and that was read, out of the affidavit. Right?

A. I don't precisely recall the precise wording.

Q. And then he was asked:

"Is that all true and correct, witness?"

HOESS: Yes."

And then Colonel Amen said:

"Incidentally, what was done with the gold teeth which were taken from the corpses, do you know?"

HOESS: Yes."

"COLONEL AMEN: Will you tell the Tribunal?"

"HOESS: The gold teeth were melted down and brought to the Chief Medical Officer of the S.S. at Berlin."

Colonel Amen then read paragraph 7, which was about forty-five lines, and he said:

"Is that all true and correct, witness?"

HOESS: Yes."

And then Colonel Amen read paragraphs 8 and 9 and 10, and he said: "Now, I ask you, witness, is everything which I read to you true to your knowledge?"

HOESS: Yes."

"COLONEL AMEN: That concludes the cross-examination, except for one exhibit that our British Allies would like to have in which the summary of {1100|1101} exhibits I have introduced in the cross-examination ..."

etcetera. The President then turned to General Rudenko, and he was given another chance to cross-examine, and Colonel Paprovski also made certain comments. The witness was then Dr. Kaufmann, the man who called him for the defence, had then been asked to re-examine. He declined and there was one more answer from Hoess that said, "Yes", and two more answers which discussed crematoria, and he then, Hoess then said one "No", and on page 41 he said:

"Yes, the visiting party was shown through the camp inspecting the quarters' hospital, then, above all, the work-shops where the inmates were employed."

He then was asked another question and he said:

"No, not at that time. They were normally filed."

He said he couldn't give exact figures, and then the witness left the stand.

Would that be a fair summary of what happened?

A. It seems to me, most especially the last comment where he couldn't give exact figures.

Q. I see. Now, is it not the case that there was a psychiatric examination of the Nuremberg accused by a psychiatrist whose name was Gilbert?

A. I think that Gilbert was not a psychiatrist, that he was a psychologist and, well, there is some distinction in the mind of some people, and that he was not making, as I understand it, a psychiatric {1101|1102} examination for the purpose of determining whether these people were able to stand trial, but that he was allowed to talk to them at length for other purposes.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. That is what I gathered from his book.

Q. You've read his book.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. May I show you his book and make sure we are talking about the same Gilbert in the same book.

A. That's right. Yes.

Q. You are familiar with his opinion of the mental condition of Hoess?

A. I don't offhand recall it.

Q. May I suggest to you that he said he was suffering from what is known as schizoid apathy, insensitivity and lack of empathy that could hardly be more extreme? Would you agree with that?

A. That he said that?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you referred to that in your book anywhere?

A. No, because number one, as I pointed out, Mr. Gilbert is a psychologist not a medical doctor; number two, if he says a man lacks empathy, which has been said about him not only by Gilbert but by Eichmann and other people, then what is there to refer to? It merely means that he cannot feel for other people. He cannot put himself into the place of the victim. {1102|1103}

Q. Did you think, or did you consider the meaning of the word schizoid apathy?

A. As far as apathy is concerned, it is a rather general word. As far as schizophrenia or schizoid is concerned, I asked my psychiatric friends, and they sort of look at me and say, "You don't understand. You are not a doctor." Now, here is a word used as an adjective by someone who is not a medical doctor, and you are asking me about it.

Q. Well, in summation, you wrote about what he alleged in the way of torture about which you are aware, and having been a Commandant of Auschwitz, and you are aware of what Dr. Gilbert said about schizoid and psychotic — well, I quoted it. You are aware of that?

A. Yes.

Q. I agree that you and I are not qualified to say what being a psychotic or being schizoid means, but did you not consider it fair and proper to present a bald opinion of Hoess that you should include that in your book?

A. No. I don't consider that what a particular psychologist may say in adjective form, next to some noun, is necessarily a matter for inclusion in an account of what happened to the Jews. Hoess was my source with certain facts. Insofar as these facts were confirmed, insofar as they came from contemporaneous correspondence, insofar as they were totally credible, I used them.

Q. Insofar as they confirmed what you believed.

A. No. Insofar as they confirmed other {1103|1104} information or were confirmed by other information.

Q. Mm-hmmm. But to present a fair and balanced account of the evidence of the person, Hoess, you consider that it was right that you should have, knowing about his allegations of the whip and being in handcuffs for three weeks, and knowing about Dr. — rather, Gilbert — you called him a psychologist — his evidence, or book about his observations at Nuremberg, you didn't think that was necessary to include.

A. Obviously I didn't think it was necessary.

Q. You said that Gilbert was just a psychologist?

A. Well, I don't want to say, just a psychologist, but you characterized him as a psychiatrist, and my best recollection is that he is a psychologist, and there is a distinction.

Q. All right. I won't ask you about your book, but what I just asked you, is it not true that Gilbert was, in fact, the only so-called expert, or person with psychological or psychiatric qualifications to be allowed to speak to these people?

A. At Nuremberg, that may well be the case, yes.

Q. So he becomes more than just some other person; he is an eye witness to their mental state, isn't he?

A. Well, he talked to them, and he could certainly ascertain their "mental state" in the same way, I suppose, as other people could who were observant and knowledgeable. {1104|1105}

Q. Just for the record, we are talking about G.M. Gilbert's book, "Nuremberg Diary", are we not?

A. Yes. That's correct.

Q. So with Hoess, he is referred to, but torture is not mentioned in your book, and any evidence to indicate that there was doubt about his mental state is also not indicated, I guess.

A. No, I do not indicate some doubt. Pressed by someone in regard to a matter which does not seem to me sufficiently material and necessary, I used Hoess' statement for his upbringing, for his career, and for other factors and, you know, persons who are, if they really are, mentally afflicted, may give statements as far as some matters, as far as I am concerned.

Q. Did you, in reading "Commandant of Auschwitz" and other material from Hoess, ever consider that some of the things he said about the operation of this supposed gas chamber were nonsense?

A. I'm sorry, I do not have the vaguest idea what you may be referring to.

Q. All right. I will be more specific. He does say, in some of his statements, that very shortly after these alleged gassings occurred people went in to haul out the bodies, eating and smoking; doesn't he? You are not aware of that?

A. Well, obviously they were not eating and smoking inside the gas chamber, while they had their gas masks on.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that is what he says.

A. I don't recall him saying that they {1105|1106} were in there eating food and smoking.

Q. Now, I am going to quote to you from — well, maybe I had better show you this. Having read the book, "Commandant of Auschwitz", are you familiar with this page, 198 ...

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. ... where he says something that, I suggest, is kind of silly; he is describing the gas chambers and he says:

"The door was opened half an hour after the induction of the gas, and the ventilation switched on. Work was immediately begun on removing the corpses."

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Are you familiar with that?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You maintain that is possible?

A. Well, of course.

Q. You are saying they were wearing gas masks.

A. Yes, of course.

Q. All right. I refer to page 152, where he says:

"Then the bodies had to be taken from the gas-chambers, and after the gold teeth had been extracted, and the hair cut off, they had to be dragged to the pits or to the crematoria. Then the fires in the pits had to be stoked, the surplus fat drained off, and the {1106|1107} mountain of burning corpses constantly turned over so that the draught might fan the flames."

Did you consider that?

A. Yes.

Q. "They carried out all these tasks with a callous indifference as though it were all part of an ordinary day's work. While they dragged the corpses about, they ate or they smoked."

A. While they were dragging the corpses to the pits.

Q. He doesn't say that.

A. It is rather obvious, isn't it?

Q. You are adding words.

A. No, no. Look at the sequence, please.

Q. It doesn't say anything about dragging corpses to the pits, does it?

A. Well, look. In the preceding paragraph there is mention of the corpses being taken from the gas chambers. Then the gold teeth had to be extracted, the hair had to be cut off, and then they had to be dragged to the pits. Your statement as to what people did while they were dragging refers to dragging to the pits. It's in proper sequence.

THE COURT: The word "pits" and "dragging" appear?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, they are not —

THE WITNESS: Well —

THE COURT: Do the words appear any-{1107|1108}where on that page — "dragging" and "pits"?

THE WITNESS: No, they don't, not together. They appear on the page, but not together.

THE COURT: That is what I asked you. Do they appear on the page?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, they do.

THE COURT: All right. Then I think the jury may be interested in that passage.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will file the whole page if Your Honour wants.

THE COURT: No, I don't think you should file it, but the total should be read to the jury.

MR. CHRISTIE: I will read the whole page if Your Honour directs.

THE COURT: Well, if it refers to that — you are asking the questions.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am, Your Honour.

THE COURT: He is giving the answers. I think the jury should have the whole picture, not just the part that you select. Go ahead, read the whole thing.

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right, Your Honour. Thank you.

Q. I am reading this part which you've said refers to dragging to pits. It says:

"They carried out all these tasks with a callous indifference as though it were all part of an ordinary day's work. While they dragged corpses about, they ate or they smoked. They did not stop eating even when engaged on the grisly job of burning corpses {1108|1109} which had been lying for some time in "mass graves."

Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, sir, are you familiar with the gas Zyklon-B?

A. I have handled it myself.

Q. I'm sure. I asked you as an expert who testified in the case.

A. I read all the correspondence about it, and there was quite a bit of it.

Q. Do you agree that the gas Zyklon-B clings to bodies and wet surfaces?

A. Well, the gas, as I understand it, is produced when a canister of pellets in the solid state are introduced into a chamber, and when, at high temperature inside that chamber, the gas pellets are released, they turn by a process that the chemist refers to as sublimation into a gas, without passing through the liquid stage. However, if there is much humidity, then gas pellets may remain on the floor. There may be some liquid there and things of this sort.

Now, what I am testifying to is not the testimony of a chemist. It is simply the description supplied by chemists and by witnesses who have handled these things.

Q. That's in the same category as a lot of your evidence – it comes from other sources.

A. I do not say it is in the same category. I qualify my statements here as secondhand. If you were to ask the question of a chemist, he might {1109|1110} most certainly, I am sure he would be able to give a more precise and satisfactory answer.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file the pages that I have referred to as an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. A straight exhibit.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit No. 9.

— EXHIBIT NO. 9: Photocopied pages 152, 153, 198, 199 from "The Commandant of Auschwitz".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you have a copy of the book that you wrote, Doctor? Is it in front of you? Thank you very much. Could you turn to page 571?

A. Yes.

Q. Second column, middle of the page, it says, this footnote, "Interrogation of Hoess, May 14, 1946", refers to "Exhibit "NI-36". Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you read that exhibit which you refer to as a footnote?

A. NI-36?

Q. NI-36, yes. I,

A. Yes. Yes, of course.

Q. You are familiar with that exhibit, then.

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you, Exhibit NI-36 from the office of the U.S. Chief Counsel for War Crimes. Do you recognize that as a photocopy of the {1110|1111} exhibit you are familiar with?

A. No. It is, at least, a xerox.

Q. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Could you turn to page 3?

A. That was the English version, I suppose, yes.

Q. Do you find the part where it says, referring to Zyklon-B, and I am quoting, and please correct me if I misquote – the exhibit is now in your hand.

A. Yes.

Q. It says: At the time when the gassing begun, it was on supply of large quantities. Mainly it was on supply as gassing vermin, protection against vermin in buildings and barracks which, formerly, were Polish artillery barracks. There were two employees of the firm Tesch & Stabenow, Hamburg, who operated the gassing in the premises. Important measures were taken there every time. Everything was secluded and nobody was allowed to enter the buildings. In the same way, everything was ventilated to prevent casualties.

Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you are familiar with that?

A. Yes.

Q. And I have read that correctly from the exhibits?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have used that as an exhibit {1111|1112} for Footnote 74 about Zyklon-B.

A. Yes. We are talking about Zyklon-B. Well, the question was Zyklon-B, and he answered it. Whether it was B or some other thing is not specified here, but we may assume it was Zyklon-B. It may have been something other than Zyklon-B, but most people don't know anything except B.

Q. Well, I suggest that is what is referred to in NI-36; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So we are talking about Zyklon-B.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that clearly indicates that the important security measures necessary for this substance was that when it was used for exterminating vermin, the building had to be ventilated for two days to prevent casualties. Right? That's what it says right there.

A. Yes, it may well have been that, because, again, if clothing were being disinfected, this being the clothing of inmates that was distributed to others, it had to be disinfected, and if there were no people with gas masks to take out the clothing, one would have to ventilate for two days.

Q. Yes.

A. Especially if — you must remember that there is nothing here about special powerful ventilators being installed. You know, it's just technical.

Q. Do you have some knowledge of special powerful ventilators being installed in the crematoria or area of Auschwitz II — Birkenau?

A. Yeah. For the four installations {1112|1113} very powerful ventilators were installed.

Q. Were they?

A. They are not in this work. I did not then have that information.

Q. I suggest to you that the only information that you could have then or now would come from the plans that are in Auschwitz.

A. No, no. There is correspondence. There is correspondence about that.

Q. You mean there is correspondence which contradicts the plans that are displayed in Birkenau?

A. No, there is no contradiction.

Q. All right. Will you then say that the plans in Birkenau are the plans for what you call the gas chambers?

A. Yes, but the plans don't show ventilators

Q. No, I know. But did you say that the correspondence contradicted the plans?

A. Not at all. Not at all.

Q. All right. Thank you.

A. Any more than, you know, the plans don't show hooks for hanging up clothing. Plans don't show everything. It is not a contradiction to say that there was a hook.

Q. No, I'm sure. But you say there were some four full ventilators not shown on the plan.

A. That's right. That is the motor, and I am not competent to discuss — motors would not, of course, be on a building plan. {1113|1114}

Q. Okay. Now, you were saying earlier that these people who were dragging the bodies out of the gas chambers. were wearing gas masks; is that right?

A. As they entered the gas chambers to drag out the bodies, yes.

Q. And then, did they take the gas masks off to drag the bodies while they were eating and smoking?

A. Now, now. You just read the passage. So let me repeat, because I need not go any further than the passage you, yourself, brought up.

People wearing gas masks went into the gas chamber to drag out the bodies. The teeth were extracted. The gold teeth were extracted for the purpose of melting them down so that it could be budgeted to the Reich, to the German Government. Hair, insofar as necessary, may have also been shorn at this point, although there were different procedures at different times with regard to that.

Q. Gas masks, while —

A. No. Different people were cutting the hair, and different people were taking the teeth. Thereafter, when people were being burned in pits, they were being dragged out. They were not being dragged out from the gas chambers, but an area near the gas chambers where the teeth were being extracted. They were dragged to the pits and the pits were obviously in the open. So there were no gas masks in the open.

 Q. Now, what I am asking you is, were they dragging the bodies out of the gas chambers with gas masks on? {1114|1115}
 A. Surely.
 Q. Then they take the gas masks off and drag them to the pits; is that it?
 A. Yes. On the outside they don't wear the gas masks.
 Q. So when they take them to the crematorium they wear the gas masks.
 A. No. There were two methods of body-disposal. One was by burning in crematoria; since the capacity of the crematoria was limited on days and at times when transports were coming in with numbers to be gassed in excess of the capacity of the crematoria, at that point pits were dug. In fact, pits were dug at the arrival of the Hungarian Jewish transports, and then people were simply burned in pits, outside, not inside the building.
 Q. If you could address your mind to the question that I want to have you answer, how do you explain that from the time they leave the gas chamber to the time they get to the pits, or to the crematoria, Hoess is saying they are cutting off hair, taking out gold teeth, and then they are also eating and smoking?
 A. He is referring to one element of disposal. I just said to you that there were two kinds of body-disposal. One was in the crematoria, the other in the pits. He is obviously talking about the pits. He has two very short paragraphs. In the first paragraph he talks about dragging into the pits. In the second paragraph he describes people who were doing this nonchalantly or whatever phraseology he used in the original German, while even smoking and eating. {1115|1116}
 Q. Do you know that Zyklon-B is explosive and burns?
 A. Under what conditions?
 Q. When it comes in contact with an open flame.
 A. Well, are we talking about open flames in gas chambers? Are we talking about people smoking in gas chambers?
 Q. We are talking about smoking when people are brought out of the gas chamber.
 A. These people were hosed down.
 Q. Hosed down?
 A. Yes, obviously.
 Q. Who hosed them down?
 A. The same kommando who dragged out the bodies was required to hose down the entire gas chamber.
 Q. And the bodies?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Is hydrocyanic acid known as HCN?
 A. I believe so from my very limited knowledge of, chemistry, yes.
 Q. I now produce and show to you a document that refers to HCN made by Degesch. Now, Degesch were the people who made Zyklon-B.
 A. Degesch were involved in the making and distribution of the gas.
 THE COURT: please identify the document to the witness.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.
 Q. Do you recognize that document in the middle, the whole thing? {1116|1117}
 A. This is an American firm in Virginia.
 Q. Degesch Incorporated, they are still in business, making HCN products, which is hydrocyanic acid; they still sell it as a poison for insecticide.
 A. Why not if they make money.
 Q. And in fact —
 Mr. GRIFFITHS: Objection, Your Honour.
 THE COURT: Mr. Christie, he doesn't recognize the document. You can't give evidence.
 MR. CHRISTIE: I can ask questions.
 THE COURT: Yes, you can, but you cannot give evidence.
 MR. CHRISTIE: I can put things to a witness.
 THE COURT: Not if he does not recognize the document. You had better ask him whether he recognizes it first before you give evidence through the mouth of this witness.

 MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest in the course of cross-examination I can put a fact to him and he can dispute it.
 THE COURT: Then put a fact to him and see if he can.
 MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.
 Q. Do you disagree that even today, with the sale of hydrocyanic acid products, that they are indicated to be extremely flammable?
 A. I have no doubt that they may so be {1117|1118} indicated by any company making them for any purpose whatsoever.
 Q. Can you explain to me why in the very document you quoted, NI-36, it says that it takes two days to ventilate a building before you can enter without casualties, and you are telling me that people can haul bodies — let me put it this way. Hoess, in the part I've quoted, said they hauled the bodies out in half an hour, and then they are pulling teeth out of these bodies that have been in close contact in lethal amounts with the same hydrocyanic acid.
 A. But he is saying nothing about gas masks. He is saying nothing about ventilators.
 Q. No. He doesn't say anything about gas masks or ventilators.
 A. He is talking about the same buildings.
 Q. But he would have to be talking about the same substance, Zyklon-B.
 A. Yes.
 Q. And about the kind of bodies we all have.
 A. Yes, but there is a reference to clothing and bodies.
 Q. So there is a difference whether hydrocyanic acid may cling to bodies or clothing, in your opinion?
 A. I am not saying what hydrocyanic acid may cling to. I am saying that from the passage you showed me, which obviously deals with clothing, lots and lots of clothing which was being collected from the victims {1118|1119} and which was subject to disinfection —
 Q. Let me — you mean The Commandant of Auschwitz?
 A. In the document NI-36. This is the passage that I make mention. Now, in here, in this one passage he speaks of two days. He does not say who entered the gas chamber, whether they, were wearing gas masks or there was obviously no hurry in removing the clothing from the building. It was not the same building in which the human bodies were gassed. It was a different structure. And so all he is saying is, it took two days, and they had to be very careful. He is not referring to when this process was taking place.
 Q. Now, how do you explain the stories that say these gas chambers held how many people — how many people?
 A. I must really say they are not simply stories.
 Q. All right. Tell me how many people they held.
 A. Well, there were different gas chambers, as I testified before, with different capacities.
 Q. All right. Let's deal with one. We will call it Krema II, which you understand, you know what I mean.
 A. Well, unfortunately, because these numbers changed, I can't be certain, but I could simply say that there were two large ones, two not so large, two small ones, in addition to the one in Auschwitz I which was a smaller one.
 Q. All right. We will go through that {1119|1120} again, then. There is Auschwitz I, which is a small one.
 A. Yes.
 Q. Then we go to Birkenau, which is a different camp than Auschwitz. There's four there.
 A. First we have two huts. Then they are being discontinued. Then, by 1943, four large, massive structures are erected. Two of them were larger gas chambers, two others were what might be called medium gas chambers.
 Q. Okay. Now, tell me how many, then, would you say would be gassed at a time in Krema II, Crematorium II?
 A. Are you referring to the larger one there? Because you see, the numbers changed.
 Q. Let me show you a map, and I will show you what I mean. Then we will not be confused, I hope.

THE COURT: We are now referring to —

MR. CHRISTIE: There's two maps that have been filed, Your Honour. They are exhibits. I am not sure of the number, sorry. They are both numbered as —

THE REGISTRAR: They have different numbers.

MR. CHRISTIE: Okay. The one I am referring to, then, has no number. It says, "Subject to Further Identification". Oh, is that a number?

THE REGISTRAR: "H".

MR. CHRISTIE: "H", I'm sorry.

Q. I now produce and show to you what I suggest is a map of Birkenau.

A. Yes. Okay. So that is one of the {1120|1121} larger ones. Okay.

Q. Krema II and Krema III are identical, aren't they, sir?

A. That's correct.

Q. All right. So that's the one we are talking about.

A. Okay.

Q. How many do you say were gassed in that at a time?

A. You are referring to theoretical capacity, or actual gassings, or —

Q. Whichever you prefer. At one time, actually. What do you say?

A. I have to think, because that is there is a number of theoretical capacity that is mentioned in Hoess' book, and I am trying to remember what he said.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, let me, rather —

A. Maybe around fourteen hundred. It may be, but I don't want to be pinned down to that precise number, because it is —

Q. You are saying that fourteen hundred people were gassed in there at one time?

A. If I remember correctly, he made mention of some theoretical capacity to that extent.

Q. And this is all part of the sixty thousand a day that Sehn refers to, and your figure is what, sir?

A., Now, wait a minute —

Q. For the daily capacity of the whole camp of Birkenau.

A. The daily capacity is not sixty {1121|1122} thousand, that is obvious. The daily maximum capacity was probably under twenty thousand, but even that is an arguable figure, because one could not run these gas chambers twenty-four hours a day.

Q. Could I refresh your memory from your book at page 629 where you said twelve thousand bodies a day? Would that be more accurate?

A. Well, that is a high figure.

Q. Well, I refer to page 629, lefthand column, bottom paragraph:

"By 1942-43, the liquidation of graves in all killing centers was in progress. Auschwitz transferred the corpses to the five new crematoriums, which could burn about 12,000 bodies a day."

Were you referring to Auschwitz II, Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. Of course, August 1944 was a time when more than these four gas chambers were used.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And —

Q. Well, you refer to five gas chambers in Birkenau.

A. Yes, but they opened yet another emergency gas chamber. We were talking about August 1944, and this is a peak period. And you are referring to a peak period, but twenty thousand is obviously a rounded figure, which is a maximum for one timeframe, namely August 1944, which was the peak. {1122|1123}

Q. Now, can you explain to me how, with Zyklon-B, defined in Exhibit NI-36, it required two days of ventilation in an ordinary building, which was referred to there as a barracks — right? That's what that was about, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you can tell me that you could, in an installation like you described, deal with twelve thousand bodies which are imbued with lethal quantities of Zyklon-B, they can be handled so rapidly by those who at one point take off gas masks and smoke and eat? Can you explain all that to me?

A. No. You are referring to what was called in the vernacular of the camp, in the ordinary language, a Sonderkommando. This was mostly Jewish. These people worked in shifts. The maximum number in the middle of 1944, in this Sonderkommando, was around six hundred. So they were not all working all of the time. There were those that dragged the bodies out. There were those that dragged the bodies to the pits. There were those —

Q. You misunderstand me, sir. I am not concerned with whether six hundred people were Jewish or whether they weren't, whether they could handle the corpses. I am interested in whether you can explain to me — unless Jewish people have an immunity to Zyklon-B how they could handle those corpses that so soon came into contact with Zyklon-B, put them into pits, smoking and eating, without having gas masks on.

A. No. They had gas masks on as they took the corpses to the gas chamber. As to smoking and {1123|1124} eating, which is Hoess' characterization, I have not found that statement confirmed by anyone whatsoever.

Q. So it is incredible?

A. It is one of Hoess' contentions of the type of people that did this kind of work. Now, he may have seen somebody smoking at one time; he may have seen somebody eating at one time while carrying corpses; that is possible, and his observation may have been accurate; but I have not seen it repeated anywhere.

Q. It creates a somewhat unusual situation, doesn't it?

A. No, it does not. People live amongst corpses and eat.

Q. I am sure what people do within the physical realm is something else, but I suggest to you that it is not physically possible for an ordinary person to handle any corpse that's coming up with that close a contact with Zyklon-B within half an hour and eat and drink or smoke; would you agree?

A. In the same half hour, certainly not. I am not even saying that these were the same people. I just said that there were several shifts. These were working parties. There were people that dragged people out of the gas chambers, and there were people that dragged those bodies, after processing for gold and whatnot, into the pits.

Q. Now, you seem to have indicated earlier that there was a distinction between Zyklon and Zyklon-B.

A. Zyklon is the generic trade name.

Q. Zyklon-B was used for disinfection. {1124|1125}

A. No. There may be a misunderstanding. Hoess states that they had quantities of Zyklon on hand for disinfection purposes, and it is these quantities that were tapped when the first experiment was made, he said. As it happened, people who wanted to find out what would happen, how long they would take to die and the like — obviously, these quantities were not used for mass gassings of Jews; they were deliveries for a special purpose.

Q. Let me understand you. So the Zyklon is not used for — Zyklon is used for insects, and the Zyklon-B is used for humans; is that right?

A. No. He said he had Zyklon on hand. Now, it may be that what he had on hand was Zyklon-B. It is generally assumed that it was Zyklon-B. When you look at photographs of these cans they do not, in actual fact, have "B" on them. It just says, "Zyklon". Now, that's just a trade name.

As it happened, there were various strengths. "B" was a low strength.

Q. And was it for killing people?

A. Yes.

Q. So we now have it clearly that PS-1553 is for killing people; right?

A. You are referring to a number here. What —

Q. I'm sorry. We now have it from you that Zyklon-B is for killing people.

A. Yes. Zyklon-B was the agent used in Auschwitz to kill people.

Q. No doubt about that.

A. No doubt about it. {1125|1126}

Q. And it was not used for other purposes.

A. I am not saying it was not used for other purposes, because Hoess states that he had some quantities on hand, obviously for disinfection.

That's back in 1941. But there was such a thing as Zyklon-C and Zyklon-D and even Zyklon-E.

Q. Were they for killing people?

A. No.

Q. So Zyklon-B is only for killing people?

A. Well, they certainly would not use Zyklon-D or E, which was much more expensive.

Q. But Zyklon-B, you say, was used not only for killing people but also for insects?

A. It may very well have been used for insects, although it was not recommended. I have seen a letter from Dr. Tesch of the firm of Tesch & Stabenow, which you have mentioned, indicating the strengths and the purposes for which these various strengths were intended.

Q. Could you turn to page 567 of your book? You refer to, on the Footnote 56, you refer to – NI-9098 as authority for your proposition. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And I have now – you've read NI-9098, obviously, because you use it in your book; right?

A. Yes.

Q. I now produce and show to you what I suggest is that document – NI-9098.

A. Yes. {1126|1127}

Q. I always have trouble with numbers, but that is the right number, isn't it?

A. Well —

Q. Do you recognize it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. I notice that under qualities of Zyklon, down at the bottom, No. 7, it says, "Lufbarkeit" [Lüftbarkeit]. What does that mean?

A. Well, in the context I cannot —

Q. It's properties, is't it?

A. It is a property, yes.

Q. Yeah. I notice that it says in the highlighted portion: Ventilation difficult, and long to ventilate, since it adheres strongly to surfaces.

Would you agree?

A. You say that the gas — yes, the description of the quality of this particular gas is that. As for other properties listed here, one is that there are certain adhesive qualities to it.

Q. Yeah. Am I right in understanding that it says, ventilation is difficult and it adheres strongly to surfaces?

A. That's correct.

Q. So that's the property of Zyklon.

A. Yes.

Q. And you are aware of that because you referred to that document.

A. Yes. It even recommends five hours.

Q. Five hours.

A. Under normal circumstances.

Q. Five hours of ventilation? {1127|1128}

A. Under normal circumstances.

Q. The other document referred to twenty-four hours of ventilation, didn't it?

A. Or even two days. You see, everything depends on a variety of factors — humidity, how well sealed the building was, how much gas was used. All of these factors matter. Now, of course, if one has strong ventilating systems and the like, the process takes less time.

Q. But we have agreed that on the plans of the crematorium at Auschwitz-Birkenau, there is no indication of any high-powered ventilation fans.

A. Well, it's your plan, and there is no indication on it.

Q. Well, you've seen the plan, haven't you, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever seen any indication of high-powered ventilation on it?

A. Not on it.

Q. So would you agree that Oranienburg was not a concentration camp where people were executed?

A. I said Oranienberg [sic] was a concentration camp. It was also the headquarters of the Economic Administrative Main Office of the S.S., which administered twenty camps, including Auschwitz.

THE COURT: We are going to take an adjournment.

— The jury retires. 11:35 a.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

—— {1128|1129}

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 12:00 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Witness, you have told us that in order to explain the ability to deal with the bodies in question within some half-hour or so after gassing, they were hosed down. Is that your evidence?

A. Yes, that is the evidence, yes.

Q. I suggest to you in your book you don't refer to any such statement.

A. No. No, I do not; but as I indicated, I do credit Mr. Faurisson and other critics with making me include evidence that, at first, I considered so self-evident as not to require notation in my second edition, and it will be in my second edition. Indeed, you may look forward to it there.

Q. So from your first to your second edition Dr. Faurisson has pointed out that you cannot touch a human body until several hours later without hosing it down, because even touching a body is poisonous; is that correct?

A. I can't tell you how much a person would be poisoned if he touched the bodies, but to my knowledge, these bodies were hosed down and dragged with hooks. I am not sure how much touching was necessary or took place. I would, however, point out that the handlers of these corpses were Jews, and one or the other of them became ill and died. That did not matter to the German camp administration. {1129|1130}

Q. I suggest to you if each or any of them was handling ten bodies a day that would have come in close contact with hydrocyanic acid, they would die unless they handled them with rubber masks — wore rubber masks, and covered the moist parts of their body; would you agree?

A. Well, I am not a chemist, but all I could tell you is, to the best of my knowledge, they were always wearing gas masks, and they dragged out bodies with hooks, at least until they were out in the open.

Q. Okay. And I think you will acknowledge that Dr. Faurisson raised this question and made it known to you in some way.

A. Oh, other people have, and it was just a matter of whether certain details should or should not be included; and you know, one deals with publishing eight hundred pages, and I said, "Well, all right. We must stop sometime. We must cut it off here. We must cut it off there."

Q. Now, can you turn to page 570 of your book, "The Destruction of European Jews"?

A. Yes.

Q. I am concerned with the paragraph at the top righthand part of the page 570 where it says:

"... Dessau Works, which produced the gas, shipments were not sent directly to Auschwitz Extermination and Fumigation Division (Abteilung Entwesung und Entseuchung)."

Is that right?

A. Yes. {1130|1131}

Q. What is the translation for "Entwesung"?

A. To deprive something of life — that is extermination. There is no very accurate translation which doesn't carry connotations, but I think you will find that that's an acceptable translation of the German term.

Q. I put it to you that it means "delousing", and it refers specifically to vermin.

A. No.

Q. That word —

A. No. The term "Wesen" is a live thing; anything alive. The prefix "Ent" is to negate life, to deprive it of life. The suffix "ung" in "Entwesung", and having been deprived of life, or depriving something of life.

Q. I now produce and show to you an English-German Dictionary. Are you familiar with this?

A. No, I don't use that one.

Q. Okay. It refers to "Wesen", to disinfect, to sterilize, to exterminate vermin, to delouse, extermination of vermin, delousing, disinfection. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. So you mean it just refers to anything? It doesn't refer to lice.

A. What is the date of this dictionary, sir?

Q. I'm sorry, I don't know. Do the meaning of the words change that much?

A. Well, actually they do, but without going into that, I would simply say that in ordinary {1131|1132} circumstances, including Germany today, extermination is confined to vermin. When we say "extermination" in Canada or in the United States, we generally mean that it is not human beings who are exterminated by commonly styled extermination terms.

Q. You agree that "Entwesung" is a term meaning to use just disinsecticidization.

A. It refers to any killing, any deprivation of the quality of life of something that is alive.

Q. I see. So it could refer to anything, according to you.

A. Well, "Entwesen" is anything that walks, anything that has life.

Q. Okay. Are you familiar with this book on the subject of — that's referred to in your book — it deals with sterilization, disinfection and the word "Entwesung"; right?

A. The book is not referred to —

Q. I am not saying you quoted the book. Are you familiar with that book?

A. No. No. This is a — not a book. This is a —

Q. Well, it is a photocopy of the front page of a book. So I don't misdescribe it, it is a journal.

Q. It is a scientific journal; right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was printed, I gather, in 1943 in Berlin. It appears to refer to the three subjects of what, sir? Would you say the translation is "sterilization", {1132|1133} right, for "Entkeimmen" [Entkeimen]?

A. Yes.

Q. "Entwesung", which is "disinfection", and it says, "Entwesung".

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And the reason I suggest it is relevant is that Gerstein, who was a disinfection officer, is given credit in that book, Obersturmführer Gerstein.

A. Yes. They say that here.

Q. And it is a journal dealing with those three subjects that you've described, would you agree — sterilization, disinfection, and I suggest —

A. That is the title.

Q. — delousing.

A. Are we going to argue about the translation?

Q. Well, we were, but I am not any more. I am just going to leave it with you. What I am suggesting is that the subject of sterilization and disinfection is what Gerstein was responsible for in his job.

A. Obviously, yes, that was his job.

Q. And that pamphlet or scientific brochure was published in the war, and he was given credit for his input into that publication; would you agree?

A. Yes, it certainly appears that way. Yes.

Q. All right. That's fine. I'd like to move from the subject of — just one other point. You recall the document 1553 which was an invoice for Zyklon, {1133|1134} PS-1553, referred to at Nuremberg as such?

A. Well, there are so many invoices, couldn't identify just that.

Q. I was just going to show you the document PS-1553 and suggest to you that it actually — refers to Zyklon-B and gives the same amount on the same days to Oranienburg as it does to Auschwitz, would you agree?

A. Now, wait a minute.

Q. Just have a look and tell me if that's correct.

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. And although you say Oranienburg was not a concentration camp for killing people, you said it was an administrative centre.

A. It was a concentration camp and an administrative centre.

Q. I see. Thanks very much; but nobody was gassed in Oranienburg that you know of.

A. Not to my knowledge, no.

Q. No. Now, are you familiar with a document tendered at the Nuremberg Military Tribunal known as the International Military Tribunal, a document called "The War Refugee Board Report"?

A. "The War Refugee Board Report"?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. And you are familiar with the document of which I speak?

A. It is the one authored by Pehle? There are several reports. I want to make sure we are {1134|1135} referring to the same one.

Q. I'd like to ask you whether you are familiar with the fact that that document alleged that there was over a million people killed at Auschwitz. In fact, I think, 1,700,000.

A. There is some such figure there, yes.

Q. It was obviously, according to you, it was a false figure.

A. Well, not quite as false or inaccurate as the one that the Polish Soviet Investigation Commission produced, but it's still a little high, yeah.

Q. Yeah. Well, they produced the four million figure.

A. Yeah. This one is within reason.

Q. Hoess produced the 2.5 million figure.

A. Yes.

Q. The War Refugee Board produced the 1.7 million figure.

A. Yeah. I think that was written while the camp was still in existence. I am not sure whether —

Q. It was towards the end of the War; but that figure is correct?

A. No. The figure is a little high, I said. One million seven is too high.

Q. That's the figure they produced?

A. I'm sorry, yes.

Q. They said this is a careful account of —

A. Careful, surely, in terms of the {1135|1136} best they could do.

Q. And you produced a million.

A. Oh, yes, but with much more information than was at their disposal.

Q. These reports were produced by people who claimed to be there, though. The War Refugee Board Report, who gave the 1.7 million figure, was prepared in conjunction with Mr. Vrba. Correct?

A. No, no. I asked you for the precise date of it because it is important. But you see, this report, which was in the nature of a preliminary description

Q. All I was interested in was the figure.

A. Well, I am saying that it is based upon information obtained in part based upon information, but in large and important part obtained on the basis of information which was brought by two escapees from Auschwitz to Slovakia, which was then under German control, and which was relayed by those escapees to the remnant Jewish community. There was still a remnant Jewish community.

Q. Before we leave our field —

A. Well, you said in conjunction, and I could not agree there.

Q. I'm sorry, let me put it more clearly if I was in any way misleading you. It was prepared by two escapees, Wetzler and Vrba.

A. Right.

Q. So now we know who we are talking about; and they went to Slovakia and ended up giving {1136|1137} their information in New York.

A. No. They gave their information in Slovakia, who then related it to a variety of channels until it reached the United States, until it reached Washington.

Q. All right. Thank you. So that report gave what you now know to be a figure out by seven hundred thousand.

A. Oh, at least, yes, because that report was made at a time before the gassings were completed.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Your Honour. We are also — we have been talking of a million Jews dead that Dr. Hilberg has talked about. He said there were other people other than Jews who died in that camp. The report referred to 1.7 million people. I think we are talking about apples and oranges in terms of numbers.

MR. CHRISTIE: I assume that is a form of an objection to a question. I am not sure.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, it is.

THE COURT: I think it is an objection to the words employed.

MR. CHRISTIE: So far the witness hasn't objected, and I haven't distinguished between Jews and people.

Q. The War Refugee Board Report referred to 1.7 million and some people, not just Jews.

A. Even if it said people, the figure would be a bit high.

Q. And if it said Jews, it is {1137|1138} obviously that much more high and erroneous.

A. Yes, it certainly is.

Q. I'd like to deal now with the eye witness account you referred to of someone who was there and in the Sonderkommando, Phillip Mueller. Are you familiar with that?

A. I am familiar with his book.

Q. Yeah. His book — may I see his book, please? Here it is. Thank you. The Phillip Mueller book is called "Eye Witness Auschwitz – Three Years in the Gas Chambers".

A. Yes.

Q. Do you regard this as a serious historical work?

A. No, it is not a historical work. It is a recollection of a person, his own recollection and his own experiences.

Q. Do you regard it as accurate?

A. I regard it as rather accurate, yes. I have been through this book page by page, and I am hard-put to find any error, any material significant error in this book. It is remarkable.

Q. I put it to you that it is more of a novel than a book; would you agree?

A. No, I do not agree at all.

Q. You consider this an accurate historical account of an eye witness.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. You've read the book page by page.

A. Yes. {1138|1139}

Q. So if I read here you will be able to tell me if I am misquoting.

A. I didn't say I memorized the book, and please read.

Q. Can you tell me if this is the general tenor of some of the things in this book? At page 87, and I quote:

It was obvious that the S.S. felt ..... once more would be masters of the situation.

..... in front of the humiliated crowd with a self important swag-ger. Suddenly they stopped in their tracks by a ..... with blue-black hair who was taking off her right shoe. The woman, as soon as ..... ogling her haunches ..... titillating and seductive ..... she shifted her ..... to allow [allow] a glimpse of thigh and suspender. Slowly she undid her stockings and peeled it off her foot. From out of the corner of her eye she carefully observed what was going on around her ..... and paid attention to anything else. They were standing there with their arms akimbo ..... and their eyes firmly glued on the woman."

Is that accurate? Do you consider this an accurate historical account?

A. I consider this more seriously than {1139|1140} other accounts about the same incident. There are several accounts of the manner in which, at the time when the victims were being prepared for gassing, a woman seized a weapon and was able to mortally wound an S.S. man who was stabbed, and whose name was Schillinger. The Schillinger episode is recorded in a number of accounts. The only — and I said this is a very accurate description of what transpired — the only question one might have is whether the detail as described here is exactly the same as might have occurred; but I would say that there are other accounts that are substantially in accord with what this account has to state.

Q. Yes. Thank you. So if I may capsule your answer, the short answer is that you regard this as a serious historical account.

A. Moreover, this passage is substantially correct.

Q. Now, I am going to refer to another part of this book at page 110 and ask you some questions about this. To put it in context, I will suggest to you that this is the situation as the people are in the gas chamber being gassed, and you'll tell me if I am reading it — if it is out of context in that regard

Suddenly a voice began to sing. Others joined in and the sound swelled into a mighty choir. They sang the Czechoslovakina [Czechoslovakian] National Anthem, and then the Hebrew song ..... It was as if they regarded the scene as a last kind of protest {1140|1141} which they determined to stifle if they could to ..... comfort left to these people. Singing their national anthem they were saying farewell to their brief but flagging past which had enabled them to live twenty years in a democratic state, a respected minority in joke, [in-joke] and when they sang the ..... they were glancing into the future, but it was a future which they would not be allowed to see."

Now, am I correct in saying that this a description of what the author alleges occurred inside the gas chamber from your recollection?

A. In the anteroom?

Q. No. I suggest that they are in the area where they are ultimately going to be gassed.

A. Well, in this area, yes.

Q. They are not in the crematorium and they are not in the area of anything but the room where the gas, the crystal is supposed to be dropped through the roof — right, in this story?

A. My recollection is that this is in the process of preparation.

Q. Well, it's in the same room where they are supposed —

A. In the same building. I am not quite sure about the room. Okay. All right.

Q. Do you consider that an accurate historical account, or — {1141|1142}

A. I cannot, on my own, confirm the particular incident. That's why we read books. But it is a matter of record that on more than one occasion — there is another occasion when French deportees were conveyed to the gas chamber, who were Jewish, who sang the Marseillaise. So the act of singing in a moment of anticipated death is a protest, a gesture, the only gesture possible.

THE COURT: What is the Marseillaise?

THE WITNESS: The national anthem of France.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest to you that — am I interrupting?

THE COURT: No.

THE WITNESS: That happened, and this is a plausible account.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I suggest to you that other books that were written previous to this book that I have quoted, Phillip Mueller's book, gave a somewhat similar incident in other circumstances. Now, your explanation of that would be what, sir?

A. You mean the singing, or the Schillinger incident?

Q. The singing incident. As a matter of fact, a very similar incident inside the anteroom, you called it, to the gas chamber.

A. Well, I don't doubt that — I said I don't recall another account of the singing of the Czechoslovakian national anthem, but I do recall something about the French national anthem — obviously a different episode. {1142|1143}

Q. Yes. I now produce and show to you a book, "Verbrechens Handschriften". [Inmitten des grauenvollen Verbrechens: Handschriften von Mitgliedern des Sonderkommandos]

Do you recognize the book?

A. I have seen this in another edition. If this is the book originally published in Poland, I have seen it in another edition. I have seen it in an English edition, in fact.

Q. It is published in 1972.

A. But yes, it is the book that I have seen in a different language.

Q. Mr. Phillip Mueller published his book in 1979, right?

A. Yes. That's the English translation of a book that was published earlier.

Q. Do you know when Phillip Mueller's book was first published?

A. It may say in the English edition. I am not quite sure. I think the original edition is German, and there is a translation into English, and a translation into French.

THE COURT: The book is by Mueller, is it?

THE WITNESS: Yes, the book is by Mueller.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The author that you referred to, the eyewitness account, originally authored the book under the title, "Sonderbehandlung", and that was also first published in 1979; would you agree?

A. I don't know. I haven't seen the date. {1143|1144}

Q. Okay. So Phillip Mueller's book is one called, "Sonderbehandlung" in German, and one called "Eye Witness Auschwitz – Three Years in the Gas Chamber", and they were both published in 1979; is that right?

A. Well, they were both published in the same calendar year.

Q. 1979.

A. Yes.

Q. This book whose title I have difficulty with, "Verbrechens Hand-schriften", that was published in 1972; right?

A. This edition must have come out then, yes.

Q. I think so. It comes [comes] with some recognition of the Auschwitz Museum, right?

A. Yes. It is published by the Museum at Auschwitz.

Q. Now, in this account, on page 121, I suggest to you we find something that is, I suggest, strictly similar to the Mueller book in a different situation, and I will ask you to read along with me as it is in German, and I'll read you what I suggest is the English translation on page 121, and correct me if I am wrong if it doesn't say this:

Inside the gas chamber a certain young Polish woman made a short fiery speech in front of all persons present who were stripped naked in which she stigmatized the Nazi crimes, and the impression which she concluded with {1144|1145} the following words: 'We shall not die. Now the history of our people will make us eternal. Our desire and our people will live and come into bloom. The German people will pay so dearly for our blood as a form of barbarism with Nazi Germany. Long live Poland. .... of the Sondercommando. Be aware that the holy obligation of vengeance for us innocents rests upon you. Tell our people that we face death consciously and full of pride. There-upon the Poles knelt down on the floor and solemnly said a prayer in ..... which made a tremendous impression. They then got back to their feet and sang in a choir the Polish national anthem. The Jews sang the Hativa. The common brutal fate blended at this out of the way cursed place. The lyrics sound of various hymns into one entity. The deeply heart moving cordiality they expressed in this manner, their last sentiments and their hope. They finished by jointly singing The International. While they were singing the Red Cross arrived. The gas was thrown in the chamber and all gave up their ghost in song and ecstasy and ..... {1145|1146} improvement of this world.

Did I read that correctly, sir?

A. Yes. That's a translation.

Q. Would you agree that it seems as if Mueller recounts such a strikingly similar situation in the "anteroom" with the exception of the suppression of the word "The International"?

A. Why the suppression?

Q. Shall we say elimination.

A. Why elimination? I don't understand, sir, what you are asking me, because these are two separate incidents. Here is a selection process going on; There are communists involved. There are Jews involved. The Communists sing "The International". The Jews don't sing "The International"; the Jews are not communists. Why should Jews about to go into the gas chamber sing "The International"?

Q. What I am suggesting is that, very clearly, Mueller seems to have plagiarized an incident from that book.

A. No. You seem to assume, sir, that anything that seems to be a similar event that strikes people similarly is plagiarism. If I held this view, sir, I would be in court twenty times accusing people of plagiarizing from my work. They can have an independent idea of my own. They can describe the same thing in words similar to mine.

Q. You are saying that this is one event that two different people described from their own observation; is that it?

A. It appears that way to me. {1146|1147}

Q. May I suggest that if we look at the context, we don't find the surrounding circumstances in any way the same.

A. No. The surrounding circumstances are not the same. I said so. They are two victims.

Q. Are you suggesting that two different groups of victims sang — A. They can sing.

Q. Sang the Hativa and The International, or alternatively, sang the Polish national anthem and the Hativa.

A. It is absolutely likely, because there are repeated accounts of people singing a national anthem. I said to you that I remember an account of someone singing the French national anthem. Now here we have an account of someone singing the Polish national anthem. We also have an account of someone in this group, the Jews only, singing the Hativa, which turned out to be the national anthem of Israel but which was not, obviously, then. Now, in addition to that they are singing The International, so all we are saying is that there was some singing.

Q. Yes. Could you explain to me how, on these two separate occasions, people would get out of the anteroom to the gas chamber to recount what had happened?

A. Well, I think such a — if there is a survivor — incidentally, these are not necessarily, survivors. These particular accounts were written, some of them, in a clandestine way by people who did not survive. I want to emphasize that from the book that you {1147|1148} are reading, but in any case, such an event, such a sight — I was not there; I am not the person who could properly state things about it, but I can imagine how impressive it would be.

THE COURT: Just a moment, witness. Don't imagine, witness, please.

THE WITNESS: All right.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I suggest that is what the author did, is imagine those events.

A. I cannot share that suggestion, because the authors, unlike me, were there.

Q. But the authors created, I suggest, literary exercises and alleged that they were fact, and you regard those authors as factual history.

A. I said that I do not regard them as historians, employing the style that the historian or a political scientist or, for that matter, a lawyer would use. These are people who record what they see and what they feel.

Q. How could either of those — Phillip Mueller or that author — see or hear the things he alleged he saw or heard without being in the gas chambers himself?

A. Or be in the anteroom.

Q. Let me understand you clearly. Now, are you suggesting that there is anteroom to the gas chamber and then there is a gas chamber?

A. Of course.

Q. I see. Okay. Thank you. Now, I suggest to you that what we are looking at are not historical accounts, not serious history at all, but novelistic {1148|1149} interpretations. Would you agree?

A. No, I don't agree.

Q. Thank you. I want to quote from page 113 of Phillip Mueller's work, and I want to ask you if you consider this an accurate factual account.

THE COURT: Same book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

Q. This is the book to which you referred as one of the eye witnesses that you regard as credible, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. I quote page 113, and I suggest he is talking about his own experiences here.

THE COURT: Is it 113 or 133?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is 113.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: "The atmosphere in the dimly lit gas chamber was tense and depressing. Death had come menacingly close. It was only minutes away. No memory to trace. No trace of any of us would remain. Once more people embraced, people were hugging their children so violently that it almost broke my heart.

Suddenly a few girls, naked and in the full bloom of youth, came up to me. They stood in front of me without a word, gazing at me deep in thought and shaking their heads uncomprehendingly.

At last one of them plucked up {1149|1150} courage and spoke to me. 'We understand that you have chosen to die with us of your own free will, and we have come to tell you that we think your decision is pointless for it helps no one.' She went on, 'We must die, but you still have a chance to save your life. You have to return to the camp and tell everybody about our last hours,' she commanded. 'You have to explain to them that they must free themselves from any illusions. They ought to fight. That's better than dying here helplessly. It will be easier for them since they have no children. As for you, perhaps you'll survive this terrible tragedy and then you must tell everybody what happened to you. One more thing,' she went on. 'You can do me one last favour. This gold chain around my neck, when I am dead take it off and give it to my boy friend, Sacha. He works in the bakery. Remind me to him. Say love from Jana. When it's over you'll find me here.' She pointed at a place northbound to the coffee pillar [?] where I was standing. Those were her last words. I was surprised and strangely moved by her cool, calm {1150|1151} detachment in the face of death and also by her sweetness. Before I could make an answer to her spirited speech, the girls took hold of me and dragged me protesting to the door of the gas chamber. There they gave me a last push which made me land bang in the middle of the group of S.S. men. .... was the first to recognize me, and at once set about me with his truncheon. I fell to the door and stood up and was knocked down by a blow from his fist. As I stood up on my feet for the third or fourth time, .... yelled, 'You bloody shit. Get it into your stupid head. We decide how long you stay alive and when you die and not you. Now piss off to the ovens.' Then he socked me viciously on the face so that I reeled against the lift door.

Now, do you regard that as an accurate eye witness account of a plausible event?

A. This is probably one of the most moving passages in the book, and when I read it I paused.

Obviously it is incredible, but not incredible in the sense that one uses the word to describe something that is unlikely to have happened. It is incredible that a man who worked dragging out corpses was shoving people in, should want to die in his early twenties. He was talked out of it by a young woman about to die. {1151|1152}

Q. Inside the gas chamber, right?

A. Near the door.

Q. And she pushed him out of the gas chamber through the door.

A. That is his description. I think the passage is substantially correct.

Q. Okay.

A. I cannot imagine such a passage being invented.

Q. You cannot imagine such a passage being invented.

A. No.

Q. You, therefore, because you think it couldn't be invented, you can't imagine it being invented.

A. No.

Q. You therefore believe it to be true?

A. I believe it to be true in substance.

Q. Is there a difference between it being true in substance and true in fact?

A. There is a difference if two feet matters, if a gesture matters. The man is writing years afterwards.

Q. Do you believe that people in the gas chamber, if that is described here, could push people out and the S.S. would be standing there and the door would fly open?

A. It would be possible that when the gassing took place, as in this case, not of an entire transport having come in from the outside but people {1152|1153} selected from the inside, that this large room was not filled, that indeed it was possible for room to be inside the gas chamber to stand around and, indeed, for space to exist between a person there and the door.

Q. I am going to suggest to you another instance of something in Phillip Mueller's book that is plagiarized from the other book. I am going to read to you a passage from Phillip Mueller's book at page 161, then I am going to read you a passage from the other book, another eye witness in Auschwitz who wrote the book, or is alleged to have written the book,

"Auschwitz, an Eye Witness Account". Then I am going to ask you to comment on this and ask you if these are historical accounts. Reading first from Phillip Mueller, who you quoted as a historical accurate source, at page 161, I read as follows – there again is a description of something going on inside a what you call anteroom, or whether that is the anteroom or gas chamber – right? I suggest to you this is what it says:

"Suddenly, from out of the ranks of doomed prisoners, stepped a young rabbinical student who had worked in the hair dyeing team. He turned to Obersturnführer ..... and with sublime courage told him to be quiet."

Now, Obersturnführer [Obersturmführer], that would be an S.S man?

A. Yes, a corporal, something like that.

Q. "He then began to speak to the crowd. 'Mothers,' he cried, 'it is God's unfathomable will that we are {1153|1154} to lay down our lives. A cruel and accursed fate has compelled us to take part in the extermination of our people, and now we are, ourselves, become dust and ashes. No miracle has happened. Heaven has sent no avenging bolt of lightning. No rain has fallen strong enough to extinguish the funeral pyres built by the hand of man. We must submit to the inevitable with Jewish resignation. It will be the last trial sent to us by Heaven. It is not for us to question the reasons, for we are nothing before Almighty God. Be not afraid. Even if we could, by some chance, save our lives, what use would that be to us now? In vain we would search for our murdered relatives. We should be alone without a family, without relatives, without friends, without a place we might call our own, condemned to roam the world aimlessly. For us there would be neither rest nor peace of mind until one day we would die in some corner lonely and forsaken. Therefore, brothers, let us now go to meet our death bravely and with dignity.'"

I suggest to you that was on page 162 of Phillip Mueller's book, and a speech again made in the {1154|1155} anteroom; is that right?

A. Somewhere there, yes.

Q. All right. I now produce and show to you the book attributed to Dr. Miklos Nyiszli; at page 144, and I read a passage that describes an event which I will suggest is plagiarized in the book of Phillip Mueller. Now, reading at the bottom of page 143, I read:

"This was where the Dayan worked."

Now, can you tell us what a Dayan is?"

A. I think that question should be put to someone who is familiar with Jewish religion.

Q. Well; I put it to you that that is a Rabbinical student. Would you agree?

A. Good enough.

Q. All right.

"... or rather, where he did not work, for all he did was watch the fires burn. Even so, he was dissatisfied, for his religious beliefs forbade him from burning or [our] prayer books or holy objects. I felt sorry for him, but could do nothing further to help him. It was impossible to obtain an easier job, for we were all only members of the Sonderkommando, the kommando of the living dead. This then was the man who began to speak: 'Fellow Jews, an inscrutable will has sent our people to its death. Fate has allotted us the cruelest task, that is, of participating in our own destruction, of witnessing our own disappearance down to the very ashes to which we are reducing. In no instance have the Heavens opened to send ashes and put out the funeral pyre flame. We, as sons of Israel, should know this is the way things must be. God has so ordained it. Why? It is not for us miserable humans to seek the answer. This is the fate that has befallen us. Do not be afraid of death. What is life worth even if by some strange miracle we should manage to remain alive, to find cold and pillaged homes. In every room and every corner the memory of those who have disappeared ..... We would wander through life like the restless ..... of our former selves, of our past, finding no peace or rest.'"

Now, have I read that passage correctly

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see any similarity with the words?

A. Very similar.

Q. In the case of Mueller, he is the Rabbinical student; in the case of Nyiszli it was a Dayan, which I suggest was a Rabbinical student. Right? {1156|1157}

A. Well, go ahead.

Q. In the case of Mueller the man is inside the anteroom or gas chamber; in the case of Nyiszli, the words are attributed to him as part of the kommando. Right?

A. Yes. It is not clear what kommando.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Do you consider that it is possible that these, shall we say, emotionally-filled parts of one book might find themselves, by accident, into Phillip Mueller's book?

A. No, I don't think there are accidents in this life, but I do think that it is possible for two people to have heard the same thing. It is also possible for someone to have heard a repetition of it.

Q. Yes.

A. It is even possible for two people to have made substantially the same statements, because the nature of the language employed is rather typical of what religious Jews would say in these circumstances, the language of resignation.

Q. How do you explain the fact that both these eye witnesses describe the situation to which they say the other eye witness is not present?

A. I'm sorry, the other eye witnesses?

Q. Yes. Nyiszli doesn't say that, "Phillip Mueller is by my side", or anywhere nearby.

A. Of course, I don't know who was present and who was not present. I cannot rule out, if you are suggesting that years after the event, when a book is being written of accounts, a person may mix something he recollects with something that he had read {1157|1158} about, the same thing, of course this is possible.

Q. I suggest that Nyiszli published his book in 1960 —

A. Earlier, yes.

Q. And that the substance of that event was published by Mueller and attributed to a totally different situation in 1979.

A. I don't know whether it is a totally different situation at all, nor would I jump to the conclusion that it is any more than a very similar language of a very similar account. I do not rule out the fact that someone writing decades after the event about something, having in the meantime read about an event or the same event somewhere else, will resort to language — he may think that he had heard it; he may, indeed, have read it instead. That is not to be ruled out. I don't think that a particular speech was not made. I don't think that it didn't occur at some point because it is common enough.

Q. It's common in the literature of the eye witnesses in different situations; is that right?

A. It is common enough in different situations, and even in different camps, for religious Jews to have made speeches of resignation much, if not exactly, with language such as that which you have read;

Q. And this is why, then, and the only reason why it finds its way into very much of the eye witness literature in various situations. That is the explanation?

A. I would be speculating as to the reason for the similarity of the language in the two accounts. {1158|1159}

Q. Yeah. Would you agree with me that they do appear to be rather elaborate literary accounts of events?

A. Well, I don't want to qualify myself as a person in literature, but no, I don't think this is what I would call literary.

Q. Would you agree with me that your quoting selectively from Gerstein and Hoess was similar in kind to the sort of selection of stories prepared by Phillip Mueller in his book?

A. Well, I'd say that Phillip Mueller as a witness, is a remarkable, accurate, reliable person; not one who is learned, so far as I know — an ordinary individual. I think that in any account written many years after an event, with intervening years, with other books having been published, there is always the possibility that somebody is influenced, not only by what he recollects but by what he may have read in the meantime. I would not deprive Mueller of his honesty.

Q. You believe that —

A. Plagiarism is a strong word.

Q. Yes, it is, but I suggest to you there is no other explanation for finding the same words in exactly the same form in two different books in different circumstances, unless there is something fishy.

A. Well, I don't know whether the particular rendition in Mueller's book owes something or does not owe something to the Nyiszli description. It may very well owe something to it; but to say that he sat down and simply copied is something else.

Q. At page 626 of your book, the {1159|1160} first column in the middle of the page, is there a sentence which says:

"Most of the Birkenau arrivals saw great flames belching from the chimneys ..."

A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe that is true?

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, in my second edition —

Q. Please forgive me for not asking.

A. Well, perhaps I should let you ask another question.

Q. I suggest to you that it cannot reasonably be true, in that crematorium chimneys do not belch flame. In fact, no chimney can belch flames without burning up very quickly. Did you consider that?

A. Let me simply say that there are many accounts of substantially similar nature of the same phenomenon, not only by survivors, but by persons and in the vicinity of Auschwitz.

Q. Yes.

A. I cannot characterize the nature of what they saw myself, because I have not seen it myself.

Q. Do you believe those accounts?

A. They are mentioned by several survivors. They were mentioned by railway personnel. They were mentioned by German personnel associated with the industrial complex not very close to Birkenau.

Q. Could you, name the names, any names?

A. Well, today Wiesel is another survivor, making a similar description in his book. {1160|1161}

Q. Now, Eli Wiesel, he is the President of what — the Holocaust?

A. Memorial Council, yes.

Q. He is appointed to a position in relation to the Holocaust by the President, as you were.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you want to name any others who saw the flames belching from the chimneys?

A. Well, there are a number of people. Now I would be hard-put to give you their names, but there are a number of people, as I said, belonging to the railway organization.

Q. Well, I am interested in the name. Generalities are of no value to me.

A. Yes. But I did not come prepared with all of the names, there being thousands of them.

Q. Yes. Thousands.

A. Some of which, however, are in print. If you have the German edition of my work, I will show them to you.

Q. The German edition?

A. Yes.

Q. We will make an effort to get that, sir. In page 623 of your book, second column, you say and I quote: According to Morgen young Jewesses were murdered and the corpses were cut into small pieces, mixed with horsemeat and boiled into soap.

Do you believe that to be the truth, the soap story?

A. No. As a matter of fact the rumour —

Q. Well, I really would appreciate a {1161|1162} short answer.

A. The answer is no.

THE COURT: No, just a moment. Whether you appreciate a short answer or not, I will decide whether or not the answer is going on. I will permit the witness to answer the question.

Go ahead, witness, and answer the question.

THE WITNESS: The short answer is that I do not believe that, on a regular basis, soap was made from human fat, but that the rumour of such soap was so widespread within German-occupied Europe during the War that I attempted to discover the origin of this rumour. How did it come about? Why is it mentioned in Slovakia, why is it mentioned in the German railway organization, why is it mentioned in so many different places?

Q. Indeed, why was it mentioned in the First World War about German soldiers there?

A. Possibly —

Q. May I suggest —

THE COURT: Just a moment. You asked a question. Please answer.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am asking another one.

THE COURT: You are not going to ask another one until he has answered the first one.

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought he did.

THE COURT: He hadn't. He was about to when you interrupted him.

THE WITNESS: My answer is that I {1162|1163} regarded the soap story as a rumour. I was interested in its origin. The passage to which you refer is in the nature of an attempt to find out the origin, there being several possible reasons why the rumour may have been circulated.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So you were interested in rumours circulating to determine their origin.

A. Well, I was interested in this particular rumour.

Q. Did you ever find any evidence of its reality or truth?

A. No. I do not believe that, on a regular basis, in Auschwitz or someplace other than Auschwitz where human beings were killed, as it were, on an assembly line, soap was made from the fat of the corpses. I said that and I want to underscore it. I don't believe it.

Q. Do you have any evidence of that at all?

A. Of what?

Q. The use of soap, or making soap from —

A. No. I do not believe it. The problem is in a very tiny forum such as yours of proving it didn't happen.

Q. Well, because there were rumours you tried to find if there were facts behind them?

A. Yes. I tried to find if there, was an origin, something, anything.

Q. And you found out there was no {1163|1164} proof for the origin of this rumour.

A. No. I do say that there were reported occurrences, and I do speculate that these may well have been the reason for the circulation of the rumour, but a rumour it remains in my book, not a fact.

Q. Mm-hmmm. The rumour of twenty-five million from Gerstein is in your book.

A. The twenty-five million?

Q. No. Excuse me. You eliminated that from your book.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with other occasions upon which inmates of these camps have made ridiculous statements under oath in a court of law in West Germany, for example?

A. Well, I am not able to produce a ridiculous statement and characterize it as a statement.

Q. Well, would you consider that a ridiculous rumour, that camp inmates regularly carried out bicycle races around gas chambers in the concentration camp Auschwitz-Birkenau; in this manner they kept themselves physically fit while the S.S. had interposed a big break between murders? Do you consider that a credible statement.

A. No.

Q. I suggest to you, in fact, it was sworn to by a former inmate, and it's reported in the Nuremberg paper that I show you now, 11th of September, 1978. (sic) Would you agree that the translation above is accurate for the content of the article here?

THE COURT: Just a moment, before you {1164|1165} answer. Mr. Christie, you know the rules.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I do.

THE COURT: Ask the witness, please, whether he knows anything about what you've shown him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is this a newspaper article, or a report of the testimony that we are seeing here, not the testimony itself?

MR. CHRISTIE: That's right. We are also in the position of dealing with all sorts of opinion.

THE WITNESS: All I can say is that you have shown me a newspaper report which I see for the first time of what is alleged to have been said by a former political prisoner who was a German, not a Jew.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: No, I am not suggesting it was a Jewish person, but he was a concentration camp inmate, swore that to be true.

A. According to this newspaper.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that?

THE COURT: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: We are not going to have this Court cluttered with newspaper reports thirdhand.

Two-thirty, members of the jury.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Everybody can be seated for a moment, please. Mr. Christie, let me say this to you, that I have tried to be as polite as I can under the circumstances, and I have done the best I can to let you know that I want you to show pieces of paper that you constantly {1165|1166} produce to the witness in a certain way.

You have, for reasons best known to yourself, apparently violated that order. You certainly did a little while ago. If you do it again, I will cite you for contempt. You know precisely what I mean. You will say nothing now. If you try it once more, I am going to cite you for contempt. It is the first time I have had to make a threat like that in nine years on the bench. Two-thirty.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

(VOLUME VI follows){1166|1167}

Volume VI

— Upon the hearing resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:35 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Hilberg, could I ask you if you are familiar with a person by the name of Luther?

A. Which Luther?

Q. I can appreciate — I am concerned about the Luther who was in the Foreign Ministry of the German government.

A. Yes.

Q. I think he was a person, I believe, who — well, you could tell me his position, could you not, sir?

A. Yes. He was in charge within the German Foreign Office of a division labelled Division Germany.

Q. So are you familiar with a document which I would like to now produce and show to you which was a purported exhibit at the NMT, the American Military Tribunal, referred to as the Luther Memorandum?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to leave that with you, sir, and I think I will refer to my copy. Would you agree that that's after the time when you are positive that gassings began at Auschwitz?

A. Yes.

Q. On a massive scale.

A. Yes. {1167|1168}

Q. Now, this memorandum was from a — would you call him a secretary, or a deputy of the Foreign Office responsible for domestic matters?

A. Well, of course, that almost sounds like a contradiction in terms, since the Foreign Office is supposedly only concerned with foreign affairs. There was, however, a Division in pre-war Germany which was very small. It was concerned with elements of foreign affairs as a prestigious [prestigious] matter. It expanded during the War because many problems arising within the occupied territories were within this particular part of the Foreign Office.

Q. Yes. Now, this concerns me, sir, because as it says on the document, I believe, it deals with the further – and I quote on the top, on the title, “Further measures connected to the ‘Final Solution’ of the Jewish question”. Is that right, sir?

A. Well, that is the description of the document by the people who compiled this document.

Q. And it’s seven pages long, is that right, sir?

A. In print, yes.

Q. Of course, this is a translation of a German document; we would agree on that.

A. Not a long memorandum.

THE COURT: Is that in English?

MR. CHRISTIE: It is an English translation, yes.

Q. Could you agree with me, sir, that it does say, and I quote the last paragraph and you can correct me if you feel this is out of context, but am I {1168|1169} quoting correctly when I say the last paragraph says: “The intended deportations are a further step forward on the way of the total solution and are in respect to other countries (Hungary) very important. The deportation to the Government General is a temporary measure. The Jews will be moved on further to the Occupied Eastern Territories as soon as the technical conditions for it are given. I therefore request approval for the continuation of the negotiations and measures under these terms and according to the arrangement made. Signed: LUTHER”.

Have I correctly at least read that part, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it true that Auschwitz and — well, Auschwitz was in the Government General?

A. No, it was not.

Q. Was it in the Eastern Territories?

A. No, it was not. It was an incorporated territory of Germany.

Q. Yes. Would you agree that the occupied Eastern Territories would have been regarded as, say, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, The Ukraine — that sort of area?

A. That’s correct.

Q. Would you agree that whether — that {1169|1170} this memorandum clearly indicates that the intention on that occasion, according to the author, was to deport the Jews further into the occupied Eastern Territories, as this document indicates?

A. No. There are several aspects to this particular document which do require some explanations. First of all, it is a history. It’s not a memorandum of a situation at a given date but, rather, a recapitulation of policy from 1939 to 1942. That’s the first important qualification one must make.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. There was a phase in which Jews were deported from Germany to the so-called Government General, into ghettos, prior to the establishment of killing centres, prior to the establishment of death camps.

Now, as he is writing this memorandum, these death camps had begun operation, in the case of one of them a month earlier, in the case of the other two, several months earlier; but he is writing a memorandum — we don’t know the exact date on which it was drafted — in which he is recapitulating history.

One aspect of this history was the temporary lodging of Jews from Germany in ghettos of Poland until such time as gas chambers were erected in order to receive them for gassing.

Q. May I suggest, though, Doctor, that the memorandum is dated the 21st of August, 1942; it’s dated so at Berlin; it’s marked, “Most Urgent”. Although it does give historicity and refers to the previous Madagascar Plan, as far as the portion I have read I suggest {1170|1171} to you that it deals with what further steps and future intentions were, at least, expressed by the author.

A. No. The author, as you pointed out, was in the Foreign Office. As such, his information, at times, was a couple of times behind the information available to the S.S.

Q. I see.

A. He did take part in the Final Solution Conference of January 20, 1942. His information was reasonably up-to-date up to that point.

Q. The Wannsee conference.

A. That’s correct. But there are several respects in which the information may have reached him late, and as I say, this is a think-piece. This is a memorandum.

Q. Okay. Could I, with your leave, get your agreement that that is an accurate representation of the Luther memorandum?

A. Yes. There are — I might add that there are omissions in this memorandum immediately prior to the paragraph you quoted. I don’t think that the substance is much affected by that, but I want to point out this is not the complete document.

Q. From your professional experience that is the way it is reported ...

A. Yes. I have a translation.

Q. I haven’t deleted that at all.

A. No. The deletion is in the printed part of the memorandum.

Q. So that this is all we have from the trial transcript of what the Luther memorandum was in {1171|1172} the reports that are available [available] to us all: is that right?

A. Well, available to you in print, yes.

Q. And you don’t feel that the portion deleted of which I am not aware changes the context any, does it?

A. I don’t think it does.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I ask that this be filed, please?

THE COURT: Yes.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 10.

— EXHIBIT NO. 10: English translation of Luther memorandum — 31 July 1942.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So from that piece of information do you feel, perhaps, that the author was misinformed about the circumstances?

A. No, no. It’s simply one of these documents that are not self-explanatory. As you stated, it is several pages long. As I stated, it is a recapitulation, and it utilizes a certain number of euphemisms, as do most of these documents. It turns out that relocation across the border, meaning the border of the Government General and the Eastern Territories was a euphemism for Belzec and Treblinka, which were on that border.

Q. Thank you, Doctor. Are you familiar with the publication of the daily conversations of Adolf Hitler which were transcribed?

A. Are you referring to his “Table Talk”?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. {1172|1173}

Q. And am I correct in saying, sir, that the “Table Talk” was the result of two stenographers who, for some reason or another, took down everything he said at his meals?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read the transcripts of those conversations?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And are you familiar with the transcript prepared by Henry Picker called, “Hitler’s Table Talk”?

A. That is all that it is. This is a peculiar document, because the German original is no longer extant. We only have the English translation in what appears to be in the German title in the retranslation of the English.

Q. Would you doubt its authenticity?

A. Well, subject to the qualification just mentioned, it does appear to me to be reasonably authentic. Obviously, in a retranslation, one must be careful, because one cannot be certain, this being recorded table talk and then translated and retranslated, whether these were the actual words or just the approximate words of Adolf Hitler.

Q. I see. I wonder if I could ask you if you are familiar with this passage — and I am afraid I only have a photocopy of a page — this particular passage, which is really, I am told, page 471 of the Hitler's "Table Talk", and its date, I am told, is – and I am subject to having to prove this, of course, is the 24th of July, 1942. It says on the top of the page, {1173|1174} "24-7-42 Abends".

A. Evening.

Q. First of all, are you familiar with this kind of transcript that I have referred to here?

A. Yes. This is, it would appear from the book, as in the retranslation.

Q. Yes. And we now have here some German words, and I am afraid I can't translate them, but would you agree that – I have a translation prepared, and I would like to read it, and you can tell me if I am right. I will just detach it now, if I may.

A. Yeah.

Q. It looks like the last, really, the last sentence of that day's conversation, apparently.

I have a translation. It says:

"After the war he would be rigorously holding the point of view that he would destroy one town after the other unless the 'Dreckigjuden' [Drecksjuden]..."

– filthy Jews –

"... get out and wander off to Madagascar or some other Jewish National State, Hitler said."

Is that an accurate translation?

A. Not quite.

Q. Not quite?

A. I will give you my free translation. After the War he was going to be representing rigorously the point of view that he is going to demolish city after city if these lousy Jews don't get out, either to Madagascar or some Jewish National State. That is what he is quoted {1174|1175} here as saying.

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of this identification, could I file this as an exhibit, please?

THE COURT: For identification. It may be filed for that purpose.

MR. CHRISTIE: In view of the fact that I read the translation, could I fix the translation, although the witness has testified as to his correction of it?

THE COURT: Yes. It will not become an exhibit until proven. Yes, that can be fixed.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit "J".

— EXHIBIT "J" (For Identification): English translation of Picker document.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: My question is, if Hitler ordered the extermination of the Jews in 1941, according to your book, page 177, why did he speak about Jewish emigration after the War?

A. You have to ask yourself to whom he was speaking at the table.

Q. I see. Well, did he forget, or was he making up some pretense for those at the table?

A. I don't believe that Adolf Hitler forgot. I do believe, however, that he spoke differently to different people. And he obviously knew that it was important to keep secret what was happening. Here I present a conclusion, but one which I think is reasonable. Thus, what he was quoted at the table talk with unknown persons present [present] in translation, retranslation and back and forward, may have been just a comment which one need {1175|1176} not take terribly seriously.

Q. Are you familiar with a person called Lammers? Was he what might be called the head of the Civil Service at that time?

A. No. He was the chief of what was called the Reich Chancellery.

Q. And did he testify at the Nuremberg Trials on the subject of any plans for the Jews, to your knowledge?

A. Yes. He gave testimony to that effect, yes.

Q. Yes. Could I show you a copy of his testimony at what I suggest is the 9th of April, 1946, on the very subject of what we are discussing, any plan for extermination of Jews? Would you – am I showing you a document with which you are familiar? That is, really, a transcript of the IMT trial.

A. I, offhand, don't know what the document is which is referred to here as 686-PS. This is a resettlement matter for Germans.

THE COURT: Just answer his questions, please. Are you familiar with the document? If you are, say so; if not, please say that.

THE WITNESS: I don't recall the document exactly. I have a feeling that I know what it is, but I do not recall it exactly.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you can put your questions in such a way that you don't quote from it, but you can ask him questions that you can get information from as far as that document is concerned.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir. All right. {1176|1177}

Q. Would you agree that Lammers, in his testimony, indicated that there was no knowledge that he had of any plan to exterminate the Jews?

A. He so testified, and ...

Q. Did he indicate that he knew of no word of Hitler to that effect?

A. He said that.

Q. Was there a questionnaire sent around to all of the persons who were political figures in Germany after the War —

THE COURT: Just a moment, please.

— Discussion concerning electronic disturbance in the Courtroom.

THE COURT: Sorry, Mr. Christie. Go I ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Hilberg, are you familiar with this document? I am showing you a document. I don't see the number on it.

A. Well, it's a defence document for political leaders of the Nazi party, essentially.

Q. Are you familiar with it at all?

A. I have seen this document, yes.

Q. Okay. Would you agree with me that it was the result of a survey of 26,674 statements?

A. Yes.

Q. And would you agree that it was the form of a questionnaire sent to 26,674 political leaders in Germany? {1177|1178}

A. It, in the context, means leaders of the Nazi party.

Q. Yes, I appreciate that. And are you aware that this document has indicated that they had, until after the War, no knowledge of any extermination camps?

A. That is; indeed, what they said on this questionnaire.

Q. And you would probably say that that was really because they were Nazis.

A. I would say that a good many of them would choose to say that they had no knowledge, even if they had varying degrees of knowledge, because obviously they were on the spot, and having knowledge might be the first step towards some prosecution.

Q. Yes. But isn't it also true, Doctor, that many of the Nazis who were at various times accused were very useful witnesses for the prosecution in order to get them out of trouble?

A. True.

Q. I wonder if you are familiar with the Staff Evidence Analysis I am now going to show you, which was in connection with a document 4055-PS.

A. Yes.

Q. I notice that one of the documents – let's understand what a Staff Evidence Analysis was for the benefit of the jury. This was, I suggest, a form of capsulated summary of the documents that were attached to this Staff Evidence Analysis. Right?

A. The Staff Evidence Analysis simply means that somebody on the staff of the prosecution was {1178|1179} briefing the correspondence contained in the document, sometimes adding certain identifying information about the people who were involved in this correspondence.

Q. And one of the documents indicated as being attached to this Staff Analysis was the note stating that Hitler was intending to postpone the solution of the Jewish problem until after the War, would you agree?

A. That is the Staff evidence analysis, but I would have to see the document.

Q. Yes, that is the problem. I suggest to you that – have you looked in the archives for these documents, or that particular document?

A. I recall seeing no note, and I don't know to which note, let me put it this way. It says here, "Note", undated note. There is a date with every other item here, or next to every other item save one. This is an undated note, and it's not identified who wrote the note.

Q. Well, have you looked to see if that note exists?

A. I have not found it.

Q. No. Have you looked, though?

A. I have looked wherever I could look. I have not found it.

Q. That would be an important piece of evidence in this type of question, would it not?

A. Not necessarily. It depends on who wrote the note, when and what his impression was, and obviously, if an important person said this, let's say, in 1942, that would be important, but if it were {1179|1180} said earlier by someone not in the direct possession, or someone not recording hearsay, it might not be important.

Q. Wasn't Luther an important person?

A. Luther was, of course, important.

Q. Well, he said it in 1942, didn't he?

A. Well, he said it in something of this kind, but in a recapitulation which must be read in its entirety to get the context.

Q. Would it make it somewhat significant if it was dated March or April '42?

A. Well, it would be, absolutely.

Q. Were you aware of the existence of this Staff Evidence Analysis?

A. Well, I tried to read the document rather than the Staff Evidence Analysis, since Staff Evidence Analysis is just a way of finding the document and a way of telling the casual reader whether he wants to go on reading.

Q. I suggest to you that that document, even though it is referred to and identified in the Staff Evidence Analysis, has disappeared from the archives. Is that a possibility to you?

A. Yes, it is, although the question should really be put to an archivist, because documents were sometimes pulled out of their context and may not have been replaced. The so-called disappearance may be a so-called misplacement of the document, and until all of them are microfilmed and the computer goes through all the names, which may take another twenty years, a missing document may, in fact, not be located. {1180|1181}

Q. It appears, then, that even today some of the relevant documents to give us a clear understanding of this massive situation are still missing. Would you agree?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And some of them might very clearly contradict some of our firmly-fixed views.

A. I can never exclude the possibility of contradiction. After all, there are people who maintain at Stuttgart that Hitler did not give any orders.

Q. Yes. So in fact people questioning these types of situations can be of use to you and to others in stimulating further research.

A. Obviously. And if I could live another fifty years, I think I might invest another thirty-six of them in further research.

Q. Because this is a very important question, isn't it?

A. No doubt it is.

Q. And we are all learning in this life, even yourself, sir.

A. We never stop.

Q. That's right. I was interested in something, sir, I wanted to ask you. Do you think it's possible that when defendants made complaints at the Nuremberg trials, they wiped it out of the record?

A. Are you suggesting that complaints were wiped out of the record if they were made in open Court?

Q. Yes.

A. No. I have never heard of anything {1181|1182} like it.

Q. I now produce and show to you a piece of paper marked 30 April 46. Are you familiar with that?

A. Oh, expunged from the record?

Q. Yes. I was going to suggest that the reason why Streicher's complaint about mistreatment didn't appear is because it was expunged, wiped out of the record.

A. Well, I have been in Court a dozen times, and I have heard judges' directions, "That particular comment should not appear on the record." I suppose this is not unheard of.

THE COURT: The American Court, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: The American Court.

THE COURT: It does not happen in this country.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, it does happen in American Courts.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And it happened in Nuremberg, sir?

A. It might have.

Q. In respect to allegations from Streicher, at least, it happened, sir?

A. Undoubtedly, but I have no way of knowing what was expunged.

Q. I suggest it was reported in the newspapers at the time, and that is why, when I brought out the newspaper yesterday, you said, "Show me the record." {1182|1183}

A. Well, all that I see on this record is that the President of the Tribunal expunged the comments because they were "entirely irrelevant". That is what it says right here.

Q. Yes. So we do agree that parts of the Nuremberg transcript were expunged?

A. If, at the request of the President of the Tribunal, they were deemed to be entirely irrelevant ...

Q. And the person referred to in – well, maybe I should ask more accurately – this is a copy of the Nuremberg Trial transcript. And these are always dated at the top of the page, and they don't have much in the way of designation otherwise.

A. What do you mean by designation otherwise? Every speaker is identified.

Q. Pardon me, but the Mr. Justice Jackson referred to was the prosecutor, wasn't he?

A. Yes. He is referred to by his title, because he is still a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Q. The Doctor is Doctor Marx? (ph)

A. Yes.

Q. He is defence lawyer for Mr. Streicher?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Justice Jackson is the prosecutor.

A. That's correct.

Q. And Mr. Justice Jackson asks at this stage to strike out Streicher's testimony found on the 26th of April, and expunge it from the record. {1183|1184}

A. Yes.

Q. And that's what happens.

A. And his motion is granted.

Q. All right. Thanks. Could I file this?

THE COURT: I want to hear argument on it before you do.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right. I will leave it till a later stage.

Q. So far as the Nuremberg transcript is concerned, the fact that we don't find allegations such as torture doesn't necessarily mean they weren't made, right?

A. Well, I don't know whether I can jump to that conclusion, because I would concede that most anything is possible in this world, but I merely testified to the unlikelihood that there would be real torture inside Nuremberg.

Q. Thank you, sir. I think I should like to get down to the issue of the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" in some particular form.

Dealing with page 4, which is just under the introduction, I just want to pick out a few points, sir. I am not going to cover the whole thing, but I just want to look at certain factual statements and analyze them for a brief second and I will move on.

You notice the sentence that says, on the very bottom of the page, it says:

"To date, the staggering figure of six thousand million pounds has been paid out in compensation by the Federal {1184|1185} Government of West Germany, mostly to the State of Israel (which did not even exist during the Second World War) ..."

Now, I have accurately read the book, have I, sir?

A. Well, you have not added what follows it.

Q. All right:

"... as well as to individual Jewish claimants."

That's the end of the sentence, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, are you familiar with the function of the institutional arm of the Federal Government of West Germany called ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: If you want to finish your question, and then I will make my objection.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: ... it is called Wiedergutmachung. That's all. End of question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, Dr. Hilberg has been qualified as an expert in the field of history of the Holocaust. He has testified in depth and at length for the past three days. I don't know that he was qualified as an expert on repatriations or things that come after the period of his study.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I object to that question.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, you might ask the witness if he is knowledgeable on the subject that {1185|1186} you mentioned.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: That is the best way of finding that out.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Maybe I could put it this way. In your book, sir, around page 748, I think you deal extensively with the subject of reparations; would you agree?

A. Let me look at the page.

Q. 748, 749. It starts —

A. This is technically indemnification, not to be confused with reparations.

Q. I think we say probably starting at 747, you deal under the heading, "Eligible Claimants" and "Admissible Claims", "Professional Advancement", "Loss of Life Insurance Payments and Private Pensions", "Damage to Body and Health", "Loss of Life" — is this not all connected with what I have meant to say reparations and you corrected me to say indemnifications?

A. Yes. In other words, there is one term you mentioned before, but technically there are three provinces — one is restitution, that is restitution of property insofar as it is identifiable to the rightful owner; the second is indemnification — that is different and it includes payment for loss of freedom and health to survivors; the third is reparations — that is an agreement between the West German government and Israel in the Claims Conference, which is a private organization; and pursuant to the reparations agreement, money was set forward in the agreement, but made good in the form of payments in goods to Israel to compensate Israel for the {1186|1187} absorption of survivors. So there are three different programmes under three aques, under different auspices.

Q. I have a letter which purports to come from a source identified on it. Would you be able to say that that appears consistent with your knowledge of the area we are speaking about, namely, reparations? And perhaps you could look through the documents and check and see if they are —

A. Well, I see a letter from the General Consulate of Germany addressed to someone in British Columbia in which there is an enclosure from the West German Federal Ministry of Finance.

Q. Yes. If you could just check and see if what is situated there is consistent with your knowledge of this whole subject of reparations — I'm sorry, indemnification and reparations.

A. The subject matter on the first page, as I read it, is the cover term Wiedergutmachung, and under it, here, with respect to payments to Israel —

Q. Yeah. Could you tell us — well, if I may, could you tell us what it indicates in the way the same information from substantially the same sources.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me, Dr. Hilberg. Just a moment. I think, Your Honour, I think if the witness has seen this document, then that's well and good. If he hasn't seen this document, perhaps he could have an opportunity to examine it. If he has never seen it before — {1187|1188}

THE COURT: You may look at it, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Yes. I said substantially the same, because in this particular document, that is a recapitulation as of January 1st, 1983. I have seen recapitulations of the same categories for different dates, but I am somewhat familiar with the categories and the number.

THE COURT: Yes. Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could I ask, sir, if you could tell me how much it indicates has been paid out in compensation by the Federal Government of West Germany overall, total, total compensation by the Federal Government of West Germany?

A. The total, as listed here, is eighty-six billion, pursuant to a number of agreements. And these are not only from the Federal Government, but in view of the Federal German structure, also from the so-called lender of the equivalent Provinces of Canada.

Q. I see. That figure got me rather confused, 'Doctor. Perhaps you can explain to me, because it almost indicates thousands of billions, which confused me, because I know there is a different numbering system in Europe than there is in Canada ...

A. Yes.

Q. What does it mean when it says thousands of billions?

A. Well, it is simply eighty-three billion, as I understand the mark — not dollars, but marks.

Q. How much marks? Is that what we call them today? {1188|1189}

A. Yes.

Q. They are worth about fifty cents?

A. No, not today. They are worth about thirty-five cents, thirty-three cents.

Q. American.

A. Yes, American.

Q. But Canadian ...

A. Yes. Maybe. Okay.

Q. So we are dealing with the figure of total compensation of about eighty-five billion Deutschmarks, or perhaps forty billion.

A. Right.

Q. Okay. And could you designate or identify the portion payable to the State of Israel?

A. Three billion four hundred fifty in Deutschmarks, a very small portion of the total.

Q. Is there other payments made to individual Holocaust survivors?

A. Yes. The bulk is to individuals, because you see at the top a figure of fifty-four billion, and this is a payment made to individuals under the law which is already referred to as the indemnification law. These individuals are Jews as well as non-Jews, and that's the total cumulatively.

Q. Would you agree that that figure has, shall we say, gone up in time?

A. It has gone up because of a variety of reasons. One is that the West German government widened the law to recognize more claimants than before, because built into the pension payments, particularly, was an escalator clause to take care of inflation. And {1189|1190} since some of these payments are still being made, one must remember that they reflect the inflation. Payments made over a period of decades reflect different values over the years.

Q. Thank you. Would you say that in 1974 the total of reparations might then reach six billion pounds for the total sum?

A. Now you've got me into pounds. You mean British?

Q. Yes. Because that is what it says in the article. It says at the bottom of the page —

A. As of when? As of 1953?

Q. No. '74. Because this is the year, I think, that it was written. I am asking you that as —

A. Well, what I am reading in the I pamphlet is something that says, "to date".

Q. There is no date.

A. I see.

Q. That is the problem. We don't know the date.

A. I see. So ...

Q. "Six thousand million pounds" —

A. What is six thousand million pounds?

Q. I think it is six billion pounds, I think, but I don't know. You are not sure about that?

A. Well, in American usage – okay. All right.

Q. Well, say it was six billion pounds.

A. Yes, all right. Six billion British pounds. {1190|1191}

Q. Would that be approximately right at that time?

A. I have to ask, like a tourist, how much is this in American dollars, or Deutschmarks, or anything. You are asking me to convert these currencies as of 1974.

Q. All right. I will withdraw the question, but let me ask the general question, that by 1974 very large amounts of reparations and compensation had been paid.

A. Well, “large” is a —

Q. It is a relative term, I’m sorry.

A. It is a relative term, because the payments may represent half a percent or less than a third of the percent of the gross produce of West Germany in any given year, and because they reflect injuries to different individuals, they have received them over a period of time, it is obvious that if someone is hurt, even in an automobile accident, and gets recognition of his claim, it is going to involve a rather large sum of money, even one individual.

Q. Thank you, sir. Let’s turn to page six for a moment. As I say, I am taking these parts at random, and I am going to just refer to — I am looking at the second column, just under the picture of Chaim Weizmann. That is a picture of Chaim Weizmann?

A. I don’t know the gentleman, but I have seen a picture of him often enough.

Q. He is a great Zionist?

A. He was the President of the Zionist Organization, yes. {1191|1192}

Q. All right. Underneath that picture, about halfway down the second paragraph, there is a word that begins:

“He complained that thousands of Jews in the occupied regions were conducting partisan warfare, sabotage and espionage ...”

Now, he is referring to Himmler; is that right?

A. Well, I don’t know to whom it refers.

Q. Well, maybe I should start at the beginning of the sentence, I guess. The beginning of the sentence is:

“The first was to prevent unrest and subversion; Himmler had informed Mussolini on October 11th, 1942, that German policy towards the Jews had altered during wartime entirely for reasons of military security. He complained that thousands of Jews in the occupied regions were conducting partisan warfare, sabotage and espionage ...”

and there is no period there, but I have stopped. Now, I’d like to just deal with that.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, not that you agree with Himmler in any way — I am not suggesting that it is true or false, but would it be an accurate statement to say that by October 11, ‘42, Himmler had formed the view that Jews were involved in sabotage in the area of Western Russia? {1192|1193}

A. No. It does not mean that at all. I have, although I have not said it in my book, I have seen, on microfilm, the record of this particular conference.

Q. Oh, excuse me —

A. So I am familiar with its contents as summarized in the official record.

Q. Oh, there was a conference between Himmler and Mussolini on October —

A. Yes, and there is a record of it in the National Archives of the United States.

Q. When you were asked to read this booklet, as you did, did you have the record of that conference, or did you check it in any way?

A. It’s one of the very many documents I have at home. Surely.

Q. Had you checked it?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that statement that Himmler indicated at that time, that Jews were involved in partisan warfare, an accurate statement of what he indicated at the time?

A. Well, as I recall the particular memorandum, there was a discussion between Himmler and Mussolini on that date in which the subject of discussion was wide-ranging — the nature of the War and everything else.

Q. Are you suggesting that topics as situated there did not come up?

A. It did come up, and in the course of the paragraph so devoted to Jews, in this conversation, {1193|1194} Himmler said that the Jews were working, building streets and so on and so forth, and those that were obstreperous [obstreperous] or had joined the partisans would have to be shot; and it’s true he said there were large numbers of them that had to be shot.

Q. All right. That’s all I asked, really.

A. Okay.

Q. I am not arguing with whether or not —

A. I thought you asked me whether I believed him in what he was saying.

Q. I don’t think that I would ask you that question, sir, but I just asked you if that — okay. Now, so that statement, whether Himmler believed or not being aside, that statement is accurate about that meeting.

A. He was saying something of that sort. It’s close enough.

Q. All right. I just want to move along a point at the bottom of the seventh page. I am going to deal with a statement of fact which begins with the sentence, and I quote — it’s just about an inch, if you will forgive me for using that term of measurement, about the bottom of page 7, on the righthandside, it says:

“This is acknowledged by the World Jewish Congress in its publication, Unity in Dispersion (p.377), which states that: ‘The majority of the German Jews succeeded in leaving Germany before the war broke out.’”

Are you familiar with the World Jewish {1194|1195} Congress publication, “United in Dispersion”?

A. Well, the publication and the figures are substantially correct.

Q. All right. So that you agree that there is such a publication, and the quote attributed to it here is true and correct, or do you not?

A. I said substantially correct, because as in everything else, there are qualifications. It is true that if you measure the number of emigrants from Germany prior to September 1st, 1939, the majority of the original five hundred thousand Jews in Germany had left. This leaves out the question of where they went to and what subsequently happened to them.

Q. I appreciate that. What I am trying to check is a statement of fact, and I am trying to check the quote. Did you check that quote at all, sir?

A. Oh, yes, I have no problem with it.

Q. Okay. You wouldn’t object if showed you the publication and you could identify it?

A. Fine.

Q. Okay. Is this the publication you know as, “Unity in Dispersion”, a history of the World Jewish Congress?

A. Yes, I’ve seen it.

Q. And page 377, does it say:

“The majority of the German Jews succeeded in leaving Germany before the war broke out and a substantial number of them settled in South American countries.”?

A. It is not accurate that a substantial {1195|1196} number of them settled in South American countries, because a lot of them went to Latin American countries to settle; but other than that it is correct.

Q. I’d like to move along, then, to something on page 8, and I have chosen at random the statement of fact that is in the second paragraph. It happens to be the words, rather obscure:

“In Colliers magazine, June 9th, 1945, Freiling Foster, writing of the Jews in Russia, explained that ‘2,200,000 have migrated to the Soviet Union since 1939 to escape from the Nazis.’”

A. I still haven’t found it. Where is it?

THE COURT: It is the last sentence in the second paragraph on the top of page 8. It begins with the words, “In Colliers magazine”.

THE WITNESS: Is it under “Russian Jews Evacuated”?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. That’s right. No, I’m sorry. We are mistaken.

THE WITNESS: Oh, I see. It’s in the left column. I was looking in the right one. Okay.

Q. I could point it out more quickly. Here we are. It is just there, sir.

A. All right.

Q. It says:

"In Colliers magazine, June 9th, 1945, Freiling Foster, writing of the Jews in Russia, explained that 2,200,000 have migrated to the Soviet Union {1196|1197} since 1939 to escape from the Nazis."

Did you check that at all to find out if that was true?

A. Whether that was in Colliers magazine?

Q. That's right.

A. No. Colliers magazine is a defunct magazine. I have not checked that. You mean whether it's in the magazine, or whether the figure is true?

Q. First of all, is it a correct quotation?

A. I can't confirm that, but I can't deny it, either. It could very well have been said by anyone not familiar to me who said the name Freiling Foster.

THE COURT: You might ask him about the figures.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Fair enough.

Q. Would you disagree with the figures?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. But you don't question whether or not it was accurately reported?

A. I can't confirm or deny whether it was accurately reported, but obviously, the figure, to my mind, is out of the question.

Q. Thank you. Now, I'd just like to move over to page 9, and I've picked a quotation which begins in the middle of the lefthand column just after the words, it says, "Deutsche Wochenzeitung, November 23rd, 1963", the next sentence says:

"The reason for this high figure is {1197|1198} underlined by Albert Maisal in his article 'Our Newest Americans' (Readers Digest, January, 1957), for he reveals that 'Soon after World War II by Presidential decree, 90 per cent of all quota visas for central and eastern Europe were issued to the uprooted.'"

Do you agree I have read correctly the paragraph there?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. I'd like to now produce and show to you the Readers' Digest article of January 1957 and ask you if you are familiar with the article on page 162 by Albert Maisal.

A. I've not read it.

Q. Please don't answer my question until His Honour says you may, but could I ask you if you would disagree with this attributed quotation which I suggest is found there?

THE COURT: Go ahead.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I will then read it to you:

"Soon after World War II, by Presidential decree, 90 per cent of all quota visas for central and eastern Europe were issued to the uprooted who dared not return to their homes behind the Iron Curtain."

Would you agree?

A. Yes. {1198|1199}

Q. That is, then, a direct quotation; would you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

THE COURT: We will adjourn for fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:50 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr., Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Before I go I on, there was a question that arose this morning about the Hoess affidavit, the first one dated 5th of April, 1946, as to whether it was in English or not.

A. I think there was confusion left on the matter.

Q. Yes. I'd like to, if I may, produce a document dated the 24th of April, 1946 – my birthday – and I'd like you to look and see if you can read it, sir.

A. Yes.

Q. At the back I believe is a photocopy of the document. That's what I would particularly like to ask you about. {1199|1200}

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. And can you tell me what it is, sir?

A. The photocopy? Well, on the third page, written in English as stated above.

Q. Yes. In English.

A. It is typed in English.

Q. Yes. So I assume from your answer, you say that you identify the document as the affidavit of Hoess filed on the 24th of April, 1945, and it is typed in English and signed by him; would you agree?

A. Well, the signature, obviously, is hard for me to identify this from. It appears to be something like a signature.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I file that?

THE COURT: For further proof, yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you have any better knowledge of the document, or is that the Hoess I affidavit referred to in the Nuremberg Military Tribunal?

A. You mean an earlier one, or —

Q. Do you have any knowledge of an earlier affidavit?

A. No. Offhand I couldn't say an earlier one. Lots of later ones.

Q. That is, I suggest to you, the affidavit of Rudolf Hoess.

A. That could quite be the case, yes.

Q. Have you ever seen it before?

A. Oh, yes, I've seen it.

Q. Is it any different from any other time that you have seen that document? {1200|1201}

A. No.

Q. So could you say that this is the document that I suggest it is?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could that be an exhibit please?

THE COURT: Yes. For identification at this time, and I want to hear argument on a number of matters.

— EXHIBIT "K" (For Identification): Staff Evidence Analysis dated April 24, 1946.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, I'd like to just get back to what we were doing earlier. Could you turn to the booklet, page 10, under the heading, "Absence of Evidence", in the paragraph beginning:

"According to Manvell and Frankl (Heinrich Himmler, London, 1965), the policy of genocide 'seems to have been arrived at' after 'secret discussions' between Hitler and Himmler (p.118), ..."

Are you familiar with that book, "Heinrich Himmler", by those authors?

A. Yes.

Q. And it really exists?

A. The book?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, yes. {1201|1202}

Q. And I'd like to now produce and show to you what purports to be the photocopy of the front page of the book, the title and the picture associated with it. Would that be correct?

A. Yes.

Q. It was published in '65.

A. Yes.

Q. Looking at page 118, would you agree with me that it indicates the decision to practise I mass extermination on a national policy of genocide seems to have been arrived at only after secret discussions which were inevitably dominated by Hitler?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, I will just leave that there, because I think there are a couple of more quotes from that. Would you agree with me that that appears to be an accurate summary of the present situation, namely, that any discussions seem to have been arrived at in secret, according to that book, and maybe according to you, too?

A. Oh, yes. It is obviously not a public discussion of the matter.

Q. Right. Going on, I think it refers a little further down to "William Shir-er, in his generally wild and irresponsible book The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, is similarly muted on the subject of documentary proof. Now, leaving aside the judgmental words "wild and irresponsible book", would you agree that he is silent on the subject of documentary proof?

A. It's a journalistic book, frankly, {1202|1203} based mostly on secondary sources. It is aimed at the general public. It does not pretend to be scholarly. It is not such, and it would not, at least by me, be included for reference.

Q. I appreciate that you would not refer to it, but do you agree that that book, as do many others, are silent on the subject of any documentary proof?

A. Well, that book is silent on a lot of things.

Q. Well, even we today, sir, yourself as an expert and looking at other experts, would agree as late as the Stuttgart Conference last spring, that there really doesn't seem to be any documentary order.

A. Documented in the sense of a written order.

Q. Yes. Documentary proof. And I suppose could you agree that that might mean the same thing?

A. Well, not necessarily, because you see there is mention of a Hitler order in documents.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. It's not the Hitler order that exists in the form of a document, because that appears to have been oral, but there are documents that state that there was a Hitler order.

Q. Yeah. There are testimonies of the people —

A. No, no, no. There are documents. I repeat, there are documents. Even in the Wannsee Conference you will find reference to that. {1203|1204}

Q. Well, none of those documents that state there is a document are quoted in your book, "Documents of Destruction".

A. Well, in fact I, myself, translated the Wannsee Conference, and it is in there.

Q. And we have gone through that before, but having gone through it, it does not include a reference to extermination at all.

A. It includes a reference insofar as Heydrich speaks of the evolution of the policy arriving at the final solution and makes specific reference to Hitler in that connection.

Q. I see. So the reference to Hitler and the final solution is what you mean.

A. Well, of course, but in this book —

Q. I just want —

A. — since you asked a question, if I may say, I have appended Eichmann's testimony from the Eichmann trial elucidating the Wannsee Conference.

Q. Let's not go too far. I just asked you if in the Wannsee Conference you mean, by talking of an order, they talk about the final solution.

A. I mean by it the annihilation of the Jews of Europe.

Q. But even in the Wannsee [Wannsee] Conference did it have a memorandum or anything before it —

A. You mean the words "final solution"?

Q. Yes.

A. It was not used; except in the Stroop Report where it does appear. {1204|1205}

Q. But it was not a deep, dark secret that there was reference to a final solution because it was referred by Luther, and it was defined in terms other than you would define it; would you agree?

A. Well, the Luther memorandum, as I testified before, is a long summary and one which is not, in all respects, complete to August 1942.

Q. But it talks of a final solution and does not talk about extermination.

A. There was, assuredly, in the month of January, February, even March, in the mind of some people, a good deal of haziness as to what was to be done with the Jews, and in some cases one finds this haziness existing even after March 1942, and it is sometimes hard to decide whether or not the author is fully familiar with the detail, or is sometimes writing in vague language what he is familiar with.

Q. All right. Well, I won't argue with you, sir. If I may, I would just like to produce and show to you a copy, or part of page 1100, or page 964 of

"The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich" to ask you if it does accurately quote — if it is accurately quoted at the bottom of page 10 where it says, reading from the bottom of page 154 of "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich", I read:

"What became known in high Nazi circles as the 'Führer order on the Final Solution' apparently was never committed to paper — at least no copy of it has yet been unearthed in the captured Nazi documents. All the evidence shows that it was most probably given verbally to Goering, Himmler and Heydrich, who passed it down during the summer and fall of 1941. A number of witnesses testified at Nuremberg that they had 'heard' of it but none admitted ever seeing it. Thus Hans {1205|1206} Lammers, the bullheaded chief of the Reich Chancellery, when pressed on the witness stand replied: 'I knew that a Führer order was transmitted by Goering to Heydrich ... This order was called 'Final Solution of the Jewish Problem.' But Lammers claimed, as did so many others on the stand, that he did not really know what it was all about until Allied counsel revealed it at Nuremberg."

I am quoting correctly, sir?

A. You are quoting correctly.

Q. And it seems to be almost, in fact, verbatim from the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", or at least part of it.

A. This from that?

Q. No, I'm sorry. In this booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", at the bottom of the page, it quotes that source, "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich" accurately?

A. Well —

Q. Well, you'd have to read it; did you ever check that before, sir?

A. Well, of course, but —

Q. You did?

THE COURT: Did you ever check the book, "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich"?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I've been through that book.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you check it to see if the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", had accurately quoted that book?

A. Yes. Oh, yes.

Q. So does it? {1206|1207}

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

A. I thought — I'm sorry, from your question I thought whether Shirer had quoted from this booklet. I'm sorry.

Q. No. Sorry. I didn't mean to confuse you; but that is what I am asking. Would you agree with what Shirer apparently published as being true?

A. Well, it is not entirely so. He was not really a specialist on these matters. He wrote rather early in the nine fifties, and he made certain conclusions, most of which I would say would be shared, but if I had to put it into my own words, I would have to give it a slightly different description of these events.

Q. Would Shirer's description be false?

A. It would be correct insofar as he states that there is no written order by Hitler that has ever been found, and if by "verbal" you mean "oral", then he is correct in sharing the supposition that other researchers have that these utterances were oral if, indeed, orders were given.

Q. Yes. And what the booklet does in the paragraph or heading, "Absence of Evidence" is extend the belief that you agree with as to the non-existence of the order to question the existence of the orders themselves, right?

A. Well, I did not say that.

Q. No, I am not saying you said that, sir. I am saying that is what the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" does, which I trust you have read. {1207|1208}

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. "Now, there's the part that you disagree with, isn't it — you shouldn't extend your consideration of these points to the disbelief of the existence of the policy itself?

A. That's correct.

Q. Thank you. On page 11, under the heading, "Legal Principles Ignored", I go down to the sentence where it says:

"Among the judges, of course, were the Russians, whose numberless crimes included the massacre of 15,000 Polish officers, a proportion of whose bodies were discovered by the Germans at Katyn Forest near Smolensk."

Do you read that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it true that during the Nuremberg trials, included in the indictment against the major war crimes accused was the accusation that they had murdered the Polish officers at Katyn?

A. Yes, there was such a point in the indictment.

Q. They were accused of that.

A. If I remember correctly, yes.

Q. And would you say, sir, that it is now widely debated whether – and I suggest to you, in fact, most authorities would hold that the Russians were probably guilty of that crime?

A. I am not the specialist on the Russians, but it is my own belief that, you know — {1208|1209}

THE COURT: Just a moment. If you are not a specialist on the Russians, and your evidence doesn't fall within the confines of your speciality, then your belief is irrelevant.

THE WITNESS: Well, Your Honour, I was just going to say that it is my belief that the Germans did not do it, because on the basis of my German —

THE COURT: That doesn't matter, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: There's certainly a lot of authorities in this field that agree with the proposition that the Germans were not guilty.

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, if the Germans were not guilty, I put it to you that one of the judges on the tribunal was Rudenko representing a country that pretty well had to be the other culprit – right?

A. Yes.

Q. So far as this is concerned, it is correct to say that on the judicial bench at Nuremberg was one of the parties to one of the crimes charged in the indictment.

THE COURT: Well, now, wait a minute. That is, perhaps – perhaps you can rephrase that one, unless you say that Rudenko himself —

MR. CHRISTIE: No, I didn't say that.

THE COURT: You said he was one of the parties.

MR. CHRISTIE: I meant to say he was the representative of one of the parties, namely the Soviet {1209|1210} Union. I that most will try and rephrase it, Your Honour.

Q. Now, would you say that it was true that authorities now, today, would agree that the Russians were sitting in judgment on a charge of one of the elements of which – not the whole charge – they, themselves, were guilty of?

A. I don't know whether I should answer it within the confines of what I am qualified to answer at all, but I think that is the prevailing view.

Q. Yeah. So far as that sentence is concerned, that would be consistent with the prevailing view, the sentence I have read from the booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", where it says:

"Among the judges, of course, were the Russians, whose numberless crimes included the massacre of 15,000 Polish officers, a proportion of whose bodies were discovered by the Germans at Katyn Forest, near Smolensk."

With the exception of the words "numberless crimes", which is a judgmental phrase, shall we say, that statement is consistent with the prevailing view today.

A. Well, of course, that one Russian is pluralized here to become a lot of Russians. It was one Russian that was on the tribunal.

Q. Yes. But he was the representative of the Soviet Union.

A. Because you see, the statement says, "Among the judges ... were the Russians", plural. There was one Russian among four judges. {1210|1211}

Q. Yes, I acknowledge that that is used in the plural where it should be singular, but he was the representative of the so-called Russians. Right?

A. Of the Soviet Union.

Q. All right. Now, the other day we were dealing with this matter of "Confessions Under Torture" and you were asked whether Senator McCarthy said what was attributed to him, and I heard you say you weren't sure as to whether even he would have said that, or words to that effect.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. All right. At the risk of getting involved in something to do with the Congressional Record, which I assure you, as far as this is concerned, does not include radishes or anything of that kind as we were discussing yesterday, I would like to show you a document that purports to be what it says on the top and ask you if you would agree that it appears to be authentic.

A. It appears to be from the Congressional Record.

Q. Would you acknowledge that you are familiar with it?

A. I have not read this particular text before, but I am familiar enough with some of the remarks made by Senator McCarthy as reported in the Press.

THE COURT: You are being asked if you are familiar with the contents of what you are being shown, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: No, not this particular page.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What I was about {1211|1212} to ask you, though, is that not part of the A[s]chenauer book, Rudolf A[s]chenauer, defence counsel – I put it to you – I have dismantled it because it is photocopied, but are you familiar with the book, "Review of the War Crimes Trials" by Dr. Rudolf A[s]chenauer?

A. Well, I just perused that rather briefly a long time ago.

Q. It is a rather rare book, isn't it?

A. Well, perhaps.

Q. Maybe I can ask this another way. Would you agree that all the statements made on that page, "Confessions Under Torture", are probably true?

A. No. I have repeatedly testified to something entirely different. I characterized this in all sorts of ways over the days. I don't know that it is necessary for me to repeat all this testimony. It's in the record.

Q. Well, let me be more precise, then. Could you identify one statement on that column, on page 12, under "Confessions Under Torture", that you say is false – just one single statement there, anywhere?

A. I do not state that something is false because I said before that I had no independent knowledge of some of the allegations pertaining to the Malmedy trial which was not a Holocaust trial or, for that matter, to the Dachau trial.

Q. Excuse me, does this article say that the Malmedy trial is a Holocaust trial anywhere?

A. The pamphlet is one pertaining to the six million. Not one of the six million was involved {1212|1213} in the Malmedy trial; not one.

Q. No. Nor does the pamphlet say they were, sir, I suggest.

A. All right.

Q. I suggest the reason for referring to torture in the Malmedy trial is to analogize that probably the same situation prevailed in other trials. Do you agree?

A. Well, there may be that insinuation or implication that was intended by the author. That I do not dispute.

Q. Okay. But I ask you if you can see, or if you read that from top to bottom, "Confessions Under Torture".

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me one single statement there that is false on that whole column. Just one, any one.

A. Well, the statement – are you now asking me whether the attributions are false, or whether, for example, Justice Wenersturm, as quoted, was incorrect?

Q. Well, I was dealing with "Confessions Under Torture", and it is to the left.

A. No. It is under "Confessions Under Torture".

Q. Where is that?

A. On the bottom of the right column. For instance Justice Wen[n]erstrum says certain words here:

"The reader will immediately appreciate from their names ..."

– the names of various prosecutors –

"... that the majority of these people {1213|1214} were 'biased on racial grounds' in the words of Justice Wen[n]ersturm – that is, were Jewish ..."

Q. Well, all right. Is that a mistaken belief, or is that a false statement?

A. I think it is a false statement, of course.

Q. Okay. Let me analyze it. Did Wen[n]ersturm say that many of those involved in the prosecution were biased on racial grounds; did he say that?

A. This is why I asked you what he meant. The attribution is incorrect, but —

Q. You take issue. You say he was wrong or mistaken or lying.

A. Yes.

Q. However, he did say that?

A. No doubt. I testified to that before.

Q. So you are not saying that is a false statement at all.

A. I am saying, once again, that inasmuch as this is a paragraph taken from Judge Wen[n]ersturm's words as truth —

Q. You dispute the truth.

A. Yes.

Q. But no doubt Wen[n]ersturm believed that, and he was there.

A. Whatever he believed, he said that.

Q. Yes. He did say these words.

A. Yes.

Q. So you'd say that Wen[n]ersturm is {1214|1215} wrong and you shouldn't quote Wen[n]ersturm when he is wrong. Is that right?

A. I would say that Wen[n]ersturm is wrong and, therefore, I cannot agree that this is correct in content.

Q. I see. But there is no doubt about the fact that Wen[n]ersturm said that.

A. No doubt.

Q. And there is no doubt that this article is correct when it says that Wen[n]ersturm was a judge at the NMT – Nuremberg Military Tribunal.

A. Yes.

Q. So that is the truth?

A. That part, yes.

Q. And there is no false statement when he quotes somebody to say those words, unless you dispute the man who said the words.

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. Yes, they were the words of someone – I don't want to mislead someone. If someone says that Streicher called all the Jews murderers, that is a true statement insofar as Streicher made that comment, but I do not agree with the nature of that comment.

Q. I understand that, sir, and I am glad you explained it, but [ ] then, of course, that's where we get to matters of opinion; right?

A. Oh, no. I don't think this is simply a matter of opinion. It is a factual question as to whether these people were or were not Jews.

Q. Well, does it say anywhere that {1215|1216} these people were or were not Jews?

A. All right. Do you want me to repeat the passage?

Q. I want you to help me find one statement that is false in there.

A. These were Americans. These were American citizens and American prosecutors. Here is the passage. "The 'American'" – now, that is in quotation marks. Now, whatever is imputed in quotation marks, for "American", when one has an American uniform on —

THE COURT: One at a time, please.

THE WITNESS: — "American" investigators responsible (and who later functioned as the prosecution in the trials) were: Lt.-Col. Burton F. Ellis (chief of the War Crimes Committee) and his assistants, Capt. Raphael Shumacker, Lt. Robert E. Byrne, Lt. William R. Perl, Mr. Morris Elowitz, Mr. Harry Thon, and Mr. Kirschbaum. The legal adviser of the court was Col. A. H. Rosenfeld. —"

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Can we step —

A. — "The reader will immediately appreciate from their names that the majority of these people were 'biased on racial grounds' in the words of

Mr. Justice Wen[n]ersturm – that is, were Jewish, and therefore should never have been involved in any such investigation."

Q. All right. Now, are you saying that the majority of the American prosecution staff were not Jewish?

A. I say that the majority of the American prosecution staff were not Jewish.

Q. I am not talking about the American prosecution staff. I am talking about those names there {1216|1217} quoted in the article. Are you saying they were not Jewish? I don't know. Tell me. Do you know?

A. He says the majority of these people; what does he mean?

Q. Well, he named them.

A. Just the majority of five people, namely three? He picks five or six names

Q. Please don't answer the question with a question. If you want to me to answer you, I will; but please answer my question.

A. Why don't I concede your point?

Q. What point?

A. The point that this is completely correct, in every respect.

Q. Thank you. You may not agree with what it says, but you cannot say it is wrong.

A. Conceded.

Q. Thank you. Can you see anything else on that page that is false at all?

A. No. I don't wish to repeat myself one more time, if I may be excused.

Q. I am certainly not going to force you to repeat yourself. I will go over to page 17. Now, it refers here on the top of the page on the lefthand-side, in bold print, to:

"Although Reitlinger's 6,000 a day would mean a total by October 1944 of over 5 million, all such estimates pale before the wild fantasies of Olga Lengyel ..."

You quote her in your book a number {1217|1218} of times, don't you?

A. Well, I do quote her about certain matters because she was an inmate and reported, in some respects, what she saw, in other respects reported hearsay.

Q. All right. In this article here, "Did Six Million Really Die?", it says that in her book she claimed to be a former inmate of Auschwitz; she asserts that the camp cremated no less than "720 per hour, or 17,280 corpses per twenty-four hour shift." Also, in addition, 8,000 people were burned every day in the "death-pits", and that therefore, "In round numbers, about 24,000 corpses were handled every day".

Do you say that is an incorrect quote of her?

A. No. She did include, obviously, hearsay, and reports that she heard some of these things and printed them in her memoir.

Q. Is this —

A. She does not claim to have made this count. She reports that she heard it.

Q. I see. Could I ask you if this is the cover of her book?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. "Five Chimneys The Story of Auschwitz", by Olga Lengyel. I refer to page 69, and I'd like to check and see if this is what she said in the portion at the second paragraph: "Three hundred and sixty corpses every half hour, which was all the time it took to reduce human flesh to ashes, made 720 per hour, or 17,280 corpses per twenty-four hour shift. And the ovens, with murderous efficiency, functioned day and night. However, one must also reckon the death pits, {1218|1219} which could destroy another 8,000 cadavers a day. In round numbers, about 24,000 corpses were handled each day. An admirable production record one that speaks well for German industry."

Is that what she said in that book?

A. Yes.

Q. So as far as that quote is concerned you say that it was only hearsay to her.

A. Yes, because she clearly indicates in the very next sentence that she obtained details, statistics of convoys arriving and all of these things from which somebody made a calculation.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Now, the Polish underground in Auschwitz kept a record of arriving trains, and inasmuch as there were varying numbers of people on them, calculations were made. Sometimes these calculations were wide off the mark, but these are the statistics to which she refers.

Q. Yes. Inasmuch as you seem to indicate, in the answer, that I was reading it out of context, I should read further: "Even while in camp I obtained very detailed statistics on the number of convoys which arrived at Auschwitz-Birkenau in 1942 and 1943." Doesn't that seem to indicate that she had obtained very detailed statistics?

A. Well, I don't think she was there in 1942 or '43, and she obtained these statistics, quite obviously, in ways that we would characterize as hearsay, but based on a record that was kept at Auschwitz and which is available.

Q. Oh, there is a record to substantiate those numbers? {1219|1220}

A. No, I would not say that there is a record substantiating these numbers. There is a record which makes possible a calculation or a miscalculation of that nature.

Q. All right. Well, then, to the extent that this article quotes those things that are described here as "wild fantasies", this booklet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" accurately quotes her verbatim, doesn't it?

A. Well, I don't think it's a fantasy.

Q. Well, I agree, we may disagree on what it is and how we should view it, but that's what she said, isn't it?

A. That is what she said, again with the proviso that she didn't claim this to be her personal calculation or observation. It was based in the context you said on a certain amount of hearsay.

Q. Could you turn to page 629 of your book? Could you look to the Footnote No. 63? Could I read to you the sentence that supports that footnote?

A. Yes.

Q. It says:

"By 1942-43, the liquidation of graves in all killing centers was in progress. Auschwitz transferred the corpses to the five new crematoriums, which could burn about 12,000 bodies a day."<sup>63</sup>

Then, going down to the bottom, Footnote 63, it says:

"Sehn, 'Oswiecim,' p.87. Lengyel, Five {1220|1221} Chimneys, pp. 68-69, figures the theoretical daily maximum capacity at 17,280."

Per day, I guess.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, were you quoting her with approval?

A. No, obviously not, because I chose the figure twelve thousand, and then I added—in the stage of my research there was some haziness as to maximum capacity—that one source, not necessarily the most reliable, attributable to Lengyel, the figuring of the daily capacity. That is all it says. It is a footnote.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, do you cite footnotes that you don't agree with?

A. Why not? If there is some possibility that the number was higher than twelve thousand, I put it down as the possible avenue for further research.

Q. And you—

A. But I didn't accept it.

Q. You don't believe it is a credible number, then.

A. Well, I think it's on the high side. What I've got in the text is "about 12,000".

Q. It's my understanding that on that same page, 629, in your book, you say that in August 1944 twenty thousand corpses had to be burned on some days.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there is a map on this page 17, sir. Right?

A. Yes. {1221|1222}

Q. Now, would you agree with me—you know the book, "Six Million Did Die".

A. Yes.

Q. You are aware that it was published by the South African authorities of—I think it's called the Board of Jewish Deputies, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So this is a publication to refute the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?". Right?

A. In part.

Q. And to provide evidence for its prosecution in South Africa?

A. Yes.

Q. It does include the map, doesn't it?

A. Yes, I think it does.

Q. So you don't dispute the map at all?

THE COURT: Haven't we covered this?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Do we have to cover it again? You asked him the question and he gave the answer, "Yes". Please get on to something else.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Would you agree with me that there were gas chambers in Dachau? Is that your opinion?

A. Is it—

Q. I just want to clarify, because I have a point, maybe some people don't think so but I do; maybe you don't think so.

A. You mean a gas chamber for gassing people? {1222|1223}

Q. In Dachau.

A. Well, did I answer that as a maybe or a possibility?

Q. I would like your answer.

A. That is my answer.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a maybe. To my information it's not a case of a large number of people having been gassed at Dachau; a handful might have been, but even that is not confirmed.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, I point out to you that in the book, "Six Million Did Die", that it purports to say that a whole roomful of victims of the Dachau gas chamber lay piled to the ceiling in the crematorium.

Aren't I quoting it correctly?

A. Yes. It's possible.

Q. Would that be false news?

A. I didn't say it was false. I said it was a maybe; it was possible. I, myself, did not investigate this matter and I didn't write this booklet.

Q. Well, are you aware that Martin—do you know who Martin Brochat (phonetic) [Broszat] is?

A. Martin Brochat, yes.

Q. Would you recognize him as a credible historian?

A. Yes.

Q. He said that there was no gas chambers in all the Reich.

A. He has said that, yes.

Q. Is he a credible historian?

A. Yes. {1223|1224}

Q. Well, he isn't allowed to say that without being condemned, in your view, as a credible historian.

A. I am saying of the various gas chambers in the west, as you put it, the two, as I said, some researchers established as having had gas chambers with some continuous, although not large, volumes of gas-sings were Natzweiler and Mauthausen. Both these are within the boundaries of the old Reich. Brochat's statement refers to the old Reich. One has to know what he means by that. He means the German boundaries as of 1973.

Q. Could we turn to page 19 and look briefly at the paragraph underneath the picture?

A. Yes.

Q. Right above the boldface print it says:

"... Himmler discovered on a surprise visit to Warsaw in January 1943 that 24,000 Jews registered as armaments workers were in fact working illegally as tailors and furriers (Manvell & Frankl, ibid, p. 140)..."

Now, do you consider that statement true?

A. Well, you know, I can confirm, number one, that Himmler did go to Warsaw in January.

Q. Yes.

A. That he talked to an Army Colonel named Freter. He then discovered, rather than some thirty or thirty-five thousand registered inmates of this ghetto, there was a substantially larger number who were {1224|1225} unregistered, working illegally. He was incensed with the fact that there were so many people there. That's my best recollection from the documents. Now, to the extent that this reflects my recollection, I will agree with it.

Q. Okay. Thank you. Could I ask you if you recognize this book, "Himmler", that I've mentioned earlier?

A. Yes.

Q. And looking at page 140, could you read with me and confirm that it does say: "Himmler discovered that 24,000 Jews registered as armaments workers were in fact working illegally as tailors and furriers."?

A. That is what the two journalists are saying, but I am citing documents —

Q. But as far as the booklet is concerned, that statement is true, is it not?

A. As far as the booklet is concerned, what is true is that they took a statement which is a little bit sloppy from two journalists who wrote a book.

Q. All right. Now, getting to the book — by the way, do you still maintain that, or do you believe that there is some question about the authenticity of parts and, in fact, all of Anne Frank's diary?

A. There is some question as to parts of it, yes.

Q. Is it correct that there are some parts that appear to be written in ballpoint pen and that that wasn't invented until 1952?

A. My understanding, which is based on newspaper accounts, is that the Anne Frank Diary which, {1225|1226} incidentally, I haven't used or cited in my context whatsoever, is an accurate diary except for amendments [sic] or corrections made by her father after the War. It may be that, as sometimes happens with a diary of deceased people, that that was his daughter that he felt they had to make certain changes in it, or corrections in it, which seems to be, from newspaper accounts, it's stated fact.

Q. Okay. Now, going to the very last page, I just want to check a point with you in respect to surviving claimants against the West German government. It says on the last page, underneath "Imaginary Slaughter":

"By 1965, the number of these claimants registered with the West German Government had tripled in ten years and reached 3,375,000 (Aufbau, June 30th, 1965)."

Would you dispute that?

A. Well, I really do not know in what sense the word "claimants", is quoted here. "Aufbau" is a German language newspaper. Let me explain what a claimant may mean. It is a person putting forward a claim. The claim may or may not be recognized. The number of those who put forward claims versus the number of those whose claims are recognized is much larger. There have been many, many claimants, most of them, incidentally, Germans not Jews, whose claims, some of them, were not recognized, claims that they were persecuted. So they could have well made over three million of those who made claims; but the recognition of a claim meaning payment to these people is another matter. {1226|1227}

Q. Well, do you dispute the number of claimants in that year is as it states?

A. What I am stating to you is that 3,375,000 may be the total number of people, Jews and non-Jews, who asserted that they had a claim. It does not mean that this is the number of people who received money, let alone the number of Jews who received money.

Q. I appreciate all your qualifications on the answer, one of which was that these were not all Jews, the other of which was that they didn't get recognized necessarily; but do you dispute the figures stated there?

A. I cannot confirm it, but to me, with all due respect, it's a meaningless figure out of context.

Q. I suggest to you that you may be mistaken when you say that they are not all Jews referred to in the article.

A. Well, give me the proof.

Q. Would you agree with me — have you read "Aufbau" of October 8, 1965?

A. I have read through, more or less, every issue of Aufbau through 1965, that is that page that deals with claims.

Q. Yes. Now, does the article say that the claimants are all Jewish, first of all?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Show him the article.

MR. CHRISTIE: He's got the article in front of him.

THE WITNESS: No, it says something about claimants —

Q. It does not say that all the claim-{1227|1228}ants are Jewish, does it?

A. You see, the sentence is linked with the next sentence that says — am I permitted to read the whole sentence?

Q. You can read the whole thing if you like.

A. It says nothing — and that is the sentence following the number three million: "Nothing could be a more devastating proof of the brazen fantasy of the Six Million." Now, the six million are Jews, even if it is a fantasy. So these 3,375,000 are clearly implied to be Jewish, and they are implied to be Jewish survivors, or people who are left alive. This is a linkage which is totally inadmissible.

Q. It is not what it says, though, is it?

A. Excuse me, but there are two sentences here in sequence. One states that there are 3,375,000 claimants without any qualification at all, the next sentence jumps to the conclusion, "Nothing could be a more devastating proof of the brazen fantasy of the Six Million".

Q. Would not the inference be that a substantial number of these claimants are Jewish?

A. I don't know what you mean by "substantial". As I said before, most of the disallowed claims were not from Jewish people. There were many people asserting persecution in Germany who were not Jewish. Even among the recipients of money, under the {1228|1229} the indemnification law, approximately a third were not Jewish, and that is a much smaller number than those who asserted claims.

Q. So that [the majority who were disallowed is not Jewish; is that what I heard you to say?

A. That is my opinion.

Q. Would the majority who were allowed be Jewish?

A. Yes. About two-thirds.

Q. Two-thirds of the claims allowed were Jewish?

A. Yes.

Q. How many of the claims made were allowed?

A. Oh, that is a difficult figure to give, because we are talking thirty years and changes in rules and type of claims. If the reference is to 1965, which is a watershed because of the widening of claims — before 1965 I would have said some three hundred thousand to which were added some tens of thousands of new claimants. So we are talking about hundreds of [thousands, but in no sense millions.

Q. Could I just produce for one final question the document filed as the Hoess document?

THE COURT: Exhibit "K".

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I just want to ask you a question about this portion of the Hoess affidavit. It says:

"The 'final solution' of the Jewish question meant the complete extermination of all Jews in Europe. I {1229|1230} was ordered to establish extermination facilities at Auschwitz in June 1941. At that time, there were already in the general government three other extermination camps; BELZEK, TREBLINKA and WOLZEK."

Were Belzec, Treblinka and Wolzek established by June 1941?

A. No. No.

Q. So here is a man making a statement in a language other than his own that you know is a totally impossible statement as far as statements of that nature are concerned.

A. I will, without any question, state that this particular document, for [that kind of information and a lot of other, is evidently not — it is a very short thing, a page, that is correct. It cannot be supported by the kind of fact that seems to have been a summary of things he said or may have said or may have thought he said by someone who shoved a summary in front of him and he signed it, which is unfortunate.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Doctor.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Several times, Dr. Hilberg, Mr. {1230|1231} Christie referred you to a conversation you had about Mr. Faurisson or some comment you made about Mr. Faurisson, particularly in an interview reported in the Nouvelle Observateur in which you said that you were quite willing to keep an open mind academically and look into things if any new evidence came forward. Have I got that paraphrased right?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever seen any German document or any other document to make you change your opinion as to the fact of the Holocaust?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Thank you. You said that you received a very nice letter from Professor Faurisson.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us the contents of that letter?

A. I think he was complimentary. He said I was a nice fellow, but other people were not.

Q. Okay. You mentioned in cross-examination that the last reference that you have seen to a document attributable to Hitler with a reference of Madagascar, you have given a date of February 2nd ...

A. 1941.

Q. How can you be so accurate?

A. Because of a diary kept by an adjutant of Hitler's called Engel. This diary I value highly as an authentic source because it was kept by an army officer who was in Hitler's entourage for something like five years. Although this is not a daily diary, he recorded many interesting, salient comments Hitler made. {1231|1232} The discussion that is under the date of February 2nd, 1941 – and I recall the date because it does seem to me significant, was to the effect that Bormann, one of the top Nazis, brought up the Jewish question, as frequently happened, and they were then discussing some way of trying to solve it. Hitler then brought up Madagascar. Then someone questioned about how could the Jews ever go to Madagascar in the middle of a war. Hitler then said, "You're right. We cannot send them over there because will certainly not risk the German merchant fleet to transport Jews, which might then even be torpedoed by Jewish warships or submarines." Anyway, he said he was now thinking less friendly thoughts about the Jews.

That's all he said at that point on February 2nd. It seems to me that that more or less closed the chapter of Madagascar, that although reference to Madagascar appeared in German documentation thereafter, it has, at that point, ceased to be a feasible project.

Q. You were asked quite a number of questions about Rudolf Hoess, and allegations of torture, complaints of torture before the International Military Tribunal.

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Any allegations that you can recall that the record was asked to be expunged during the recording of his testimony?

A. No.

Q. All right. You were also referred to his book, "Commandant of Auschwitz", which I believe was Exhibit 10. And a description was read of people clearing out the gas chamber, or a grisly description and {1232|1233} dragging bodies to the pits.

A. Yes.

Q. On page 198 – it has been filed – there is something that was marked in yellow by Mr. Christie, presumably. It says: "The door was opened ..." – can you read that sentence?

A. "The door was opened half an hour after the induction of the gas, and the ventilation switched on."

Q. "... and the ventilation switched on." Thank you. Now, you have seen documents, you say, as to ventilation of Birkenau.

A. I have seen some documents in which the installation of the gas chambers was discussed, and in which the late delivery of the ventilators prevented the starting up of the gas chambers, the projected time.

Q. That is the nature of the documents you have seen about the ventilators.

A. Yes.

Q. We also heard a great deal about unfortunate Mr. Gerstein, and you indicated, I believe, on any number of times, that you only used those portions of his affidavit that were corroborated.

A. Right.

Q. Can you tell us what corroboration you had for those parts of the affidavit you used?

A. Yes. There was, with Gerstein, another person who also made an affidavit, at least one. There are accounts based on the report of a Swedish diplomat; he may or may not have believed the contents, but he made a record of what Gerstein told him on the {1233|1234} express train in the summer of 1942 about these death camps. The Swedish government has the record of the Swedish diplomat's entry and memorandum of that conversation.

So the important thing is that Gerstein, indeed, was at these gas chambers, did see them, two of the camps, reported these matters, and I believe that this is confirmed in a variety of words.

Q. Leaving aside his statistics and numbers and concentrating more on the fact of the gas chamber, is there anything, since your first edition in 1961, that has offered any further corroboration?

A. Oh, yes. Because since then, especially in the nineteen sixties, the West German government attempted to find every single surviving member of the German guard forces in these camps, these three camps particularly – Treblinka, Belzec and Sobibor – and each one of these people was questioned. A record was made of what they said, and I have been through all of these records.

Q. Thank you. Page 12 – back to the "Confessions Under Torture" – we are almost through – the first sentence, page 12, column two:

"Altogether more disturbing ..." –

MR. CHRISTIE: May I, before my friend goes on – this is re-examination which, if I have raised the matter in cross-examination for the first time, he may raise it again; but if he starts raising new issues to which he wishes to direct –

THE COURT: Then you will say he is splitting his case. {1234|1235}

MR. CHRISTIE: I would think I should be then able to reply.

THE COURT: You won't be able to reply. The Crown will not be allowed to split his case.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE COURT: Are you splitting your case?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't think so, Your Honour, but if there is a question as to that, I will leave it for argument.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

Q. Have you read this book?

A. Yes.

Q. It's entitled, "I Cannot Forgive", by Rudolf Vrba.

A. Yes.

Q. Well – Dr. Vrba will be testifying.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I don't know that in re-examination we should introduce new evidence, if that is what my friend is going to do.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, Mr. Christie, in his cross-examination, raised – he raised a very specific allegation that Phillip Mueller plagiarized something in 1979 that was published in 1972, and this is in answer to that specific allegation. It refers to a reference in this book to Phillip Mueller, this book having been written in 1963, and I have the author of the book here.

THE COURT: Show it to Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: If my friend is going {1235|1236} to raise this, that's just fine. He is going to show that – very good.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 195 of Dr. Vrba's book.

THE COURT: Ask the witness if he knows the book.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I did, Your Honour, and he said he was familiar with the book

Q. He starts by saying:

"I did not answer him. I scarcely heard him."

A. Yes.

Q. All right:

"I did not answer him. I scarcely heard him. The lorries began to snarl again and move towards the gate, like an armoured division. The noise of the engines seemed to fill the camp, to drown my ears. Then suddenly, over this harsh, imperative note, I heard a new, sweet sound. The sound of a thousand women singing. And the song was the Czechoslovak National Anthem – 'Where is My Home ...'.

And then there are two paragraphs then that describe other things, and at the bottom of the page it says:

"Philip Muller had been working all night. His face was grimy and his eyes were tired. With careful in-{1235|1236}difference, I said to him: 'How did it go?' 'Quietly, Rudi,' he said. 'Very quietly. They sang the Czech and Jewish National Anthems all the time and they just walked straight into the chambers.'"

Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And this book was published when?

A. 1964.

Q. Thank you. Are you familiar with the German to English and English to German dictionary put out by Cassel's, [Cassell's] and is that an authoritative dictionary?

A. Yes. It is the most widely used one on this side of the ocean.

Q. Okay. First of all, the word "vernichten" —

THE COURT: Spelled? You had better get the witness to do that.

THE WITNESS: V-E-R-N-I-C-H-T-E-N.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you recollect that several days ago there was a question as to the translation of a word in S.S. General Stroop's report, and whether the word "vernichten" meant "annihilated" or "exterminated"? For what it's worth, what does the dictionary say?

A. "Annihilate, destroy, demolish, exterminate, overthrow; disappoint;" and then, secondary mention, "annul, cancel, nullify, declare null and void, revoke, abolish, quash, abrogate", in law.

Q. And we had a discussion about the {1236|1237} word "Wesen". Can you find that in that dictionary, please?

A. Yes. In the following order, it is given as "reality, substance, essence; being, creature, living thing, organism; state, condition; nature, character, property, intrinsic virtue; conduct, demeanour, air, way, bearing; ..."

Q. Any vermin or insects mentioned there?

A. No.

Q. Thank you. And when was this published, this particular edition of the dictionary?

A. This seems to be a 1957 edition up-dated to the Twelfth Edition of 1968.

Q. This is the Twelfth Edition of 1968.

A. Yes.

THE COURT: That will be marked as Exhibit "L" for the moment.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, if it is acceptable, I will photocopy those two pages.

THE COURT: That is why it is not being made a numbered exhibit. I want you to talk to Mr. Christie before we have it as an exhibit.

— EXHIBIT "L" (For Identification) Photocopied excerpts from Cassell's German & English Dictionary.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Page 17, Doctor, of "Did Six Million Really Die?" — perhaps you can look at your copy, mine has some notations in it — page 17, column {1237|1238} one, dealing with that part, discussing the Olga Lengyel book, second sentence of the second paragraph:

"Claiming to be a former inmate of Auschwitz, she asserts that the camp cremated no less than ..."

and then the figures ...

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Would you look at those portions of the book Mr. Christie showed you, and can you tell us whether this says that they cremated, or whether they could cremate?

A. Okay. The passage which he underlined is simply an enumeration [sic] of a capacity — 360 corpses every half hour, which is all the time it took to reduce human flesh to ashes, made 720 corpses per hour or 17,280 corpses per twenty-four hour shift.

Q. All right.

A. This is without the death pits. This is simply the capacity of the crematories, and does not include the pits in which bodies were burned.

Q. So it is capacity, rather than ...

A. Yes. This is the theoretical [sic] capacities of the crematories as she relates it, and it does not include the pits.

MR. CHRISTIE: If the witness is going to be, asked to comment, he should read the whole thing.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am content to start with "In the beginning" on page 68.

THE WITNESS: In the beginning those {1238|1239} who were condemned to death at Birkenau were either shot in the forest of Braezinsky or gassed in the infamous white house in the camp. The corpses were incinerated in a 'deathpit'. After 1941 four crematory ovens were put into service and the 'output' of this immense extermination plant was augmented vastly. At first, Jews and non-Jews were sent to the crematory equally, without favour. After June, 1943, the gas chamber and crematory ovens were reserved exclusively for Jews and Gypsies. Except for reprisal or by error, Aryans were executed by shooting, hanging, or by poison injections. Of the four crematory units at Birkenau, two were huge and consumed enormous numbers of bodies. The other two were smaller. Each unit consisted of an oven, a vast hall, and a gas chamber. Above each rose a high chimney, which was usually fed by nine fires. The four ovens of Birkenau were heated by a total of thirty fires. Each oven had large openings. That is, there were 120 openings, into each of which three corpses could be placed at one time. That meant they could dispose of 360 corpses per operation. That was only the beginning of the Nazi 'Production Schedule'. Three hundred and sixty corpses every half hour, which was all the time it took to reduce human flesh to ashes, made 720 per hour, or 17,280 corpses per twenty-four hour shift. And the ovens, with murderous efficiency, functioned day and night. However, one must also reckon the death pits, which could destroy another 8,000 cadavers a day. In round numbers, about 24,000 corpses were handled every day. An admirable production record — one that speaks well for German industry."

Q. And was Hoess ever called for the prosecution?

A. Excuse me, Hoess?

Q. Hoess.

A. I am not aware of that. {1239|1240}

Q. Only as a defence witness.

A. That is what I recall.

Q. And you were asked, I believe it was yesterday, about whether you had any knowledge of scientific reports of what happened in the gas chambers, and my recollection is that you replied that from German sources you have reports of what happened. They were not scientific reports.

A. That's correct.

Q. What German sources do you have describing what happened?

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought we had been over this in-chief. I thought I dealt with it in cross-examination, and now we are dealing with it again.

THE COURT: The objection is dismissed. Proceed.

THE WITNESS: German documents pertaining to operations in the death camps are numerous, and they include various railway materials indicating the one-way traffic to these camps.

MR. CHRISTIE: We were over that, Your Honour.

THE COURT: You be quiet, please.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I object?

THE COURT: No.

MR. CHRISTIE: I have my right to object.

THE COURT: Not now you can't. You can object at the proper time. I want the witness to give the evidence, and if you object to that procedure, you may appeal it. Now, please sit down. Go ahead. {1240|1241}

THE WITNESS: In addition, there is correspondence pertaining to the construction of gas chambers. Furthermore — and again I speak of documentation – there is an extensive correspondence about the delivery of gas, sometimes labelled “materials for handling the Jewish problem”, and this is just a sample of the materials on which one relies on forming the total picture of what happened.

Q. Thank you, Doctor. I have no further questions.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Members of the jury – first I should say to Mr. Christie that on Monday afternoon next, at two o'clock, you may put on the record any objections you may have to our last exchange.

Members of the jury, this witness has been here for some time. He has other obligations. I am sorry to have kept you so late. He is now leaving for Vermont and you are free to go until two o'clock next Monday afternoon. The reason is that a number of events that occurred before Christmas are now overtaking me, and I will be otherwise busy in this courtroom on an entirely different matter Monday morning.

Thank you. Have a good weekend. Please remember all of the admonitions that I have given and keep an open mind on this case.

— The Jury retires. 5:10 p.m.

— {1241|1242}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, may I ask – I just wondered if you could clarify my ignorance. I didn't understand what Your Honour meant by your last remarks.

THE COURT: I invited you to take your seat until the evidence could go in. If you have any objection to that that you want to put on the record at two o'clock next Monday afternoon, you could do so.

MR. CHRISTIE: I see. Thank you very much for clarifying things.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 21, 1985, at two o'clock.

JANUARY 21, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Anything before we start?

MR. GRIFFITHS: One thing, Your Honour. I am going to have to start paying five cents a day unless I get the German Dictionary back to the library. You were going to rule on that today. I propose, subject to Your {1242|1243} Honour, to put in a photocopy of the pages where the words that were referred to were defined. The definitions were also read out of the book by the witness on the stand.

If Your Honour feels that the photocopy of the pages is not appropriate – whichever way, Your Honour, I need to get the book back.

THE COURT: Do you want to see the Crown pay five cents a day?

MR. CHRISTIE: I would think they can afford it more than I could, but, no, I don't want it to inconvenience the Crown. I think, though, that there is a certain problem here because they looked up the word “Wesen”, and the real word was “En[t]wesung”. That is something, I suppose, I can deal with in defence.

THE COURT: All right. If there is anything I can do to help, deal with it now; otherwise we will put the photostatic copy of the page in and save the Crown a little money.

Anything further, gentlemen?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour mentioned to me something about an objection that I might make. I have given it thought. I think that we are all doing our best with a very difficult case, and I don't think there is very much to say except I am sure that we will all continue {1243|1244} to try to do our duty and do our best, and naturally, things will occur from time to time, but I don't see any point in raising any objection at all.

THE COURT: All right. The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:45 p.m.

THE COURT Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

Just before you do that, members of the jury, I am sorry to have held you up. The best laid plans of mice and men often go awry. It is my fault. An interpreter did not show up this morning, showed up at two o'clock this afternoon. Hence, I apologize, but that's life.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Dr. Vrba, please.

RUDOLF VRBA, sworn

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Sir, I understand that you are now an associate professor in pharmacology at the University of British Columbia.

A. That's right.

Q. And that you have been in Canada {1244|1245} for how long?

A. Since '67.

Q. 1967?

A. Yes, with the exception of two years when I was in Boston.

Q. And before 1967 I understand you were in England for a period of time?

A. That's right. Since 1960 through 1967 I was on the staff of the Medical Research Council of the United Kingdom.

Q. What is your field of interest in particular?

A. My specialty was the chemistry of the brain [brain].

Q. Chemistry of the brain?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have a doctorate?

A. I have a doctorate in chemistry, and a higher degree, a candidate of immunochemistry – that means the chemical composition – of the brain.

Q. Before you went to England where were you; what country were you living in?

A. I was born in Czechoslovakia on September 11, 1924. I lived in Czechoslovakia until 1939 when Czechoslovakia was dismembered, and from '39 onwards I lived in a puppet Slovakia in a puppet state which was under German rule with local underlings ruling until 1942.

In June of 1940 I have been deported to the concentration camp of Maidanek where I was fourteen days.

Q. You were two weeks in Maidanek? {1245|1246}

A. Two weeks.

Q. And from Maidanek were you taken someplace else?

A. On 20 June, 1942, I was put into a cattle truck and taken to Auschwitz concentration camp where I arrived on June 30, 1942, and I stayed in Auschwitz until April 7, 1944, when I escaped and returned to Slovakia.

Q. All right. We will hear about your escape in due course. We have heard that there are a number of different camps that are called Auschwitz. Can you tell us which camp you were taken to?

A. I was taken to the camp which was called Auschwitz I. I was in that camp from 30 June, 1942 until 15th January, 1943.

Q. All right. And did you have some —

A. And from 15 January, 1943, I was transferred to the camp called Auschwitz II, which is called Birkenau.

THE COURT: Which is called what?

THE WITNESS: Birkenau. And that was also officially called Auschwitz II, and there I was until April 7, 1944.

Q. Can you tell us whether you did any work when you were in Auschwitz I?

A. In Auschwitz I?

Q. Yes. The main camp.

A. In Auschwitz I for the first two months, this means for the first two years, two months, in July and August, I have been working on an enterprise which was called Buna, which was not far from Auschwitz, and it {1246|1247} later was built up into Auschwitz III, and was supposed to be rubber, synthetic rubber factory.

Q. All right. Were you working in the factory?

A. No. It was a building site, and the complex belonged to E. G. [I. G.] Farben, who used to borrow slave labour from Auschwitz I; and I was taken there every morning as a slave labourer, and brought in the evening to Auschwitz I for two months, roughly.

Q. All right. I would like you to describe for us, if you can, what a day would be like when you were working at Buna.

A. At Buna?

Q. Yes. First of all, what time in the morning would you be awakened?

A. We would be woken up at three o'clock in the morning and lined up and marched up to a train which was in front of the gate of Auschwitz I. We would be counted when we came out from the barrack, then we would be counted when we came out from the gate, I and then we would be counted again when we entered the barracks, and then we waited until the wagons moved to the building site, and the train moved to a station which I remember was called Dwory, and there we were unloaded and marched to a building site which was in the distance of approximately three kilometers.

So this whole procedure of the travel in the train that we were loaded in numbers, a hundred people or so to the wagon, from three o'clock in the morning we would start working approximately to eight o'clock in the morning. {1247|1248}

Q. Now, from three o'clock in the morning until eight o'clock in the morning had you been given anything to eat or drink?

A. Nothing.

Q. Were you given anything before you start work?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. We worked from eight to twelve under a certain order of work, and at twelve o'clock, from twelve o'clock to one, we had a pause, and then we were given a litre of soup for five. This means, the soup for five people was given in one plate for five, and without spoons, and another plate was given for five which contained some sort of a tea, which was the only liquid which we could take – water was not available.

Q. Was there any water available at the construction site that you could drink?

A. There was water available on the construction site, but it was known that the water was infected with diarrhea bacteria, and we were warned by all the prisoners that anybody who will drink from it will die.

Q. Did you see anybody drink from it?

A. Many drank and many died. In other words, those who couldn't overcome the thirst in August and who drank that water was done for.

Q. Was there any security at the Buna works when you were working there?

A. Well, we were constantly being counted, and as we came out of the train we marched to {1248|1249} to the Buna quota with Waffen S.S. guards – they were armed guards – on both sides of the column; and when we reached the building site, then the whole building site was surrounded by those S.S.

So at the building site we were left more to ourselves, more or less, but the building site, however, was divided into small quadrangles which were about ten times ten meters long. And at each quadrangle was standing an S.S. man guard with rifle in the hand, I and we were told that nobody can go outside of his rectangle in which he is supposed to go. This means, anybody who crossed that rectangle, which was clearly marked, was shot.

Q. Did you see anybody cross that rectangle?

A. Well, I saw frequently being shot people crossing that rectangle, because one of the jokes was that the prisoners were guarded by —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I think —

THE WITNESS: By the S.S. guards —

THE COURT: Excuse me.

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, please. Your Honour, this is not someone who so far has been qualified to give hearsay, and I think we are getting into the realm of jokes and stories and statements that otherwise should not be given. I'd like the witness to confine himself just to what he saw and what he knows for himself.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I appreciate {1249|1250} what my friend is saying. I agree with him, although the joke is a physical joke that is visual that he can describe what he saw.

THE COURT: Well, if he can do it in that way, I don't think that Mr. Christie will object to that; but if he does it in another way, he might.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Just describe for us what you saw.

A. The German prisoners who were professional criminals and were marked as such with a green triangle would come to individual prisoners, take off their hat, the prisoner's hat, and threw it over the perimeter, the ten-meter perimeter, telling him, "Run! [for the hat." If the prisoner did not run for the hat, then he would be beaten with wooden sticks for not obeying the order of the Kapo; if he ran for the hat, he would be shot down by the S.S. men.

I am perfectly aware that this is not a joke, but it was considered a joke there, and that's why I use the inappropriate word "joke". I apologize for it. So in this way quite a number of people were killed during a day, also people who claimed that they cannot carry on with their hard work. For instance, we had to carry cement in paper satchels.

Q. Bags of cement.

A. Bags of cement, yes. They are considerably heavy. I do not know exactly what their weight was, but they were standard bags which I see, and one had to carry that bag of cement over a certain distance running. And those who claimed that they cannot {1250|1251} run any more were sort of propelled or encouraged to run by beating with clubs; and those who refused afterward were simply beaten so long until they gave any sign of life. And then, in the evening, we collected numbers very care fully so that the numbers of prisoners who worked there, alive, had to come into the camp. The mortality per day could end up five to ten per cent of the column.

Q. Five to ten per cent of the total?

A. Yes. This means the chances to survive over three weeks on that working place were considered to be slim.

Q. After you have the soup and the tea at lunchtime, do you go back to work in the afternoon?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us – I appreciate you never watched. Can you tell us how long you'd be working in the afternoon, how long the working day would be?

A. Well, at twelve o'clock a siren sounded, and at one o'clock again a siren was sounded. The one marching would start and the other marching would end of the working day. Again at noon another siren sounded, but this I don't know exactly what time, but it was our rule that a prisoner shouldn't be kept outside, even guarded, in dark. So this means that we were supposed to come back into the camp before the sun set.

Q. Now, you said it was about three kilometers from the Buna works to where the train would pick you up.

A. Yes.

Q. And how would you, the people that {1251|1252} were injured or had died during the day, how would they get to the train?

A. Well, the dead and the injured were carried by the prisoners who were not dead. In other words, say we went there fifteen hundred people in the morning, but each of those hundred people had separate [sic] Kapos, and that Kapo had the list of his prisoners, and he wouldn't move out from the building state, building place, until all his prisoners which he had a list of by numbers wouldn't be collected. So this means we were again on a certain place with a certain Kapo, all hundred of us, alive or dead. And then the column was formed and when the column was formed the Kapo picked out those who would carry those who cannot go. So we had some who claimed that they will go if they are supported, and so they were put into the march column, and then there were some who were dead, and then there were some who were dying, or definitely not able to walk even after being encouraged to do so with clubbing, and they were carried by the prisoners in such a way that one prisoner would have his head over the shoulder, and the other prisoner would have his legs over the shoulder. So the two prisoners carried a third one, either a dead one or a dying one.

Q. Something happened, Dr. Vrba, at the end of two months, approximately, at Buna, that got you out of Buna?

A. Yes. I got out from Buna under the following conditions:

The camp Auschwitz I, until that time, consisted of two parts with a wall was decided in the middle, and behind that wall were women. Mostly the women {1252|1253} were from Slovakia. Slovakian and Jewish girls. Some of them I knew, and there was conversation. Now, there broke out a typhus epidemic [epidemic] in that female camp, and also there was a typhus epidemic [epidemic] in the male camp, and there was a danger that by going to Buna – and we had to cross various villages, we will carry the typhus out from the camp. So the workings at Buna was stopped for a few days, and the women from the women camp, female camp, were taken away. As far as I know, they were taken to —

Q. No, don't tell us – only tell us what you saw with your own eyes.

A. They were taken away.

Q. All right.

A. After they were taken away, the barracks were disinfected. After the barracks were disinfected, all of us who were men, in camp number one, had to dress out naked, and we were naked for approximately one or two days during which we were given showers and we were shaven all over the body – this means hair and body hair, pubic hair, and so on. And then a hole was made I through this wall of the ex-female camp, and we were let in one by one into this new camp, naked and disinfected.

However, before this happened we had to go through a commission, and this was a medical commission where they should have proven that we are healthy. The proof consisted of the following test:

There was a doctor and an S.S. man with a lamp, because it was going on day and night. So by the time I was proven to be I was supposed to be medically examined. I was put in front of this reflector and I was ordered to run about twenty yards one way and {1253|1254} back. Now, those who wobbled during those twenty yards, which is a characteristic sign of typhus —

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. I am aware of this particular narrative and I am aware that at this juncture certain statements, in my understanding, will embark into the realm of hearsay, and if my friend wishes, I can speak about it in the absence of the jury, but I would ask my friend to direct the witness in that regard.

THE COURT: Do you know what is coming, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. I must say I am not sure what Mr. Christie is concerned about. Perhaps Mr. Christie can tell me whether this warning will be satisfactory.

Q. Just don't tell us what other people said.

A. No. I —

THE COURT: Just listen.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Just describe what you saw.

A. I described exactly what I saw.

Q. Not what you heard, but what you saw.

A. Yes. Until now I described only what I saw.

Q. Okay.

A. I was ...

THE COURT: You were running back and forth, did you say, for how long?

THE WITNESS: Just twenty yards forth {1254|1255} and twenty yards back.

THE COURT: How many times?

THE WITNESS: Once.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: And on judging how I was running, the commission decided.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Did they put you in a group?

A. They put me in a group which did not run too well.

Q. All right.

A. Because I was hurting by my shoes; I had trouble with my feet.

Q. Were you able to change groups?

A. Well, it was dark, and a Polish Kapo came to me, who knew me, and he said to me —

Q. Don't tell us what he said, but he said something to you?

A. He said to me —

THE COURT: No, you can't say what he said. Sorry, Dr. Vrba. Don't tell us what he said, but he said something to you.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And were you able to move your position?

A. Yes. He pretended that he is beating me and put me in the position of those he thought to be perfectly healthy.

Q. All right. Did you see what happened to those who wobbled during their run?

A. We were standing until cars came. {1255|1256} This means lorries. And then people were ordered to enter the lorries and the lorries left the camp.

Q. Did you see any of them again?

A. Never.

Q. Did you know anybody in that group?

A. Several.

Q. Now, you were in the so-called healthy group.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you go back to work at Buna?

A. No. Next morning, after the so-called unhealthy were eliminated from the camp, we were taken to a hole between the male and the female camp in the wall, a hole in the wall, and there were again two men who were disinfected us from top to bottom with a rag in lysol, and [ ] we entered, then, naked, this disinfected camp of the women and I stayed there, in that camp, in Block IV, in a different attachment of group, until 15 January, 1943.

Q. All right. Now, many of these words are new to us, so I am going to ask you to describe some words as we go along. What is a "block"?

A. "Block" means a house in Auschwitz I. It was called a block.

Q. How many people would be living in a block?

A. There would be a variation, from five hundred to twelve hundred.

Q. How many were in your block, Block IV? {1256|1257}

A. In Block IV, the situation I cannot exactly say, because I was put into the Block IV of the souterrain of Block IV.

Q. Is that underground?

A. Underground, yes. What is it called? A cellar. Then there was the first floor, the ground floor, and then there was an upper floor. And we were put into the ground floor under a new Kommando which was called Kanada.

Q. Is that Kanada with a "K"?

A. "K", that's right. As it is spelled in Europe.

Q. And was there a German word for that Kommando as well?

A. There was a German word which was called Aufra[ä]umungskommando, which means clearing command, or clearing-up command. And we were several hundred in that cell area. It was forbidden for me to go to the first floor, ground floor, or to the second floor. So I cannot tell you how many were on the upper floors; but in the down floor I estimate that there might have been, at that moment, three hundred or more people in Block IV, Auschwitz I.

Q. Can you tell us in general what the word "Kommando" means?

A. Whenever the Nazis or the ruling order of the S.S. created a particular group, a task group, that group was called a Kommando. This meant a working group.

Q. A working group.

A. Yes. It was also sometimes they {1257|1258} called Arbeit[s]-kommando.

A. Yes.

A. Work kommando. And each Kommando has a special title, according to the work they were doing.

Q. All right. I am not going to use the German word. I will use the more familiar word, Kanada.

A. Kanada, it was known in the camp, yes. The Kanadakommando.

Q. Can you tell us what you did with the Kanadakommando?

A. I think I should show it, perhaps on a ...

Q. All right. Just a minute.

A. But I can describe it without.

Q. Right.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, can I speak to you in the absence of the jury for just a moment, please?

THE COURT: Excuse us just a moment, members of the jury, please.

— The jury retires. 3:10 p.m.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. Dr. Vrba has prepared,

Your Honour, a number of transparencies that would be suitable for an overhead projector and screen which I have in my office and can have in the courtroom very quickly. The transparencies, Your Honour, are of maps of the surrounding area, and more {1258|1259} immediate maps of the particular camps to be able to show – the purpose of them is to be able to show his movements within the camp and his opportunity to observe various things within the camp.

He has brought a grease pencil, and the transparencies, Your Honour, would be available to be made as exhibits, as marked by Dr. Vrba. At this point there are no additional markings on them. They are simply maps, outlines.

THE COURT: What are transparencies?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Do you have them here, Doctor?

THE COURT: And has Mr. Christie seen them?

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, he has not, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: I am sure if I just glanced at them – and I am quite delighted my friend is doing this because it will help the jury to understand ...

THE COURT: Thank you. Do you have some more?

THE WITNESS: Yes, please.

THE COURT: We have all that are going to be relevant here, so that we don't wast[e] time?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think those are the ones that are relevant to the discussion.

THE WITNESS: May I have a look if gave you the relevant ones? Those are relevant. The other ones I would like to see. These are relevant.

MR. CHRISTIE: I was prepared to introduce some of these very same documents, or attempt {1259|1260} to, myself. So I don't object to any of these.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, just so that we are clear, Dr. Vrba, so His Honour knows, Mr. Christie knows, there are two transparencies that are framed in white.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what the source of those two transparencies are? Who drew those?

A. I drew those in June – in April 25th, 1944, in Slovakia, after I escaped from Auschwitz.

Q. All right.

A. And I received the copies from the Executive Office of the President of the United States of America, dated November '44, and those are pages number 40 —

Q. My question, really, Dr. Vrba, is whether you recognize those, and you say yes, you did those yourself.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, the other documents, or maps – and there are five of them ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... can you tell us the source of those?

A. Those are the maps which have been published during the trial at which I was a witness. This was in 1964 in Frankfurt where war criminals from Auschwitz were tried, and I have been there as a witness, and that court used maps in order to illustrate what the witnesses are saying so that the jury could follow photographically the movements. {1260|1261}

Q. All right. So these are not maps prepared by you, but you have them out of a book, do you?

A. Yes, I have them out of the book which is called – two books. One book is "Auschwitz Process," they are taken from this book. And the rest of them is taken from a recent publication which is published by Professor Martin Gilbert, and it is called "Auschwitz and the Allies," a book which appeared in 1981 and brought additional maps, and I made copies because they would enable me easier to describe my movements within the complex of the camp.

Q. These are not on the transparencies here yet.

A. I think they are, some of them.

Q. These are the ones you asked me to make the transparencies —

A. No. The ones I asked you to make the transparencies are those two.

Q. The ones from Dr. Gilbert are which, can you clarify? Sorry, Your Honour. Just so we I are clear as to the source of the material.

A. Plans from Auschwitz, page 129. This is from the court in Auschwitz, this map.

Q. All right. And that is a map called, "Plane von Auschwitz".

THE COURT: As long as that is identified by you for the moment, Mr. Griffiths.

Gentlemen, can I do this? I am satisfied on what I've heard from counsel for the accused as well as from this witness that there doesn't appear, at this moment, to be any objection to this witness {1261|1262} referring to these transparencies, some of which he has sworn he created himself, others created for him, and all of them have been seen by Mr. Christie. I am not sure that Mr. Christie has examined them all at any depth at the moment, he never having seen them before. I am thinking of adjourning now for ten minutes or so. The jury can drink some coffee, Mr. Griffiths and Mr. Christie can examine these transparencies, and I think we are far enough down the line, gentlemen, that I could reasonably anticipate that there will be a consent to this witness referring to these things as he testifies.

Does that sound reasonable to you, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. Indeed.

THE COURT: Does that sound reasonable to you?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. Just one other matter that I would like to get assistance from Your Honour, so I don't waste any court's time, is that if we did have some consent, I would like to have everything set up for when the jury comes back in, and I guess the question would be, physically, the best way to do that, I was going to suggest that, perhaps, I set the screen up down towards where the television is, and the projector would be here or in the middle of the courtroom.

THE COURT: When you say "here", you are talking about ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Crown counsel table, which would mean Dr. Vrba would be down near the projector while he is giving his testimony concerning the maps, Your Honour. {1262|1263}

THE COURT: Does he mark on the transparency itself which will be on the projector projecting on the screen?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes. He marks on the transparency, and it shows on the screen.

THE WITNESS: I can mark on a transparency which is empty over that transparency.

THE COURT: That is something that I think can be discussed with counsel, Dr. Vrba.

The only other problem I have, gentlemen, is this. The accused has to see precisely what is going on, Mr. Christie has to see what is going on, and of no little importance is that the jury must see the same thing. You might want to consider putting the projector on counsel table behind you so that the line of vision of all the jurors —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Projected up into the corner, Your Honour, perhaps.

THE COURT: That is something you and Mr. Christie can work out. As long as the jury has the best view along with the accused, I am content, as long as counsel are.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think we are ad idem, Your Honour, Mr. Christie and I, that there was one transparency that Mr. Christie was concerned about, and I agree with him. It was something showing things after Dr. Vrba {1263|1264} had left Auschwitz, so we are not including that in the group that Dr. Vrba will be referring to.

THE COURT: Is that correct, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't quite hear my friend.

THE COURT: He said there is one transparency that is not going to be used that you have seen and that will not be used.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. I have suggested to my friend that I have twelve copies of a photocopy of the gentleman's map drawn in 1944 which he referred to, and I also have photocopies, twelve, available for the jury so they might follow along, of the schematic plan of Auschwitz II, or Birkenau, which I had intended to tender and I have offered to provide now, if it meets with the approval of both the witness and the Crown, so that the jury will have something in their hands to follow along with, even afterwards. I think it probably will help them, and that is why I am offering it.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I am obliged to Mr. Christie for his suggestion, Your Honour. I think the reason why I have selected to do it this way is that Dr. Vrba and I were not having a huddled conversation at the witness box, and we all know what we are talking about and where it is, and I prefer to do that. With rare exceptions I don't like to put documents directly in the hands of the jury. I think it is distracting for them from the evidence.

THE COURT: I think at the appropriate [sic] {1264|1265} time Mr. Christie, if you wish, you can ask that they be distributed to the jury, especially when cross-examination time comes around.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 3:45 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. In the absence of the jury, Your Honour, I have set up an overhead projector and a screen, and Dr. Vrba has some transparencies that he's made on some various maps of Auschwitz I and II and the surrounding area and will be using the screen and the maps to help describe his evidence in a loud, clear voice next to the projector.

THE COURT: Yes, he may do that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, when you are looking at the screen that appears before you, if any of your number have difficulty seeing what's on the screen, please don't hesitate to hold up your hand and we will make sure that you can see it. I am just not sure how the logistics of all this will work until we try it.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Dr. Vrba, the question that I asked you, I believe, immediately prior to the break —

THE COURT: Just hold it, Mr. {1265|1266} Griffiths. Dr. Vrba, would you please stand on this side, towards our Clerk, with your back to me and facing the accused and the jury so that everybody can hear. How is that? Is that all right with you?

THE WITNESS: It is perfectly fine.

THE COURT: Can the jury see that? Go ahead.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Vrba, I believe that the question that I asked you was what it was that you were working on in the Kanadakommand[o], what duties that entailed. You are living, you told us, in Auschwitz I from June 30, 1942, to January 15, 1943. Do you have a map or an overall plan there that would show both Auschwitz I and Auschwitz II, which we've been calling Birkenau?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. All right. Would you put that on the screen, then, please?

A. This is the map as I could reconstruct it from memory roughly after my escape. There is another map which is more exact which was produced by the Court in Frankfurt and copied from books.

Q. And you have some copies of other maps here, do you?

A. Right.

Q. And first of all, can you tell us which way is north and which way is south on your map?

A. On my map south happens to be, on this projection, south happens to be here. North is here. East is here and west is here. In other words, it was in {1266|1267} my mind, due to some error in my education at the age of ten, I had a sort of —

Q. So where do you always put "south" on your maps?

A. Well, if I draw it by heart, say if I see a place, then I would draw it as I draw it now.

Q. At the bottom.

A. No. At the top here.

Q. The writing, Dr. Vrba, just so I am clear, the writing is not upside down, so if you usually put "south" at the top, wouldn't that be the reverse?

A. Yes. I am afraid I have made you an error because of how this is positioned.

Q. It is different from what shows on the screen.

A. Yes.

Q. "South" is at the top, "North" is at the bottom.

A. South is at the top, right. South is this way.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm sorry for this because this is I a mirror. I wasn't aware of it. If I read it this way, then "south" is here, and "east" is here, and "north" is here.

Q. Thank you, Doctor.

A. Sorry for this.

Q. All right. Now, as we are looking at the map now, the map you drew, which is the Auschwitz I and which is the Auschwitz II camp?

A. At the time, when I was in Auschwitz {1267|1268} from June 30 to January 15, the camp, Auschwitz I, is this. This is the so-called, this is where we were overnight. If you wish, I can show you this small piece magnified.

Q. Okay. We will get to the details as we go on, Dr. Vrba. This is where the Auschwitz I camp is.

A. The Auschwitz I camp is, therefore, here.

Q. There's I. Now, where's Birkenau on your map?

A. Birkenau on my map is here. This whole complex. But this complex I did not see in 1942. I saw that complex for the first time only on one visit in 1942 December, and lived in this complex from 15 January 1943 until the escape on 7 April, 1944.

Q. All right. How far apart is Auschwitz I from Auschwitz II?

A. It would be roughly the walk from here.

Q. From the Auschwitz I camp —

A. From the Auschwitz I camp to here where there was a gate and a footpath, dirt road. I would I judge that it might have been three to four kilometers. I didn't measure it with a yardstick, but I would think that it would be a one-hour march.

Q. Now, while you were working in Auschwitz I, or living in Auschwitz I, you were working in the Kanadakommando.

A. Right.

Q. And where would you go to work for, the Kanadakommando? {1268|1269}

A. The Kanadakommando consisting of the day shift and of the night shift, I was given the night shift but I worked also on day shifts because sometimes the shifts overlap.

Q. Well, would there be different jobs according to day or night?

A. They have completely different jobs according to day or night.

Q. Can you tell us, first of all, about the night job?

A. Yes. For the night job, at any time of the night we would be woken up in our barrack, which was Barrack No. 4, which was approximately a year, and we would be told to go to work, Rollkommando, which meant the rolling group, and guards would come because it was night and we had to march out from this Auschwitz I, which was guarded by electric fences and watchtowers with machine guns, we would be marched out from here in a terraine [sic] which, by the night, was not guarded. That crosses show the guard position approximately by daytime only. By nighttime, the prisoners were inside this compound, and the S.S. guards were not around. By daytime the prisoners worked within this area, and therefore by daytime there were no guards around the electric fences, but there were guards standing around the whole camp. So that prisoners could move around with a relative freedom within this perimeter.

Q. Now, you have labelled on the document, on the map, it says, "Outer chain of sentry posts".

A. Yes {1269|1270}

Q. And were there, in fact, sentry posts?

A. By daytime there were sentry posts, because by daytime many of those — here, in Auschwitz, there were many Blocks, many houses. Aufra[ä]umung[s]kommando was in Block IV, but there were many others who worked in these factories — one Block to Krupp, one Block to Siemens, and one was called DAW, which means Deutsche Ausrüstungswerke, which means German armament factories. Consequently, by daytime, when they were taken to the three factories, they were not guarded within those factories because by daytime there was an outer guard around the whole perimeter, and there was absolutely within the guard posts, between the towers, it was absolutely sort of flat terrain, so that even a mouse would have tried by daytime to cross this would be caught up in a crossfire, machine guns.

Q. Were there any fences between that outer chain of sentry posts?

A. No. There were no sentries here on this outer post. There were just towers and a lot of inscriptions in considerable vicinity around. It was written —

Q. If you could tell us what the English was —

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it would be hearsay, anyway, if it wasn't within the area where the witness was.

Q. Did you see the posts?

A. Yes, I have, because I was on one occasion taken outside so that I could see it, and I saw the post during my escape. So that the post we are saying, {1270|1271} anybody approaches it by chance, without authorization, will be shot without warning. So by daytime the sentry chain was sort of considered to be impenetrable from the inside or from outside.

Q. Now, during the nighttime you said your rolling commando, or Kanadakommando, would be ordered up sometimes at night; and where would you go and what would you do?

A. We were taken first to the gate, and they were waiting for us, a group of S.S., who took us to the ramp. This means we were marched to this place.

Q. All right. And can you tell us what that is on your map?

A. This means that this was a place which was neither in Auschwitz I nor in Birkenau, but there was a neutral corridor which, de facto, didn't belong to anybody from the camp, because here is a main line from Vienna to Krakow.

Q. What kind of line?

A. Railway line. And here has been made a ramp. This means a blind detachment. And we worked in the night on this ramp, and I would now need to paint details in how it was organized this particular ramp.

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. Now, I shall concentrate only on this piece.

THE COURT: The first transparency will be the next exhibit. {1271|1272}

— EXHIBIT NO. 11: Transparency – Approximate Situation Sketch of Auschwitz and Birkenau Camp Districts.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And that is entitled, "Approximate Situation Sketch of Auschwitz and Birkenau". Now, you've put a clear transparency, have you, on the screen?

A. This is the main railway line. This is south again. This is direction Vienna. This is north. From this railway line, approximately here was Auschwitz railway station, which I could see. From this, as a blind railway line, which was held up here and which was approximately five hundred yards long, meters long — I didn't measure it with a yardstick, but roughly fifty cattle trucks could be brought in with a locomotive, and there was space enough for fifty cattle trucks, so I would say the cattle truck is ten meters.

Q. Well, space enough for fifty cattle cars.

A. Yes. And a locomotive. In front of this railway line there was a wooden ramp. The wood ramp would be, therefore, long, five hundred to seven hundred and fifty meters, roughly, I would guess, half a mile, and was wide approximately three to four meters like, say, two tables put together in the width. And in front of this ramp — this is a ramp, wooden ramp — here was a road which ended nowhere and which can be approximately ten meters wide.

Now, our work, then, consisted in the following order whenever we were taken there. Our work command, from 20 August to 7 April, which makes roughly {1272|1273} eight months, which makes roughly two hundred and forty days, roughly. And I was taken out there for this particular work not every day but sometimes three times a day and night. Therefore, the number of times when I have done such work I would say is certainly smaller than three hundred times, but well over a hundred times of this particular type of job. May I continue?

Q. Please go ahead.

A. We were brought and marched by our guards into this road, and there we had to line in rows of five, all of us, and we could dependant on the situation, anything from a hundred to three hundred prisoners, standing there in hundreds, with the guards standing around us holding guns in their hands, rifles.

We had to stand so long until came a new detachment of guards from a different place, and they marched in from here and made a chain of guards which I will mark in blue so that it is, perhaps, visible, or black. And this I chain looked like this.

Q. You are making circles on your sketch.

A. So this means that they were standing — this is a queue of chains, because we are in a neutral territory, neither in Auschwitz I nor in Auschwitz II, but in between, in that corridor, so that when they made this chain in this way they had enclosed the ramp. They enclosed this ramp and they enclosed their prisoners, but traffic between Vienna and Krakow could freely move by. And I have seen the train with the dining room quite frequently in the distance of about twenty yards from which I stood, because the distance from this ramp to {1273|1274} this line was quite small, maximum twenty meters.

However, because it was now considered that we are enclosed and the whole place was lit with street lamps so that it was light in daytime, these guards were now recalled.

Q. That's the guards around your group from your Kommando?

A. That's right, because they were absolutely unnecessary because there was a new chain of guards. When that happened there came, on foot, a group from here. Here is the road, a path, a footpath to the S.S. Kasernes.

Q. What is Kaserne?

A. Barracks. S.S. Barracks. And I can show on the previous map of various places, and there first marched a group of people who were dressed as S.S. uniforms as non-commissioned officers. This means silver buttons. And when they were there, then came, after them, a smaller group of individuals who were dressed as S.S. officers — gold here, gold here —

Q. On the shoulders and on the chest?

A. Yes. Everything gold. Gold ring, everything. They have white gloves. No clubs or anything in their hands. Whereas a non-commissioned officer came in the hands with sticks but not clubs, wooden bamboo walking sticks.

When everything was thus in place the signal was given and a train containing a number of wagons was brought to this ramp. This train came under guards, and the guards came down from the train and the commander of the guards went to the commander of the new guards {1274|1275} which was standing here and give him some papers and keys — I understand papers and keys. After the papers and keys were exchanged, the guard which brought in the train was marched off because they didn't have anything there to do, and the keys were distributed amongst the S.S. non-commissioned officers, Waffen S.S., non-commissioned officers, who took a position in front of each wagon, and those wagons were full of people. These were cattle trucks in those cases, but not always. There was a certain percentage where the people were brought in in a normal third-class train wagons. This was a minority of cases, say one out of twenty trains, one out of ten. Ninety percent came in cattle trucks.

Now, because the cattle trucks were more usual procedure, what happened was that while we were still standing here, you are not allowed to move at all, but stand here under the supervision of the Kapos. The S.S. opened the locks with which the trains were locked, and suddenly all the wagons were opened and we could see the mass of people inside.

Now, the trains were overcrowded with people. I mean, I would judge that there was a variation. There could have been sixty, there could have been eighty, and there could have been hundred people at various occasions per train.

THE COURT: Per ...

THE WITNESS: Per truck, per cattle truck. At that moment the S.S. started to shout at those people inside who, for a longtime, obviously, didn't see the doors open, "Alles raus. Alles raus." – "Everybody out. Everybody out." "Alles ..." – "Leave everything {1275|1276} stand". I mean, "no luggage take with you". That was the first command they got.

Now, the people were sort of, in general, stunned by the light and by the change, and in order that this whole thing to going, they started now with those walking sticks hit into the first ones when were the open truck and trying to take them out. "Raus. Raus", was the command.

Now, some of them, as they tried to get out, they tried to grab some of their luggage. Now, if it was a handbag, you know, from the size of a ladies' handbag, they let it go by, but if it was a luggage, then they simply hit the person who picked up the luggage with the stick over the hand, broken or not broken, so that the luggage left and the rest very fast understood that the luggage is not to be taken out from that wagon.

The people, then, were lined up on this ramp, and were told to move down from this ramp to this road and were told to separate among men and women, and the order was given that women and children of no matter what sex should go together with the women. So we had two rows, very fast formed up – a row of women and children, and a row of men. And it was said all children under sixteen should join either the mother or with whomever they came.

Now came a commission when they were lined up of those people, of those individuals who were dressed up as S.S. officers with the gold and the white gloves, and the men had to move across with them, in front of them, and there was a doctor who I knew quite well whose name was Dr. Mengele, but often other people not with {1276|1277} officer rank but so-called Sanität[er]... – corporal of the sanitation service, he had black insignia on his uniform as belonging to the health service, and they would sort the men as they passed by, either by flick of the finger to go and join the women and the children, or to go to the other side. This was a rather rapid process and often, because people were speaking various languages, the S.S. Doctor or the S.S. sanitary would take the stick and turn the stick so that the round part would stick out, and he would sort out those people by putting the stick against the neck and shoving him left or shoving him right, because there were often cases when there were sons and fathers who didn't want to separate, and they started to plead that they would like to go to work to the same place. So he didn't want very long discussion, often in a foreign language – they were sometimes Greek, sometimes Dutch so he invented a fast sort of communicating process by giving this stick, the walking stick on the other hand, put, say, the father this way, and gave him a smack on the back, put the son this way, gave him a smack on the back and shows them where to go, and if necessary, a second or third smack follows so that they understood that they have to part. And this process would take not long, perhaps two hours, and soon we will have on this ramp two columns – one column of men which would be approximately – with great variation – when the transport contained, say, two thousand people, you could expect anything between five to twenty-five percent of men being chosen for this walk, but sometimes none, depend on the situation of the camp. There was a strong variation from five to twenty-five percent. {1277|1278}

Similarly a row of women, fifty or hundred good[-]looking, young women in the age usually of sixteen to thirty, was set up, and then we had a long column which consisted of old people, of grandmothers, grandfathers, women who had children on hands, either teenagers, twelve or thirteen, or babies, and all those who sort of, during this, didn't show a staid gait or they didn't look healthy. So this was approximately seventy-five to ninety-five percent of the people who arrive.

While this was going on, we were still standing separately and under orders that if any of us exchanges one simple word with a newcomer, with that civilian, will be shot.

Q. Did you ever see that happen?

A. Oh, yes. Some try to speak, and some women – there were scenes like, for example, some women when they saw the officers, they started to sort of thinking that officers are guarantee for their safety because there is a gentleman. So one woman walked up, in my presence, well-dressed woman with two small children, to the officer and she said – we were dressed in prisoners' garb, and she said to him, "One of the gangsters has told me that I and my children will be gassed."

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, excuse me. You know, I realize the gentleman wants to give us a full explanation and all, but it's obvious that we aren't in a position to hear this conversation, and I think it's clear it's hearsay.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, {1278|1279} I am not really introducing it for the truth of what was said, but for the fact that what happens when somebody says anything, not for the truth of what is said.

THE WITNESS: I overheard the conversation.

THE COURT: Yes, I know that, Doctor; I think that what you should do is ask the witness what, if anything, he saw as a result of any conversation he overheard.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I will phrase it in that way.

Q. Dr. Vrba, what, if anything, did you see happen as a result of the conversation you may have overheard between this woman and the S.S. officer?

A. The S.S. officer mollified her. He says, "Madam" –

Q. Don't tell us what he said. Just what you saw happen.

A. Yes. The woman took the S.S. officer to the prisoner and showed which said it.

Q. And what happened to that man?

A. The officer took out the notebook and wrote out the name of the prisoner and went away. When everything was finished and all those people were gone, the officer would come and read the number of that prisoner. The prisoner would come out. The prisoner was taken to the wagons and shot, and we carried the dead body home. Now, may I continue to the general process?

Q. Please.

A. The general process now consisted that from somewhere trucks were stationed – approximately {1279|1280} ten trucks came here in front of this road which leads nowhere.

Q. Excuse me just a moment, Doctor. May I ask you if you can use that map to explain?

THE COURT: The map has already been referred to. It will be Exhibit No. 12.

— EXHIBIT NO. 12: Transparency describing ramp.

MR. GRIFFITHS: . Thank you, Your Honour.

A. Now, from somewhere, I don't know from where, exactly, the station, ten trucks came. The trucks were open trucks, lorries, which were equipped like when one sends the transport, the contents of the lorry by a press of the button from inside would lift.

Q. Like a dump truck?

A. Dump truck. Now, that people in this group –

Q. You are indicating the large group of women and children.

A. Yes. Were asked to enter the dump truck. This means there were staircases put to the dump truck and they were counted for hundred. Until hundred were not on the dump truck they were being encouraged to more and more. In other words, the dump truck was loaded to absolute explosion with people. And once the dump truck was loaded it immediately departed to this road.

Now I need the second map, the first which I have shown. Once they were loaded on those trucks {1280|1281} not on all trucks, when a truck was loaded it immediately departed in the direction of Birkenau taking the one and only road which at that time existed with the camp of Auschwitz and the camp of Birkenau. The cars, obviously, here in Birkenau, disgorged the content of humans from these trucks because they were very fast coming back. So that for about two hours there was a brisk traffic between the ramp and this complex, which was complex Birkenau, and fast, one truck after the other, took those people away until this column of those old and children and so on completely disappeared. And the old trucks came back. During all this time we were still motionlessly standing on a road somewhere so that we don't interfere with this process.

Now, that's men, and that's women who were so young and good-looking. There came again two groups of S.S. and one group of S.S. marched the men either in the Auschwitz I for so-called reception as new prisoners, and then other group transported fifty or a hundred women into the women's camp, as far as I knew.

Q. They marched them away. Where was the women's camp at that time?

A. At that time all men were marched from this ramp either in the direction of this camp —

Q. Auschwitz I.

A. Yes. Or in the direction of this camp.

Q. Birkenau.

A. Yes. This means we knew that there is a female camp, but there is also a male camp. So the women were always marched this direction. {1281|1282}

Q. To Birkenau.

A. To Birkenau. Whereas the men were sometimes marched to Birkenau and sometimes to Auschwitz I.

Q. Were the ones that you've identified as a smaller group, the five to twenty-five percent, were they ever put on the trucks?

A. No. They had to march, without luggage. They were just marched off. They surrounded them. They were usually marched off before this loading of the old people on the trucks started for certain reasons. It was simply said, "We are now going to work", and guard groups came, surrounded them, because it was night, and in the night they have been taken out from this circle and either marched to Auschwitz I or marched this way to Auschwitz II. And when they were marched off, then this large group started to be loaded on these trucks.

Q. Now, what happened to all their luggage?

A. Now came our job. Now there were no people any more except a small amount of people which either were dead and were still in the wagons — in other words, the S.S. entered the wagons, not too far in because the wagons were in rather a disgusting shape. They were gathered urine, excrement and blood. And the people were usually coming lying on straw. So the S.S., at least nearby, used their sticks and started, "Schweines aus [Schweine, raus]", which means, "Swine, out". Now, if a person went out, it went out and left lying on the ramp.

Q. You are indicating the wooden ramp? {1282|1283}

A. On the wooden ramp. Or if he didn't, in spite of the strong urging of the S.S. by beating wherever it fall — I mean, sometimes on the head sometimes elsewhere, there was a lot of crying going on during this process — but then the S.S. said, "Fine. That's the end of it." And now our job came.

First we had to empty all luggage, all dead bodies, and all living who cannot move out from the wagons. This means from here we were driven along the wagons, and all the work had to be done running. Anybody who was found loitering around or something like that was immediately without discussion clubbed.

Now, we had to enter the wagons, and the first thing is that we had to throw out the luggage as far as we could from the wagon. Simultaneously, we threw out all people from the wagons. We dragged them out, dead or alive, and put them on this ramp together with the luggage. Now came the trucks back from Birkenau.

Q. The dump trucks?

A. The dump trucks, yes. As they were coming back from Birkenau, we were picking up the luggage from this ramp. This ramp was now full of luggage, all sorts of luggage, from two, three thousand people — a lot of luggage — and each of us was supposed to pick up luggage and on the double run to the truck which was here in front. We were called the Rollwagenkommando. And this Rollwagen was basically something in hand-driven truck on rubber wheels so that we didn't actually have to carry always the luggage from the distant points to the trucks, but we came with this Rollwagen, forward drive, dragging it, then jump on the ramp, then jump on the {1283|1284} Rollwagen, then they pass through the luggages [sic] on the Rollwagen, and then we jump down from the Rollwagen and surrounded the Rollwagen and run with the Rollwagen and the luggage to the front of the ramps where the trucks are, and the trucks had, again, those stairs through which the people went before. On the stairs were strong guards, and from the Rollwagen we throw the luggage to them and they were throwing it in the truck, and when the truck was filled, the next truck was filled, until not one single luggage was remained.

Q. What about the people? What about the dead and the dying, the injured?

A. Meanwhile the dead, the dying and the injured were lying here around, and it was forbidden to take any notice of them. I mean, anybody who would stop with them before the luggage was away would be punished appropriately.

Now, when all the luggage was away, we had on the ramp a collection of people which could be twenty percent of the transport, sometimes five percent, but sometimes thirty percent of dead or invalids dying. So we were now ordered — a number of those dump trucks I came and we were ordered to take them from that ramp, along this road, [road] to that dump trucks.

THE COURT: To the ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Dump trucks.

THE COURT: To the trucks.

THE WITNESS: To the lorries, and staircases were put in front of the lorries, but we were not allowed, as is normal, when you carry a dead body or a sick person, that four men holding or something like {1284|1285} that. It was usually one man who had to do it. This means the man had to grab the dead or dying by the hand and run with him on this road to this truck, and if the speed was not sufficient, there were a number of S.S. men with those clubs to give us a little bit more enthusiasm, as they called it, into this work.

When we came to these trucks, there were again men on top of the staircase, and dead or dying, or invalids who were neither dead nor dying but invalidated, paraplegics, broken legs and so on, were carried by us up the staircase, taken by two men on top of this staircase, and thrown into the lorries. So the lorries was taking a mixture of dead, dying and invalids. And this lorry, the people were not standing but they were usually lying because the number of dead was too big, and as they lied, so they lied. And when that lorry was approximately this way covered with bodies —

Q. You are indicating a mound in the lorry?

A. Then the lorry went the same way as the previous way — that is, direction Birkenau. The lorry went to Birkenau. After the last body, dead or alive, has been eliminated, we had to eliminate the last luggage and the cars, the dump trucks with the luggage, they didn't go to Birkenau where most of the people went, but they went to Auschwitz I, and here, next to the Deutsche Ausrüstung[s]werke.

Q. Next to the iron works.

A. Next to the Deutsche Ausrüstung[s]werke there was a yard, and this yard was called Kanada, and this yard had here a railway line, because the Deutsche {1285|1286} Ausrüstung[s]werke, Krupp and Siemens used workers to get out their products. So this railway line went in in front of this Kanadakommando. Here is the Kommando. So all the cars came with the property to Kanada, and there the trucks were lifted and the property was shifted down.

Q. I am going to stop you there, if I may.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I see that it is twenty to five. Is this a convenient time?

THE COURT: Members of the jury, would you please retire now for the evening? We will start again at ten o'clock tomorrow morning. Please keep an open mind. Don't permit anyone to discuss this case with you, nor should you discuss it with anyone else.

Have a good evening. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 4:50 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 22, 1985.

JANUARY 22, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I'd like to speak to you in the absence of the jury.

THE COURT: Certainly. {1286|1287}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. The defence has had, since the 8th of January, a witness by the name of Udo Wallendy [Walendy], a publisher from West Germany, waiting in Toronto. He has to leave on the 28th of January, and last night my friend gave me a piece of paper advising me he proposes calling three new witnesses.

Every witness that I am aware of, including the present one, has been added since the preliminary hearing. The obvious effect is that the Crown's case is made considerably longer than anticipated, and certainly far more unpredictable than was estimated from the preliminary hearing. This includes in respect to Dr. Hilberg, the fact that Dr. Fried, who had previously testified on the tribunal proceedings, had amal-ga[ma]ted into his evidence Dr. Fried's evidence as an expert; so that complicates matters further.

Dr. Vrba is a totally new and unknown witness to us. We have a summary of his background, but we are told three new witnesses are to be called. They keep changing from time to time, which throws us into a state of somewhat confusion.

However, I suggest that this has resulted in a very, very great problem for the defence in {1287|1288} that we have witnesses waiting here from West Germany and other places that we had anticipated by the end of the month could be under way.

I'd like to suggest two possibilities, if I may, to enable us to provide our defence in addition to the Crown to complete its case: One possibility, which might be somewhat unusual, would be the position of a defence witness in the middle of the Crown's case – that would be quite undesirable, probably objectionable to the Crown; the other possibility which I suggest might be more acceptable to the Crown, and which I might suggest is that a video tape deposition be taken, under oath, with the opportunity to my friend to cross-examine at will, and as far as he likes, the witness in question. That could be done in the evening at my friend's convenience. I can provide the equipment and the personnel to do the video tape deposition; then the witness can be cross-examined by my friend and he can go on his way, at which time the defence, at such time as the defence is called, we can then introduce that, having given my friend the opportunity to cross-examine. I think that would be preferable [sic] to not having a witness.

The witness is Udo Wallendy [Walendy], who is {1288|1289} mentioned in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die", as the author of another book. The book is in evidence. I filed it in my cross-examination earlier. So it is a relevant witness. He is a publisher who has published extensively in the field and done research in the National Archives, I think, both in the United States and in West Germany. So in regard to him I would be seeking to qualify him as an expert in the field in which he has researched, and also to give firsthand evidence on the subject matter which is referred to in the book, "Did Six Million Really Die?". So he becomes both an expert witness and a witness on matters of fact referred to in the book. If it were not that he was, to that extent, relevant, I wouldn't be interposing this problem, because I certainly don't wish to create unnecessary delays, but I cannot see how, with the situation being as it is – he has waited twenty days or will be here twenty days and still we are told three new witnesses and new witnesses every day – it throws the defence into a position where we are unable to keep these people waiting any longer.

I wonder, then, if Your Honour could direct, in your discretion, that that second suggestion, or if more convenient the first, be adopted to enable our {1289|1290} side of the case to be presented. I think that the variations on the matter as presented from the preliminary to the present stage are approaching that level of alteration of the case where I will be raising the suggestion that an oblique motive exists to the constant rearrangement of the evidence of the Crown, the inclusion of new witnesses, and the disappearance of old witnesses whose evidence is consistent with the theory of the defence, namely, the witness, Sabina

Citron, the complainant in the whole matter in the first place. Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I assure my friend there is no oblique motive in not calling Mrs. Citron or in the fact that there are new witnesses that are being added to the Crown's case. I explained to my friend what Mrs. Citron – that there was an illness in the family, and that's why I was not calling her, and that remains my position, Your Honour. She is available if my friend wishes to call her. I have not been adding new witnesses every day, as my friend has indicated, although I did give him three new witness statements yesterday of people that I interviewed and met for the first time on Sunday. {1290|1291}

I don't need to tell Your Honour, indeed I don't need to tell Mr. Christie that this case has received wide publicity, not just within our community in Toronto, but across the country and by telephone, Your Honour, and I know the switchboards from a number of other organizations hasn't stopped ringing since the 7th of January. These are witnesses that were not known to me before, have become known to me, the nature of their evidence is such that it is germane [germane] to issues that my friend is raising, and I felt it appropriate that the jury hear that evidence. And accordingly, I provided my friend with the witness statement from those witnesses.

Dr. Vrba, I advised my friend some weeks ago that Dr. Vrba will be testifying. I provided him with a copy of the report that Dr. Vrba wrote in 1944 and advised him of the book that Dr. Vrba had written of his experiences in Auschwitz and advised him that he had difficulty in obtaining that, and I wonder what assistance it was. So he had full disclosure of what Dr. Vrba's evidence will be.

I regret, Your Honour, that the matter is taking longer than was initially anticipated. I recollect quite clearly that at a number of stages, both {1291|1292} in the courtroom and outside the courtroom, that I indicated that I had Dr. Hilberg here, set aside two days for his evidence. I had never been advised two days would not be sufficient for that evidence. I had arranged for Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, and that I had Dr. Vrba arranged for Thursday and Friday of last week.

I don't criticize Mr. Christie's right to fully cross-examine, and that is certainly a right that he has exercised during the course of this trial, but I don't take full responsibility for the length of the trial, Your Honour. It's an adversarial [sic] process, and matters are being gone into in depth.

I know of no precedent, Your Honour, for either of the procedures that my friend suggests. They are as fresh to my ears as they are to Your Honour this morning. I have always felt, Your Honour – and again I am not prepared with law or precedent on this – that it was vital for a jury to be able to assess the credibility of somebody in person in the courtroom milieu, and not somebody on television. Obviously, as my friend says, any deposition would have to be in the presence of Your Honour as well and the court reporter here. The video {1292|1293} tape itself would not be sufficient. There may well be rulings during the course of his testimony and matters which Your Honour would have to appear on.

As to any suggestion that the Crown splits its case, again, I know of no precedent for that, and I will be opposed to both suggestions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: First of all, Your Honour, my friend says that he told me about Dr. Vrba. That is correct. But it seems to me I am hearing, every day, about new witnesses, alterations for old witnesses. The preparation for a case should not be undertaken during the course of a trial. I am sure that is a recognized pre-requisite. If I have been surprising my friend, he should concede that as people go along, he has people who phone him on the weekend or any other time.

I suggest that we are entitled through the preliminary to know something about the case, and I can count now five witnesses, two experts, who are altered, and the total situation of the case is changing from day to day, it seems to me.

In the case of these circumstances it seems as if the Crown modifies its position on the basis {1293|1294} of the cross-examination, because from what I can see, of the witness statements provided, points brought out in cross-examination now are covered by new surprise witnesses. I think it approaches the stage where I could very readily ask for an adjournment.

The Crown provides me with witness statements, probably a quarter of a page long, to deal with fundamental matters in the case. It would be certainly within my right, I think, to ask for an adjournment in the face of this new type of evidence. I don't propose to do so. I think that would be far too much of an inconvenience for the jury and for the whole Court, but I am asking for some consideration of what I think is a practical problem, if it were necessary to conduct these depositions such as one takes commission evidence, before a commissioner, or in open Court, I am quite sure we could arrange that, although I am sure it would, indeed, be inconvenient to Your Honour and to the Court as a whole. I'd much rather avoid that if I could; but I really think that it ill becomes the Crown to say, well, we are finding out new things every day, and we want to add them as they come along; the defence can wait until we are through with whatever we happen to find. It seems to me with three {1294|1295} new witnesses, that's about the size of the matter; and in the face of that, I am asking for some consideration to enable us to put our case into evidence without the necessity of recalling people from West Germany and other places who are directly referred to in the book. There isn't some kind of abstract —

THE COURT: In what book?

MR. CHRISTIE: This book.

THE COURT: Exhibit 1.

MR. CHRISTIE: Exhibit 1. Thank you.

They are quoted here, and they have come to verify what they've found. Now, they have waited since the 8th of January, and I certainly recognize they couldn't testify then. They have to wait, but they have to go back on the 28th, twenty days later.

I find it difficult to comprehend how the Crown can take the position that they may extend their case when and if they choose as long as they find it relevant. If people now phone them with information today, I suppose I will hear some new statements tomorrow. That's the way it happened yesterday. I don't see how the defence can be put in a position of coping with that kind of re-arrangement in the case. Thank you.

—— {1295|1296}

RULING

THE COURT: Counsel for the accused in the absence of the jury, has moved the Court to provide for and to accommodate the evidence of the proposed defence witness, Mr. Udo Walendy.

I am told that that witness is West German by way of national origin and is a resident of that country. He has, I infer, at the request of the defence, come to Canada to testify as a defence witness at this trial. He came here on the 8th of January.

This trial commenced in a formal way on Wednesday, the 9th of January. A jury was selected with no undue delay. The evidence really did not commence until well into the latter two days of the first week after the Christmas recess. That would make the evidence in this case having started really in the afternoon of the 10th of January and all of the 11th.

All of last week was consumed with the evidence of four or five Crown witnesses, most of whom were examined and cross-examined with despatch.

Dr. Hilberg, a Crown witness, testified as an expert. As I recall it, generally speaking, his evidence in examination-in-chief consumed not quite a day — the better part of a full morning and somewhat in the {1296|1297} afternoon. He was then cross-examined by counsel for the accused for two and a half days.

Mr. Christie has indicated in his motion that Mr. Walendy has to return to Germany on the 28th of January. This motion is made on the 22nd of January. Defence counsel moves that the Crown's case be interrupted and that the defence witness be examined in-chief and cross-examined before the jury.

In the alternative, and preferable [sic] to the defence, Mr. Christie submits that in the evening a video tape recording be made of Mr. Walendy's evidence and that there be examination-in-chief and cross-examination with the tape ultimately being displayed to the jury.

Crown counsel objects to both of those suggestions.

Mr. Christie is further of the view that the Crown is virtually, as he says, on a day-by-day basis, altering its case and notifying the defence that it intends to call more witnesses than originally intended with the result that any comparison between the witnesses called at the preliminary hearing and what the Crown intends to call at this trial is somewhat incidental.

Counsel for the defence takes the view {1297|1298} that the constant juggling and adding of witnesses with no intention to call other witnesses on the part of the Crown is not only confusing to the defence, but has taken defence to the point where it is contemplating suggesting that the Crown has an oblique motive in doing this. In any event, while the defence is not making a motion for an adjournment, that thought is passing through Mr. Christie's mind.

Crown counsel observes that no one asked the witness, Walendy, to come to this country on the Crown side on the 8th of January. Mr. Griffiths points out that when he suggested that he had set aside two days for the total evidence of Dr. Hilberg, no one on the defence side advised him that it will be another one or two days in addition to that before the whole matter of that witness' evidence could be finished.

I am of the view that I have no jurisdiction to, in effect, tell the Crown how to prosecute.

In the same way I have certainly no jurisdiction to in any way regulate how the defence will be put in. I have jurisdiction to ensure that the law is followed and our procedures are adhered to. That {1298|1299} jurisdiction I have attempted to exercise.

I know of no statute or case law that permits the taking of evidence of any witness by video tape in a criminal trial. It seems to me that the mode of trial having been taken by the defence to have a jury, the jury is entitled to see witnesses first-hand and, as Crown counsel says, not through television.

I think it would be a grave error on my part to permit the evidence of any witness, be it video-taped, in the absence of the jury, at night, and to be shown to the jury later. It would be an improper disruption of the Crown's case for me to make an order that the Crown's case be interrupted so that the evidence of the defence witness could be taken.

I am dismissing the motion now for the reasons I have given. Defence counsel has the right to bring that motion again. Whether he succeeds or fails will depend on what I hear then. It will also depend on how fast we proceed, how quickly and with what despatch this case proceeds both in the examination-in-chief and in cross-examination of the witnesses as they are called by the Crown.

I am not unmindful of or unsympathetic {1299|1300} with Mr. Christie's position insofar as the witness is concerned. Scheduling of witnesses is a nightmare to both sides.

There is no substance in Mr. Christie's submission that the Crown is apparently improperly deciding to not call certain witnesses and to call others that have not been called at the preliminary hearing.

Preliminary hearings are conducted to see whether or not there is evidence sufficient to put the accused on trial. Their prime motive is not one of examination for discovery, although it has been said by others senior to me that that is one of the natural benefits that might flow to the defence from the holding of preliminary hearings.

The motion is dismissed on those terms.

THE COURT: Is there anything further?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

—— {1300|1301}

— The jury enters. 10:35 a.m.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, I am sorry to keep you waiting. A matter came up first thing this morning, and I dealt with it. We are now ready to proceed.

Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

RUDOLF VRBA, previously sworn.*CONTINUED EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. As I recollect, Doctor, we have reached the point yesterday where you were describing what went on in the night shift of the Kanada command, and I believe you had testified that you reached the point where the dead, the dying and the invalids were loaded on trucks and taken away. What was your responsibility then?

A. Once all the people – that means dead, dying, invalids, healthy – were distributed, each into its place because the trucks took them, we collected the luggage and loaded them on the returning trucks. The trucks were making quite short journeys. Say a truck went away with a hundred people and came back within ten minutes and there were only about ten trucks, so that if you had, in the transport, say three thousand to four thousand people, average was three thousand, but it could be four thousand, it could be five thousand.

The deportaiton [deportation], the elimination of the {1301|1302} people from the ramp would then take two to three hours, and after that, as the trucks are coming back from Birkenau —

Q. Were they coming back empty or full?

A. Empty. We were immediately loading the property of the people on the truck. May I use the slides, please?

Q. Please.

A. We were standing here. Here is a ramp. The truck with the people moved in this direction.

Q. Towards Birkenau?

A. Which is Birkenau, and came back, each truck, again to the ramp where we loaded it with the luggage. And then the trucks with the luggage, the property of the deportees, came into this complex, which was called Kanada, and was adjacent to the complex called, "DAW", which means Deutsche Ausrüstung[s]werke, and translated means German ammunition military ammunition factory. I think that for short we can call it DAW. And this means that after all the luggage has been put on trucks and deposited here in Kanada, in this particular quarter, our job was to clean out the wagons. The wagons had to be cleaned out in such a way that not the slightest trace should remain that they were used for transportation of human beings. That means the straw was taken out and put on the ramp, the cars be meticulously cleaned with brushes, with mops, with all sorts of cleaning equipment, finally disinfected with lysol, again wiped and swept out, and then a commission came to inspect if the wagons are in an almost perfect state, like new, from inside.

After the wagons had been given {1302|1303} clearance to clear the ramp and our job was to eliminate from the ramp any slightest trace of anything, not one piece of paper, blood, urine or excrement, not a trace of clothes or whatsoever was allowed to stay on the ramp, and when that process was finished, we were again rounded up, and if I can have the previous picture ...

Q. What exhibit number is that that you just put on – Exhibit 12?

A. Yes. The whole process went into reverse. This means we had to line up here and on the road in front of the ramp in fives, the group hundred, two hundred, depending how many you got. A detachment of S.S. came and marched us off, and the moment when this detachment of S.S. had marched us off, had us surrounded, that S.S. went home.

Q. The larger circle.

A. Yes. And we were marched, then, either, depends on the hour, either back into the camp, which means that we were marched back into the sleeping quarters here —

Q. In Auschwitz I?

A. — in Auschwitz I, which were surrounded by barbed wire and lights and garbage all through the night, or if there was much work, we waited either for the next transport, because there were such days that five or six transports came within twenty-four hours.

On the other hand, there was sometimes so much work to be done in this, specialized work to be done in this specialized Kanada complex, that you were marched into the Kanada complex and kept there working until we were allowed for going to the camp. {1303|1304}

Q. Do you know what a Red Cross van looks like?

A. That's right.

Q. Can you describe it for us?

A. Well, it was Red Cross vans which was a green military van with a large red cross, and when the people were lined up, this red cross van went in front of them. If I show again this picture, the people who were left on the ramp and were lined up here waiting for the transport in this direction —

Q. Towards Birkenau.

A. Yes. The Red Cross van came from Kanada via a small hole which is not shown on this map, but here was a road, a connection, crossed the railway line here and via a small road, went here to this direction. The Red Cross van originated here in Kanada compound, and contained Zyklon gas, the canisters.

Q. Did you ever see inside that Red Cross vans?

A. Yes. I have been several times inside the Red Cross van, because one of my jobs when I was here in the Kanada complex was to load the Red Cross van with Zyklon gas. And this usually happened before the arrival of the transport. This means when we were not in the camp, when the alarm came that the transport is coming, say this was alarm for twenty minutes in vans, then first thing when we got here in the Kanada complex which I have described how it looked, came the Red Cross van and there was a special small house which stored the Zyklon, and we were told —

THE COURT: You cannot say what you {1304|1305} were told.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What did you do?

A. We were ordered — I'm sorry for using the word "told". We were ordered to —

MR. CHRISTIE: That is hearsay as well.

THE COURT: Rephrase it, please.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You received some orders.

A. Yes.

Q. As a result of the orders what would you do?

A. A queue was formed from this little house to the Red Cross van, and that would stand in the queue. In the little house inside there was Zyklon conserves — they looked like conserves.

Q. Conserves, jam?

A. Well, they were the size of a gallon jam conserves. When I hold it like that, then it was a little bit over my two hands.

Q. You are indicating holding it from underneath.

A. Yes. So it depends where I stood, either where I was ordered or where they were stored, or the Red Cross van, or sometime in the middle, depending on the situation; and we were loading that Red Cross van with the Zyklon.

Q. Was it always the same amount, or did the amount differ?

A. It differed, depending on how many people they expected to come, I understand.

Q. That's the night shift. {1305|1306}

A. That's the night shift.

Q. What about the day shift?

A. The day shift, the day shift worked in this compound.

Q. That is the Kanada compound.

A. That is the Kanada compound which was a square of approximately roughly hundred meters on each side. So this would be ten thousand square meters or hundred thousand square feet, roughly. And I would now, if you throw a light on what this looked like here inside, in the first line I would like to take notice that this compound was outside the main camp where we slept in the night, but inside the great of chain of guards. Therefore, when we were working here by day, there were no special guards here inside except the S.S. who worked, who commanded us to work, but not the guards; but this compound was often working for twenty-four hours a day, and that was also a night shift. And because in the night these guards are not standing, there was an arrangement for guarding us in the night within this complex. So this complex, then, looked finally like this.

Q. And you've got a clean sheet of transparencies, then, and you are going to draw us a picture of the compound now.

A. This was a compound of about a hundred yards with a gate here, barbed wire around. In those corners were guard towers, equipped with guards and machine guns, and here all along was light in the night. There were the following buildings inside. Here was a large building made of brick with a patio and a terrace, a veranda, very long barrack, type of Birkenau barracks, {1306|1307} was here. Here was a lavatory for the prisons, and other barrack was here, and here were again two barracks. So on the whole we had there four barracks, each barrack of the size of a large horse stable, and the house which I would say would represent a house with a square footage of rough estimate twenty thousand square feet which was a special store, twenty thousand square feet inside space.

Now, the trucks from the ramp would come with the property here into this, with the luggages, into this yard, and the property would be unloaded by the man in the truck pressing a button, and the truck lifting so that the whole luggage would slide down. However, if it didn't slide down, two prisoners or three prisoners had to climb up on the truck and help the luggage to get down so that the truck would return to the ramp for the next load. And meanwhile, in the centre of this yard, a great heap of luggage has been formed and prisoners were immediately used to store those luggages along the walls of this barrack.

Now, the walls of this barrack, the barrack was approximately the height of this wall.

Q. In the courtroom here?

A. Yes. About thirty meters long. This means, I would say, twice as long as this courtroom, by judgment, and the luggage from one or two transport vehicles represented a considerable mass of matter. It had to be done pretty fast because the trucks were going up and down from the ramp, and they were, of course, keen to clean the ramp very fast and to get the trucks for other jobs. So this was phase number one, the position of the luggage next to this barrack. {1307|1308}

Q. What happened then?

A. Then we were working there at various times – two hundred, three hundred, four hundred or five hundred people. Inside this barrack the situation was the following —

Q. Excuse me just a minute, Doctor.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The drawing, Your Honour, of inside the Kanada compound in Auschwitz, could that be the next exhibit?

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 13: Transparency of Kanada compound.

THE WITNESS: This barrack had two gates in the front and in the back like a horse stable with light coming from the top, no windows. Along, inside the barracks, blankets were spread out – say nine, ten blankets. The blankets were confiscated immediately from those arrivals. They all had blankets, and there were a great store of blankets. And around each blanket were situated around ten prisoners. This was the first stage of our work there, which was also by night.

Now, six or ten or eight prisoners, depending on the amount of luggage, were doing nothing but running from the outside from here where the luggage was stored in great heaps and bringing two luggages in each hand. I mean, if you brought only one or something like that, it would be – his enthusiasm for work would be increased by the S.S. men who stand at this door with a club, with a truncheon. So if sufficient speed, or carried {1308|1309} a considerable amount, physical convincing has taken place. The luggages were dropped here and these people who were around were already highly specialized. There was one man whose job was to open the luggage as fast as possible, and the rule was that it doesn't matter whether the luggage is or is not preserved healthy because the luggage was marked with names. So rough instruments were used, sometimes the luggage was cut up, and as fast as possible the content of the luggage was dumped on these blankets, and the people around these blankets started to be frantically active in sorting out the contents of the luggage. Men's clothes were on one side, women's clothes went on the other side, and children's clothes on the other side of the blanket. Things like shoe cream, shoe paste, combs, on the other side of the blanket, and on one side of the blanket went everything like documents, photo albums, diaries or books, material consisting of paper. In the middle there was a small luggage into which went valuables – money, gold, etcetera – wrist watches.

Q. Jewellery.

A. Jewellery which was found in those luggages. Now, this was here inside in the middle of each blanket, the small luggage. The papers were collected by a special collector again who went around with a big luggage and collected the documents, and those documents were taken here behind this barrack and between this barrack in the DAW, and a fire was made and those documents were burned there without inspection. Indeed, it was strictly forbidden to inspect those documents, and as I will explain later, before we left we were extremely thoroughly searched for money which was abundant there and for documents. {1309|1310}

In other words, somebody who stole a sardine could get away with twenty-five lashes, but if somebody stole a bank note, a diamond or a document didn't get away live.

Now, can I have this picture? Now, when it was all sorted out, again other groups came and started to load into blankets certain goods, say male clothes, female clothes, pans and pots ...

Q. Pots and pans ...

A. Pots and pans, yes. All sorts of things which were there, and I will go back through this picture.

Q. Exhibit 12.

A. Right. And now we would carry, the prisoners would carry from this barrack, where the sorting was going on, this was called the sorting barrack, loaded with blankets in which the goods were, sorted goods were stuffed, were running under the eyes of Scharfu[ü]hrer Wyglev. So he was sitting here and started observing the situation. As the prisoners were running with the property, with the property in blankets and depositing all better clothes here in this barrack, all laundry in this barrack, other items in this barrack. In that three barracks were working women. These women were brought from Birkenau. They were stationed in Birkenau, and every morning brought into the Kanada command. Women do not work on the ramp, and in Kanada they worked in the three barracks where they sorted the goods according to quality. This means they sorted shirts, first quality shirts, second quality shirts, and so-called Lumben [Lumpen], which means rags. And they are bundled, and in this barrack enormous amounts of those shirts of first quality, of {1310|1311} second quality and third quality were accumulated. Similarly, undergarments of first quality, second quality and third quality were accumulating so that it looked like in an enormous warehouse inside. The number of women who worked on the sorting amounted for anything from two hundred to three hundred to four hundred, depending on the business that was going, and in regular intervals the train came. There was a train line as I explained in figure number one. There were train lines there, because this was group Siemens, and armaments, DAW, which produced material for war with the slave labour provided from Auschwitz I, and therefore they had to export those things straight to the railway, and so there was a railway line coming into the camp, and this railway line was prolonged, and so, occasionally, wagons would be put in front of the Kanada, and we would then load those wagons on particular days with the property sorted already out. This means the wagons would come here. Here would be the railway I line, and they would bring in wagons, and there were days when it was in the order, shirts, first quality and second quality. So we had to run from this barrack with the proper load and load it on those trains, then came, say, shoes, first quality, second quality, third quality. The shoes were carefully bundled together so that they are not mixed up. Then there were overcoats, first quality etcetera, etcetera. Now, the third quality underwear and shirts was not sent as such, but it was called as a rag quality and was sent to paper factory for making paper, and this I know because when loading it in the wagon, the designation of the wagon was written on it, Memel was written on it, which is a Baltic town. So this rags of {1311|1312} the third quality were transported for making paper in Memmel [Memel], and the better things were distributed to various addresses in Bavaria, mainly, but also in other addresses, and it was written Winterhilfswerk, which means help for the winter, and they made various contributions among the population for either those who are poor or those on the front and running out of underwear and shirts, and they send it to those centres.

Q. Now, during this time that you were working in the Kanada command, the day shift or the night shift, up until January 15th you said you were living in Auschwitz I.

A. Right.

Q. Before January 15th did you ever go into Birkenau?

A. Yes. On one occasion.

Q. All right. Now, have we got a map there that would show?

MR. GRIFFITHS: While Dr. Vrba is getting it, the sketch showing the inside of the barracks as described by Dr. Vrba, if that could be the next exhibit.

THE COURT: Exhibit 14.

— EXHIBIT NO. 14: Transparency – Sketch showing inside of barracks.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, this is a different map and perhaps you could orient us on this map where Birkenau is and where Auschwitz I is on the railway lines.

A. That was a previous map which I {1312|1313} showed, made by memory, and this map is an official map made by experts.

Here, this is Auschwitz I.

Q. And you have marked that in red.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, where is the road that you would travel from Auschwitz I —

A. Here is Kanada. And the road of the tracks which we travelled from Auschwitz I was the following: When we went to the ramp we were marched from Auschwitz I where we were overnight, over this pass to this pass without reaching the railway station, Auschwitz. This is a river here and we reach here the Vienna-Krakow line, railway line. And we cross it and enter the rail of Birkenau.

Q. And there is a road there that you are indicating that went to Birkenau. Were there any other roads that went to Birkenau?

A. None. This was the only road that I went to Birkenau. Also, some of the S.S. who were stationed in this region have this time made footpath by walking over these fields, so that some sort of dirt footpath to the railway station existed because behind the railway station and behind Auschwitz there were pubs.

THE COURT: There were what?

THE WITNESS: Pubs.

THE COURT: That is where one drinks beer.

THE WITNESS: Yes. The S.S., in order not to have to go this way, they have stamped out {1313|1314} a road which was a shorter road to the railway station and to the town of Auschwitz.

Q. All right. Now, can you —

A. The only road on which a car could go is this one.

Q. All right. Can you tell us where, before January 15th, you went in Birkenau?

A. On January 15th —

Q. I'm sorry, I said before January 15th.

A. Yes. In December 1942 I was once ordered to enter a truck, one of those trucks, to go to an unknown place, and at that location I was driven to Birkenau and I was driven along this road, enter the Birkenau, came here. Here was a main gate of Birkenau, main entrance. There was the one and only entrance how it would get to Birkenau complex was either here: here was the one and only entrance.

Q. All right.

A. And the other entrance was here, which was the side entrance. I was taken through this — sorry, it went there. It was here. This is the entrance, and I was taken with a truck first through this main entrance here, then the truck went in between camps "C" and "D", which I will show in bigger detail. Then it turned left, and here we are in this region, and there in the large hut there was, as I described, a horse stable: we were taken in by a number of open pits and the hut, not hut, horse stable, was filled with clothes from bottom to the very top, and our job of about fifty men was to clear a road through that enormous amount of clothing and then side roads, so {1314|1315} that the clothing could be slowly taken out or sorted on the place.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to look at the pits that you saw?

A. Yes. The pits were quite close to the barrack. It was December 1942, and the heat came out from the pits. The pits were not used. There was nobody. When I looked into the pits I saw bones which were fragments only which were burned, but a lot of unburned or slightly burned children's heads. At that time I didn't know what it means, why children's heads don't burn, but now I know that they contain such an amount of water that to burn completely a child skull is much more difficult than a grown-up's skull.

Q. How many were there, one or more than one?

A. As far as I can recall I didn't walk by more than three. There might have been further from the barrack, but of course, I couldn't walk there. I had to keep by the barrack.

Q. Can you give us any estimate as to how large those pits would be?

A. The depths I would estimate for six meters.

Q. Six meters.

A. Yes.

THE COURT: What's that in feet?

THE WITNESS: Six meters is about twenty feet, eighteen feet. Eighteen feet, twenty feet. So this means the depths would be again up to this panneling, the second panneling. I would estimate that it is about {1315|1316} six meters. And it was a rather quadrangle. It was quadrangular. I would say six meters on each side and six meters down. They were not in use, but the heat was still coming out, and if you like to come closer because of the heat, it was December, it was very cold.

Q. Now, on January 15th did you move?

A. Yes. On January 15th —

THE COURT: What year would this be, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: '43. It turned out under some suspicion that certain amount of money turned out in Auschwitz one camp found by the so-called political department, which was an internal police in the camp which had its own block which was block eleven, which was known as a torture block, or investigation block.

Now, they had found evidence from some prisoners that money which originated from Kanada —

MR. CHRISTIE: We are now embarking into the realm of hearsay and I object to it. I don't mind if he goes on, but —

THE COURT: I agree with you, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps without going into the reasons why, was your group moved?

A. One day we were moved. On 15th January, 1943, we were moved from Auschwitz to Birkenau.

Q. All right. And have we got a drawing there, a little more detailed drawing of Birkenau that showed the various barrack?

A. Yes. My original drawing after I made it after my escape in 1944 is this. And when we {1316|1317} came to Birkenau, all this was under construction in '43, this region here.

Q. And you are indicating where there there [sic] is the Roman numeral II, "A" through "F".

A. Yes. It was under construction, and there were no prisoners whatsoever.

Q. Where were all the prisoners?

A. These two camps existed. Here are women and here are men. And we were brought in into this men's camp into Block 16, and what a men's camp look like and how this look like in more than my drawing is shown on this map.

Q. Now, are there parts of this map that are different from when you left on April 7?

A. Since April 7th, since I left, I am now one year forwards.

Q. I understand that. I just want to understand just what was there when you were there, and you can't testify as to what was there after you were there.

A. Now, these barracks were not there by the time I left.

Q. Indicating at the top.

A. Yes. And this railway which is here indicated as coming in through the main gate was not finished. There were only laid foundation from the railway, and I could see that the railroad is a building, but it was not finished on 7 April, 1944, otherwise I cannot see the meaning of this here, which is connected, evidently, from the building of this new railway of which I didn't mention before, because when you look at my original {1317|1318} painting which was made in 1944 at the time of my escape, behind this complex of Birkenau, here are the Krematoria II, III, IV and V, there was just a little small forest and no roads.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I don't know how this witness can say that unless he admits that he was there.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He was there.

MR. CHRISTIE: He was outside Birkenau and behind —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Mr. Christie. He escaped. You will hear about it more.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I escaped. I escaped.

THE COURT: Excuse me, gentlemen. The previous transparency that he put on will be Exhibit 15, the one he drew himself.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. A rough ground plan of Birkenau from 1944 from Dr. Vrba.

— EXHIBIT NO. 15: Transparency – rough ground plan of Birkenau in 1944 by Dr. Vrba.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Vrba, you were explaining the camp enclosure, Birkenau, when you were there.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Carry on. Now ...

A. This means this was Birkenau I. Here are women and here were men. {1318|1319}

Q. We are looking at the left side of the drawing and on the bottom —

A. On this side of the drawing were women and here were men. And to make the geography clear, south on this map is in this direction, and this I know because on clear days from this place where I lived — I lived here in this place, but when I go as far as this and could look through the wires, I could see mountains, and I knew that those are the Bezkydy. These were Slovak mountains.

Q. Slovak mountains. And these were —

A. In the south.

Q. Now, I put to you another one, and this is three-dimensional, tilted: another one that we have seen before as a flat plan.

A. Yes. So this would be the flat plan similar to that one which I drew after my escape, and this means that Birkenau I was two — this was "A" and this was "B". In "A" were women; in "B" were men. This complex was Birkenau II, and it was not built up at that time.

Q. When you first moved in.

A. In January 1943. And this complex did not exist whatsoever in January 1943.

Q. Now, where were you living in January of 1943?

A. I was living in this building here. And this building was called Block No. 16.

Q. And where were you working after January '43?

A. After January '43 I was working {1319|1320} back in Kanada. This means by daytime or by nighttime I was transported to the ramp, and by daytime to the Kanada storehouse in Auschwitz I.

Q. All right.

A. I was marched there. In other words, I was only changing my barrack from Auschwitz I into a barrack in Birkenau. That was a change on January 15th. And here I stayed until January 8th.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. June 8th, 1943.

Q. All right. During that next six months ...

A. Yes

Q. ... can you tell us whether you saw any of the truckloads or lorries of people coming from the direction of the train ramp into Birkenau that you described for us yesterday?

A. Certainly.

Q. Can you tell us where they went?

A. Because when I finished my work, if I may call it that way, when this Kommando finish the work on the ramp, the Kommando went home. Now, when I was home and somebody else was on the ramp, when I was in the day Kommando, then I would see that those trucks with those people who were not marched into the camp, the healthy men and the healthy women went, so to say, in front of my nose by this main entrance, by this road, into this region, which was surrounded by barbed wire, electrified barbed wire, and unloaded in this yard. So that it was my privilege and right of the prisoners that when they are not working, they can walk. This is the {1320|1321} main road. Furthermore, here, this is Block 27, and next to the Block 27, here, it was a wooden structure.

Q. Is it shown on this plan?

A. It is not shown on this map because it was only made from wood, and this was called Leichenkeller, which means mortuary. And this was a mortuary for prisoners who died by daytime in the prison compound, and in this mortuary there was a very close check on the numbers of the prisoners so that one knows who died, who because Registrar in the mortuary was Fred Wetzler, with whom I escaped later who was from the same town I was, who I knew from home, and with whom I escaped from Auschwitz. This means if I may have this main picture, if I was not working, I used every occasion to go to the mortuary, because there was the company of Wetzler, who was my closest friend.

Secondly, we conspire from the very start with Wetzler the conspiracy of escape. Wetzler by that time lost three brothers in the Sonderkommando. And it gave me safety, because by staying in the mortuary, this Wetzler, it usually contained two hundred, three hundred, four hundred bodies. The S.S. didn't like the stench which accumulated there, so we had a peaceful teatime in that place, and if I may have the picture, also naturally from this place I could see perfectly what was happening on this road and what's happening here, {1321|1322} from the crematoria.

Q. You described barbed wire. Was there any kind of fence around those buildings that are crematoria that would prevent you from seeing what was happening there?

A. Not at the start. At the start I could see perfectly well from here, in January 1943, February 1943, perfectly well what is happening here. The distance is not more than fifty, sixty yards. I mean, the distance apart from the barbed wires would be like over this room, quite close. So that I could see perfectly well what was happening in this area.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, is this a convenient time for morning recess?

THE COURT: Yes. Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:27 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I just want to point out what I thought might have been a misunderstanding in my application this morning. My friend said he hasn't heard an application such as I was making. I thought I had mentioned the word "commission", and I intended it to be such an application, and I wanted to point out that I thought {1322|1323} perhaps, although at the time I was speaking to a point of law that didn't seem to be of well-known repute, I think I am right in saying that 637 indicates that: "A party to a proceeding to which this Act applies may apply for an order appointing a commissioner to take the evidence of a witness who (a) is, by reason of, and then some other good and sufficient cause, not likely to be able to attend at the time the trial is held, or (b) is out of Canada."

I noted too that in the case of R. v. Bullement (1979) 46 C.C.C. (2d), 429, the Court of Appeal of Ontario has held that such an application may be made during the trial. However, the application would only be granted — or however, in deciding whether or not to grant the application, the trial judge is entitled to decide such factors as to whether the trial is disrupted by the taking of evidence. and the possible prejudice to the opposite party it resulting therefrom, as well as the consequences that the jury will not have the advantage of observing the demeanour of the witness.

In view of the fact that it didn't seem clear that my friend acceded [sic] to the factor, the position, that there was such a right, I simply want to re-affirm that I was intending my application to be regarded as {1323|1324} one under s.637(a)(ii), and although I am not asking Your Honour to rule on this at this time, I would like Your Honour to consider my application in light of these remarks and in that section for consideration at a later point.

I will be renewing it with the same factual reasons as I gave before. And I might point out that I also indicated at the beginning of the case that I was going to make an application at the end of the Crown's evidence that the witness, Fried, who was called at the preliminary hearing and gave evidence which I would want for my defence, I would be seeking his examination under Commission as well.

Now, he is in New York City, and I was prepared to make that application at the end of the Crown's case to convenience the Crown, but I put the Crown on notice that I would be seeking that order.

So I am simply re-affirming what I said previously, identifying the section number and indicating that I would be, if possible, raising the issue with you again, perhaps tomorrow or at a later stage, respecting Dr. Udo Walendy.

Thank you very much, Your Honour. {1324|1325}

THE COURT: I think, Mr. Christie, one of the reasons that I dismissed your application without prejudice – in effect you are making it again – was because at the present time, on what you've told me concerning Mr. Walendy, the wording of s.637 is incompatible with his physical presence in this country and being available, at least at this time, to testify.

In so far as the other matter is concerned regarding the witness in New York City, I understand you are not making an application now. You are merely advising that you may very well be making such an application at the appropriate time.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Because I have asked my friend to produce the witness, and so far he has declined; but I am simply indicating that if he does not produce the witness by the end of his case, that is what my application will be.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. Is there anything further from either side.

MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Your Honour. I just indicate that I will not be producing the witness by the end of my case and I will be confirming that. That will be the argument I expect my friend to make, but {1325|1326} I will not be producing that witness from New York City, and I was not aware that s.673 was being used for Udo Walendy, and I am obliged to my friend for pointing that out.

THE COURT: Thank you, gentlemen.

Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury returns. 12:05 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Vrba, prior to the morning recess you were telling us that you had a clear view from the mortuary where your friend worked of the area of the Krematoria II and III, or what are marked on the plan.

Can you tell us what you saw when trucks would come to that area?

A. May I have the map again?

THE COURT: I think, before we go any further, what we are all looking at on the screen – that's Exhibit 16, I believe, isn't it?

THE REGISTRAR: It hasn't been introduced, Your Honour.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Perhaps, before we go further, that can be introduced. It's been marked by Dr. Vrba indicating that Block 27, where his friend was living {1326|1327} and where the mortuary is, and it is a plan said to be of Birkenau.

THE COURT: Please mark it now, otherwise things could become somewhat confused.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO. 16: Transparency of Birkenau complex, BI, BII, BIII.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Q. So Dr. Vrba, Exhibit 16 I am showing now on the screen, can you tell us what you saw?

A. I came from the night shift where several transports during that night arrived, but I was exchanged on the night shift approximately at five o'clock in the morning and broke into my barracks for sleep. Instead of sleeping, I get out from the barrack and walk over to Block 27 to the mortuary to talk to my friend, Wetzler. This mortuary had a window on this side.

Q. Indicating on the side closest to the crematoria?

A. On the side closest to the crematoria. So that when I, before the window, in front of the window was a table, and on the table coffee was served, or tea. The dead were around this table. There was such a corner with paper and coffee and a window. While I was drinking my coffee I could see that the people from the night which I have seen arrive, most of them were not seen but there were several hundred, first on this yard which was enclosed with electric fences, and with tower guards, and they went into this building which is known to us as {1327|1328} Krematorium No. II. This Krematorium No. II had, apart from buildings, long bunkers which were approximately the height of two such tables. Say the bunker was about this height, above a head of the human being.

Q. All right. You are indicating about six and a half, seven feet?

A. I would think so. In other words, a man who would climb on it would have to lift his hands and sort of make an exercise in order to swing himself on top of the bunker. This bunker had air lifts, openings for airing, approximately three or four, along, which were I covered by wooden or some lid which was easily removable.

THE COURT: Covered by —

THE WITNESS: Lids. From the distance I couldn't see if it was a wooden or a metallic lid. Then I saw Sanitäts Dienst Gefreiter, which is —

Q. And you called it ...

A. The sanitation service corporal. And he came having about four or five of those Zyklon tubes which I knew very well from loading into the Red Cross van. And he came to the bunker and he put them down, and then he started to put those lids, those tins on top of the bunker until he had them all on. And then he climbed on the bunker by holding on his hands and in a sporty way swinging himself over, which attracted my attention because it was not usually the demeanour of S.S. men to make sport. He then, on top of this bunker, took out a gas mask which he had hang over and put on the gas mask, and with something which, from a distance of about fifty yards, opened the lid of the Zyklon-B tubes, which was well-known to me from distance, and then he, went to {1328|1329} one of the vents in a leisurely step, opened the vent and shoved in the content of the tin in the vent in a leisurely way, and when he was finished he a couple of times has hit the —

Q. Indicating tapped the tin.

A. Tapped on that opening. Then he closed the opening, opens the tin, again in a rather leisurely way, having the gas mask on, and went to the next vent where the procedure was repeated until he dropped into each vent one or two of those tins – sometimes one, sometimes two. And when he cleared it he took the empty vents to the edge of the bunker, climbed down from the bunker, took the empty tins again down from the bunker, put down his gas mask, put the gas mask back into his holder, and with the tins under the hands walked away, disappearing inside the crematorium.

Q. Did you see any people come out of the crematorium, any of the hundreds that you saw go in?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Did you see any of the hundreds of people you saw go into the crematorium go out?

MR. CHRISTIE: So far he didn't say he saw hundreds go in.

THE WITNESS: No. I saw the crematoria, and within the vicinity of the crematoria from January 1943 until April 7, 1944, as the time went, this was the first crematorium and this is where I was witnessing the gasings of the first in the crematorium. Soon after the crematorium, three were opened. They are called II and III, because Krematorium I was a smaller arrangement, which was in Auschwitz I, and we are here {1329|1330} Auschwitz II, and later there was Krematorium IV and Krematorium V, all of them surrounded with a barbed fence, electrically charged, with towers to guard, and the entrance was only this side to Krematorium IV and Krematorium V, and entrance was this side to Krematorium II and to Krematorium III.

Until the day 7 April, 1944, this railway line was reaching only about to this gate.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Halfway up the camp.

A. That's right. And there were none of that roads. Therefore they were not recorded on the map which I prepared after my escape in Slovakia in April 1944. Similarly, on that map which is one of the exhibits, it can be seen that it is only indicated that this is building, but it was not finished on April 7.

Q. Can you describe for us what would go on inside the mortuary? Can you describe what you saw out the window? What would go on inside the mortuary?

A. Inside the mortuary in Block 27?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. This means inside this mortuary.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. The procedure was the following:

This is the blocks of the male camp, and that were store out in front of the block. In other words, when there was called to roll appel[,], to roll call, which was twice a day, in the morning at six and in the evening before the dark, before the sun set, then all prisoners had to line up in front of their barracks.

Now, those who couldn't stand to the {1330|1331} line-up were, dead or alive, lined up in tens in rows, laying in such a way that the first person would have his legs spread and the second person would be put on him with the head between the legs, and his own legs spread. So that we were in tens – five heads on one side and five heads on other side, easy to count. Then the prisoners had to line up. We had to line in front of the barrack. This is a barrack, and the prisoners were lined up in rows of ten and so on.

So usually in front of such a barrack in Birkenau, in front of each barrack there is an estimate of eight hundred, one thousand, two thousand people in front of barrack. Now the people had to line up in rows of ten in such a way that when the S.S. man came to count them, he had a long ruler and he could rule this way or this way by walking by the lines in front or the side, and could see, without too much counting, how many rows of ten are there, and that nobody from the rows missing. If there were 953 people, then you had ninety-five rows and three in the last row.

Now, those who couldn't stand were out laying, the dead and alive together, in such rows, and they were again stapled up to ten.

Q. Stacked up to ten.

A. Stacked up to ten. When the signal came to count – now, can I have all the other maps?

MR. GRIFFITHS: May I have the barrack map, Your Honour, shwoing [sic] the roll call, Exhibit 17, or the drawing?

— EXHIBIT NO. 17: Transparency of sketch showing roll call. {1331|1332}

THE WITNESS: There came a signal which was given by a gong, and from that moment on nobody who moved in the camp – no movement in the camp was allowed. This means anybody who would move, apart from the S.S., would be shot. Then the S.S., when everything was absolutely still, counted – a separate S.S. – the number of prisoners in each Block, and this was conveyed to a table here in the middle where the camp commander was sitting, and his registrars, and he knew exactly how many people are in the camp on that particular evening, and it was then said that so many and so many prisoners are present. It was not identified if they are dead or alive.

When everything was all right, then that was the end of the roll call. If one prisoner was missing in the general count., then the procedures were initiated to find the prisoner, and if that prisoner wasn't find, either in the latrine or under some bed, within twenty minutes an alarm went out that the prisoner is missing; but this happened very rarely.

Once this count has been confirmed, the roll call was called off, but before it was called off guards mounted the towers which are here in small quadrangles, and the camp was thus hermetically sealed. In other words, it was known that nobody of a prisoner can be found between the inner and outer perimeter. This means the roll call confirmed that all prisoners in Birkenau camp – at that time only this camp was operating – all prisoners were inside this quadrangle and all prisoners were inside this quadrangle. And then, with the exception of prisoners who might have been at the ramp {1332|1333} under special guard – and this was noted, that so and so, many are under such and such a guard, and when it was agreed that this is so, then electricity was switched into the wires and that is guards were called off because there was nobody in between.

After that the bodies were being disposed. So this means, if I can have ...

We are starting a procession. One man carried one body, and from the whole camp you could see a peculiar doubles marching to this place.

Q. Indicating a mortuary.

A. Yes. And sometimes it was difficult to see which one is dead and which one is alive because they were bone and skin. So that the live one was carrying the dead one with his head here and dragging him behind and holding on his hands, brought him to the mortuary, and there he put him down and the name of the dead one was written down into a book and the dead body was stapled here and in this wooden shack the bodies were stapled in tens again so that it can be easily counted.

Q. Stacked in tens.

A. Stacked in tens. And in the months of January, February, March, April 1943 the number of bodies were between three hundred and five hundred. The number of people in the camp varied close to fifteen thousand, very rough estimate.

MR. CHRISTIE: Is that fifteen or fifty?

THE WITNESS: Fifteen. In the main camp, roughly. This means it can be twelve, it can be {1333|1334} eighteen. It varied from —

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: That's just the males, not the women?

A. Not the women, no. The women – between the men and the women there was a road and gates, so that there was no communication; but the same process was going on at the women's camp. They were like mirror camps.

Now, here the bodies were stacked, and I waited until midnight. At midnight there was some working done on the bodies.

THE COURT: There was a ...

THE WITNESS: Work done on the bodies. There was a special Kommando, work group, which was called Leiche[n]kommando, dead body Kommando, and they used a special instrument which in modern time the ladies use for curling the hair.

MR. CHRISTIE: Again, I don't know, I don't know whether this witness is giving hearsay evidence.

THE WITNESS: I happened to be present. This was taking place while I was sitting here having the coffee with Wetzler. And two younger boys who were the assistants were opening the mouths of the dead bodies and with the mirror checking if he had got gold teeth. If there were gold teeth, he went in with that instrument and broke out those gold teeth and they were put into a tin.

Normally, when there were three, four hundred bodies, the tin would be the size of a litre tin which was full, and it was gold and meat tissue and blood {1334|1335} altogether.

Now, around midnight would come S.S. man with the same lorry which I have described many times from that lorry fleet, and he would ask for the paper for the dead which Fred, my friend, has prepared, and I often help him with that.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: That's Fred Wetzler?

A. Wetzler, yes. And then, with assistance would load the body on to the truck which was a process which was done in such a way with four assistants – two were on the truck and two were down on the truck and two were swinging the body to the truck, and when the body hits a truck, the two on the truck again took the body and swung it into the back of the truck, and at the back of the truck there were again two guys and they were doing this ...

Q. Stacking?

A. Stacking into tens: and when all was finished, when all was finished then the papers between the S.S. men and Wetzler were exchanged, in which Wetzler got a receipt for so and such bodies of such and such numbers, and such and such tin of gold teeth. But the habit was that the S.S. men liked to write, "Half a tin", because the tin was full, of one tin, or "One tin" when there were two tins. And when Wetzler signed that, he got a box of cigars.

The bodies, then, I could see the car when it was loaded – can I have the picture, please – when out this road. Here was the first gate.

Q. Indicating a road in the middle of {1335|1336} the men's camp.

A. Yes. These were brick barracks, and these were wooden barracks, and here is a road which was wide enough for trucks. The trucks went this way. By the way everything was written up here, thousands of bulbs were burning.

THE COURT: Everything was lit up?

THE WITNESS: Yes. Thousands of bulbs were burning. And he went here with a car, and then he came here to the gate, then he turned at the gate. At the gate he was searched. The car was searched at the gate – if there is no living body hidden in the car. So a sort of a search went through.

Once that search went through, he turned the car here, went here into the crematoria and behind the corner, which I couldn't see ...

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. If you couldn't see it, you can't tell us what happened.

A. And then I saw him after five minutes returning this way and going home.

Q. Out the camp ...

A. Out of the camp, his duty was finished.

Q. What happened to the people that were not dead but were stacked with the dead people at the roll call? You said those who couldn't stand up for the roll call were stacked with the dead people.

MR. CHRISTIE: I didn't hear him say that.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, I did. Have I got that wrong? {1336|1337}

MR. CHRISTIE: There's been a fair amount of leading thus far, but I do suggest that is a leading statement. Maybe the witness will agree with it. I don't know.

THE COURT: I don't agree with it, and that's the important thing. One, he has not been – the Crown has not been leading, and two, I heard the witness say that the living and the dead were stacked up together. Is that correct?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: What happened to those who were living who were not able to stand for the roll call?

A. There were several procedures which varied from place to place.

THE COURT: Just what you know.

THE WITNESS: From what I have seen.

THE COURT: From what you have seen, exactly.

THE WITNESS: Some of the Block leaders – this depended on the decision of the Block leaders. May I please have the map again?

The Block leaders might have decided a short process, in which case the half the prisoners was killed in a way that the coffee was brought in demijohns, and they had ears through which carrying woods, stacked through.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Could you compare a demijohn to a milk can in terms of size? {1337|1338}

A. Yes. The tea was carried, was carried into the Block in a demijohn from the barrack container which would contain tea for thousand people which was big at least two hundred fifty litres, if every party should get at least one fifth of a litre, and these had two ears made – the barrel was from wood and the ears were made from metal. In order that such a bottle can be carried, there were two wooden rods of considerable massivity which were pulled through the ears, and two prisoners, one here and one here, would hold it – I am not a very good painter – and carry it. They were carrying it from the kitchen to the barrack; and when it was emptied from the barrack to the kitchen.

Now, those rods –

Q. The wooden rods?

A. The wooden rods, when the thing was not carried, were not in those ears but laying by the side. So the people who were still alive and the Blockeltester, or the Block senior, was one of the German professional criminals with the green triangle.

Q. We will get to that.

A. Then he would put the rod upon the neck of the prisoner and balance on it for a minute or two until there was no sign of life, and –

Q. You saw this with your own eyes?

A. Many times. Now, there were other Blockeltesters who didn't like this procedure, and they had introduced – we need a map, the map of Birkenau.

THE COURT: Exhibit 18.

MR. GRIFFITHS: That would be the sketch of the barrel, Your Honour. {1338|1339}

— EXHIBIT NO. 18: Transparency – Sketch of barrel.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Now, you put on Exhibit 16, which is the map of Birkenau.

A. This was a main kitchen here.

Q. Indicating the upper left quadrangle of what you described the men's camp in the bottom in that quadrangle.

A. Yes. And this was a so-called sauna where the newcomers from the ramp were bathed and shaven and deprived of their clothes.

Q. And that's in the upper righthand quadrangle at the bottom of that quadrangle?

A. Yes. That's "F". But here, this Block was called Block 7 and Block 8 and was called Krankenbau, which means building for sick people – in other words, I should have translated it to hospital, but I don't dare to translate it as such because it means something different in our language, and I am trying to reproduce the vernacular of the Nazi language as it was used at that time.

Now, this prisoners, this procedure required a little bit of paperwork because the Blockeltester, the senior of the Block, had to make a transfer list and send that person with the transfer list to this Krankenbau, to this hospital, where he was accepted and put in a bunker.

Q. You've been in the hospital?

A. Yes, several times, because Fred Wetzler, when he was not working in the mortuary, was {1339|1340} stationed in Barrack 7 for taking care of the half-dead. In other words, the difference between taking care of dead and half-dead was sort of done by the same person.

Now, in this Krankenbau there were absolutely no facilities for any medical treatment, and as a rule there was no water or minimal water, and there were no beds but certain bunks. That looked from inside this way. There was a wall along the barrack and this is a wall, and along this wall there were three rows of boxes, like pens for animals, and those sick people were put five per pen into the pen with one blanket or with no blanket, and they didn't have to go any more for roll call. The roll call were done simply that by walking around, they counted five per pen as they didn't bother to drag them out and to drag them back; and when somebody was dead, then the living threw him out from the pen and then he was collected and was proclaimed dead.

The number of those who came into this hospital and survived was perhaps one to a hundred, the chances. In other words, a hospital was sort of – the Krankenbau was such a thing that when the Blockeltester was fussy and didn't want to kill the prisoner who was dying, they brought him to this so-called hospital and there he was left to die. However, it was a hospital filled up too much, so that there was no space; there is no space for more than seven or eight hundred prisoners. Then one of those trucks would come into the hospital.

Q. Exhibit 16 ...

A. One of the trucks would come here with an SDG – Sanitäts Dienst Gefreiter – Corporal of the Sanitary Service, and all prisoners now had to go for a {1340|1341} roll call. All were dragged out from those bunks and lined up, and those who were not standing went to one side, and those who could stand were taken back into the block, or sometimes they decided that the whole situation is untenable, in which case the dead and the dying were loaded on that truck, which I know from the ramp and the mortuary, they were loaded on the truck. If it went standing, then standing; if it went legs, then legs. The truck was closed, turn, came out here, came out here, and moved here, and that's the last we saw from them.

Q. In the Krematorium II?

A. In the Krematorium. Papers were signed so that the truck driver had to sign that he took so and so many prisoners away.

So that the next roll call, the Blockeltesters, the senior of the block, has got a paper saying that, "I've got so and so much prisoners", and the missing ones have to be taken away on the truck.

THE COURT: Exhibit 19 will be the sketch of the barrack of the sick.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

— EXHIBIT NO 19: Transparency – Sketch of barrack of sick persons.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You told us earlier that initially there was, in January, when you first moved to Birkenau, that there was just a barbed wire fence around Krematorium II. Did that ever change?

A. Barbed wire fence?

Q. I think that's what you said.

A. Yes. Can I have the picture? {1341|1342}

Q. Did that ever change? Was there ever any change in that fencing?

A. There was no change in the fencing except that the krematorium, this crematorium, Krematorium II, had the fencing perimeter, and Krematorium III was not finished. When Krematorium III was finished some time later, they connected the fences and made common entrances for both crematoria, whereas before this was finished and this was finished several months later, there was entrance only here.

Q. Krematorium II?

A. Yes. So they adjust the fences around the crematoria as they built up the crematoria.

Similarly, they started to build simultaneously Krematorium IV and Krematorium V, which I had many times opportunity to see after I had been transferred.

Q. Now, you said you were working on the ramps, and in Kanada, I believe you said until June 8, 1943.

A. Right.

Q. And did you then change jobs?

A. Yes. There came a possibility and an opportunity to change jobs.

Q. And were there any – perhaps you can explain to us what your new job was and any changes in the camp that led to your new job.

A. While seeing going on the mass murder on the ramp, I had plans to escape from the ramp. However, without going into details what was the weaknesses of the ramp and what was the plans of the escape, I suddenly realized that the Germans noticed the weaknesses {1342|1343} too and made great architectural changes on the ramp which made my escape from the ramp not probable as a success. And therefore I used the opportunity, on June 8th, for June 8th this was already build up – between January 15, 1943 and June 8, 1943 they were building this camp, which was a camp BII, Birkenau IIB – this was Birkenau I, IA and IB.

Now, this complex was Birkenau II, and then it had subsections "A", "B", "C", "D", "E" and "F", whereas Birkenau I had subsections "A" and "B", "A" being the women, and "B" being the men.

Now, all men from Birkenau IB were transferred to Birkenau IID; that was our new camp. This was a new male camp, and after disinfecting the remaining barracks the women got both parts of this camp. In other words, there was a bigger influx or bigger need for female wards, and they converted them, "A" and "B" in June into women camp, whereas all men were in "B" IID.

Now, by that time I was a year or almost a year in the concentration camp Auschwitz, and anybody who lived that long started to have various friends. Acquaintances were struck up, mainly acquaintances which came from freedom and were often of political nature – people who were in the same trade union or in the same Czech Nationalist Party, or in the same Polish Army unit, or in the same brigade in Spain during the fight against Franco, or in the same district of a Communist Party, or of a Social Democratic Party, they recognize themselves and they started to organize themselves clandestinely.

Q. Clandestinely? {1343|1344}

A. Yes.

Q. Secretly?

A. Secretly, yes, because any sort of such an organization would be punished draconically. This was against the rules. However, the objective of that was to improve the camp living standards, and this was necessary by eliminating the criminals from their position.

Q. You can stop there. You mentioned this earlier, and I wonder if we can take this opportunity to talk about the different categories of prisoners at Birkenau and Auschwitz and how, whether they were identifiable from their uniform, their prison garb and how they were identifiable.

A. Well, with some experience it was possible for an experienced man in Auschwitz to identify from a simple look at the prisoner quite a few things, but for that one required already some experience, because there were no handbooks.

Now, each prisoner had a number, not only tattooed on his hand, but also sewn on his garb, and say if a prisoner had a number 23220 on his garb, there was a triangle, and if the triangle was red, this means that they considered him a political prisoner. If the triangle was green – I don't have green pencils here – this means that the prisoner is a criminal by profession before he came to the camp. If the triangle was violet, that meant that he is in concentration camp because of studying the Bible, this means pacifist gentleman, Jehovah Witnesses who came to concentration camp because they made pacifist propaganda which didn't suit the Nazis. {1344|1345}

Q. Well, anyway, Jehovah Witnesses.

A. Yes. Those who had black triangles were called anti-social elements, and that comprised either people who were accused of avoiding honest work. Then there were [was] a different colour of purple, which were people who were accused of homosexuality.

So by this, as far as the Jews were concerned, who were the majority in the camp, they had a red triangle, but underneath [sic] the red triangle there was a yellow triangle, so that it altogether gave a David Star with a yellow background which meant political Jew.

Now, by looking at the people I could, for instance, say that if somebody had the number 30000 and had a political triangle, red with a yellow background, I knew that he is probably a Slovak Jew just by looking at him and from the number, because I knew when the number came in. I came in into Auschwitz on 30 June, 1944, and my number was 44000, and because to recognize with whom I am meeting, and the camp was full of victims of the so-called political department – this means informants – there were many informers who came into the camp and left children, mothers, fathers and so on at home and the political department said, "Either you work for us or we kill your children" —

THE COURT: No. Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You can only tell us what you heard or saw, not what somebody else said to you.

A. Right. It was necessary to recognize the people as much as possible in order to survive. So those were the times. {1345|1346}

Q. All right. So before I stop you, you are going to tell us what your new job is that you are able to get because of your connections and seniority in the camp.

A. Having had considerable seniority after living almost one year in the camp and looking healthy, again – I, of course, went through typhus and various things, but after I overcome it and collected myself, I gain the confidence of various members of various political parties.

THE COURT: Just —

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Tell us what you did or what you were assigned to.

A. I were [was] assigned to be assistant registrar in Block IID.

Q. What does that mean? What does a registrar do?

A. I was in Block IID, in Birkenau IID, Block 9, and an assistant registrar would have a file of prisoners who are in this block, in Block 9.

Q. In the barracks, yes.

A. And would, on their account, go to the kitchen and get the bread and soup and tea for those people, and he would also, every day, prepare the papers for the roll call. So he would say that of this barrack are 920 people; of that are 397 Jews, 257 Poles and 22 German – something like that – the statistics of the barrack. And as long as there was no hitch with the roll call, he didn't have much else to do.

In other words, it was an easy work. If the roll call didn't fit, then he was in danger, because {1346|1347} if he made an error and the roll call had to stand and the whole S.S. had to stand a couple of hours until they found out he made an error in the number of prisoners that nobody was missing, then he was killed. So there is a risk, but otherwise reasonably comfortably work.

Q. Now, from being assistant registrar in the men's camp, Birkenau II, did you change your job again?

A. Very soon. In July 1943 they open a new camp. Meanwhile this camp was occupied, "B", these two rows, and they opened a camp BIIA, which was quarantine camp.

Q. Quarantine camp?

A. Quarantine camp. And they started a new way of accepting prisoners. Until then, once they accepted the prisoners from ramps – this means those who were selected for work and not to be trucked away you know where – those prisoners were first put into the quarantine camp for two, three or four months so that the health officers of Auschwitz can say that they are decreasing the dangers of typhus by having the new ones – because typhus and various diseases [sic] at Auschwitz are caused from outside, so consequently, when there was a transport from the ramp came, and those who were chosen not to work, they were then transported either here into this complex, but those who were chosen to work were transported in the quarantine camp and registered.

Now my job was to take the names, to take their nationality, birth date, background. There was a card about everyone – age, profession, various informations – race, origin of place – and then he said {1347|1348} that he lived in Block 6 or Block 7 or Block 8. So this means, when a transport of three thousand people came and two thousand seven hundred went into these barracks –

Q. In the direction of the crematoria.

A. — or in this direction, then three hundred came here.

Q. Into the quarantine camp.

A. Quarantine camp. And now I had the possibility. of speaking with them because they saw elderly prisoner better dressed with pencil and paper, etcetera, and the possibility of giving them a piece of bread.

Q. Now, you can't tell us what was said to you, but can you show us which barrack, or which block you were a recorder or registrar of?

A. I was a registrar of Barrack 15.

Q. Second from the gate.

A. This was the main gate. This means that any truck whatever had to pass into Birkenau complex either through this main gate, this means I could see in the distance of approximately forty to fifty yards, or it went this way – this is the road.

Q. On the bottom of the camp?

A. Yes. This was not built up, and there was only one way which led into Krematorium IV and Krematorium V. So this means that by daytime, if the transports arrived from the ramp, I could count every car which went either this way, every truckload, or which went either this way, and because my experience in Kanada on the ramp, I knew that a hundred per truck, simply by counting those trucks knew how many people came more or {1348|1349} less; but I know that the number hundred was kept pretty close. The trucks were coming by from the ramp one after the other, but not very densely because it takes the time to roll the truck and they came accompanied by two motor bicycles, they were usually the side cars, one motorbiker and on the side car a machine gunner so that nobody gets any ideas of jumping down from the truck.

And those cars went in front of my eyes here or in front of my eyes here. In the night, when I was, say, asleep at two o'clock, when such a car went by, my barrack shook and all I had to do was to count how many times it shook to know how many trucks went that way, or to count how many times it went that way, because when you are in such a barrack you know if it shakes from which side it shakes, small distances.

Moreover, in my role as a registrar of the block I had to many times go out in front of my block because there are no windows, only on top, but I could, under the pretext of controlling the guards in front of the barrack who were responsible for the latrine – in other words, to control if the latrine is full, if the latrine is not full – you had to go put of the barrack and take a look at what's happening. Moreover, if the latrine was full, which was a barrel, in my clothes which was a little bit better as registrar I would take the prisoners and tell them to empty the barrels in the middle of the night into the lavatories, here, so that the barrack is not, so to say, contaminated by feces; and under the pretext of sanitation, etcetera, etcetera, I could many times in the night take to prisoners this two big barrels of excrement and move in the night to the official toilets, because {1349|1350} by the night prisoners were not allowed to go to the official toilets, they were not allowed to out to the barracks and see what happened.

Q. May I stop you there?

MR. GRIFFITHS: It is one o'clock, Your Honour. Is this a convenient time?

THE COURT: Two thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury returns. 2:30 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Prior to the morning break there was a transparency on which Dr. Vrba made some notations as to the different colours of badges, and I'd ask that that be marked as the next exhibit, please, Your [Your] Honour.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 20.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you.

— EXHIBIT NO. 20: Transparency – sketch describing triangles worn by camp inmates.

Q. Dr. Vrba, this morning, at the break, {1350|1351} you were describing for us your new position in the camp close to the main gate and your new job as a block registrar or block recorder.

A. The translation would be Block Scribe.

Q. Could you just tell us, briefly, about what the organization of the camp would be in terms of – you mentioned block elders and block registrars. How was the camp organized in that way?

A. This is Auschwitz I, the external perimeter of guards. This is Auschwitz I, the internal perimeter of guards, and I have magnified this quadrant so that it is clear what was inside.

Q. This is the internal camp of Auschwitz I?

A. Of Auschwitz I.

MR. CHRISTIE: Perhaps he would be so kind as to identify the origin of this drawing.

THE COURT: Yes, I agree. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths. Would you do that for us, please?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Can you tell us where this plan of Auschwitz I comes from?

MR. CHRISTIE: I think it comes from Phillip Mueller.

THE WITNESS: It comes from Martin Gilbert's book, "Auschwitz and the Allies".

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: If I may lead, does it come from a book by Phillip Mueller?

A. This is quite possible. This is quite possible, but no matter which book it comes, I can {1351|1352} recognize it as an original drawing and identify each building here.

Q. All right. I am not going to ask you to identify each building, but perhaps you could indicate to us how the hierarchy of the prison, of the concentration camp, the organization of the blocks of the camps

A. Here is the main entrance to the camp. The camp is surrounded with a double layer of electrical fences, and those are the guarded towers. This construction here is a kitchen.

Q. Rough U-shape at the bottom of the drawing.

A. Is a kitchen. On top of the kitchen is an inscription, "For all prisoners". Now, the blocks are numbered from 1 to 11. This is a former female camp that I mentioned yesterday.

Q. That you crawled through naked after the typhus epidemic?

A. Yes.

Q. And after that I was stationed in the cell area of Block 4. Block 11 was the so-called punishment block which belonged to the realm of organization which called herself political department of Auschwitz concentration camp. Basically, this was the interrogation place.

Q. I am going to stop you. Unless you were in there, you can't tell us about it.

A. Pardon?

Q. Unless you were in there, you can't tell us about it. {1352|1353}

A. I have been stationed for some time, and when I worked in Buna, in Block 10, from the windows of Block 10 I could see what was happening here.

Q. In Block 11.

A. However, I was in Block 4. Each of the blocks had Blockälteste, senior prisoner, and this senior prisoner, in each block, had a second in command, then each block had the Blockschreibe, which translated literally would mean block scribe not registrar.

Q. But we have been calling that block registrar this morning.

A. Yes. Literary translation would be "scribe".

Q. Thank you.

A. Each of those block scribes knew exactly how many prisoners are in each of the blocks, and here, I think, in one of these blocks

Q. To the left of the kitchen.

A. — to the left of the kitchen was a building which was called Hauptschreibstube, which I translated means Chief Writing office. This means Central Registration Office. Each prisoner brought to the camp and through this gate would be first processed. This means he would be taken into the sauna for a bath, which would be Block 1, I think, and he would go in and leave his clothes outside, and when he comes out on the other side, he will be naked and he will get prisoner garb.

From that moment on the only permitted property of a prisoner was one handkerchief. Pencil, paper, anything of that sort was considered conspiracy and would be punished very strictly if found on regular visits. {1353|1354}

After this was the scribes from the Central Office and would take chairs and tables and parade the prisoners. Each prisoner would have a file card on which was his name, birth date, nationality, origin and date when he came in, plus a place for special remarks, and his number, which he received in the camp. The numbers were consecutive and the dead prisoners' number was never revealed.

After the file has been made, the file has been given to one of the block scribes wherever it was a decision that this particular prisoner goes, and then the card was in the file of the block scribe as well as a file in the Central Office.

Thus, the scribes in each of those blocks knew exactly how many prisoners are any time there, and if a prisoner died he has to be identified by his number, which at the start was written with grey pencil, with an ink pencil, on his forearm and on his chest so that the bodies of dead which accumulated every day in front of the blocks were identified in the evening by reading the numbers.

Q. Did that system change of writing the numbers on in ink?

A. The system of ink writing numbers changed because ink wore off, and so it was replaced with tattooing. So this would be approximately the same in Birkenau.

Q. Can you show us where in Birkenau that process would take place?

A. Yes. Yes. In Birkenau the map of Birkenau is here. {1354|1355}

Q. Exhibit 16.

A. And when I refer to Birkenau, and always this far in January 1943 was occupied by prisoners. The Schreibstube was in Block 4 which would mean this block — 1, 2, 3, 4 — here was the Schreibstube.

Q. So that is the upper righthand quadrant of Birkenau I in the first row of blocks.

A. Here. When the men in this main camp were transferred to Bau Auschwitz II, building Section I to Building Section II, then this Section II, the only prisoners were in building Section IID. That is here, these two rows. This here was a kitchen, and this here was a Chief Schreibstube.

Q. And you are indicating the kitchen immediately below the words "BIID", or the numbers or letters.

A. Yes.

Q. And opposite that in the "BIID" camp was the Registrar's Office.

A. That's right. Now, when I was transferred from BIID into BIIA, then the Registrar's Office, if I remember well, was here in Block 1, the Chief Registrar's Office.

Q. And that would be the Registrar in what camp?

A. For BI 8.

Q. For the quarantined camp?

A. Yes. I was in No. 15, the block scribe. I was the sub to the first scribe in BIID, and this scribe was sub in the scribe of BIID, whose name was Gorrik (phonetic) a prisoner with the number of 32000, {1355|1356} and this chief scribe was then sub to the chief scribe in Auschwitz 1.

So that at the top of the hierarchy was the top administration of Auschwitz I, and the administration in Auschwitz II, as far as prisoners is concerned, went through Chief Scribe in BIID under whom were all scribes, each in the individual blocks, and the Chief Scribe of BIIA.

Q. Now, the lorries that you heard coming by in the nighttime, or that you saw going in the daytime, can you tell us if they ever went to the registration places?

A. No. The people who went to registration places were never brought in by lorry. They were marched from the ramp, which was not more than one half kilometer away, under guard, into the sauna,

Q. Yes. In the men's camp.

A. Yes, in the men's camp. And when this men's camp became a female camp, then they were marched on foot between Krematoria IV and V. There was also a sauna. I am not so sure what exactly is it — "F" on this map — because much has been changed. This map has been made approximately two, three months after I escaped from certain details, I would say.

So all those prisoners who went in through the registration process and have got a number came to the camp on foot, because they were small groups. Those who came into the camp from the ramp on those dumping trucks, they never enter any of those camps, but enter the camp by only one possible entrance — two possible entrances. The main entrance was here. {1356|1357}

Q. You indicate "A" at the bottom of the diagram.

A. That's right. This was a big tower and a building of a rather considerable length which harbour inside the building, according to my observations, a so-called Bereitschaft [Bereitschaft], which means emergency unit. This means that day or night there was a unit of S.S. which was completely dressed and armed, you know, just like in an ambulance waiting for any I event. So this was a research, which did have nothing to do but to be called up in case of trouble.

Can I have the picture, please?

Consequently, the lorries which came from the ramp entered this gate and went to the landing between Krematorium II and Krematorium III, which were having a common queue of guards. Here you can see the towers — 1, 2, 3, 4.

Another way how to transport the victim to the Krematorium IV and V was that they went here and between BIID and BIIC, which is here. BIIC is this camp, and BIID this camp; here a road of considerable width. And this road ends here blindly and goes into the yard of Krematorium IV and Krematorium V, which is again enclosed with an electrical fence and guarded towers. Here is a gate to it.

Consequently, those prisoners who came to the camp were coming on foot, and because there was now, from June 8th, 1943, registrar, I could see each face of them because they had to pass through registration in this camp which was their first stop. They stayed there for three, four weeks, or three, four months. The administration in that respect weren't very clear and many of them died in quarantine.

Q. All right. Now, Dr. Vrba, if I can go ahead a little bit to the events surrounding April 7.

A. My escape.

Q. Yes, sir. And I am going to ask you, we heard a lot about a chain of guards and electric fences, and I am going to ask you how you escaped.

A. If I may first have the previous picture, if I may.

THE COURT: You are looking at Exhibit ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: 16, Your Honour.

THE WITNESS: This was Building Section 1. This was called Building Section 2. And in April 7, when I escaped, the Building Section 1 was full, but Building Section 2 was not quite full. Here was a quarantine camp in "A". In "B" was a family camp which had a tragic end. They are Czech families from Theresienstadt, a ghetto, who were kept for six months before they were gassed on 7 March, just before I escape. This camp was empty. Here, in "D", was the main camp and the main mass of the prisoners. In "E" were gypsies, because the gypsies has not been considered Aryan race, were rounded up and kept here for some time in "BIIE" until they were later gassed, and that's "BIII". Here is a small camp called "BIIF", and this was called the hospital camp. So from this hospital in Block No. 7 they made a quite a big complex of number of things. This third part was in building and it was not called anything {1358|1359} at that time except it is a future building Section 3.

Now, because those barracks did not yet exist, but the wood for those barracks did exist —

Q. The wood for the barracks.

A. Yes. And the wood was put together in the way how you see wood put together in large shops in Toronto which sell lumber. Say if you are coming to a lumber yard, you can see ten wagons on foot stapled in a certain way.

Q. Stacked?

A. Stacked. Now, when the woods were stacked, the building of the woods of the stack was made in such a way that there was a stack of approximately ten wagons of wood. The stack has an irregular shape as in the lumber business yards, and in one part there was an empty space made, not filled with wood, and covered again with wood.

Now, I would like to go to the — and this was approximately here.

Q. Indicating in the future building area 3.

A. In the future building area 3. Now, I would like to show this place which I will mark here with a pencil. Roughly here. Now, the system —

MR. GRIFFITHS: We are going to put on Exhibit No. 11.

THE WITNESS: Now, I have this whole map in a larger scale as it was drawn up by me from my memory back in 1944, and that place which I marked as a hiding place was here.

Now, the system which operated against prevention of escape was a system common to all German concentration camps, and because the Germans had an experience of concentration camps since 1933, it was considered foolproof.

Q. I am going to stop you and ask you about the system in this camp that you know of.

A. Right. The system was the following:

There were the killer camps including the crematoria here which were surrounded by barbed wires which consisted of electrical fences in double rows; and before this barbed wire there was a ditch which could be approximately four to five yards deep.

Q. Did you see that?

A. Yes, because you couldn't not see it, living in the camp. Now, this ditch has been made by hand by prisoners. It was a long process. They had to ditch it — the earth was carried in hats, and enormous ditches were built. Now, again this is in red. Here is the electric fence, and here was a gate to the individual subsections — Section 11, Section 12, Section 13, etcetera.

By daytime, when the day broke, the prisoners were woken up by the dawn and lined up in front of their barracks for the roll call.

Q. Now, if it all checked out, the roll call was all right, what happened then?

A. When the roll call was all right, the prisoners were aligned for work outside the inner camp in this outer area, and when it was given the signal that the roll call was all right, then guards marched out, {1360|1361} different guards, to this area.

Q. The outer chain of sentry posts on your map.

A. That's right. Now, this outer chain of sentries then operated in such a way that when each was on its place and this was a diameter of about two kilometers, thus it was about six kilometers long and not connected with the road, it was all smooth, so that from the towers which are here marked, from a crossfire not a mouse could come through.

Now, when the signal was given that everything is all right here, then they went to their places and were checked in the following way:

One guy shouted this direction, "The queue stands". This guy shouted to this guy, and this band, this shouting, until the shout of, "I am in my place" started. Once this procedure was finished, there was no use to keep the guards in this electrically guarded fence, because prisoners were enclosed here. The guards from here came down and went home, and the electrical current was switched off.

Now, the prisoners marched to work in units of a hundred, two hundred, three hundred or five hundred. Say they marched to work in Krematorium IV and V, say they marched to move earth for the camp, make it flat, etcetera. So suddenly the camp is full with ten to fifteen thousand prisoners — not individual. I mean the freedom of movement was not that an individual prisoner could move around, just move around in columns, teams, and each team had a Kapo and each Kapo had a list of the prisoners which were accompanying him for which he was {1361|1362} personally responsible. So if one prisoner would wander around here, around the place which was teeming with S. S. men and Kapos, he would be very fast picked up as a loiterer.

Now, my system, then, was the following ... Now I need the other map.

Q. Exhibit 16 now is projected.

A. Yes. My job was every day to report to the Chief Scribe. This means I went from my block to the Chief Scribe of the block of this camp, and there were collected all reports from each block — how many prisoners in each block, how many are dead, etcetera, etcetera — the technical details.

Now, the Chief Scribe could either take the bundle of papers and bring it to the Chief Scribe here, or say that he is busy and delegates his work to me, which he did with considerable preference delegating it to me for the following reasons —

THE COURT: Well, he delegated his work to you.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: He delegated his work to you. So what did you do when he delegated it to you? What freedom of movement did you get?

A. Well, I got a certain freedom of movement. The freedom of movement consisted that I was allowed to go out of this gate. Here is a gate that I have to say my number and the purpose of my trip. Then I would walk here, which is a distance of approximately five hundred yards. Here was again a gate.

Q. In "BIID"?

A. In "BIID". Here was again a gate {1362|1363} and I had to say again my number. The number was noted that I came, for what purpose and to what, and go with the paper to the Scribe, the Chief Scribe.

Now, once I have done it, nobody really would control me if I moved around the camp among the thousand prisoners which moved around. Fred Wetzler who was in the old camp was suddenly separated from me, so it was natural that I would go to Fred Wetzler to visit him and to discuss our mutual business. This was already illegal, but not that risky because by daytime there are not many S.S. men here inside, and I was dressed like a scribe and they are not worried if I am a scribe from this camp or that camp – he wouldn't know.

Secondly, I could do another thing. Using my trip I would, instead of going here ...

Q. Into the men's camp.

A. ... into the men's camp, take a bundle of papers and go between the crematoria into the baths; that baths was used very frequently by members of the Sonderkommando. The Sonderkommando had the property of the people who had to undress before they went to the gas chamber and were stealing quite a bit of it before they were giving it to the Germans. Consequently, I think the presence of various people who knew me and marched here as if nothing happened back to my camp, BIIA, where I had to go through the S.S. men, the S.S. men would ask me, "Did you bring me the stockings?"

Q. You can't tell us what they said.

A. Pardon?

Q. You can't tell us what the S.S. men would say. {1363|1364}

A. He did say.

THE COURT: Never mind what he said. Just answer the question.

THE WITNESS: The S.S. men —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Do a little more controlling here, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: You can't tell us, Dr. Vrba, the words that were said by the S.S. men. Would you have any conversation, without telling us what it is, with the S.S. men?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And as a result of that conversation would you do anything? Did you do anything as a result of your conversation with him?

A. Yes, I did. As a result of this conversation, produce a pair of stockings and give it to him. If I did that he didn't ask me how come —

Q. I'm sorry, I think – I don't think you can say what he wouldn't ask you; but you'd give him the stockings.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And what effect, if anything, did that have or seemed to have on your freedom of movement?

A. Well, this enabled me to move along this path with relative freedom, because otherwise it was checked on the clock when I left the camp and when I came back to the camp, and it is clear that I had only half an hour for that.

Q. How would you have access to that area where the wood pile was? How would you have access to that area where the wood pile was? {1364|1365}

A. Just like I would go here. I could take a risk, pretending that I am now not a block scribe, but a what they call a foreman, with a bundle of papers, and go here and move around that prisons and pretend that I am writing or something. So I gained a certain freedom of going frequently into this area, frequently into this area, and frequently loitering around this area.

Q. How was it you were able to escape? You said you went into that area. What did you do?

A. Here was built up a bunker, as I mentioned, and I knew that the bunker is built up.

Q. This is the wooden pile you told us about?

A. The wooden pile. That wooden pile was build [built] up by people unknown to me. This required a considerable amount of organization to build it up, because hundreds of prisoners had to build it.

Q. You can't tell us what you didn't see.

A. Yes.

Q. Specifically, on April 7th, what did you do, you and Mr. Wetzler?

A. On April 7 Wetzler and I had a meeting on this place. This means that Wetzler, under a pretext, being a scribe here —

Q. BIIID.

A. BIIID – went out from here and came here.

Q. To the roadway?

A. To the road. Along this road into {1365|1366} the Mexico, into this building Part 3.

Q. The building part was called Mexico, into this part of the camp?

A. This part of the camp later called Mexico, but they called it in the building Part 3. And together so that we see one another we went by different rows to the place where we were hiding, supposed to hide. On that same place, again from different opinion, two prisoners who were detached from BIIID and were detached to work in this camp ...

Q. Mexico.

A. In Mexico, in Section 3, absconded from their group, and we all four met at the enormous wood pile here and nobody could see us because the wood pile had an irregular form. So there was sort of corridors made. The two prisoners would then take down six or seven layers of wood on a certain place. Wetzler and I would slip into that place. They would cover it up and go away. And now started a different process.

Now, for that I will need the bigger map. The process was as follows:

At five o'clock, before it gets dark, all who work in this area are marched back here.

Q. To the inner camp.

A. To the inner camp. When they are all in, the gates are closed and the record on the gate is first checked – if everybody went back who went out. So already they found a record that I went out but didn't come back.

Q. If you are inside the woodpile, you can't tell us, obviously, what was going on outside {1366|1367} the woodpile. Did you ever have any experience as to what would happen if there was a number short?

A. That's right. This is the system explaining. This means that I knew in advance every step which would take place, because I knew the system.

Q. Okay.

A. So where this happens, then the S.S. at the gates did not become too nervous because they sometime were sloppy. So in other words, the gates are closed, the electric was put in and the roll call here start.

Q. Now, what happens if the roll call is short some people and they can't be found in twenty minutes?

A. Meanwhile both queues are standing.

Q. So the outer chain of guards is standing as well?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, what you are doing here is, the witness is extrapolating what would usually occur because he knew the system. That has gone far enough. Ask him what happened next, to his own personal knowledge, because unless you can prove that the system worked in precisely the same way in this case, I am not interested in having anyone, especially the jury, hear what he expected to happen, because that is something within the confines of his own mind, emanating from his own extrapolations.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think I have your point, Your Honour. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: No. I could check on it. {1367|1368}

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: No, Dr. Vrba, please. You had some understanding of what would happen from prior experience. Don't tell us what you think happened while you were inside the woodpile.

A. Right.

Q. Don't tell us that. How long were you hiding in the woodpile?

A. I went in the woodpile on Friday afternoon on 7 April at two o'clock.

THE COURT: Would you say that again? I missed that.

THE WITNESS: I went into the wood pile on Friday afternoon at two o'clock, 2:00 p.m., on 7 April, 1944.

Q. And when did you come out of the woodpile?

A. I came out from the woodpile on Monday, April 10th, 1944, at nine o'clock p.m., after certain checking of the situation.

Q. All right. When you came out of the woodpile, which direction did you go?

A. I came out from the woodpile first because I could hear that the outer guards gave the signal to withdraw in the usual way. This means I could hear it and I knew that they have to make seventy-two hours.

Q. You heard them give the signal, "Stand down"?

A. That's right. And at this moment I concluded that there were no outer guards, that it is nine o'clock in the evening, that the inner guards are {1368|1369} here and that I am basically a free man.

Q. Which way did you go when you left the camp?

A. Well, I tried to first pass a sentry, the tower sentry, and then tried to go behind this little forest behind this crematoria, and then to cross this railway line, and behind the railway line I knew from previous experience is a river called Sola, and I knew that the river Sola, from certain investigations I made I before during my stay at the camp, goes between the camp Auschwitz, which will be here, and the City of Auschwitz which is approximately here.

Q. I'm sorry, you can't ... "City" is the other circle you made?

A. This is the City of Auschwitz, and this is the River Sola. This River Sola, I learned, originates on the Slovak border in a place called Zwardon. When you look at the map it is a rather straight river.

Q. All right. Let me stop you for just a minute. When you came out of the woodpile and you circled around to get to the River Sola can you tell us what road, if any, you crossed on your way to the railway line?

A. In the first line I found here, in this distance.

Q. North of the woods.

A. North of the woods, and I approached it this way, in the night, of course – it was dark and it was approximately midnight, something which I couldn't differentiate between if it is a river or a road. It was glistening. So I went by and put my fingers in and I saw {1369|1370} that it is sand. So that was a sandband approximately eight meters wide which started from nowhere, and I didn't know how far it goes, and I suspected that this is a minefield. Consequently, because I didn't know how far this went, which is not a road but untouched sand, I decided, instead of going around it, to take the risk and cross it. So I sensed that I will cross that sand and that when he crosses it after me, he should go carefully into the same step which I went.

I crossed and nothing happened. Then he crossed behind me carefully, using the same steps, and after we have done it, we have seen that this so-called road or sand or whatever it was ended approximately after two, three hundred yards. So it was meant to be —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Don't tell us that. Just tell us your observation. Now, you circled around, you said, behind the woods?

A. I circled around behind the woods and reached the railway line at five o'clock in the morning.

Q. Other than the sand that you've told us about did you cross any roads?

A. None whatsoever. It was all moor. It was bog. Because here the River Sola, and here is the River Bistula [Vistula] which have got a lot of meanders, which was boggy and marshy.

Q. I will stop you there for just a minute. I understand that you made your way back to Slovakia.

A. Yes, please. I don't understand your question. {1370|1371}

Q. Did you make it back – did you get back to Slovakia without getting caught?

A. I was caught by a patrol on the next Saturday near a place called Poromka (phonetic) which opened fire at me.

THE COURT: Just a moment. I am not – if this is relevant ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Well, Your Honour, I am trying to get a little further down the road.

THE COURT: See if you can do that.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: I know that things happened to you on the way to Slovakia.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you get to Slovakia safely?

A. Yes. Across the Slovak border on Friday the 21st April at ten o'clock in the morning.

Q. All right. When you got to Slovakia were you able to meet with anybody and tell them of your experiences?

A. Yes. That was my intention to do so, and to that I directed my activity from that moment on.

Q. All right. Can you tell us where you met with these people, what city?

A. I met with those people in the City of Cadca, which was about thirty miles south of the border. – I came to the City of Cadca and I have, meanwhile, collected the information that in City of Cadca lives a doctor called Dr. Pollok (phonetic).

Q. Through Dr. Pollok were you able to make contact with other people and tell your story?

A. That's right. {1371|1372}

Q. All right. And the story that you told, what you observed, did anybody write that down?

A. Immediately.

Q. All right. And did Mr. Wetzler speak to these people as well?

A. We were both together and speaking to these people, which were representatives of the Jewish Council of Slovakia, and actually, it was Dr. Neumann, Dr. Oscar Newmann, engineer, Krasnansky —

Q. And others?

A. And many others – many lawyers.

Q. After you and Mr. Wetzler spoke to these people was something put down in writing?

A. That's right. While we were speaking to the people they had brought a stenographer with them and what I was saying was taken on a stenogram in absence of Mr. Wetzler. What Mr. Wetzler was speaking was taken on a stenogram in my absence.

Q. After you and Mr. Wetzler spoke to these people, was anything written about – again, by the Jewish people about what you had told them?

A. Yes. The stenograms were transcribed into a typewritten text collating the statement of both of us.

Q. Was that written by you or by others, the final text?

A. The final text was typed by a typist, and was presented to me for signature and to Wetzler, to confirm that his typescript contains our words.

MR. GRIFFITHS: All right. Is this {1372|1373} a convenient time, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:55 p.m.

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Vrba, would you tell us whether or not there was any distinctive odour at the Birkenau camp?

A. I was for fifteen months. After fifteen months, if you are in a particular environment which has a particular odour, you don't feel that odour. I couldn't say that I felt a particular odour. Don't forget that in front of each block there were ten, fifteen, twenty dead bodies. Hygienic circumstances were lacking from what we know as civilized hygienic circumstances, and I, after a certain time, found the environment as being adapted to it.

Q. All right. Did you have an opportunity to observe – can you tell us if the crematoria had any smoke stacks?

A. Yes, it did. The crematoria worked {1373|1374} in a peculiar pattern.

Q. Unless you were inside, you can't tell us what goes on inside the crematoria.

A. Only what I can see from outside.

Q. Thank you. Go ahead.

A. From outside, when the transport was sort of about twelve hours after the transport arrived, you could hear a buzzing coming out from the crematoria, and then smoke and flame came up from the chimney. The flame looked approximately like when you here go around Toronto and the burn of oil. I have seen similar chimneys with fire on top of them.

Q. Like the refinery, is that what you mean?

A. Like refinery. Now, this lasted for some time – perhaps an hour, perhaps two – and attracted attention; and as the flame became smaller, the smoke became thicker and there was a thick smoke coming out for some time, perhaps half an hour, perhaps an hour, and then the smoke stopped being so thick and when you look carefully at the chimney, then it would look slight smoke coming out from the chimney, not very different from a smoke which come out from an average house, as far as I recollect.

Q. Have you ever gone by any different name than Rudolf Vrba?

A. I have been going by several different names.

Q. When you were in Auschwitz did you have the name Rudolf Vrba, or another name?

A. No. I have been born as Walter {1374|1375} Rosenberg, and when the Germans made a quizzling [Quisling] government in Czechoslovakia which obeyed their orders and prized [prided] itself that Slovak racial laws are stricter than in Germany, the law has been passed that I must have a middle name, the middle name of Israel; every Jew was called Israel as a middle name. If it was a Jewess it was Sara. Consequently, I was registered in concentration camp Auschwitz as Joseph Israel Rosenberg, and under that name, as far as I know, would have been issued the warrant against me after I escaped. Consequently I never used that name again, and when I arrived in Slovakia I started to use the name Rudolf Vrba for several reasons.

Q. And have you used that name ever since – Rudolf Vrba?

A. I use[d] that name illegally to protect myself against search until September 1944, when I entered the Czechoslovak Army partisan units; but as all my documents were burned in Maidanek, I couldn't show any identity except a false document on the name of Rudolf Vrba, and under that false document I have been enlisted in the Czechoslovak Army which administration insisted that anybody who enlists in the army must have a document. "False document", they said, "We can't see that it is false. It's all right." So the Gestapo said also it's all right. The document falsification was perfect.

However, when the War was over and I have been discharged from the Army into normal civil life, I hesitated to start civil life with a name which is not legalized. Do you mind if I look into my things to refresh my consideration?

Q. No. Is there a document you are {1375|1376} looking for?

A. Yes. Consequently, when I was released from the Army and my release papers were issued on Rudolf Vrba, I have insisted that my original name, Walter Rosenberg, should be included in my release papers, and these are the release papers from the Army.

Q. I will come there. You stay up there.

A. Which were issued in May 1945.

Q. All right.

A. Together with description of my military activities on behalf of my native countries.

Q. What language are your release papers in?

A. The release paper is in the Slovak language.

Q. And what name is given on this document?

A. This document says that it is issued to "Rudolf Vrba (W. Rosenberg)".

Q. Do you have a photocopy of that?

A. I have a photocopy of that which I gave among the papers, but this is an original.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I hesitate to make the original an exhibit. Perhaps I can get a photocopy tomorrow, Your Honour.

Q. Dr. Vrba, are you a member of any —

A. Excuse me, I didn't answer your previous question.

Q. Oh, I'm sorry.

A. Because the name was then legalized {1376|1377} as Rudolf Vrba on ground of my request that, when the Germans came to my native country —

THE COURT: Just a moment.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: It was legalized.

A. It was legalized after the War for the reasons I asked for – deGermanization of my name.

Q. DeGermanization of your name.

A. Right. No connection with my so-called German culture which I saw in Auschwitz.

Q. Exhibit 1, the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?" page 16, Dr. Vrba, Chapter 6, entitled, "Auschwitz and Polish Jewry" ...

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to ask you a couple of questions about that.

A. Yes.

Q. First of all, on page 17 there is a paragraph as follows, and I will read it and then will ask you to comment on it.

A. Please.

Q. It's the second complete paragraph on the first column of page 17.

A. Yes.

Q. "Although several millions were supposed to have died at Auschwitz alone, Reitlinger has to admit that only 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and February 1945 ..."

and cited as authority is the book, "The S.S. Alibi of a {1377|1378} Nation", page 268 and following –

"... and by no means all of them were Jews. It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered, but no one has offered any proof of this. Even if there were as many unregistered as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 prisoners – hardly enough for the elimination of 3 or 4 million. More over, large numbers of the camp population were released or transported elsewhere during the war, and at the end 80,000 were evacuated westward in January 1945 before the Russian advance."

Now, can you comment as to whether any people were at Auschwitz who were not registered – what you saw with your own eyes?

A. All people who on the ramp arrive —

MR. CHRISTIE: Excuse me, Your Honour. This witness can't answer for the camp. He can answer for records he kept, and I think that he is being asked to answer as to whether they were being registered in the camp, and I never heard him say through his entire testimony that he kept a register for the camp. He did for his block, and I heard what he said about it, but I think the question begs to tell us that he can say something about the camp registry as a whole.

THE COURT: I don't disagree with Mr. Christie's objection. There is a point. It is your {1378|1379} examination-in-chief, Mr. Griffiths. You can either lay more groundwork, if you feel that is advisable ...

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

THE COURT: As it stands now, I do not disagree with what I have heard from Mr. Christie.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

Q. Did you ever see the people who you described being brought to Birkenau in lorries registered?

A. Those who left the ramp in lorries – and this was seventy-five to ninety-five percent of arrivals, depend on the transport – went from the lorries into the area of Krematoria IV and were not registered.

Q. Thank you.

A. Most of those people consisted of children which were of ages one to twelve, or of old people which were of ages over sixty, old women of ages over sixty, and nobody has seen a prisoner of the age of eleven or of the age of seventy in the concentration camp Auschwitz.

Q. You can't say "anybody". Did you see prisoners of those ages?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he said "nobody", and my friend shouldn't cross-examine his own witness.

He has elicited some hearsay and he shouldn't accept anything other than what he got.

THE COURT: I agree. Go ahead, Mr. Griffiths.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: The next section {1379|1380} of the pamphlet, it says, "Auschwitz: An Eye-Witness Account":

"Some new facts about Auschwitz are at last beginning to make a tentative appearance."

I am just reading from the pamphlet now, page 17, column 2, under the bold title, "Auschwitz: An Eye-Witness Account":

"Some new facts about Auschwitz are at last beginning to make a tentative appearance. They are contained in a recent work called Die Auschwitz-Lüge: Ein Erlebnisbericht von Thies Christopherson ..."

And there is a translation. What does it say?

A. "The Auschwitz Legends: An Account of his Experiences by Thies Christopherson, Kritik Verlag/Mohrkirch, 1973".

Q. And that is the publisher?

A. Yes.

Q. "Published by the German lawyer Dr. Manfred Roeder in the periodical Deutsche Bürger-Ini [ti]ative, it is an eye-witness account of Auschwitz by Thies Christopherson, who was sent to the Bunawerk plant laboratories at Auschwitz to research into the production of synthetic rubber for the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute. In May 1973, not long after the appearance of this account, the veteran Jewish 'Nazi-{1380|1381}hunter' Simon Wiesenthal wrote to the Frankfurt Chamber of Lawyers, demanding that the publisher and author of the Forward, Dr. Roeder, a member of the Chamber, should be brought before its disciplinary commission. Sure enough, proceedings began in July, but not without harsh criticism even from the Press, who asked 'Is Simon Wiesenthal the new Gauleiter of Germany?'"

And the source of that is – can you read the German for me?

A. Yes. "Deutsche Wochenzeitung, July 27th, 1973". This is German weekly, July 27, 1973.

Q. It goes on, then:

"Christopherson's account is certainly one of the most important documents for a re-appraisal of Auschwitz. He spent the whole of 1944 there, during which time he visited all of the separate camps comprising the large Auschwitz complex, including Auschwitz Birkenau where it is alleged that wholesale massacres of Jews took place. Christopherson, however, is in no doubt that this is totally untrue. He writes: 'I was in Auschwitz from ... the mass murders which were supposedly perpetrated by the S.S. against the {1381|1382} Jewish prisoners, and I was perfectly astonished. —'"

MR. CHRISTIE: You missed a line, I'm sorry.

MR. GRIFFITHS: "I was in Auschwitz from January 1944 until December 1944. After the war I heard about the mass murders which were supposedly perpetrated by the S.S. against the Jewish prisoners, and I was perfectly astonished. Despite all the evidence of witnesses, all the newspaper reports and radio broadcasts I still do not believe today in these horrible deeds. I have said this many times and in many places, but to no purpose. One is never believed."

The article goes on:

"Space forbids a detailed summary here of the author's experiences at Auschwitz, which include facts about camp routine and the daily life of prisoners totally at variance with the allegations of propaganda" – and he cites pages 22 to 27 of the Christopherson work.

"More important are his revelations about the supposed existence of an extermination camp. 'During the whole of my time at Auschwitz, I never observed the slightest evidence of mass gassings. Moreover, the odour {1382|1383} of burning flesh that is often said to have hung over the camp is a downright falsehood. In the vicinity of the main camp (Auschwitz I) was a large farrier's works, from which the smell of molten iron was naturally not pleasant' ..." – and he cites pages 33 to 34.

"Reitlinger confirms that there were five blast furnaces and five collieries at Auschwitz, which together with the Bunawerk factories comprised Auschwitz III" – ibid page 425 if [of] Reitlinger.

"The author agrees that a crematorium would certainly have existed at Auschwitz, 'since 200,000 people lived there, and in every city with 200,000 inhabitants there would be a crematorium. Naturally people died there – but not only prisoners. In fact the wife of Obersturmbannführer A. (Christopherson's superior) also died there.'"

Page 33 of the Christopherson work was cited.

"The author explains: 'There were no secrets at Auschwitz. In September 1944 a commission of the International Red Cross came to the camp for an inspection. They were particularly interested in the camp at {1383|1384} Birkenau, though we also had many inspections at Raisko.'"

And it cites Bunawerk section, page 35.

Now, how does that description of, Auschwitz and Birkenau, and bearing in mind that part of the time that Mr. Christopherson was writing about is after you left the camp ...

A. Yes.

Q. Well, how does that square with your recollection of the camp?

A. Well, when did he leave the camp?

Q. He was there, he said, I believe, from – sorry.

A. He spent the whole of 1944 there.

THE COURT: January to December of 1944.

THE WITNESS: January to December 1944. Well, there are certain people who claim –

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Just a minute. My question is, how does this description square with your recollection of the camp? Is this accurate in your view?

A. This is a complete lie.

Q. All right. Now, I have one other section that I would like to refer you to, if I may.

A. The lie has got also something cynical about it. It is a cynical lie.

Q. On page 24 of the exhibit, and this is under a chapter titled, "The Nature & Condition of War-Time Concentration Camps", and there is a sub-heading that says, "Humane Conditions", the paragraph begins:

"That several thousand camp inmates {1384|1385} did die in the chaotic final months of the war brings us to the question of their wartime conditions. These have been deliberately falsified in innumerable books of an extremely lurid and unpleasant kind. The Red Cross Report, examined below, demonstrates conclusively that throughout the war the camps were well administered. The working inmates received a daily ration even throughout 1943 and 1944 of not less than 2,750 calories, which was more than double the average civilian ration in occupied Germany in the years after 1945. The internees were under regular medical care, and those who became seriously ill were transferred to hospital."

Do those conditions described there correspond to your recollection?

A. These are absolute lies. Moreover, he says about something about the Red Cross report, which he doesn't show. Where can I see the Red Cross Report?

Q. Don't worry about that. My question is just as to the conditions that are described there.

A. Yes, this is a cynical lie in my opinion.

Q. Are you, Dr. Vrba, part of any hoax or conspiracy or fraud to deceive people as to the things that you have been telling us about, the conditions in these camps, the deaths in these camps?

A. If I have any reason to deceive people?

Q. No. My question is whether you are – are you a part of any conspiracy to deceive people about what went on in these camps?

A. No, I am not part of any conspiracy, and I am not part of any political party, and I am not part of any organized religion, of any church, and my only affiliations, officially, are to universities in which I worked for the last thirty years, which is University of Prague, University of London, University of Harvard and University of British Columbia; and I had, during all those times, no affiliation to any organization except academical organization.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, sir. I have no further questions, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, the same instructions that I have given will apply. Have a good evening. Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

— The jury retires. 4:25 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 23, 1985.

(VOLUME VII follows){1386|1387}

Volume VII

JANUARY 23, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

THE COURT: Is there anything before the jury comes in?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, Your Honour.

— The jury enters. 10:07 a.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

RUDOLF VRBA, previously sworn.*CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Witness, will you say it's true that you have told stories about Auschwitz?

A. I didn't keep a secret out of it.

Q. Would you say that all the things you've said about Auschwitz are true?

A. I would think so, within the frame of possibility of a reference.

Q. I now produce and show to you a book entitled, "I Cannot Forgive". Are you the author of this book?

A. I am a co-author.

Q. Did you check it and see that all the contents were true?

A. Which year has this book been {1387|1388} published?

THE COURT: Would you answer the question, please, sir?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Could you answer the question?

A. Which year has the book been published?

THE COURT: Show him the book.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: 1964 March by Grove Press. It attributes the authorship to you and to a Mr. Alan Bestik [sic]. Did you read that book?

A. Yes. Certainly. I wrote the book.

Q. All the contents are true?

A. I wouldn't answer in a direct way, to this question, because this is a work of literature, and not a document, and therefore I would like to make certain remarks on the background of the book which will make it more clear to you what the book is about. Please don't interrupt me, because I cannot work this way.

Q. Would you let me ask a question?

A. I didn't finish your previous question.

Q. Pardon me.

A. I did not yet finish your previous question.

Q. Fine. Carry on.

A. The background of that book started with my discussion with a doctor who was examining judge in the Frankfurt trial in which the criminals who committed the horrible crimes in Auschwitz were tried, and I was {1388|1389} supposed to help him. He showed me eighty volumes of material which he collected about the S.S. in Auschwitz on his shelf, and he told me in a rather exasperating voice, he said he has collected over years eighty volumes and he still doesn't know the full truth of Auschwitz.

I agreed with him and I arrived at the conclusion that if he is right, I would have to write not eighty, but at least eighty-one volumes in order to give a picture of the horrible crimes which were committed in Auschwitz, and if I would write eighty-one volumes, it is very unlikely that a person who is not specializing in this field but needs the basic knowledge about his field would be able to read eighty-one volumes. And I arrived at the conclusion that it is necessary to write one volume, and I used a special technique which is used also in this Court, where in this Court is forbidden to photograph. However, I have seen my picture and the picture of His Honour the Judge yesterday on the television. Anybody who looks at those pictures will get some rough idea what was happening in this Court, but neither I nor His Honour, the Judge, would be in the position to cut out from that picture his picture, his face, and use it instead of a passport photograph.

Consequently, what is in the book is a condensed story written in a style which should enable especially a young person, untrained and unprepared for the horror of this century, without too much trouble, to understand to what lowness some parts of mankind as represented by the Nazis were able to descend.

Therefore that book should not be considered as a document, but as an artistic picture of {1389|1390} the events which has got not more value than the artistic picture of the artist who is here now painting or drawing this courtroom to show to the masses of people who cannot come here to give them some idea what was happening here. And this is approximately my answer in print to explain you this book.

There were, after this book was published, a number of essays published about the book, and I have a number of that, perhaps a hundred, two hundred, like Times Literary Supplement, like the New York Times and the Book of the Month, etcetera, etcetera, which were published, and the various messages which were contained were discussed.

However, it is understood that it is only an attempt for an artistic depiction of those catastrophic events, and the discussion of the book would therefore belong into the realm of a literary afternoon, which I am perfectly prepared to spend with you, Mr. Counsel.

Q. I can see that.

A. But —

THE COURT: Dr. Vrba, this is not speech-making time. You have been given a lot of latitude. Is your answer going to go on for much longer?

THE WITNESS: No. I need two more minutes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: All right. Then do it and get on with the next question.

THE WITNESS: I have been called in as an expert witness not on literature, because I am neither good as Dostoevsky, or Tolstoy, but I am layman in {1390|1391} literature. However, I am acquainted with events in Auschwitz which took place there from 30 June, 1942, until 7 April, 1944, and those events I am prepared to discuss with you not on the level of a literary essay, but within the frame of the law.

Should you wish to discuss a book, in spite of my advice, it would be very difficult to discuss the book in front of the jury who didn't read the book. Under the condition that the jury is prepared to read the book, we can then discuss the book so that the jury knows what we are talking about, and I am protected from distortions which your friend have published about this book. Thank you, Your Honour, for giving me the opportunity to explain it.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Are there falsehoods in the book?

A. As I explained to you and gave you answer to your question, you are only re-formulating the question. The book is an attempt, artistic attempt to create truths, and an artistic attempt is subject to shortcomings. And you can say that the shortcoming is a falsehood. I would say that there might be shortcomings in the book. I would say that certainly there are shortcomings in the book for which I had limited time to write, but I wouldn't say that there are falsehood, and I would demonstrate it to — prepared to discuss the book in this courtroom.

Q. Did you say things happened in the book that did not actually happen in fact? {1391|1392}

A. I am not aware of that.

Q. Did you say things that you say that you saw in the book that you did not actually see?

A. The book is not a court case, and therefore in the book could be incorporated such parts of knowledge which are obtained from friends to whom I trusted.

As you know, every art piece in literature is written by people who use not only their own eye witness abilities, but draw also on experience of others for one reason or another.

Q. Did you put in the book statements which you did not see?

A. I am not aware of that.

Q. So do I take it from your answer that when you say you saw something in the book, you actually did see it?

A. I will discuss with you the book on the literary afternoon at your disposal. At the moment I am not prepared to discuss this book unless the book has been read by the jury.

Q. Well, I think with respect, unless I am wrong, unless His Honour directs you not to answer the question, I am entitled to ask you, and I did ask you whether you said things in the book that you said you saw, things in the book that you did not see. Now, is that the case or not?

THE COURT: Members of the jury, you will excuse us, please.

— The jury retires. 10:20 a.m. {1392|1393}

THE COURT: Dr. Vrba, I am going to say this once and once only. You are here as a compellable witness. You are here to testify as a witness under oath. You are not here to give orders as to what this jury will do and what you will do or not do. You will answer counsel's questions unless I tell you not to. Do you understand?

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: You will do it.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much. In that case, can I ask your permission, if I find the question unsuitable, if I should, can I take your advice?

THE COURT: If you find them unsuitable, you can say so. Hopefully you will say that shortly. I don't propose that Mr. Christie's cross-examination is going to be interrupted by you taking a multitude of objections to his questions, however objectionable you may find those questions to be.

In a democratic country you should know by now, and I am sure you do, that in a Court of law an accused person, regardless of who he or she is, is entitled to full answer and defence. That includes the right of cross-examination. Your evidence is tested in that way before the triers of fact, which is the jury.

If you take objection I will listen to the objection; if it contains merit, I will say so; if it does not, I will say so. I do not want Mr. Christie's cross-examination, however, to be unduly interrupted for no reason at all.

Do you understand?

THE WITNESS: Perfectly well. {1393|1394}

THE COURT: Thank you. Bring back the jury.

THE WITNESS: May I ask a question, Your Honour, before the jury comes in?

THE COURT: Yes.

THE WITNESS: Quotations from a book tore out from its general context may create a false impression.

THE COURT: I don't deny that.

THE WITNESS: And may be used for distortions.

THE COURT: Yes.

THE WITNESS: Such distortions have been used from this book and I have turned attention of the Crown that there are distortions on even the subject of study of some respectable Professors of History in University.

THE COURT: No one is restricting your answers to counsel's questions, providing they are relative and responsive to the question that is put.

THE WITNESS: Wouldn't it be, of course, to the advantage of the procedure, Your Honour, if the jury, who finally is supposed to say yes or no to the guilt of the accused, would be acquainted with the content of the book and not with particular pieces torn out from them which would suit the defence?

In other words, the danger of distorting a work by showing only a part of the work is considerable, in my opinion, especially knowing the tactic of a certain political group, and therefore I am worried that the jury might be easily, in the mind of the jury, easily created {1394|1395} a wrong impression and might be misled from the right path of justice if the jury is being served juicy bits from the book instead of being acquainted with the book as a whole. It is just like they would show to the jury a picture, but only a small part left, a small part right, instead of showing the whole picture. The book is only 250 pages long, and as far I know, it took nobody more than one day to read it.

THE COURT: I repeat only what I said, that you are not being told what answers you may give to counsel's questions will be, provided they are responsive to the questions.

Bring back the jury.

— The jury enters. 10:25 a.m.

THE COURT: Proceed, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. I would just like to ask you if this part of the book is true. It's attributed, on page two, to your co-author, Alan Bestic, and it says —

THE COURT: Page ...

MR. CHRISTIE: Sorry. Page 2.

Q. It says:

"I would like to pay tribute to him ..."

and that was you, sir, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. "... for the immense trouble he took over every detail; for the meticulous, almost fanatical respect he revealed for accuracy; and for the courage which this cold-blooded survey of two ghastly {1395|1396} years demanded."

Have I read correctly, sir, from that?

A. Yes, you did.

Q. Would you say that was true for the degree of respect you had for accuracy?

A. That was true for Alan Bestic who estimated my accuracy in his own personal way. You may question now Alan Bestic if my accuracy can stand up to your requirement or not.

Q. Well, would you say that in your opinion that was true about your respect for accuracy?

A. Out of modesty, would you kindly allow me not to make judgments about myself?

Q. Okay. In things that you said in this book that you said you saw, were you telling the truth?

A. To the best of my knowledge, ability, the truth as I could perceive it, being in Auschwitz for two years.

Q. So when you said you perceived things, or saw things in this book, you actually did see them with your own observations.

A. This is nowhere stated in the book that I actually saw them. In the book there are a number of things which I heard from my friend and I have included it in the book, because a book was not meant to be a testimony to the Court which I have to sing, but impressions which I collected from number of friends, some of whom are dead, for whom I wanted the voice to be heard even after their martyr's death.

Q. I'm sorry, I still don't understand {1396|1397} but do you mean to say, for example on page 10 where you say:

"This time I was glad to see him arrive", for example, and I will read the rest of it, if you wish — do you mean that you actually did see this?

A. I see arrive what?

Q. Well, here is what you said in the book.

A. Yes.

Q. "Heinrich Himmler visited Auschwitz Camp again in January, 1943. This time I was glad to see him arrive".

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I can read the whole thing, or two pages, or ten pages.

A. Yes, continue, because I don't know what it should mean.

Q. You don't know. You don't know.

A. No.

Q. I will ask you, do you mean to say, when you saw him arrive, that you actually saw him arrive in January '43, or is this just —

A. In September. '43 or in January '43?

Q. Well, the book says January '43.

A. No. I saw him arrive in July 1943, and then at one occasion in 1943 —

Q. It says here, "January '43".

A. It must be an error.

Q. It's an error?

A. Yes.

Q. Oh. But you did see him arrive on {1397|1398} this occasion?

A. On the first occasion I saw him arrive, because he was approximately in the vicinity as you are to me.

Q. He was as close to you as I am.

A. Approximately.

Q. I see. And you were —

A. He took one step further out of politeness to me.

Q. I see.

A. However, on the second occasion, I saw him going by in a car which was the same car I saw before. He used a black Mercedes with all the sycophants around that he carried around, but I saw him only for a distance of about six hundred yards, and I have heard it is him; but he didn't, on this occasion, come to shake hands with me and introduce himself. So it might be him; it might be someone who stood in instead of him, and don't think that it makes a great difference.

Q. Was this the occasion when he was as far from you as I am?

A. No. That's the second occasion. The second occasion when he was as far from me as you are, almost as far, this was in July 1942.

Q. '42.

A. Yes.

Q. And that was in Auschwitz camp?

A. That was in Auschwitz Camp I.

Q. In your book you say:

"Heinrich Himmler visited Auschwitz camp again in January 1943. This time I was glad to see {1398|1399} him arrive." Right?

A. Probably I wasn't glad of him seeing him arrive as my best friend. Read on in the book. I cannot remember now why I should be glad to see him here. Maybe I said it tongue-in-cheek, where I have a right to say it in the book; not in the Court, but in the book I can.

Q. Would you tell the public something in the book that wasn't true?

A. I would say in the public in a way when the truth is complicated, I would use the technique of the painter, which is here working, that the general impression should come as close as possible to the truth within the requirements of my abilities which are, of course, limited.

Q. As Dostoevsky or Shakespeare, yes, I understand. You don't —

A. I said I don't have.

Q. All right. I will ask you some questions. I will read you pages ten, 11 and 12 and I will ask you some questions about that.

A. And you are not going to miss some paragraphs?

Q. Well, you watch me and see that don't.

A. Can we have a copy of the book?

Q. I am producing for you, provided by the Crown, a hardcover copy. I hope it is the same as mine.

A. I hope so, too.

Q. Well, I have another copy. Do you {1399|1400} recognize that as the paperback version of your book; do you?

A. Yes. It was published without my permission and without my perusal.

Q. So it's without your permission and your perusal?

A. That's right. You see, I would have to sue the people who done it, and I couldn't afford to sue; but for this book I peruse. This is the first edition.

Q. So you figure this one could be false, then — somebody might have twisted your words around?

A. I didn't have any influence on it, and I didn't see the proof of the book, and I didn't see the account for it, either, for your private information.

Q. You've never read it?

A. I would say no.

Q. You would say no.

A. No. But I read the original.

Q. What do you mean? You haven't read —

A. This is the first edition. You see, I have never signed any contract with the publisher of this paperback.

Q. This Grove Press edition published March 1964, copyright [sic] by Rudolf Vrba and Alan Bestic, this is not yours?

A. This is not Grove edition.

Q. This is published by Bantam Books.

A. That's right. {1400|1401}

Q. So you say this is a pirated edition, do you?

A. I didn't use those words. They are your words.

Q. Let's find the part in your edition, then, so in case it is different we can see how it's different. I am going to have to give this book to someone to look at while I cross-examine.

A. Good advice.

Q. Well, I will ask you specifically questions of fact which you can tell me if these statements are true or not.

Do you believe that Heinrich Himmler visited the camp in January '42? Okay, now I think I found the spot where I wanted to begin. I am going to read and you read along with me. Make sure I don't make any mistakes. I am going to read two, almost three pages okay? — and I am going to ask you some questions about it.

A. Yes.

Q. "Heinrich Himmler visited Auschwitz Camp again in January 1943". Is that the same in your book?

A. Yes.

Q. All right.

A. If there is a difference I will turn your attention to it.

Q. All right. Thank you very much.

"This time I was glad to see him arrive, though not because I still nursed any faint-hope that he would improve our lot through benevolence or any sense of justice. His presence was welcome to us all {1401|1402} merely because it meant that for one day there would be no unscheduled beating or killings.

"Once more we were lined up, spic and span, with the sick in —"

A. Excuse me, please. Would you read it in a way that everybody can understand the sense of the sentence?

Q. I'll try, sir. Okay. If anybody doesn't understand the sense of the sentences in the jury, please hold up your hand and I will stop. Okay? And if you find that I am not reading sensibly, you will tell me too, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. Okay.

"Once more we were lined up, spic and span, with the sick in the rear and the healthy well to the front. Once more the band played and the heels clicked and the jack boots danced in the luster shed by the master. Once more he inspected the camp inch by inch running a podgy pedantic finger over the mantelpiece of Auschwitz and examining it for dust. And this time there was no Yankel Meisel to drop his tiny personal grain of sand into the smooth machinery.

"Though he conducted his tour of the camp with his usual thoroughness, it was, however, no more than an aperitif for the meal that was to follow. The main purpose of his visit was to see for himself the bricks and mortar which had sprung from the plans he had outlined in Auschwitz seven months earlier.

"He was to watch the world's first conveyer belt killing, the inauguration of Kommandant {1402|1403} Hoess' brand new toy, his crematorium. It was truly a splendid affair, one hundred yards long and fifty yards wide, containing fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes, a monument in concrete, indeed, to its builder Herr Walter Dejaco."

Am I reading correctly?

A. Quite right.

Q. "Auschwitz survivors who, like myself, were the slave labourers who built it —"

A. "Who worked to build it".

Q. Yes. "... who worked to build it, ..." Sorry, I made a mistake. "... may be interested to learn, incidentally, that Herr Dejaco still practises his craft in Reutte, a town in the Austrian Tyrol. In 1963 he won praise from Bishop Rusk of Innsbruck for the fine new presbytery he had built for Reutte's parish priest.

"In 1943, however, there was a war on and he was concerned with more practical demonstrations of his skill. The extermination industry was still in its infancy, but thanks to his efficiency, it was about to make its first really dramatic stride towards greatness that morning when Himmler came to visit us.

"He certainly saw an impressive demonstration, marred only by a timetable that would have caused concern in many a small German railway station. Kommandant Hoess, anxious to display his new toy at its most efficient, had arranged for a special transport of 3,000 Polish Jews to be present for slaughter in the modern, German way.

"Himmler arrived at eight o'clock that {1403|1404} morning and the show was to start an hour later. By eight forty-five, the new gas chambers with their clever dummy showers and their notice 'Keep Clean', 'Keep Quiet' and so on, were packed to capacity. The S.S. Guards, indeed, had made sure that not an inch of space would be wasted by firing a few shots at the entrance. These encouraged those already inside to press away from the doors and more victims were ushered in. Then babies and very small children were tossed on to the heads of the adults and the doors were closed and sealed.

"An S.S. man, wearing a heavy service gas mask, stood on the roof of the chamber, waiting to drop the Zyklon-B pellets which released a hydrogen cyanide gas. His was a position of honour that day, for seldom would he have had such a distinguished audience and he probably felt as tense as the starter of the Derby.

"By eight fifty-five, the tension was almost unbearable. The man in the mask was fidgeting with his boxes of pellets. He had a fine full house beneath him. But there was no sign of the Reichsführer [Reichsführer] who had gone off to have breakfast with Kommandant Hoess.

"Somewhere a phone rang. Every head turned towards it. A junior N.C.O. clattered over to the officer in charge of the operation, saluted hastily and panted out a message. The officer's face stiffened, but he said not a word.

"The message was: 'The Reichsführer hasn't finished his breakfast yet.'

Everyone relaxed slightly. Then another phone call. Another dash by a perspiring N.C.O. Another message. The officer in charge swore to himself and {1404|1405} muttered to those of equal rank around him.

"The Reichsführer, it seemed, was still at breakfast. The S.S. man on the roof of the gas chamber squatted on his haunches. Inside the chamber itself frantic men and women, who knew by that time what a shower in Auschwitz meant, began shouting, screaming and pounding weakly on the door; but nobody outside heard them because the new chamber was sound-proof as well as gas-proof.

"Even if they had been heard, nobody would have taken any notice of them, for the S.S. had their own worries. The morning dragged on and the messengers came and went. By ten o'clock the marathon breakfast was still under way. By half past ten the S.S. men had become almost immune to false alarms and the man on the roof remained on his haunches even when the distant telephone rang.

"But by eleven o'clock, just two hours later, a car drew up. Himmler and Hoess got out and chatted for a while to the senior officers present. Himmler listened intently, as they explained the procedure to him in detail. He ambled over to the sealed door, glanced casually through the small, thick observation window at the squirming bodies inside, then returned to fire some more questions at his underlings.

"At last, however, everything was ready for action. A sharp command was given to the S.S. man on the roof. He opened a circular lid and dropped the pellets quickly on to the heads below him. He knew, everyone knew, that the heat of those packed bodies would cause these pellets to release their gasses in a few minutes, and so he closed the lid quickly. {1405|1406}

"The gassing had begun. Everything waited for a while so that the poison would have circulated properly, Hoess courteously invited his guest to have another peep through the observation window. For some minutes Himmler peered into the death chamber, obviously impressed, and then turned with new interest to his Kommandant with a fresh batch of questions.

"What he had seen seemed to have satisfied him and put him in good humour. Though he rarely smoked, he accepted a cigarette from an officer, and as he puffed at it rather clumsily, he laughed and joked.

"The introduction of this more homely atmosphere, of course, did not mean any neglect of the essential business. Several times he left the group of officers to watch progress through the peep hole; and, when everyone inside was dead, he took a keen interest in the procedure that followed.

"Special lifts took the bodies to the crematorium, but the burning did not follow immediately. Gold teeth had to be removed. Hair, which was used to make the warheads of torpodeos [sic] watertight, had to be cut from the heads of the women. The bodies of wealthy Jews, noted early for their potential had to be set aside for dissection in case any of them had been cunning enough to conceal jewellery – diamonds perhaps – about their person."

I will stop there.

A. Well, it is only very little —

Q. — to the end? I will read to the end.

A. I will appreciate it. {1406|1407}

Q. Sure. Certainly:

"It was indeed, a complicated business, but the new machinery worked smoothly under the hands of skilled operators. Himmler waited until the smoke began to thicken over the chimneys and then he glanced at his watch.

"It was one o'clock. Lunch time, in fact. He shook hands with the senior officers, returned the salutes of the lower ranks casually and cheerfully and climbed back into the car with Hoess.

"Auschwitz was in business. And on a scale that would have made little old Yankel Meisel shake his head in wonder and disbelief. He had never been a very ambitious man and the thought of streamlined mass-destruction would have been quite beyond his simple mind.

"But then he had never heard of the Final Solution, let alone of the part which Auschwitz was to play in it."

Now, have I read correctly from the point where I ended?

A. Yes, you did.

Q. All right. And that is a statement. Do you say that that was the true statement?

A. I would say that it was as true as true is the picture which is depicted by the artist in this room.

Q. Okay.

A. This means —

Q. Never mind what it means.

A. You asked me one question, if you {1407|1408} will allow me to finish my answer.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. This means it conveyed truthfully the atmosphere existing in Auschwitz during the gassing procedure in the presence of a very highly positioned VIP.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. What was missing for the explanation and which distorts the sense of your carefully selected passage is that in your passage, twice the name of Yankel Meisel has been mentioned, and because the listeners do not know who that Yankel Meisel actually is, but that Yankel Meisel is named in the same chapter, some confusion might arise from your whole reading, or so it conveyed reasonably well as far as possible for a second-grade artist to describe the atmosphere which existed during the gassing of those unfortunate victims.

Q. Right. Okay. Now, you used an analogy by saying that the artist in Court, drawing his picture, was in the same way you were writing this article.

A. About. Otherwise —

Q. Yeah. Okay.

A. Otherwise I would have to be in the position of the Judges in Frankfurt who had to write eighty books in order not to be in the position of the artist; but to be in the legal position where he can stand up behind every word of the eighty books.

Q. Let's not worry about some judge in Frankfurt. You used the analogy of the artist in Court, and I put it to you that the artist has seen a real {1408|1409} man in a real stand — namely, you. Right?

A. Right.

Q. And you are telling this Court you actually saw Heinrich Himmler peeping through the doors of the gas chamber; you told us that?

A. No, I didn't say I was present when he was peeping through the gas chamber, but I have put together a story which I've heard many times from various people who were there present and who related it to me. What I could see was the following, that a transport of eight thousand Jews from Krakow on that occasion —

Q. Eight thousand, eh? You counted them?

A. By knowledge of the trucks, as I explained to you yesterday, and by knowledge of the number of wagons which arrived to Auschwitz, we knew reasonably well how many of the victims arrived on which day.

Q. Where does it say that there were eight thousand Jews arrived that day in your book?

A. Well, if it doesn't say, I remember it.

Q. Ah.

A. But I do not say that I have written in the book all I remember, because if I would have write [sic] in the book all I remember, I would have had to write those eighty-one books.

Q. Well, what I am asking is about this specific incident that you described in your book.

A. Yes.

Q. You describe it as saying, "This {1409|1410} time I was glad to see him arrive", and then you go on and tell us what you say happened.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I put it to you, you were what – eighteen or nineteen years old?

A. At that time it was in '43. I was nineteen years old.

Q. Well, do you tell us that you are standing between Heinrich Himmler and Hoess and hearing their conversation and looking with them or somewhere in the area where they were looking onto a gas chamber? Is that what you are telling me?

A. No. I am telling you that they were looking into the gas chambers, that there were a number of Sonderkommando present, that there were a number of S.S. present.

Q. Were you present?

A. No. I was in the quarantine camp at that time and I spoke with a number of them and listened to them, and I knew that those unfortunate victims were being gassed with a great delay because the VIPs didn't come, so they were being kept in the gas chamber.

Q. Well, in your book you indicate that you saw, and you don't indicate that you heard from other people the story that you related.

A. In this particular case the story is related.

Q. And you say that these things happened as you described, even though you acknowledged they were on the basis of hearsay; right?

A. Yes. {1410|1411}

Q. Okay. The quarantine camp you described now, if I may, looking at Exhibit "H" for identification, would you agree that's a map of the camp?

A. What about we project the map so the jury can see?

Q. Well, I can hold it.

A. Well, I have the same map and we can just project it.

Q. Well, all right. If you have the same map, let me do it my way just for once. Okay?

A. You be my guest. But just make it in such a way that the jury sees what you are trying here to do. This may be an exhibit.

Q. Well, let's just be – as long as we can be satisfied that we are not misrepresenting the camp, can we do that?

A. I would prefer if the jury is trying to see exactly what you are trying to say.

THE COURT: Doctor, you will find that when the cross-examination is concluded, counsel for the Crown, if he chooses to do so, will re-examine you. You will please answer the questions as Mr. Christie puts them to you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you for being enlightened on that point. Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I have showed you Exhibit "H" for identification. I ask you if that isn't the case that it is the same map that you presented earlier.

A. Yes. It suffices for its purposes.

Q. It's bigger. {1411|1412}

A. Yes.

Q. The quarantine camp was "BIIA". Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are talking about an area of KII, Krema II. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. This is where you say this happened?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever go in the area of KII?

A. In the area of KII, I could watch from Block 27.

Q. Yes.

A. But if you took notice, Mr. Counsel, the date was January 1943; but yesterday, if you would have listened what was going on in this court, you would have taken notice, in your notes, that I was in quarantine camp only after June 8th, 1943; therefore I could not observe it from the quarantine camp but from the mortuary of Fred Wetzler from where I later escaped, and this was distance of fifty yards from the crematorium – January '43.

Q. Well, didn't you just tell me a few minutes ago that when this event with Himmler happened you were in the quarantine camp? I thought I heard you say that.

A. Well, once I realize that it was in January, I realize that I have seen it from here.

Q. Oh. So when you found out the date in the book you decided that you saw it from Block 27.

A. That's right. But I don't say in {1412|1413} the book from where I see it, did I? You tried to impute to me that I have seen it somewhere. You impute it to me that I have seen it from the quarantine camp. I did write about it in the book.

Q. No, but you said, "I saw", in the book, and I got the impression that you are describing firsthand observation.

A. What I saw from the book, if you allow me to explain to you if it is of interest to you – you can stop me if it is of no interest –

Q. I wouldn't ask you if it wasn't of interest.

A. If it was of interest for you, is that I saw part of the procedure, obviously from the mortuary, which is April '43.

Q. Maybe we can show it to the jury. Block 27 is there?

A. Yes.

Q. And the quarantine camp is there?

A. Yes. And it was empty in January 1943. There was nobody.

Q. Thank you very much.

A. So I could see it only from Wetzler's mortuary, and I didn't write in the book from where I saw it.

Q. No, you didn't; that's right.

A. But you tried to impute that I saw it from –

THE COURT: All right. Next question, please.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, I just want {1413|1414} to ask you a couple more questions about this aspect of the story. Are you saying that you saw Heinrich Himmler peer through a window and hear him have a conversation, or is that just what you heard from other people?

A. That I heard from other people.

Q. And you agree with me that in the part that I read to you, it certainly doesn't indicate that this is information received. It puts it in the first person as if you are standing right there, doesn't it?

A. No. Where is it written that it is in the first person?

Q. When you say, when I read to you, "This time I was glad to see him arrive, though not because I still nursed any faint hope ..."; and then you go on to describe the situation without reference to any information received.

A. Well, the word, "I was glad to see him" refers to my naivete of that time when I still thought that the horrible murders in Auschwitz are being done behind the knowledge of the leading Nazis.

Q. Thank you.

A. And therefore I thought that if he will see those murders, and that's why I was indicating "glad", that if he will see those murders, then he will see that here something illegally is happening behind the back of the highest officials of the German Government. That is why I was glad to see him. That is what it refers to. And I was disappointed when I have heard that on the same day as gassing under exceptionally brutal conditions took place, and that he expressed, as I could hear by the grapevine in the camp, his full satisfaction of it, and {1414|1415} that the gassing went on with even greater intensity after he left. And that is what his message tried to convey.

Q. So you had hoped at this stage that he was going to stop it; was that your hope?

A. Because the crimes which we were seeing was so outside any human imagination, we still have hoped, or had hoped quite naively, quite inexperiencedly, I admit, but we had hoped that Auschwitz was run by beings like Hoess, underworld types in military uniform who are murdering en masse behind the back of the high German, highly positioned German Government.

Therefore the visit of someone so close to the German Government enveigled [sic] in us false hopes. You know, when people are in horrible situations, they are apt to have false hopes, false hopes that when those highly-positioned people come and see the horrors of Auschwitz, they will see that it is incompatible with the cultural history of a civilization like Germany and will stop it. That is why I said I was glad that he came.

Q. Well, immediately after you say, "This time I was glad to see him arrive", you say, "though not because I still nursed any faint hope that he would improve our lot through benevolence or any sense of justice." Are those your words?

A. This refers, of course, to beating.

Q. I see. Not to the gassing.

A. Not to the gassing.

Q. Okay. So all the account there is hearsay, but it isn't put as such; right?

A. Well, it is referred to the beating, {1415|1416} because the beating, I didn't hope any improvement because it was known to us that beating and torturing of individual prisoners in Sachsenhausen, in Mauthausen, in Dachau, in Buchenwald, Ravensbrück, in Flossenbürg, was a very well-known and accepted method by which the leadership of the Nazis knew. In Auschwitz took something different, mass gassings, and therefore we expected or thought that mass murder, especially against children and old women and pregnant women on such a scale, might possibly be done by depraved fanatics behind the back of the German government.

Q. Had you, at that time, knowledge of all these things about those other concentration camps?

A. Very good knowledge.

Q. So there must have been knowledge coming in and out of all the various concentration camps.

A. Yes. Before I came to the concentration camps of Auschwitz there were a number of books published by German refugees who have seen various concentration camps like Dachau.

For example, Bruno Bethlehem from Chicago, who was in Dachau in '33, '34, and then was released and came to America and wrote a book about it, such books were in general knowledge in Czechoslovakia even before the Germans, the Nazis, occupied our native country.

Consequently, we were pretty well informed that beating and torture of prisoners in German concentration camps takes place on a great scale. Braun Buch, which translated means the Brown Book, and it doesn't relate to Lichtenstein, it relates to a number of {1416|1417} survivors of German concentration camps who published a great amount of material in 1933, 1939, and I was reading that materials, and therefore knew that this is common in German concentration camps. But there was nothing yet about gas chambers.

Furthermore, in Auschwitz there were a number of prisoners from those concentration camps who were transferred to concentration camp Auschwitz.

I myself, was not in Auschwitz – this was not my first concentration camp. I came from Maidanek. Consequently, we were informed, in Auschwitz, about events in other concentration camps. We knew that in other concentration camps torture of prisoners takes place and irregular beatings, but we knew, as far as we could see, that mass gassings of completely innocent and unregistered people takes place only in Auschwitz.

Q. I see. Is that all you want to say on that?

A. If that is satisfactory for you for a literary discussion about my modest product, yes, unless you have more questions.

Q. Oh, I do. Are you familiar with the Calendarium of Auschwitz?

A. I know that such a Calendarium exists, but I have never seen one.

Q. Records the events of the camp.

A. Yes, it was used. I have seen it in court in Frankfurt where the Chief Judge, presiding judge, Dr. Hofbauer, showed it and —

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor. Go on to the next question. {1417|1418}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Is this a record of your escape on the 7th of April, 1944?

A. Austerlager —

THE COURT: Doctor, this is a trial in the English language. Would you please look at it and then answer counsel's questions?

THE WITNESS: Right. Would you formulate your question kindly once more?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Is that your account of the escape or the escape from Auschwitz that you claim you undertook?

A. Here is one paragraph called Paragraph 7.4, in which it is in two and a half —

Q. Just listen to the question. Okay? Is that the account or a record of an escape on the 7th of April involving Alfred Wetzler and Walter Rosenberg?

A. Here is nothing about April 7.

Q. Well, four seven is the seventh day of the fourth month, isn't it?

A. No. 4407 is the number which is tattooed.

Q. No. 7.4.

A. Oh, this is a date.

Q. Seventh day, fourth month?

A. There is no year written.

Q. Go back further and you will see that it is 1944. Look at the book. Here we go. Can you see yourself that that pertains to 1944?

A. Published in 1964 by the Museum in Poland. {1418|1419}

Q. Yes. The Auschwitz Museum, right?

A. Right.

Q. Now, did you want to see yourself that that is for the year 1944?

A. I believe you.

Q. You believe me? All right.

A. With this document in your hands I believe you.

Q. All right. Let's turn back to where we had your date on the 7th of April.

A. Yes.

Q. Does this not report the escape of an Alfred Wetzler and Walter Rosenberg?

A. That is perfectly right.

Q. That is what it says occurred on that date?

A. Yes. And it also records our numbers tattooed on our hand.

Q. On your hand, eh?

A. Yeah.

Q. Which hand?

A. On the left hand.

Q. So that's when you say that your escape occurred; is that right?

A. On 7 April, 1944. Start of the escape.

Q. Did you say also that when you left, Kanada had not been established in Birkenau?

A. To the best of my knowledge, no, but Kanada was stationed in Birkenau for the night. In other words, they lived in the barracks in the night in {1419|1420} Birkenau since 15 January, 1943.

Q. I am now going to show you the Calendarium for 1943. Are you satisfied that's the Calendarium for 1943?

A. Yes.

Q. The first half of the year.

A. Yes.

Q. I now turn to the second half of the year, actually, the 14th day of December, 1943.

A. Yes.

Q. I am going to read to you in English and I am going to put it to you that that is what that says in English, and I am going to ask you if I have provided you with the correct translation.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. It says: 14th day, 12th month, 1943, in Birkenau, they finished the section "BII", the construction of the storage buildings which was called by the inmates Kanada. In the storage buildings there have been thirty-five barracks. In thirty of them the belonging of Jews were stored and selected. In two barracks inmates did live which did care for the store. In the rest of the buildings the administration was located.

Have I read that translation correctly?

A. I understand correctly now the German text. Would you now read me the translation?

Q. All right: In Birkenau they finished building the section "BII", the construction of the storage section which was called by the inmates Kana-

da. In the storage buildings there have been thirty-five {1420|1421} barracks. In thirty of them the belongings of Jews was stored and selected. In two barracks inmates did live which did care for the store. In the rest of the buildings the administration was located.

Have I read it correctly, sir?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. That indicates that on the 14th of December, 1943, the area called Kanada was finished, and you said that it wasn't finished before you left.

A. To my recollection it wasn't finished before I left. So, also to my recollection, Kanada command which I saw frequently on the street in section "BIID", they were there as usually, but I was away from that command for a long time, and that command was from that time on of smaller interest to me. Now, if this particular thing refers to finishment of plans or to finishment of barracks or to actual transport of the prisoners into those barracks, this is a question.

I am not quite sure, with all respect to Polish researchers, if their records are better than my memory.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Would you say, sir, that you told us yesterday about burning pits?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that yesterday you told us there were pits that were six meters wide, six meters long and six meters deep?

A. I also made the remark that I didn't make a measurement with a tape, but it was my {1421|1422} judgment of that measures.

Q. You gave us an example by referring to the panels on the wall, and you pointed up to, I think, the top of the first panel; didn't you?

A. Yes, that would be it.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Well, how do you explain the method by which the Germans could burn bodies under water in this marshy ground where the water level was about – well, you described it as marshy ground. Tell us how they did that.

A. Well, they didn't invite me for technical consultations. And if you accept that I'm not speaking only as a witness, I saw only when it was finished; but if you want my technical advice, I would think, without having seen how they have done it and without me having consulted how they have done it, that I could have do it myself given three, four hundred slave labourers. There's no problem.

Q. Well, tell me how – you agree you described the ground all around there as marshy ground, or do you say otherwise?

A. The ground all around was marshy. This means as a countryside.

Q. Because it was between two rivers.

A. It was between two rivers, but as you probably have been in your life in a marshy country side, you know that even in marshy countryside there are occasional visitors around and fishermen. So in marshy land I would say that there are some quite dried out, well-prepared pieces of land by the administration of the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp which were not marshy or which {1422|1423} were not to be considered too marshy, especially when I was in winter 1942 it was heavy frost, and you know, it was sort of solid earth.

Q. Mm-hmmm. It was frozen earth?

A. Frozen earth.

Q. Well, how does the fire keep the water from melting?

A. How does fire ...

Q. How is the fire arranged so that the water in this marshy ground did not melt and fill up the pit that was as high as that top panel on the wall over there? That's a long way down, isn't it?

A. Yes. Well, you are asking me again something which I do not know, neither from eye witness account, nor have I consulted on technical problem, and I suppose that anybody with a slight technical education will explain to you that if you are in a marshy land and dry out that marsh on, say, one kilometer square, then you get completely different conditions within that kilometer square than in the rest of the marsh. I would think so.

Q. You would think so.

A. But you are asking me not eye witness account.

Q. What do you mean?

A. You are asking me I should speculate here how Germans have done something, whereas I am only telling you what I have actually seen.

Q. Yes. You have actually seen a pit as deep as the top panel of that wall in the courtroom in which there was a fire in the bottom. {1423|1424}

A. No. The fire was extinguished. I said, if you listen to me carefully, that the pit was not in use when I have seen it, but it was in use a short time before, because heat was still coming out of the pit.

Q. Yeah

A. And by looking into the pit saw residues of children's bones.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Residues of children's bones.

A. Yes. Head bones.

Q. Head bones. Now, is it the case, then, that you say that the remnant of the fire from which you warmed yourself was down in the bottom of the pit?

A. Well, if you keep in that pit a considerable fire for two or three days and then go away, it leaves a fire, so to say, extinguished, and come after two days – this was a big fire, four or five hundred bodies were burned there, say.

Q. All right, we will say that.

A. And say after two days it is very cold and you put on gloves and you put your hand over that ...

Q. The fire?

A. Not the fire, over that hole ...

Q. Embers.

A. Yeah. You will feel that warmth come up.

Q. I'm sure you would.

A. And that is what I felt.

Q. You felt that.

A. That's why I was standing there, you {1424|1425} see. The view of the children's heads was not sort of too enlightening or pleasing my heart.

Q. So you described it as a pit that was that deep. I suppose you mean to the part where there was solid or some evidence of the children's heads, they were down —

A. — at the bottom of the pit.

Q. Six meters.

A. Yes. At the bottom of the pit.

Q. Six meters down?

A. Yes. But it was only four meters and not six meters, because I didn't have a tape, and my measures would be very sort of lost, and perhaps in view of the awesome situation it might have appeared to me bigger than it was, you see, within a meter or two.

Q. Within —

A. I know you will blame me that I didn't use a yardstick, but it wasn't technically possible.

Q. No, I don't blame you at all. I am just asking you questions, and perhaps if you will answer them, that will be a good idea.

A. I will be pleased.

Q. So if I understand you correctly, the six by six by six meters you say might be out by one or two meters?

A. Might be out by one or two meters.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You don't understand or know any reason why there would be no water in the bottom of this pit; you have no explanation for that at all.

A. Of course I have an explanation. If the pit was heated up, and if there was a lot of bodies {1425|1426} burning, everything – and if it was not used once but many times, then the water from around would have long time dried out.

Q. I see. Is it true that what you said earlier was the case that it was marshy ground?

A. The marshy ground was general around Auschwitz. In other words —

Q. Not around Birkenau?

A. Around Birkenau. In other words, how marshy Birkenau was, I, the first time realized only after I left Birkenau and had to cross the common camp area.

In other words, Birkenau was build up in a marsh area, but Birkenau itself was not marshy any more.

Q. Oh, you say that it was built up above the level of the land.

A. I do not say that it was built above the level of the land, but proper and simple ameliorative measures were taken so that Birkenau and the Birkenau installations will not be succumbed by the swamps. The swamps were there, otherwise you will have to ask for the technical administration of Auschwitz camp house. I am not a builder, but I knew how to build things.

Q. What ameliorative measures do you say were taken?

A. Yes, ameliorative measures. Which translated means measures to regulate unexpected flood of water. It is used quite frequently by great agricultural enterprises when they want a piece of their {1426|1427} agricultural dry, and a piece wet. This is achieved by amelioration.

Q. What ameliorative measures do you say were taken to prevent water from being a problem in Auschwitz? Do you say that they raised the level of the land?

A. The camp administrations did not inform me about those technical details. I have no knowledge.

Q. Now, you gave a description of a gas chamber. I think, if I interpreted you correctly, that you saw from Block 27 —

A. Right.

Q. — Alfred Wetzler's mortuary —

A. Right.

Q. — the wooden building that isn't on the plan.

A. That's right.

Q. Did he build it himself?

A. No. It was built.

Q. Could you, taking this map, Exhibit "H", be so kind as to make marks, and I'd like to give you a coloured pen to do it with.

A. Yes. And you want me to make certain marks?

THE COURT: No. Just a moment, please. Here is a red one.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

Q. Could you just show us, by circling on this Exhibit "H" — do you want to move that? Now, {1427|1428} could you circle the block where the mortuary was?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. The mortuary — this was Block No. 27.

Q. Right. It's marked right on it. Just mark a circle around it if you would.

A. And the mortuary was there, wooden annex. So that the one wall of 27 was one wall of mortuary which was wood. In other words, it was a duplex.

Q. Do you mind if I draw an arrow and you can label it? Just label that and label it may I do it? If I can write it, it may be a little bit clearer.

A. It's your property. You can write what you want.

Q. And that's where Alfred Wetzler ...

A. Has his office and his mortuary until 8 June 1943.

Q. And that is where you made your observations, right?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. Can you just put your initials right there so that I am confirming that that's what you've told me and I have written it down according to your instructions?

A. Yes. But the direction in which I looked was completely different from where you have —

Q. I put the arrow there just because of the paper, not for direction.

A. And because you are a stickler for {1428|1429} accuracy, it is Wetzler (phonetic) not Wetzler (phonetic), and you might blame me that I gave you a false name.

Q. No, I wouldn't do that. Now, you might tell us, then, where you saw this man dump, when you said, the Zyklon-B through the hatches.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You said you saw an S.S. man dumping Zyklon-B through the hatches. Now, if you could make a specific mark where you saw that, maybe a zero or a circle or some mark.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. What would you use?

A. I think I would use either here or here.

Q. So there's two possible places?

A. Yes, because my memory is not bad. It is not perfect ...

Q. So you put it in two places and you put three dots in each place.

A. That's right.

Q. Could you take and draw an arrow up to here and then identify in the piece of paper what it is you saw there? This is where you saw, what, the S.S. man dump the Zyklon, right?

A. S.S. man dumps Zyklon.

Q. All right.

A. Into vents of bunker protruding from Krematorium I, Krematorium II in a way that was clearly in line of sight when I was looking from the window.

Q. Well, we don't want to write the whole story there. You'd better stop.

A. You want to be exact. When I was {1429|1430} looking from the window of the mortuary next to Block 27 Birkenau IB.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Good.

A. Should I initial this, too?

Q. You might as well.

A. Yes. You got an autograph.

THE COURT: That exhibit will now be Exhibit 21.

— EXHIBIT NO. 21: Map of Birkenau. (Formerly Exhibit "H")

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, Mr. Vrba —

A. I am, for the last thirty-five years, accustomed to be called Dr. Vrba, but if it is not suitable for you, you can call me sir. It is shorter.

Q. Thank you very much, sir. Would you agree with me that I am now pointing — you had better check and see that I am pointed in the right place — to the protruding portions that you've identified, and there's two places where you put three dots. Is that right — two places where you put three dots?

A. Yes. Yes. But I have specified that it was protruding from the crematorium [sic] as a bunker. That should cover the situation.

Q. All right. I would just like to show that to the jury.

Now, Dr. Vrba, just tell us once more how it was that you saw the S.S. man get up onto that bunker.

A. You mean I should repeat my state-{1430|1431}ment from yesterday?

Q. Just the part about getting up to the bunker. Just describe that. Let me say to you that you said he put one can up on top ...

A. Yes. He first put the cans down because he brought them not with carriage; he brought them under his arms, and there might have been five or six.

Q. Five or six cans.

A. Yes.

Q. And he picked one up and put it on top?

A. First one down and he started to put them up on top, and he crept up on it like a monkey, which surprised me.

Q. You say he hooked his arms over the edge and pulled himself up?

A. Yes. He sort of climbed like a monkey.

Q. He had to reach up to the edge of the bunker?

A. Yes. Or, you know, to get a hold with his hand.

Q. Yeah.

A. And then he was climbing over the cement, which is rather smooth, but he managed to get up.

Q. Well, the last time you said he was rather sporty in the way he pulled himself up, yesterday.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, how high was it that he had to reach up? {1431|1432}

A. I would say it was high enough that he couldn't walk up, but he could make an exercise.

Q. He could make an exercise?

THE COURT: Just a minute. Just stay where you are.

THE WITNESS: He had to make an effort. He couldn't walk up or jump up. It was higher than that.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did he have to reach higher than I am reaching now?

A. Possibly.

Q. And then, getting a hold of the edge of the roof and pulling himself up?

A. Possibly, but possibly his hands were in this position. This I wouldn't, after forty years, to say, or so. You can say, then, of course, if my memory is imbecile, but after forty years this difference in movement I couldn't guarantee.

Q. Well, I suggest to you, sir, that – were you talking about a flat roof?

A. Yes.

Q. And this roof, you say, was fixed with vents, there were vents on it – three?

A. Three or four.

Q. On your picture you drew three.

A. Yeah.

Q. And you led us to believe that he was rather sporty, and you remember yesterday you used that term?

A. Yes.

Q. You said it was unusual for an S.S. {1432|1433} man to do that?

A. Yes, because they had a pathological condition of his self dignity. And here I saw he didn't care.

Q. So am I clear in understanding you that the wall that he had to climb up on was a cement wall?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. Pretty sure.

Q. Pretty sure?

A. Yes. I didn't touch it, but as far as I can see cement from a distance of fifty yards, I would say pretty sure. I had no doubt in my mind about it.

Q. Do you know what a Leichenkeller is?

A. Yes.

Q. You know what is?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a mortuary.

Q. I suggest to you that what you are talking about is the roof of the mortuary, and the mortuary was underground.

A. Have you been there?

Q. No, I haven't, sir. Have you?

A. No, but I've heard that it was a gas chamber from those who worked there.

Q. You say you haven't been there.

A. No, not inside. Usually those who were inside didn't come out, so I was lucky not to be in there. {1433|1434}

Q. You are very amusing, sir, but please answer my question. Do you say that the roof of the building was above the ground, or parallel [sic] to the ground level?

A. The roof was above the ground, but you could see that it was a roof of something which goes deep down, and mortuary was not necessary there for camp inmates because we had, at maximum, in Birkenau, only three hundred or four hundred daily dead, and they were taken in every night to Auschwitz for burning. So why would they have a mortuary of the size of thirty yards long for four hundred dead which had perfectly good place in Fred's little cabin?

Q. So in Fred's little cabin you kept three or four hundred dead every day.

A. Yes.

Q. And from there they were taken to the crematoria.

A. That's right. And the cabin wasn't bigger than this here, you see, and I can show you how three hundred people can be put within this space.

Q. With enough room for you to drink coffee?

A. And enough room for us to drink coffee on table on top of it, yes, with a white serviette under us.

Q. Now, you gave us reason to believe that if a person was sick they went to hospital and there was no treatment and they would die. Right?

A. Usually, but sometimes there was treatment. {1434|1435}

Q. Yes. Well, was it the case that they tried to keep people alive?

A. In that hospital?

Q. No. In the camp at all. My impression from you yesterday was that if somebody got sick and couldn't work, they were either put on the ground and a bar was put across his throat and then the Kapo would jump on both sides of the bar and break his throat ...

A. That's right, if he was in the mood, or —

Q. ... or — just a moment — he would be killed by the Blockeltester for not standing or if he was in the mood, he would send him to the hospital, which was not a hospital but Krankenbau; Krankenbau, translated, did not mean hospital but it means a building for the sick.

A. That is what it was called.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I think we will adjourn. Twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:30 a.m.

THE COURT: Doctor, you can step down. Please do not discuss this case with anyone until this case is completed.

— The witness stands down.

— Short adjournment.

—— {1435|1436}

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Is there anything, gentlemen, before I call the jury?

MR. CHRISTIE: No. Thank you.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury, please.

— The jury enters. 12:00 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. I was asking you, Dr. Vrba, about whether people who were sick ever received medical treatment.

A. There were exceptions that they did receive medical treatment.

Q. You were one of them; in fact, you had a surgical operation and were anesthetized and, obviously, recovered. Is that right?

A. That is so.

Q. You developed, I understand, some kind of infection in the area of your posterior; am right?

A. That's right.

Q. And it obviously resulted in you being unable to work at all, right?

A. This as a consequence of beating.

Q. Yes, because you were beaten. You suffered an injury and you were beaten by a Kapo?

A. No. By an S.S. man. {1436|1437}

Q. And you suffered an injury and then you were taken to a hospital where you were anesthetized, and before you were completely under the anesthetic I gather they had begun operating on you.

A. That's right.

Q. And you recovered.

A. That's right.

Q. So I suppose that there was some kind of septicemia [sic] or blood poisoning [sic] from your previous injury; is that right?

A. The beating on the buttocks usually results in destruction of a number of tissues connected to it, and that cells are liable to infection which then spreads. The surgery was therefore necessary to prevent a general poisoning of blood.

Q. You went to the hospital; you got the surgery and you recovered.

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose they had to apply stitches to the wound.

A. Possibly.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't know. The wound is still there.

Q. Now, I'd like you to turn to page 209 of your hardcover book. I'd like you to read the third paragraph with me and make sure I don't miss a word. It begins with the words, "His physical strength".

Have you found it? Page 209 your edition.

A. I am looking for it.

Q. It is actually the third full {1437|1438} paragraph from the top. The first part of the paragraph begins from the previous page, so it begins with the words, "His physical strength".

A. On page 208.

Q. 209.

A. 209?

Q. Yes.

A. "His physical strength was such", yes.

Q. "... that even the Monkey Tyn, the Camp Senior, was afraid of him. His contacts among the influential prisoners in general and the Sonderkommando, who had access to the valuables of the gas chamber victims, in particular, were closer even than those of Fero Langer." Am I pronouncing that right?

A. Yes.

Q. "He was a millionaire even by the standards of Birkenau, where I have seen twenty-dollar bills used as toilet paper; ..."

A. Yes.

Q. "... and he used his wealth to gain power over the S.S. by the simple expedient of bribery."

A. That's right.

Q. So it is right that you have seen $20 bills used as toilet paper in Birkenau?

A. I used them.

Q. You used them.

A. Yes, so that they don't get into the hands of the Germans.

Q. So that's the truth, then.

A. Yes. {1438|1439}

Q. Thank you. These are $20 American bills, or Canadian bills?

A. I have seen only American money and English pound. The English pounds were much more suitable for this purpose because they were printed only on one side.

Q. So you've seen people use these for toilet paper as you say.

A. Yes.

Q. You watched them use them for toilet paper?

A. Well, they usually were in a certain amount of privacy and I didn't take the look so close, but I knew that sometimes money which had to be delivered to the S.S., when we were sorting out the property, has been disposed of instead of being given away, into the toilets, so that the Nazis don't get hold of Western currency. It was a type of sabotage.

Q. I see. Why not just rip the money up?

A. Because by ripping the money up it is rather a long process, and if somebody would see it, you would lose the life of it.

Q. Well, it would easier to smuggle it into a latrine and use it for toilet paper?

A. Well, if you go to the toilet you might use it for toilet paper, or if you are worried, you can throw it in. Sometimes I threw bundles of hundred-dollar notes.

Q. I see. Whole bundles of hundred-dollar notes. {1439|1440}

A. That's right.

Q. And you also seemed to indicate that bribes in the region of hundred thousand British pounds were used in the camp, don't you?

A. This is quite possible, yes; but such bribes were not paid in currency. They were paid, usually, in diamonds – you know, a tin-full with diamonds is sometimes worth hundred thousand pounds or more.

Q. Well, I understood you to have said, at one point, that somebody bribed an S.S. guard with a hundred thousand pounds.

A. Well, I didn't refer to cash. I referred to valuables valued at hundred thousand pounds.

Q. The way I understood the story you told was that the S.S. guard would be paid from somebody outside the camp.

A. I don't understand now to which story you refer.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You don't remember that?

A. Would you please remind me? There were several stories, bribery of S.S. The S.S., apart from being murderers, were also thieves. This goes together.

Q. Sure. You don't recall the story of the hundred-pound bribe that you used in your book? There were more than one?

A. The bribe that Charles Ungel paid in order to smuggle him out from the camp?

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Yes, I remember the story, and remember that money was supposed to be paid. It was in {1440|1441} tins. So this means that I assume that there were gold and $20 pieces and various other gold monets, and mainly diamonds with considerable size of carats, and it would be roughly valued to a value of half a million dollars or hundred thousand pounds.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Do you agree with me that many people escaped from Auschwitz?

A. I have no statistics about it.

Q. Are you familiar with the book, "Fighting Auschwitz", by Joseph Garlinski?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with that book?

A. I think I perused that book, yes.

Q. Sorry?

A. I perused that book. I even met Mr. Garlinski in Paris once in 1972.

Q. Yeah. Do you agree with me that he indicates that altogether there escaped from Auschwitz and its sub camps, chiefly Birkenau, 667 prisoners of whom sixteen were women in 1942, in 1941, six —

Q. Does he refer to successful attempts or escapes of attempts?

Q. Well, later on he deals with how many were successful, but I am dealing with escapes.

A. Well, you see, here you must take it with a pinch of salt, because Germans considered attempts escapes, they hang. For example, I saw a political prisoner hanged because he had two shirts under his tunic, and he said he wear two shirts because he is feeling cold, and the answer was, if others can feel one shirt without feeling cold and he wears two shirts, then {1441|1442} this is obviously a preparation for escape and he was hanged for that. Now, in the statistics it would go as execution for attempt to escape, so I don't know, therefore, how the statistics correlate for attempts to escape.

Q. So you don't know whether there were other people who escaped or not.

A. I know that there was a major outbreak of sixty-five Russians under special circumstances, and I have been present on numerous amount of hangings of people who were supposed to have tried to escape.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. But I have got no personal knowledge of anybody who successfully escaped without being brought back into the camp.

Q. I see. So nobody successfully escaped.

A. To my knowledge.

Q. So that is why, I suppose, nobody but you would have raised the extermination allegation. Is that your explanation?

A. No. Some people escaped, perhaps, and went into hiding. And so that they are perfectly satisfied with the achievement that saved their lives from the hands of those murderers, but I felt that I have to do more, and that is why I wrote the report and tried to allow the events which are occurring in Auschwitz.

Q. You had a deep and abiding hatred for the Germans, I would imagine.

A. I am perfectly fluent in German as well as in Russian, and I love Goethe [sic] and I love Pushkin {1442|1443} and I am an enemy of anything that smells of hatred against a nationality. I had a perfectly human hatred against Nazis because these were anti-human organization against whom the whole world was fighting for bloody six years, and I was no exception in the will and decision to do everything possible to get this evil down from the face of the earth.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So it's a political organization you hated, not the people themselves.

A. To hate the people as a nation I consider a criminal matter.

Q. Mm-hmmm. You hated the Nazis, though, I assume from your answer; is that right?

A. I would say so.

Q. And you hate them enough to lie about them?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Do you hate them enough to lie about them?

A. I have sworn on oath that here I will say the truth, and you will make an innuendo that I have lied in anything, then you would have to support it with some evidence, otherwise I would think badly about it.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that in your previous evidence you gave us to believe and told us as a fact that when the S.S. man climbed up on the long bunker, he had to reach up six and a half to seven feet. I put it to you that that is exactly what you said, sir, isn't it?

A. Is it?

Q. I put it to you, and you are the {1443|1444} witness, and you have the memory and you testified, I put it to you that's what you said.

A. I said, basically, that he had to reach up upon that bunker, and that bunker was, as far as I remember, certainly up to here if one would stand nearby, perhaps higher. So in other words he had to reach up and he had to climb. I didn't go there with a tape to measure if it was five or seven. You must understand that if I use such approximations, I am using them in order to make it more understandable to the jury and to the court of what approximately was involved, but they are not identical with engineering measurements.

Q. Well, you gave us to believe and you told us, as a matter of fact, and I put it to you that you said six and a half to seven feet.

A. Yes.

Q. That's what you said.

A. Yes, that would be approximately the height of a grown-up man.

Q. Aha.

A. Yeah.

Q. Now, I put it to you that the roof of the Leichenkeller to which you referred on the map ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... was actually parallel [sic] to and very close to the ground.

A. That is what you are putting to me?

Q. Yes. That's right.

A. How do you know that?

Q. Because I have seen the plans, if you want an answer. Have you seen the plans? {1444|1445}

A. No.

Q. I will show them to you. I now produce and show to you George Wellersleigh's [Georges Wellers] "Gas Chambers" – or "Les Chambres a Gas ont Existée" - The Gas Chamber Do Exist.

A. Did exist.

COURT: Ask him if he knows about the book and the plan.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you seen this book before?

A. I have never seen this book before, but I have seen the author, George Wellers.

Q. Have you seen these plans before?

A. I have not seen the plans. May I make a remake?

Q. You described the death of Josef Erdelyi, on page 149, 152 – 193 of my book, and then on page 170. Can you tell me why you described it?

A. Could you once more tell me the numbers?

Q. On page 149, 152 and 153 you describe the death of Josef Erdelyi from typhus, and then on page 152 you describe him as being with you. Can you explain that?

A. Numbers up to 153?

Q. Yes. Those are the pages and they are identical. You are using the hardcover edition; I am using the soft edition.

A. Well, I don't need to go into the matter to explain this, because I remember it quite well. What happened is the following: {1445|1446}

I described in the book the death of Erdelyi, and then, later, Erdelyi appears as a hanging as a witness; is that right?

Q. That is what I recall.

A. That's right. That was in the book. You are recording it quite right. This means that I described how my friend, Erdelyi from Banowce (ph), a friend of mine, from childhood, in approximately September or October 1942, but in later part of the book, until then, I haven't written anything about the procedures which are applied in Auschwitz for attempts to escape. And the first time when I saw such procedures was approximately in July 1942, in the first week when I was in Auschwitz. At that time Erdelyi lived. In other words, what I have used in this book is what is a general technique of many who write books on literature, that it is a flashback.

Q. Yes. Okay. So it's a flashback, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, in the book you give narrative. You give words to people and you create situations.

A. Words to people who create situations?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I don't create situations. I describe situations.

Q. Can you tell us how, in this book, you describe the words uttered by people at the time?

A. I certainly didn't have a stenographer nearby to record the words exactly, neither did {1446|1447} I have a dictaphone to —

Q. But I suggest you have a good imagination, so I suggest you created the words.

A. You can call it imagination or you can call it good memory.

Q. Yeah.

A. In other words, I have created the situation in an artistic way, if you allow me to count myself on account of this book as an artist or as an artistic attempt.

Q. I suggest, also, that you falsified to some extent as well, because throughout the book you referred to someone by the name of Rudolf Vrba, and you attribute the name Vrba to the conversations, and Rudi, meaning you, and in fact, there was nobody by that name in the camp, sir. Is that right?

A. That is perfectly so, but I would take a great objection against your word "falsify", because I would say, then, that the artist drawn my moustache in a different way has falsified something. This is not a document, but literature, and literature has been meant mainly for young people and it would be for young people a considerable confusion to explain to them all the methods of clandestine work and how it came that the names have to be changed.

Moreover, I would have to explain my real ground and reasons why I changed my German name to the name of my native language, and this would have transferred, perhaps, a national hatred to the reader, which I wanted to avoid, against the Germans.

In other words, I used my licence of {1447|1448} a poet, it is called licencia poetarum, to put in the book only those facts and events which will enable a young person to understand the general situation.

Q. Mm-hmmm. So for you it's poetic licence?

A. Poetic licence in this particular case.

Q. Yeah.

A. In other words, I am not bound to make of it a document, but recreates the situation as close as possible to the truth without complicating it.

Q. Without complicating it. Without quoting from the book that you have, I am quoting from one that you acknowledge is attributed to you. Maybe we should check the foreword, the preface in the one you have.

A. Yes.

Q. See if it's the same preface.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Will you agree with this statement about this writing: "There is no chip on his shoulder; and bitterness, where it exists, is controlled carefully by undeniable facts, not by fancies ..."

Do you agree?

A. Where bitterness ...

Q. No. "... and bitterness, where it exists, is controlled carefully by undeniable facts, not by fancies".

A. That is perfectly so. In the first line, as far as the bitterness, it is absolutely unimportant in this Court whether I am bitter or sweet. The fact is, whether I am right or wrong about the gas chamber {1448|1449} in Auschwitz, as far as the preface which is written about Mr. Alan Bestic, you have to discuss the literary merits of Mr. Bestic with him personally.

Q. I am interested in discussing the facts with you, and I want to know if you say that it is an undeniable fact contained within this book.

A. This book describes that Auschwitz was a place of mass extermination, that during the time when I was, 1,760,000 men, women and children were murdered in a low way.

Q. In the gas chamber?

A. In the gas chamber and otherwise.

Q. I have a question for you.

A. Please don't interrupt – and to this extent, the book, naturally, is true.

Q. You say 1.7 million people were gassed in Auschwitz, and that is truth?

A. 1.7 million —1,760,000 plus, in the time of my being there, because many others were killed when I wasn't there, but I wasn't an eye witness and I have no right to talk about that.

Q. You say 1.75 —

A. 1.765, according to my count.

Q. Of people gassed while you were there.

A. Yes.

Q. That includes Jews and gentiles and everybody else.

A. That's right.

Q. Isn't it true that in the War Refugee Report that you provided at the time, that you {1449|1450} said 2.5 million people were gassed while you were there.

A. I've got the War Refugee Board here in front of me, and it is come from the Office of the President of the United States of America, and has a seal of the Criminal Division of the Office of Special Investigations.

Q. I am wrong. I will withdraw that question.

A. You are wrong again, or should I prove that you are wrong?

Q. No, that's fine. I'll admit I am wrong.

A. Because according to here —

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor. Defence counsel has said, as I heard him, that he was wrong. I don't think there is any need for you to prove it unless he asks you again.

A. Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You say 1.765 million, is that right?

A. 1.765 thousand.

Q. Right. Did you see one person being gassed yourself?

A. I saw 1.765 thousand people walk into the space between Krematorium I and Krematorium II, Krematorium III and Krematorium IV, were in front of my eyes knowing that the space is absolutely closed, because there is no road out from there except coming back the way they went in, and nobody came out from there except smoke. If you, perhaps, suggest that they are still there, that's a different thing. {1450|1451}

Q. Well, we will discuss that in a moment, but we will find in your book where it says – and I am using page ten, but your book is slightly different – I am just going to read it to you:

"For the machinery that sucked in 2,500,000 men, women and children in three years and puffed them out in harmless black smoke ..."

Was that what you said?

A. Which page is that?

Q. Mine was ten. Yours is around there in your hard cover.

A. Well, this is a very simple calculation, Mr. Counsel, because when I escaped on April 7, 1944, the main message which I was carrying was that everything is prepared for the mass murder of Hungarian Jews. At that time there was one million Hungarian Jews, and as you can find from historical documentation which is presently available, in the time of July 15 to May 15, 1944 to July 7, 1944, not less than 437,000 Hungarian Jews were deported to Auschwitz, of which ninety percent were gassed at arrival.

Now, if you add to 1,765,000 those Hungarian Jews which were deported to Auschwitz immediately after my escape, plus as we know many thousands of Jews who were brought to Auschwitz for process of mass murder from the ghetto of Loge and from the ghetto of Theresine [Terezin] in the month after my escape, you will find that my figures are as true as possible or as close as possible to the historical records.

Q. So you are telling me about the facts that you gathered from other sources and you are {1451|1452} telling me that it is —

A. Plus my judgment, with my accuracy, with trusting to what I have seen, and with knowing what happened in Hungary, because many of my relatives perished at the same time, and with knowing, studying the history of this period. I arrived at a figure of two and a half million dead in Auschwitz, saying that this figure is pretty close to the truth, but the truth cannot be established with my means better than with a maximum possible error of truth minus ten per cent. That is clearly stated at the end of this book. And in my affidavit, which I have put under oath, the Embassy of Israel 1960 the Eichmann trial, and if I am allowed to quote the exact —

THE COURT: Not at the moment.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: It was a simple question as to whether you estimated 2,500,000, and I think you said yes, and you've told us why. Maybe I will go on to another question unless there is something you want to say.

A. And you have got here everything how I came to the 2,500,000. You are confusing us here because the jury did not read the book, and therefore you are again pulling out things which I have to repeat and which are here on this page, and I can tell you on this page is written that I have seen only one million three quarters to die until April 7th, and I have also said that the figure two and a half million is made up by the addition of the final value of my statistics in April 1944 plus a known figure of 400,000 Hungarian Jews killed in May, June and July 1944, plus official figure {1452|1453} of about 350,000 registered prisoners who died in Auschwitz.

Thus, as far as I could recollect, according to my memory, observations and opinion, the number of victims in Auschwitz was two and a half million. Thus, my estimation of the death roll in Auschwitz and the estimation of the death roll made by Rudolf Hoess, the commander of Auschwitz, made independently of each other and using different methods, were nevertheless in good agreement, and I declare by Almighty God that this is my name and signature and that the contents of my affidavit are true.

So you see what is the difference between you tearing out a statement and between presenting the statement in full as I suggested.

Q. I suppose the only difference is, you confirm that your figures now agree with those of Rudolf Hoess. Right?

A. As far as I could see. I read the figures of Rudolf Hoess and I arrived at the same conclusion as Rudolf Hoess. Also, Rudolf Hoess statistics, his method of observation is different than mine, and he came to the same figure. But I gave my figure in April 1944 when Rudolf Hoess was still commander in Auschwitz and that figure was reached the President of the United States in November 1944, when Rudolf Hoess was still commander in Auschwitz, and it is therefore obvious that it is not likely that I copied my statement from Rudolf Hoess.

Q. No. I quite agree with you. But how do you explain the fact that the estimate given by {1453|1454} you coincided with a statement given by Hoess two years later?

A. Because Hoess knew the truth, and I knew the truth.

Q. How do you explain the fact that experts like Dr. Raul Hilberg dispute that figure and say it is closer to one million, or, in Reitlinger's case, 800,000 at Birkenau?

A. It is not for me to explain the scholarships of Reitlinger or Hilberg, because they have different methods of scholarships. For them, if they do not have documents of considerable value and amount, which are very difficult to obtain, they prefer not to include that figure in their final calculation, because they are bound by historical discipline whereas my figure is based on eye witness account.

Q. You claim that you then were an eye witness to the gassing of 1,765,000 people, right?

A. Right. And I think that in this respect both Hilberg and Reitlinger has made an under estimate. Similarly, both Reitlinger and Hilberg have stated that the number of Jews killed in Einsatzkommandos – this means by shooting and not by gassing – was 1,400,000, but three years ago I have written a new study by Professor Krowsnick from Germany, Professor in Cologne and Director of the Institute ... and this professor Krowsnick, on the basis of exclusivity, German documents, without investigating any of the survivors but investigating only the German officers and their correspondence about it, was able to reconstruct that it was not 1.4 million, but two and a quarter million {1454|1455} who were murdered by the Einsatzkommandos.

So you can see that in spite of the great effort which the Nazis have made to cover up the incredible and unbelievable crimes, modern scholarship is constantly improving with more than scientific methods the truth. The truth is not so simple. So you can —

Q. Now, sir —

A. So you can see it is not criticism of Hilberg and Reitlinger. It just shows that better scholars with better methods and better access to sources can give more exact figures and those figures are most close to mine, based on observation, than the figures close to scholars who spend their lives only in limited amount of libraries.

Q. So your experience, then, supersedes your knowledge on the basis of what you said.

A. This would be natural, because I was there.

Q. And you counted 1,765,000 going into the gas chamber.

A. That was told to you twice.

Q. Thank you. You also described the situation where you said that the guards forced the prisoners to sing “Silent Night” and beat them to death if they didn’t. Is that right?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You, in your book, describe a situation where the guards forced the prisoners to sing- “Silent Night” at Christmastime, and if they didn’t sing properly they were sent to bed without supper. Is that right? {1455|1456}

A. That is right partially. Others were murdered.

Q. They were murdered for not singing “Silent Night” properly.

A. That’s right. And if I may add another legal point of view, I have been approached by the German Embassy, German Consulate in Vancouver three I months ago on the case of investigation of the well-known event in Auschwitz I and Birkenau, that during Christmas of 1942 they put up a great Christmas Tree and brought there a number of prisoners, killed them and hanged them over that Christmas Tree and proclaimed that this is a suitable ornamentation at this period in this place. This became an investigation. The perpetrators of the crime are known by name to the Consul General of the Federal Republic of Vancouver, and I am sure he will be more than willing to provide you with the documentation.

THE COURT: Just a moment, Doctor. We are getting far afield here. What is your next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Is it your observation that prisoners would be singing on their way to work from Birkenau?

A. Yes.

Q. And they would go out and work in the fields from the women’s camp — the women would go out and work in the fields? Do you deny that?

A. I haven’t seen that. I have seen them marched to various places of work.

Q. Singing.

A. Singing. On order. German songs. {1456|1457}

Q. Yes.

A. But I have never seen them working in the fields. I saw them working in Kanada — this means during sorting out of the goods which were stolen from the victims, and I have seen them being marched into the armaments factories of Krupps and Siemens and of German armament factories DAW, but I didn’t see them working on any fields. There might have been such a thing, but I was not aware of it and I was not an eye witness to it.

Q. Sure. Are you aware that in your book you described an air raid upon Auschwitz-Birkenau in April of 1944, two days after you escaped?

A. April ...

Q. April ‘44.

A. Which day?

Q. I think you said the 9th of April, two days after you escaped.

A. That’s right.

Q. Is that right?

A. That’s right.

Q. I was going to ask you if, in view of the fact that you dispute what Reitlinger and Hilberg said — because they are not at the scene — whether you agree that other authors who were at the scene and lived in the concentration camp say there was no air raid until August of ‘44 — months after you were gone.

A. This I can easily explain his apparent discrepancy, by simply showing you a map.

Q. Please do. You know what I mean, don’t you, when I say — {1457|1458}

A. Very well.

Q. You know that Primo Levy, who claims that he was a survivor of Auschwitz, claims that there was no air raid until later until after you left?

A. Pretty well. I will explain where the discrepancy arose.

Q. Before you get the explanation, let me put on record what I suggest he says. You know that he says, quoting page 107 of his book, “Survival in Auschwitz”, by Primo Levy, he says:

But in August ‘44 the bombardments of Upper Silesia began and they ... pauses and renewals in the summer and autumn until a definitive crisis ...

Now, you read about that and you are aware of it?

A. Beg your pardon?

Q. You know about that passage, don’t you?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, can you explain:

On the night of April 9th we had a shock of a distant nature. About eight o’clock we heard the rumble of distant air planes, something we had not known in Auschwitz. They came closer and closer and then bombs began to scrunch not far away.

You agree that is what you wrote?

A. Yes.

Q. One other question. There is no doubt about Auschwitz-Birkenau being in Upper Silesia and Primo Levy is talking about Birkenau in his book.

A. Yes. {1458|1459}

Q. Now, will you explain it?

A. I allowed to go to the projector?

THE COURT: If you feel that is the best way to explain it, you may do that.

THE WITNESS: On April 7, 1944, I went into hiding. This was for my escape. And I stayed there for three days and nights covered by many layers of wood. Here, at this place, approximately at the northeastern corner of Birkenau camp, were situated a battery of anti-aircraft artillery.

When I was hidden in my place here, it wouldn’t be possible for me, due to the position of this anti-aircraft battery that I never heard before, to distinguish if it was a bombardment or if the artillery has been activated. As far as I know it has been published recently that the first air planes flew over Auschwitz already on 1st April 1944, and as far as I remember I heard a plane overhead and I heard strong explosions which were shaking the bunker in which I was. It is quite likely that the artillery fire which was opened on the 9th against the air plane in the situation in which I was, I consider for bombardment.

Q. Thank you.

A. In which case I made an error.

Q. So really, what you said as to bombs falling, was the anti-aircraft guns going on?

A. If there were no bombs, then it was anti-aircraft guns which were in close vicinity

Q. Mm-hmmm. But anyone else who was in the camp would have heard the same guns, wouldn’t they?

A. I would think so. {1459|1460}

Q. Same noise.

A. I would think so.

Q. And you don't dispute what Primo Levy, a prisoner, says, then.

A. Well, I don't dispute it, but Primo Levy, if you read carefully his book, he was in Auschwitz III at that time, which is further in the Buna-works than I was from the artillery which was operated about a distance of two hundred yards, whereas he was in a distance of about six miles. So he might have heard something different than I did.

Q. Oh, I see. Thank you.

A. You didn't take notice that Primo Levy was in Auschwitz III.

Q. No. I'll check that, though.

A. Please do.

Q. You describe that you went to the hospital and recovered and had surgery and you had an operation. How do you explain your miraculous value as opposed to others who you say were not given treatment?

A. I will explain in a minute. Your Honour, can I leave the room for two minutes?

THE COURT: Yes. Members of the jury, you are excused for five minutes.

— The jury retires. 12:45 p.m.

— The witness retires.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The witness returns to the stand.

— The jury enters. 12:50 p.m. {1460|1461}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I think, Dr. Vrba, you were telling us why you were of exceptional value that you should have been given a surgical operation to save your life.

A. I am quite sure I didn't tell it in those words.

Q. No. I asked in those words. I suggested to you that that could be the only explanation why you would be saved and given a surgical operation and nobody else, and everybody else be killed when they are sick.

A. Well, you are again misrepresenting something which was written in the book, and if you will allow me, and if Your Honour allows me, I am rectifying this misrepresentation.

Q. Well, I will be glad to hear your explanation.

A. When I became very sick I wasn't able to go to work any more and I was put into the Krankenbau where I was for about one week, and it was known, there were in Auschwitz I, there were eight hundred or nine hundred dying people there from various diseases [sic] and during that time I have made some connection with someone who has got flu among the prisoners in the camp, there was a German prisoner called Bruno who was the head of Kanada —

Q. Just a minute. Kanada didn't exist in Birkenau — remember?

A. No. This was in Auschwitz. The operation took place in Auschwitz. You would help me if you do your homework. {1461|1462}

THE COURT: Just answer the question, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: And after a week of time I have found the connection of this Kapo, Bruno, who was obliged to me for a personal favour. This means that I didn't give away that he stole something from somebody else under torture, in consequence of which I suffered this reversal in my health. And this Kapo, Bruno, had access to the properties in Kanada which were confiscated from the murdered Jews and found ways to get them into his pockets before they reach the pockets of the S.S. He was a thief, too, and he used that to bribe a certain doctor, a Dr. Derring, who was surgeon formerly before the War, on the medical school in Warsaw, and for proper reward he took the risk to operate, make a serious surgery on a Jewish prisoner. So this was against the rules.

So he performed this surgery and he performed it successfully. It was an excellent surgeon who, unfortunately, wasn't too well equipped; but the situation is different, and you managed to misrepresent it as if I would say that I am somebody unusual.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. I had only luck that somebody helped me in a critical moment.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And your evidence is that nobody else got that kind of treatment, is it?

A. I wouldn't say that nobody else. I would only say that such a treatment was available under suitable star constellation, if I may put it that way.

Q. Star constellation? {1462|1463}

A. Constellation of stars. It is a bit of luck, with connections, and not sufficient control from the S.S. who is being operated on it was possible, occasionally, to make a successful operation on a Jew with a risk.

Q. Well, you were considered a Jew?

A. Of course.

Q. You were considered a political prisoner?

A. No. I was considered a Jew.

Q. You were not considered a political prisoner.

A. No.

Q. You never indicated that at any time.

A. In my book?

Q. At any time.

A. I indicated in my book that I have been taken to the concentration camp Maidanek from the concentration camp in Novaki (phonetic) with one thousand other Jews in a family transport of Jews to the concentration camp of Novaki. I mentioned even a number of Jews who were with me, and I mentioned that from the people who were sent with me, I was the only one who was sent alive, and if you will read the book carefully, I am sure you will be able to confirm what I said here under oath.

Q. So you did not claim to be a political prisoner.

A. No, I did not claim to be a political prisoner.

Q. And in the War Refugee Report that {1463|1464} you were supposed to have prepared it said the words, and I quote:

"Finally we were issued a set of prisoners' clothes similar to those we had worn in Lublin and were enrolled as political prisoners in the concentration camp of Auschwitz."

Was that you?

A. I must first check on it. It is my copy which I received, because you might, by error, give me something to read which is not quite so.

Q. That's possible. Page 29 of the War Refugee Board Report.

A. Yes..

Q. Lublin is where Maidanek is, isn't it?

A. That's right.

Q. And that is you, isn't it?

A. That's right. And which line are you referring to?

Q. The last line on page 29.

A. Yes. Political prisoners in the concentration camp of Auschwitz. Now, this is the Report as I wrote it, it was in the Slovak language from which it was translated into German language, from which it was translated into the English language, and there is an error in translation which I can explain if I am allowed to go, again, to the projector.

THE COURT: Just a moment. Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I have no objection.

THE COURT: Yes. {1464|1465}

THE WITNESS: As I explained to you as your question, or as the question of Mr. Crown Attorney, all prisoners, apart from the number, were marked. The political prisoners were marked with a red triangle. The Jews were marked with a red triangle over which was overlaid a yellow triangle, so that the whole thing, together, makes — I don't have yellow colour — a Jewish star. This meant a Jewish prisoner.

Q. A Jewish political prisoner.

A. It meant a Jewish prisoner. However, it was the habit, when one spoke about prisoners, it didn't say there were five hundred prisoners, but used the word Schutzhoftlinge [Schutzhäftlinge]. This is a German Nazi euphemism which, translated, means preventive imprisonment. And in my original I have said that we were Schutzhoftlinge which, due to the several translations, obviously, by the time it was translated, meant political prisoners; but notice that the word "political prisoners" is written in quotation marks. So because Washington, they didn't have a dictionary which didn't contain the Nazi lingo, they translated freely as political prisoners and put on it quotation marks, a sign that they are not quite sure of the translation. And this, you can see, I would like to present that — to whom should I present this evidence?

THE COURT: If you are finished with that, you can come back to the box, please. Now you can finish your answer.

THE WITNESS: You will agree with me that the word "political prisoner" in this American G translation is in quotation marks, whatever that means.

Q. Yes, I will agree with you. I will {1465|1466} just ask you if you were a political prisoner, and your answer is no.

A. No. I was a Jewish prisoner.

Q. Your answer is that it is a mistranslation by those of the War Refugee Board in English?

A. Schutzhoftlinge into English, and translated it into "political prisoners", and my answer is that they didn't know how to translate it.

Q. Now, we were talking about the Gralinski book about Fighting Auschwitz. Have you heard of this book?

A. I have heard about the book.

THE COURT: Just a moment. You were asked, Doctor, whether you were familiar with the book.

THE WITNESS: I am not familiar with the book, but I heard about the book.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I wonder if I can ask you if you could address your mind to this particular statement in the foreword to the book, and maybe I can quote it to you.

A. Yes, please do.

Q. Okay. It says:

"Escape from Auschwitz was more common than from camps that were within German-speaking territory. Over 600 escapers are recorded of whom about a third got away."

Is that true or false?

A. This means that Mr. Gralinski is saying in his book?

Q. I didn't say Mr. Gralinski said {1466|1467} that. It is printed in the book by M.R.D. Foot.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to know if it is a false or true statement.

A. It might be true or it might be false. Ask Mr. Foot.

THE COURT: We will adjourn till two thirty.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury enters. 2:35 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. I'd like to now produce and show to you what appears to be a drawing that was made, I suggest, by you in your 1944 War Refugee Board Report; is that correct?

A. Yes. I have shown it yesterday.

Q. Would you look at each one and make sure that they are all identical? Then I may ask another question.

A. You say they are identical?

Q. I am suggesting they are. {1467|1468}

A. Okay.

Q. Okay? I've made many copies.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, may I give one to each of the jurors?

THE COURT: Have you seen these, Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, Your Honour. I am familiar with the drawing. I have no objection if my friend wishes to do that.

MR. CHRISTIE: It's just a diagram made, I think, in 1944.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Yes. One of them may be made an exhibit, and then they can be distributed.

THE REGISTRAR: Exhibit 22.

EXHIBIT NO. 22: Diagram from War Refugee Board Report.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That's your best recollection when you were giving your report to the Czechoslovak authorities. Right?

A. Yes. That's about how I recollected the situation.

Q. Would you like to keep it?

A. Yes. Thank you.

Q. I'd like to distribute one of these to each member of the jury.

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, you agree with me, sir, that that's quite different than the evidence you {1468|1469} presented in-chief as your recollection of the camp; would you agree?

A. No. Not at all.

Q. Okay.

A. That's untrue.

Q. I now produce and show to you what appears to be a photographic kind of schema of the camp as I believe you presented it on your overhead projection.

Was that not the way you presented it before, sir?

A. That's right. Except that this is dated 25th April, 1944, and this is a later graph which I have taken out from literature, because it shows certain developments which took place after my escape. However, at the same time, the two graphs are not significantly different, considering that this is done by engineers and this by an amateur from memory.

Q. Recollection, yes.

A. Yes.

THE COURT: The second document you showed him, Mr. Christie, is what?

MR. CHRISTIE: Actually, Your Honour, I can tell you that it is a photocopy out of the book, "Eye Witness Auschwitz" by Filip Muller, "Three Years in Gas Chambers", published Stein & Day, New York, 1979.

And with your permission I'd like to show that to the jury as I have several copies of that as well.

THE COURT: As I recall it, Dr. Vrba has identified it as being, in his view at least, accurate.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that correct, Doctor? {1469|1470}

THE WITNESS: I said that in my view this has been done after my escape, this second map, and with considerable changes which I was not aware my map. However, the changes were not so significantly different so that the pictures were a reasonable semblance.

THE COURT: Yes. All right. Then you can do that, Mr. Christie.

THE WITNESS: It is like looking, if I may add, of a picture of a three or four-year-old child. You can recognize both, but it's not the same.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: I then would offer this, Madam Registrar, this copy, and if I may I would like to show copies of this to the jury.

THE COURT: Exhibit 23.

— EXHIBIT NO. 23: Map of Auschwitz II-Birkenau.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, if I could, Doctor —

A. Yes, please.

Q. I think maybe there is an extra one.

A. Thank you very much.

Q. I'd like, if you would, to put this one in your right hand, and the one that you drew in 1944 in your left hand, so we can discuss them in that way.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that all right, then? Okay. {1470|1471}

Now, looking at the right hand, sir, I put it to you that the actual location of the bathhouse is No. 9, called the Sauna.

A. Yes.

Q. You have indicated a bathhouse on the diagram in that general area.

A. Yes.

Q. On your diagram of 1944; is that right?

A. Right.

Q. Yeah. So at least as far as that is concerned, we are not talking about something that wasn't there at the time, are we?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. When we talk about a bathhouse, we are talking about only one in that area of the camp, which in the righthand drawing is No. 9. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it seems to be drawn in your diagram in 1944. Right?

- A. Yes.
- Q. It is drawn in a totally different place, though, isn't it?
- A. No, it's not drawn in a totally different place. You've got, excuse me, you've got there quite clearly on the righthand side shown that the two crematoria and the one bathhouse are in one complex, and the same you can see on my drawing, that the two crematoria and the bath are in one complex.
- In other words, my drawing hasn't got the engineering precision of fifty or sixty yards, but {1471|1472} these two pictures both identify that the two crematoria and the bath are enclosed in barbed wire electric fences together.
- Q. Yeah. I put it to you that the area just below the number 9, sauna, or bathhouse, is the area known as Kanada in the drawing; isn't it?
- A. That's right. And that area was not there when I was escaping on 7 April, or at least, I couldn't see it because it is a long time before my escape that I visited the crematoria.
- Q. Oh, you visited the crematoria.
- A. Yes.
- Q. When?
- A. On several occasions.
- Q. Where did you go?
- A. I went to have a look between the two crematoria and have a look what is happening there.
- Q. Oh, yes. And what was happening there?
- A. I could see people being taken into the crematoria.
- Q. And this is not the occasion when you were at Fred Wetzler's mortuary. This is another occasion, is it?
- A. Perfectly another occasion.
- There was occasion when I was in – Registrar in "BIIA", and my job was to go to "BIID", and because I am a little bit of an inquisitive nature, and also took a little bit of a risk, I simply pretended that I've got some business there and walked on.
- Q. Oh, so you walked between the two crematoria. {1472|1473}
- A. That's right.
- Q. Between Krematorias I and II?
- A. No. Between Krematoria III and IV.
- Q. Oh, between Krematoria III and IV, down the roadway.
- A. That's right.
- Q. They are marked 5 and 6 on the diagram, aren't they, on the righthand diagram.
- A. I think that the right, or the righthand diagram, the crematoria are denoted as 4 and 5, whereas in my diagram they are denoted as III and IV. Now, this is because there were two types of nomenclature of crematoria in Auschwitz. There was a smaller crematorium in Auschwitz I.
- Q. You saw that one too?
- A. I saw, yes. I was inside there.
- Q. Were you inside that, too?
- A. Yes, being inquisitive, I was in there on occasion.
- Q. And were the people gassed at one time?
- A. Just a moment, please. Don't interrupt me. I would like to explain to you the nomenclatures, because there is a discrepancy between nomenclatures on your and my graph.
- Now, the habit was that when crematoria were built in Birkenau, the prisoners called them I, II, III, IV in the order in which they were built, but the Bauleitung – this mean the Official Administration of Builders – took into consideration that there is already one crematorium in Auschwitz and called the new crematoria {1473|1474} II, III, IV and V.
- Consequently, on my map what is called III and IV, which is unofficial map because I gave it my own nomenclature, there is a small difference between the map, the more official map and which denotes the crematoria on the northern side of the map as IV and V, whereas I denote them III and IV.
- Q. I'm sorry, I don't think you've given me the answer to my question as to whether you were in Krematoria No. I in Auschwitz.
- A. No, I was not in Krematoria – oh, in Auschwitz.
- Q. Yes.
- A. Yes, I was.
- Q. Were people being gassed there at the time?
- A. No, they were not gassed, and there was a particular occasion when I went into that crematoria and —
- Q. I see.
- A. There must have been a particular reason, because it was not a walking sort of distance.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. When I was working in Kanada, in November 1942, I have been taken to the dumping truck to Krematoria I in Auschwitz. The Krematoria I in Auschwitz was on yard – that yard on the lefthand side had, to my recollection Krematorium I, and to the righthand side there was a hospital for S.S. The best would be, again, if I show it on a – do I have permission?
- Q. What I would really like to do is {1474|1475} deal with the diagram we have in our hands. This is Birkenau we are dealing with.
- A. Yes.
- Q. I asked you if you had been in Krema I in Auschwitz when people were being gassed, and I think the answer is no. Correct?
- A. The answer is no. I went there for collecting their clothes from the gas chamber in Krematorium I.
- Q. From the gas chamber?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Were you inside?
- A. Yes.
- Q. What did the gas chamber look like?
- A. It was originally a garage which connected the S.S. barracks with that small crematorium.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. And there were garage doors.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. And the roof was reinforced with earth. The inside was dark. The door was opened —
- Q. How wide were the doors?
- A. Like a good garage door, and two side opening to two sides.
- Q. Mm-hmmm.
- A. We went in under the pretext that we are collecting – not under the pretext, under the order to collect all the clothes which were there.
- Consequently, as I understood, the people had to undress before they went into that gas chamber. {1475|1476}
- Q. You are telling us —
- A. Then they were gassed, and then, because there were clothes in the yard in front of the hospital, they were shoved in the gas chamber before they were taken out. So I understand that was my job at that time, so I collected the clothes.
- Q. The clothes were in the gas chamber.
- A. Right.
- Q. Yes.
- A. So we collected the clothes from there, and at that moment I saw through the window of the crematorium a friend of mine from Slovakia, Phillip Mueller.
- Q. Who was he?
- A. Phillip Mueller.
- Q. Phillip Mueller in Auschwitz I?
- A. In Auschwitz I crematoria.
- Q. Yes.
- A. And I was also very well acquainted with his father.
- Q. Yes.
- A. Consequently, there was sort of an affinity between us because I took a little bit of care of his father before he died in Auschwitz. We came together from Maidanek. I spoke with Phillip Mueller through the window. Phillip Mueller explained to me —
- Q. Is this in the crematoria part, or the gas chamber part?
- A. No. On the yard, between the – on the yard in front of the crematorium, in front of the {1476|1477} gas chamber, and in front —
- Q. Now, let's go to find on the map on Auschwitz I where this is then.
- THE COURT: That's Exhibit 21, I believe, isn't it?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir. I'm sorry. It is marked "P" for identification. Maybe we can deal with that now.

Q. Would you like to show us on this map where the crematorium was in Auschwitz I?

A. On this map, which is not dated, it would be here, in this region.

Q. All right. Let's mark that.

A. And it is marked something like KI.

Q. KI.

A. Yes. In this region.

Q. Would you like to just mark an arrow and mark it to that area there?

A. Yeah. Not to that area there.

Q. Well, you do it.

A. I will show you this area.

Q. Okay.

A. Because I don't know the date of the map, and how many building changes have been made since.

Q. Sure.

A. So since I have saw it in 1942 and since this map is not dated, there might have been certain changes which I cannot clearly recognize.

Q. But you are prepared to identify {1477|1478} that building.

A. But I would prefer to say that the crematorium, here is the entrance to Auschwitz, here is a Block 1, here is Block 22. Yes, it was here in this region.

Q. Okay. So you just draw a circle on there, then, eh?

A. Yeah. And you can now mark it, please.

Q. So you want to put a mark on it to identify it?

A. What would you like me to write? Region of Krematorium I and gas chamber I?

A. Yes. Go ahead.

Q. And you don't mind if I add that this was as recollected from November 1942.

Q. Put it down.

A. Because how it look in November 1943, I don't know.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

THE COURT: Exhibit 24.

— EXHIBIT NO. 24: Large map of Auschwitz I (Formerly Exhibit "E")

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How do you explain the fact that you've drawn on the diagram that I showed you every crematorium the same shape in 1944, when you drew the diagram upon your escape.

A. Because I had only two days to write the whole report, and to try to depict the crematoria.{1478|1479} There was a great urgency with that plan, because the objective of the plan was to get it to Hungary and to use this whole report towards the Hungarian Jews of imminent deportation.

Under that conditions I didn't lose much time with details like what is the difference between Krematorium I and II and Krematorium II and III, but I limited myself to depict the position of the gas chambers and crematoria one side, and the geographic position of the whole murderous complex on the other side.

Q. Sure. I now produce and show to you a diagram which came from, I suggest, your War Refugee Report of 1944 in which you depicted a crematoria. Correct?

A. That's right.

Q. Is it accurate?

A. This I cannot say. It was said that as we were not in the large crematoria, we reconstructed it from messages which we got from members of the Sonderkommando working in that crematorium, and therefore, that approximately how it transpired in our mind, and in our ability to depict what we have heard.

Q. That is what you depicted, though?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is accurately depicting what you depicted?

A. That's right. It is accurately depicting what I heard that it might look like.

Q. Okay. So you were never inside any of the crematoria, then?

A. Except for Krematorium I in Auschwitz

Q. Krematorium I in Auschwitz. {1479|1480}

A. Yes.

Q. So this wasn't a drawing of that. This was supposed to be crematoriums, two types, I and II, in Birkenau. Right?

A. That's right. And this was much more important because Krematorium I in Auschwitz, at that time was of minor importance. It had a capacity in several hundred people a day. This one had a capacity of two thousand people a day, and there were two of them.

Q. Two thousand people day?

A. That's right. Capacity. And there were other two that had a capacity of thousand people a day. This is all written in my report.

Q. Yes. And in your report you say twelve thousand people a day were killed at Birkenau. Right?

A. You will have to show me a passage before we draw some conclusions.

Q. I will. Let's deal with this. Can I ask you, if that accurately sets out what you reported at the time?

A. Yes. In scheme.

Q. In scheme, yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I file this, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes. Exhibit 25.

MR. CHRISTIE: I've got copies for the jury, if I may.

THE COURT: Yes.

— EXHIBIT NO. 25: Map of Krematorium I and II, Birkenau. {1480|1481}

MR. CHRISTIE: And a copy for the witness.

Q. I put it to you that you did say in your book in 1944 that twelve thousand bodies were dealt with in twenty-four hours.

A. Could you please show me which page?

Q. I don't know, because it's in the first chapter, page ten my book, but you've got a hard cover edition.

A. First chapter?

Q. Do you remember saying that?

A. Well, I do not have the whole book by heart and I first would control what you are saying if it is true.

Q. Okay.

A. Or how far it is away.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. Would you please kindly turn to the chapter you've got in mind?

Q. I think it is the first chapter. That is where you were.

A. First chapter. Chapter 1.

Q. Just before the Heinrich Himmler incident.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, top of the page, Chapter 1, page 10:

"And so he gave orders for the greatest, most efficient extermination factory the world has ever known. For the modern concrete gas chambers and the vast crematoria that could absorb as many as 12,000 bodies in twenty-four {1481|1482} hours and, in fact, did so. For the machinery that sucked in 2,500,000 men, women and children in three years and puffed them out in harmless black smoke."

Have you got that paragraph? Do you recall writing that?

A. I would like to see if there are no changes from your version and mine.

Q. Okay. Now, it's before, "Commandant Hoess's brand new toy".

A. Is it on the end?

Q. No. Before that.

A. Yes. You see, if you don't find it in my original, then I will have doubts about the papers which you present.

Q. I see.

A. With all respect to you.

Q. Sure. Now, we will have to find it for you.

What I am going to suggest to you is that your diagrams presented at the time are certainly not consistent with your knowledge related in your later book. Would you agree? Do you understand the question?

A. Yes. Please. I am listening to you.

Q. I said your diagrams presented in 1944 are totally inconsistent with the information you presented in your later book. Would you agree?

A. No, it is not true.

Q. All right. I now present and show to you the portion of your book.

A. Yes. {1482|1483}

Q. Dealing with the twelve thousand bodies a day.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Right there. Page 15.

A. Page 15. Right. Yes:

"For the modern concrete gas chambers and the vast crematoria that could absorb as many as 12,000 bodies in twenty-four hours and, in fact, did so. For the machinery that sucked in 2,500,000 men, women and children in three years and puffed them out in harmless black smoke."

Q. Right. Now, you said in your book further on that there were fifteen ovens that could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes.

A. Where is it written in the book?

Q. Next. Two paragraphs down from the one that you just read.

A. Two paragraphs.

Q. Three paragraphs down.

A. "And so he gave orders for the greatest, most ..." "Heinrich Himmler visited Auschwitz Camp again ...", next paragraph, "This time I was glad to see him arrive ..."

THE COURT: A little louder, please. I can't hear, Doctor. The jury has to hear this and so do I. The jury is more important than I am.

THE WITNESS: Next paragraph:

"Once more we were lined up spic and span ..." Next paragraph, "Though he conducted his tour of the camp with his usual thoroughness ..." Next paragraph, "He was to watch the world's first conveyor belt {1483|1484} killing ..."

Q. Okay. That's the paragraph. It says in there:

"It was a truly splendid affair, one hundred yards long and fifty yards wide, containing fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes ..."

A. Yes.

Q. That is what you said when you wrote your book.

A. Yes.

Q. When you prepared your report to the War Refugee Board, you described a gas chamber with a railroad track leading to nine ovens. Right?

A. A railroad track leading to several ovens.

Q. Just a moment. You drew the diagram to indicate nine ovens.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. With four openings each, or how many?

A. There are no openings recorded.

Q. None, eh?

A. None.

Q. But you say in the report four openings each.

A. Do I say it in the report?

Q. Well, it's your report. Don't you remember?

A. Well, I do remember. I've got a reasonably good memory, but if I mention a report which I {1484|1485} wrote exactly forty-two years ago, I'd like to check on it, if you don't mind.

Q. Yes. But the point is, Doctor, that at the time you made the report you were supposed to have a better memory, I suggest, because of the closeness to the event, than you had when you wrote your book.

A. Not necessarily, because at the time when I wrote the report I was not interested in the details too much, but I was interested in getting the message that crematoria exist, gas chambers exist, and the henchmen's axe is prepared for a million Hungarian Jews. So I gave some sort of depicting of geographic situation as well as I could, some of my memory, like this exhibit here. I saw things from inside and from friends got some rough idea what is inside. I saw it from outside. I added to it what it might look like, and in principle it is that the message was right. The crematoria were there. They had roughly the capacity described in the report. The geographic position of the crematoria was depicted with great exactness.

Q. In the Refugee Board Report I suggest to you that it indicates that it took an hour and a half to burn a body.

A. One moment. In which page?

Q. Well, first of all I ask you, do you not recall writing that?

A. Well, I recall, and it is in the files of the Crown Attorney, that there was a German publication recently published by somebody very similar to your defendant in which his paragraph was grossly distorted and embellished with lies which I have never written. {1485|1486}

Q. Well, did you or did you not say that it took an hour and a half to cremate a body?

A. I will first find it. If I said so, if you claim that I said it in my report, then find it.

Q. Look at page 14, last paragraph of your report, War Refugee Board Report:

"Each opening can take three normal corpses at once, and after an hour and a half the bodies are completely burned."

Is that in your report now I found it for you?

A. "Each opening can take three normal corpses at once, and after an hour and a half the bodies are completely burned."

Q. Yeah.

A. Right.

Q. Now, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Why do you say in your book that it takes twenty minutes with fifteen ovens and three bodies each, in twenty minutes you can burn them all? Why do you say two different things at two different times?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Why do you say two different things at two different times?

A. I say one thing. What is the second thing?

Q. One thing was nine ovens.

A. Yes.

Q. The other thing was three bodies in an hour and a half {1486|1487}

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in your book you say fifteen ovens, and three bodies in twenty minutes.

A. I don't see those three bodies in an hour and a half. Excuse me.

Q. All right. Well, we will go over it again. The War Refugee Board Report made in 1944:

"Each opening can take three normal corpses at once, and after an hour and a half the bodies are completely burned."

A. Right.

Q. The book which we were reading together – yours is a different page than mine:

"... fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously [sic] in twenty minutes ..."

Now, do you see the difference?

A. No.

Q. None. You don't see the difference?

A. No, no. In both cases I estimated that one crematorium of that type can burn at full capacity two thousand people per day.

Q. I am not talking about two thousand people. I am talking about the number of furnaces which in one case, in the WRB, is nine furnaces, and in the book is fifteen ovens [sic]. In the WRB it says nine furnaces each having four openings, which is four nines, as far as I can figure, is thirty-six, and according to your book, made some fifteen, twenty years later, fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies simultaneously in twenty minutes. You can't see the difference?

A. No, I can't even see where it is written. {1487|1488}

Q. You can't see where it is written one hour and a half the complete burning of three bodies in the WRB, and you can't see that that's different than saying you can burn three bodies simultaneously in twenty minutes?

A. No. Will you show me on my copy if you have it?

Q. Page 14, if you've got it, on your WRB Report. Last paragraph. All right? It says:

"Each opening can take three normal corpses at once ..." You got it?

A. Each opening.

Q. Yes.

A. Can take three normal corpses.

Q. At once.

A. At once.

Q. "... and after an hour and a half the bodies are completely burned."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, your book which we discussed – have you lost your page?

A. Yes. One moment. This corresponds a daily capacity of two thousand bodies.

Q. Yes. Now, we go back to your book.

A. Yes.

Q. And we read the paragraph where you said, "He was to watch the world's first conveyor belt killing, the inauguration of Commandant s Hoess' s brand new toy". We were over this quite a few times now. You lost the part? {1488|1489}

A. Yes. Okay.

Q. All right:

"It was a truly splendid affair, one hundred yards long and fifty yards wide, containing fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes

A. Yes.

Q. Now, fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously [sic] in twenty minutes

A. Yes.

Q. So it seems from the time you were giving your best recollection, shall we say, to the War Refugee Board, it changed substantially to, from an hour and a half, to twenty minutes. Right? Do you understand that?

A. Hour and a half.

Q. Yes. An hour and a half becomes twenty minutes.

A. Is ninety minutes.

Q. An hour and a half is ninety minutes. Twenty minutes is twenty minutes. So there is a difference of seventy minutes. A little problem?

A. One moment. I am calculating something. I would think that what I had in mind wasn't perfectly formulated, but my experience was that knowledge, not experience, but my knowledge was that three bodies were being burned always simultaneously, and that this took about an hour or more. That's what I recall.

Q. Not twenty minutes.

A. Now, if you divide an hour by three, because three bodies were burned, you might come {1489|1490} to the result of twenty minutes.

Q. Okay. And as far as the difference between four times nine are thirty-six ovens, and fifteen ovens, how do you explain that difference?

A. Which difference?

Q. Well, in the book, you agree, you say it's fifteen ovens, and I suggest to you that's exactly what it was – fifteen ovens.

A. Yes.

Q. Because you've had a chance to read some of the literature from Phillip Mueller and others you knew the plans when you wrote your book. Right?

A. Well, I wrote the book twenty years before Phillip Mueller did, so how could I consult Phillip Mueller?

Q. Because the plans were known to exist before you wrote your book.

A. That's right.

Q. So you consulted the plans finally, didn't you?

A. Well, if I had consulted the plans, I would have published the book at that time, but my intention was to keep the book as free as possible from technical detail —

Q. How about facts?

A. — and giving the fundamental facts. The fundamental facts was that there were four crematoria, that two were large and two were small, that the large could, consume two thousand people a day and the small consumed a thousand people a day, and that the theoretical [sic] capacity of all four crematoria, provided there is no breakdown and {1490|1491} provided that there is constant influx of victims, is six thousand per day. And that is exactly the same in the book and in the report.

Q. Is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's go back and find out, then, about that, because I think you are wrong. Let's go back to the previous paragraph in your book that we discussed where you say twelve thousand bodies in twenty-four hours.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, you say six thousand bodies in the WRB Report, the paragraph that says — and we've read it once —

A. One moment. Where is the twelve thousand bodies?

Q. Well, we'll just have to go back. Three paragraphs before the one we just finished reading.

A. Yes. That's perfectly all right.

Q. Is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me —

A. Because when I was writing this book, as I explained to you at the start, I was not writing only what I saw, but I included also things which I heard or learned from reliable sources.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And we know that although the theoretical capacity of all the crematorias are depicted in my original report in '44, before the annihilation of Hungarian Jews, could consume maximum only twelve thousand victims a day, it became known later that Hungarian Jews {1491|1492} were transported at such a speed to Auschwitz that some days up to twenty thousand units were, if I may paraphrase the Nazi vernacular lingo — were processed. And this is perfectly true.

In other words, I included into this twelve thousand not just what happened during my time, but also during the time following shortly my escape.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And sufficiently information for a young person who has never heard about such things to understand that the murder was in many thousands. And I will leave it to you to decide if it is five thousand four hundred or seven thousand three.

Q. Why did you say in 1944, at the time of your escape, on page 16, at the bottom of the first paragraph:

"Thus the total capacity of the four cremating and gassing plants at Birkenau amounts to about six thousand daily?"

A. That's right.

Q. Then why did you say in your book:

"For the modern concrete gas chambers and the vast crematoria that could absorb as many as 12,000 bodies in twenty-four hours and, in fact, did so?"

A. What I had to add, that it did so with the help of additional equipment which has been build up in May and June 1944, after my escape. You might blame me that I haven't this made quite clear in this introductory chapter, but as I told you, this book is an artistic sort of conveying of the facts —

Q. I am interested — {1492|1493}

A. — and is sufficiently giving the picture of what actually happened, without going into the fine toothpoint number game of which I have seen is a neo-Nazi literature ridiculous examples.

Q. Well, is your book classified as fiction, or is it classified as history?

A. My book is classified as recollections of Rudolf Vrba, free recollection of Rudolf Vrba as an educational book for young people who should realize what Nazi depravity is able to. It is not supposed to be a textbook of how to build crematoria.

Q. Well, your explanation, then, for the doubling of the numbers from the WRB to the book you wrote later is basically that it was from information acquired of the existence of some of the apparatus.

A. Right, which has been added after my escape.

Q. Yeah. With these new buildings.

A. No.

Q. No new crematoria?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Are they the six meter deep crematorium pits? Is that what you mean?

A. New pits were build [sic].

THE COURT: Excuse me. Yes.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, I hate to interrupt, but the drawing of the crematoria that the jury has, we have heard it was based on hearsay at the time from Dr. Vrba, not an eye witness. Now he is being cross-examined about things that happened after he was there and again he is not competent to talk about those things. {1493|1494} He wasn't there at the time. He may have acquired information from books subsequently, but that really isn't his function here, and I object to these questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was trying to look at the realm of credibility and the basis of statements made by this witness in other circumstances. Often, this does involve a fact. In this case I don't think it is represented as hearsay, but now the War Refugee Board Report is the subject of the cross-examination, and it's not put forward as hearsay. In fact, if you look at the front of it, it says, "Nothing passed on from hearsay".

My friend knows that because he gave me a copy. It says, "Nothing passed on from hearsay".

MR. GRIFFITHS: That was not written by Dr. Vrba what my friend is describing. It is in a foreword.

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I took it that it was to be the truth.

THE COURT: Any ruling that I could make, gentlemen, would, on this subject, when the issue is cross-examination, would, in my view, be dangerous and might appear as if I were restricting the right to cross-examine. I have no intention of doing that. You may proceed. Crown counsel may employ, if he so wishes, his thoughts in this regard when his turn comes to address the jury.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

Q. Do you adopt the War Refugee Board Report as being true? {1494|1495}

A. As being true as close to the truth as I was able.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. With best of my knowledge, ability and conscience and responsibility to reproduce, while aided minimally with other normally used aid. This means that the report consists of a complex statistics which has been produced in a clandestine way and manner by observing the misdeeds of Nazis in Auschwitz, and under conditions that, if something would transpire that I am recollecting such a statistic, it would cost me at least my life.

Q. Why would it cost you your life?

A. Because anybody who was compiling anything about Auschwitz was punished by death, to say the least.

Q. You left Auschwitz, you say, on April 7, 19 —

A. It was considered espionage.

Q. You said you left Auschwitz on April 7, 1944.

A. Perfectly right.

Q. You said you left with Alfred Wetzler.

A. That's right.

Q. And at the time you were known as Walter Rosenberg, according to you.

A. That's right.

Q. And you, at that time, left in the nighttime.

A. I didn't say that it was in the nighttime on 7 April. I started my manoeuvres [sic] of my escape {1495|1496} at two o'clock p.m. on Friday, and left Auschwitz after nine o'clock p.m. on Monday, the 10th.

Q. Of April 1944.

A. Of April 1944. In other words, it wasn't —

Q. What time?

A. 9:00 p.m.

Q. Just after dark.

A. I would say I waited well after dark.

Q. So it was well after dark on the 9th of April, 1944, when you left and you are hiding in the woodpile.

A. That's right. When I opened the woodpile.

Q. Did you carry lights?

A. Of course not.

Q. And no doubt, you'd managed to acquire a watch.

A. Yes, I had a watch.

Q. Aha. That is how you knew you crossed the Czech border at ten o'clock on a given day, I suppose.

A. No. By that time I didn't have the watch any more.

Q. Well, you told us you crossed the Czech border at ten o'clock one day.

A. That's right.

Q. How did you know when you crossed the border?"

A. Because when I was crossing the {1496|1497} border I knew that I am very close to the border, and I didn't know if I am still on the Polish or on the Czechoslovak side, but on both sides were working farmers of the border, and to ask a farmer what is the time in Polish, it is half past nine. I continued my journey and I asked a farmer again, "What's the time?" And he answers me in perfect Slovak, "It is ten o'clock."

Q. I see. That's how we know you crossed the border at ten o'clock.

A. Right. In the morning on Friday 21st January.

Q. Of what?

A. On Friday, 21st April.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. I beg your pardon for that.

Q. So you were travelling at night and you had a watch when you left the woodpile which you hadn't when you crossed the Czech border?

A. That's right.

Q. And you had a compass, too?

Q. No. You were travelling in unfamiliar territory.

A. Yes.

Q. In the dark.

A. Yes.

Q. And you certainly didn't want to go near the camp.

A. Yes.

Q. And you didn't have a compass.

A. No. {1497|1498}

Q. And you hadn't been over the ground that you went over that night before, because you had never been outside the inner circle, or the outer circle of the guards.

A. That's right.

Q. But you were outside the outer circle.

A. That's right.

Q. And was it a moonlit night?

A. I appreciate that you can see the difficulties of this manoeuvre [sic].

Q. Well, you are so far ahead of me, you know what the problem is, don't you?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You know what the problem is, don't you?

A. No. I know what the problems were that night, and I wonder which particular one you were interested in.

Q. Well, just wait for the question before you give us the answer. Would you agree that in those circumstances it would be difficult to be sure precisely over what ground you had passed?

A. Not quite.

Q. Oh?

A. Because — not quite sure, but not quite unsure, either, because the camp Birkenau — and this again I could use a map, please. May I — may I project the trip how I went?

THE COURT: Well, just a moment.

You certainly can if you must answer it that way and you {1498|1499} should it answer that way. Mr. Christie, do you seek the answer?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. he has given it once, but if he wants to give it again.

THE COURT: Well, I don't know about that. That is why I am asking you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, it seems to me you drew a diagram once where you went. Isn't that right — on the big screen over here?

A. No, I didn't do a diagram. I gave an indication.

Q. You moved your hand around and said —

A. That's right.

Q. You said, "I went this way and —"

A. That's right.
 Q. Without a compass.
 A. That's right.
 Q. In the dark.
 A. That's right.
 Q. Over territory you had never been before.
 A. That's right.
 Q. I don't think I need to ask you us to show us again.
 A. Oh, yes, you should. You might learn something, how one has to behave in a Nazi-occupied territory and what one can do in order to beat the Nazis, no matter how clever they are. You might learn something. I am perfectly prepared to show it how it's done.
 Q. You consider you are still able to {1499|1500} beat the Nazis at everything, I suppose?
 THE COURT: Apart from what consider that to be a supercilious exchange, gentlemen, do you want the answer or don't you, Mr. Christie?
 MR. CHRISTIE: No. I am satisfied with the answer.
 THE COURT: Then it is your cross-examination and you proceed with the next question.
 MR CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.
 Q. Let's get back to this diagram, sir, that you have drawn in 1944. You agree that as far as the crematoria is concerned, you've given us a diagram with a railroad track.
 A. Which diagram are you talking about?
 Q. This one that has the crematoria in it. There.
 A. Yes.
 Q. You have given us a diagram in 1944 with the railroad track leading right to the ovens.
 A. No, it wasn't meant to be a railroad track.
 Q. What is it meant to be?
 A. If you read carefully that report, which I hope you did, you will find that this is an indication of the fact. that the bodies inside the crematoria were shifted from the gas chambers to the ovens using an inside narrow-gauge rail with wagons on which the bodies were loaded in the gas chamber, and then pushed to the ovens.
 Q. Yeah.
 A. And this was schematically depicted {1500|1501} this information as being inside the crematoria, a narrow-gauge line for manual propulsion of little wagons —
 Q. Rather than go too far, would you just tell me, then, that you mean that all of the furnaces and the gas chambers were on the same level?
 A. No. This I couldn't assume, but I knew that there were involved partially lifting of bodies on lifts, and partially shifting of bodies to and from the lifts and to and from the ovens on narrow-gauge lines.
 This position of those lines was not known to me and I have given the whole crematoriums the picture in more or less a schematic which have sufficed at that time, being such a great novelty.
 Q. Have you seen the plans, sir, of the crematoria?
 A. No, I have not.
 Q. Okay. I'd just like you to — correct me if I am wrong, but is the calendarium on the 11th of November, does it indicate that there were eight boys born in the gypsy camp?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Okay. Children were born in Auschwitz?
 A. Yes.
 Q. In fact, would you think it unusual that 3,000 or more babies could be born in Auschwitz?
 A. There were not only born there in this particular case, they were also gassed there.
 THE COURT: They were ...
 THE WITNESS: They were gassed there.
 Yesterday you asked me if there were any children in Auschwitz, {1501|1502} and I assure you that there weren't, but before I could specify to details, because if I go to details I am accused of being longwinded and if I am not going to details you will come up with some missing detail, so now I want to explain it to you in a complete detail — sorry to be so longwinded.

It will involve the deaths of eight or ten thousand people, most of them children, and you will then understand, sir, what I have been missing yesterday with two words when you interrupted me and I was stopped from specifying certain exceptions.

I would like this occasion, Your Honour, the permission to show on the map the fate of those 3,000 childrens [sic] to which the counsel is referring here.

THE COURT: We will take a recess, before that is decided, for fifteen minutes.

— The jury retires. 3:30 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 3:55 p.m.

THE COURT: I believe, gentlemen, there was a question put and not answered concerning children in Auschwitz. Is that correct?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: Would you like to go to the screen, Doctor?

MR. CHRISTIE: My specific question, for the record, is whether the witness considered it likely that there could be three thousand children born in Auschwitz. {1502|1503}

THE COURT: Yes, sir. Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: So it was, as I yesterday mentioned, a rule that all children or old people who arrived to Auschwitz on the ramp, which I showed yesterday, that rule had two prominent exceptions from using, from sending the children straight into the region of crematoria and gassing. There's two exceptions.

The first exception took place on September 7, 1943. As I had the honour to explain yesterday, on June 8, 1943, this male camp, IB, Birkenau IB, has been transferred to IID, and after a short time in IID I was transferred to IIA as a Blockschreiber[r], translated barrack scribe, in one of the barracks here. Interestingly, at that time, the camps "B", the camp IIB, camp IIC and camp IIE were completely empty, and we didn't know what they are for. Also, during the months that I was since June in this camp, I have seen every day, as usual, the women, children, old folk being trucked into this road which was shorter than a mile, perhaps a kilometer long, into this crematorium complex, or they went in front of my eyes not here into the gate, but went down here — there was no other road at that time — and down here, and went into this block of Krematoria IV and V. On September 7, 1943, I was woken up in the midnight —

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That's September 7, 1943, you were woken up at midnight. Did you ever make note of this?

A. Will you please kindly leave your questions when I finish?

THE COURT: Doctor, please listen to me. I will decide when counsel can ask questions, and if {1503|1504} I don't say anything, you don't say anything.

THE WITNESS: I see.

THE COURT: You will please answer his question and continue with your narrative. What was the question again?

MR. CHRISTIE: I just wondered if he had made a note of that at the time.

THE WITNESS: Mental note.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And you escaped without a note, either.

A. That's right.

Q. Go ahead. September '43.

A. And because between Block 2A and — Camp IIA and Camp IIB there was nothing but an electric fence, I could see that they are bringing in families. These families were speaking in Czech language. There were 4,500 people.

Q. You counted them?

A. No, but I was one of the parts of the people who were present, you know, in block scribes, and I know immediately that the number went up to 4,500 people being a block scribe myself and having access to the Chief Block Scribe. The number was roughly 4,500, but it might have been 4,700, in this region. And here were two barracks and there's people went into the camp with their luggage, with their children, with their grandchildren, with everything, and started something which was called family camp.

THE COURT: Something what?

THE WITNESS: Family camp. It was a considerable surprise and something completely new, and {1504|1505} especially interesting for me because people were from Czechoslovakia. They were my countrymen and they were for several years in the ghetto of Theresine [Terezin] where it was still accumulated, as it was understood from them, well over a thousand Jews who were become nervous over the fate of deported people.

Q. You are talking about the 7th of September, 1943, now? Excuse me, I just wanted to confirm that.

A. Yes. Quite right.

Q. The 4,500 people that arrived.

A. I guessed, to my recollection, around 4,500 people.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. In those barracks. And here up on Barrack 15 they made a special barrack for children. There were approximately a hundred children there of age two to ten, or two to twelve, and these children were supplied with a special diet. This means they got milk and they got white bread and sort of a human, more human attitudes was prevailing in that camp, especially because the women and the men were not shorn; they could keep their hair, and cremation or deportation camp was suddenly created.

Mind you, the next day, as the next camp the children went here and were here, were leaving and starting to create their own life. This was going on until December, I would say now, 21 or 22, when another transport, also from Theresine, also having approximately 3,000 people – but here I might be mistaken – but in the region of three or four thousand, was added to this transport so that on the whole we had in this family camp {1505|1506} up to seven or eight thousand people to start with.

In spite of them being given a little bit better treatment and they could keep their things, due to the general – there were a lot of criminal Kapos and so on – in other words, the mortality was considerable, even in spite of the better treatment.

Another thing which was peculiar was that I've heard that they had on their cards written, especially mark – I have to write this down –

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I don't really mind the lecture, but I did ask a specific question as to whether there was a likelihood in his mind of three thousand children born in Auschwitz. I really don't like to interrupt, but I don't want to go on more than fifteen minutes on this.

THE COURT: Are you able to answer that question, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: Yes. In fifteen minutes.

THE COURT: What is the answer to the question?

MR. CHRISTIE: I don't want the answer in fifteen minutes.

THE WITNESS: The answer to this question is that these people were having – please, the picture – they were having Sonderbehandlung, which means special treatment after six months quarantine.

Q. Okay. I assumed this is the answer, because I would really like to get on with another question.

THE COURT: You can return to the box now, Doctor. {1506|1507}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You specifically mentioned the 7th of September, 1943, and I put it to you that on that date no transports arrived from Theresienstadt, and no transports involving 4,500 people or anything approaching that number. Would you like to take a look? Now, we agree, you are talking about the 7th of September, 1943.

A. Right.

Q. Okay. I put it to you that the Calendarium does not indicate from Theresienstadt or anywhere else a transport of 4,500 people on that day.

A. Well, it was not on the 7th September; but it was recorded here on the 8th September, and it is written here that on 8th September that there were deported, brought to Auschwitz, five thousand Jews from the camp ghetto in Theresien[stadt], out of the 2,293 men and boys who received the numbers 146694 until 168986.

Q. Yes.

A. And the women and girls were 2,713 and were women and girls, and they got the numbers 58471 up to 61183.

So I have made, to summarize, an error of one day in my memory, and instead of four thousand five hundred, the real number is five thousand or six.

Q. Thank you very much. So you say they were to be Sonderbehandlung in six months.

A. Right.

Q. It doesn't say that in the Calendarium at all.

A. This is not my fault what is missing from the Calendarium. {1507|1508}

Q. Well, with respect to this, particular people more proficient than the notes you made at the time –

A. Because previous to decisions of S.S. men and –

Q. And they confided it into you?

A. And they confided it into lower commissioned S.S. men, and they were taking money from us and diamonds in the crematorium and they were talking.

Q. And you, as a prisoner, knew that.

A. I was that clear to collect it.

Q. I see. Can we put the same thing back on that the good Doctor had on a minute ago? I will stay here and ask you the questions. You stay here using your pointer, because it happens to be simple, you gave us this as the location for the bath, sir.

A. Excuse me, please. Now, I am a little bit confused. Are we talking about the family camp or about baths?

Q. I am talking about the baths.

A. So now we are not talking about the family camps.

Q. You can understand what I mean. I am speaking about the bath.

A. I see.

Q. The baths

A. Nothing with family camp any more.

Q. No. We are talking about baths.

A. Thank you.

Q. We understand each other. {1508|1509}

A. I hope so.

Q. Well, the bath is located this end of the camp; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. There is only one bath we are talking about, not ten baths we are talking about.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, actually, the picture that you prepared didn't have a bath marked or sauna on the Phillip Mueller one.

A. Yes.

Q. So it was really not actually there. This is just a rough approximation. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the Phillip Mueller diagram, I suggest to you that the transported people had to go down there, actually, between these two Krema where the road went and to the bath, or they can go down this way through the Scribe and down here and to the bath, on the actual map that you agree is the correct one. That is where they had to go, isn't it, to have a bath?

A. Those who were going to have a bath.

Q. Right. And after everybody got off the train, that is where they went, isn't it?

A. Well, I wouldn't quite agree with you.

Q. No, I am sure you wouldn't; but tell me, sir, if there was any other bath in the camp, where do you put it now?

A. That's correct. {1509|1510}

Q. It is here, isn't it?

A. I can show it to you.

Q. Just tell me before you get off the stand, is there some other bath in the map that you drew in 1944?

A. In 1944, yes, there was a bath in Camp IB.

Q. Right there?

A. Right in that corner.

Q. And when the camp was divided into these areas, this bath was used, right?

A. Very likely.

Q. So when you left the camp that was the bath you were using?

A. In that region was the bath.

Q. You don't know where it was?

A. It was in the region where the Krematorium II and Krematorium III were positioned.

Q. Right. So you were in this camp here?

A. Yes.

Q. You couldn't go out there except to report to the Chief Scribe.

A. Pardon?

Q. You couldn't go out of this area except to report to the Chief Scribe?

A. Up to "D".

Q. Up to "D". You couldn't go here or here or there?

A. Unless I risk something.

Q. Yes. Well, let me put it to you {1510|1511} that these people that got off the trains could very well have gone to the bathhouse which we now recognize to be No. 9, and no other 9, in this picture of Phillip Mueller. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

A. Some of them actually went there

Q. Well, you —

A. And the rest went to the gas chamber.

Q. Well, you, from your position, wouldn't be able to tell us whether they went there or not, sir;

A. Certainly I would. I will explain it to you later.

Q. Well, yes. You do that.

THE COURT: Do you want him to do it now or later?

MR. CHRISTIE: If he could now, sir, is it too late?

THE COURT: Go ahead, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Then I would, if you kindly permit, Your Honour, to return to the previous question about the children, about the three thousand children.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: No. You want to tell us if there is any other way to return to the bath.

THE COURT: Is there a connection, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: Yes, there is a connection. {1511|1512}

THE COURT: Then you may give the answer.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Do you want to look at the diagram? Here is the pointer.

A. All those people, after six months, the children, the grown-ups, the old and the young, were on March 7 transferred to "IIA" where I was Blockschreibe.

Q. March 7th what year?

A. 1944.

Q. You are sure of the date?

A. I am quite sure it was the 94th birthday of the founder of Czechoslovakian Leader —

THE COURT: The answer is yes, Doctor. Proceed, please.

THE WITNESS: On the night from 7th to 8th March, these people who were transferred here, the first transport from Theresienstadt who were here stayed here one night in the Camp IIA, then trucks came and they were taken to their execution from here; here into the Krematoria III and IV were all children, etcetera, etcetera, were gassed.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that you didn't draw any lines for roads on that map in 1944 because you didn't know where the roads were in 1944.

A. I knew perfectly well where the roads were in 1944, but my draftsmanship was not very good, I assure you, and I accept the criticism of that.

Q. I put it to you that actually you were unsure as to where the Krematoriums No. I and No. II {1512|1513} on that diagram were because you put them on the same side of the railroad [sic] track area when, in fact, they were on opposite sides.

A. The railroad track when I escaped Auschwitz wasn't even there.

Q. It wasn't even there?

A. No. It wasn't there on 7 April, 1944. And as I told you, this whole map is giving only a rough scheme, without detail, that there are four crematoria and bath, and that they are in this region.

Q. Just let me ask you this. In 1944 you couldn't provide us with the detail, but in 1984 you are going to tell us all about it. Right?

A. That's right.

Q. You may go back to your seat.

A. Thank you. May I add something, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Up here first, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Yes. In 1944 —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Just come up here first.

Now, then, Mr. Christie, do you have any further questions on this subject to put to this witness?

MR. CHRISTIE: Not really, Your Honour, no.

THE COURT: The answer is no. If you want to add something, I am sure Crown counsel will make a note of it and if it becomes appropriate at the time he will, undoubtedly, ask you the question. In the event that it is not, he won't and you may not.

Proceed. {1513|1514}

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you ever go back to look at the Auschwitz Museum or anything like that?

A. In 1949, as a student in Prague, I was studying chemical engineering and I was interested in a new drug which was called paramine acetacetic acid.

Q. Please answer my question. Were you ever —

A. Please don't tell me what to answer what words to choose.

Q. I don't have time to find out what drug you discovered. I just want to know whether you went to Auschwitz after the War or not. Simple.

A. I was taken to Auschwitz as a student on that occasion for my education.

Q. All right. Did you go to Krema I, II, III or IV according to the diagram?

A. No.

Q. You didn't. All right. What partisan group were you in in Bohemia after you escaped?

A. I was in the Czechoslovak party in group of Captain Milan Uher. He was a sergeant when he started, and the brigade was called Hurban Brigade.

Q. Thank you. Were you in Prague at the time of the Prague Revolution, May 5th and May 9th, 1945?

A. No, because my group operated in Western Slovakia, and the operation of the group were brought to a halt on 7 April, 1945, when the Russian units reached us and send us immediately into hospitals.

Q. Thank you. Do you speak Czech?

A. I speak Czech, Slovak, Polish, {1514|1515} Hungarian, Russian, German and a little bit of English.

Q. Yeah. Did you live in Prague after 1945?

A. That's right. I studied in Prague chemistry.

Q. Which part of Prague?

A. I lived on various places as a student for the first four years, in digs, and it was every year another place. Would you like all addresses?

Q. No. Thank you very much. Do you believe, sir, that it is possible that a thousand children left Auschwitz and went to Buchenwald? Among them was — well, do you believe that's possible?

A. Not to my knowledge. And not during the time I was in Auschwitz.

Q. I see. So not before April 7th, 1944?

A. That's right.

Q. And after you arrived?

A. Not before 30 June, 1942 and not up to 7 April, 1944, not to my knowledge.

Q. There were thousands and thousands of people in that camp; right?

A. That is quite right. The amount varied, of course, from time to time. Depend how many died and how many were added to it; and if it was called typhus or what it was, or vermin.

Q. And you got typhus?

A. I got typhus only once. You don't survive two.

Q. Thousands of people got typhus? {1515|1516}

A. In 1942 there was a typhus epidemic during which thousands of people died from prisoners.

Q. You don't know how many died, I suppose?

A. No, I couldn't say because the death was mixed with selection. They tried to —

Q. Well, you say that somebody selected groups of people and you went through a typhus test of running twenty-five yards, as you said in your book.

A. That's right. That's right.

Q. But you don't know how many people died of typhus in 1942.

A. No, but I would say several thousand.

Q. Several thousand. Right. You say also that your document, the War Refugee Board Report, was used at the International Military Tribunal, and I think you are right, in Document L022. Is that correct?

A. That is quite possible.

Q. You don't know?

A. I wasn't on the tribunal present.

Q. You weren't a witness.

A. No.

Q. You didn't testify then, and you didn't testify at the Eichmann trial, even though you were in Israel, I believe, at the time?

A. No, I wasn't in Israel during the Eichmann trial. I was a member of Scientific Staff of the Medical Research Council of the United Kingdom.

Q. You didn't testify at the American {1516|1517} Military Tribunal or the International [sic] Military Tribunal?

A. At which tribunal, you mean, in which year?

Q. 1945, '46.

A. No, I didn't.

Q. And in fact, you didn't reveal your identity publicly as being Walter Rosenberg until some time considerably later. I think probably when you wrote your book; is that right?

A. I don't understand this question.

Q. When did you reveal your identity as being actually Walter Rosenberg, the escapee of Auschwitz on April 7, 1944?

A. In 1944, '45, after the War, my friend, Wetzler, has written a report about Auschwitz for the general public, and he wrote it in general terms and under a pseudonym, Joseph Lanik.

Q. In fact, there were two other Jews beside yourself who participated in forming or writing the War Refugee Board Report — there was Mr. Wetzler, yourself, Mr. Rosen and Mr. Mordecai.

A. No. Mr. Mordovitch not Mordecai.

Q. Well, none of them were identified in the report, right?

A. In the report they were not identified because against each of us there were international warrants issued which were, a copy of it is in Crown prosecutor's hand, in Crown Attorney's hands, in Auschwitz and Allies reproduced, in which these warrants say that the escape from Auschwitz, that we should be caught for that, and in the case of success Himmler should be notified immediately. So under those conditions we didn't use our {1517|1518} previous names under which the warrants were issued.

Q. And you never used that name again, ever, I gather.

A. Oh, no, of course not, because the warrant was valid as long as was valid a German rule in Slovakia.

Q. Well, after the War that certainly didn't exist.

A. No. After the War that didn't exist, but under the name of Rudolf Vrba I fought the Nazis and was given under that name the medal for bravery, the Order of Slovak National and the medal of honour of Czechoslovak partisan for my services to my country in fighting the inhuman enemy, and they were given to the name Rudolf Vrba alias Walter Rosenberg. The document is here.

Q. So that's the proof that you actually are Walter Rosenberg.

A. That is the proof that I was Walter Rosenberg before I changed my name officially by an official act.

Q. What official act?

A. Official act of the Ministry of Interior.

Q. Of Czechoslovakia.

A. Of Czechoslovakia, that it was incompatible with the honour of a Czech soldier to have a German-sounding name who murdered in the camp and robbed us. In other words, it was an act of the de-Germanization of my name.

Q. Well, your name was German, wasn't {1518|1519} it?

A. Walter Rosenberg, a nice German name.

Q. Well, isn't it the case that there was a German major who was involved in the escape and who has never been identified — sorry, a Polish major?

A. He is Professor Tabeau, doctor of medicine in the University of Krakow. I can show you his picture, if you wish. Please, Mr. Crown, can I have the book which I brought with me, because I might give him a wrong name.

Q. You need the book to be sure of the name?

A. Yes, because I didn't know him personally.

Q. Don't worry about it, I am not going to worry whether you gave me the right name or not.

A. Certainly.

Q. But can you tell me something else, sir? Can you tell me if you, yourself, believe what was written by him in that part of the report?

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. You take that as true, too?

A. Well, I studied this part of the report the first time in 1975.

Q. Yes.

A. It was given to me in the Department of History. I didn't know about this report or anything until 1975.

Q. You mean to tell me, sir, that this {1519|1520} report, which you sent to the President of the United States, didn't have this portion on it when you completed it?

A. When I completed it, no.

Q. So it was added by somebody else later, right?

A. This portion came to the office of the President of the United States, to the office of Strategic Services, by different ways about which I have no idea.

Q. I see. And it became a famous document and made you a famous person, right?

A. I don't know if you would like to consider me famous.

Q. Well, it made you, certainly —

A. But the Bible says that the fame doesn't last longer than grass, and I don't like such words.

Q. I'm sorry, I didn't mean to imply anything by calling you famous, but isn't it true that you, at nineteen years of age, having escaped from Auschwitz, became somewhat of a celebrated person?

A. I am not aware that I have, been somewhat celebrated, because I went immediately after I have done my job and notified the proper authorities in Switzerland and in England and in United States about the misdeeds of Nazis in Auschwitz, I took up the gun and joined the fight of all civilized people against an uncivilized enemy.

Q. Do you think the Polish Major's report is correct when he talks about a hydrocyanic bomb being thrown in the gas chamber?

A. I have studied the report of the {1520|1521} Major in 1975 and was asked by the Department of History to give my opinion.

Q. Yes, your opinion. I am interested in your knowledge and your experience.

A. And in my experience the report of the Polish Major was excellent as far as Auschwitz I is concerned, but from reading the report, I could see that he was not in Auschwitz II, in Birkenau, and therefore knew Birkenau only from hearsay.

Q. Yes. Well, now —

A. Therefore his information about the hydrocyanide bomb was hearsay and obviously a distorted information.

Q. So that distorted information was inaccurate but the rest of the report is correct?

A. His report of the description of Auschwitz I I found creditable.

Q. Right. I want to refer you to your declaration sworn and exhibited in your book, sworn on the 16th of July, 1961.

A. Yes.

Q. In which you say that your statistics compiled during the War were part of the material of the prosecution at Nuremberg under document NG1061.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. That's what you say.

A. Yes.

Q. You swore that to be true.

A. Yes.

Q. And I put it to you that NG 1061 has nothing to do with Auschwitz, but is a letter from – have {1521|1522} you seen that document that you swore about?

A. I swore to the document of my document of the Auschwitz report which we can call now Vrba-Wetzler report, which Vrba and Wetzler together compiled.

Q. But I think in the affidavit that I showed you —

A. And the affidavit was to the Israeli Embassy, and I had to make an affidavit in a hurried way and I was told that a number of the document in which the Court in Eichmann is interested, and which refers to my report, has got such a number.

Q. Yeah.

A. So I put in such a number which they suggested.

Q. All right. Let me correct you.

A. It might be an administrative error.

Q. So because somebody told you it was the right number to put in, you put it in and you swore it to be the truth?

A. In that case I made an error in good faith, that I can't see why it should distort the oath, because nobody had any difficulty, during the Eichmann trial, to find the document, in spite of the wrong number of the document.

Q. Now, I want to just go over one point with you. You say that when you left Auschwitz you had nothing but a watch.

A. That's right.

Q. Which you later lost. No compass, {1522|1523} no light.

A. I didn't lose it. I gave it as a present.

Q. You gave it away. Now it, in fact, the last page of your report, the War Refugee Board Report itself, contains numerous statistics, numbers, information of a detailed nature, doesn't it?

A. It does.

Q. Yes. And on the last page you give what's called the careful estimate of the figures, and you come to a total of 1,765,000, which you now tell us you counted going into the area of the two crematoria and never returned. Right?

A. That's right.

THE COURT: Show him the document.

THE WITNESS: Quite right.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And I'm sorry if I haven't shown you this, but this is the last page, isn't it, of the WRB Report?

A. This page, this last page, has been not done by myself, but when I have written the full report, the lawyers who were there calculated what I have written in the full report and made this final statistic.

Q. So is that the same kind of information you provided when you provided the wrong document number that the lawyers gave it to you and then you say that's it?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. Okay. When we were discussing this document number you referred to in your affidavit and swore that was the document ... {1523|1524}

A. Yes.

Q. You told me that the lawyers or somebody gave you that information and you stuck it into there and you made a mistake. Right?

A. Well, it's not quite so, you see, because a real number, NG — a real number as I know now might be NG 1062, so it might be a typing error.

Q. You think it is?

A. It might be.

Q. Well, I suggest to you it isn't. What do you say?

A. Well, that suggestion suits you better than me.

Q. Well, let me put it to you this way. The "NG" stands for "Nazi Government", and nothing about concentration camps came into that document at all.

A. So perhaps it was "NL".

Q. So you guess and tell me it was something else?

A. So it is quite possible that the typist made an error.

Q. So what I am asking is, do you swear by these statistics here?

A. That they are right?

Q. Yes.

A. I would swear that within ten per cent they are right.

MR. CHRISTIE: May I then exhibit this, then, Your Honour?

Q. You swear that they are correct within ten per cent, and they are the back page that you {1524|1525} used in your report.

A. That's right. So I didn't make the final statistics.

THE COURT: I wonder if the Doctor write in correctly "within ten per cent" so that when they are reviewed they won't necessarily be taken at their face value.

THE WITNESS: This is specified in the document, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Is it?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Where? On the page that we are looking at?

THE WITNESS: Not on that page, but in the document from which this page has been torn out.

THE COURT: Doctor, I don't want to write on it myself. I do not want a document coming in that you say is within ten per cent unless the document shows it on its face.

Q. If you want to write on there, as long as I can get the photocopy back.

A. What are you asking? What is the question? What is your problem?

Q. I am asking you if you accept those or swear those to be true, and you say within ten per cent. So write it on, "within ten per cent", and we will file it.

THE COURT: You don't have to do that. If you don't want to do it, Doctor, please don't. I will ask our Clerk to clip something onto it so that when it comes time for the jury to look at that document, if they wish to do so, they won't look at the face — they will look {1525|1526} at the face and they look at your evidence that it is within ten per cent right. Do you see what I mean?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Your Lord, and would like also to turn your attention that counsel didn't sort of inform us that it is written here not 1,765,000, but approximately 1,765,000. So he tried to imply me an absolute count when I made it clear that it was an approximation to the best of my knowledge and ability.

THE COURT: Madam Clerk, would you please mark that as the next exhibit, and add to it these words that I will dictate to you: "According to the evidence of the witness, correct within 10% of the figure." Do you agree to that?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: If I may add, Your Honour, that also, in the original, it was written, "approximately".

THE COURT: Yes. It says that right on the face of it.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, it's been a long day. Have a good evening. Please keep an open mind. The puzzle does not become clear until the last word has been said. Please don't discuss the case with anyone beyond your number. Ten fifteen tomorrow morning, please.

RUDOLF VRBA, previously sworn.*CONTINUED CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE:

Q. Witness, you told us that you had been to what you called the gas chamber in Auschwitz I and you had been inside and saw some clothes. You told us that you saw the crematorium in Birkenau. I am now going to specifically ask you to name one specific instance in which you saw one single Jew gassed. Tell us.

A. May I have, please, the map of Birkenau projected?

All the people who were brought to Birkenau in order to be gassed during the time I was in building Section 2a went to the crematorium either by this route or entered – did not enter the gate, went by this route, went by this route, and entered these two places. They was [sic] led into the crematoria. They were ordered to enter that building, Krematorium II and —

Q. Did you see them ordered from here – did you see them ordered from here?

A. No, I wouldn't see them ordered from here.

Q. Did you hear them ordered from here?

A. No. But I saw them going in.

Q. Just a moment. You saw them going {1527|1528} in here from here?

A. That's right, because I was quite frequently, not only here, but I was frequently also here. I moved quite freely along these roads, relatively free.

Q. So you say —

A. And in Auschwitz there was a habit that nobody went where he wants, but everybody goes where he's ordered to go. Consequently I make a logical assumption that the people in the mind of Nazi supervisors, they all decisions what to do to enter the crematoria, and the crematoria they never left.

Q. You watched them come in and watched them not coming out?

A. Yes. A quarter million people go in and I never saw one civilian come out. So it is possible that they are still there, or that there is a tunnel and they are now in China; otherwise they were gassed.

Q. You say you saw —

A. I have not been invited to be present.

Q. You say you saw 1,765,000 people go into one of these four buildings and not come out.

A. That's right.

Q. You watched them all go in and no one came out.

A. That's right.

Q. So I think, if you are answering my question as to whether you saw anyone gassed, the answer is no, but you say you saw 1,765,000 people go into those four buildings and not come out.

A. That's right. And since there was {1528|1529} no way out of those buildings because they were surround by electrical wires and by watch towers —

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. — and during the twenty-one months and seven days, I never see [sic] one civilian walk out from these [sic] perimeter.

Q. You never saw one civilian walk out.

A. That's right.

Q. What is a civilian?

A. A civilian is a person who is not a prisoner in the camp, don't wear prisoner garb, don't have a registration number, is brought into the camp and disappears into one of those four buildings and is never seen again.

Q. Well, I put it to you that it is patently ridiculous for you to tell this jury and this Court that you could see 1,765,000 people go into those buildings on any day or all the days you were in there, the four months you were in Auschwitz and the seven months you were in Camp B on the top and other times you were in Camp A on the far left, and unless you maintain you were standing by the four crematoria, I suggest to you it is ridiculous that you can say you saw 1,765,000 people going into those crematoria.

A. It is your statement that it is illogic, because when I was in Camp B, I was not further away from here than a hundred yards, and when I was in Camp A I saw them going in big truck either this way or this way, a distance of not more than five hundred yards; further-more, I saw the trucks going back from there, so that if I wasn't present exactly when they marched into the crematoria, {1529|1530} I could have observed it either from here or from here or from these roads or from the ramp where I worked. Please, can I have the ...

Q. How long were you in hospital?

A. Please let me finish.

Q. You were going to tell us about the ramp where you met the prisoners as they came off the train. How long were you in hospital —

A. Moreover, the distance from here to here is not bigger than about three quarters of a mile. So if I see that the trucks go with hundreds and hundreds of people in this direction and come empty back, my logical conclusion was what we all knew, and you can only blame me that the S.S. didn't invite me in, like they invited Himmler.

Q. Yes. Well —

THE COURT: All right, Doctor. You can come back now.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Doctor, you say that you were in the hospital for a while — what, a couple of weeks?

A. No.

Q. How long were you in the hospital after your operation?

A. I would think that the whole would last about ten days.

Q. Ten days. All right. And you painted skis, I understand, although you never told us about that before. Is that true? You were painting skis for some time? That was your job?

A. It is quite clear that I was in {1530|1531} Kanada. I painted skis in the first two months and was in Buna in Auschwitz, and that my recollection is of direct observation of the mass murder which took place in Birkenau started.

Q. I just asked you if you painted skis.

A. Don't confuse me, please.

Q. Did you paint skis?

A. Yes, I did paint skis.

Q. How long did you paint skis?

A. Two or three days.

Q. Two or three days?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were you in Buna?

A. Perhaps ten days. Perhaps three weeks.

Q. That's where you told us that the death rate was ten per cent a week?

A. Roughly.

Q. Or was it a day?

A. A day.

Q. Oh, that's right, a day. What did you do in Buna besides twist wire?

A. Carrying cement.

Q. Did you carry cement all the time?

A. Yes.

Q. You never twisted wire?

A. I did occasionally twist wire. I worked on a building site.

Q. Yes, I understand.

A. Various things. I did what I was {1531|1532} ordered to do because who didn't do what he was ordered to do was dead.

Q. And if someone didn't work he was killed, right?

A. Not necessarily killed. There were [sic] the special German word which was called Fertigmachen; this is a contribution of the Nazis to the German language. This means to beat somebody so long that he is not dead but he will die — translated it means to finish him off.

Q. Now, did you say you were witness to a visit by Heinrich Himmler in January 1943?

A. I was witness to two visits by Heinrich Himmler — one was in July 1942 when I saw him from quite close.

Q. Where?

A. In Auschwitz I. And the second visit took place some time in '43, but I did not see him directly. I saw his cavalcade, so if it was Hitler or someone else sitting in the car of similar significant dignitary —

Q. Well, I put it to you that Heinrich Himmler, in the Calendarium of the camp that you so far accepted as accurate, visited on the 7th of March, 1941, and the 17th of July, 1942; but he did not visit the camp of Birkenau or Auschwitz in 1943, as you allege in your book.

A. I was informed at that time by grapevine in the camp that Himmler is coming to visit the camp again, and then there was a cavalcade equipped as if it would be Himmler – in other words, the standard Mercedes and the standard sycophants constantly around, but he didn't {1532|1533} come to shake hands with me and to introduce himself to me or to say, "I am Himmler", or he didn't tell me, you know, "Himmler didn't come this time but I am instead of his and this is my name."

So you might be quite right that that information might be not perfectly exact, only close to exact.

Q. You prepared also and agreed with the contents of the War Refugee Board Report and it says, and I show you page 38 and I quote:

"According to the statement of a Jew from a special kommando, Reichsführer Himmler was said to have visited Birkenau on the 16th or 17th of May."

A. Right.

Q. Right? And this is from the War Refugee Board Report of which you were the co-author.

A. Now, yesterday you have shown me — I have to check on this because yesterday you have shown me a report which contradicted my statement —

Q. Never mind yesterday. Just read that.

A. — of the 7th of September, and then it turns out on the next page it was explained that it was on the 8th of September. So I would prefer, dealing with you, to check on every word.

Q. Do that. Page 38.

A. "According to the statement" —

Q. "According to the statement of a Jew from a special Kommando, Reichsführer Himmler was said to have visited Birkenau on the 16th or 17th of May."

A. Yes, but here it said in my {1533|1534} testimony that I do not guarantee for it, but I say, according to the statement, you know, it was War time, and one had to collect each statement very carefully if one wanted to inform a foreign government of what is happening there. One can rely only on your own two eyes with limited movement.

Consequently it was quite right of me to have specified the same as with Wetzler, because we are the author of this report both, what we saw directly and what was according to some statement.

Q. Well, in your book you say that you saw Heinrich Himmler visit the camp in January '43; you were glad to see him arrive not because of any faint hope that he would improve your lot, etcetera; and now you say, well, it could be and it might not be.

A. What?

Q. It might be Himmler and it might be somebody else.

A. Which passage are you reading now?

Q. I read it yesterday from page 10 of the book that I have, attributed to you, although it's not the hardcover edition. Are you denying that is what you wrote in your book?

A. Excuse me. This is first of all, there is a considerable difficulty. I suggested yesterday that the book should be shown first to the jury in order that they can see through the manipulations which you are making by tearing out individual sentences out of its context.

I have read quite a few of products of Neo-Nazi literature, and this is a standard method to take {1534|1535} out one sentence or two sentences completely off its context, quote only this and not quote what was before and after and twist those things and then say that because a sentence is not perfectly logical, nobody was gassed.

Q. Dr. Vrba, excuse me for interrupting your speech, but all I wanted to deal with was whether you said that in your book. If you feel that I have taken it out of context, I will read the whole thing again.

A. Please read three paragraphs before and three paragraphs after so I'll know what you are saying.

Q. All right. I will read three paragraphs before that remark, and three after.

A. And can I have, please, a copy?

Q. In your book, the hardcover edition, I think my friend says it's page 15. In mine it's page 10. In order to get three paragraphs before the reference to Himmler, I will start in my page 9 with reading the statement:

"In fact he was far from satisfied with what he had seen, but it was not the appalling conditions which worried him. It was the grossly inefficient methods which were being used to exterminate the Jews who were beginning to arrive in their thousands from all parts of Europe.

"The gas chambers were no more than make-shift affairs. The burning of the bodies in open trenches wasted valuable fuel and caused the Germans who by that time occupied the nearby Polish town of Auschwitz to complain of the stench. To a former teacher of mathematics, the whole business was just too haphazard for words. {1535|1536}

"And so he gave orders for the greatest, most efficient extermination factory the world has ever known. For the modern concrete gas chambers and the vast crematoria that could absorb as many as 12,000 bodies in twenty-four hours and, in fact, did so. For the machinery that sucked in 2,500,000 men, women and children in three years and puffed them out in harmless black smoke.

"Heinrich Himmler visited Auschwitz Camp again in January, 1943. This time I was glad to see him arrive, though not because I still nursed any faint hope that he would improve our lot through benevolence or any sense of justice. His presence was welcome to us all merely because it meant that for one day there would be no unscheduled beatings or killings.

"Once more we were lined up, spick and span, with the sick in the rear and the healthy well to the front. Once more the band played and the heels clicked and the jackboots danced in the lustre shed by the master. Once more he inspected the camp inch by inch, running a podgy, pedantic finger over the mantelpiece of Auschwitz and examining it for dust. And this time there was no Yankel Meisel to drop his tiny personal grain of sand into the smooth machinery.

"Though he conducted his tour of the camp with his usual thoroughness, it was, however, no more than an aperitif, for the meal that was to follow. The main purpose of his visit was to see for himself the bricks and mortar which had sprung from the plans he had outlined in Auschwitz seven months earlier.

"He was to watch the world's first conveyor belt killing, the inauguration of Commandant Hoess's {1536|1537} brand new toy, his crematorium. It was truly a splendid affair, one hundred yards long and fifty yards wide, containing fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes, a monument in concrete, indeed, to its builder, Herr Waiter Dejaco."

Now, I read three paragraphs before the paragraph in question, the three paragraphs after. Do you still maintain there is any danger about the context?

A. No. I think the context —

Q. Then I am going to ask you a question. All right?

A. Yes.

Q. Good. Now, you say as a fact that Heinrich Himmler visited the camp in January 1943. Yes or no?

A. I say I was informed that he visited, the camp in January 1943, but I would like to turn your attention —

Q. I would like to turn your attention to a question.

A. I am answering your question.

Q. Well, I am asking you another.

A. You are asking me another question before I answer the first question. Don't try and confuse me, the Court and the jury. I cannot work this way. You are in the court. I cannot work this way.

Q. I am and so are you, sir. And I am asking you a question as to whether you said it was a fact that Himmler was in the camp in January 1943, and I want a simple answer. {1537|1538}

A. To my information he was there.

Q. All right. Did you write it as if it was a fact?

A. I wrote that it was to my information a fact.

Q. Where does it say to your information it was a fact?

A. This is understood in a book which doesn't claim to have scientific significance but it is meant to give to a population which is not versatile in all details of this complex mass murder.

Q. Yes. Thank you.

A. A general idea.

Q. Good.

A. But I would like to add, to make your question more clear, the following: Heinrich Himmler visits were not always done in such a public way that they could be recorded. For instance, his first —

Q. Was this one public?

A. I can give you an example when others were not public.

Q. Well, this is the one I am asking about. Was this public?

A. Well, probably it was not published in general press.

Q. You said, "I was glad to see him arrive".

A. Yes.

Q. Did you say that in public?

A. All I can say is that he didn't {1538|1539} shake my hands, so I saw him on the second occasion only from a distance of three or four hundred yards, but as far as his first visit is concerned, not only I saw him from a distance much closer than you are from me, but his adjutant general, Herr Berg (phonetic) who was the head of the German spy organization, and his closest adjutant who published a book after the War, after he was imprisoned by the Allies, and in a book which has five hundred pages, he claims that in July, in 1942, he was every day, together with Himmler, but he was never in Auschwitz. So it is characteristic for the murderers that they try to obliterate their traces as much as possible.

The fact that you don't have recorded where Himmler was on the particular day doesn't mean that my information was wrong.

Q. Well, I am just interested in whether you claim your information is right or wrong.

A. In the first case I saw Himmler from three steps, and therefore I am quite sure that I am right. In the second instance I saw him from a larger distance, and therefore I can only say that it is likely that I am right, or possibly that I am right, because the information which I received pointed to that, that it is him, and the general cavalcade looked like Himmler's cavalcade which I saw as the first occasion.

Q. You gave us to believe that there was forty-six ovens in the Krematoria No. II in your War Refugee Board Report in 1944. Isn't that right?

A. In the War Refugee Board of 1944 I made it quite clear to you, and we made it quite clear that that report, that we know the exact location of the {1539|1540} crematoria, but we were not allowed to go inside because usually who was inside didn't come alive out from there.

Consequently, we had to rely on rough information which we got from the Sonderkommando who worked inside; and to reproduce a map without being trained in architecture, from hearsay descriptions of the other eye witnesses, of course, is not such a simple thing.

I think that the War Refugee Report, or the Vrba-Wetzler Report, if you wish to call it, for which we two are responsible, has given reliable information where the crematoria are, and roughly how they are equipped, without claiming that we were inside.

Q. Did the people in the camp with whom you lived — that is, the secret international resistance group referred to in some of your correspondence, regard you as a person who is a volatile, impulsive individual, who is unreliable?

A. Well, when I was of the opinion that it is not possible further to wait —

THE COURT: Just a moment. I wonder, Mr. Christie, if you could rephrase that. The way you have put it makes it very difficult.

MR. CHRISTIE: I appreciate that. I am going to refer to a book in which this statement is made.

Q. Is it attributed to you, Dr. Vrba?

A. First kindly explain to the jury whose book it is.

Q. "Auschwitz and the Allies" by Martin Gilbert. {1540|1541}

A. Who is Martin Gilbert?

Q. Well, you mentioned him before in your evidence in-chief. Don't you know who it is?

A. No. Please explain.

Q. I am not interested in —

A. Perhaps the jury —

THE COURT: Doctor, I don't have to ask this jury to leave again while you and I have a talk, do I?

THE WITNESS: I got the hint, Your Honour.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, if I ask you if he says, and I quote:

"Now, together with a fellow Slovak, Fred Wetzler, he contacted the secret international resistance group within the camp and put his plan of escape to David Szmulewski."

Do you know who that is?

A. Yes. He was a general.

Q. One of the representatives of the resistance leaders. Then there is a quote:

"I have been told Vrba later wrote that, 'Due to my inexperience, personal volatility, impulsiveness and other factors the leadership dismissed my intentions as unreliable.'"

Did you admit that about yourself?

A. I didn't admit about myself.

Q. So that is a misquote of you?

A. That is a distortion of facts which you are here again attempt, because what is written there is that I suggested that it is necessary to escape from {1541|1542} Auschwitz into the world, and I attempted to do so, and the resistance organization, after considering my request, said that it is unlikely that I may succeed when others did not succeed who are more experienced than I am, that I am risking unnecessarily my life, and therefore my ideas are probably motivated by impulsiveness.

Q. Well, what it says here —

A. He was wrong and I was right, because I escape and warned the world.

Q. You warned the world.

A. That's right.

Q. And is it true that, what is written right, here, that they considered you volatile, impulsive and unreliable?

A. That's right, because they refused that moment to assist me, considering that my enterprise to escape from Auschwitz is completely hopeless, in contrary to my views.

Q. Yeah. You were —

A. The proof of the pudding is, of course, in the eating, so it was not as hopeless as they thought —

Q. You were nineteen years old?

A. — otherwise I wouldn't be here.

Q. And is it the case that nobody who was in the camp at that time survived?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Is it the case that nobody who was in the camp when you escaped survived?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. Is it the case that nobody who was {1542|1543} in the camp when you escaped survived?

A. Many survived who were living still at the time.

Q. Thank you. Now, you told us about Primo Levy being in the camp.

A. That's right.

Q. You know who Primy Levy is?

A. Yes.

Q. He escaped.

A. Yes.

Q. He was a survivor?

A. Yes.

Q. He was not in Auschwitz I or in Birkenau.

A. Right.

Q. He was in a satellite camp?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, people came to the Auschwitz ramp and went to satellite camps such as Raisko.

A. Yes.

Q. There were other camps —

A. One moment. Raisko. No, I never heard about it.
 Q. All right. There were other satellite camps?
 A. There were twenty-seven satellite camps.
 Q. So all of the people who got off at the siding in Auschwitz didn't have to go to Birkenau.
 A. This I can explain you quite clearly from a graph which I have shown here before. {1543|1544}
 Q. Just answer my question.
 A. It is better if I show it as it was, because you don't seem to remember what I said here yesterday.
 THE COURT: Just a moment. I think that perhaps you can answer the question – unless you are going to say something different than what you have already pointed out as to what occurred on the ramp with respect to what you have called, in essence, the selection process.
 THE WITNESS: Right. I said I can do it without the map.
 THE COURT: Oh, good.
 THE WITNESS: You reminded me of that. I explained, in detail, that a selection was made on the ramp, and that from the ramp those who were selected for work were marched off. They were marched off either in Auschwitz I, I said, or to Auschwitz II.
 Q. Birkenau.
 A. Yes.
 Q. Well, they could also —
 A. But some were marched off to Buna.
 Q. Excuse me, some were marched off to Buna?
 A. That's right.
 Q. I spelled Raisko incorrectly. It should be Rajsco.
 A. Right.
 Q. Now, that was a camp, wasn't it?
 A. Rajsco was a Polish name for Birkenau, and it is one of, as far as I could see from the {1544|1545} neo-Nazi literature which I perused, I could see that this is one of the swindles of the neo-Nazis, because Rajsco was first erased. This was a village on the map. On the map before 1942 you will find Rajsco as a village.
 Q. Do you know how many satellite camps there were to Auschwitz generally?
 A. I've heard that about twenty-seven satellite camps for slave labour.
 Q. Do you know how many people were in them?
 A. I don't have the statistics at the hand.
 Q. Do you know that anyone who came to Auschwitz could have gone to anyone of those satellite camps, or not?
 A. Those who were healthy and able and were find suitable for heavy slave labour went there, and when they were finished with their ability to work hard, they came back to Birkenau and were gassed in the same crematoria which I showed you. So on the way back, sometime there were even, knowing the confusion in the German administration, created often artificially, we could even speak with them. From them we heard that they were in some coal-mines close by of Auschwitz. From them we heard that they were in some factories, close by from Auschwitz, and when they couldn't work any more further they were brought back to Auschwitz and gassed.
 Q. I put it to you there were, thirty-nine auxilliary [sic] camps attached to the main camp of Auschwitz in the immediate vicinity.
 A. Camps for work? {1545|1546}
 Q. Camps for work and camps for rest and other camps, sir.
 A. Camps for slave labour there were around thirty. Can you name one camp for rest?
 Q. Were you in them?
 A. No, I was not in them.
 Q. Then how can you tell us what went on in them except hearsay?
 A. Because a number of people who worked there —
 Q. Told you about it.
 A. — came for gassing to Auschwitz and from them we heard what is going there, but the neo-Nazi literature would pretend that it was, perhaps, because it was completely covered up in secrecy, the ruthless slave labour that it was a rest place for children. And where are the children, then? Can you bring me one child who was resting there?

Q. I can tell you one child who went through Auschwitz and didn't die, and that's called Anne Frank. Do you deny that?
 A. I didn't meet Anne Frank.
 Q. Well, you asked me if I knew of any. I put it to you Anne Frank was in Auschwitz and wasn't killed there and was moved to another camp where she later died. Do you deny that?
 THE COURT: Just a moment, please. There is a good reason that Courts say that witnesses answer questions and don't ask questions of their own, Doctor. Please resist asking counsel questions. You are here to answer them not to ask them. {1546|1547}
 THE WITNESS: Thank you for your advice.
 Q. MR. CHRISTIE: How many people died of typhus?
 A. They died in thousands, but I don't have exact figures.
 Q. Isn't it true that thousands of people who died were buried not far from the camp, and they had to be exhumed and their bodies burned because they were polluting the water supply?
 A. It is true that before I came to Auschwitz, and indeed, that was the reason why I came to Auschwitz from Maidanek concentration camp, they needed four hundred men.
 Q. And you volunteered.
 A. Yes. For so-called fieldwork, for work in field, and when we came to Auschwitz it turned out that before the Auschwitz started, many thousands of Russians prisoners of war who were murdered by the Nazi machinery, they buried them in the vicinity of the Auschwitz and then they came to the idea that it was not good to have a mass grave, so they used the slave labour, the prisoners who they brought from Maidanek, to bring up the bodies and burn them.
 Q. Now you are telling us that thousands of people died of typhus and you don't know how many. Is that right?
 A. That's right.
 Q. That was an epidemic in 1942, I gather, before you were brought to Birkenau; is that right?
 A. No. There might have been an epidemic before I was brought to Birkenau, but there was {1547|1548} one in August 1944.
 Q. That was before you were brought to Birkenau.
 A. That's right.
 Q. Now, isn't it true that the epidemic of which you speak claimed lives at a rapid rate and that typhus was spread from lice?
 A. That's quite so.
 Q. Do you recall being in the bathhouse known as the sauna for some reason?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Were you there?
 A. Yes.
 Q. The one I am speaking about is the one that was shown on the very detailed map that we took from the Phillip Mueller book.
 A. Yes.
 Q. You were in the sauna or bath in that place?
 A. I was in the bath which was adjacent to the Krematorium III and IV.
 Q. All right. That one had roads that went to it, didn't [sic] it?
 A. What do you mean, roads? Within the confines of Krematorium III and IV there were, naturally, the whole confine was not bigger than, perhaps, ten times of this room, and there were, naturally, footpaths. There were even flowers planted in front of the crematoria so that the deception could work better. There were even trees planted.
 Q. There was a sport field beside {1548|1549} Krema III, sir, wasn't there?
 A. I haven't seen it.
 Q. You never went there.
 A. No.
 Q. Nobody ever played sports there?
 A. Not to my knowledge.
 Q. You deny that other survivors have said they've played sports there?
 A. Not to me, but it is quite possible that some of them did play sports.
 Q. Right beside the crematoria, in fact. I put it to you —
 A. I don't have that information.

Q. You don't have that information.

A. No.

Q. I put it to you that the reason for those crematoria was to deal with the bodies of people who had died from typhus.

A. This is ridiculous.

Q. What?

A. This is a ridiculous statement.

Q. What else do you think they did with the bodies of people who died from typhus in the thousands, sir?

A. They burned them together with the people who did not die of it.

Q. How many of those who died ended up in Fred Wetzler's crematoria who you say held three or four thousand bodies a day?

A. The crematorium [sic] bodies varied roughly over months. For example, in 1943 sitting in the {1549|1550} crematoria with Fred Wetzler, the mortality would be three hundred to four hundred a day, sometimes five hundred, but in May of the same year, after Camp Commander Hoess was withdrawn and the second Commander was put into command, the mortality dropped that one day. In May there was not a natural death. It was quite empty.

So the mortality dropped because, (a), the frost went away, the winter passed by, and (b), the new commander said, "What's happening in the gas chamber is one thing, but I don't want that a prisoner should be beaten unnecessarily." Consequently the mortality among the prisoners dropped. Consequently there was not one day when there was not one person killed in Birkenau, so the mortality rate in Birkenau was subject to great swings.

Q. You give us to believe that there were 1,765,000 corpses of gassed Jews to which we must add whoever died of natural causes, sometimes at the rate of five hundred a day.

A. Yes.

Q. And whoever wasn't a Jew and was gassed, we have to add that too.

A. Yes.

Q. And that's in two years. Right?

A. I beg your pardon? I don't understand your question.

Q. You don't understand my question?

A. No.

Q. You gave us the figure of 2,65,000 corpses who were gassed in your War Refugee Board Report.

Correct?

A. That's right. {1550|1551}

Q. That must be added to five hundred a day in some cases, of other caused deaths. Correct?

A. That's right.

Q. And then you also have to add all the non-Jewish corpses, those who were dead; right?

A. That's right.

Q. So now we have in your two-year period in Auschwitz and in Birkenau at least 1,765,000 corpses. Right?

A. More than that.

Q. Mm-hmmm. More than that.

A. More than that. Not during the —

Q. Let's just deal with one thing at a time.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, you told us in the War Refugee Board Report that there were thirty-six furnaces — yes, thirty-six — and it took an hour and a half to burn three corpses in each furnace. Right?

A. That's right.

Q. You later said, having seen the plans, I suppose, that there were fifteen crematorium ovens. Right?

A. No. Where did I say so?

Q. In your book. We went over that yesterday.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Do you deny it today?

A. I don't deny anything.

Q. All right. Well, just deal with the truth. I am asking you whether today you are denying that {1551|1552} yesterday you agreed that in your book you came to the conclusion there were fifteen ovens.

A. Would you show it in my book?

Q. You don't remember?

A. No.

Q. Well, then, how can you not remember from one day to the next what you say, and yet you can tell us what you counted forty-five years ago?

A. Because what I have seen with my eyes is very firmly embedded in my memory. This means when I have counted 1,765,000 people, I saw them, but inside of the crematoria I didn't see.

Q. Yes. So you saw 1,765,000 people.

A. According to my count.

Q. Yes. They were Jews, though; right? Just Jews, according to the War Refugee Board Report that you tell us is your count.

A. That's right.

Q. So they weren't gentiles; these were Jews.

A. Yes.

Q. You can tell the difference and you made the distinction between Jews and gentiles in that number?

A. I didn't make the difference in that number. I only said that 1,765,000 Jews were gassed in the gas chambers. The difference between Jews and non-Jews was made by Nazis and not by me, as you know.

Q. Well, why didn't you count all the people, then, who were gassed in gas chambers?

A. They were counted perfectly well, {1552|1553} because if you look, for instance, into my book, I mention that apart from the 1,765,000 Jews who were gassed there, about 350,000 prisoners died —

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. — in the concentration camp Auschwitz, and a good deal of them were not Jews but Poles, Frenchmen, Czechs, etcetera.

Q. Okay. We will deal with that. You asked me where in your book you said fifteen ovens. I am showing you where it says in my copy. We have to go through this procedure every time of checking with your copy, but do that if you will.

A. So it is written fifteen ovens which could burn three bodies each simultaneously in twenty minutes.

Q. That's right.

A. And how many ovens were there, in your opinion?

THE COURT: No.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I am asking you because you are the witness, and you said it in the War Refugee Board Report.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. What made you change your mind from thirty-six ovens to fifteen, if you haven't been there since?

A. The fifteen are here. Where is the thirty-six?

Q. In the War Refugee Board Report it says thirty-six.

A. Would you show it to me in the War Refugee Board Report? I have a copy of it here. You show {1553|1554} it to me.

Q. Page 14, last paragraph.

A. Page 14?

Q. Yes:

"A huge chimney rises from the furnace room around which are grouped nine furnaces each having four openings."

So I multiplied nine by four and I get thirty-six.

A. One moment.

"A huge chimney arises from the furnace room around which are grouped nine furnaces each having four openings. Each opening can take three normal corpses, and after an hour and a half the bodies [sic] are completely burned."

Right.

Q. Right. If you never went back. and you never looked at a plan, what made you change your mind about all this?

A. I still do not see any difference between one statement and the other.

Q. Oh, you don't see a difference between thirty-six and fifteen. Right?

A. Fifteen in one crematorium.

Q. We were talking about one crematorium in the case of the thirty-six ovens, sir.

A. You are completely confusing me. I can't find anything of that sort what you are saying in this report.

Q. Sir, you gave us a description in the War Refugee Board Report, page 14. You also gave us {1554|1555} a diagram.

A. Yes. The diagram is here.

Q. In the description you are talking about – I will read the whole paragraph:

“At present there are four crematoria in operation at Birkenau, two large ones, I and II, and two smaller ones, III and IV. Those type I and II consist of three parts – A, the furnace room, B, the great large hall, C, the gas chamber. A huge chimney arises from the furnace room around which are grouped nine furnaces each having four openings.”

Now, are you not talking about the crematoria types I and II and talking about nine furnaces with four openings for thirty-six openings?

A. As I explained to you yesterday, it was quite clear that the graph which we enclosed to the War Refugee Board was made from hearsay. We were not inside. In other words, we cannot —

THE COURT: Just a moment. One at a time. Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: I am supposed to go ahead?

THE COURT: Let the witness finish. Go ahead, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: I have made quite clear that as we were not allowed to inspect the crematoria with our intention to escape, we could, in our report, write only and make a sketch of crematoria as we heard second-hand from people who worked inside. What we knew for sure and for what we were guaranteeing is that Krematoria III [II] and Krematorium IV [III] was built for a capacity of two thousand {1555|1556} bodies a day, whereas Krematoriums IV and V were smaller with a capacity of one thousand bodies a day.

On the whole we were informing the public, the Allies and the Allied governments that the crematoria together, according to our information, were made to the maximum capacity of burning six thousand bodies a day. We didn't say that actually six thousand are burning a day, because there was a considerable amount of breakdown in that crematoria.

However, in your quote yesterday you tried to confuse me by saying that the crematoria I said in this report were made for six thousand people, and then you said in my book I said they finally had a machinery for twelve thousand people.

Q. Yeah. That is correct.

A. And that is perfectly true because when the Hungarian Jews arrived in May and June 1944 —

Q. Do you remember the question —

A. — then the crematoria were not able to burn that amount of people who came there daily, and they had to burn the rest in pits around the crematoria. So, I concluded that up to twelve thousand people a day could be burned, gassed and burned in the complex in crematoria in Birkenau.

You, then, started to confront that in the report I said that the maximum possible number is six thousand, and in the book I said that the maximum number is twelve thousand, and I am contradicting myself. I'm not contradicting myself; I am just telling you what you don't want to understand, and what you use for deliberate confusion, I think, that the Nazis were more inventive than {1556|1557} it appears.

When the Hungarian transports came in such great masses that the crematoria couldn't take it, they re-equipped the crematoria with additional pits around the crematoria and were without great technical advances, simply dug out with slave labour additional pits, and increased the capacity of the murder complex in Birkenau from six thousand to twelve thousand, in no detail and without great technical measurement. And in this difference, who is not quite clear to those who did not study the report that went to the British and United States government and was found there by specialists as reliable, and my additional report which was written after the War with additional knowledge which I acquired when I was not in Auschwitz, you tear out from this various quotations in a confusing way, present it to a jury and me and to a court, who perhaps do not know every detail of this complex matter, and by this confusion you try to creat[e] the impression that because there was such a confusion, there was no burning at all – obviously everything was invented.

Q. Did you see one body being taken out of the crematorium and hauled to a pit?

A. This happened in May and June and July 1944. And I escaped in April. In other words —

Q. The answer is no.

A. In other words, I have not present during the mass murder of the Hungarian Jews. Indeed, my job was to escape from Auschwitz before this mass murder started and to warn them.

Q. In spite of the fact that you weren't a witness to such a thing, you have told us these things {1557|1558} were fact. Right?

A. These things can be considered as a fact. Also, I haven't been on the moon. I consider it as a fact that somebody landed on the moon, and that the picture was not made in the Star Trek atelier [sic] because there are certain informations that a person doesn't doubt. If I used your logic, you can come to me and say that the earth is flat. Everybody can see it, and I can't prove otherwise, and the astronauts which went to the moon, they were filled with an atelier [sic] together with Star Trek, and all of this was invented. How can I object against this argument? And you are coming with exactly the same arguments here, from the four [hundred] thousand Jews who were deported in the months May, June, July from Hungary and into the extermination camps in Auschwitz, about twenty thousand came back from slave labour, only four hundred thousand or so were gassed and murdered there and there is a statement of twenty thousand people; and if you want to know every detail what those twenty thousand people have said and how it was investigated and that it was photographed from the aeroplanes by the Americans by the time it was August and September, as those reports fully confirm, and the statistics fully compiled in back of by Professor Randall Brown in New York University College, so why shouldn't I accept those facts and incorporate them into my book as to what happened in Auschwitz after I escaped? After all, I am not such an egomaniac that after I left Auschwitz there was nothing left to interest me.

Q. Are you aware of the aerial [sic] photographs of the camp prepared by the United States Government, {1558|1559} a copy of which I am showing you from the Central Intelligence Agency?

THE COURT: Just show him the document, Mr. Christie. We have been over this before. Ask him if he recollects it.

THE WITNESS: From the photographs which I see in front of me and which I haven't seen before

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: All right. You haven't seen them before.

A. But I can remember here something.

Q. All right.

A. I can recognize complex Auschwitz Birkenau, aerial [sic] view. I can recognize the ramp and I can recognize the complex of Auschwitz I. I can recognize – that's about what I can recognize here, yes.

Q. Mm-hmmm. And the date of the photograph and the picture?

A. 26 June, 1944.

Q. Do you see a road leading out of the camp just north of the area of the crematoria?

A. This, I would say, is not a road, it's but a pathway through the forest which was behind the crematoria. You can see clearly that there is a forest and a narrow pathway. And it wasn't there when I escaped from Auschwitz.

Q. When you escaped on a dark night without a compass and without a light, you can tell us that you know there is no road in that area?

A. Well, you see, I can escape without a compass and without a light, or so probably in the girl guide in B.C. Victoria they didn't explain to you how it {1559|1560} is done, but it is possible and I will tell you how it is done.

Q. I put it to you that the road is no thicker and no thinner than the road leading into it at the bottom of the picture.

A. This is not at all. You can see here heavy road coming in the camp, and narrow passes coming out from the camp.

Q. Thank you.

MR. CHRISTIE: Could I use that as an exhibit, please, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: Any aerial [sic] specialist will give you better advice on that.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes. Thank you very much.

THE COURT: That will be Exhibit No. 27.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Is that the photograph with the CIA interpretation, or just the photograph, just so I'm clear, Your Honour?

THE COURT: Just the photograph, unless and until you look at it, and unless you —

MR. CHRISTIE: What I could do is put it in for identification, and I can call evidence on that point later, perhaps.

THE COURT: The photograph only, for the moment, until counsel have seen it; but do not take it apart. Just hold it for the moment, Madam Clerk. It is the photograph only that is to be the exhibit at this time. {1560|1561} — EXHIBIT NO. 27: Excerpt from document showing photograph of Auschwitz-Birkenau complex.

MR. CHRISTIE: Witness, you say that you saw 1,765,000 Jews go into the area of the crematorium, and you are asking us to believe that you did that by counting each and everyone of them.

A. To make a statistics clandestinely of a highly secret murder, committed by a ruthless and large organization over two years, is a question which requires some circumspection and cannot be answered in one or two sentences. but if you wish to know every detail how the statistics which are recorded in this report were made by me and Wetzler, I can give you an explanation, a lecture about it.

Q. I asked you a question about it. Did you count each one of them?

THE COURT: Doctor, you can answer that question without difficulty. Please do it.

THE WITNESS: I counted reliably at least eighty per cent of it, and at least the remaining twenty per cent of it was seen by Wetzler and most of it was seen by both of us. So you can double check the figures.

Q. So you can double check the figures.

A. By many other ways, too.

Q. Did they come in trucks, or did they come on foot?

A. As I explained to you yesterday, and you seem to have forgotten, the mass of the victims came in cattle trucks, in trains. However, there were excep-{1561|1562}tional cases. There were exceptional cases when they came on trucks.

Q. Now, isn't it your evidence, from a previous occasion, that a hundred people were put on each truck and you counted the trucks?

A. I said on previous occasion that in each truck there were sixty — you mean cattle truck?

Q. No. The trucks that you said came from the ramps. You referred to them as dump trucks.

A. That's right — dump trucks.

Q. You said there were a hundred people in each one and you counted by that method?

A. That's right.

Q. 17,650 trucks? Are you telling us that you counted 17,650 trucks?

A. No. A considerable part of my method consisted also of other measurements. For instance, when I went out to the ramp —

Q. I didn't ask you about other methods. I asked you about that specific method, thank you.

A. I didn't go by just this parameter. I had other parameters in order to check and double check these figures.

Q. I will ask you if I may —

A. You're welcome. You may learn something new.

Q. Is it your evidence that you kept a record in some written form, or is it all mental note?

A. To keep records in written form about murder in Auschwitz —

Q. — would be dangerous, so —

A. — was to ask for death. {1562|1563}

Q. So you didn't.

A. No. I relied on my memory.

Q. Therefore it was all a matter of memory.

A. That's right.

Q. And the matter of memory was such, that over the two years you could be sure of the numbers of trucks and transports.

A. Absolutely.

Q. You never wrote it own anywhere?

A. It was not necessary until I wrote this down, because I have special mnemonic principles that are simple, so simple that you might understand it, perhaps.

Q. One of the things you did in the camp was to learn how to tell lies very effectively, wasn't it?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. One of the methods to survive in the camp was to learn how to lie very effectively?

A. Are you making innuendos that I was a liar?

Q. I asked you a specific question, that's all. You had to lie very effectively so that you had to get ahead in the camp?

A. I don't understand what you are meaning. Give me an example.

Q. Well, did you have to lie to the guards and lie to the Kapos and lie to the authorities above you, and perhaps even lie to the people around you?

A. You mean that I didn't go to the {1563|1564} camp commander and told him that my real intention is to escape from this camp, that I do not approve of the murders which is going on here, that I pretend that I am a slave labourer who has got no other interest than to find a scrap of food and can't think, and if you say that that was a lie, well, I would say that you might have here some point.

In other words, in the face of a ruthless enemy of a ruthless murderer who doesn't believe into God and has got no inhibitions whatsoever, if he knows he can get away with it, it would be most imprudent to open my mind and warn him that my intention is to oppose him.

Q. Is that why you developed your memory techniques?

A. This was a part of it. I had to develop my memory techniques if I wanted to oppose their objective, and their objective was to keep the secret of Auschwitz.

Q. If you wanted to keep yourself safe you had to develop the memory techniques so that you could keep your lies straight?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You had to develop a memory technique so you could keep your lies straight and survive in the camp?

A. Keep what?

Q. In order to keep alive in the camp you had to develop a memory technique so that you had to keep your lies straight?

A. My lies straight?

Q. That's right. {1564|1565}

A. You are saying I have been lying?

Q. That's right, sir; but I am suggesting that you have developed a technique to keep your lies straight.

A. I am suggesting to you that, to consider a person who fought Nazis a liar is a misuse of a free Court in Canada.

Q. So because you fought the Nazis we shouldn't suggest that you could be lying; is that it?

A. I fought the Nazis without telling them my real intention, otherwise I couldn't have fought them. And if you now, on that ground, consider me a liar, then you will have to consider a liar every nineteen-year old Canadian boy who died fighting the Nazis because he didn't tell them in advance when he was going to attack them.

Q. Well, how many of them died, sir?

A. Of whom?

Q. The Canadian boys you are referring to?

A. A great deal of them had to die.

Q. How many?

A. It was not my job to make a statistic on that.

Q. That's right. But I will suggest to you that it's been a well-promoted statistic that you made of 1,765,000, that that statistic is not any more known to you than it is to anyone in this room as to how many Canadians died.

A. Well, it is very sad. It should be known; but I suggest there is sufficient information about {1565|1566} it in the library if I wanted to know how many young Canadians had put their lives down in order to end this nightmare in Europe, and there is a sufficient information about it in the library about Auschwitz, too, and everybody contributed where he was, the military organs, the military administration kept records about it, how many soldiers they lost, and I kept record about it, how many victims I have seen murdered and robbed. Also, I might say that this is not a welcome news to you.

THE COURT: We will adjourn for twenty minutes.

— The jury retires. 11:40 a.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

— The jury returns. 12:10 p.m.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I'd like to deal with the specific figure that you gave for the nation of France on page 33 of your report, where you say, "Careful estimate of the number of Jews gassed in Birkenau between April, 1942 and April, 1944 ( according to countries of origin)."

A. Which page is it?

Q. Page 33 of your report, the War Refugee Board Report which you referred to as the Vrba-Wetzler Report. Page 33 there is a list there which says, "Careful estimate of the number of Jews gassed in Birkenau between April, 1942 and April, 1944 (according to countries {1566|1567} of origin)."

A. That's right.

Q. Then it says, "France – 150,000".

A. Right.

Q. Correct?

A. Right. Approximately 150,000.

Q. How did you know the country of origin – a nineteen-year-old block-schreib[r] – in what block number?

A. No. 15 in Block IIA.

Q. Yes. No. 15 Block, in Block IIA. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. So you knew the country of origin.

A. Yes.

Q. For everybody who came from France.

A. That's right.

Q. Okay.

A. I can explain to you why.

Q. I don't need an explanation. I just want to know if it's true.

A. Yes.

Q. You said yes.

A. Yes.

Q. That's for two years – gassed Jews from France.

A. Yes.

Q. 150,000.

A. Gassed Jews which came in trains from France.

Q. Oh, I see. {1567|1568}

A. Because in those trains were many Polish Jews who were refugees from Poland and came to France and then they were caught up in France by the Nazi machinery.

Q. All right. So you happen to know the country of origin of the trains.

A. Absolutely so.

Q. You seem to know everything about the camp even from where the trains came. Right?

A. This was very easy for me to find out.

Q. I am sure it was.

A. I will explain to you why.

Q. If you wish, later, but I have a question for you.

A. If you wish I will.

Q. Well, I have a question dealing with 150,000 gassed Jews from France.

A. That's right.

Q. I'd like to show you a book made by Serge Klarsfeld.

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Show him the book.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

Q. Do you recognize this book?

A. No.

Q. You don't know anything about it?

A. No.

Q. I want to put something to you from this book.

THE COURT: Don't quote anything from {1568|1569} the book. Just put questions emanating from the book, but not from the book directly.

MR. CHRISTIE: All right.

Q. I put it to you, sir, that it is the truth and the fact that the closest estimate we can obtain from the best sources available, with all the transport numbers and names and dates in France, gives us the closest possible estimate of foreign Jews deported, Jews without national origin deported from France, and French Jews deported from France equalling a total for the entire War of 75,721. Do you disagree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

A. I disagree with it because it is not in accordance with what I have established.

Q. Yes. Thank you very much.

A. And it was written by people who have not seen.

Q. You are a person who has seen people.

A. On the ramp.

Q. How do the trains differ from Lithuania, Bohemia, Slovakia, all of which countries of origin you identify in your report? How are they different?

A. All right. Before the train came, the S.S. were very informed what sort of trains will come, and they didn't say that the train from France will come. They said, "Tomorrow come sardines", because people in France during the wartime did have sardines, somehow, and in the moment when the news that they are going to an {1569|1570} unknown place, they tried to accumulate certain amount of food which they take with themselves.

For us who were working on the ramp, naturally, the food which they brought with them was very important. Unfortunately, they did not eat the food as they went mostly to the gas chamber, and the food was confiscated, but we paid close attention to the question of food because we were starving people, and the S.S. paid a close attention to that question.

Consequently, when the S.S. started to speak, "You are going to the ramp. Sardines are coming", I knew it was a transport from France and I knew that that night, if I am lucky, I will steal sardine conserve.

When a transport came from Greece they were speaking of cigarettes. Interestingly, during wartime Greece had cigarettes, and France not much; consequently the Greek transport was a supply of cigarettes not only for the S.S. but also the prisoners who whenever they can put um their hands on the goods too.

When a transport came from Slovakia, one spoke about Slivovitz.

THE COURT: What is that?

THE WITNESS: This is an alcoholic drink. Because each family brought with them, they use it for medicinal purposes. When somebody is very sick in Slovakia they believe if you have a glass of it you get better. So we knew – I didn't answer your question yet – so we knew perfectly well from food.

Secondly, we knew perfectly well from the language which they spoke. Auschwitz was full of all nationalities, all languages are spoken, and I myself speak {1570|1571} seven. So it was quite clear for me and easy for me to identify the people the moment they came out from the train by the language they spoke.

Q. What about the story you told us before –

A. And number three, they brought the luggages, and on the luggages they brought with them, they did not bring with them – we from the Kanadakommand handled them; and on the luggages were carefully written their names and their addresses at home, just like everybody who travels writes his name and address on the luggage.

So there were many, many factors which clearly, and beyond any doubt, enabled me to establish, with one glance, from where a particular transport is coming.

Q. So your estimate, then, is based on those three things – the conversation, the tags on the luggage, and the food they brought with them.

A. Not only that.

Q. More?

A. More.

Q. Tell us more. Just a moment, I will ask you specifically, how can you tell there were a hundred thousand from Holland? You see, that's the first one, Holland; and Poland you say 300,000.

A. By truck. 600,000 by train."

Q. You've told us so far that nobody came by truck, but now you say" 300,000 came by truck?

A. These are that came from the ghettos of Auschwitz, Sosnovitz (phonetic) and so on. There were a number of ghettos in close vicinity of Auschwitz with {1571|1572} great concentration of Jews, and they were not transported by train, but by truck.

Q. You handled their luggage off the train, too?

A. That's right. Off the trucks.

Q. Off the trucks.

A. Yes.

Q. You unloaded the trucks, then.

A. No, I didn't unload those people from the trucks. Those trucks went straight to the crematoria, so we could see the truck only.

Q. So 300,000 went in those trucks that went straight to the crematoria.

A. Roughly.

Q. And I suppose you saw the people being dumped into the back to the crematoria?

A. The trucks went into the crematoria and I didn't see any people coming back except the empty trucks.

Q. So you didn't see anybody going into the crematoria?

A. No. Only the trucks loaded with people.

Q. Going into the area of the crematoria?

A. Going into the closed area of the crematoria.

Q. Oh, right inside the building?

A. In front of the building. And then they went —

Q. Did you see them going into the {1572|1573} closed building?

A. When it was day, yes. When it was night I only saw them going into the compound.

Q. There was a compound with a wall around it?

A. Not wall, barbed wire.

Q. So did you see the trucks going right into the crematoria with these people on them?

A. Perfectly so.

Q. Yes. Big, wide doors in the crematoria, eh?

A. Not in the crematoria. There were big, wide doors in the entrance to the compound of the crematoria. This means that cars, the trucks went on the main road from the main gate in Birkenau, the last four hundred of five hundred meter, to the crematoria, and in front of the crematoria the barbed wire fence had a very large opening. It's a gate through which easily a truck went by.

Q. Yeah. So you saw three thousand trucks with a hundred people on each one going through the gate?

A. Not in one night, but over two years.

Q. And you counted them and when you got to eight hundred or so, you kept on counting and never made mistakes and kept on counting till you got to three thousand trucks.

A. That's right.

Q. With a hundred people on each.

A. That's right.

Q. Now you say 600,000 came from Poland {1573|1574} by train.

A. Yes.

Q. And you counted all those, too.

A. Six hundred —

Q. That's what it says.

A. Where is it?

Q. Second from the top, just under the 300,000.

A. Yes. Because I was on the ramp. They came with train.

Q. Sure. What about this situation where you told us that the lady who had a conversation with a prisoner, then the prisoner was shot for talking to her?

A. Yes.

Q. Without going into the conversation – no doubt you can go on about that – do you remember that incident?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Any communication between the baggage handlers and the people on the trains resulted in being shot.

A. Usually, when it was observed.

Q. Okay. So we have now understood from you why there was so ready an ability to identify the country of origin, eh?

A. There was more of that.

Q. Just answer one other question, if you will.

A. There was more of that. You asked of, me what was ready ability. You see, from each transport — {1574|1575}

Q. Well, so far, let me understand you, it was the food, in the case of Yugoslavia Slivovitz, in case of France sardines, then there was the luggage which you thought of next, then there was the language which you thought of after that.

A. Yes.

Q. Anything else you want to add? You have thought of something else?

A. Yes, I have thought at something else.

Q. Go ahead.

A. For instance, from each transport – not from each but from most of the transport, they chose at least a hundred men, or two hundred men from slave labour, and these men came into the camp. Once I became a camp registrar, or a Blockschreibe, to say it exactly, I was writing their cards – their names, from where they are – and I spoke with them and I asked them where from they are, if they came with their families, because their first question was, "Where are our families? Where is my wife? Where are my children?" So that I speak to them like a human being, so they thought I could give them the information. And from the discussions with these people, from the discussions with these people I was able to confirm my observations with my eyes and come, then, to my final conclusion about the size of the transport and origin.

Q. Mm-hmmm. I just want to understand clearly that you were a Blockschreibe, you told us, right there, wasn't it?

A. No. It was here in Block 15. {1575|1576}

THE COURT. Referring to Exhibit 1.

MR. CHRISTIE: Exhibit 21, sir.

Q. Now, Block 15, you say?

A. Yes.

Q. That's one block in one half of – it's BIIA, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, how many people were in that block?

A. In that block were sometimes no people, and sometimes a thousand.

Q. Sometimes a thousand.

A. Yes.

Q. So there's as many as a thousand in each of those blocks at the bottom there; is that right?

A. No, that is not right, because sometimes —

Q. What do you mean, then?

A. Sometimes half of the blocks were empty, sometimes eighty per cent of the blocks were empty – it was a quarantine part of the camp.

Q. Yeah, but they held as many as a thousand in each of those blocks?

A. If necessary they could put as many as a thousand people in each of those blocks. They held as many as three hundred, but they managed to press in.

Q. What we are talking about the block BIIA. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And there's fifteen blocks in there. {1576|1577}

A. That's right.

Q. All right. So there could be as many as fifteen thousand people.

A. There were never there fifteen thousand people.

Q. In that part of the camp.

A. No. In quarantine camp not, but in similar camp, indeed, there were sometimes twenty thousand.

Q. Let's get the figures understood. So that in all the other blocks in other camps, the same number of people could be kept.

A. Not at all. This doesn't work that way. I am show you how it works if you will allow me.

Q. All I asked you was, were the blocks capable of holding that many people?

A. They were capable, but between capability of holding people and actually holding people there is a difference. The people. Were the people there or not?

Q. I know. And you were in the quarantine camp, and unless you were reporting to the Chief Blochschreibe, [Blockschreiber] or the Chief Scribe of the camp

A. That's right.

Q. — you had to be in quarantine Block A.

A. According to regulations; it doesn't mean that I kept the regulations, you see.

Q. No. You were clever enough to avoid the regulations, right?

A. I took the risk to avoid the regulations, if you don't mind, as part of my fighting duties.

Q. Fighting duries, [duties] yes. So you still maintain 150,000 people from France who were Jews ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... were gassed between April '42 and April '44.

A. Yes.

Q. You maintain —

A. It is written there.

Q. It is written there, I know.

A. I have counted them.

Q. And I want to know if that's true.

A. Right.

Q. And you say that is true.

A. Absolutely so, otherwise I wouldn't have written it.

Q. And it's a careful estimate, isn't it?

A. Well, what else can it be? Should I have asked —

Q. Don't answer my question with a question. Please answer my question with an answer.

A. Yes. A careful estimate, because that is all I could do. A careful estimate. I could not ask the camp commander for more exact figures. He had them.

Q. Thank you for your reason for your answer. I suggest to you that this figure is twice the number of people that boarded from France who were Jews for the entire War. What do you say to that?

A. Where from do you have the figure, from the Nazi newspapers? {1579|1580}

Q. No. I have the figure — do you want an answer to the question? Because that is what you asked me. I put it to you, therefore, from Serge Klarsfeld, a noted Nazi-hunter from France who wrote the book, Le Memorial de la Deportation de Juivre en France — do you deny the content of this book?

A. I have not read that book, but I can tell you that I was in Notre Dame — excuse me, I am trying to explain to you that question.

Q. But I didn't ask you about Notre Dame. I asked you whether you disputed the truth of that book.

A. I would like to inform you about different sources.

THE COURT: Doctor, Doctor. Mr. Christie, let him answer the question. You put it. Let him answer it.

THE WITNESS: I would like to tell you that in 1967 I was invited by the French Government to take part in the opening of memorial for those who were deported from France and died a martyr's death in Auschwitz and I was taken in Notre Dame in the memorial, and in gold letters there was written, "In memory of 200,000 French victims of gas chambers in Auschwitz", or deportees, or something to that effect. I cannot reproduce the words, but roughly to that effect.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Where was this?

A. In the memorial to the martyrs of deportation, which is underground under the Cathedral Notre Dame, on the island in Paris. So you can see that at that time the French Government had an opinion that 200,000 were {1580|1581} deported. Now, the French Government —

Q. Gassed or deported?

A. Deported.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. And came never back. There is an inscription of a ten-year-old hoy whose parents were deported, and this inscription says, "One day they went away and they never came back". So this was for the 200,000 who were deported and never came back.

Now, we know, of course, where they were deported. The Germans kept —

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, I object to the witness going beyond the scope of the question. I'd like to ask some other questions.

THE COURT: Ask the next question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. You gave an answer to my learned friend that the words in this book, "Did Six Million Really Die?" was a cynical lie, on more than one occasion, I recall; is that right?

A. May I elaborate this on the ground —

Q. I just want to know if you said that.

A. Yes. I have a document on that. I have left it.

Q. I just asked you whether you said it.

A. Yes, sir. It is a cynical lie.

Q. Okay.

A. It is cynical to say —

Q. You were read the portion I am about {1581|1582} to read to you: "Although several millions were supposed to have died at Auschwitz alone, Reitlinger has to admit that only 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and February 1945" (The S.S. Alibi of a Nation, p.268 ff), and ..."

A. What is the figure?

Q. "... 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and February 1945 (The S.S. Alibi of a Nation, p.268 ff), and ..."

A. Excuse me. You said registered. Did I hear right?

Q. That's what the words were.

A. Registered. Good. Thank you.

Q. Okay. Now, do you deny that that's what it says in the book, "The S.S. Alibi of a Nation", at page 268?

A. I didn't read the book.

Q. All right. So you don't deny that?

A. I didn't read the book. I didn't come to discuss this literature. I came here at the request of the Court to say what I saw.

Q. I asked you a question and I want an answer.

A. What answer do you want me about the book? {1582|1583}

Q. I want to know why you said that r that was a cynical lie if you had never read the book.

A. The six millions why it was a cynical lie?

Q. No. The question was why that was a cynical lie when you've never read the book.

A. What was a cynical lie?

Q. You said this part, which I've read to you, was a cynical lie. Now I'm going to analyze it piece by piece and I am going to ask you specifically if every sentence is true or false, or if you know.

A. As far as I know —

Q. Then I am going to ask you why you said it was a cynical lie.

A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, I will proceed to do that with the first sentence. Will you permit me?

A. I would like to make a certain specification. I said the word cynical.

Q. Well, I want a specific answer for a certain specific question, and I'll ask it right now.

A. When did I say it was a cynical lie? Remind me, please.

Q. I just put it to you that you did. I am not going to give you the hour, the second, the minute or even the day, but I put it to you that you did, and I am going to ask you whether it was, in fact, a lie."

A. Yes. All right. Go ahead.

Q. That sentence, then, you cannot say it was a lie?

A. Which sentence? {1583|1584}

Q. The sentence I just read to you:

"Although several millions were supposed to have died at Auschwitz alone, Reitlinger has to admit that only 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and February 1945" (The S.S. Alibi of a Nation, p.268 ff) ..."

I put it to you that that sentence is not a lie.

A. No. I said the same thing here.

Q. Thank you. The next sentence – well, it isn't another sentence; it is a carrying on from a comma:

"... and by no means all of them were Jews."

That's true, isn't it, for registered inmates?

A. Absolutely.

Q. All right:

"It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered, ..."

That's true, too, isn't it, sir?

A. If they went into the gas chamber, they were not registered.

Q. I am not interested in your opinion as to whether they were gassed or not. I am interested in whether it was true that it was frequently claimed many inmates were never registered. It was true, wasn't it?

A. If it was claimed – I have never heard it claimed. Show me the claim. {1584|1585}

Q. Well, I put it to you that you say that ten per cent were registered and the rest were gassed.

A. I claimed that twenty-five per cent were registered and the rest were gassed.

Q. The unregistered, according to you, were gassed?

A. That's right.

Q. So it is true to say:

"It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered?"

A. Well, if you understand it that those who were brought into the cattle trucks were already prisoners, and as prisoners and not free people, straight into the gas chamber, then it is true that the people were not registered and were killed. That is only unregistered prisoners.

Q. "It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered..."

That's true?

A. Many prisoners who did not come into the camp but from the cattle trucks in which they were imprisoned were taken straight to the gas chambers. Right, they were not registered.

Q. It is, therefore, frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered; isn't that true?

A. With the specifications I just now gave you, yes.

Q. Well, that statement is true, even without the specifications you just now gave me, isn't it?

A. Without the specifications, the statement is a nonsense. {1585|1586}

Q. Why is that statement nonsense without your specifications when it says:

"It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered ..."

Why does that need your specifications to make sense?

A. Because I consider a prisoner in Auschwitz, or Birkenau, in the Auschwitz complex, every prisoner was registered. On the other hand, if I define the word "prisoner" not only those who were brought in cattle trucks as prisoners, and without registration were gassed ...

Q. You call them prisoners —

A. Then you can widen the word of "prisoner". You are playing on a word. What is a prisoner?

Q. You are the one who is playing with words, I suggest, because a prisoner is a prisoner is a prisoner, and if he comes on a cattle truck or a train, he is still a prisoner. Right?

A. But it doesn't mean that he is or is not registered. That's the question. And if he is unregistered, he died as an unregistered prisoner and was never a prisoner in Auschwitz.

Q. Let me put it to you this way, that people who arrive in trains or cattle trucks or any other way were prisoners, and it is claimed that many of them were never registered. Isn't that true?

A. In that sense, yes.

Q. All right. This article does not define prisoners as only those who were registered, does it?

A. I beg your pardon? {1586|1587}

Q. This article does not define prisoners as only those who were registered, does it?

A. But in my mind I only regarded those who were registered.

Q. All right. That is only in your mind.

A. Yes.

Q. Then it says:

"... but no one has offered any proof of this."

Right? That's what the article says. I am asking you, isn't that what it says?

A. No one has offered any proof of that?

Q. yes.

A. This is ridiculous.

Q. Well, sir, you tell us that you have proof that many were never registered. Right? They were all gassed. Right? They disappeared up in smoke. Right?

A. It is not only I who registered it. The proof is that they went there and never came back.

Q. You've told us all about the 1,765,000 that went to the crematoria and never came back, and they all, of course, were not registered. Right?

A. Of course not, except those prisoners who were registered, walked in the camp —

Q. And died.

A. Lost their — either died or lost their power for slave work and were subjected to so-called selections and were selected as unsuitable of work and led in front of my eyes to the crematoria. So there were {1587|1588} registered prisoners gassed in the crematoria, and unregistered prisoners gassed in the crematoria.

Q. Yeah.

A. So we are in agreement.

Q. What I am suggesting to you is that the article says that there is a claim that many prisoners were never registered and you agreed with that, and it said that no one has offered any proof of this, and I put it to you that unless you were the person who kept the camp register ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... you, yourself, cannot say who was registered and who was not.

A. Of course.

Q. That is true.

A. No, that is not true. That is false.

Q. Well, sir, how can you tell us how you know who was registered and who was not when you were a block scribe in block what?

A. In Block 15.

Q. Block 15 in quarantine camp A.

A. Yes.

Q. How can you tell us how you know what records were kept by the whole camp, commandant and everybody else?

A. Because it was a rule in Auschwitz —

Q. Whose rule?

A. The rule of the administration which run Auschwitz. The rule was the murderers who was running this complex, and the rule — I am answering your question. {1588|1589}

MR. GRIFFITHS: Let him answer the question, please.

THE COURT: Yes, Mr. Christie, let him answer the question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you see their books?

A. I have permission to answer the question.

Q. Do you know what the question is?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. The question is were there unregistered prisoners in the concentration camp Auschwitz-Birkenau.

Q. Yes.

A. There were no unregistered prisoners in that complex for this reason. No alive —

Q. None alive.

A. And for the following reason I can say that this is for sure so:

Any prisoner in concentration camp Auschwitz-Birkenau had a number not only tattooed on his body, but also sewn on his clothes.

Q. Well, I'd like to stop you there and —

A. You are interrupting me when I am explaining you the question.

MR. GRIFFITHS: He is answering the question.

THE COURT: I have it, gentlemen. You can ask him after he has finished talking, and not until. {1589|1590}

Go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: It was a rule in Auschwitz that who didn't have his number on his clothes committed a criminal offence which was punished by capital punishment; he was killed.

Consequently, I can quite assure you that no prisoner could be in Auschwitz-Birkenau unregistered because if he would have been unregistered, then the roll calls which took place twice a day in order to check if somebody escaped or not would not have been possible.

When somebody escaped from Auschwitz, it took the administration no more than two minutes or five minutes to find out who is missing from which block and what is his number, what is his birthplace and where from he comes. In other words, to move around in a prisoner garb unregistered in Auschwitz-Birkenau, this is approximately such a fantasy like that you can jump on the moon. Not possible. There was no unregistered prisoner in Auschwitz-Birkenau in the time I have been there during the two years.

Q. So everybody was registered, is that right?

A. Absolutely so. Everybody who was alive was registered. Only those who died without registration were not registered.

Q. And of those there is no proof.

A. There is enough proof.

Q. What is the proof of those?

A. Should I bring you six million bodies here in front of you that you should accept the proof? {1590|1591}

Q. Well, I'd be satisfied with an autopsy report of even one.

A. You would?

Q. Yeah. Have you got that?

THE COURT: One more laugh and the one who laughs leaves and doesn't come back. Not a sound.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I am not asking for six million bodies. I am not asking if there are six million bodies in Auschwitz. I am not asking for anything like that. If you have the evidence of one single body of a person who is gassed, who was never registered, I'd like you to produce it.

A. As a rule, you should know it, as a counsel, that —

Q. What I should know as a counsel —

A. I am explaining to you —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Mr. Christie, you will please desist from interrupting the answer. I will be the arbiter as to whether or not the answer is too long and is unresponsive. You will resist it with all of your ability to interrupt the answer of the witness.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, sir.

THE COURT: Now, witness, proceed.

THE WITNESS: As a rule you, acquainted with the criminal law, must know that it is not the habit of the murderer to provide witnesses with post-mortem reports of his victims. Consequently the fact that I have been a witness to the murder doesn't give me still the possibility to go to the murderer and ask for the postmortem of his victims. {1591|1592} Your request, therefore, is nonsensical.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Am I to take it, then, that you are the proof? Is that it?

A. No, I am not the proof. I am only one of those who recorded it for the first time when it was a big secret in 1944, and after that it was investigated when this report came to the British, American and Canadian Government and was found to be a truthful and reliable information which has been checked not only with discussion of thousands and thousands of survivors, but also from reports which reached the Allied Intelligence that many trains from Paris, from Belgium from Selonica, from Prague, from Yugoslavia, from Poland moved with Jews to an unknown destination.

The first time that the destination became known, as far as Auschwitz is concerned, was accorded in this report, but long time before this report reached the Allied Government, it was known that some of the transport went to Treblinka, Chelmno, Belzec and Sobibor. So this was known to the Allied in 1944. What was new in this report was that apart from the extermination camps and gas chambers in Chelmno, Belzec, Treblinka, Sobibor, the Nazis, in their cunning, managed to hide that the biggest centre of maximum extermination is in Auschwitz. That was only news in this report.

Q. So I take it, then, that you have just provided us with the proof that there is —

A. I have provided the Allied, not you, but the Allied Government, with the information where it is and where it can be checked out. And as far as I know, none from the Allied Government who were responsible for this {1592|1593} handling of the report still accused me of having told them something which is not true. Such an accusation I have heard only from the neo-Nazi Press with the shamelessness of Butz and Faurisson, and from the piece which has been shown to me by the representative of Crown as being produced by your defendant.

Q. So as to the proof that many prisoners were never registered, you have provided that to us. That's all there is that you know of. Is that right?

A. I am confirming a generally-known fact.

Q. That's the words that began the Refugee Board Report, and I will quote to you

A. Yes.

Q. "It is a fact beyond denial". Those were the opening words, wasn't it?

A. Excuse me, please?

Q. The first words of the report?

A. Page ...

Q. Well, it starts at the beginning, the first page.

A. Yes.

Q. It says, "It is a fact beyond denial". Those are the first words, aren't they?

A. Those are the first words, but why don't you read — sorry.

Q. I will read the whole thing. I want to ask you if those were the first words.

A. Those are the first words, and as far as I know, they were penned by the President of the United States. {1593|1594}

Q. They weren't penned by you, then?

A. No, because this is an introduction to the report. This is an introduction to the report, and the report starts here.

Q. Thank you very much. It is an introduction. Thank you.

A. Yes. Not penned by myself; penned in Washington.

Q. Yes. I've heard that twice now, thank you. Now, is this the case that you have provided us with the proof of the existence of all these unregistered people by your evidence here?

A. I have —

THE COURT: Excuse me.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I think that ultimately that is going to be a matter both for Your Honour and for the jury, Your Honour, and not a question for this witness to ask. His credibility will be assessed by the jury and they will decide whether it is proof or not.

THE COURT: What do you say to that, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, he's made a statement that no one has provided any proof of this. He says that statement is a lie and I asked him whether he claims he is the one that offered us the proof. That's all.

THE COURT: I agree with the Crown. If you want to rephrase it in such a way that it is acceptable to me, you may, but in that form it is not. You may not ask it.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: It says then:

"Even if there were as many unregistered {1594|1595} as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 prisoners".

Now, that statement is true., isn't it?

A. Where are you reading that?

Q. I am reading where I read before.

A. Well, I can't see where you are reading.

Q. I finished off by reading the last sentence before that which was:

"It was frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered, but no one has offered any proof of this."

The next sentence reads:

"Even if there were as many unregistered as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 ..."

I put it to you that that statement is true.

A. I don't know what you are reading from, from what context you are tearing it out of, and I will appreciate if you show me the document from which you are reading.

Q. I'm sorry, I thought you had read the document and given your opinion on it, but I'll get it. Exhibit page 17. It's the same part, I suggest to you, that you gave a blanket answer or to my learned friend. You said it was a cynical lie, that whole paragraph.

A. Yes. Now I remember. I said it is a cynical lie what was written in this, what do you call it, printed paper. {1595|1596}

THE COURT: You can call it Exhibit 1.

THE WITNESS: Exhibit 1.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Now, I am referring to a specific sentence in that specific paragraph where it says:

"Even if there were as many unregistered as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 prisoners".

A. Page and line, please.

Q. 17 is the page. The line doesn't have a number, but it's the paragraph that —

A. This is the page where Mr. Goering is photographed, if I am right?

Q. Well, it says "17" on the bottom righthand. You got it?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you, Doctor. You read the sentence: "Even if ..." Now, do you want to start again?

A. Yes, please. Which sentence?

Q. We will deal with the paragraph which you were read by the Crown, which is the bottom lefthand column of the page beginning with the words:

"Although several millions were supposed to have died at Auschwitz alone ..."

A. That's right. I found it.

Q. "... Reitlinger has to admit that only 363,000 inmates were registered at the camp for the whole of the period between January 1940 and {1596|1597} February 1945 (The S.S. Alibi of a Nation, p.268 ff)..."

A. Right.

Q. That statement I gather you don't dispute because you say — or you don't know about that book. Right?

A. I don't know about that book, but I know about that fact.

Q. Well, it's true, isn't it, that's how many were registered?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. You say that all of the 1,765,00 were unregistered. Right?

A. Excuse me, this is not what is written here.

Q. No. I am asking —

A. Here is written the following — you are trying to mislead me.

Q. No, I am not trying to mislead.

A. And I will try to tell you what I read here.

Q. I've read it once, sir. I am asking you another question a little off that sentence. Don't feel I am trying to mislead you. I want to understand you.

A. Well, with your permission I can explain what I understand.

Q. Fine.

A. Here is written:

"It is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered, but no one has offered any proof of this." {1597|1598}

Q. Yes.

A. This word, "No one has offered any proof of this", this doesn't [sic] come from Reitlinger. This comes from the Nazi provocation.

Q. Okay. That comes from this book which you call a Nazi provocation.

A. That's right.

Q. It's a statement of opinion, right?

A. If I would consider —

Q. You don't —

A. — the opinion of somebody who tells me that the moon is out of cheese not a provocation, but a fact or information, I wouldn't be with it.

Q. No. It is a very clever turn of phrase, Doctor, but I want to ask you if that isn't an opinion with which you disagree.

A. It is against common sense, this second half of the sentence.

Q. All right.

A. Because many scholars, on many universities, and many criminal organizations, I mean many organizations who persecuted criminals, knew perfectly well that many have offered the proof of this. And here is written, "No one has offered any proof of this", and you want me to subscribe to it. In other words —

Q. No. Just please understand. I am not asking you to subscribe to it or agree with it, but am just asking you to confirm that it is a statement of opinion.

A. It is a statement against common sense. This is not a question of opinion. {1598|1599}

Q. Yes. You agree —

A. If I will qualify my statement, if you will tell me that this room is ten or twenty yards length, this is a question of opinion, I might say ten, you might say twenty; but if you tell me that this room is long twenty miles, this is not opinion; this is nonsense.

Q. Okay. You tell me that you saw 1,765,000 people go into a gas chamber and never come out. You don't produce a body. You don't produce any figures, statistics or registration numbers. You give me the information off trains that you see on occasion and you tell me that it is as ridiculous as anything you can imagine. Right?

A. No, not at all. I say something different.

Q. All right.

A. What I am offering is, in the report which went to the Allied Government, is a statistic, day by day, of what arrived to Auschwitz, from where, to the best of my knowledge and ability.

Q. I know. We've gone into that, sir.

A. So this is a testimonial of an eye witness, and as you could see, the testimonial was sufficiently good to such a way that yes, when you told me that on 7 March, 1943, there came no transport into Auschwitz, I could show you, in your own document, the other side which you didn't want to show us was written that the transport arrived on 8th March. And you didn't give me even the opportunity to explain to you that it was not necessary lapse of my memory, but that if prisoners came on the night of 7 March to the camp, it is perfectly {1599|1600} logical that in the book which you showed me they will be recorded on in the morning as March 8th. Still you came here —

Q. I suggest to you that it was the 7th of September we were talking about yesterday, not the 7th of March or the 8th.

A. 7th of September, that's right.

Q. You made a mistake, right?

A. Thank you. Thank you for reminding me.

Q. Sure. Now, what I have suggested to you is that it is true that it is frequently claimed that many prisoners were never registered. In fact, you make that claim yourself as do many others.

A. That many prisoners were never registered, provided with the proviso because they were gassed on arrival.

Q. You want to add that. All right.

A. That's right.

Q. And therefore you say that it is nonsense to say that no one has offered any proof of this. Right?

A. That no one has offered any proof of it, this is nonsense.

Q. Yeah. That's nonsense because you've offered us your knowledge of their arrival and your evidence about their being gassed.

A. And many thousand other survivors.

Q. Well, we don't know about the many thousand others.

A. I — {1600|1601}

THE COURT: Just a moment. What's your next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I am trying to get to the sentence I tried to get to before:

"Even if there were as many unregistered as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 prisoners — hardly enough for the elimination of 3 or 4 million."

Now, that sentence is true, right?

A. That sentence I don't even understand. I think this is a non sequitur. If you take the sentences, they are nonsense. It is grammatically right. It is spelled out, I would say, properly, but the sense is completely missing.

Q. Because you don't accept the proposition that there were only twice as many unregistered as registered; is that right?

A. No. Here is something completely different written. Even if there were as many unregistered as there were registered, it would mean only a total of 750,000 prisoners.

Q. Well, we already understood from you that you didn't know how many were registered, do you? Do you know how many were registered?

A. Of course I know how many were registered.

Q. How many?

A. And as you say in your statement here, that Reitlinger said that registered prisoners were 363,000. {1601|1602}

Q. What do you say?

A. And in my book I say the following — I will read you what I said. I will read you the whole paragraph so that there is no mistake about what I said.

Q. Well, I don't think you are trying to mislead us, sir, on your book. Just tell us how many were registered.

A. On page 273 I say that apart from those who were killed without registration, registered prisoners were 350,000.

Q. Okay.

A. And Reitlinger says 363,000.

Q. That's right.

A. Now, he is a particularly sorrowful historian. I always said my figures were exact to ten per cent, and that difference between the two figures I mentioned before is only about two or three per cent.

Q. So twice the unregistered inmates would be 750,000, right?

A. That is right. So what you are saying then is twice the number of registered would mean that fifty per cent of the people who came in the cattle trucks to Auschwitz would go to the camp and only fifty per cent would go, other fifty per cent —

Q. Let the jury decide what it means. I am asking you to decide upon this statement, one at a time.

A. Right.

Q. So we agree that if you double the number of registered inmates, you get 750,000.

A. That's right. Nice mathematical achievement. {1602|1603}

Q. And that would certainly not be three or four million.

A. No.

Q. That's all I ask.

A. By mathematics, no. Depending by which factor you multiply now.

Q. And you multiply by your factor.

A. And you choose factor two.

Q. I did not make the choice. The author did.

A. Who is the author?

Q. It says, "Richard Harwood". Now, just answer my questions. Don't ask me who the author is.

A. Richard Harwood —

THE COURT: Next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Moreover, large numbers of the camp population were released or transported elsewhere during the war, ..."

Now, I'd like to ask you whether anybody to your knowledge, ever left Auschwitz-Birkenau during the War for any other camp.

A. Yes, I can answer that question. For that I don't have exact figures, but observations I do have.

After the uprising of the Warsaw Ghetto, this means it must have been in May June — no, it was only in July, August, 1943, long after the uprising, they took, marched out from Auschwitz 1,500 prisoners to eliminate the bodies lined under the rubble in the Warsaw {1603|1604} Ghetto. And I was present when they took their prisoners from Auschwitz Concentration Camp to the Warsaw Ghetto. So this is an example that some prisoners actually, as you say, were taken out from Auschwitz. From those thousand five hundred, some of them are alive, two of them are in Toronto.

Q. So those are the only ones who ever left Auschwitz-Birkenau.

A. No. This is an example.

Q. And do you know how many exactly left Auschwitz-Birkenau for other camps?

A. From the registered prisoners —

Q. Well, ... from any prisoners, registered or unregistered.

A. Now, we already said that we speak about registered and unregistered prisoners. Now I would like to answer your question. From the unregistered prisoners none left Auschwitz-Birkenau because missing the registration meant that they went into the gas chambers.

As far as the registered prisoners is concerned, there was frequent movement, and this means that where the number of transports, one went to Warsaw and another transport went as far, I remember, to one of those satellite camps in the coalmines around Auschwitz, and then was a small transport of people who were specialist in printing and were taken to a printing enterprise somewhere near Berlin where they were falsifying British bank notes.

Now, these are approximately what I know about it, but because they didn't go through the ramp, and they didn't go by Section IIA, I couldn't have an exact information of the transfer of registered prisoners {1604|1605} from the complex of Auschwitz or Birkenau and know about it only from hearsay.

Q. So that you are saying nobody who was unregistered ever left Birkenau. Is that it?

A. Who arrived at Birkenau and didn't get a registration died.

Q. So nobody who went to Auschwitz-Birkenau would leave without a number.

A. Without being registered as a number.

Q. Mm-hmmm.

A. But it didn't necessarily mean that he was tattooed. There was a certain disorder as far as tattooing is concerned. You see, the Nazis are not that efficient as you think.

Q. Well, is it your evidence that no one would leave Birkenau who was unregistered?

A. No one would leave Birkenau alive if he was brought in as a prisoner and was not registered. He would never leave Birkenau alive. He wouldn't be alive for more than twenty-four hours.

Q. Mm-hmmrn. So that all these transports of unregistered people would have to be executed within twenty-four hours.

A. They usually were executed within six hours, but sometimes the gas chambers were filled and they had to wait their turn in the small forest behind the crematoria, or sometimes were milling around for twelve, fourteen, sixteen hours in between the crematoria. So you could see them and they had to wait for their turn to be gassed, and in order to keep them quiet, they sent them {1605|1606} the gypsy music. So the music was playing while they were waiting for being gassed, so that it created the impression that things are normal because there is the music.

Q. And so that is how they could gass [sic] two thousand a day in Krema II, and two thousand a day in Krema III, and one thousand in Krema IV, and one thousand in Krema V; right?

A. Not necessarily. That was only the plan, Mr. Counsel. The fact was that they didn't have such an experience in building those mass crematoria. This was something quite new in technology, and from those four crematoria a number of them suffered constantly some sort of breakdown. It was very rare that the four crematoria could work simultaneously. At least one broke down. If you could get full capacity in one year you could get more than 800,000, and it took two, three years. So there were breakdowns in the crematoria.

Q. All right. Remember you were telling us earlier that you came and unloaded the trains, and then you were marched away after unloading them and cleaning them?

THE COURT: We will hear about that at 2:15.

Members of the jury, you may retire.

— The jury retires. 1:00 p.m.

— The witness stands down.

— Luncheon adjournment.

(VOLUME VIII follows) {1606|1607}

VOLUME VIII

— Upon resuming.

THE COURT: The jury, please.

— The jury enters. 2:20 p.m.

— The witness returns to the stand.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. What I'd like to do is place before the witness the ground plan of Birkenau as presented in 1944, and the ground plan as presented in the book, "Eye Witness: Auschwitz".

THE COURT: They are exhibits. Are they lettered or numbered?

THE REGISTRAR: I think they are numbered, Your Honour.

THE COURT: What are the numbers?

THE REGISTRAR: Rough ground plan of Birkenau is 22, and that of Auschwitz to Birkenau is 23.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes, go ahead.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour. What I'd like to do is distribute these to the jury and I think there were some already available.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I believe Mr. Christie already provided me with one.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I now produce and show to you the ground plan of Auschwitz as you prepared it in 1944 which you have in your right hand, and I am holding the ground plan as depicted by the book, "Eye Witness: Auschwitz" on page 175 by Phillip Mueller. I am specifically asking you in respect to what is indicated as point nine on the Phillip Mueller ground plan, which I suggest to you is the sauna, or bath, as depicted there. {1607|1608}

Would you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it your evidence that that which you've described as the bath on your 1944 drawing is actually the number nine point on the Phillip Mueller diagram?

A. Well, this is hard to answer because of the following situation. If you look at the diagram on the lefthand side which, by the way, doesn't come from Phillip Mueller but Phillip Mueller reproduced it from some other documentation ...

Q. I realize that.

A. ... which is available from the Auschwitz Museum, I think, but my plan was prepared as I remembered it on the day of my escape, 7 June – 7 April, 1944, and the date of this plan is obviously, when this plan was prepared, is obviously later – I don't know how much later, and perhaps you will enlighten us from which date this plan comes – but considerable changes have been made in the complex of crematoria after my escape.

Q. Well, I put it to you that there was only one bath in the far end of the camp, and that is number nine on the diagram on page 175, and that is the bath that you drew on your diagram in 1944, and no other bath was in that area ever at all.

A. In which area?

Q. In the area where you drew it in 1944.

A. Well, I drew a bath in the area of Krematoria III and IV, and I can see that the bath is drawn in the area of Krematoria III and IV on the other diagram too, only in the other diagram the bath seems to {1608|1609} be in relation to the two crematoria, a little bit displaced.

Q. Well, are you saying that that's not the location of the bath you meant, that there was some other bath in that area?

A. What I am saying is that between the time I left and the time that this new graph was made, there were – they have twenty-seven new barracks in that area.

In other words, as I remember this place, there was, if I would have judged, there was no place for twenty-seven new barracks.

Q. Well, those —

A. And now I can see that they have made extensive building of twenty-seven new barracks, and it is possible that either they shifted the bath to a new place in the absence after my escape, or the position of my bath in my graph simply means a graphical indication that it is in the region of Krematorium III to IV, without claiming to be an engineering graph.

So my graph, which was drawn as a sort to say from memory by layman in architecture, gives general ideas of what was where, but doesn't claim to be an engineering piece. This, on the other hand, is an engineering piece and I find it possible that the bath in this new map has been rebuilt after they built those twenty-seven new barracks there.

Q. Those twenty-seven new barracks, I put it to you, were called Kanada and they were built on the 14th day of the 12th month, 1943, long before you escaped.

A. What is evidence of that? {1609|1610}

THE COURT: No, no. Just —

MR. CHRISTIE: I will put it to him in the form of the calendarium.

Q. The calendarium entry which is dated the 14th day of the 12th month, 1943 – we went over this once before, and it says in Birkenau they finished within the Section BII the construction of the storage buildings which has been called by the inmates Kanada. In the storage buildings there have been thirty-five barracks. In thirty of them the belongings of Jews were stored and selected. In two barracks inmates did live which did care for the store. In the rest of the buildings the administration was located.

A. Well, the German text which you are showing me doesn't say exactly what you are saying.

Q. Tell me what it says.

A. So it is a little bit slightly distorted translation.

Q. What does it say?

A. That on 12th or 14th December, 1943, I suppose, they finished in Section II.

Q. Section BII.

A. BII, which is the Section BII, actually – the building of a storing room for effects in which translated means property or —

Q. You mean storage room?

A. Lager, a whole camp for that storage.

Q. More than one building, then?

A. More than one building.

Q. Which was called by the name of Kanada. {1610|1611}

A. Actually twenty-seven buildings which was called by the inmates Kanada. In other words, this is a new Kanada, because the old Kanada was —

Q. We are just translating this. Right?

A. Yes. Effectenlager, in this storage building, there were thirty-five barracks. On this plan I see only twenty-seven.

Q. You counted them, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. Carry on with your translation. You are translating the document.

A. I can't be certain. I am checking the document.

Q. Fine. Just translate the document.

THE COURT: Yes. One at a time, please.

THE WITNESS: In Barrack 30, in number 30 was sorted the property of those Jews who were brought for annihilation into the camp, and stored there; into other barracks of this camp there lived prisoners who were employed in the Kommando effectenlager, this means the working Kommando of this storage camp, and in the rest of the buildings there was administration and other things.

Q. So that indicates that that area was built by the 14th of December 1943.

A. Well, if I may add to it, to my recollection —

Q. Wait a minute. Wait a minute. Is there any other translation there?

A. No. No. {1611|1612}

Q. All right. Well, that does seem to indicate that on the 12th of December, 1943, those barracks that you described as not being there when you escaped on the 7th of April, 1944, were built. Right?

A. So it would appear, but I cannot confirm it, because when I came to the —

Q. Can I take this away now?

A. Yes.

Q. Thanks.

A. I cannot confirm it because I had a relatively free access to the two crematoria, to the place between the two crematoria, but that something was being-built behind the crematoria I took notice, but I had no idea what it was. My information was not good enough to say what it was, and it was behind — it wasn't visible from where I had access to see.

Q. It wasn't visible to where you had access? In fact, it was right across the street from what you describe as Krematorium —

A. No, not at all, because I could come to the crematorium and I could see that they are hammering something behind the crematorium, but there was a wall put up, a wooden wall like when you have a building.

Q. You are saying that the crematorium that you entered here.

A. Yes.

Q. And what looks like an alleyway; and you couldn't see whether they were built or not?

A. No, because when you build something, as you can see even in Toronto, when you build something you make around a — what is the English word — you surround it with — what is the word? Who would help me to translate the word? You surround {1612|1613} it with a fence. Fence is the word. And then —

Q. Barbed wire fence?

A. Not barbed wire fence; normal fence like when you are building something. And so I could see that they are hammering something behind the barbed wire fence that I didn't pay particular notion to it.

Q. It was a fence that blocked your view?

A. It blocked my view, yes, and I didn't know what was being built there.

Q. Now, the reason I asked you this question in the first place is that in your plan where the bathhouse is located, there is no road to it, and on the plan that there is, you described it as from the Museum, there is a road into it, and I put it to you that the roads were there when you escaped in 1944.

A. Those roads into —

Q. — the bathrooms.

A. Into the crematoria.

Q. The bathhouse located in Item 9 in the schematic diagram that I gave you.

A. In the schematic diagram I see a road that goes between two crematoria, and then goes left to the bathhouse. And —

Q. And in your diagram there is no road to the bath at all.

A. I have quite clearly shown that here is a road, but I did not indicate the opening and I would say that that is how a layman would paint. {1613|1614}

Q. Well, I suggest to you that your diagram in 1944 doesn't indicate any access to the bath at all because you didn't know where the bath was, and the bath itself was inaccessible to anybody. Now, which is it?

A. It simply means that my objective was to indicate to potential Allied bombers what is where, and I have forgotten to put into this plan, plan made by amateur, the particular entrance to this particular place; and if you will take notice and look at this graph you will see that I haven't shown what is an entrance to BIIA, either. Just have a look at it and you will see that I haven't shown the entrance to BII B and I didn't show what is the entrance to Camp B.

Q. I am not interested —

A. I am just telling you what is on the graph.

Q. Well, I am not asking you to describe what is on the graph —

A. I haven't, on this graph, indicated the doors, but only the position where is where.

Q. Thank you for your comment, but my suggestion to you that when the bath was built it was built of brick, it was built where number nine was indicated, it was never moved and, in fact, the roads that are indicated on the plan, which is in detail on No. 175, has the roads indicated very clearly on it because those were the roads to the bath —

A. No. This were roads were built after my escape, much has been built; and what new roads have been built, this is a different question.

Q. I suggest to you they are not new {1614|1615} roads built after you escaped. They had to be there when you escaped because they were roads to the bath which you indicated was there at the time, sir.

A. But as far as I can see, comparing your graph with my graph, then the bath on my graph and the bath on this graph is in a distance, when I look at the measures, not more than twenty yards difference.

Q. That's right. That's fine.

A. And I agree with you that painting from memory and without having a yardstick, as I can imagine that I made an error of twenty yards.

Q. I am not criticizing you for an error of twenty yards or twenty meters, whatever. I am suggesting that the roads were there as they are depicted in the diagram No. 175, and that this is accurate.

A. That's right. It is accurate 1944 after my escape, whereas this diagram is approximation of a layman at the time of my escape.

Q. Well, I suggest to you you didn't draw any roads in there because you didn't give any thought to the possibility that the people going by those crematorium were going to the bath, as indicated on the roads on the map.

A. Well, I knew exactly who was going to the bath, because I was in that bath on a number of occasions, and actually, that is the reason why I was so frequently sort of skipping my duties from going from IIA to IID and going there, because I used that bath.

Q. Oh?

A. And in that bath — I used that bath. I can give you a description what was inside — perhaps {1615|1616} not exactly, but I can tell you what was inside.

Q. Could I suggest to you that inside there was a fumigation chamber for clothes? Would you agree to that?

A; A fumigation chamber for clothes was usually in every bath in Auschwitz.

Q. Yeah. And in that —

A. I haven't seen that fumigation chamber.

Q. Well, why do you say there was one in every bathhouse?

A. But I have seen one in other baths, that is in Auschwitz I and Auschwitz IB, and I believe you this time. That is logical.

Q. Well, you were there, and I say it was there, and you say you don't know it was there?

A. Yes, that is perfectly true, it was there.

Q. Is it a fact that you knew that in the fumigation chambers the doors were sealed, and Zyklon-B was used to fumigate the clothes and kill the vermin?

A. Zyklon-B was not only used for killing people, but was also used for disinfecting of clothes. In fact, history shows that Zyklon-B was used before for gassing people. Zyklon-B was standard equipment in all concentration camp and army units for fumigating clothes, and in 1941 —

Q. Please don't give us a history of Zyklon-B unless I ask you.

A. Please don't interrupt me, because {1616|1617} I am trying to make a point. You are trying to distort a point before I finish what I have to say.

In 1941 nine hundred prisoners of war came to the concentration camp of Auschwitz.

Q. When?

A. In 1941.

Q. You weren't there in 1941.

A. Would you please let me finish?

Q. Not unless it is something from personal knowledge. I don't want to know what you heard from other people in 1941 in Auschwitz. Thank you.

THE COURT: Get on to the next question.

THE WITNESS: Very good.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You agree with me that this was the front page that you say was attributed to your report?

A. Yes.

Q. I'd like to read it. Does it say that the figures concerning the size of Jewish convoys and the numbers of men and women admitted to the two camps cannot be taken as mathematically exact and, in fact, are declared by the author as being no more than reliable approximations?

A. Yes, it does say so.

Q. All right.

A. It does say so, so I do not know who wrote it.

Q. Well, the last time I asked you about it you said the President had something to do with it.

A. According to the history of {1617|1618} Reitlinger it was President Roosevelt who issued for circulation. This is from hearsay.

Q. Do you accept that statement as being correct?

A. This statement is correct in a way that I always said there is a reliable approximation in my figures, and he said that it is not mathematically exact, but reliable approximation. Mathematically exact means that I cannot say —

THE COURT: No. Sorry.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Have you ever read Mr. Christopherson's book?

A. Never heard of it. Who is Mr. Christopherson?

THE COURT: No. Next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: That's the author to whom is attributed the remarks made on page 18 when you were asked about it. You said that was more lies.

THE COURT: What is the next question, Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: I was just directing the witness —

THE COURT: No. I know what you were doing. I want to hear your next question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I am just wondering, in view of the fact that you have never read Mr. Christopherson's work, would you agree that the words that are attributed to him there may have been said —

THE COURT: Don't answer the question. Ask him a question. Rephrase it so you don't quote somebody about whom the witness has said he knows nothing. {1618|1619}

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Would you agree that you cannot say that anything attributed to him is necessarily accurately attributed?

THE COURT: Isn't that the same question?

MR. CHRISTIE: I thought I was trying to rephrase it.

THE COURT: You rephrased it the same way. I thought you could rephrase it so it would not appear that you were phrasing it the same way. If you cannot, ask another question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: The remarks on page 18, the third paragraph from the top on the left-hand side to which you were asked to comment.

A. Page 18?

Q. Page 18.

A. Page 18 of what?

Q. Of Exhibit 1.

A. Page 18, yes.

Q. Starting with the second paragraph from the top on the lefthand side

...

A. Yes. That's the same paragraph we discussed in the morning. I can see.

Q. Yes. Now, you don't know anything about Mr. Christopherson.

We've established that.

A. No.

Q. Have we established that?

A. Not to my knowledge. I don't know anything about Mr. Christopherson.

Q. So you can't comment on the truth {1619|1619(a)} or falsity of that paragraph?

A. Of course I can comment, because I don't need Mr. Christopherson to see that what was written there was a distortion of truth.

Q. Now, you say that was a distortion of truth, and I want to quote from what he writes in his book. He says:

"I was in Auschwitz from January 1944 until December 1944."

You don't say this is a distortion of the truth, do you?

THE COURT: Is this Mr. Christopherson being in Auschwitz?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: The witness already indicated he does not know anything about Christopherson.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, but he did say this was a distortion of truth.

THE COURT: No, he did not. He said that what he read, what he is looking at on page 18 is a distortion.

Is that right or not right?

THE WITNESS: That's right.

THE COURT: All right. Now, phrase yourself properly and I won't have to interfere, Mr. Christie.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I will try.

Q. What I am asking you to say is whether anything in the paragraph that is highlighted you consider to be false. {1619(a)|1620}

A. Yes. I explained it to you in the morning.

MR. CHRISTIE: Now, Your Honour, for the record, the paragraph that's highlighted is those words attributed to Mr. Christopherson. So I wanted to ask him something about that.

THE COURT: As long as you ask him what he is looking at.

THE WITNESS: There is nothing mentioned about Mr. Christopherson.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, then, we are not looking at the right paragraph. I am trying to direct your attention to the second paragraph from the top.

A. This paragraph?

Q. You are on the wrong page, sir. I said 18.

A. You said 17.

Q. 18. Right here.

A. So we went through this too. Christopherson's account was — I think this was read to me by the Crown Attorney.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. And this is the second paragraph printed in heavy letters.

Q. Right.

A. And here I see the name Christopherson.

Q. Yes. And do you say that the statement contained therein is false?

A. They are absurd.

Q. Well, which statement is absurd? Which one? {1620|1620(a)}

A. The absurdity of the sentences come out when you finish the sentence.

Q. "I was in Auschwitz from January 1944 until December 1944."

Period. End of sentence.

A. No, not period. Here is a comma.

Q. What?

A. Yes.

Q. Period or comma?

A. Yes, this is period.

Q. Period, all right. I hope we are dealing with the same printed material. Now, that's a sentence. What is absurd about it?

A. Oh, this sentence, in itself, nothing.

Q. All right. So nothing is false —

A. If it is true that he was there, which I don't know.

Q. All right:

"After the War I heard about the mass murders which were supposedly perpetrated by the S.S. against the Jewish prisoners, and I was perfectly astonished."

Now, is that absurd?

A. Absolutely absurd.

Q. Why?

A. Because anybody who was in Auschwitz for one year has seen the mass murders, in one way or another, and I suggest to you that Mr. Christopherson was not there as a prisoner, but perhaps as an S.S. man. Is {1620(a)}{1621} it possible? Is it possible?

Q. Why do you need to ask me that question if you don't know Mr. Christopherson? How do you know if he is lying or mistaken?

A. Because this is such a lie that only a Nazi can produce it, to cover up his crimes.

prepared to call a the next question?

Q. Somebody you don't know, you are prepared to call a Nazi.

THE COURT: Just a moment. What's the next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. "Despite all the evidence of witnesses, all the newspaper reports and radio broadcasts I still do not believe today in these horrible deeds."

Now, you would say, I suppose, that that's absurd, too, would you?

A. Absolutely absurd. It's untrue.

Q. It may be that this person holds those beliefs honestly, though, don't you think?

A. No way. If he was in Auschwitz, he cannot hold such beliefs unless he was in the S.S., and he is an accomplished murderer and it is a characteristic thing of murderers that they deny generally their crimes, and this is what I assume.

Q. So any person you say who denies such knowledge of horrible deeds must be one of their accomplices; is that your evidence?

A. What I say is that Mr. Christopherson, if he was, according to this paragraph, for one year in Auschwitz and he denies the murders, then I assume he was {1621}{1622} there in a capacity of S.S. man and is a murderer who tries to cover up the traces of his crime.

Q. Oh, so every S.S. man who is there is a murderer.

A. Absolutely so, or an accomplice to murder.

Q. And he must know about the murder, then.

A. Absolutely so. There is no way out. From the outlay of Auschwitz and the way how Auschwitz was run, there is not one S.S. man who was there who didn't know about the murder, because otherwise they would send them to the front. They didn't keep them there for drinking tea.

Q. All right. So everyone who dares to suggest that there was no murder in their knowledge you would charge with murder as well?

A. If he was a year in Auschwitz and wore an S.S. uniform and says there wasn't a murder, I would claim that this is a murderer who denies his crime.

Q. So it would be dangerous to come forward as an S.S. man, because you would be one of those who would accuse him of murder immediately, wouldn't you?

A. Any S.S. man who did service in Auschwitz-Birkenau for a time like one year is a qualified murderer, and if such one is found on the territory of for instance, United States of America without saying that he was there for one year in an S.S. uniform will be automatically deported from the country. I can assure you of that. I have heard it from the Office of Special Investigations who is looking for them. {1622}{1623}

Q. And you would make sure that that happened, wouldn't you?

A. I would always help the justice against the criminal. I happen to be on the same side of the law, and not on the side of criminal, and you shouldn't blame me for that.

Q. Well, you presumed that anyone who had seen Auschwitz for a year and had no knowledge of such murders must be, therefore, a criminal. Is that what you say?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is not what he said. He said three times, he said an S.S. man, Your Honour.

MR. CHRISTIE: Oh, excuse me.

Q. Any S.S. man who was in Auschwitz for a year would be, in your opinion, a murderer or an accessory to murder?

THE COURT: No. You missed one point. In uniform.

MR. CHRISTIE: In uniform.

THE WITNESS: That is quite right with one or two honourable exceptions which are well known.

Q. And he is quoted as saying:

"I have said this many times and in many places, but to no purpose. One is never believed."

A. That is right, but a murderer says in many places that he didn't do it and still nobody believes it if it is generally known that he has done it.

Q. And you, on the other hand, are saying that whoever has done this is a murderer, and {1623}{1624} suppose you are also saying he is a liar – the man who is attributed with these remarks would be first an accessory to murder, and then a liar. Is that right?

THE COURT: Just a moment, gentlemen. Mr. Christie, if you are going to be long on this point, I am going to excuse the jury so that an exchange can occur in their absence.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

Q. He is further on quoted as saying that:

"During the whole of my time at Auschwitz, I never observed the slightest evidence of mass gassings. Moreover, the odour of burning flesh that is often said to have hung over the camp is a downright falsehood."

A. Which line is that?

Q. I am moving right along the paragraph to —

A. Yes. "During the whole of my time in Auschwitz ..."

Q. Yes.

A. "... I never observed ..." Yes.

Q. Christopherson is quoted further in that paragraph, and you don't deny that he may have said those things, do you?

A. I have got no evidence that he said it or not, because you didn't tell me who is Christopherson, in what capacity was Christopherson, and where does he live and I can interview him if he was there at all. It {1624}{1625} might be a complete invention. There may be no Christopherson at all, but an anonymous pen pusher who invented the name Christopherson. You give me the information who was Christopherson and in what capacity he was there, and I will be able to deal with this problem.

Q. I am sure you would. You and many others would make sure he is charged with murder if he is an S.S., if he was in uniform and if he was there for a year. Correct?

THE COURT: Just a moment. Go to another question.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, as far as anything in those paragraphs which were read to you, I suggest to you that although you disagree with what a person is alleged to have said, you did not say that he did not say those things

A. I do not know if they said it, because I can only read that somebody printed it, but there is no evidence that somebody said it. It seems to me like an anonymous statement, because you are trying, or denying any knowledge of the existence of a real person, Christopherson.

Q. I am not here to deny anything. I asked you if you had any knowledge that such a person did not exist, or any knowledge that they did not say that.

THE COURT: Gentlemen, it's becoming argumentative rather than the other way around.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I will withdraw the question.

Q. Do you know about the lawyer, Dr. Manfred Roeder, referred to in the top paragraph of that {1625}{1626} page that you were asked to read?

THE COURT: This is page 18?

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

THE WITNESS: Page 18.

Q. It's a sentence that begins on the very last part of page 17. It says: "In May 1973, not long after the appearance of this account, the veteran Jewish 'Nazi-hunter' Simon Wiesenthal wrote to the Frankfurt Chamber of Lawyers, demanding that the publisher and author of the Forward, Dr. Roeder, a member of the Chamber, should be brought before [before] its disciplinary commission."

Do you say that is false?

A. That he was brought – I agree that such a character might have been brought before the disciplinary committee in free West Germany for good reasons. This is quite possible.

Q. So that could very well be true?

A. I don't know about it, but it might be true.

Q. You did say that this also was part of the general proceedings that you said was a cynical lie. Do you agree?

A. I said that the particular piece which Crown Prosecutor showed to me, Crown Attorney said to me was, a cynical lie; but I didn't read this whole thing. The particular thing was an outright lie.

Q. I am suggesting to you that you {1626|1627} didn't even read the part that I am reading now.

A. No. I can convince you that I did. I assure you that I did.

Q. The next sentence:

"Sure enough, proceedings began in July, but not without harsh criticism even from the Press, who asked, 'Is Simon Wiesenthal the new Gauleiter of Germany?' (Deutsche Wochenzeitung, July 27th, 1973)."

Now, is that a false statement?

A. I didn't read Deutsche Wochenzeitung. I don't know Dr. Roeder. I never had the honour of meeting him. I don't know what he is doing. I understand that he was before a disciplinary commission, and I would tell you perhaps it's true, perhaps it's not. I don't know. I have no information about this event.

Q. Thank you.

A. — which took place in 1973.

Q. Yes.

A. At that time I was —

THE COURT: All right, Doctor.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: And you were in Maidanek Camp?

A. Maidanek Camp, yes.

Q. And you volunteered to go to Auschwitz from Maidanek?

A. In a way you can call it – yes, I did volunteer, because Maidanek I found a place of death of such a desolation that I couldn't imagine that there exists anything worse. And when they said that {1627|1628} four hundred strong men for a labour in the fields, I naturally volunteered because at that time I believe the Nazi tricks, and I saw that they were going to put me to agricultural work, so I could escape; but instead I found myself in Auschwitz. I made an error.

Q. Well, the simple answer is that you were in Maidanek; you volunteered to go to Auschwitz and you were taken to Auschwitz I where you were for four months, and then you went to Birkenau, and that you've told us about. Right?

A. So, the truth is that I came to Auschwitz on 30 June, 1942, and stayed in Auschwitz I until 15th January, six and a half months, I would say, and for the rest of the time in Birkenau. That's true.

Q. All right. So did you ever see a gas chamber in Maidanek?

A. In Maidanek I saw a crematorium, and I had a good look at that crematorium because there were rumours in Maidanek that there is a gas chamber, and my grandfather, who was over seventy at that time, was taken to that building. So I studied that building.

Q. Excuse me. I just asked you if you saw a gas chamber.

A. You interrupted me again.

Q. I didn't ask you what the rumours were. I didn't ask you if you had a grandfather who went there. I just asked you if you saw a gas chamber in Maidanek.

A. No. I saw only a building which was called crematorium to which my grandfather was taken, and that was the last time I saw 'him. If there was a {1628|1629} gas chamber, I don't know.

THE COURT: All right. All right.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: So, is it your evidence that you never saw a gas chamber?

A. In Maidanek?

Q. Anywhere.

A. Yes, I saw the gas chamber from inside in Auschwitz I.

Q. What made it look like a gas chamber?

A. The interesting thing is that it was just a garage converted into a gas chamber.

Q. Oh.

A. There was not written on the door that it is a gas chamber.

Q. Well, what made it a gas chamber?

A. Simply that there were no windows, and there were doors which could be hermetically closed.

Q. What's hermetically closed mean?

A. This means if you close them, there is not much air circulation.

Q. They are the double-door garage-type?

A. That's right.

Q. And they swing from the centre to the side.

A. Yes. And they were done with quite reasonably good job and precision for your information.

Q. This was the gas chamber, then?

A. Yes. In Auschwitz I, a relatively small gas chamber.

Q. So that's the gas chamber that you {1629|1630} saw.

A. That's right.

Q. You saw no other?

A. From inside.

Q. From inside or outside.

A. From outside I had been describing here a gas chamber that was visible from Krematorium I in front of my eyes, a distance of a few yards, which was coming out from the upper part of it, came out from the ground, and you were quarreling with me if it was four feet or six feet high.

Q. Well, wait, now. Yesterday you told us it was six and a half to seven feet. Is it shrinking now?

A. It is quite possible that along the gas chamber they have made a walk, and that the S.S. man perhaps had to reach high. I think that your idea that it is shrinking is simply a misplaced humour which hasn't got place here.

Q. Well, tell me, sir, how did you know it was a gas chamber?

A. Well, in the first line I would like to ask you, Mr. Counsel —

THE COURT: No. Don't ask counsel anything.

THE WITNESS: I knew that it is a gas I chamber because I saw people going into the crematoria. I saw that they are not coming out. I heard that they are being gassed there, and I have seen Zyklon gas being thrown into, on top of the gas chamber.

Q. Mm-hmmm. {1630|1631}

A. And therefore I concluded that it is not a kitchen or a bakery, but a gas chamber.

Q. Yes. Were buildings ever fumigated with Zyklon-B?

A. Which buildings?

Q. Any buildings.

A. In Auschwitz?

Q. Yeah.

A. Occasionally, when there were too many lice, they were fumigated by Zyklon-B, and that is why Zyklon-B was originally brought in.

Q. Is this the gas chamber you went inside of?

MR. CHRISTIE: I am showing the witness the 155th page of "K.L. Auschwitz". It's a book.

Q. Is that what you say was the gas chamber in Auschwitz?

A. I do not know at what time of the year, on which year this picture was taken. In 1942 October, when I was there, I do not remember seeing the lamps on top of the roof; otherwise it looks like a garage.

Q. Is that the room?

A. It can be, but from what I see to this picture, it could be any garage.

Q. All right. So there was nothing unique about this place that you called the gas chamber that would help you to identify it; is that right?

A. Well, there was not written, "Gas Chamber", but there is nothing unique in any place where, people are gassed. All we have to do is to close windows, {1631|1632} the ventilation, and throwing gas.

Q. I put it to you that you have told us that there was 1,765,000 corpses to be dealt with in these various crematoria you told us about.

A. That's right.

Q. I put it to you that if there were forty-six stoves, as you described in the War Refugee Board Report, and if there was one and a half hours required for each corpse, that working twenty-four hours a day you would require 4.38 years to cremate all those corpses. What do you say about that?

A. Would you please repeat me slowly all the data which you are having here?

Q. Well, I said if you have forty-six stoves or ovens as you described, nine times three ... (sic)

A. Yes.

Q. And 1,765,000 corpses ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... one and a half hours each ...

A. Yes.

Q. ... you would require, at twenty-four hours a day operation, 4.38 years to cremate all those bodies.

A. Well, there is already a little swindle introduced into that statement, because that statement was introduced by Dr. Staßgliche, and it is in the hands of the Crown Attorney, and it is a distortion of the statement which I made in this report in which this Doctor statement, who was a neo-Nazi and was convicted in West Germany, has taken the liberty to distort mildly the contents of this report, because in {1632|1633} this report. I never said that in one and a half hours a body was cremated, but I said that three bodies were cremated simultaneously in each oven, and that in process took approximately one hour. Consequently —

Q. One hour and a half you said.

A. Let's go into the details. I may have said one or one and a half hours, but it was definitely three bodies. Furthermore, I haven't said how many openings were there exactly. There might have been much more ovens there than I wrote in my report.

As I myself as told you, report, far the inside of the crematoria, was a rather provisory thing based on information which perhaps was not that exact and detailed.

Q. May I interrupt you with one other question?

A. Yes.

Q. What kind of fuel do you say they cremated these bodies with?

A. To my information coal was used in crematoria, and wood when it was outside the crematoria.

Q. I see.

A. But I haven't been invited to the stove, so this is hearsay.

Q. No. It is just these figures — so I am asking you. So it's coal or wood?

A. That's hearsay, yes.

Q. Well, of course. So is the matter of whether they were gassed or not, isn't it?

THE COURT: Let's not have an -answer to that. What's the next question?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Did you see massive {1633|1634} trains of coal coming into the camp, too?

A. No.

Q. Did you see loads of wood coming into the camp?

A. I have seen loads of coal being transported into the crematoria.

Q. Well, did they come on the railroad, or did they come on trucks?

A. No. They came on trucks and they came on individual trucks. This means when a transport came, that the transport would require forty or fifty trucks which were attracts my attention.

Q. I thought there were only ten trucks. Do you remember when you were unloading the people at the ramp? You said ten had to go and come back.

A. Yes. So by going and back, so I have seen a hundred trucks by the time they made the journey from the crematorium to the ramp. So there was heavy traffic. But apart from the heavy traffic which was connected with mass annihilation of the arrivals, there was also other type of traffic. There were travelling trucks which were bringing coal to the crematoriums. There were travelling trucks which were bringing bread to the camp. There were travelling trucks which were bringing bread nearby, and tea, and in other words, there was many thousands of prisoners and many thousands of S.S., and there was a certain traffic which I could control so exactly.

Q. Mm-hmmm. I see. Sure.

A. I didn't have every record of every single truck which went by. {1634|1635}

Q. Since you did make some comments about Dr. Staßgliche, you called him a neo-Nazi, I'd just like to ask you if you are prepared to make that judgment about that particular person, were you aware that he was once a judge and when he published his book he lost everything in terms of his judgeship and he also lost his right to be the holder of the University degree. Are you aware of that?

THE COURT: Before you answer that question, witness, please indicate in the shortest answer possible whether you were aware of any of these things.

THE WITNESS: I was aware of Dr. Staglich, [Stäglich] his connections —

THE COURT: Just a moment. Were you aware of the things put to you by counsel?

THE WITNESS: No, I was only aware that he was convicted by a West German Court for swindle and for publishing lies in order to incite national hatred, and this is against the West German law, and it was the account in the German newspaper Die Welte [Welt], which is a West German newspaper, and I have read an account that he was convicted and his book was forbidden as obscene, and forbidding the education of the German population and considered dangerous to the German population because of the demagogue which he was using.

THE COURT: All right.

THE WITNESS: This was an article in Die Welte [sic].

THE COURT: All right. What is your next question?

MR. CHRISTIE: No further questions. {1635|1636}

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, do you wish to re-examine now?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Just a couple of things, Doctor.

A. Yes, please.

Q. You told Mr. Christie several times in discussing your book, "I Cannot Forgive" that you used poetic licence in writing that book. Have you used poetic licence in your testimony?

A. No. This is not a book. This is under oath.

Q. And Mr. Christie asked you, I believe, put to you several places where you did not appear to testify. He asked you if you appeared at Nuremberg. He asked you if you testified at the Eichmann trial.

A. Mm-hmmm.

Q. Have you ever testified about these matters before at other trials?

A. I have not been in Nuremberg and I have not been present at Eichmann's trial, but I have been present several times at the so-called Auschwitz trial in 1944 [1964] in Frankfurt where the criminals and murderers from Auschwitz were arrested by the West German authorities and put to trial. {1636|1637}

THE COURT: Did you testify there, Doctor?

THE WITNESS: I did. Furthermore, I testified at the trial of a certain Dr. Krumei and Hunsche [Hünsche], also in Frankfurt. Krumei was accused of having murdered the children after they were deported —

MR. CHRISTIE: Are we going to get into this?

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: My question was whether you testified, and you have answered that.

A. This was after —

Q. It's all right. It's all right. Other than the trials of the Auschwitz trials and in f: Frankfurt and the trials of the two doctors, again in West Germany, are there any other trials or proceedings dealing with these matters where you have testified in public before?

A. Yes. I testified furthermore in Vienna when they sent me to the High Court of Justice in British Columbia. There is a picture of a hundred people asking me to identify if I know anyone.

THE COURT: No. Doctor, please. Just answer the question.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Did you testify in Vienna?

A. I testified against S.S. Unterscharführer [Unterscharführer] and I testified in their trial for crimes.

Q. All right. Anybody else?

A. No. To my knowledge, no.

Q. Can you tell us, Doctor, briefly how you arrived at the number of 1.765 million? {1637|1638}

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, we went through this in-chief; I dealt with it in cross. It did not come first in cross.

MR. GRIFFITHS: The figure did not, to my recollection, Your Honour – it was not mentioned in-chief. It is obvious from – could the jury be excused, Your Honour, please?

MR. CHRISTIE: I will withdraw my objection.

THE COURT: Yes.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: Dr. Vrba, could you tell us briefly how you arrived at your figure? You told us how you identified nationalities, and I wonder if you can tell us how you arrived at your account. Can you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. Please.

A. The first time when I was on the ramp, even before I went to the ramp, I had some idea about the numbers who are going to come, because the number of the people from the Kanada who were supposed to go to work, work on the ramp, depended on the number of arrivals which are coming.

Consequently we were woken up in the night. It was mainly night work. Mainly the transport came in the night – not always. And an S.S. man came and said to the Kapo who was a German criminal, a green triangle, that we should go at once on the ramp, and told him the number of how many prisoners are coming in the cattle trucks – in other words, how many deportees were coming. And on that ground the Kapo decided a fifty, {1638|1639} hundred, two hundred people should go to work on the ramp.

So I had a rough idea, and before I came to the ramp. Furthermore, the people – when the wagons came, in a system which I explained here before, on opening of the wagons I could judge if this was a transport where they have put a hundred in per wagon or one of the better transport where they have put only sixty in in the wagon.

Furthermore, I could see, a number of wagons that are counted, because I had to clean each one of them, going through the wagons so I could see exactly how many wagons arrive. So from this I could know the date of arrival, the number of people who arrived, and the number of people who were chosen to be marched into the camp – in other words, roughly the percentage of people who were taken for slave labour. And I could make immediately my mind the picture how many are from that particular transport and from what nationality murdered.

Now, this information at the start represented only one figure, and the next day two figures, and the next day again two figures or three figures, and I trained myself to remember those figures and developed a special mnemonical method for remembering each transport.

For instance, on the statistics, those transports are only numbers, but in reality they were not just numbers. The transports arrived either in the cold or in the hot. The transports either had a lot of dead or few dead. The transports came in a rich equipment, as for food, or poor equipment. During unloading of the transport it was raining or it was not raining. In other {1639|1640} words, I had a lot of coinciding circumstances, so that each transport for me was not a number but an event, a colourful event. And as the days went by I trained myself constantly and repeated in my mind constantly the statistics, and at the start, when I started, it was one page and then it was two pages that I had to remember, and then it was three pages I had to remember, and finally it was twenty pages I had to remember, and this was not at all very difficult with that mnemonical help to which I have myself trained. It is a general knowledge that people who are arrested write a poem of ten thousand stanzas over years, and are not allowed to write, and then they came out and faultlessly writes them down in two days. So this is a typical example – Solzhenitsyn, without comparing myself to him; and this is not verses to memorize but people, transports, so it was not such a difficult task for me to memorize it. I was asked this question by the Chief Judge Hoffmann in Frankfurt, and I gave him, if you will allow me, another aspect of illustrating how human memory works.

Q. Well, I am going to stop.

A. Yes. There is an aspect to human memory which I can in addition to this explain, if necessary.

Q. Excuse me just a minute now. You have with you a report, the Vrba-Wetzler report.

A. Yes. I have here a copy which I received from the Office of Investigations, Criminal Division, Washington.

Q. There is something here I can put to you if I can find it about Himmler. {1640|1641}

A. Yes.

Q. There is a reference to Himmler in here.

A. I will try to find it.

Q. We won't think out loud, but we will both look for it here.

A. Here is something on the 17th which is not about Himmler, but about something different. I can't find the reference to Himmler just now, but you might, perhaps, be able to.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths, are there any other points you want to discuss with the witness? I intend to adjourn in about ten minutes. You might agree to find the Himmler reference, if you wish to, at that time during recess.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I thank you, Your Honour. In fact, it is the last point that I wish to review.

THE COURT: The Himmler matter?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: In that case, we will adjourn now.

— The jury retires. 3:20 p.m.

— Short adjournment.

— Upon resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just before the jury is brought in, Your Honour, I will have no questions of Dr. Vrba. It was a report written by somebody else that I was looking for. That is why I couldn't find it, and {1641|1642} I have another witness here. I am shifting gears. It is not a survivor but a professor who I intended to qualify as an expert in the field on the impact of material of social and racial tolerance in the community.

It is ten to four. He is here. He will also obviously be available for tomorrow. I understand that you have a bail review at four fifteen.

THE COURT: Yes, there is another matter that I promised counsel I would hear their bail application at four thirty or four fifteen.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My question is whether, in the absence of the jury, I should commence with Dr. Kaufmann, the psychologist, today and try to get him qualified, or whether we should start fresh with that in the morning. I am in Your Honour's hands.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, do you have a preference?

MR. CHRISTIE: No, sir, I don't really. Whatever is convenient to Your Honour, really.

THE COURT: Then I think that there might be a change of court staff, and I will be in at three-fifty or ten to four. If you have no further questions we will call in the jury. You can say that before the jury and we will then adjourn this case until tomorrow morning.

— The Court addresses members of the public in attendance in the courtroom concerning rules of order in the court.

THE COURT: Bring in the jury.

THE COURT: Mr. Griffiths?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Your Honour. I found the reference, Your Honour, that I was going to ask about. It was in a section of a report not attributed to Messers. Vrba and Wetzler. Accordingly, I will not ask the question. I have no further questions for Dr. Vrba.

THE COURT: Thank you, Doctor. You can step down.

— The witness retires.

THE COURT: Members of the jury, in your absence I have been informed that Crown counsel has another witness ready. It is now about five minutes to four o'clock by my watch. I have a commitment on an undertaking I made in an entirely other matter which

I have agreed to hear between four fifteen and four thirty today because it couldn't be worked in at any other time due to obvious circumstances.

I have spoken to both counsel with respect to whether or not that witness should be started today or tomorrow morning. Both counsel have left it in my hands. I have decided tomorrow morning is much more preferable [sic] than today. You can leave, then, till tomorrow {1643|1644} morning at five minutes to ten. Thank you.

— The jury retires. 3:55 p.m.

— Discussion concerning publication of exhibits.

THE COURT: Yes, it may be released.

— Whereupon the hearing is adjourned to January 25, 1985.

JANUARY 25, 1985

— Upon the hearing resuming.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, different judges have different methods, and when it comes to qualifying expert witnesses, my usual practice is to initially seek to have the witness qualified in the absence of the jury, because obviously if he is not qualified, he has nothing to say to the jury, and that's what I would propose to do now before the jury is called in.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, what is your view?

MR. CHRISTIE: Well, I think my friend {1644|1644(a)} is right.

THE COURT: The case law that I've read says the opposite, but I am prepared to go along with that. How long do you propose I should let the jury go for?

MR. GRIFFITHS: I don't believe that I will be very long, Your Honour, in qualifying Dr. Kaufmann.

THE COURT: We will see how it goes. Call him.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Dr. Kaufmann.

HARRY KAUFMANN, sworn on voir dire

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF BY MR. GRIFFITHS:

Q. Sir, I understand that you attended as an undergraduate at the University of Pennsylvania where you received a Bachelor and a Master's Degree in Psychology.

A. The undergraduate degree was a Bachelor's. The other was an undergraduate degree.

Q. And in 1962 you received a doctorate again in the field of psychology?

A. In the field of social psychology {1644(a)|1645} and personality, to be precise.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, could you be precise? Your doctorate was in ...

THE WITNESS: Social psychology and personality, Your Honour.

Q. MR. GRIFFITHS: And Dr. Kaufmann, I understand that you then went, in 1963, to Swarthmore College?

A. That is correct. Yes, sir.

Q. And while you were working at Swarthmore you were also interning as a psychologist at the Veterans' Administration Hospital near Wilmington, Delaware?

A. For two years, yes, sir. From 1961 to 1963.

Q. And I understand that you then came to the University of Toronto.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did you hold at the University of Toronto?

A. I was assistant professor from 1963 to 1965, associate professor from 1965 to 1967.

Q. And then in 1967 where did you then go?

A. In 1967 I went to Hunter College of the University of New York.

Q. And that is where you are now?

A. That is where I am now, yes, sir.

Q. And I understand you are a full professor in psychology at Hunter College? {1645|1646}

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Have you ever, heard, Dr. Kaufmann, of the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada?

A. Yes, I have, sir.

Q. And the Chairman of that, I believe, was Dean Maxwell Cohen of the McGill Law School?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. Did you ever do any work in Canada for that committee?

A. I did, sir.

Q. What work?

A. I was asked to contribute a psychological appendix to that report, and I did.

Q. And you did so.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was ultimately published along with the report as an appendix to the report?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the topic of the psychological study that you did for the Cohen Commission, if I can call it that?

A. The topic was, first of all the persuasiveness, shall we say, of hate propaganda, that it is not something to be lightly ignored or dismissed, and also the deleterious, harmful effects thereof upon the objects of such propaganda, and also upon the society as a whole.

Q. Did you have occasion to read the literature in that field in preparing that report?

A. Of course I did. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you kept current or tried {1646|1647} to keep current with the literature since you prepared your report?

A. Yes, I have, sir.

Q. Do you have any publications or any particular fields of interest, sort of doing it chronologically from the sixties to the early seventies, up to the present time?

A. Well, I can give you the very earliest papers I did, because I was still a graduate student at the time. I did those together with Professor Seymore Fishbach who is now in the University of California and Los Angeles. In 1965 I did the appendix we have already spoken of. In 1970 a book of mine was published called, "Aggression and Altruism".

Q. What was that book about?

A. It was about the various incitements to aggression which would provoke such behaviour, and also about conflicts, stereotyping, the resolution of conflicts and prejudices and discrimination. And interspersed among those publications were a number of papers, some of which I can give you if you so desire, some of which I would have to look up, but I would say roughly one dozen published research papers.

Q. In that particular field?

A. In that area, yes, sir.

Q. And I understand that for the last ten years your research interest has been in another area. Is that right?

A. That is correct. Yes, sir.

Q. But you told us you've kept up with the literature in this field. {1647|1648}

A. Oh, yes.

Q. I am showing to you Exhibit 1, the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die?", and Exhibit 2, "The West, War and Islam". Have you had an opportunity to read those two pamphlets?

A. I have, sir.

Q. And I understand that you are not in any position to tell us about the truth or falsehood of those pamphlets.

A. I do not consider myself qualified as an expert – as an expert, I stress ...

Q. All right.

A. ... to testify to the truth of these documents.

Q. All right. But are you able to form an opinion as to their impact on the public opinion?

A. Very much so. Yes, sir.

Q. And is that an opinion that would be a personal opinion, or based on your studies in research?

A. It would most definitely be an opinion based on the work I have done, and the literature that I am familiar with.

Q. Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: I would respectfully submit that Dr. Kaufmann be qualified as an expert in the field of psychology, Your Honour, qualified to testify as to the impact of Exhibits 1 and 2 on the public interest and social and racial tolerance.

THE COURT: Yes. Do you wish to cross-examine the witness on this particular matter? {1648|1649}

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, I do, Your Honour.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. CHRISTIE (VOIR DIRE):

Q. Witness, how do you become an expert in what is the public interest?

A. Well, one reads and one learns what the interests, what the aims, the goals of a given society are. One learns this from official publications. One learns it from the educational system. One learns it from living in the country.

Q. How long did you live in Canada?

A. Four years, sir.

Q. Well, isn't it a matter of opinion what the public interest is, that no expert can give any better than anybody else?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Excuse me just a minute, Your Honour. My understanding – and if I am wrong I am sure Your Honour and Mr. Christie will correct me – but my understanding of the law is that what is the public interest is a question of law.

Dr. Kaufmann has not testified as to what the public interest is but, rather, the impact of this material on social and racial tolerance. I didn't make that clear. I apologize.

THE COURT: What do you say to that?

MR. CHRISTIE: I heard it very clearly expressed, and I wrote down that he would be testifying as to the – he had formed opinions on the effect of this on {1649|1650} the public interest. I wrote that down. I heard him say it, and I certainly think that's the only way that this type of expert can conceivably be relevant to the charge.

The issue is whether the interest in social and racial tolerance as outlined in the charge is necessary or associated in some way with the public interest.

This witness has endeavoured to be – has endeavoured by the Crown to prove that the witness' opinion of social and racial tolerance relates to the public interest, or else he cannot, in my respectful submission, have something to tell us that the jury themselves can't decide.

So I would simply say that the witness must be able to form the association by telling us something that expresses that association with the public interest in some way better than an average citizen could do.

So I ask him how he becomes an expert in public interest. I think that is quite german [sic] if the charge is as I quoted it to be, that the accused is alleged to have committed an offence by telling falsehoods likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest, to wit: the interests of society and social and racial tolerance; and without making that value judgment, I can't see how the expert can relate his knowledge to the charge.

THE COURT: I agree with Crown counsel's submission. The words "public interest" and the definition of those words become a matter of law. However, notwithstanding that, I think you are still entitled to ask the {1650|1651} question you asked. You may ask it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. How did you come to decide what the public interest of Canada was in the four years you were here?

THE COURT: As it pertains to this subject.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, as it relates to social and racial tolerance. How did you form your opinion, or what's the basis of your opinion in the four years you were here?

A. My children went to school here. I taught here. I was exposed to the culture of Canada. I was a welcome visitor, guest, in this country. It so happens that last night I walked along Queen's Park and I saw there an institute which is called the Multicultural Institute of Ontario. Perhaps significantly, that Institute is next door to the Toronto School of Theology.

Now, all through my stay here and ever since, whatever I have read about official policy and official pronouncements of this country could not fail to impress upon me the multicultural tolerant values of this society, its emphasis upon the fact that each culture brings something of value to this entire society. If that is not the public interest, I don't know what is.

Q. So it's your experience in the last two days that walking past some buildings qualifies you to tell us how somebody's statement relates to the public interest.

A. No, sir, not at all. As you very {1651|1652} well know, I would not have walked past these two buildings if I had not been called here, and I would not have been called here if I had not written an article in 1965, or an appendix closely connected with this issue.

Q. When were the years that you lived in Canada?

A. 1963 through 1967.

Q. And you are telling us, then, that your opinion is based upon that experience, reading articles and submitting and filing your appendix to the Cohen Commission Report. Is that correct?

A. This is part of my qualification, but not my entire qualification. I am a social psychologist. I do, as has been established before, keep up with the literature, particularly the literature which concerns group conflicts.

Q. Stereotyping.

A. Stereotyping. Thank you.

Q. Discrimination, that sort of thing, right?

A. Thank you for helping me in this.

Q. Tell me, Doctor, do you come from a Jewish background?

A. I do indeed.

Q. Do you think that might colour your opinion on this subject?

A. It is conceivable that my background steered me to a certain area of research, but science is a cumulative and objective effort; the findings of science are not determined by one's background. {1652|1653}

Q. Do you have some special qualification to weigh the conflicting values of freedom of speech and the composition of ideas with social and racial tolerance such as might be the result of training in either moral theology or philosophy?

A. I would not venture to make the judgment of which of these priorities, should they both be involved, should take precedence. I believe that is for the law to decide.

Q. Well, you, apparently, had a large part in framing at least part of the Cohen Commission Report.

A. I had a part.

Q. And that was the origin of s.281, I suppose, you would realize; is that right?

A. I cannot speak to that, sir.

Q. You don't know that?

A. I do not know what the section number is which resulted from this report.

Q. Mm-hmmm. Is the section on so-called hate propaganda, are you familiar with that?

A. I have read the section. I do not – I am not in a position to say to what extent it resulted directly from the report, or my contribution thereto.

Q. Do you know if Dean Maxwell Cohen was also of Jewish background?

A. I never met Dean Maxwell Cohen. He did not disclose his religious or ethnic affiliation to me. {1653|1654}

Q. I am still curious as to whether you feel that your opinion might be affected by your particular background in relation to this particular subject.

A. You stress the word "opinion", sir. The answer would be no.

Q. I am curious as to how you can be qualified to express your opinion on the realm of what affects racial and social tolerance in such a way that it would be somehow contrary to the public interest. How do you relate those two value judgments, I suggest?

A. I do not accept your definition of those-two value judgments, because if you wish to call them value judgments, then the notion in a society that children should not be cast out and left to die at will is also a value judgment, and that we should not kill old people for food is also a value judgment. If you want to call these values in a society, value judgments, then I will accept the present ones likewise.

Q. Well, you, yourself, used the word "values", and I am suggesting that you are making – you are about to express opinions on values.

A. There is a difference, sir, I respectfully submit to you, between the values of a society which transpires from its proclamations, its laws, its actions, its educational system, its policies, and value judgments arrived at subjectively and without foundation by an individual.

Q. Well, that's quite true. I am not disputing that there is a difference between personal value judgment and societal value judgments, but you are {1654|1655} about to express societal value judgments, in my respectfull [sic] submission, upon whether the material in issue that you have read is contrary to society's public interest in racial and social tolerance. That is what the Crown tells me and that is what you say. Is it not?

A. I am not quite sure I understand your question, sir.

Q. Well, how are you going to give your opinion on racial and social tolerance and its relationship to the public interest without making value judgments on what that public interest is?

A. Let me try and answer this by means of an analogy. Suppose we were to discover – and I must impose upon your patience, I realize that – suppose –

THE COURT: Take all the time you reasonably require, Doctor.

THE WITNESS: Let us assume that we were to discover that lead poisoning is harmful to children and adults. Now, if I were to come forth and say from what I know about this society it should make every effort to prevent lead poisoning from occurring, conceivably you could call this a value judgment. I would call it a justifiable inference.

Q. Is that the end of your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Oh, you are saying, then, that the value judgments you are about to make are as empirically verifiable as those of medicine by your analogy. Is that right? {1655|1656}

A. There is some dispute about the degree of verifiability between the so-called hard sciences, like physics, chemistry, astronomy and so on, and the soft or, as I prefer to call them, the softer sciences – psychology, sociology and so on.

Medicine is somewhere in between, as most of us know. Nevertheless, Western society, at least, have utilized widely the finding of psychology and sociology and political science, which I should have added before, with perhaps a lesser degree of absolute certainty than we can ascribe to the boiling temperature of water; but yet with enough reliance, with a high enough degree of confidence, as a statistician would say, so that some action is taken. Were we to wait for certainty in everything, we would never do anything.

Q. I don't understand your answer, Doctor. What do you mean? Do you mind putting it in simpler terms?

A. I will put it in simple terms as the circumstances require. We make every day – and when I say "we" I mean any government, any society, in fact any organization, and even any individual – we make every day decisions based upon knowledge derived from psychology, political science, sociology. Let us look at those three.

We make these decisions knowing full well the total certainty that the findings upon which these decisions are based can never be had. Why, for all I know this whole courtroom may not be here. It may just be an illusion of my head. Yet I make decisions and act as if it were there. And in quite a similar way we make {1656|1657} decisions about international relations, we make decisions in law about who ought to and who ought not to be convicted.

Are your decisions, are your judgments always certain, never wrong? Of course not. Nevertheless, judgments and decisions have to be made, and they are made by the educated person or by the expert on the basis of such knowledge, as much knowledge as he can, under the circumstances mustered.

Q. So these judgments are to be made by the expert, as you said; and you, therefore, are the expert. Is that right?

A. It is very hard to call oneself an expert. Blowing one's trumpet has never been my habit. But I have spoken to students and to peers in those areas and been listened to respectfully.

Q. Well, I am not suggesting anyone shouldn't listen to you respectfully, but I am wondering how you are better qualified than the average layman to judge what is an offence to racial and social tolerance, or what is in the public interest – how you are set up in some way as an expert in those fields.

A. All right. Let me take this one by one. Would you break the question down? You mentioned two items, i; and I would like to take them one by one..

Q. Okay. You are an expert in racial and social tolerance?

A. Well, the term racial ... and what was the other?

Q. Social.

A. ... and social tolerance, how can {1657|1658} one be – come now, how can one be an expert in tolerance? Surely –

Q. So you are an expert in intolerance, are you?

A. No. Come, now. If you wish to play games, I will be happy to play them with you as long as you wish, but you know very well that –

Q. Well, you know –

THE COURT: Don't interrupt. You put the question. Let him answer.

THE WITNESS: Sir, if you are a physician, can you be an expert in illness?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: I understand there are doctors who claim to be, called pathologists. They claim to be experts in illness.

A. I would challenge you, most respectfully, sir, to call a pathologist who will call himself an expert on illness. I don't think the terminology is accurate. However, I am willing to answer your question if you rephrase it so I can deal with it cogently.

Q. Well, my question was, how are you, an expert in racial and social tolerance. That was the question.

A. And I must repeat that this is a wording that I cannot really properly answer.

Q. Okay. How are you an expert in the public interest?

THE COURT: Well, I think Mr. Griffiths has already said, and he was correct, with respect to public interest being a matter of law, Mr. {1658|1659} Christie. If you want to couple that with the allegation of racial tolerance within the confines of the indictment, you may do so; but what you are doing, in effect, by asking that question, is that you are asking this witness to give a legal opinion. That is hard enough for all of us who have been in this profession of ours for some years. I don't know that he is qualified to really answer that question as you put it.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes, sir

Q. Can I rephrase it this way, Doctor. How are you an expert in the relationship of racial and social tolerance, which you just said you couldn't say that you were an expert in, to the public interest? How do you become an expert in that relationship?

THE COURT: Let me see the indictment, please.

THE WITNESS: I consider myself qualified better than most people in judging the effects of certain, shall we say, inconsistencies between stated official accepted values of a society and information which, in some way or other, is permitted to be purveyed within that society, the conflicts these contrasting communications create, how effective the contrasting communications might be, and the divisive and harmful effects they would have upon a society which, indisputably and fervently, proclaim totally opposite values.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: Well, how do you know what society indisputably proclaims?

A. Well, sir, if I did not know what the values of this country are in terms of its tolerance, of its acceptance, of its welcome to people of all faiths, {1659|1660} races, ages, sexes, then you may be sure that I would not be here.

Q. So you are an expert in what the values of our country are in relation to age, sex and race; you are an expert in those values of our country. Is that what I am to believe?

A. In order not to mince words too much, you wish to insist on the term expert, and I will accept it with reservations. I am an expert. if you wish, on the contrast created by the values which not only I, but every, or most educated citizen of this country know to be the values of this society. The contrast, I say, between those values and the values offered are advocated by certain communications.

Q. Well, how do you know that the values held by every or most educated citizen of this country are as you understand them to be? How are you an expert in the values of every or most educated citizen of this country?

A. Well, sir, I think it is fair to say that the average values of the child who grows up, let us say, in a culture of India, would be different from the average values of the child that grows up in this country; and why would that be so? Because, of course, he is exposed to different educational input.

Now, it is my assumption – and I will go so far as to say that it is an educated and expert assumption – that education of the child, and yes, – it goes on throughout life by means of the media, the communications, official communications to which we are exposed, the newspapers we read; the television programmes we watch, the {1660|1661} politicians whom we listen to, yes, it is my expert opinion that this continuous input influences and shapes the values of the average member of society.

There are, of course, always exceptions. We are dealing with a statistical continuum. There are exceptions at both ends. We know that. But when we look at the large bulk of the population, it is most definitely – and I repeat, I say this on the basis of my call it expert knowledge – yes, it does have an effect upon where the values of a society are.

Q. Well, I gather from that that you claim to have the right to express an opinion on the majority of values of those in Canada, or do I understand you correctly?

A. I don't know whether I quite accept the term "right", but —

THE COURT: I agree with that, Doctor. You don't have the right unless I give it to you, and I give it to you from a judicial point of view, having considered both sides. The question was an enforcement in its phraseology.

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: You claim to have the expert ability to express an opinion on the majority values of Canada.

A. Absolutely, sir, yes.

Q. On the basis of what special training or knowledge do you claim that expert ability?

A. Well, my training as a social psychologist deals with the effects of communications, persuasion techniques, the effects of artificially engendered or already existing group conflicts, the effects of social {1661|1662} milieu or various restraining or encouraging variables upon aggression, and also, yes, the other side, the means and techniques whereby group conflicts can be reduced, the means and techniques whereby persuasion can be made less as well as more effective. And that is the field of my professional training.

Q. But you have no special knowledge from any experience of recent development in Canada. I assume, from your statements, that you were here from '63 to '67.

A. I am not sure whether you are referring to personal experience ...

Q. Well, personal experience, research in the actual living conditions of living here in Canada, any special skill or ability derived since 1967 in this country.

A. I cannot cite you any research papers done on prejudice or stereotyping or group conflicts in Canada in the last few years. No, sir.

9. And you said that the situation in any country, I think, was on a continuum, that the shape of society's values constantly change.

A. No, sir. That was not what I said.

Q. Oh.

A. What I said was that the effects of the constant input to which each member of society is exposed, well, not from birth but very soon thereafter, throughout his life, have an effect which is – and here one becomes a little technical or statistical, I cannot help this – is best seen as being distributed along a normal {1662|1663} statistical curve, which means some very few people will become intensely, and we may even say pathologically, antisocial, some people will become almost robot-like in the acceptance of every, even the most minute dictum of this society; but the great majority of people, the bulk – and if I had a blackboard I would draw you a bell curve – the bulk of society is affected, is influenced to a considerable degree, except it makes its own, by the values to which it has been exposed from childhood.

Q. Well, getting straight to the point, how are you an expert in the values of the Canadian society in any way, shape or form?

A. Well, as I said, my training consists of, in part, of a study of the way in which persuasion – and please let me clarify here the word "persuasion" because it has a sort of a negative connotation in popular parlance and I don't mean it in that way at all; persuasion simply means getting a viewpoint or a value across to another person. And of course, ninety-eight per cent of what our value system is, in fact ninety-eight percent, roughly speaking; don't hold me to the number – of what we know is learned not from direct experience as in the case of an animal, but from what we hear, from what we are told, from what we observe in television and other media.

Q. When you say "we" and "our", do you mean Canadian or the world?

A. Everybody, sir.

Q. So the value judgments you make are relative to anybody in the world? {1663|1664}

A. Not the value judgments, but the way these value judgments are acquired. A big difference there. Now, if you can graciously re-direct me to where we were before you interrupted me.

Q. The question was, how are you an expert in the values of Canadian society.

A. All right. Let me get back to the persuasion and editorial process, then, to which each member of a society is exposed throughout his life, unless we are to assume that society is either totally without purpose, or maliciously fraudulent in what it teaches and communicates to each member of society from its first exposure to parental values, to school values and, later on, as an adult, unless I were to assume this – and that seems to me a bit far-fetched – then I must assume, as a student of communication and persuasion, that society, indeed, holds these values and wishes its citizens to adopt – to understand them and to adopt them.

Q. How are you an expert in the values and purpose of Canadian society that we ought to accept and adopt?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. I just heard you say that you viewed society as having a purpose, that there were purposes in society that citizens ought to accept and adopt, and I want to know how you are an expert in the purposes of Canadian society that we ought to adopt.

A. Now, first of all, you have somewhat modified my answer. I did not say that we ought to {1664|1665} adopt. My phrasing was a conditional and with the sense that if we observe that, from childhood on society advocates certain values, then one must reasonably infer that these are the values which this society wishes its citizens to learn and to adopt.

Q. Okay. You say that society has certain values which society wishes its citizens to adopt. Am I right?

A. That is reasonably close.

Q. Well, how are you an expert in the values that Canadian society wishes its citizens to adopt.

A. I thought I already answered that, but I will gladly go over it again. Part of my training, of course, deals with techniques of persuasion and communication.

Q. All right. Let me get it down very carefully so I don't misunderstand you. First of all you say you are an expert in techniques of persuasion, and that doesn't apply just to Canada, does it?

A. No, of course not.

Q. That is to human beings anywhere; so that is one qualification that enables you to tell us what values Canadian society wishes to have its citizens adopt. Is that right?

A. I seem to detect a leap which is not entirely justified by logic.

Q. Well, you correct me, then, Doctor. Tell me what it is that qualifies you to say what values Canadian society wishes its citizens to adopt. {1665|1666}

A. The values which I infer from its educational system.

Q. From its educational system?

A. From its political overt announcements, from its immigration policies.

Q. Political overt announcements.

A. Just a minute. I haven't finished.

Q. No. I just want to make sure I had it down.

THE COURT: Just listen carefully. Do the best you can to let the witness finish the answer without your constant interruptions.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you, Your Honour. I will try.

THE COURT: Don't try. Do it.

THE WITNESS: May I get the first bars, please?

THE COURT: Let's have the question read back.

THE COURT REPORTER: "Q. Well, you correct me, then, Doctor.

Tell me what it is that qualifies you to say what values Canadian society wishes its citizens to adopt."

THE COURT: We will hear the answer without interruptions.

THE WITNESS: It is the answer which I think I already gave you, but which I will gladly repeat, and it is this: unless we are to assume that everything that our children, your children – I still consider them our children because our children did go to school here, {1666|1667} so forgive this slip of the tongue if it is that – unless we are to assume that everything in the educational system that this country teaches, with regard to social values of course, unless we are to assume that everything that our public figures announce, unless we are to assume that the generous attitudes and policies towards newcomers or people of various ethnic and religious backgrounds, unless we are to assume that all this is either totally random or maliciously perverted, then one must infer, with any knowledge of communication and persuasion at all, that these are, indeed, the goals which the society seeks.

THE COURT: That's your answer.

THE WITNESS: Yes, Your Honour.

THE COURT: Thank you. Next question.

MR. CHRISTIE: Thank you.

Q. Well, how do you know anything about the public pronouncements of our political figures? How are you an expert in that? And which political figures do you consider authoritative?

A. Well, I am rather glad you asked me that, because even though there is now, for example – and I know this very well because I am kept up at night due to this event – there is now going on a competition for the Premiership of this delightful Province where four gentlemen are competing and they all, of course, have expressed viewpoints which in some way differ one from the other because otherwise they would be in no competition at all, but there has not been one who has advocated conflict, dissidence, divisiveness, intolerance or hate {1667|1668} among various groups

Q. Are you familiar with the Premier of Quebec, Rene Levesque?

A. I cannot say that I am familiar with him, sir.

Q. No. Well, would you consider him not a legitimate Canadian political figure?

A. I am not qualified to pronounce on his legitimacy, sir.

Q. Well, you say that our public figures are consistent in not advocating intolerance or divisiveness or hate. I put it to you that unless you are familiar with the Canadian political scene, you can't say that our political figures are consistent in that regard. I am not even prepared to say that anybody would, but how are you so qualified –

THE COURT: Mr. Christie, I don't recall the witness having indicated that political figures, generally speaking, in this country have or have not the attributes that you have indicated. The witness was referring to four specific people –

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

THE COURT: — currently within the realm of his knowledge.

MR. CHRISTIE: Yes.

Q. Well, is that the extent of your knowledge of the Canadian political scene, then, Doctor?

A. Well —

MR. GRIFFITHS: Just a minute. Again, Your Honour, I don't like to interrupt, but by and large {1668|1669} all these questions are still going to the matter of public interest, what the values are of the public interest, and that's a question whether or not social and racial tolerance are matters of public interest is a question not for Dr. Kaufmann but for Your Honour. Dr. Kaufmann is going to testify whether these two articles have any impact on racial and social tolerance. Whether that is in the public interest is not in his field, Your Honour. So that the same objection I was trying to make before is that the questions really aren't relevant to his field of expertise.

THE COURT: Mr. Christie?

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, the expert is being tendered to give an opinion in the realm of social and racial tolerance. I have endeavoured to find out the basis of his expertise in that regard, and I have so far elicited three areas in which he has expressed his opinion that enables him to say what Canadian values and racial and social tolerance are. I have enumerated them in my recollection to be, one, he said unless we are to assume that the educational system teaches no social values – and I assume he is talking about the educational system; he then said the public overt pronouncements of political figures, and then he said the generous attitude to newcomers. I assume he means immigration policy.

I am asking him to know what he knows about those areas that somehow qualify him to express opinions on.

THE COURT: All of which, in my view, are public interest matters. Really, isn't the Crown {1669|1670} purporting to qualify this witness as an expert as to be in a position to give his opinions to the jury, if he is permitted to do so, of the impact of Exhibits 1 and 2 insofar as the alleged mischief in social and racial tolerance is concerned? Isn't that essentially what the Crown is attempting to do?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That is, Your Honour.

THE COURT: If that is the case, then why all the questions? Why do you want to ask him all these questions concerning politics and the views of political leaders in this country when the purpose is different? I can assure you that I am far from coming to any conclusion with respect to the propriety of the Crown's application. I don't want to have to spend the day on a voir dire on matters that aren't relevant, really, to the purpose that this witness is being called.

MR. CHRISTIE: Your Honour, this enterprise of seeking to qualify someone to express views on the issue of social and racial tolerance is a novel proposition which, I suggest, requires – and this witness has so far agreed – involved certain value judgements about those racial and social tolerances.

No one, in my respectful opinion, is qualified to give an expert opinion unless they can demonstrate before a Court that they have some unique special knowledge derived from one of two sources – experience or training. So far I have not heard the witness identify his experience to qualify him to give an expert opinion on this area, and I am examining for the purposes, if there are any, some special academic training in this {1670|1671} field. And I haven't heard him say that he has any in Canada relating to racial and social tolerance here.

THE COURT: Why don't you put, in the form of a question to the witness, precisely what you've said to me, and then we can get down to the meat of this application?

Q. MR. CHRISTIE: What special academic training have you had to qualify you to say what are the Canadian values in racial and social tolerance?

A. Sir, I think my expertise, if again we want to call it that, is demonstrated by the fact that the Report of the Special Commission on Hate Propaganda [sic] was instituted on request, that I contributed to it, and that the government saw fit, on the basis of this report, to write or to insert a law which you, yourself, have named. Had the values been other, that report would probably not even exist today.

As a contributor thereto, and being familiar with the results thereof, I believe to be so qualified.

Q. So let me understand you correctly. It's not a matter of any academic training in this particular field in Canada after 1967 in any event, and it's not the result of anything more than that the government of the day chose to use your report to some extent.

A. That is not entirely an accurate presentation, because clearly I would not have been selected to write this report had I not possessed some prior qualifications. {1671|1672}

Q. So to understand you clearly, if the government saw fit to rely on you, that therefore you must be an expert.

A. I would deem that the government exercised good judgment in asking me to write that report.

Q. Well, I thought you might, but may I suggest to you that what the government decided in 1967 for their reasons doesn't mean you have any academic qualifications in 1984 to speak to us about the values of our society in racial and social tolerance today. Would you agree?
