JAMES DOYLE

I am a person that believes that life is so short to always worry about things, to let people bring you down, and to let your heart stay broken, you have to make sure that you keep pushing ahead and trying new things or you will just end up like everyone else that has gotten use to their usual boring routines.

From one of the most talked about show on LGBT television to equality; abOUT Magazine sits down with Dallas A-Lister James Doyle.

Tell us about where you grew up, your childhood-
I grew up in a small community called Medicine Park, outside of Lawton, Oklahoma. I had a bittersweet upbringing, I was a very blessed guy with amazing parents but the gay aspect of my life was hell. I was bullied throughout elementary school all the way into high school. I was beat up, threatened, laughed at, etc. I finally came out when I was 16 because I was tired of lying to myself and the world around me. When I came out I had an overwhelming amount of support from my classmates and friends, but my family and faculty were not as thrilled, and eventually moved away and quit school to get away from my parents and my life.

I was gone close to a year when I was in a bad car accident and I had no where else to turn, so I had to call my parents. I was seriously grounded, as in house arrest pretty much, but I was able to finish school. Life definitely started to look better. That accident was definitely a blessing and getting my life back together has brought my parents and I closer than we have ever been. I wouldn't change anything about my childhood, it has definitely made me stronger and able to relate to people that don't feel like they fit in. But as much as you have heard this saying, it really does get better.

What are you doing life after A-List?

Life after A-List has definitely been interesting. I get recognized almost everywhere I go, and even though it's been almost a year since we aired, I still get asked for pictures. I am so blessed that I was able to be a part of that show, it has definitely made my skin the thickest it has ever been, it's given me confidence in large crowds.

I moved to Los Angeles after the show for awhile, just to get away from Dallas and the drama and craziness that followed right after our show aired, and I explored my options out there. I eventually came back to Dallas, because frankly, this is where my friends and my life belongs at this point.

Logo definitely did a great job editing me out to be the "Snooki" of A-List, but I have definitely been able to show people who I really am outside of the show with my actions and words. I am not a perfect person, nor will I ever be, but I feel like I am definitely trying my best. I am still figuring out what I want to do with my life, but I am working for a casino gaming company now, and getting ready to get into school and finally finish my degree. So I'd say that life after A-List is definitely going well.

What made you decide to take a picture like the one on the cover?

Equality is a HUGE passion to me. I have been trying to get more involved and this is one way I wanted to make a difference. I actually saw a photo of Adam Levine, whom has a better body by the way, but I instantly wanted to do the same picture for equality. I wanted to make people say, what the hell, and pick up the picture and either like it or hate it, and start to form an opinion on it, which in turn, hopefully would get them to talk about their views and passions on Equality. It's a risky picture and the reason I posed naked was because I feel like when a law passes that strips us of our rights, or a marriage repel gets approved, that society is just stripping us naked one selfish act of hate after another. I feel like we need to stand up and do something about it, one day at a time, one person at a time. I also chose to have my good friend Kandy Cayne in the picture with me, she shows how beautiful and diverse our community is, and that we can all stand together to make a difference. The GLBT community can be the most vicious people at times to one another, but I also believe that we have one of the strongest bonds of all time. We all want the same things; love, marriage, equality, health, and a happy life. And I don't see why we don't, so until then, I'll keep showing my support for Equality and I hope you will as well.

Tell me about yourself?

I really hate this question. Well, I'll start out by using a quote that has hit me hard, and definitely expresses exactly how I feel about the world and myself, and everything in between. It's from the movie Latter Days, and it goes like this, "You know the Sunday comics? Well, when I was a little kid, I use to put my nose right up to them. And I was just amazed because it looked like this mass of dots, and none of it made sense until I pulled back. Life looks like that mass of dots to me sometimes. None of it makes any sense, but I like to think that, from God's perspective, life, everything - even death - makes sense. It's not just dots. Instead we're all connected, and it's beautiful and funny and good. From this close we can't expect it to make sense, not right now." This quote pretty much sums up so much about what goes on inside my head. I love to take risks in life, as long as I remember that I have close friends behind me that believe in me no matter if I succeed or fail. I am from a very country oriented background, including a farm, but I love the city life as well. I am pretty much a country city boy. I like nice things and fancy dinners, but I also love to bbq at the lake and going mudding in a 4x4 jeep in the backwoods with my cowboy boots on. I live my life to the fullest, I'm passionate, stupid, smart, funny, dull, crazy, reserved, loud, quiet, and everything in between. You will never figure me out, I can't even accomplish that.

"I hope that in the next 5 years, equality will not even be an issue. I hope that we can all continue to show that we deserve equal rights and that we WILL have them. So all in all, I hope we look back and see this issue as conquered and in the books."
