Name: Chris

Age: 19

Born in: Kentucky

Raised in/by: My parents, many of my achievements as a computer network major go out to my dad, without his amazing talent with computers I would not be where I am today.

Job: Network Technician

Why are you here?: I was asked by CaptianPlanet if I would host this website for all you guys :) (Your welcome its free -_-)

Additional information:

I started coding C++ around the Summer of 2004 with the help of a friend from Germany. From there I have learned to code very well in C++, VBS, Java, and some ASM. After months of work and studying coding was beginning to become second nature to me. In 2007 I decided to launch my own forum at a website called Reneg4d3.com (Which no longer exists) and produced a hack called no other than "Reneg4d3 HOoK". Times there were slow and I made a small amount, granted I was still new to coding so the hacks were by far not the best.

After a year I decided that Reneg4d3.com wasn't getting me anywhere and decided to make a different community not dedicated to game hacking, but more of a general hacking forum. I called this website "Error33.net" the term was giving to me by a friend. The term meant "To cause things to become unresponsive" it was catchy and I decided to go with it. Times again were slow, I just couldn't figure out how to get people to join. So I decided that since I had many connections and managed to get almost everything free at this point (including web-space) that it was time to start giving back. I revamped the forum and made it a Warez community, this brought many users in so I decided to open a V.I.P section where things could be uploaded directly to the web server and clients could download directly from the website at fast speeds. It was a semi-stable website, I use to have a small section for coding and hacking to remind me how it all started. Error33 took to much of my time so I dropped the forum and started using it for general hosting of miscellaneous files.

A few months back I hosted Rob0tCity which is another forum. I was a "Network Admin" at rC and was in charge of keeping site backups, managing the SQL database, and installing updates to the server.

I am now pretty well known in the Game Hacking Scene websites, and had "Coder" status at a website called TheC0re.net (NO longer in existence do to some stupid decisions)

I no longer hack into PayPals, gain root access into other peoples computer, or exploit online websites like StickAM, instead I just hang out in the real world but still having a grasp of what I use to be.

A few years ago I was threatened to be sued by a large company by the name of Nexon for infiltrating their game software and altering certain aspects of the game. They did not take kindly to this, and forced me to stop by pulling out a law suit.

I have owned 2 web-hosting businesses in the past and sold them to other companies. Now I just manage my dedicated server and am in school to get my B.A in Computer Engineering.

Right now I have my CCNA Certification, A+ Certification and my Network + Security Certification.

Businesses like them, but my degree looks better than the certs, so they don't really do anything, that's why I never did the other ones. Only really need them when they are deciding who to pick you or another person with a degree, if I have certs then they will pick me if the other person doesn't. Otherwise, no it doesn't really do anything lol.

I remember way back when you seemed to emerge out of nowhere, is there any truth to that? Or have you been under other aliases before?

I was under alot of alias's

scrumpy, pwnography, reneg4d3, enkrypt, etc

But I became most active under Reneg4d3 on tC

That explains so much lol. Although I remember pwnography most, didn't that account get banned a long time before tC though?
