ANNEXES

Annexe 1 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par Skype avec ISAAC FLORENTINE réalisateur des 60 premiers épisodes de Mighty Morphin Power Rangers entre 1993 et 1994, le 5 avril 2019.

Julian Mordelet: Under which circumstances did you start working as a fight choreographer and director of the second unit on Mighty Morphin Power Rangers?

Isaac Florentine: It was around 1992, when I came to Los Angeles... it was in 1988... I worked in a few small movies as a fight choreographer in the second unit and second unit director. [quelques mots inaudibles]. Two of those producers became the producers of Power Rangers. Ronnie Hadar and Jonathan Tzachor and what happened... I was not interested in doing television... And... I have been remembered, when they were shooting the pilot, I wanted to see, how they shot the pilot and I met with Haim Saban, but I was not interested in doing television.

JM: You wanted to do movies back then?

IF, I wanted to do movies, that was my goal. And around 1993 they contacted me and they told me: "Isaac we are thinking of doing a second unit and we want, we would like to see some stuff". So... At this point they were shooting already the series. And they send me some stuff to watch, and I looked at the stuff. It was American footage and Japanese footage, and... It was like water and oil. I'll give you the reason. The American way of shooting stuff was the way that they used to do movies from the '40s. You shoot what is called a master and then coverage. The Japanese way was close to the way that they used to do things in Hong Kong. You shoot, you determine what you want to shoot, you shoot it with the right angle with the right lens and then you stock and you go to your next set up with... Again, determine, making a decision: what are you going to shoot, before to shoot it? Which means... They call it edits on camera. Now you have the choices: you shoot to edit and because you shoot to edit, you do the perfect composition and the perfect choices. Now... I used to shoot this way, because, when I did stuff let's say in prime school, and even before in high school, I used to shoot with 8 mm, Super 8. And in prime school we had 100 feet of 16 mm, so you don't have the luxury of shooting a master and coverage, you have to determine before, what you are going to shoot. Here there is the plus and the minus of it. The plus of the American way was, you having some footage, you don't have to cut, but this is also the minus, why, because when you shoot action you are in the wrong composition and the wrong angle... And hastily this hiding the fact that no one gets it.

Because if I'm going to hit you with the camera where you see now [Isaac déplace sa main dans le cadre], you see it's a miss. Look if I'm going to put the camera, let's say here [Isaac déplace sa main à nouveau] and I'm going to hit you and you are going to react, you think that is a hit. They had the wrong composition. Sometimes I want to glorify the action to make it look good and better and more like "wow" than what it is. And the American way it's not working this way. Now they are good, now they did it well. And... Editing to action is the right way of doing it. So day back then when they started shooting and because the show combine Japanese footage and American footage things didn't work together. It felt like water and oil. They didn't sync, so, at this point, they met the producer and they say, look there are two options: either they bring a team from Japan, or we know somebody, he is from Israel, he is trained to guide martial arts from many, many, many years, he likes this cinema, he understands this cinema, let's try with him. If it works, fantastic. If it doesn't work, we bring a Japanese team. This is why they call me. So they call me... And I did a test fight, just to show that we can do it with what we have. Because the Japanese way, just use mini tramps, they use trampolines. We did it and... I remember Haim came that day and saw the footage, the way we cut it. We didn't know the show would be a hit. He fought it could be one season. So I remember after this day, the scream, he came and say, "ho, unless now I think we will have one full season". Nobody felt that this will be a hit. This is how I came into the show.

JM: What was a typical shooting day for you on the show?

IF: So this is the way it went. The meaning that the decision was to go with two units. They were total separation of these two units. I think the first real up I did is when the green ranger arrives and he fights on the beach and then he fights in an alley in Los Angeles. And I remember that day, because ... [quelques mots inaudibles], it's a lot of work, but it's rewarding, it's worth it. So... We came to shoot on the beach... Leo Carrillo Beach, in Los Angeles. And I remember I talked to Bob Hughes, it was the director, so he was shooting way up there [Isaac déplace sa main vers la droite du cadre] and I was shooting way up there [Isaac déplace sa main vers la gauche du cadre]. And I knew Bob for years, because we were friends you know and we don't even come on, not yet before this, and I told him Bob, "I know you are not [quelques mots inaudibles], let's try!", it's a decision, you know "let's try to see how it works". And... It was a total separation from the other unit, we showed that faint. The beauty was, because you are a team of five rangers and then of six rangers, you can divide a cast, so some of the cast work with this unit, some of the cast work with the other unit, it's much easier to work. And I remember, shooting the stuff, the AD, the Assistant director that we have, Larry Litton, also a good friend, and he came and he said, “I think”, when he saw the footage, “if I didn’t know you, if I was a producer, and didn’t know what you are doing, I would fire you the first day... That does not make sense, but I know it makes sense”. But this is the way it worked. It worked... we took it pieces by pieces, by pieces, by pieces... They were still shooting the drama must do coverage... And I remember, after a few days we shot in an alley down town Los Angeles and we were doing again a fight, and I remember, one of the putties, Erik Betts, he is running out of the role and he does a backflip and ... he uses like the [quelques mots inaudibles] garbage to use like a ... not like boomerang but like a ... freebie! And put it [quelques mots inaudibles] and we did a shot going to the putties, and people were watching either staying on the roof and [quelques mots inaudibles]. And I remember the same evening we go to Las Vegas, they were a convention, we flew, all the team, to Las Vegas. And I remember flying, meet a [un mot inaudible] and said, “whoa, the people really [quelques mots inaudibles] maybe we had something, maybe we have something in our hand”. At this point no one thought that it will be an it. But... Because it was too early. But Haim [Saban] he anticipated, he really, really loved it, you know [quelques mots inaudibles]. And a few months later, I remember when we did the mix of the show. We did a mix, we end up, we finish at 4 in the morning, we came out and it was egging, Jonathan [Tzachor] was here, and Ronnie [Hadar] was here, Haim [Saban] was here. And Haim said, “OK”, it was 4 in the morning, it was supposed to be aired the next day at ten in the morning, and I remember Haim [Saban] said, “if this will not be a success, I know nothing about kids show, I’m going to sell it, and I start something else”, you know... It was aired, like the next morning and it became a hit.

JM: Yeah, apparently this was very difficult for Saban to sell this project...

IF: Yes

JM: As he said he started in 1984? He saw the Japanese show and he loved it, but it was very difficult to sell to the networks...

IF: Yes. What they did. In 1987 they shoot a pilot, they call it Bio-Man, and... Which is good. It was never accepted, never went anywhere. But he was persistent, and in 1992 he said let’s try again and ... that’s basically... I don’t know if you know, the first time they tried to sell it, already when the show was done, when they were shooting the show, was in a meet, in Cannes, in 1993. And I went to the meet in Cannes with a team, and we did like live shows, they were still trying to sell the show, that was in 1993 in Cannes.

JM: There is a rumor about him trying to adapt Chojin Sentai Jettoman, the Japanese show from 1991, but the show was too mature...

IF: I don't know if it's true, I don't know ... but I'll tell you one thing: look if we look at the Japanese episodes, they are much darker... I think they are much better than the American episodes. The American episodes became more to little kids and more let's say politically correct. Japanese episodes I think that the drama is better, and the stories are better and they are really, really, sometimes many dark cause, every time I watch a Japanese episode, I'm like drawn away. And then I look at the script like we used to do and they were [quelques mots inaudibles]

JM: Yeah, I understand what you are meaning, it was difficult for Japaneses to export these shows in the Occident ... it was a better to sell it to someone who is going to take the images to create an Americanization of the show. And for American television is also for Occident in general so...

IF: Yes, that's correct, absolutely, and you have to tailor it to the American audience and you didn't want to insult anyone and even in the action, we didn't use face skills, because they used to say it's violent. This was ain't to the shoulder. And I remember, [quelques mots inaudibles], before they we shoot the final cut the final season yet to cut stuff out, and I was like agonizing like, "ho, you cut all the good stuff".

JM: Actually, this was one of my questions, if you had specific instructions for the shooting of the fight scene? Regarding the violence, cause hmm... Sharon Janis who is an editor of the show, told me that when she was working on the fight scene from Japan, she had to cut many, many of the hits, hmm ... of the blows.

IF: Yes, that's correct, one hundred percent correct, and this was very agonizing, so once we knew we were due to work with it and then we came with other solutions you know. But, the main thing was this, and I remember it. It's to come out, out of the American mentality, you know Americans can be very rigid, very square, come out of the box and to put it in a different box, I'll give you an example. We shot once a fight, and one of the executives, great guy... And... We did a fight, we did things that he can't understand, they jump here, they land here, [quelques mots inaudibles], there is no ... there is not... Ha... What the logic? [quelques mots inaudibles] In the Japanese footage they jump in Tokyo, they land In Paris, they flipped in London, what are you looking for logic, there is not logic. The logic is the no-logic. [quelques mots inaudibles] you are absolutely right, as long as it is entertaining, and that was, I think, for him some kind of “ho, the logic is not being logical as long as technically it flows”, you know, not too choppy, and its entertainment, that’s the way that it was.

JM: Yeah, about the correspondence of two kinds of footage, I know that Saban Entertainment has made a command to Toei after the forty-first episodes of the show, new costume and fight scene for Japan, why these scenes were not shot by your team at this time? Because you had the capability to...

IF: I don’t know... Don’t you know about every couple of seasons, the uniform change, everything changes, I remember, when I did Power Rangers Zeo. In Power Rangers Zeo, I directed all of the episodes to beginning you know and there were new uniforms, new... Everything was knowing you know. I mean, the reason, everybody wanted to sell toys, cause, you look at Power Rangers, it was a big advertisement, half an hour commercial to sell toys, that’s what it was you know, so they tried to take logic to stories and settle. And I think they manage to do it, there is a series running in Japan for so many decades you know. I think it’s still around, no? [quelques mots inaudibles]

JM: Those new fight scenes from Japan after the forty-first episode of the show, did they change your way of work?

IF: No, the work was still divided in two units, after fifteen, twenty episodes of the first season, maybe before, I don’t remember, that’s the way we worked, they were two units we were running separately all the time.

JM: you had the opportunity to look at the first pilot before you worked on the show? And did you look all of the Japanese series or not at all

IF: I watched, I don’t know... A lot ... let’s say I had some free time to take a look at them just to ... to understand, to get inspired by them and ... it’s exactly what I told you, that I used to watch them, stories were much better than our stories, just much better, you know...

JM: it’s maybe for another public, another... For Japanese Super Sentai is something very important, they develop the stories of fifty episodes and that’s all...

IF: I think the Japanese stories have more layers, because they were not meant for 3, 4, kids or 8 kids, they have many layers, it’s what I told the stories were darker, the characters were rounded, more complex.

JM: You worked after Power Ranger Zeo and Timeforce also, did you, did the production model change after?

IF: No, I even went to see what they did in New Zealand, didn't change, I mean, it became better. Better that means that the technology became better, the skill became better, but once, it was determined to work in that direction... It didn't change he just became better...

JM: And so...

There is another thing that you are able to understand if you compare the Japanese way to the American way, and ... it's... The American way working faster, the camera serving the actors. The Japanese way, they understand they are on a screen, they... The camera is here to help them and them to help the camera. So, they understand cameras better than... Than a lot of western actors. They understand hotlines, they understand what to do, understanding that sometimes, if this is your frame, your hands will be here, many western actors [quelques mots inaudibles] the Japanese, they don't have this problem, they understand that this. Is your frame and they adapt in a very natural way [quelques mots inaudibles] that's why it's much better. And I have this opportunity to go later with a Japanese stunt team [quelques mots inaudibles] or... Japanese actors in movies and what they brought is that amazing adaptability to the screen that a lot of western actors do not have it.

JM: A lot of western actors are turning to our image and not to the image...

IF: I think it goes back to, what I said at the beginning, in the forties, let's do the master and let's cover it. Shoot the master... Basically... Hmm... Document the actors if you cut or if you shoot what you needed then, the actor adapts to that composition.

JM: Another question, do you remember which camera you were using on the fight scene and what kind of film?

IF: We used a 16 mm, super 16,

JM: Super 16, OK, cause, I know they were some problems about the 16 mm Japanese, they were shooting in 16 mm and you in super 16...

IF: I don't remember... Honestly I don't remember, I meant, if it was super 16 or 16, I honestly don't know.

JM: but you were in Super 16?

IF: I'm not sure, you know as a director [quelques mots inaudibles] and those details if it's 16 or super 16... I'm not concentrated on it. I think of the lens, I think of the composition, I think of the pace, I don't think of ... it's like when you write, if you are like me, a writer, are you writing with a print cell or with a pen, I tell you... In painting it's the same.

JM: I understand, it was twenty years ago you can't remember.

IF: Hmm... But I remember in New Zealand, I meant it was... And I don't remember last season that I did was not too far, before they move to New Zealand... This was 2003 ... 2004... I don't even remember... That it was still film, but in New Zealand this was already... Just, again I don't remember... Witch [quelques mots inaudibles] you know... [Isaac parle en français] Et puis moi ça m'est égal tu sais, c'est l'histoire, c'est la composition... C'est l'histoire... [Isaac arrête de parler français]

JM: Do you remember maybe when your work on the show exactly began?

IF: Yes, in 1993.

JM: 1993, OK, at the beginning of the year?

IF: Hmm...

JM: I have some information about February 1993?

IF: Maybe...

JM: Hmm... Maybe one last question... Hmm... Do you... For you, what is the most important to tell about your work on the show?

IF: I think that hmm... Look... This show for me... It was the best... Experimental... Way... Of working. Which means that all my skills, thanks to that show, because, I came in 1988, the end of 1988, did a first movie, a first feature, 1991, 1992, then I came to the show, and I see how much the show let me become better on my skills, because, I directed every day, and, you know, the director has to direct, like the editor has to edit [quelques mots inaudibles] I'm a director I don't know... And that show gave me the experience... And there is nothing like experience that experience, because something about the show, whoever work on the show, you can give anyone who works on that show, a script, any script, and they will find a way, very fast, to tell, the story there in a very economical way and cinematic way, which is really true cinema.

Annexe 2 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par courriel avec SHARON JANIS monteuse de 65 épisodes de Mighty Morphin Power Rangers entre 1993 et 1995, 1^{er} au 8 octobre 2018.

Julian Mordelet: What exactly was your role on the editing team?

Sharon Janis : Once the show started running, I was one of usually 2 or 3 editors at a time on the show. I came in a few months before the show began to broadcast when the initial editor was about to leave the show for other projects.

JM: Have you had the opportunity to watch episodes of Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger before starting your work on the American series?

SJ : No.

JM: What material did you use on Mighty Morphin Power Rangers to edit the episodes?

SJ : We used digitized film on avid editing systems to edit, and then the production coordinator would take our edit lists to a professional online facility and re-create our edits, add effects, the final music, titles, and whatever was needed to get the show ready for broadcast.

JM: How long before the broadcast of the first episode of the series did the production work begin? At the time of this first broadcast, how many episodes were ready?

SJ : When I worked there, there was a continual flow of production and post-production, at least once the show was picked up for a second season. From what I heard, it had taken Haim Saban eight years to finally find a station willing to make his idea for this show happen, so they didn't know if it would continue past the first season. By the time the show was enthusiastically received and signed for more seasons, I had become the editor of X-Men, which was also produced by Saban. One day, soon after Saban signed their deal with FOX Children's Network for more seasons, I was working with one of the X-Men producers when Haim came into my edit bay and said to him, "You can't have her anymore, we need her for Power Rangers. She's the only one who understands the show." Haim had a great if dry sense of humor, so clearly that was meant to be funny. I told Haim I could edit both shows, but he'd have to pay me twice. He said, "That's a lot of dollars," to which I replied, "That's a lot of hours." So for the next couple years, I edited both shows and eventually also became the associate producer for X-Men.

JM: How did you use Japanese tapes to create an episode of Mighty Morphin Power Rangers? As a series to adapt or rather as a raw material?

SJ : We used the Japanese footage as a source of raw materials. Sometimes we'd pull from several different Japanese tapes for a single episode. For the most part, the scriptwriters would select the shots to use, and would write a script for the American scenes, which only had to have enough to do with the Japanese footage to make some sense to viewers. They would also come up with names for the "monsters" that I'm sure you know as a fan of the show. There were a lot of rules in terms of how many building explosions could be shown, or where a kick would have to land in order to be a kick to the shoulder rather than the forbidden kick to the head.

JM: How was the episodes created? One episode at a time, several at the same time?

SJ : It was an ongoing flow. Once an episode was filmed, it would come to editing while more episodes were being filmed. When we started filming our own fight scenes with a professional martial arts director and expert stunt people, they would sometimes film those scenes for more than one episode while all the guys (and if I remember correctly, at least one female stunt people) were assembled for filming.

JM: What were the relationships between the editing team you were part of, and the other teams (music department, post-production, filming, scenarios, etc.)?

SJ : The editing team was the crux of post-production. I had more interaction with the other teams as editor and associate producer of X-Men, so I am trying to separate the two shows. I think for the most part, we were given the elements and edited to them. Music was added in the "online session," but we'd sometimes put similar music on the offline edit so the fight scenes would have a good pace, and would assume the online editor would either use our music or try to match its style and pace.

JM: Remember the temporality of the production of the episodes? Was the script written before/after the reception of Japanese tapes? At what point in the production did American teams shoot the American sequences?

SJ : The scripts were probably always written after the reception of Japanese tapes, since the monsters and interactions of the power rangers in costume had to be adapted into a new storyline that would decide the American filmed scenes.

JM: Have you had to change your way of working during the three seasons of Mighty Morphing Power Rangers?

SJ : There were adjustments here and there, like moving buildings a couple times, and working with different producers or directors. Some directors would like to come in for the final polish or while I was editing for the fun of that part of the process and to make sure I used the shots they especially liked. That was fortunate once when the director very politely asked why I hadn't used a really cool shot of a leg swipe during a fight scene, filmed from below. It turns out that our young assistant director had neglected to digitize that shot to my drive, so I hadn't seen it. After that would double-check his digitized scenes to the detailed script notes.

JM: Did you have specific instructions about the editing? Regarding for example the censorship of certain passages of the Japanese version?

SJ : We were just given all the tapes and a script, and it was up to each editor to decide which angles to use and how to cut or intercut different scenes. I think Saban had complete rights to use any of the Japanese footage, which would change over time, which is why the costumes on MMPR would have to change. Most of the Japanese shows were filmed and broadcast in Japan long before we used them in our show. I remember at one point in time when we changed to a new set of costumes and were on a much closer timeline of needing to get the Japanese shows right after they were finished for broadcast in Japan.

JM: Comparing the combat sequences of the Japanese version, and those of the American version, we note that the pace is not the same, the American sequences are generally more cut, was it a directive from the production, an expression of your own sensitivity concerning the editing, maybe both?

SJ : The Japanese footage was more limited, so we didn't have as much opportunity for elaborate editing, aside from intercutting and sometimes repeating certain scenes, like explosions or hits from the megazord or monsters. Once the martial arts director came along (I remember his name as Koichi, but am not sure of the exact spelling—I'm sure you can find his name in the credits), then he would enthusiastically film much more elaborate fight scenes, so we had loads of great angles to work with.

JM: Have you been surprised by the success of Mighty Morphin Power Rangers?

SJ : The moment I walked into the editing room and saw a scene of Rita Repulsa on the screen, I said, “this is eye candy,” and knew the show would be a hit, although didn’t know how much it would explode across the world. Also, as you may have read in the memoir I shared, my job with MMPR came as a divine guidance and answer right after completing a previous project and asking Grace to lead me to whatever project I was meant to do next. So I felt the show had a special anointing or blessing for it to have come forth as a clear answer to that prayer.

JM: Just maybe another question about one point that I did not quite understand, overall you had an online server on which the editor assembled the work of all the teams?

SJ : Yes, I actually learned the Avid system early on—edited the first full-length film on one (Beretta’s Island). Had to use resolution 1 to fit it all on a drive, and couldn’t see in one scene that had a visible tripod in a darkish cave. Avid tech helped with various issues, including doing manual notations when the video to film matchback didn’t work properly. Then was hired for MMPR, then X-Men, both on Avid. After the first season of MMPR wrapped was recommended by Avid to train NBC promo producers to use the Avid, which they didn’t really want to do—mainly wanted me to edit for them. So I worked full-time jobs for NBC and X-Men, just down the street, hopping back and forth for long hours (X-Men hours were mostly flexible). Left NBC when MMPR got the next order of seasons. Not sure what you are asking about online. We would receive the footage on a drive with time code, lower resolution, etc., edit it offline, and output our edit lists that the post supervisor would take to the online facility and match each edit with the full resolution film there. Servers were not common then like they are now. Much different technology time.

Annexe 3 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par courriel avec CHARLES BOWYER monteur de 68 épisodes de Mighty Morphin Power Rangers entre 1993 et 1995, 15 au 16 juillet 2019.

Julian Mordelet : How did you get the job of editor on MMPR? Why did you want to work on this particular show?

Charles Bowyer : I was the first editor to start on the Power Rangers series. Someone had put together a short proof of concept, but I was the first to start working on the actual show. I had been working for a post-production company, Modern Videofilm, in Hollywood. They were buying new non-linear editing systems, AVID Media Composers. These were the first non-linear systems, and I wanted to learn how to edit on them. Power Rangers was to be the company's first project with the new machine. I met with Ronnie Hadar, somehow convinced him I was the right guy for the job, since I really hadn't edited a single camera show before. (I had recently edited a multi-camera sitcom.) Our AVIDs weren't yet operational, so they sent me to Stu Segal Productions, where I started Power Rangers on one of their systems. Their AVID experienced assistant editor, Lee Unkrich, helped me learn how to operate the AVID. We started with 3/4 inch cassettes of what I thought were the most recent version of the Japanese series. The first step was to go through the shows and select all the shots that had the least amount of Japanese in them. No Japanese writing, no Japanese characters, etc. each show would yield about 7–8 minutes of usable footage, usually the majority of the battles with the monsters. I'll get to the next step later. I hope you feel like this is a good start.

Annexe 4 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par courriel avec STEWART ST. JOHN scénariste de 30 épisodes de Mighty Morphin Power Rangers entre 1993 et 1996, 1^{er} au 13 août 2019.

Julian Mordelet : Under what circumstances were you hired as a writer on the Mighty Morphin Power Rangers show? Why did you want to work on this particular series?

Stewart St. John : At the time, I had been hired at Hanna Barbera Studios by founder and animation legend Joseph Barbera to work on the FOX Kids series Tom & Jerry Kids. I would spend hours sitting with Mr. Barbera and working on ideas for the shows, including skits for Droopy & Dripple and Spike & Tyke. We actually cast Mark Hamill (Luke Skywalker in the Star Wars films) to voice one of my characters in a Droopy & Dripple skit. Around that time, I got a call from my agents that there was a live-action superhero series staffing up, and would I be interested? Given that I'd grown up on comic books, animation and all things superhero, I jumped at the chance to be a writer on this new series, which was also on the same network that Tom & Jerry was airing. I met with Saban producer Ellen Levy-Sarnoff, and on a Friday I turned in a sample episode for the series (which would later be known as Mighty Morphin Power Rangers)—and by the following Monday I was hired, not only as a writer on the series, but as the story editor for the first season! Ellen Levy-Sarnoff recognized my passion and imagination, and the rest is history!

JM: Did the rapid success of the show during the first season surprise you at the time?

SSJ: I think it surprised everyone. I was just doing what I loved, not thinking much about the success of the show, but just trying to make it the kind of show that I really wanted to see. I was heavily inspired by Marv Wolfman's TEEN TITANS comic book series which I had read as a kid, so my approach to MMPR was to bring a mix of that fun and teen drama to the series. The whole show was really an open canvas at the time, so I just went for it and molded it into the series that I would want to watch.

JM: If I am not mistaken, the writers received the exploitable images of the Japanese series but not the entire episodes? What was your working method for writing episodes?

SSJ: During the first few seasons we actually received the full episodes of the Japanese series, on VHS tapes!! Some of which I still have in a storage vault somewhere. I was fascinated by the dark themes of the original series. But the idea was to stay away from those stories, and craft entirely new adventures ... so that's what I did. I would then take the footage that had been approved for the episode (culled from the original series), and let it inspire a whole new episode in my mind. For instance, when I saw the eyeball creature in the original Japanese footage, I immediately named the creature "Eye Guy" and built an origin story ... and then worked backwards to create the whole story. Luckily my brain just worked that way.

LITTLE KNOW FACT: In the "I, EYE GUY" episode, I named Billy young's friend Willy after my real brother WILLIE, who I also got a job as an "extra" on several episodes of MMPR.

LITTLE KNOWN FACT 2: I also got in on the acting-action by writing and playing a cub reporter character on the other series I wrote, V.R. Troopers.

JM: Even before the shooting began (in September 1992), according to the contracts, Saban ordered new images of the witch and her disciples from Toei Company. Did you have access to these images for writing the episodes during the first season? Maybe a videotape with a lot of footage of the witch and her disciple in different situations in addition to the footage from the original series?

SSJ: Yes, I had access to video footage featuring different situations with Rita and her minions, and that was always helpful in crafting the stories. Sometimes the footage was just so limiting, so it really helped!

JM: You contributed to the writing of the two most complex multi-part episodes in terms of recycling the series ("Green With Evil" and Doomsday"), was the writing of these episodes a challenge? Did you think of these episodes as "adaptations" of the Japanese episodes?

SSJ: Here's the story behind the Green With Evil miniseries, which ranked as the highest-rated Fox Kids episodes at the time: early on, during production of the first season, producer Ellen Levy-Sarnoff called me and asked if we could meet at Jerry's Deli in Studio City. When I got there, she handed me the video tapes containing the Japanese footage featuring the Green Ranger character and said "can you please make something out of this?" Apparently she had approached a few other writers, including Gary Glasberg, but nothing was clicking. I took the footage home and over the weekend had a fit of inspiration. I called Ellen and asked her if it would be OK to create a multi-part story. I was a big fan of the TV series DALLAS, and wanted to bring that feeling of drama and cliff-hanging excitement to Power Rangers. Ellen said "sure, do whatever you want", and so I sat down and structured a five-part episode that would introduce the Green Ranger to the series. I created Tommy to be a love interest for Kimberly, and someone who Rita would use and turn against his new friends. I wanted to do something that had never been done in kids' television, namely a five-part miniseries that treated the subject matter seriously.

JM: If my information is correct, after the first 40 episodes almost all the images from the original Japanese series were already used, Saban Entertainment orders a new batch of images from Toei Company (with 25 new monsters, with new human-sized combat sequences and fights against giant monsters). Do you remember that? Has this changed the way you write episodes of the series (I think of the episodes, “Enter... The Lizzinator” or “The Reign of the Jellyfish” for example)?

SSJ: All I can remember about this is that after the earthquake in 94, we moved the entire production to Santa Clarita ... about 45 miles north of Los Angeles. I remember the day that all the new costumes arrived, and we got to tour them in the parking lot at the production studio and it was incredibly cool.

JM: For the second and third seasons, you used images from other Japanese series. However, you did not use the costumed combat footage (at this time, American episodes contain only about 10% of Japanese images), do you remember why? And most importantly, has it changed the way you work? Were you freer than in the first season to write?

SSJ: I don't really remember why we weren't using as much of the costumed combat footage, though I think it had something to do with the series getting a larger budget so we weren't as tied to the original Japanese footage. As a writer, it freed me up to write more original stories because I wasn't so restricted by the footage!

JM: As a writer on the series, have you been in contact with the censors of Fox Kids? Did you have any specific instructions on writing even from Saban?

SSJ: I don't remember having any specific instructions on writing from Saban. I do remember sitting in a meeting with Haim and I was tasked with coming up with the Power Rangers catchphrase that they would yell out—and I came up with two: “It's Morphenomenal!” and “It's Morphentudenous!” Well, you know which one we went with!

JM: Before working on Mighty Morphin Power Rangers, you were mainly working on cartoons. Do you think your experience in this field has encouraged Saban and Ellen Levy-Sarnoff to hire you at the time?

SSJ: Before my work on Power Rangers (I was around 20 at the time!), I had already sold a live-action feature film, was pitching a prime time sci-fi television series to a network, and had adapted a Joan Collins book into a series. Then I landed a contract at Hanna-Barbara doing the Tom & Jerry kids series, both writing episodes and composing songs for the show, which I loved because animation and comic books were such a huge part of my childhood. But I still had a desire to do live action, so when I heard about Saban doing a new live-action series, I was thrilled to be considered. Based on ALL of my work, not just in animation, I was hired to help create what we all know as Mighty Morphin Power Rangers!

JM: For the double episode “Doomsday” (39 and 40), at the beginning, was it planned that it would be the last episode of the show? Its structure and the fact that you used the images from the latest episodes of the Japanese show gives the impression of it! In addition, the “final script” of the doomsday part 2 episode you wrote mentions the fact that Rita has been completely defeated (these lines were modified in the final episode). Maybe the show has been renewed, in the meantime?

SSJ: From what I can remember, “Doomsday, Part I and II” was to be the series finale of the show. Because my 5-part “Green With Evil” miniseries had done so well on FOX, Ellen approached me about writing the finale, which I wanted to make into a special two-parter. You have to remember, my approach to writing Power Rangers was to make it the lice-action series I would want to watch—like a comic book come to life. Around that time, there was a lot going on behind-the-scenes, lots of negotiating between Saban and the toy company and the network, and then the ratings started coming in, and everyone realized it was such a hit that we continued on and had to shift some things! My memory is a little fuzzy on the exact series of events here, but I do remember there was a lot happening behind-the-scenes.

JM: Were the episodes in full length of the Japanese series you received subtitled in English? Have you looked at all of them? Were you inspired by the story of some Japanese episodes?

SSJ: The full-length episodes were always in Japanese, with no subtitles. I used to watch the entire episodes, unable to understand what they were saying, but able to get the gist of what was happening. It was always so much fun watching the original Japanese shows—and equally fascinating because they tended to be so much darker than our American version! But I never considered using any of the Japanese stories as episodes, instead I concentrated on doing something totally different and original.

JM: You also worked on Power Rangers: Zeo and VR Trooper, had your way of writing from Japanese images changed in those 2 other shows?

SSJ: The writing approach was still the same on both shows, but as the need to rely on so much Japanese footage waned, I was able to free myself creatively from some of those earlier limitations.

Annexe 5 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par courriel avec JESSE LEE HERNDON [Sirstack] connaisseur de la série Mighty Morphin Power Rangers et découvreur de l'existence des images du lot Zyu1.5, 15 au 19 juillet 2019.

Julian Mordelet : How did you learn about the Zyu1.5 batch? In addition, how were you able to make the difference between the images of the Zyu1.5 batch and the images of Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger? A simple comparative analysis between Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger and Mighty Morphin Power Rangers? What was your working method?

Jesse Lee Herndon : I started working on Morphylogeny around 2007, with the original unaired pilot version of “Day of the Dumpster”. I spent the next year or two trying to figure out how to display the analysis on a website and how to properly lay it all out on a page. Once I finished work on that one, I turned to the regular series, with the aired version of “Day of the Dumpster”, and the first hint of Zyu 1.5 came when I ran into a shot of Finster laughing in his workshop with a Pudgy Pig clay sculpture before him. I checked the Zyuranger source for the Pudgy Pig monster for the footage. It wasn’t there. I began checking episodes around it, and soon spent days searching each and every episode of Zyuranger to try to find it. I did not. So I just assumed, “this has to be a deleted scene”. So I came up with the terminology (which is still on my site now, even though it’s outdated and incorrect) “Zyu Original Footage”. Any shot I found that wasn’t in the source Zyuranger, I then listed as a “Zyu Original Footage” shot and numbered each successively as such. By the time I finished the first episode, I realized, by the number of shots of Rita speaking at the camera and speaking what looked to be phonetic English, that these had to be specifically shot footage done by Toei for Saban’s use in MMPR. I had been part of the Internet fan community since 1997, originally Usenet newsgroups such as alt.fan.power-rangers and Alt. TV. sentai, but never had I seen anyone suggest original footage was shot for MMPR. It was just right there in front of all of our faces. There have been rumors of Soga Machiko being brought over to the U.S. to film footage for the show (Paul Schrier had said such in the late ’90s, but this footage has never been discovered and seems to have been debunked by others), so it wasn’t outside the realm of possibility. A few weeks after I published my findings on my site and began to get to work on it, a fan (Tommy Lawson who goes by the user name Batman192) on the Rangercast web forum (later known as Rangercrew) found and posted the contract information. This merely confirmed what I had just found out through my own research of analyzing the episodes. So it was nice that if I hadn’t figured it out, someone else would have done so.

JM: As we know, the images of the Zyu1.5 lot come from the amendment to the contract dated 21 September 1992, but in the case of the images of the Zyu2 lot, or the purchase of Gosei Sentai Dairanger, there is no reference made in the documents available on the SEC website, how do you explain this?

JLH: I truly have no idea. It's possible that such contracts have been lost? Or are sealed?

JM: Did you participate in the institutionalization of the term “Zyu1.5” to refer to these images of Bandora and her acolytes that do not appear in Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger?

JLH: I came up with “Zyu 1.5” as a name. Back in the late ’90s, fellow fan Chris Funaro coined the term “Zyu2” to describe the footage shot by Toei for Saban to use after they had finished using all 50 episodes of Zyuranger, used for the back 20 of MMPR Season 1 into the first part of season 2. “Zyu 1.5” or Zyu Half as I intended it to be called, was just a reference to that, even though it's really more “The Bandora Show” or something to that effect. As I said, I did not know what to call it as I barely understood what it was until the contract came to light.

JM: Personally, I date the production of the Zyu1.5 batch between October 1992 (no Zyu1.5 plans are used in the October 1992 pilot) and mid-February 1993 (Zyu1.5 plans are accurately described in several scripts of the episodes at the time), what do you think? In addition, it seems difficult to me to accurately date the shooting dates of the images of the Zyu2 batch. Probably after the fox ordered new episodes, but I couldn't find any information about it. Do you have any ideas?

JLH: Your Zyu1.5 date seems correct. It had to be after the contract was made, of course, but before the episodes were filmed. As for Zyu2, judging by the foliage in many of the scenes in the footage, it was definitely filmed in the fall of 1993. The exacts, I do not know. I do know that they did not begin filming the Zyu2 used episodes of MMPR Season 1 until around mid to late-December 1993 (“A Pig Surprise”, the first post-40 episode filmed, was being filmed in December 16, 1993, and “Return of an Old Friend, Parts 1 & 2” were being filmed on January 17 1994 (the day of the Northridge Earthquake).

JM: I was wondering, you discovered the Zyu1.5 lot, but according to John Green, the term “Zyu1.5” itself is from him, is it true?

JLH: If he says he came up with “Zyu1.5” as a term, it's entirely possible. I know I did call it “Zyu (half)” (using the half symbol $\frac{1}{2}$) and he may have extrapolated the far easier to type “1.5” out of that. I've known John for many years and was in contact with him when I was making the discovery back in late 2009/early 2010 so anything is possible.

JM: Yes indeed for the Zyu2 batch I had the same shooting period in mind. You situate the shooting of the episode “A Pig Surprise” on December 16th and “Return of an Old Friend, Parts 1/2” on January 17th, where do you get this information from?

JLH: I had a crew production schedule for “A Pig Surprise” which gave December 16th, 1993 as a date that some of the filming on it occurred. “Return of an Old Friend” I can date due to the Northridge Earthquake in Southern California, as several of the cast (specifically the guy who played Trini’s Dad) said they were filming their scenes on that day and Saban refused to shut down production despite the disaster.

JM: In the Morphylogeny, you systematically specify the episode of Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger from which the shot is taken. For example, for episode 11 (From Whom the Bell Trolls), you indicate that the sequence of appearance of the Zords is a mixture of images of ZYU 2, 3, 14 and 6. How do you determine that a plan itself recycled several times in Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger comes from a particular episode when it is used for MMPR? For my part, I have the impression that the American team has mixed the Shugoju appearance plans of episodes 2, 3 and 6 (if we combine these plans, we are entitled to the “complete sequence of appearance of the zords”) and that they use it several times and cutting it off when necessary. What do you think about that?

JLH: Unfortunately, a lot of my specific targeting of what episode was used is pure conjecture. I do believe that many times the Saban editing team would take a sequence from a certain episode or episodes, and then reuse it repeatedly with little variation (such as, as you said, trimming when necessary for time). I would usually defer to the earliest usable footage in a sequence (meaning no Japanese text onscreen, as most first appearances had) when listing, if I knew for a fact it could not come from the main Zyuranger episode being adapted for any given MMPR episode.

JM: Moreover, on this question of the appearance of the zords. On several occasions, the American team puts a longer sequence of appearance than the one present in the corresponding Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger episode. In my opinion, this allows them to save a few seconds on the editing bench (in case of lack of footage for example), what do you think?

JLH: Yes, I agree. Filling time was a major thing for Saban in the earliest episodes (many MMPR episodes are shorter than 20 minutes without commercials!) As I've discovered in my analysis of Saban's VR Troopers (made by many of the same who'd done MMPR season 1), sometimes copying previously put together sequences saved tremendous amounts of time for a show being "stripped" (running up to six days a week).

JM: Maybe one last question, on one of your websites you make available many scripts of MMPR. How did you find them?

JLH: The scripts were mainly ones I bought at the first Power Morphicon Convention in 2007, from Scott Zillner, who is the current owner and operator of Power Morphicon, who had gotten them (and many props) from the former prop master of MMPR to PRWF, Mark Richardson. Shortly afterwards, I purchased more scripts from Jason David Frank (through Scott Zillner), and later a few from Amy Jo Johnson (through Christopher Hayden), and a very few were donation scans.

Annexe 6 . Retranscription de l'entretien réalisé par courriel avec JOHN GREEN [Grnrngr] connaisseur de la série Mighty Morphin Power Rangers qui a donné sa dénomination au lot Zyu1.5, 14 au 15 juillet 2019.

Julian Mordelet: How did you learn about the Zyu1.5 batch?

John Green: I don't recall the exact specifics, but I wouldn't be surprised if it was when SirSTACK launched his Morphylogeny footage analysis site. Back in those days, I wasn't as familiar with the entirety of Zyuranger as I am now (having yet to actually watch it in its entirety) and while lots of these segments definitely seem out of place when compared to true Zyuranger footage now, they might not have stood out so obviously previously.

Julian M: As we know, the images of the Zyu1.5 lot come from the amendment to the contract dated 21 September 1992, but in the case of the images of the Zyu2 lot, or the purchase of Gosei Sentai Dairanger, there is no reference made in the documents available on the SEC website, how do you explain this?

JG: I assume that there are either additional documents that have yet to be discovered or for whatever reason were not provided to the SEC. It's possible that Dairanger and Zyu2 were part of some other deal where they were merely a line item.

JM: Did you participate in the institutionalization of the term “Zyu1.5” to refer to these images of Bandora and her acolytes that do not appear in Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger?

JG: Yes, I am actually the origin of the term “Zyu1.5”. As “Zyu2” has long been the commonly accepted name for that footage—based on the largely unfounded belief that the footage could be used for a sequel to Zyuranger (i.e. “Zyu1” in movie numbering parlance)—it made sense that this footage, which was shot after Zyuranger but before Zyu2, had to go in between. SirSTACK used “Original Zyu Footage” and later “Zyu½”—the former is too wordy and the latter could lead to potential programmatic issues (i.e. not all fonts might have the ½ character defined nor is the character within the 256 ASCII characters) so I went with “Zyu1.5” as that was the next best thing.

JM: You point out in your essay on Zyu2 that it was Chris “Cmdr Crayfish” Funaro who discovered the existence of Zyu2, do you know under what circumstances and when this discovery was made?

JG: I wouldn't say Funaro discovered Zyu2, just that he came up with the term that everyone collectively uses to refer to it (and, that said, it's possible one of his close friends coined the term and he just popularized it). I can't say when the existence of Zyu2 was discovered, short of it being in the 90s. Back then, the overlap of people who were familiar with both MMPR and Zyuranger was still relatively small and it would take someone familiar enough with both to realize that some monsters and battles showed up PR but not in Zyuranger. Due to the availability of Sentai at the time, I suspect it must be someone who was familiar with Zyuranger first.

JM: Personally, I date the production of the Zyu1.5 batch between October 1992 (no Zyu1.5 plans are used in the October 1992 pilot) and mid-February 1993 (Zyu1.5 plans are accurately described in several scripts of the episodes at the time), what do you think? In addition, it seems difficult to me to accurately date the shooting dates of the images of the Zyu2 batch. Probably after the fox ordered new episodes, but I couldn't find any information about it. Do you have any ideas?

JG: I vaguely recall one of the crew at the time having said they were present at the shoot for Zyu1.5 (stands to reason some Saban-representative would have to be), probably at a convention at some point. But I couldn't tell you who said it or when they said it. If I was forced to pick a name, it would have to be Tony Oliver just because he has been the most accessible on the con circuit. That all said, I could be completely misremembering—it stands to reason that I would've included such information on my site. As for Zyu2, it stands to reason it would've had to have been after the first 40 episodes were completed filming and after the series exploded in popularity. It's believed that the footage was filmed while Kakuranger was in production, but the only concrete reasoning for that thinking is that some of the Zyu2 monster costumes that were sold by Disney during the auctions back in 2003 listed their origins as Kakuranger.

Annexe 17 . Relevés de données concernant la première période de la phase 2 du mode de production de Mighty Morphin Power Rangers (épisodes 43 à 60).

Grille pour la lecture des données

De manière générale : 1 = Oui ; 0 = Non

A : présence de plans dans le Bandora Palace issus de Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger et/ou du lot Zyu1.5

- Si l'épisode contient des plans issus d'épisodes multiples de Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger, l'annotation « EM » est ajoutée.
- Si l'épisode contient des plans exclusivement issus d'un seul épisode de Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger, le numéro de l'épisode figure entre parenthèses.
- Si l'épisode contient des images de Bandora issues du lot Zyu1.5, l'annotation « +1.5 » est ajoutée.

B : présence de plans Zyu1.5 dans les séquences qui se déroulent dans le palais de Rita Repulsa

C : présence et provenance de séquences de combats costumés. Si les séquences proviennent du lot Zyu2, l'annotation « (Zyu2) » est ajoutée. Si les séquences sont tournées par l'équipe américaine, l'annotation « USA » est ajoutée

POWER RANGERS - Episode # 51 "Grumble Bee"
Cheryl Saban - Revised Script, - 1/24/94

21.

5125 (CONTINUED)

Jason goes into battle with the puttys first. (<SFX: Ki YAI! Hi YA!>)  (Zack leaps and gets one putty in a neck lock. Two puttys grab Zack and try to twirl him around.)

XX
XX DELETE (...) #NOTE

ZACK
I'm not in the mood to fool around with you guys! Ki Ya!)

The puttys hold up some weapons and try to defeat Trini. who kicks them out of her way.

TRINI
This out to teach you to mess with us! ...Hi ya!

KIMBERLY
Let me give you a hand, Trini.
Try this, mud putties! Hi ya!

The puttys disappear and the Power Rangers (except Billy) face off with the Grumble Bee.

JASON
End of lesson, Grumble Bee!
You're finished!

MONSTER
Not so fast! Here's another test for you....Ha ha ha ha!

The Grumble Bee sends out ultrasonic waves, as well as shooting his stingers, causing all the Power Rangers to grab their ears and fall on the ground with sparks flying.

JASON
What's this!

ZACK
Whoa, this is loud!

TRINI
Hold your ears...

KIMBERLY
How much more can we take?

MONSTER
I've won...you fail! Ha ha ha ha! Your power is worthless!

JASON

What the --?

And then he HEARS a LOUD CRASH. He looks over to see:

5413. EXT. WAREHOUSE - JAPANESE FOOTAGE

The LIZZINATOR is knocking out the warehouse walls with his super strength.
(NOTE: The Lizzinator should talk with a Schwarzenegger accent a la "Terminator".

LIZZINATOR

Power Rangers... the Lizzinator will destroy the Power Rangers!

He sees a parked car and approaches it. (NOTE: delete scene of Lizzinator breaking windows and smashing glass).

LIZZINATOR

Ha ha! A toy to play with!

5414. EXT. BUILDING - DAY

5414.

BACK ON JASON.

JASON

Oh, man...

He drops the supplies and takes cover in a side alley.

JASON

It's morphin' time...!

Jason, in costume, runs INTO SCENE...

JASON

Put it down, ugly...

LIZZINATOR

Lizzinator doesn't take orders...
he gives them!

And he throws the car at Jason! Jason is knocked back as the Lizzinator lets out a loud laugh. Red Ranger scrambles to his feet, pulls out his weapon...

JASON

You wanna play rough?
