

AIRCRAFT CRASHES IN WALES AND THE WEST MIDLANDS 1914 - 2018. T. N. Hancock

It will surprise many people to know that a minimum of some 6,000 aircraft have crashed and been 'written-off' (eg, did not fly again) in Wales and the traditional English counties of Cheshire, Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire and Worcestershire, since powered flight began and this list attempts to give the bare details of these - it should be emphasised that these are the crashes that resulted in the aircraft being destroyed, NOT those, of which there were many, which crash-landed, were salvaged by various MUs, repaired at civilian repair factories, such as those in the area at Cardiff, Altrincham, Staverton, Walsall, Hooton Park, Coventry, Bishops Tachbrook (Leamington), and then flew again. I use the words 'this list attempts to give' advisedly as the recording of these crashes was down, quite frequently, to the whim of an RAF clerk (and even worse, as far as locations go, USAAF clerks!) who may have made mistakes in locations and other details. The airfields in the traditional counties covered give the dates between which flying took place. Private strips and forced landing grounds are not included..

Newspaper reports on wartime crashes are rare but those in peacetime may carry an account in the local press. Each entry gives the aircraft's serial number, its type, its unit and that unit's home airfield (with the county if not in the area covered) and the number of fatal casualties if known; it should be remembered that a great many young airmen died in these crashes (signified [where known] by a number followed by 'k' after the appropriate entry), often in horrific circumstances and also, occasionally, servicemen or civilians on the ground (shown as '+' after the aircrew deaths). Civilian aircraft have their registration, type and location of crash given. Locations in the text show the counties in which the crash was located at the time; those in the index show the present day authorities. The location names are as given at the time and are all listed in the Index of the best road atlas currently available, Philips 'Navigator Britain'; locations which are too small to be so listed have the nearest listed name shown, as in "Blackpill nr Swansea". In those few cases where I have been unable to trace a location, even on Google, I have indicated this and sometimes offered an alternative.

SOURCES

This list is compiled from the information given in many books published by Air-Britain Historians Ltd, Aeromilitaria articles and the volumes of 'Bomber Command Losses' by W. R. Chorley, and 'Coastal Command Losses', published by Midland Books. Two web-sites also proved very useful for the American WW2 crashes - accident-report.com and www.aviationarchaeology.com.

APPENDICES

These can be found at the end of the list and consist of an aircraft type index, a geographical location index showing the current local authorities in whose areas the crash took place, and a list of the abbreviations used.

WORLD WAR 1

The crashes listed under World War One are nowhere near comprehensive, either in number or in their exact locations which were often not recorded; however, as can be seen in later periods, most crashes took place at or near aerodromes, during the demanding tasks of take-off and landing. Thus, many of the below did happen at their bases. There was little flying in the region before WW1 nor during the first two years of the conflict – the topography was not friendly to early aviators, industrial haze from the Potteries, Black Country and South Wales made navigation very difficult in those areas, and the enemy threat was far to the east. However, by late 1916 German U-boats were beginning to penetrate the Irish Sea and the RNAS established patrol bases on the Welsh coast, while the rapidly expanding RFC, plus its heavy losses, meant that new aerodromes were needed to train pilots; some of these were built in the border counties, with a strong Australian presence in Gloucestershire.

BETWEEN THE WARS

There was a massive rundown of the RAF during 1919-20 and few aerodromes were left operational in the region. The aircraft were becoming more reliable and the pace of training slackened so that the number of accidents reduced and there were fewer casualties in any case, due to the introduction of parachutes. The RAF began to increase in size significantly during the 1930s but, as during WW1, the prospective enemy was on the opposite side of the country and the new airfields built here were mainly to be used for training but also to store and maintain aircraft safe from enemy bombing. The more sophisticated and powerful aircraft coming into service, and equipped with such novelties as flaps, retractable undercarriages and enclosed cockpits (not liked initially!), increased the number of accidents as pilots converted from the elderly biplanes. In addition to the military crashes civilian-owned aircraft and aerodromes began to appear from the early 1920s on, contributing to the number.

World War II.

Just as during WW1 the area was well away from the operational regions in the east and south of the UK, but some Coastal Command squadrons flew out over the Atlantic from West Wales and day and night fighters were based at some airfields to protect Bristol, South Wales, the Black Country, the Potteries, Manchester, Merseyside and Belfast from German bombers. In 1944 some transport squadrons took part in the invasion of Europe from bases in Gloucestershire.

However it was in training aircrew for the operational squadrons that the area played a vital part; all forms of training took place – basic and advanced pilot training, together with navigator, bomb-aimer, wireless operator and air gunner basic training, after which the Operational Training Units took over and there were bomber, day fighter and night fighter OTUs plus target-towing squadrons training the Royal Artillery's anti-aircraft gunners. From 1943 the USAAF set up its equivalent of a fighter OTU and the Fleet Air Arm used some airfields in the region. Thus there was an enormous amount of flying with a corresponding accident rate; bad weather, inexperience, high ground and, unreliable (in the early years of WW2) aircraft and lack of effective air traffic control all contributed to these. One slight fact of mitigation was that the training units flew, by today's standards, very large numbers of aircraft, one hundred being quite common. but many of the young men killed saw no operational flying and their contribution must not be forgotten; sometimes, when aircraft crashed, civilians or groundcrew were also killed, shown by a plus sign and a number after the number of aircrew killed (where known). USAAF reports do not specify the number of aircrew killed in each crash, only that it was a crash which caused fatalities.

THE COLD WAR.

The RAF now decreased significantly in size and many of the military airfields in the region had by now closed though several were used by civilian clubs and owners. However the USSR was now seen as a new threat to the UK and the USA and it was this that brought the USAF Strategic Air Command to Fairford, greatly developed since WW 2, while some of the training airfields were brought back into use. Even so the number of aircraft and thus accidents were greatly reduced as aircraft and their engines were becoming more and more reliable, training periods were extended, much improved radio, radar, other navigation aids and greatly improved air traffic control reduced the dangers of night flying and bad weather, and ejector seats meant a much better chance of survival if a crash occurred. The reduced accident rate was such that just one crash of a military aircraft became a national media item by the 1970s.
