It is high and is used as an observation tower. Geography The Neuhof is a hill and an artificial mound. It is located at on a northern spur of the Elz Mountains, and stands some above the valley of the Kurfürstla river, at a height of. The town of Neuhof lies approximately to the west and lies in the parish of Weil der Stadt. History The Neuhof is a relic of man's search for the ideal place for building a home in the high Alpine environment. Many attempts were made to build a village, beginning in the 19th century. In 1867, the General government of Baden decreed a site for a settlement on the higher ground of the valley. After the construction of a bridge across the Elz at Neuhof, the general government began building the village in 1874. The first inhabitants moved in the fall of 1874. Between 1874 and 1883, the canton of Baden acquired the land, which was in the shape of a rectangle of by. The rectangular plots were assigned to 31 owners. The foundation was laid by Johann Georg "Hänsel" von Elbsdorf, on 3 April 1876. The final design was based on the 1850s Swiss plan by architect Ernst Haß. Building was carried out by the master builder Albert Möhring (1834–1906), of the Hanstein company, as well as the electrician and fireproof worker Carl Büttner and the crane operator Heinrich Blick. The construction was supervised by architect Georg Freiherr von Hallerstein (1852–1926). In addition to the General Government, various donors contributed to the effort, especially Alois Zuckheim, and the city of Fre
